THE COLLECTED LETTERS OF CHARLES DICKENS 1820 – 1870

Volume I

1820 – 1839

1820

?

To MASTER JOHN TRIBE AND MISS TRIBE,[†1] [1820-1]

Text from Robert Langton, The Childhood and Youth of CD, revised edn, 1891, p. 36. Date: c. 1820 according to Langton, when CD was "eight or nine". From St Mary's Place, Chatham, if date between 1819 and 1822; not from Ordnance Terrace, the address given by Langton.

Master and Miss Dickens will be pleased to have the company of Master and Miss Tribe to spend the Evening on [date, &c].

1825

?

To O. P. THOMAS,[†2] [1825-6]

MS Dickens House. Date: when CD was "between thirteen and fourteen" (Thomas to Forster, Feb 1871, quoted in F, I, iii, 42).

Tom/

I am quite ashamed I have not returned your Leg[†3] but you shall have it by Harry[†4] to morrow. If you would like to purchase my Clavis[†5] you shall have it at a very reduced price. Cheaper in comparison than a Leg.

Yours &c
C DICKENS

PS. I suppose all this time you have had a wooden leg. I have weighed yours every saturday Night.

1831

March

To MISS MARY ANNE LEIGH,[†1] [7 MARCH 1831]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM 8 Mar 31 (Tuesday). Address: Miss Leigh | Clapton.

21 George Street[†2] | Monday.

My dear Miss Leigh.

I have to apologize for not keeping my promise last night; but the fact is I was so exceedingly tired from my week's exertions[†3] that I slept on the Sofa the whole day. I therefore hope you will pardon my apparent rudeness, and that you will say as you often do "Ah Mr. Dickens it's quite excusable."

I called at Beadnells[†4] on purpose to fetch you this Morning but you had just gone which vexed me very much as I had anticipated not only the pleasure of walking with you but also of picking that bone that we have to discuss which I will embrace the first opportunity of doing.

Just this Instant as I was scoring under the second line from the top I smeared the letter which I hope you will also excuse as I am in a hurry and as "he is such a writer"!

With Compliments to Mr.[†5] and Mrs. Leigh,

I remain
(what shall I say) Yours truly?
CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

1832

February

To THOMAS BEARD,[†1] 4 FEBRUARY [1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM 1832, when 4 Feb was Saturday.

70 Margaret Street Cavendish Square[†2]
Saturday February 4th.

Dear Beard.

I intend keeping the Anniversary of my Birth Day, which occurs on Wednesday next the Eighth Instant[†3], by asking a chosen few to join in a friendly quadrille.

If you will make one of our family circle by seven O'Clock, or as early as the house will allow you, it will give us the greatest pleasure to see you.

Believe me
Yours Truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

March

To GEORGE BARTLEY,[†4] [?MARCH 1832]

Summary from F, 1872-4, II, ix, 179. Date: shortly before production at Covent Garden of Sheridan Knowles's The Hunchback 5 Apr 32. From 5 Bell Yard, Doctors' Commons ("I was at Doctors' Commons ... And I ... wrote the letter from a little office I had there": F, ibid, p. 180).

In a letter to Forster of Winter 1844 CD wrote that when he was about twenty, and knew three or four successive years of Mathews's At Homes[†5] from sitting in the pit to hear them, he wrote to Bartley, and told him how young he was, and exactly what he thought he could do; and that he believed he had a strong perception of character and oddity, and a natural power of reproducing in his own person what he observed in others. There must have been something in the letter that struck the authorities, for Bartley wrote to him, almost immediately, to say that they were busy getting up The Hunchback but that they would communicate with him again, in a fortnight.

April

To GEORGE BARTLEY, [?APRIL 1832]

Summary from F, 1872-4, II, ix, 180. Date: a little more than a fortnight after last.

In the same letter of 1844 (see last) CD wrote that, punctual to the time, another letter came, with an appointment to do anything of Mathews's he pleased, before him and Charles Kemble, [†1] on a certain day at the theatre. His sister Fanny [†2] was in the secret, and was to go with him to play the songs; but he was laid up, when the day came, with a terribly bad cold and an inflammation of the face. He wrote to say so, and added that he would resume his application next season. [†3]

May

To H. W. KOLLE,[†1] [?APRIL-MAY 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly CD's first letter to Kolle, since the mis-spelling of his name not noticed (cf. next letter); perhaps during the Parliamentary recess 19 Apr to 6 May 32.

North End[†2] | Friday Evening.

My dear Kollie.

I have great pleasure in being enabled to assure you, that I shall be perfectly disengaged on Sunday next and shall expect you. I always rise out here, by Seven and therefore you may safely wend your way here before one if you can.

In reply to your enquiry respecting a sizeable poney[†3] I have also great satisfaction in being enabled to say that I can procure you a "oss" which I have had once or twice since I have been here. I am a poor judge of distance but I should certainly say that your legs would be off the ground when you are on his back. To look at the animal in question you would think (with the exception of Dog's Meat) there was no earthly purpose to which he could be applied but when you try him joking apart I will pledge my veracity he will beat any horse hired or private that you would see in a Morning's ride. I am his especial patron but on this occasion I will procure something smaller for myself. Pray come before One as I shall order them to be at the Door punctually at that hour, and we can mount, dismount & ride eight or ten miles without seeing a Soul the Peasantry excepted.

[†a]I suppose I must consider your "pilgrimage" as a sufficient excuse for your long absence, but I trust when the Shrine at which you pay your devotion is once more removed[†4] you will shew yourself a little more frequently.[†a] The people at Cecil Street[†5] put too much water in the hashes, lost the nutmeg grater, attended on me most miserably, dirtied the Table Cloths &c &c — and so (detesting petty miseries) I gave them warning, and have not yet fixed on "a local habitation and a name".[†6]

Envying you your devotions notwithstanding the pilgrimage attendant thereon and wishing you every success and happiness I remain

My dear Kollie
Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Come Early
P.S. I shall depend on your staying all night. You shall have breakfast by half past seven next Morning as I must walk to town the very first thing. CD.

July

To H. W. KOLLE, [?JULY 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The mis-spelling "Kollie", this time noticed by CD, suggests early in the friendship; apparently while working for the True Sun (see fn) and with several Saturdays to go before Parliament rose, 16 Aug.

My dear Kollie.

I owe you ten thousand Apologies for not having seen you last night but the fact is that I found out late in the Evening that I could not leave the house[†1] until a quarter past Ten and I thought it would be useless to endeavour to make my way into the City at that hour.

As I was not aware of the melancholy fact in sufficient time to send for you (I mean to you but I do not like scratching out) I hope I need not ask you to excuse the apparent inattention on my part: it is equally unnecessary to add that I was very much disappointed as I looked forward to having a very comfortable couple of hours.

I fear until the house is up, I can name no certain night on which I can go out to play except Saturday's. However I leave the selection of another day to your taste always premising that if I accept your next Invitation no consideration shall induce me to depart from it.

With my best remembrances to (?)[†2]

Believe me
My dear Kollie
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I see there are two superfluous i's in this note[†3] but I suppose you are not particular to a shade. The Sun[†4] is so obscured that I intend living under the planet no longer than Saturday Week next.

To MR LONGHURST,[†1] [30 JULY 1832]

Photograph, Dickens House. Date: endorsed "Received July 30th 1832" (a Monday): see W. Glyde Wilkins, Some Letters of Charles Dickens, privately printed, Pittsburgh, 1907.

Fitzroy Street[†2] | Monday Morning.

My dear Longhurst.

We intend asking Charles Ross[†3] and one or two fellows on Saturday Evening next, and to knock up a chaunt or two. If you will join our small circle it will give us the greatest pleasure to see you.

Believe me
Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [30 JULY 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Similar wording of invitation strongly suggests same day as last.

Fitzroy Street | Monday Morning.

My dear Kolle.

Are you going out of town next Saturday? Because if you are not we propose to get one or two young men together for the purpose of knocking up a song or two and I am specially directed to beg your attendance on the occasion.

I give you this early notice not because there is anything formal or party like in the arrangements for that day but in order that I may have a better chance of securing you.

You will perhaps oblige me with a line at your earliest convenience, giving me your arrangements for Saturday, and the probability of your local destination on that Day.

Trusting that every thing goes on as well as ever (which I have been more than once inclined to doubt in consequence of not hearing from or seeing you)

I remain
My dear Kolle
Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [SUMMER 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the first appeal to Kolle to deliver a note to Maria Beadnell; signature suggests Summer 1832.

Fitzroy Street. | Friday Morning.

My dear Kolle. As I was requested in a note I received this morning to forward my answer by the same means as my first note I am emboldened to ask you if you will be so kind as to deliver the Inclosed for me when you practise your customary duet this afternoon.

I hope you will not make it long before in mere charity you look in upon me.

Believe me
My dear Kolle
Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [SUMMER 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the second appeal to Kolle. Address: H. Kolle Esqre. | Addle Street | Aldermanbury.

Fitzroy Street | Saturday Morning.

My dear Kolle.

I should really feel some delicacy in asking you again to deliver the inclosed as addressed were it not for two reasons. In the first place you know so well my existing situation that you must be almost perfectly aware of the general nature of the note, and in the second I should not have written it (for I should have communicated it's[†1] contents verbally) were it not that I lost the opportunity by keeping the old gentleman[†2] out of the way as long as possible last night. To these reasons you may add that I have not the slightest objection to your knowing its contents, from the first syllable to the last.

I trust under these circumstances that you will not object to doing me the very essential service of delivering the Inclosed as soon this afternoon as you can, and perhaps you will accompany the delivery by asking Miss Beadnell only to read it when she is quite alone[†3] (of course in this sense I consider you as nobody).

By complying with this request you will confer a very great favor on

Dear Kolle
Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Excuse haste.

August

To H. W. KOLLE, [?AUGUST 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: presumably in the Summer Parliamentary recess (16 Aug to 16 Oct).

Fitzroy Street. | Wednesday

My dear Kolle.

As we have had a little sickness among our family we intend going to Highgate for a fortnight. The Spot we have chosen is in a very pleasant Neighbourhood, and I have discovered a green lane which looks as if nature had intended it for a Smoking place.

If you can make it convenient to come down, write to me and fix your own day. I am sorry I cannot offer you a bed because we are so pressed for room that I myself hang out at "The Red Lion"[†1] but should you be disposed to stay all Night I have no doubt you can be provided with a bed at the same Establishment.

The Address is "Mrs. Goodman's[†2] next door to the old Red Lion Highgate". The place has no other name, but a twopenny[†3] directed as above will no doubt find us.

Remember me to all friends and Believe me

In haste
Most truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

September

To H. W. KOLLE, [29 SEPTEMBER 1832]

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 29 Sep 32 (Saturday). Address: H. W. Kolle Esqre | Addle Street | Aldermanbury.

British Museum[†4] | Saturday Morning.

My dear Kolle

Will you take your dinner with us tomorrow? We shall be quite alone.

Perhaps if your Brother[†1] is disengaged he will accompany you. If he is not better engaged we shall be happy to see him.

I forgot to write these few lines before I left home, and I have not a wafer[†2] here, whereby I have put this letter in without one.

Believe me (in haste)
Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

H. W. Kolle Esqr.

To H. G. HARTLAND,[†3] [?AUTUMN 1832]

Mention in next. Date: "some time" before it.

December

To H. G. HARTLAND, 9 DECEMBER [1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Tennyson was returned as member for the new metropolitan borough of Lambeth in Dec 32, in which year 9 Dec was Sunday.

15 Fitzroy Street. | Sunday December 9th.

Sir.

In answer to your note of yesterday's date I have only to say that I shall be happy to avail myself of your assistance when the Session commences; and as soon as our arrangements at The Mirror of Parliament[†4] are completed I will write to you.

I regret for your own sake that I have not known your address until I found (on returning home yesterday Evening) your note. I wrote you a few lines some time since in reply to your former note (several engagements I had formed preventing my doing so at the moment) and about a week afterwards the letter was returned to me by the Post Office with an Intimation that you had left the residence to which I directed it. Had I even received your yesterday's note one day sooner I could have procured you a couple of days employment at the Lambeth Election as a Poll Clerk at a Salary of one Guinea per day, having been commissioned by Mr. Tennyson[†1] to find no less than Eighteen young men for that purpose.[†2] I regret to say however that the number was completed yesterday morning. I could also have given you some employment on my own account about a week ago but not knowing where to find you I was under the necessity of employing a Stranger. Of course this is no fault of yours, and I only mention the circumstance for the purpose of illustrating my assurance that I shall always be most willing to put anything in your way when I have the opportunity of doing so.

Should I stand in need of your services previous to the assembling of Parliament, for a day or two I will write to you, but at all events you will hear from me when Parliament meets which will be I think on the 29th. of January.

I am Sir
Yours &c
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. H. G. Hartland.

To H. W. KOLLE, [20 DECEMBER 1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Christmas Day 1832 was Tuesday.

Fitzroy Street. | Thursday Morning

My dear Kolle.

I am exceedingly sorry that I was so unfortunate as to select last night for my annual[†3] visit to Drury Lane[†4] as I should have very much preferred having a chat and Cigar with you — I hope however you will give me an early opportunity of doing so.

How are you engaged on Christmas Day? — If you do not join any family party of your own, will you dine with us — It will I need hardly say give us all the greatest pleasure to see you. Perhaps you will let me know by a line pr. post.

I have two books of yours which I am quite ashamed of having kept so long. Our man shall bring them this week without fail.

I long to give you my opinion of that Miss Evans[†1] and to communicate some monstrously strong circumstantial Evidence to prove that she must tell the most confounded —— As yours are "ears polite"[†2] — I shall leave your imagination and observation to supply the blank.

Trusting that you have (as you easily may have) no better engagement for Tuesday than I can offer you

Believe me

Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

Of course I came home last night exactly four minutes after you had left.

To H. W. KOLLE, [?1832]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Signature suggests late 1832.

Fitzroy Street. | Thursday Morning.

My dear Kolle

I recollect this morning to my great horror that I owe you Eighteen pence which I borrowed and forgot to return last Night. I therefore hasten to repair the omission with all possible dispatch. A Cab Driver whom I was obliged to ask for change, last night gave me a bad five shilling piece, — so that I was in luck altogether: my cold is about as bad as a Cold can be, and on the whole I feel tolerably happy and comfortable to day, the state of the weather being so admirably adapted to dispel any gloomy ideas of which I always have a very plentiful stock.

Believe me
Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [1832]

MS Dickens House. Date: endorsed, presumably by Beard, "C.D. 1832". Address: Thomas Beard Esqre.[†3]

Saturday.

Dear Beard.

Many thanks for the Tamarinds. Is it of any use asking you and "a Brother or two" to look in and take a Glass of Punch and a Cigar tomorrow Evening?

If you are not better engaged and will honor me I need not say I shall be most happy to see you.

Believe me
Truly Yours
CD.

1833

January

To H. W. KOLLE, 5 JANUARY 1833

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: H. W. Kolle Esqre. | Addle Street | Aldermanbury.

Saturday | January 5th. 1833

Dear Kolle

Will you excuse my postponing the pleasure of seeing yourself and Brother until Sunday Week? — My reason is this: — as we are having coals in at the new place, cleaning &c we cannot very well remove until Tuesday or Wednesday next. The Piano will most likely go to Bentinck St.[†1] to day & as I have already said we cannot accompany it — So that the Piano will be in one place and we in another. In addition to this, we shall be all in a bustle, and I fear should impress your Brother with a very uncomfortable idea of our domestic arrangements. Will you therefore let me hope to see you on Sunday Week when perhaps we shall be enabled to get a friend of yours[†2] to meet you?

I was not certain last night that we should postpone our removal. Had I been so, I would have spared you the infliction of deciphering this elegant Epistle.

Believe me
My dear Kolle
Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [?JANUARY 1833]*

MS Mrs Jack Reed. Date: during Kolle's courtship of Anne Beadnell, and before the crisis in CD's affair with Maria; handwriting suggests Jan 33.

Dear Kolle.

"If I may be allowed to give an opinion" (as you say) on the subject of the Coach Engagement I should really prefer leaving it to you. My reason is this — not to mention the obvious one that you do everything so well — You engaged the last I never did anything in the money way without being imposed upon. I know that the terms I should make would be higher than those you paid, and I really should not like my off hand badly digested bargain to be balanced against your more prudent, less expensive, and in every respect more eligible arrangements. With our friends the Beadnell's[†1] too you can do no wrong; I am not so sure of coming off well, and therefore seriously you will oblige me by undertaking the task.

With reference to the ground of objection you state it seems to me that it does not go the length you appear to think and for this reason. — It by no means follows as a necessary consequence that because you engage a Man in the City, his or his master's Stables or even his customary stand is in the City. The chances I should say are pretty well six to one that he comes some where from the neighbourhood of Tottenham Court Road where a vast number of the Hackney Coaches put up — However there is enough about this important subject.

I think I never was more delighted in my life than to hear that you were incarcerated in the Vorchis[†2] on Sunday Night. My only regret is that I was not there to see the fun, and that I am consequently unable to tell the story and to deliver a plain unvarnish'd tale[†3] of the set out. I suppose the story is to be entre nous or that if told at all it is to be told all on one side (your's of course) and that in relating it, you follow the usual directions on the Glass Packages "With care. Keep this side up." I am so anxious to hear the particklers that I almost made up my mind to walk to Addle Street to night instead of the Twopenny Post office. Remembering however how unlikely I should be to find you at home I reluctantly postponed the opportunity until Monday Evening. Of course you were not in fault — Those policemen are such a rascally set of *Negurs.[†4]

If you do not walk up this way before Monday, let me hear from you — Pray don't forget to let me know about time or my sisters will play the deuce with me. Remember me to your brother "most kindly" as the ladies (God bless 'em) have it; and Believe me

Dear Kolle
Your's Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

* Blacks — not Browns[†5]

February

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 FEBRUARY [1833]

MS Dickens House. Date: CD came of age in 1833. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre.

18 Bentinck St. | Feby. 2nd.

My dear Beard.

I inclose an Invitation[†1] from my mother[†2] for Monday the 11th. which is the important occasion of my coming of age.[†3]

I must manage by changing with somebody on the night in question to get out of the gallery by Eight oClock — If you feel disposed to join us, we shall be most happy to see you, and of course you can manage to be with us some time in the course of the Evening.

Believe me (in haste)
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [2 FEBRUARY 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: presumably an invitation to his birthday party, as last. The new Parliamentary session opened on 29 Jan 33, but CD probably refers to the beginning of debates, on Tues 5 Feb. Address: H. W. Kolle Esqre. | Addle Street | Aldermanbury.

Bentinck Street | Saturday Morning

Dear Kolle.

I inclose an Invitation for yourself and both your brothers[†4] for the 11th. I do not like after partaking so liberally of your hospitality to leave any one out. I was sorry to hear you were disLiver'd[†1] the other night — though I do not know that the thing is a bit the worse for it in the end. — Let me see you one Evening this week because next, the house begins — I shall be at home.

Believe me
My dear Kolle
Yours sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

March

To MISS MARIA BEADNELL,[†2] 18 MARCH [1833]

MS Huntington Library.[†3] Date: For confirmation that the break with Maria took place in 1833, see To Kolle, 16 May 33.

18 Bentinck Street | March 18th

Dear Miss Beadnell

Your own feelings will enable you to imagine far better than any attempt of mine to describe the painful struggle it has cost me to make up my mind to adopt the course which I now take — a course than which nothing can be so directly opposed to my wishes and feelings but the necessity of which becomes daily more apparent to me. Our meetings of late have been little more than so many displays of heartless indifference on the one hand while on the other they have never failed to prove a fertile source of wretchedness and misery and seeing as I cannot fail to do that I have engaged in a pursuit which has long since been worse than hopeless and a further perseverance in which can only expose me to deserved ridicule I have made up my mind to return the little present I received from you sometime since (which I have always prized as I still do far beyond anything I ever possessed) and the other enclosed mementos of our past correspondence which I am sure it must be gratifying to you to receive as after our recent relative situations they are certainly better adapted for your custody than mine. Need I say that I have not the most remote idea of hurting your feelings by the few lines which I think it necessary to write with the accompanying little parcel? I must be the last person in the world who could entertain such an intention but I feel that this is neither a matter nor a time for cold deliberate calculating trifling. My feelings upon any subject more especially upon this must be to you a matter of very little moment still I have feelings in common with other people — perhaps as far as they relate to you they have been as strong and as good as ever warmed the human heart, — and I do feel that it is mean and contemptible of me to keep by me one gift of yours or to preserve one single line or word of remembrance or affection from you. I therefore return them and I can only wish that I could as easily forget that I ever received them.

I have but one word more to say and I say it in my own vindication. The result of our past acquaintance is indeed a melancholy one to me. I have felt too long ever to lose the feeling of utter desolation and wretchedness which has succeeded our former correspondence. Thank God! I can claim for myself and feel that I deserve the merit of having ever throughout our intercourse acted fairly, intelligibly and honorably. Under kindness and encouragement one day and a total change of conduct the next I have ever been the same. I have ever acted without reserve. I have never held out encouragement which I knew I never meant; I have never indirectly sanctioned hopes which I well knew I did not intend to fulfil. I have never made a mock confidante to whom to entrust a garbled story for my own purposes, and I think I never should (though God knows I am not likely to have the opportunity) encourage one dangler as a useful shield for — an excellent set off against — others more fortunate and doubtless more deserving. I have done nothing that I could say would be very likely to hurt you. If (I can hardly believe it possible) I have said any thing which can have that effect I can only ask you to place yourself for a moment in my situation and you will find a much better excuse than I can possibly devise. A wish for your happiness altho' it comes from me may not be the worse for being sincere and heartfelt. Accept it as it is meant and believe that nothing will ever afford me more real delight than to hear that you the object of my first, and my last love, are happy. If you are as happy as I hope you may be, you will indeed possess every blessing that this World can afford.

C.D.

Miss Maria Beadnell.

To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [MARCH 1833]

Mention in To Maria Beadnell, 16 May 33. Date: CD was answering Maria's reply (probably not long delayed) to his letter of 18 Mar, which she returned.

Expressing the same sentiments as he had ever felt and ever would feel towards her to his dying day.

April

To MISS AMELIA AUSTIN,[†1] [?6 APRIL 1833]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The first rehearsal of Clari was apparently on Sat 13 Apr: see next.

My dear Miss Austin

Will you allow me to forward you a copy of the Prologue?[†2] A very great press of business has prevented my bestowing more than a couple of hours on the whole composition; copy and all; and I therefore trust to your usual kindness to excuse the very unladylike manner in which it is copied.

I propose (of course subject to your approval) that our first Rehearsal[†3] shall be on this day week. You know I suppose that at last we have been enabled to create a Duke.[†4]

If the space of half a sheet of paper, or the powers of a bad steel pen, — or the time of your humble Servant would admit of a description of my disappointment at not being enabled to claim the promised quadrille I should attempt it but as my feelings "may be more easily conceived than described",[†5] I shall only beg you to Believe me

Most truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Austin

I forgot the date which I believe is

Saturday Morning

Fanny says "of course we see them tomorrow evening" — So say I.

To H. W. KOLLE, [?15 APRIL 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The performance of Clari took place on 27 Apr; the dress rehearsal was presumably on the 26th, the Friday week after 15 Apr; Kolle had missed the rehearsal on 13 Apr.

Bentinck St. | Monday Morning

My dear Kolle.

I received your note the other day and of course much regretted the absence of any Member of my company on the occasion of a Grand Rehearsal. You ask me whether I do not congratulate you.[†1] I do most sincerely. If any one can be supposed to take a lively and real interest in such a case it is an old and mutual friend of both parties. Though perhaps I cannot lay claim to the title of an "old" friend I hope I may to that of a real one, and although unfortunately and unhappily for myself I have no fellow feeling with you[†2] — no cause to sympathise with your past causes of annoyance, or your present prospects of happiness, — I am not the less disposed to offer my heartfelt congratulations to you because you are, or at all events will be what I never can — happy and contented; taking present grievances as happiness compared with former difficulties and looking cheerfully and steadily forward to a bright perspective of many happy years.

Now turning from feeling, and making one's self miserable & so on, may I ask you to spare one Evening this week for the purpose of doing your two pair of side Scenes?[†3] I would not ask you but I really have no other resource; the time is fast approaching and I am rather nervous. Will you write and tell me when you will come and when I may send for your Scene? Thursday is a Rehearsal of Clari with the Band[†4] & Friday week a dress Rehearsal. You shall have your Bills[†5] when I see you — an immense audience are invited, including many Judges. — Write me an answer to these queries as soon as possible pray. The family are busy, the Corps dramatique are all anxiety, the scenery is all completing rapidly, the machinery is finished, the Curtain hemmed, the Orchestra complete — and the manager grimy.[†6]

Believe me
My dear Kolle
Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [?19 or 20 APRIL 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The Monday rehearsal must have been on 22 Apr, a week after To Kolle, ?15 Apr. Presumably this was written late in the intervening week, after the rehearsal with the band.

Dear Kolle.

Will you be kind enough to give Henry Bramwell[†1] the inclosed 14/- for Cigars, at the same time saying I am much obliged to him. Ask him to be punctual on Monday as I expect an excellent Rehearsal and "Look to yourself". The Scenery is progressing at a very rapid rate; the machinery is excellent, the decorations are very good and ditto expensive — and in short the whole affair is in excellent train.

I am busy and therefore will not give you the trouble of deciphering any more of my iligant writing.

Believe me
Dear Kolle
Sincerely Yours
CD.

Have you seen our friend the clerk yet?[†2] — Or have you adopted the other course?[†3] — No good result yet I presume?

To THOMAS BEARD, [?22 APRIL 1833]

MS Dickens House. Date: Beard had apparently not yet accepted Mrs Dickens's invitation of 14 Apr.[†4] Tone suggests CD was sending the additional inducement eight days, rather than one day, later. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | Portman Place | Edgeware[†5] Road.

18 Bentinck St. | Monday Morning

Dear Beard.

Will the inclosed Bill[†6] induce you to forego the determination you appear to have formed never to accept Invitations to our little parties?

Yours Truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To H. W. KOLLE, [23 APRIL 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the Tuesday before the performance.

Bentinck Street | Tuesday Morning

My dear Kolle.

I will not say that I have been surprised at our not hearing from or seeing you either on the day you mentioned in your note or at any other time since its receipt, because of course we know from practical experience in other cases that a little flow of prosperity is an excellent cooler of former friendships, and that when other and more pleasant engagements can be formed visits — if not visits of convenience — become excessively irksome. This is everybody's way and of course therefore I attach no blame to you that it is yours also. I do not say this with any ill natured feeling or in any unkind spirit, but I know that something like this is felt by others here, and I am really sorry for it, though as I said before by no means surprised that it should be so —

Now as Saturday is fast approaching I should really be much obliged to you if you will (if you can find time) write me a word in answer to these two questions. In the first place do you play the Nobleman?[†1] I have the dress and if you are disinclined to play the character I must entrust it to other hands. In the second place when may I send for your Scene[†2] as it requires fitting up, lighting &c?

Believe me (in great haste)
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN,[†3] [?SPRING 1833]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: perhaps not long after the theatricals of 27 Apr.

Saturday Morning

Dear Henry.

If you have nothing better to engage you tomorrow (Sunday) I shall be very happy to give you a Sailing trip on board a large "wessel" which Jack Urquhart[†4] has borrowed for the occasion — of course having a proper

Crew.[†1] We take our grub (which I provide) on board and go ashore for nothing and we proceed by Coach to Greenwich (I will not say Stage for fear the word should excite in your mind

"A thought of the days that have passed away
A thought of those feelings so bright & gay" — †2

&c &c. The parenthesis including the "Copy of verses" is so long that I must recommence the Sentence and say that we wish to be at Greenwich by 9.†3

If you think it worth your while to join us I shall be at home this Evening at [ ]†4 purpose of settling time of meeting &c.

Believe me
My dear Henry
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, [?SPRING 1833]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the day after last. Address: Henry Austin Esqre.

Sunday Morning | 8 O'Clock

Dear Henry.

If you are down at Strand Lane and hail "The Alert" any time until 9 we will send our boat off for you.†5

Believe me
Truly Yours
CD.

May

To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [14 MAY 1833]

MS Huntington Library. Date: CD's first letter asking Maria's consent to his writing to Mary Anne Leigh; date deduced from To Kolle, 16 May 33.

18 Bentinck Street | Tuesday Afternoon

I do feel Miss Beadnell after my former note to you that common delicacy and a proper feeling of consideration alike require that I should without a moment's delay inform you (as I did verbally yesterday) that I never by word or deed in the slightest manner directly or by implication made in any way a Confidante of Mary Ann Leigh, and never was I more surprised, never did I endure more heartfelt annoyance and vexation than to hear yesterday by chance that days even weeks ago she had made this observation — not having the slightest idea that she had done so of course it was out of my power to contradict it before. Situated as we have been once I have — laying out of consideration every idea of common honour not to say common honesty — too often thought of our earlier correspondence, and too often looked back to happy hopes the loss of which have made me the miserable reckless wretch I am, to breathe the slightest hint to any creature living of one single circumstance that ever passed between us — much less to her.

In replying to your last note I denied Mary Ann Leighs interference, and I did so hoping to spare you the pain of any recrimination with her. Her duplicity and disgusting falsehood however renders it quite unnecessary to conceal the part she has acted and I therefore have now no hesitation in saying that she quite unasked volunteered the information that you[†1] had made her a Confidante of all that had ever passed between us without reserve. In proof of which assertion she not only detailed facts which I undoubtedly thought she could have heard from none but yourself, but she also communicated many things which certainly never occurred at all, equally calculated to excite something even more than ordinary angry feelings.

On hearing this yesterday (and no consideration on earth shall induce me ever to forget or forgive Fanny's not telling me of it before) my first impulse was to go to Clapton:[†2] my next to prevent misrepresentation to write immediately. I thought on reflection, however that the most considerate and proper course would be to state to you exactly what I wish to do. I ask your consent previously for this reason — because it is possible that you may think that my writing a violent note would have the effect of exciting ill nature which had better be avoided. I candidly own that I am most anxious to write. I care as little for her malice as I do for her, but as you are a party who would perhaps be mixed up with her story I think it is proper to ask you whether you object to my sending the note which I have already written. I need hardly say that if it be sent at all it should be at once and I therefore hope to receive your decision tomorrow assuring you that I will abide by it whatever it be.

I will not detain you or intrude upon your attention by any more observations. I fear I could say little, calculated to interest or please you. I have no hopes to express no wishes to communicate. I am past the one and must not think of the other. Though surprised at such inconceivable duplicity I can express no pleasure at the discovery, for I have been so long used to inward wretchedness, and real, real, misery that it matters little very little to me what others may think of or what becomes of me. — I have to apologize for troubling you at all but I hope you will believe that a sense of respect for and deference to your feelings has elicited this note to which I have once again to beg your immediate answer.

CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [14 MAY 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the letter enclosing To Maria Beadnell, 14 May. Address: H. W. Kolle Esqre.

Tuesday Evg.

My dear Kolle. On reflection it appeared to me that as Miss Beadnell is a party concerned and as Marianne Leigh's malice in the event of my writing might be directed against her I have thought it best to ask her consent to my writing at all which I have done in the inclosed note. You know how I feel upon the subject and how anxious I naturally am and I am sure therefore you will do all you can for me when I say that I want it delivered immediately. I have lost too much time already.

Believe me
My dear Kolle
Faithfully Yours
CD

To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [16 MAY 1833]

MS Huntington Library. Date: The plan to meet Kolle at 10 next evening shows this was enclosed with next.

18 Bentinck Street | Thursday 4 o'Clock.

I cannot forbear replying to your note this moment received Miss Beadnell because you really seem to have made two mistakes. In the first place you do not exactly understand the nature of my feelings with regard to your alledged[†1] communications to M A L[†2] and in the next you certainly totally and entirely misunderstand my feeling with regard to her — that you could suppose as you clearly do (that is to say if the subject is worth a thought to you) that I have ever really thought of M A L in any other than my old way you are mistaken. That she has for some reason and to suit her own purposes, of late thrown herself in my way I could plainly see and I know it was noticed by others. — For instance on the night of the play[†3] after we went up stairs I could not get rid of her; God knows that I have no pleasure in speaking to her or any girl living, and never had — May I say that you have ever been the sole exception? "Kind words and winning looks" have done much much with me — but not from her — unkind words and cold looks however have done much much more — That I have been the subject of both from you as your will altered and your pleasure changed, I know well — and so I think must you. I have often said before and I say again I have borne more from you than I do believe any creature breathing ever bore from a woman before. The slightest hint however even now of change or transfer of feeling I cannot bear and do not deserve.

Again. I never supposed nor did this girl give me to understand that you ever breathed a syllable against me. It is quite a mistake on your part but knowing (and there cannot be a stronger proof of my disliking her) what she was knowing her admirable qualifications for a Confidante and recollecting what had passed between ourselves I was more than hurt more than annoyed at the bare idea of your confiding the tale to her of all people living. I reflected upon it. I coupled her communication with what I saw (with a jaundiced eye perhaps) of your own conduct; on the very last occasion of seeing you before writing that note I heard even among your own friends (and there was no Mary Ann present) I heard even among them remarks on your own conduct and pity — pity Good God — for my situation and I did think (you will pardon my saying it for I am describing my then feelings and not my present) that the same light butterfly feeling which prompted the one action could influence the other — Wretched aye almost broken hearted I wrote to you — (I have the note for you returned it,[†1] and even now I do think it was written "more in sorrow than in anger", and to my mind — I had almost said to your better judgment — it must appear to breathe anything but an unkind or bitter feeling) — You replied to the note. I wrote another and that at least was expressive of the same sentiments as I ever had felt and ever should feel towards you to my dying day.[†2] That note you sent me back by hand wrapped in a small loose piece of paper without even the formality of an envelope and that note I wrote after receiving yours. It is poor sport to trifle on a subject like this: I know what your feelings must have been and by them I regulated my conduct.

To return to the question of what is best to be done. I go to Kolle's at 10 oClock tomorrow Evening and I will inclose to you and give to him then a copy of the note which if I send any I will send to Marianne Leigh. I do not ask your advice. All I ask is whether you see any reason to object. You will perhaps inclose it after reading it, and say whether you object to it's going or not.

With regard to Fanny if she owed a duty to you she owed a greater one to me — and for this reason because she knew what Marianne Leigh had said of you; she heard from you what she had said of me and yet she had not the fairness the candour the feeling to let me know it — and if I were to live a hundred years I never would forgive it.

As to sending my last note back, pray do not consult my feelings but your own. Look at the note itself. Do you think it is unkind cold hasty or conciliatory? and deliberate? I shall — indeed I need — express no wish upon the subject. You will act as you think best. It is too late for me to attempt to influence your decision. I have said doubtless both in this and my former note much more than perhaps I ought or should have said had I attempted disguise or concealment to you and I have no doubt more than is agreeable to yourself. Towards you I never had and never can have an angry feeling. If you had ever felt for me one hundredth part of my feeling for you there would have been little cause of regret, little coldness little unkindness between us. My feeling on one subject was early roused it has been strong, and it will be lasting. I am in no mood to quarrel with any one for not entertaining similar sentiments and least of all Miss Beadnell with you. You will think of what I have said and act accordingly. Destitute as I am of hope or comfort I have borne much and I dare say can bear more

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [16 MAY 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM 1 [ ] May 33; the only Thursday in May beginning with "I" was the 16th. Address: Henry Kolle Esqre. | 14 Addle Street | Aldermanbury.

Bentinck Street | Thursday

Dear Kolle.

"Least said soonest mended." I am very, very, much obliged to you for performing my commission in the midst of your multifarious concerns so kindly and punctually — May I trouble you with another? — By way of course of evincing my gratitude. I shall be at my post in Addle St. at 10 tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY ANNE LEIGH, [17 MAY 1833]

MS Huntington Library.[†1] Date: clearly the note enclosed in next.

Dear Miss Leigh.

I am very happy to avail myself of the opportunity of inclosing your Album (which I regret to say want of a moment's time has quite prevented me writing in), to say a very few words relative to an observation made by you the other day to one of the Miss Beadnell's I believe; and[†2] which has only I regret to say just reached my ears quite accidentally. I should not have noticed it at all were it merely an idle gossiping remark for one is necessarily compelled to hear so many of them and they are usually so trifling and so ridiculous, that it would be mere waste of time to notice them in any way. The remark to which I allude however is one which if it had the slightest foundation in truth — would so strongly tend to implicate me as a dishonorable babbler, with little heart and less head, that in justice to myself I cannot refrain from adverting to it — You will at once perceive I allude to your giving them to understand (if not directly by implication) that I had made you my confidante, with respect to anything which [may][†1] have passed between Maria B — and myself. Now passing over any remark which may have been artfully elicited from me in any unguarded moment, I can safely say, that I never made a confidante of any one. I am perfectly willing to admit that if I had wished to secure a confidante in whom candour, secrecy and kind honorable feeling were indispensable requisites I could have looked to no one better calculated for this office than yourself: but still the making you the depository of my feelings or secrets, is an honor I never presumed to expect and one which I certainly must beg most positively to decline — A proof of self denial in which so far as I learn from other avowed confidantes of yours, I am by no means singular.

I have not hesitated to speak plainly because I feel most strongly on this subject — The allegation — if it were not grossly untrue — I again say tending so materially to inculpate me, and the assertion itself having been made (so far as I can learn at least, for it has reached me in a very circuitous manner) certainly not in the most unaffected or delicate way.

I hope you will understand that in troubling you, I am not actuated by any absurd idea of self consequence. I am perfectly aware of my own unimportance, and it is solely because I am so; because I would much rather mismanage my own affairs, than have them ably conducted by the officious interference of any one, because I do think that your interposition in this instance however well intentioned, has been productive of as much mischief as it has been uncalled for; and because I am really and sincerely desirous, of sparing you the meanness and humiliation, of acting in the petty character of an unauthorized go-between, that I have been induced to write this note — for the length of which I beg you will accept my apology.

I am,
Dear Miss Leigh
Yours &c
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [17 MAY 1833]

MS Huntington Library. Date: the note enclosing last. Address: Miss Maria Beadnell.

18 Bentinck Street | Friday

Agreeably to my promise I beg to Inclose you a copy of the note I propose to send to Marianne Leigh, which you will perhaps be so good as to return me (as I have no other copy from which to write the original) as soon as possible. I had intended to have made it more severe but perhaps upon the whole the inclosed will be sufficient. Until receiving any answer you may make to my last note I will not trouble you with any further observation. Of course you will at least on this point (I mean Marianne Leigh's note) say what you think without reserve and any course you may propose or any alteration you may suggest shall on my word and honor be instantly adopted. Should anything you may say (in returning her note) to me make me anxious to return any answer may I have your permission to forward it to you?

I find I have proceeded to the end of my note without even inserting your name. May I ask you to excuse the omission and to believe that I would gladly have addressed you in a very very different way?

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Maria Beadnell

To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [19 MAY 1833]

MS Huntington Library. Date: the conciliatory note enclosed in next.

18 Bentinck Street. | Sunday Morning.

Dear Miss Beadnell.

I am anxious to take the earliest opportunity of writing to you again, knowing that the opportunity of addressing you through Kolle — now my only means of communicating with you — will shortly be lost, and having your own permission to write to you — I am most desirous of forwarding a note which had I received such permission earlier, I can assure you you would have received 'ere this. Before proceeding to say a word upon the subject of my present note let me beg you to believe that your request to see Marianne Leigh's answer is rendered quite unnecessary by my previous determination to shew it you, which I shall do immediately on receiving it — that is to say if I receive any at all. If I know anything of her art or disposition however you are mistaken in supposing that her remarks will be directed against yourself. I shall be the mark at which all the anger and spleen will be directed — and I shall take it very quietly, for whatever she may say I shall positively decline to enter into any further controversy with her. I shall have no objection to break a lance paper or otherwise with any champion to whom she may please to entrust her cause but I will have no further correspondence or communication with her personally, or in writing. I have copied the note and done up the parcel which will go off by the first Clapton Coach tomorrow morning. —

And now to the object of my present note. I have considered and reconsidered the matter, and I have come to the unqualified determination that I will allow no feeling of pride no haughty dislike to making a conciliation to prevent my expressing it without reserve. — I will advert to nothing that has passed; I will not again seek to excuse any part I have acted or to justify it by any course you have ever pursued, I will revert to nothing that has ever passed between us; I will only openly and at once say that there is nothing I have more at heart, nothing I more sincerely and earnestly desire than to be reconciled to you. — It would be useless for me to repeat here what I have so often said before; it would be equally useless to look forward and state my hopes for the future — all that any one can do to raise himself by his own exertions and unceasing assiduity I have done, and will do. I have no guide by which to ascertain your present feelings and I have God knows no means of influencing them in my favor. I never have loved and I never can love any human creature breathing but yourself. We have had many differences, and we have lately been entirely separated. Absence however has not altered my feelings in the slightest degree, and the Love I now tender you is as pure, and as lasting as at any period of our former correspondence. I have now done all I can to remove our most unfortunate and to me most unhappy misunderstanding — The matter now of course rests solely with you, and you will decide as your own feelings and wishes direct you. I could say much for myself, and I could entreat a favourable consideration in my own behalf but I purposely abstain from doing so because it would be only a repetition of an oft told tale, and because I am sure that nothing I could say would have the effect of influencing your decision in any degree whatever. Need I say that to me it is a matter of vital import and the most intense anxiety? — I fear that the numerous claims which must necessarilly be made on your time and attention next week will prevent your answering this note within anything like the time which my impatience would name. Let me entreat you to consider your determination well whatever it be and let me implore you to communicate it to me as early as possible. — As I am anxious to convey this note into the City in time to get it delivered today I will at once conclude by begging you to believe me

Yours sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. KOLLE, [19 MAY 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Kolle was married on Wed 22 May;[†1] the celebration CD refers to here presumably took place the week before. Address: H. W. Kolle Esqre. | 14 Addle Street | Aldermanbury.

Sunday

My dear Kolle. I inclose a very conciliatory note sans pride, sans reserve sans anything[†2] but an evident wish to be reconciled, which I shall be most obliged by your delivering. — Independently of the numerous advantages of your marriage you will have this great consolation — that you will be for once and for aye relieved from these most troublesome commissions. I leave the note myself hoping it is possible (tho' not probable) that it may catch you so as to be delivered to day — By the bye if I had many friends in the habit of marrying which said friends had brothers who possessed an extensive assortment of choice hock I should be dead in no time. Yesterday I felt like a Maniac — to day my interior resembles a Lime Basket.†1

Truly Yours

CD.

June

To RICHARD EARLE,†2 6 JUNE [1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: endorsed 6 June 33.†3

18 Bentinck Street | Cavendish Square | Thursday June 6th.

Sir.

I trust you will pardon the very great liberty I take in troubling you with any application on my own behalf, but as you have been kind enough to express an opinion in favour of my abilities as a Reporter,†4 and as you have had opportunities of perusing my Reports, and being enabled to judge of their accuracy &c I am induced to make a request of a strictly private nature — and I can only plead my reliance on your kindness, and a natural wish on my part to enlarge the field of my exertions as an excuse of making it.

I am always entirely unemployed during the recess. I need hardly say that I have many strong inducements for wishing to be so as little as possible; and thinking that perhaps in the course of the business with which you are connected, you are frequently to a certain extent engaged in the formation of commissions, or other public Boards on which the services of a Short Hand Writer are required, I have made up my mind to take the liberty of asking you, should you ever have an opportunity of recommendation if you would object to mentioning my name. — Of course the value of a recommendation from such a quarter would be incalculable, and I trust the recommendation itself would not be misplaced.

I will not detain you further than by again apologising for writing to you, and venturing to express a hope that you will not consider my application impertinent, and consequently unworthy of notice.

I am Sir

Your most obliged Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Earle Esqre.

&c &c &c

August

To J. P. COLLIER,[†1] [?AUGUST 1833]

Mention in J. P. Collier, An Old Man's Diary: Forty Years Ago, 1872, Preface, p.v. Date: according to Collier, soon after 27 July 33 when he first met CD and agreed to recommend him to the Morning Chronicle.

Thanking Collier for his attempt to obtain him an appointment as reporter on the Morning Chronicle.

October

To MISS URQUHART,[†2] [?OCTOBER 1833]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Perhaps refers to the theatricals which were the subject of a Circular dated 7 Oct 33.[†3]

Bentinck Street. | Wednesday Morng.

My dear Miss Urquhart.

It will afford me the greatest pleasure (should nothing occur to prevent me, which I have no idea of) to have the honor of dining with you on Friday at Five precisely. I trust your Ladyship will excuse my note being especially brief but I am terribly out of spirits this morning owing to the great difficulty I and the Stage Carpenter experience in making Moonlight which is a much more troublesome task than we anticipated.

Pray give my love to Letitia;[†4] "accept the same from yours truly" as schoolboys say when they write notes, and Believe me My dear Miss Urquhart

Yours most sincerely
CHARLES. I.B.L.K.Y.N.[†5] DICKENS

December

To H. W. KOLLE, [3 DECEMBER 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The Dec issue of the Monthly Magazine came out on the 1st; CD was probably writing two days later.

Bentinck Street | Tuesday Morning

My dear Kolle

I intend with the gracious permission of yourself and Spouse to look in upon you some Evening this week. I do not write to you however for the purpose of ceremoniously making this important announcement but to beg Mrs. K's criticism of a little paper of mine[†1] (the first of a Series)[†2] in the Monthly[†3] (not the New Monthly)[†4] Magazine of this month. I haven't a Copy to send but if the Number falls in your way, look for the Article. It is the same that you saw lying on my table but the name is transmogrified from "A Sunday out of town" to "A dinner at Poplar Walk".

Knowing the interest (or thinking I know the interest) you are kind enough to take in my movements I have the vanity to make this communication. Best Remembrances to Mrs. K "So no more at present" from

My dear Kolle
Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

I am so dreadfully nervous, that my hand shakes to such an extent as to prevent my writing a word legibly.

To H. W. KOLLE, [?10 DECEMBER 1833]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably the Tuesday after the piracy of CD's first sketch by the Thief in its issue of 7 Dec.

Bentinck Street. | Tuesday Morng.

My dear Kolle.

I only returned from my Uncle's[†1] at Norwood[†2] (where I have been busily engaged[†3] for a week past, and whither I return again to day) late last night. Consequently as they did not forward your note, I could not have the pleasure of seeing you on Friday Evening, not knowing of your Invitation.

They have done me the honor of selecting my article for insertion in "The Thief"[†4] where you will see it "for the small charge of three pence" if you have not yet paid 2/6. I have had a polite and flattering communication from The Monthly people requesting more papers but they are "rather backward in coming forward" with the needful.[†5] I am in treaty with them however; and if we close, my next paper will be "Private Theatricals"[†6] and my next "London by Night".[†7] I shall then please God commence a series of papers (the materials for which I have been noting down for some time past) called The Parish.[†1] Should they be successful & as publishing is hazardous, I shall cut my proposed Novel[†2] up into little Magazine Sketches. Should I not settle with this Periodical, I shall try "The Metropolitan"[†3] —

As I am not certain how long I shall be detained at Norwood, I cannot say when I can have the pleasure of seeing you. As soon as I return, be it only for a Night, however, I shall shew myself at Newington and must take the chance of finding you at home. Business in the shape of masses of papers, plans, and prospectusses;[†4] — and pleasure in the shape of a very nice pair of black eyes,[†5] — call me to Norwood. — Of course the call is imperative and must be obeyed.

Pray give my love (I may say so, I suppose?) to Anne, and perhaps you will do me the favor of turning over the following request in your mind. — When there is a vacancy for a Godfathership either to a young lady or young gentleman, — for I am not particular, — who can afford to have one poor Godfather will you bear me in mind?[†6] — Hint this delicately to your Missus.

Believe me
My dear Kolle
Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

More nervous than ever.
PS. Grimy.

To HENRY AUSTIN, [?WINTER 1833-4]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature suggests Winter 1833-4. Address: Henry Austin Esqre. Junr. | Bloomsbury Square.

Bentinck St. | Friday Morng.

My dear Henry

What excuse can I make to you? — None at all, and therefore for once I will tell the truth. Letitia[†7] was taken exceedingly ill on Wednesday night or rather Thursday Morng. I was running about after Leeches Woolridge[†1] and other necessaries until about 4, went to bed late, got up ditto, went to work immediately, and as entirely forgot my promise to write to you, as I forget when, where, and how, I learnt the alphabet.

I only thought of it last night. Of course they could not have gone (at least I suppose not, under the circumstances) and therefore if you will accept my sincere apology I hope there is no harm done.

Believe me (of course in haste)
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

1834

?

To THOMAS MITTON,[†2] [?EARLY 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Signature and the letter's apparent connection with CD's negotiations for a house (see To Molloy, Feb and 6 Mar) suggest early 1834.

Mirror Office | Monday Night

Dear Tom. I hardly know what to do — I really have not sufficient decision about me to make up my mind how to act — and (except Barrow who is violently prejudiced) I can speak to no one but you. My impression is, — at all risks, and running every hazard, — to back out — I have no objection to tell you (for I don't know why I should keep anything from you) the [re][†3]al reasons which induce me to take this determination. Now if it be done at all, it must be done at once. I don't like t[o][†4] come to the office tomorrow (Tuesday) because I have no particular wish to see Molloy.[†5] As it is no trifling matter, say you must leave the office for an hour — come up by a bus or a cab or anything, the expence[†1] of which I will defray when I see you & let us decide. Come about one or half past, if you can.

Believe me
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

February

To THOMAS BEARD, [?FEBRUARY 1834]

MS Dickens House. Date: endorsed 1834, presumably by Beard; signature suggests Feb. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre.

Bentinck Street | Saturday Morng.[†2]

My dear Bird.[†3]

In case I should not see you this Evening I think it better to write and say that I fear in consequence of my mother's illness (to say nothing of the calomel) I shall be compelled to postpone the pleasure of seeing you tomorrow, regretting alike the cause and the necessity.

I am so delighted with Barrow's note on the qualities of Tobacco[†4] (communicated by Harfield)[†5] that I can think of nothing else.

Believe me (in haste)
Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES MOLLOY, [FEBRUARY 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: presumably not long before next; signature supports.

Mirror of Parliament Office | Thursday Night

Dear Sir.

As the lady who is the cause of my treating for the purchase of the House[†6] at all, is anxious to have the agreement in her name; as I am desirous of complying with her request, and as I presume Mr. Delmar[†1] on the circumstances being explained to him, cannot object to having a much better security than my own, for the purchase of the house, I shall feel much obliged by your having the Agreement altered to this effect — the alteration after all, is merely the Insertion of one name for another.

I need hardly say, as the other parties do not appear to be very much on the alert, that I shall feel very much indebted to you, if you will have the kindness to induce them to terminate the business one way or other as speedily as possible, — as while it is pending, I am prevented from looking out for any other bargain.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Molloy Esqre.

March

To CHARLES MOLLOY, [6 MARCH 1834]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: endorsed "March 6/34".[†2]

Bentinck Street. | Thursday Evening.

Dear Sir.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your note inclosing a copy of Mr. Delmar's and also of one from Mrs. Moore[†3] to that gentleman.

I beg to say that Mrs. Moore's representation of the understanding between us is so completely in opposition to what really occurred (I do not depend entirely on my own recollection, though that is perfect on the subject, — for there was a third party present) that I shall beg to decline any further negociation for the purchase of the house in Holywell Street.[†4]

I am
Dear Sir
Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Molloy Esqr.

April

To H. W. KOLLE, [APRIL 1834]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: CD's sketch, "The Boarding House", Part I, was published 1 May 34.

Bentinck Street. | Monday Evening.

My dear Kolle.

As neither you or yours have the most remote connexion with the Boarding House of which I am the Proprietor, I cannot have the least objection to (indeed I shall feel flattered by) your perusing it; it is however at present in the hands of the Publishers. When they return it to me, you shall have it.

I am much obliged to you for purchasing the Lottery Ticket. I shall call for an hour very soon, when I will kill two Birds with one stone, and pay you for the "wentur" besides bringing the "O'Thello".[†1]

I think if we win we had better sacrifice the discount and take ready money — unless indeed you prefer gold bars. I see by the announcements in the different Lottery Office Windows that the lucky Purchaser of a ticket may have the value "in money or freehold houses". Suppose we have £10 worth of freehold houses. Of course this will afford a small street. I'll have one side of the way, and you shall have the other. I shall improve my property by the erection of brass knockers, and patent Water Closets.

Give my love to Mrs K and Believe me

My dear Kolle
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Kolle Esqre.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?SPRING 1834]*

MS Mrs Humphry House. Date: Signature suggests Spring 1834.

[†2] forthwith, and return it to you immediately.

I wish, — when you have a moment to spare, but there's no hurry — to offer a suggestion to you for consideration.

Believe me
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I shall most likely see you on Tuesday.

To H. W. KOLLE, [SPRING 1834]

MS Morgan Library. Date: probably not long after the birth of Kolle's son (to whom CD became godfather: see next) on 20 Apr; "The Bloomsbury Christening" had come out in the April Monthly Magazine.

18 Bentinck Street. | Monday Morning

My dear Kolle.

I am beyond measure distressed at your having had to wait for your coat. "Appearances are against me, I know" as the man said when he murdered his brother, but it really is not my fault that it has not been returned. I entrusted it to our ex-man John Boston[†1] a long time since to take to the City, and a night or two since, he brought it back very coolly with an intimation that he had not had time to execute the commission — Never lend me another. I have got a severe cold which I suppose is a judgment upon me.

I am most happy to hear my Godson (to whom I beg my love and a Christianity-paternal kiss may be delivered immediately on your reaching home) is flaring up[†2] so rig'lar, and that he may increase in flariness as he increases in years, is his God papa's sincere wish. I fear I shall be obliged to go to Norwood next Sunday but on the following Sabbath, I shall decidedly satisfy myself of his improvement by personal Inspection, that is to say if yourself and Mrs. Kolle are "agreeable".

I have quite come out again since I saw you. I have positively been to a party (Austin's). I know it's a weakness, but I am ashamed to say I quite liked it.

Pray give my love to Mrs. Kolle and Believe me

Dear Kolle
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Kolle Esqre.

Have you seen "The Bloomsbury Christening"? If not I'll send it you.

To H. W. KOLLE, [?SUMMER 1834]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Kolle's son was probably christened during the Summer.

Bentinck St. | Friday Evening.

Dear Kolle.

I snatch an instant to say that I shall be at the Balls Pond Chapel[†3] please God on Sunday next at ½ past two precisely.

Believe me
Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

"My duty" to your good Lady.

September

To F. C. BEARD,[†1] 3 SEPTEMBER [1834]

Text from Temple Bar, CII (1894), 315-16.[†2] Date: The only Wed 3 Sep while CD was at Bentinck Street was in 1834. Address: to "F. Carr Beard" according to Francis Edwards catalogue No. 406 (1920).

Bentinck Street, Wednesday, Sept. 3rd.

Dear ——,

As I am generally considered by those who know me best, one of the worst correspondents that ever existed, I take up my pen more in the hope of redeeming my character than because I have anything to communicate worthy your perusal. First and foremost, how are you — have all symptoms of grime disappeared — how many birds have you killed — have you been to the Something and Platter, and astonished the natives — what have you done — have you had a fall of any kind, equestrian or otherwise — have you fallen in love with any lady, or fallen out with any gentleman? Let me have the fullest particulars, and, above all, don't attempt to gammon me about your shooting — I am determined not to believe you.

Now for my report. I have taken a wine-glass full of "the mixture as before"[†3] twice a day, varying the amusement with an occasional pill. I shudder when I think of that mixture. The more one takes of it, the more nauseous it becomes; it really requires no slight mental exertion to enable me to retain my breakfast, which, thanks to your prescription and a quiet life, is now a very hearty meal. I look better, feel better, and hope, please God, to continue better than I have been for many a day. With the exception of a severe cold and nasty cough, I have nothing to complain of, and everything to be thankful for, on the score of health. Can I say anything more strongly illustrative of my confidence in your advice?

Having said thus much on a topic so unimportant to any but those who take an interest in my well-being (among whom I am vain enough to suppose I may class yourself) I really have exhausted my sources of scribbling; from you I shall expect a long letter, which I look forward to derive much amusement and instruction from. You must have seen so many new things, and new faces, that your only difficulty will be to select scenes for description. I, heaven help me! have been tied to my kennel, and beyond my communications with your family, and an unpremeditated flare at the English Opera House[†4] last night with the ladies, have had nothing to divert the grimy monotony of my every-day life.[†1] I am writing this in the front drawing-room, in a great fidget. There is a coach-office carrier delivering a hamper over the way, evidently by mistake. It must be for us; it contains game, I see. They're opening the door — there's a parley — they're going to send him over here — no; damn it! they have paid him — the street door is shut, and he has driven off in a light cart.

Apropos — talking of light carts puts me in mind of travelling, and talking of travelling reminds me of ——. Up to a late hour last night no accounts of him had been received. I can make great allowances when there is a lady in the case, but I think he was bound in honour to return immediately and give us a full and faithful account of your demeanour on board the "wessle". I suppose I shall hear it to-morrow evening, which I spend [at your house]. Here are three sides [ ][†2] gone, and I must begone too [ ][†2] time I was in the City. I must be brief for my own sake, and I am sure I ought to be for yours. I have only, then, to add that all here unite in loves and remembrances, etc., etc., etc., and best wishes for your health and comfort. Let me conclude by begging you, if you should ever arrive at the end of this letter (which is just within the limits of probability), to believe that I am — not as a matter of form, but of meaning and reality, dear ——, ever yours sincerely,

CHARLES DICKENS.[†3]

October

To THE EDITOR OF THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE,[†1] [OCTOBER 1834]*

Text from Monthly Magazine, Nov 1834, XVIII, facing p. 469. Date: published 1 Nov 34; The Christening was first performed 13 Oct.

My Dear Editor,

I celebrated a christening a few months ago in the Monthly,[†2] and I find that Mr. Buckstone[†3] has officiated as self-elected godfather, and carried off my child to the Adelphi,[†4] for the purpose, probably, of fulfilling one of his sponsorial duties, viz., of teaching it the vulgar tongue.

Now, as I claim an entire right to do 'what I like with my own', and as I contemplated a dramatic destination[†5] for my offspring, I must enter my protest against the kidnapping process.

It is very little consolation to me to know, when my handkerchief is gone, that I may see it flaunting with renovated beauty in Field-lane;[†6] and if Mr. Buckstone has too many irons in the fire to permit him to get up his own 'things', I don't think he ought to be permitted to apply to my chest of drawers.

Just give him a good 'blow up' in your 'magazine', — will you?[†7]

I remain, your's,

BOZ.

To the Editor of the Monthly.

November

To HENRY NETHERSOLE,[†1] 13 NOVEMBER [1834]*

MS Messrs Speechly, Mumford & Soames. Date: The only Thurs 13 Nov while CD was at Bentinck Street was in 1834. Address: —— Nethersole Esqre | New Inn.

18 Bentinck Street. Cavendish Square | Thursday November 13

Sir.

As I am desirous of taking a set of Chambers in New Inn,[†2] should I find any to suit me; and as I am not aware what are the regulations of the Society, I think it better to consult you on the subject, before I trouble myself, or any one else by looking at such Chambers as are at present to let.

I am not a member of the legal profession; my whole time is at present devoted to literary pursuits, and I intend entering at the bar, as soon as circumstances will enable me to do so.[†3]

Under these circumstances I take the liberty of enquiring whether not being admitted into the List of Attornies[†4] or Law Students, I am incapable of being admitted into the Inn, on complying with the established forms, and entering into such securities as are required from other gentlemen.

I remain
Sir
Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

— Nethersole Esqre

To THOMAS MITTON, [?20 NOVEMBER 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: probably after letter to Nethersole, and the day before next. Address: Mr. Thomas Mitton | Charles Molloy Esqre.

Bentinck Street. | Thursday Morning

Dear Tom. I called on you last night, and went to New Inn, but seeing the outer door shut, made no noise, and decamped. Will you come up here at dinner time today? — We shall not dine until half past 4 on your account. They are all in great tribulation here; my father[†5] went out yesterday accompanied by Alfred,[†1] to endeavour to get some money, as Burr[†2] refused to wait beyond last Evening. He sent the boy home to say he had been unsuccessful, and has not made his appearance all night, or forwarded a message of any kind.

I own that at present his absence does not give me any very great uneasiness, knowing how apt he is to get out of the way when anything goes wrong. As, however, if we do not gain some tidings of him in the course of the day I shall hardly know what to think, and as at all events it may be necessary to hold a consultation, you will greatly oblige me by complying with my request.

Believe me

Sincerely yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esqre.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?21 NOVEMBER 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly before To Beard, 29 Nov; cannot be Fri 28th when CD in Birmingham; almost certainly the Friday before. Address: Mr. Mitton | Charles Molloy Esqre.

Bentinck Street | Friday Morning

Dear Tom.

On waking this morning, I was informed that my father (whom I have not seen, for he had gone out) had just been arrested by Shaw and Maxwell[†1] the quondam Wine People. Will you have the goodness the moment you receive this, to go over to Sloman's in Cursitor Street[†2] and see him for me, and ascertain whether anything can be done?

I must work this morning, but tell him please I shall be with him about Six. — I dine at 5 if you can come up.

I fear it is an awkward business, and really I have no idea of the extent of his other embarrassments.

Believe me
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have not yet been taken,[†3] but no doubt that will be the next act in this "domestic tragedy".

To THOMAS MITTON, [?21 NOVEMBER 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly same day as last; handwriting supports. From Cursitor Street, Lincoln's Inn.

Lin Inn | Friday Eveng

Dear Tom. I am over in Cursitor Street. As I go on at 8 and wish particularly to see you before I leave there, will you step over as soon as you return. I have an order in my pocket from my french Employer[†4] for £5, on an agent in the City who always pays me. They pay as the order notifies "between 2 and 4" and I did not get it until 5 today. I want to give the Governor some money, and if you will let me have as much as you can on account of the order, or the whole, you can have the check, or let Hartland present it — which you please.

Believe me
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esqre

To THOMAS MITTON, [?24 NOVEMBER 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Seems certainly to follow last two letters, the "condemned Hole" being presumably one of the many London Debtors' Courts.[†1]

Monday Morng

Dear Tom.

That condemned Hole is so full of Spectators and perspiration that I have been unable to get near you,[†2] and unwilling to hazard my precious person in the midst of the assembled warmint.

I want to see father at the Museum,[†3] and will be back here about 12 when we will proceed to Furnivals Inn.[†4]

Sincerely Yours

CD

12 O'Clock. I have seen him, and am now waiting for you at the Cock.[†5] Don't be long, if you can help it.

To THOMAS BEARD, [29 NOVEMBER 1834]

MS Dickens House. Date: CD had returned from reporting the preelection meeting held at Birmingham on Fri 28 Nov. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre.

Bentinck Street. | Saturday Evening

Dear Tom.[†6]

I arrived from Birmingham at 7 this Morning and remained at the office until 10, correcting the proofs of the "Whack"[†7] for a Second Edition[†8] — I am rather fagged as you may suppose, having perpetrated four columns in as many hours before I left the town of dirt, ironworks;[†1] radicals, and hardware.

If I had not a little business to transact on my own account to-night, I should, tired as I am, run the chance of finding you at home, for the purpose of saying a few words to you on a very distressing subject. My mother appears most anxious that your sister[†2] and yourself should be made acquainted with the situation in which she is placed. Knowing the anxiety of her feelings on this head, and concurring most sincerely with her, in valuing the friendship of yourself and family, most highly, I think it better to spare her the pain of making any communication, by writing to you myself at once. I do this with the less reluctance as I have already, more than once, hinted to you my fears that the state of my father's affairs, and his want of attention to them would render a change in our situation, imperative.

The fact is simply this — for a time, at all events, we must disperse ourselves[†3] as best we can, consistently with a reasonable hope of consulting the interests of all. My father I apprehend will not re-join his family for some time; my mother and two sisters will reside in the immediate neighbourhood of our present Lodgings — I hope in comfortable quarters, where they are not Strangers — and I, taking Frederick[†4] with me, to instruct and provide for as I best can, shall repair to Chambers in Furnivals Inn.[†5]

This is no great mystery after all, and perhaps will prove a source of but little surprise to you; but as I wish you to know the real state of the case without delay, and as I know my Mother does the same, I have no hesitation in confiding it to you, to disclose just as much, or as little of, as you think proper. There may be something of selfishness in this; for one never values friends so highly as in seasons of adversity, when their good feeling is best remembered, and when their loss would be most felt. You may attribute this communication to what cause you please — As far as I am concerned I can have no wish for concealment, and to my mother and sisters I know it will be a relief to find that you, and yours, know the worst.

I will conclude this long and gloomy epistle by saying that after much trouble and anxiety, I think I have, in conjunction with a friend of ours,[†1] succeeded in making the best general arrangement that could possibly be effected. We have much more cause for cheerfulness than despondency after all; and as I for one am determined to see everything in as bright a light as possible, having thank God little at present to fear on my own score, and not much on theirs, I will not add another word on the subject.

I suppose I shall have the pleasure of seeing you before long — I shall be at home all tomorrow.

All here desire loves and so forth. Will you add my remembrances, and accept my assurance that I am.

Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

December

To THOMAS BEARD, [?4 DECEMBER 1834]

MS Dickens House. Date: Presumably Beard, on receiving last letter, had offered help, and this was CD's reply; handwriting supports Dec, and reference to attending a meeting (see fn) suggests the 4th.

Bentinck Street. | Thursday Morning

Dear Tom.

With some difficulty I have fortunately persuaded the Bill Broker to renew the bill for two months, on paying the usual moderate bonus tomorrow. My salary for a week or two is so completely mortgaged by the expences consequent on our removal, that I really have no resource but your kind offer. If your expectation of receiving some money has been realized, will you lend me £5 for a short time? — If you have been disappointed, I shall esteem your kindness quite as highly as if you had had the money, and if you have not, it will be of the most essential service to me.

I had intended to call upon you this morning, but I have to go to a Meeting in the Afternoon,[†1] and have so much to do at home, that I cannot contrive to get out before. In the evening, after leaving the office I shall have to find Edward Barrow,[†2] and get his signature afresh.[†3] I shall however, certainly be home by ten at the latest. If business or leisure bring you in this Neighbourhood, will you look in about that time? — Of course we shall be alone and happy to see you.

Believe me
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thos. Beard Esqre

To THOMAS MITTON, [?DECEMBER 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting suggests date near last. Address: Mr. Thomas Mitton | Charles Molloy Esqre.

Bentinck Street. | Thursday Morng

Dear Tom. I am prevented from coming out this morning by a most absurd accident which I will explain when I see you, & which certainly would never have happened to any one but myself — I am therefore obliged to write and say for God's sake advance me what you can possibly spare till Saturday, when Hartland shall faithfully return it — I am most desperately hard up, and "the smallest contribution will be thankfully received".

Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS MITTON, [?DECEMBER 1834]

MS Huntington Library. Date: in Bentinck Street period; signature suggests late 1834. Address: Mr. Thomas Mitton | Charles Molloy Esqre. | 8 New Square | Lincolns Inn.

Bentinck St. | Thursday Morning

Dear Tom.

Will you transmit me by Bearer until Saturday, the enormous sum of 4/-? Hartland shall leave it for you until[†1] that day. I need not say I'm rather hard up this week.

Believe me
Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Mitton

To EUGENE NUGENT[†2] [1833-4]

Summary from Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 1 p.; dated Bentinck Street, Tuesday afternoon.

Inviting Nugent to meet half a dozen friends on Tuesday evening.

To THOMAS BEARD, [16 DECEMBER 1834]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 17 Dec 34 (Wednesday). Address: Thomas Beard Esqre | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Evening

Dear Tom.

On returning from the City to-day, I found, contrary to my expectation, that my man had not sent. As I have no dishes, no curtains, and no french polish, I think we had better, for all our comforts, defer the projected flare[†3] until Saturday — on one condition; namely that my seeing you on that Evening, will not prejudice your dining with me on Sunday.

Will you do me the favor to mention this, to your father[†4] Nat[,][†5] Frank,[†6] and Will[†1] — I should have said Thursday, but as I presume there is a chance of one of us going to Maidstone,[†2] I think it better to fix our conviviality for an Evening which I hope will be beyond the reach of disappointment.

Pray tell your father, that I place implicit reliance upon him; and be kind enough to remember on your own account that I have got some really extraordinary[†3] french brandy.

Believe me
Dear Tom
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqr

To HENRY AUSTIN, [20 DECEMBER 1834]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Mrs John Dickens's birthday was on 21 Dec; during CD's period at Furnival's Inn this was a Sunday only in 1834.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

Dear Henry.

I am obliged to give you the very ridiculous notice that if you come and see me tomorrow we must go out and get our dinner. I think the best way will be to walk somewhere; the fact is that I have had an explosion with nineteen out of the twenty Laundresses[†4] in the Inn already, and can't get "done for". Some Methodistical ruffian has been among 'em, and they have all got the cant about "profaning the Sabbath" — and wiolating that commandment which embraces within its scope not only the stranger within the gates, but cattle of every description, including Laundresses.

Tomorrow is my Mother's birth day, so I have promised on behalf of yourself and Beard that we will go from here, and spend the Evening there. If you will be down here as early as you can tomorrow morning — shall we say to breakfast; for I dont take that meal until half past ten? — we can walk to Norwood, or some pretty place where we can get a chop, and return here to our grog.

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To ANDRÉ FILLONNEAU,[†1] [?1834]

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd. Date: Possibly Fillonneau was the "french Employer" mentioned in To Mitton, ?21 Nov 34 (evening), and this letter written not long after.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

Dear Sir.

If you can conveniently entrust your smart little Messenger tomorrow night, with the amount due for the two last weeks, you will much oblige me.

Dr. Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. Fillonneau Esqre.

1835

January

To HENRY AUSTIN, [7 JANUARY 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: On Thurs 8 Jan CD drove to Chelmsford to begin his reporting of the Essex and Suffolk elections[†2]. Address: Henry Austin Esqre | 23 Grove Place | Lisson Grove.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Night past 12

Dear Henry

I have just been ordered on a journey the length of which is at present uncertain. I may be back on Sunday very probably, and start again on the following day. Should this be the case you shall hear from me before.

Don't laugh. — I am going (alone) in a gig; and to quote the elegant inducement which the proprietors of Hampstead Chays hold out to Sunday hirers — "the genlm'n drives himself"[†3] — I am going into Essex and Suffolk.[†4] It strikes me I shall be spilt before I pay a Turnpike. I have a presentiment, I shall run over an only child before I reach Chelmsford, my first stage.

Let the evident haste of this specimen of the Polite Letter Writer be its excuse and Believe me
Dear Henry
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [11 JANUARY 1835]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM Chelmsford 11 Jan 35. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Black Boy Hotel[†1] — Chelmsford | Sunday Morning

Dear Tom.

I am more anxious than I can well express to know the result of your Interview with Hodgkin,[†2] having set my heart on its being favourable.[†3] If you are not engaged tomorrow, will you write me a line by Return of Post, and resolve my doubts. I go into Suffolk on Tuesday Morning early but my Head Quarters will be here, and I have no doubt I shall receive at once any letter that arrives, directed as above.

I wish of all things that you were with me — Barring the grime of Solitude I have been very comfortable since I left town and trust I shall remain so until I return, which I shall do about the latter end of the week, unless I receive orders from the Office to the contrary.

Owing to the slippery state of the roads on the morning I started, I magnanimously declined the honor of driving myself, and hid my dignity in the Inside of a Stage Coach. As the Election here had not commenced, I went on to Colchester (which is a very nice town) and returned here on the following morning. Yesterday I had to start at 8 OClock for Braintree — a place 12 miles off; and being unable to get a Saddle Horse, I actually ventured on a gig, — and what is more, I actually did the four and twenty miles without upsetting it. I wish to God you could have seen me tooling in and out of the banners, drums, conservative Emblems, horsemen, and go-carts with which every little Green was filled as the processions were waiting for Sir John Tyrell and Baring.[†4] Every time the horse heard a drum he bounded into the hedge, on the left side of the road; and every time I got him out of that, he bounded into the hedge on the right side.[†5] When he did go however, he went along admirably. The road was clear when I returned, and with the trifling exception of breaking my Whip, I flatter myself I did the whole thing[†6] in something like style.

If any one were to ask me what in my opinion was the dullest and most stupid spot on the face of the Earth, I should decidedly say Chelmsford.

Though only 29 miles from town, there is not a single shop where they sell Sunday Papers. I can't get an Athenæum, a Literary Gazette — no not even a penny Magazine. And here I am on a wet Sunday looking out of a damned large bow window at the rain as it falls into the puddles opposite, wondering when it will be dinner time, and cursing my folly in having put no books into my Portmanteau. The only book I have seen here, is one which lies upon the sofa. It is entitled "Field Exercises and Evolutions of the Army by Sir Henry Torrens".[†1] I have read it through so often, that I am sure I could drill a hundred Recruits from memory. There is not even anything to look at in the place, except two immense prisons, large enough to hold all the Inhabitants of the county — whom they can have been built for I can't imagine.

I fear among the gloomy reflections which will present themselves to my mind this day that of having entailed upon you the misery of decyphering such an unconnected mass as this, will not be the least. As I thought it very likely however, that you would never get beyond the first three sentences I have comprised in them, the whole object of my letter; knowing that whether you came to the end of it or not, you would believe without a written assurance that I am

Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My best remembrances to all.

To GEORGE HOGARTH,[†2] 20 JANUARY [1835]

MS British Museum.[†3] Date: The only Tues 20 Jan while CD was at Furnival's Inn was in 1835.

13 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Evg. Jany. 20th.

My dear Sir.

As you begged me to write an original sketch for the first No. of The

New Evening Paper,[†1] and as I trust to your kindness to refer my application to the proper quarter, should I be unreasonably or improperly trespassing upon you, I beg to ask whether it is probable that if I commenced a series of articles under some attractive title for the Evening Chronicle, its conductors would think I had any claim to some additional remuneration (of course of no great amount) for doing so?[†2]

Let me beg you not to misunderstand my meaning. Whatever the Reply may be, I promised you an Article, and shall supply it with the utmost readiness, and with an anxious desire to do my best; which I honestly assure you, would be the feeling with which I should always receive any request coming personally from yourself. I merely wish to put it to the Proprietors — first whether a continuation of light papers in the style of my "street sketches"[†3] would be considered of use to the new paper; and secondly, if so, whether they do not think it fair and reasonable, that — taking my share of the ordinary reporting business of The Chronicle besides — I should receive something for the papers beyond my ordinary Salary as a Reporter.

Begging you to excuse my troubling you, and taking this opportunity of acknowledging the numerous kindnesses I have already received at your hands, since I have had the pleasure of acting under you[†4]

I am
My dear Sir
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Geo Hogarth Esqre.

To H. W. KOLLE, [?JANUARY 1835]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Signature suggests 1835; CD's return from the country seems more likely to have been from Essex in Jan, than from Exeter in May, just before his engagement to Catherine.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Morning

My dear Kolle.

As you know of old my excellent good-luck in small matters, I think it hardly necessary to say that of course I have received a summons from the office this morning, which will in all probability detain me the whole Evening, and consequently prevent my being able to enjoy the pleasure of your Society. This is the first I have had since I have returned from the country, and as a matter of course it interferes with the only engagement I had formed.

Now will you turn over in your own mind what evening will suit you best, and just write me a line in the morning, in time to prevent my being out, and to enable me to communicate with you in case I should be officially engaged? — If you don't do so at once I'll be offended.

Give my best love to Henry[†1] & Mrs. K

& Believe me
Dear Kolle
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, [?EARLY 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature suggests 1835; clearly before CD's engagement to Catherine Hogarth in May.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Evening.

My dear Henry.

You know me well enough to be aware that I occasionally take strange ideas into my head. As I am on sufficiently intimate terms with myself to know that I never act upon them without a great deal of previous consideration and deliberation on the pro's[†2] and cons of the matter, I feel no difficulty in running point blank to the main purport of my note.

It struck me last night — and the idea has occurred to me before, after some little conversations we have had together — that you would prefer living in Chambers to remaining in your present semi-rural[†3] tranquility.[†4] If this be really your feeling: if you think it would be advantageous or useful to you in business[†1] to mount a black name on a white ground in Furnivals Inn — and if you think I am a sufficiently amiable individual to select for a companion, I shall be most happy, — and it will give me the greatest pleasure, — to make common cause with you; give you the free use of such furniture and appurtenances as I have, and make any alteration in my Chambers that you might think desirable for your own comfort and accomodation.[†2]

Pray do not misunderstand the mode in which I throw out this suggestion. I have not the most distant idea of making it as a conciliation on my part for your advantage — the thing would be too ridiculous. I throw it out as an arrangement which would afford us an opportunity of enjoying the pleasure of each other's society, and of economizing at the same time. I have only to add frankly, on this part of the question, that it is an offer I would make to no other creature living, and that I only make it to you because I sincerely believe after a tolerably close intimacy, that we could agree well: that our tastes are not wholly dissimilar, and that we should both be disposed to resign a[n]y[†3] little peculiarities of our own, for [our][†4] mutual comfort and sociality. As to the Society I at present keep about me, I could give it up without the slightest reluctance — I only retain it because I can procure no other with the same absence of trouble.

If it suit your plans to entertain the proposition at all — think of it. If it have already occurred to you, talk to me about it when you please, but do nothing without consideration. The particular arrangements we should enter into for the regulation of those little screws of existence — pounds, shillings, and pence — we could talk over hereafter at our leisure. We should have three points to discuss. First (not the least important one by the bye) whether you wish to change; secondly what alterations would be necessary to fit you up a comfortable room, and thirdly the plan we shou[ld] lay down for our regular Housekeeping — the two last[†3] we could settle in a day.

Leaving the matter for your consideration; begging you to say nothing to me about it until you have thoroughly made up your mind, and knowing that even if I have mistaken you (not at all unlikely) no harm is done[†5] — I am

Yours most sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esqre.

May

To THOMAS BEARD, [2 MAY 1835]

MS Dickens House. Date: written the day after Fri 1 May when he and Beard reported Lord John Russell's[†1] speech at Exeter.[†2] Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Wincanton Saturday Morng

Dear Tom. I arrived here (57 miles from Exeter) at 8 yesterday Evening having[†3] finished my whack[†4] at [the][†5] previous stage. I arranged with Neilson,[†6] whom I occasionally saw in the course of my journey, that I would stop where he did; & finding him housed here, I ordered dinner, beds, & breakfasts for two. I am happy to say that our friend Unwin,[†7] when on duty, is the most zealous, active, and indefatigable little fellow I ever saw: I have now, not the slightest doubt (God willing) of the success of our Express. On our first stage we had very poor horses. At the termination of the second, The Times and I changed Horses together; they had the start two or three minutes: I bribed the post boys tremendously & we came in literally neck and neck — the most beautiful sight I ever saw. The next stage, your humble, caught them before they had changed; & the next Denison[†8] preceded Unwin about two minutes, leaving Neilson here to return to Exeter tomorrow Evening & I to get up by the Telegraph at 11. The roads were extremely heavy, & as they had 4, I ordered the same at every stage & empowered Unwin to do the same until he met his horses; indorsing on the parcel that the rain rendered it a matter of absolute necessity.[†1]

I have sketched, my dear fellow in a dozen most hasty words, our progress yester-night wh I hope, but can scarcely believe, you will be able to understand. I have only time to add that I trust you will not forget my packages & cream: that I received the bag, your kindness remembered: that I shall hope to hear from you the day of your return: that I shall impress on Powell[†2] the necessity of expressing the declaration:[†3] that I think Lyons[†4] & Roney[†5] will fail; and that I am (it's an old story, but a true one)

Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thos Beard Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [4 MAY 1835]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 4 May 35. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre | New London Inn | Exeter.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morng

My dear Beard

A part of my adventures you will have heard from Neilson. The remainder is comprised in three words. We were the first out; the express arrived by 4 oClock: we had a much much longer account than any other paper & the whole affair is considered one of "complete & signal success"[†6] & has been noticed as a feat by the Spectator[†7] & another Sunday Paper.

I feel the effects of the rain severely. I came up by the slow coach: left Wincanton at 9 on Saturday Evening & reached town at 11 Yesterday Morning. I have a slight touch of rheumatism & am perfectly deaf. I hope to God I shall soon get rid of the latter complaint. What have you done about my bag? It is lying at the Mail office to be called for. For Heaven's sake, forward it immediately, for I have not a clean shirt to put on, & am really in a state of the greatest distress.

I am in great haste having scarce time to get this letter in the Post. Let me know directly you return.

Believe me
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To MRS GEORGE HOGARTH,[†1] [MAY 1835]

Mention in next.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH,[†2] [MAY 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: apparently the first letter from CD that Catherine kept; handwriting of this and next are identical; clearly both must refer to the same illness. Address: Miss Hogarth.

My dearest Kate.

Need I say that my unavoidable detention in town last night, distressed me exceedingly; or that it has rendered me doubly anxious to see you this morning as early as I can? I have written a note to your Mama begging her to inform me immediately how you are, and I hope to hear that I shall be able to ask the question of you myself at an early hour.

If I were to say on paper how interested I am in the slightest word that concerns you, much more on so important a point as your health, it would look like egotism: were I to express half my solicitude in your behalf it would appear like profession without sincerity, and were I to endeavour to embody the least of the feelings I entertain for you in words, it would be a useless, and hopeless attempt. For each and all my dear Girl you must give me credit, until time has enabled me to prove the sincerity and devotion of the affection I bear you.

Keep up your spirits above all things — if the consciousness of awa[ken][†1]ing sympathy and inte[res][†1]t in the breast of any [h]uman being be a consolation in sickness, you may take my assurance that you possess both to an extent which you can hardly imagine — nor I describe.

Believe me
My Dearest Catherine
Ever Yours Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?LATE MAY 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: endorsed by Catherine "May 1835". The absence of any letter to Catherine during CD's Exeter visit at the beginning of May suggests they were not engaged then; the implication in this letter that they had been engaged three weeks points therefore to a date late in May. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esqre.

Wednesday Morning

My dear Catherine.

It is with the greatest pain that I sit down, before I go to bed to-night, to say one word which can bear the appearance of unkindness or reproach; but I owe a duty to myself as well as to you, and as I was wild enough to think that an engagement of even three weeks might pass without any such display as you have favored me with twice already, I am the more strongly induced to discharge it.

The sudden and uncalled-for coldness with which you treated me just before I left last night, both surprised and deeply hurt me — surprised, because I could not have believed that such sullen and inflexible obstinacy could exist in the breast of any girl in whose heart love had found a place; and hurt me, because I feel for you far more than I have ever professed, and feel a slight from you more than I care to tell. My object in writing to you is this. If a hasty temper produce this strange behaviour, acknowledge it when I give you the opportunity — not once or twice, but again and again. If a feeling of you know not what — a capricious restlessness of you can't tell what, and a desire to teaze, you don't know why, give rise to it — overcome it; it will never make you more amiable, I more fond, or either of us, more happy. If three weeks or three months of my society has wearied you, do not trifle with me, using me like any other toy as suits your humour for the moment; but make the acknowledgment to me frankly at once — I shall not forget you lightly, but you will need no second warning. Depend upon it, whatever be the cause of your unkindness — whatever give rise to these wayward fancies — that what you do not take the trouble to conceal from a Lover's eyes, will be frequently acted before those of a husband.

I know as well, as if I were by your side at this moment, that your present impulse on reading this note is one of anger — pride perhaps, or to use a word more current with your sex — "spirit". My dear girl, I have not the most remote intention of awakening any such feeling, and I implore you, not to entertain it for an instant. I am very little your superior in years: in no other respect can I lay claim to the title, but I venture nevertheless to give you this advice first, because I cannot turn coolly away and forget a slight from you as I might from any other girl to whom I was not warmly and deeply attached; and secondly, because if you really love me I would have you do justice to yourself, and shew me that your love for me, like mine for you, is above the ordinary trickery, and frivolous absurdity which debases the name, and renders it ludicrous.

I have written these few lines in haste, but not in anger. I am not angry, but I am hurt,[†1] for the second time. Possibly you may not understand the sense in which I use the word; if so, I hope you never may. If you knew the intensity of the feeling which has led me to forget all my friends and pursuits to spend my days at your side; if you knew but half the anxiety with which I watched your recent illness, the joy with which I hailed your recovery, and the eagerness with which I would promote your happiness, you could more readily understand the extent of the pain so easily inflicted, but so difficult to be forgotten.

Ever yours most affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth

June

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JUNE 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: early in their engagement on evidence both of handwriting and tone. CD's apology suggests this was the first time he had used this sort of paper.

Brompton[†2] | 3 O'Clock[†3] — Tuesday.

My ever dearest Kate.

If our little conversation of last night, have presented itself to your mind at all since I left you, I hope it has only been to remind you of my repeated and solemn assurances of entertaining for you a love which nothing can lessen — an affection which no alteration of time or circumstance can ever abate. I have the vanity to believe that these professions must be gratifying to you, knowing the sincerity with which they come from me.

I am happy to say my dearest Girl that Fred (whom I saw at the office)[†1] gives a very favourable report of the Porter's sanguine expectations of letting the Chambers[†2] at no distant period. God send it may be so, and that the dearest hopes I ever entertained may be realized (with your good leave) at an even earlier period than we anticipate. I shall be with you at a quarter before 11; not later; & perhaps before.

Excuse this paper[†3] which is much more official than elegant, and the haste with which I write which is involuntary, for my candle is — not flaring up, but flaring down into the socket.

God Bless you my Dear

Ever Your Devoted
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JUNE 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests same period as last.

Selwood Place[†4] | Thursday Morng. ½ past 3

My Dearest Kate.

Although the Lords did not sit last night,[†5] the wind and rain added to the uncertainty of my time for going on (occasioned by the indisposition of somebody else) prevented my coming out in the course of the Evening. I employed the short interval in seeing Mitton: I sounded him on the subject of our[†6] affairs, and he seems to have arrived at the conclusion that whatever I do must be right; and that whoever I love, must be faultless. — I will tell you more of our Interview when I see you.

I shall breakfast at 11 precisely;[†6] and as your Mama was kind enough to promise to go to Pimlico for us, she will perhaps call here first, and take lunch with you here at that hour. I shall feel greatly disappointed if I have to wait longer than that time before I see you — I have not seen you, you know dearest, since seven oClock yesterday Evening. It seems an age.

I write — not in haste but with unusual slowness for I have to stop every other second to get my eyes open again. Excuse all faults of commission and omission — forget all but my assurance, — renewed some hundred times a day, — that I am

My dearest Kate

Ever Yours truly & affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

I have no light so I cannot seal this note — I suppose it will not be opened.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JUNE 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD's first written request that Catherine should make breakfast for him; probably soon after last. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Saturday Morning | 6 O'Clock.

My Dearest Kate.

I am so completely worn out, that I can only say I shall expect you at 12.[†1] It's a childish wish my dear love; but I am anxious to hear and see you the moment I wake — Will you indulge me by making breakfast for me this Morning? It will give me pleasure; I hope will give you no trouble; and I am sure will be excellent practice for you against Christmas next.[†2] I shall expect you my dearest, and feel quite sure you will not disappoint me.

Believe me
My dearest Girl
Ever Yours most devoted
CHARLES DICKENS

Excuse my haste and drowsiness.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JUNE 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests June.

Selwood Place | Saturday Morning 5 O'Clock

My Dearest Kate. I found the inclosed letter[†3] at the office this Morning; and I have read it, and re-read it, and loitered and lingered and read it again, until my head ache and the sun's appearance have warned me that it is time even for a poor unfortunate creature like myself to think of rest and forgetfulness for a few hours.

On consideration it seems to me that three courses are open for our immediate adoption; they can be told in a few seconds: they could only be written in not a few minutes, and as I am tired to death and completely worn out, I would rather see, and speak with you quietly about the matter before I announce my determination to your Mamma,[†1] which I propose to do without a moment's loss of time. If we only decide upon something I shall be more comfortable. You have often told me you could be happy anywhere with me, and as I know I could sacrifice a great deal for you I have neither fear nor despondency about the matter for an instant.

I have got the English Opera Ticket.[†2] You will recollect perhaps that we promised to meet Fred at 1 in the Inclosure: and as we have made no arrangements for tomorrow, and shall have a good deal to talk about I should like to see you here early. You can surely come to breakfast at half past ten — Give my love to Mary[†3] and tell her I rely on her characteristic kind-heartedness and good nature to accompany you, and mind on your own behalf that I fully and entirely expect you.

I hope to be awakened by your[†4] tapping at my door in the morning and

I look forward on making my appearance in the sitting room, to find you heading my breakfast table — you might without difficulty head a more splendid one my dear girl, through life. If this thought should ever occur to you when you take your place at it as a matter of right, the only consolations it will be in my power to offer you will be — first the happiness and contentment that I hope[†1] you will feel; and secondly the possession[†2] of the interest and affection which I know you will have awakened.

Believe me (in haste)
My Dearest Kate
Ever Yours most affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, [15 JUNE 1835]*

MS University of Texas. Date: The "critique" was without doubt the paragraph headed "The New Houses of Parliament" in the Morning Chronicle of 15 June 35.[†3]

11 Selwood Terrace. Queen's Elms[†4] | Monday Morning

Dear Henry.

I am much[†5] obliged to you for your kindness in forwarding me your very neatly written critique, which you will find almost in your own words, in The Chronicle to-day. I shall be most happy to see you for the purpose you mention — Write (by Fred if you can conveniently) and let me know what day this week, before Friday, you can dine with me at Two o'Clock.

Believe me
Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JUNE 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests June. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by William Hogarth Esqre.[†6]

Selwood Place | Wednesday Morning

My dearest Kate.

I felt rather tired this morning when I got up; but as I did not do so until past eleven, I soon brushed up again. I am getting on with a sketch[†7] which has just attained its fifteenth slip; but as I do not expect to have time to finish it properly to-day, I think I shall be over by three o'Clock. — I am just going to dress.

I hope you have recovered from your fatigue and that I shall find you an hour hence as "compact" as ever.

Believe me
My ever dearest Girl
Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

July

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JULY 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests Midsummer, probably July; the Lords did not sit on any Saturday during the months CD was living in Selwood Terrace. Address: Miss Hogarth. | 18 York Place.[†1]

Selwood Place | Saturday Morning | 5 oClock

My dearest Kate.

I find to my astonishment that I am out of ink, and am consequently obliged to write in pencil. — I have received an Invitation to dine out to day, which of course[†2] I have refused; The House of Lords do not sit to day, and I have determined to postpone the commencement of my sketch[†3] until tomorrow: just for the purpose of devoting one day in the week, at least, to your society.

I breakfast at one. You will lunch with me at that hour, of course — I shall not rise until you call me.

Believe me
My Love
Ever — Ever — Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY SCOTT HOGARTH,[†1] [4 JULY 1835]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: PM 4 July 35. Address: Miss Hogarth | Robert Hogarth Esq | Scremerston | near Berwick.

My dear Miss Hogarth. I have been requested by Catharine[†2] (upon my word I don't know why) to communicate the singularly interesting intelligence that I have got two black eyes — naturally and not artificially acquired. I am also requested to ask a question in which you will readily believe I am deeply interested — Is William Dove[†3] married? Catharine says she forgot to enquire, and as I have no distinct recollection of ever having heard that gentleman's name, whoever he may happen to be, before this moment; I hope you will answer the question by return of post. You may direct to me if you please at 18 York Place Fulham Road. I don't live there, but somehow or other can be found there at any time without difficulty.

Having executed this commission, will you allow me to add one word in sober seriousness on my own account? It merely is an expression of my earnest hope, that no change in Catharine's condition will produce the slightest alteration in the friendship which I am happy to hear subsists between you, unless indeed it be to render it closer, and more lasting. I trust we shall see you for a long visit, as soon as we are happily settled, as I have already contracted a high regard for you on three grounds. First because you are Catharine's best friend; secondly because I thought you a very nice person when I had the pleasure of seeing you; and thirdly because you are so well disposed towards the small deformities of Buckingham Gate.[†1]

Believe me
My dear Miss Hogarth
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [9 JULY 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: On 10 July CD returned proof sheets of her uncle's book (see next); Miss Drummond's miniature of CD is inscribed on the back "Painted by Rose Emma Drummond, 8 Soho Square, 9th July 1835".

Selwood Place | Thursday Morning 4 o'Clock

My Dearest Kate.

I was unconsciously three quarters of an hour too late last night; I had not finished at the office until eleven, and had to go on again at one.[†2] I had therefore nothing to do, but sit down and look over your uncle's[†3] slips,[†4] and curse the cross accidents which keep me from you — the latter ceremony I assure you I performed with heartfelt energy.

As I was disappointed in seeing you again last night, I shall fully expect[†5] you and Mary to breakfast with me this morning — not later than 11 and rather before than after, as we have to call on Miss Drummond[†6] & I want to write a few pages if possible first. Mind you are punctual my dear, and recollect I take no denial on any pretence.

I am very tired my dearest, and can only add the — I hope — most unnecessary assurance that I am.

Yours most truly & affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM THOMSON, [10 JULY 1835]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: PM 10 July 35. Address: William Thomson Esqre. | 1 Judd Street | Brunswick Square.

Brompton. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have revised, and punctually returned, the slips I have received from your Printers. They have not been quite so expeditious as you imagined, for I have only just returned the 360th. page, but I presume I shall receive some more proofs to-night.

I regret that both the Italian opera, and Drury Lane, Tickets, are engaged on Saturday Evening, or I should have procured them for you with the utmost pleasure.

Accept my best wishes in behalf of the book which is now so nearly completed, and believe me
My Dear Sir
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Thomson Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JULY 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests July. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Saturday Morning | Three o'Clock

My dearest love. — You will readily believe that excessive fatigue prevents my saying more than a very few words at this hour. I shall breakfast at 12 tomorrow please God; and write one or two letters afterwards. I have given up all idea of beginning my sketch until Sunday; I really think[†1]

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?JULY 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests July.

Selwood Place | Wedy. Morning 5 oClock

My Dearest Kate.

I have only this instant returned from my second weary pilgrimage of the week.[†2] As you can understand the feeling of disappointment and regret with which I passed York Place without seeing you, I hope I need not say how anxiously I shall expect your calling on me the first thing this Morning. — I shall be up by ten.

Believe me
My dearest Girl
Ever Yours affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

I have been indulging in a confused reverie of you, and the tables,[†1] all the way home.

August

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?AUGUST 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests Aug 35; perhaps the 4th as the Lords sat until 3.20 that morning. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Tuesday Morning | ¼ to 6.

My Dearest Kate. It is I fear but a tiresome repetition of an old story to say, that I am too tired, and dispirited, to write more than a very brief note — It is very true however: as my aching head, and side, painfully convince me.

Will you send Powell's[†2] compts. to Frammy,[†3] in the Morning when you receive this; and say he will feel obliged to him if he will call at his (Powell's) house at Three o'Clock this afternoon? I shall be up at Twelve, and hope to see you here very soon afterwards. Mitton called on me at the office last night and gave me a little caution about the Chambers to which I must attend.

Believe me
My Dearest Love
Every Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

I am suffering the consequences of Furteeg.[†4]

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?AUGUST 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests same period as last. Address: Miss Hogarth.

My dearest Kate. I do not want the carrier today, as Fred has just come out himself for the little parcel I wished to dispatch, but I am not the less obliged to you my Dearest for remembering me. I shall have a Letter or two to write when I have finished the Sketch[†5] but I think I may venture to say I shall be ready in less than a couple of hours. If you and Mary do not come over before, I shall be with you by that time.

Believe me
My Dearest
Ever Yours most affy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [8 AUGUST 1835]

MS Dickens House. Date PM 8 Aug 35. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgware Road.

Brompton | Saturday Morning

My dear Tom. — I inclose you the proof[†1] we spoke of, agreeably to your request. Keep it, as long as you like; — I fear I must ask you to return it some day, as it belongs to Mr. Hogarth and is the only one I have left (my own copy excepted).

Believe me
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [8 AUGUST 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: plainly enclosing last.

Selwood Place | Saturday Morng. ½ p 4

My dear love.

I have left directions to be called at one. — May I hope to find you here when I get up? I have determined not to begin writing my sketch[†2] 'till tomorrow morning but to have a quiet delicious day with you, if nothing occurs to prevent it which God forbid.

The moment you receive this, will you ask your Papa to lend[†3] me the proof he has of Mr. Bungs Narrative:[†4] inclose it in the accompanying letter to Beard, and have it put in the post immediately? — You will greatly oblige me my dear, as he is anxious to shew it to a friend today, and I promised him faithfully he should have it.

God bless you my life

Believe me
Dearest Kate
Ever — Ever — Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

(half-asleep)

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?AUGUST 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting points to Summer, perhaps Aug; a heat-wave that month supports; cannot be later than 15th since no new sketch published between 20 Aug and 27 Sep. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Saturday Morning | One oClock

My Dearest Kate.

I am now at breakfast: having made up by a good night's rest, for the fatigues of yesterday. As I have not yet set pen to paper, and as I really must settle the outline of my next Sketch to-day, I am afraid I shall not be able to see you before four O'Clock. You may be quite certain without my assurance that as soon as I can possibly come over I will, and that I shall feel very discontented and unamiable the longer I remain here.

Believe me
My Dearest Girl
Ever Yours most Affy.
CHARLES DICKENS

I think it is hotter than ever to-day.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?AUGUST 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests Aug. Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place.

Selwood Place | Monday Morning

My dearest love.

I have finished my sketch, and have only to dress myself: so I shall be with you in no time. I will not delay my coming over, by saying more than that I hope you are well and have taken some Camphor Julep. — If not my dearest; do so at once.

Believe me
My own dear Kate
Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

September

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?SEPTEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests late Summer, probably Sep (before the 10th, when the House adjourned). Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place.

Selwood Place | Tuesday Morng 4 oClock

My dearest Love.

My second turn followed so quickly last night, and my first was so heavy; that I was totally prevented from entertaining the slightest hope of seeing you in the evening. I shall be obliged to go to the Park, and will call for you at a quarter past eleven. Be ready if you please dear.

I will not endanger my rising at half past nine by staying [to] say more, than begging you now & for ever to believe — if the belief be any source of comfort or happiness to you — that I am

My own dearest Kate
Ever Yours unchangeably
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?SEPTEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: perhaps soon after the adjournment of the House; during the session CD had every excuse for oversleeping; handwriting supports. From Selwood Place, where CD probably stayed till the end of the month. Address: Miss Hogarth.

My Dearest Kate

I am ashamed to say lest it should bear the appearance of something like laziness, that I am only this moment up. I shall be dressed by 12 and will come over to you directly. As we propose going to King Street[†1] I think we had better start immediately; so I hope you and Mary will be ready by that hour. I am pretty well this morning and am truly delighted to hear you are well also.

Believe me
My Dearest Kate
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?SEPTEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: perhaps soon after the adjournment of the House, as last. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Selwood Place. | Thursday Morning

My dearest love.

"This comes hopping" you are quite well as it leaves me at this present. I was fortunate enough to rise by ten, and shall please God write till two when I shall dress myself. If you feel disposed to come over and fetch me at half past, I shall be happy to see you.

On reflection, I think perhaps I had better not write to my father about the unpleasant set out of yesterday, but take an opportunity of seeing him to-night & talking to him about it. Does this meet your approval my dearest? — If you are up write me just a line. If not a verbal message as I want Fred who is the Bearer of this note.

Ever Yours truly & Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

October

To MRS WILLIAM AUSTIN,[†1] [?3 OCTOBER 1835]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: CD probably returned to Furnival's Inn early in Oct.

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Morning

My dear Mrs. Austin.

For some part of my neglect, I can conscientiously avail myself of the excuse[†2] you so kindly suggested to me in the note I received from you some weeks since; — for the remainder I can make no excuse at all beyond this — that when you reminded me of the Debt,[†3] I was, and had been for months previously, up all night and asleep all day, and that from that happy state of existence I was transferred to one of illness[†4] from which I have only very recently recovered; and which I need hardly say imposed upon me some heavy expences in addition to others I have to meet just now.

I only returned to reside in my Chambers yesterday, and I embrace the earliest opportunity of begging you to pardon my apparent rudeness and neglect which has been I assure you most unintentional. I have some money to receive for my writings in about a fortnight's time, and I hope you will then grant me a full pardon as well as a Receipt in full.

Will you tell Henry I have returned, and shall be most happy to see him?

Believe me
Dear Mrs. Austin
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?12 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD's visit to the Colosseum must have been to review the opening night (Mon 12 Oct); Catherine and Mrs Hogarth developed scarlet fever on a Sunday (see next, To Beard) — presumably the day before. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning.

My dearest Katie

It is very hard to preach consolation when one stands in no small need of it one's-self but let me entreat you (it will not require I hope much exertion to grant an entreaty from me) to keep up your spirits, and to remember that not only your own health and comfort depend upon your doing so, but mine too; indeed my dearest girl, your situation is almost an enviable one, compared with mine.

I send Fred with some black-currant jam which you will find an efficacious, and at the same time agreeable medicine for your throat. I have also desired him to take some chloride of Lime from town. The good it will do in purifying the Atmosphere of your room, will more than counter-balance your dislike to its smell.

When you can write, if it be only a word, pray do so — you cannot think how great a consolation it will be to me.

I shall be backwards and forwards to know how you are, until late to-night when I leave the Colosseum.[†1] Should you not be so well, I must see you, and will not be prevented.[†2]

Believe me My dearest love
Ever Yours truly & affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [?14 OCTOBER 1835]

MS Dickens House. Date: presumably the Wednesday after last. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Beard.

If you are in cash at present, and can lend me a couple of sovereigns until Saturday Week, you will oblige me very greatly. I would say Saturday next, but I have got a bill to make up, which anticipates my receipt for this week both from The Chronicle and Dowling;[†3] and I therefore think it better to name the latest day to prevent any disappointment. You will perhaps send me a reply by the Bearer.

I am in great distress of mind just now. Both Catherine, and Mrs. Hogarth are laid up with the scarlet fever, which they both took in an extraordinarily sudden manner on Sunday last, after spending the preceding evening with me. — I suppose in the ordinary course of things, I shall have it next, as I am, you will readily believe, by the bed-side of the former every day.[†4]

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?15 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: presumably the Thursday before Sun 18 Oct, when "Making a Night Of It", No. 4 of "Scenes and Characters", appeared; but see fn.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My own dearest Katie.

I write as you begged me last night, to say that with the exception of a little cold, I am very well indeed this morning, although I confess I should have felt better, could I have heard from you that you had passed a better night. I hope however to find when I see you, that you have enjoyed a refreshing nap.

I have most unfortunately received orders from the Office, to attend the first Representation of a new piece at the Adelphi to-night[†1] — unfortunately because nothing is more wretched than to sit one's body in the theatre when the mind is elsewhere, or to write a facetious notice when every thought and idea have fled to another and a very different subject. I had intended too, to attempt No. 4 of "Scenes and Characters" to day: I must sit up to-night I think and finish it.

I mean to dine, dearest, at half past one, so that I may leave here at two, and be with you by three: I shall remain with you until six when I must start for the Theatre, and should I hear from Fred when he comes out at night (which however I confidently hope will not be the case) that you are no better, I shall most certainly come out and see you again, after the Theatre is over. You will therefore expect me by three o'Clock this afternoon.

God bless you my more than life. If the consciousness that there is at least one person who is always present with us in thought at least, sympathizing with our sufferings, and watching our progress with a solicitude and anxiety which not even a parent can ever know, be the slightest consolation in illness, God knows you possess it — I believe in my heart I may say to an unprecedented extent.

Believe me
My dearest Girl
Ever Yours truly & affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?16 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD's extreme pleasure at Catherine's improvement suggests early in her illness; the sketch was in that case presumably "Making a Night of it" (see last). Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Mr. Fredk. Dickens.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My ever dearest Katie.

You cannot imagine the delight with which I heard from Robert[†1] that you had been asleep so long; or the exquisite pleasure the belief that you must feel refreshed, and improved, affords me. Such a load seems removed from my mind, that I feel more happy by comparison, at this moment than I ever did in my life.

I have written to Dowling and faithfully promised to let him have the sketch this afternoon: Directly I have finished it, I shall be with you — six or seven o'Clock at latest I trust.

Send me word by Fred (if you are awake) how you feel exactly. — I am in a fever myself, to be with you.

I am quite well this morning, and hope to find you as much improved as my most sanguine wishes would have you.

God bless you my own dear girl

Believe me
My dear, dear Katie
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?20 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: probably a week before To Macrone, ?27 Oct, promising proof of "The Great Winglebury Duel"; the enquiry about Catherine's and her mother's health is similarly worded in next two letters. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Morning

My Dearest Katie

I hope you are in better spirits this morning, than when I left you yesterday afternoon. I have not seen Robert this morning, which rather alarmed me at first. I hope however, that his absence is only occasioned by his having been very late, and taken an omnibus. Let me know particularly how you are, and how your Mama is too.

I am finishing my Duel, and shall dress myself and come out to you as early as I possibly can — I should think about six OClock.

Believe me
My Dearest Girl
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?22 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD's anxiety was probably to finish "Scenes and Characters" No. 5 (published 25 Oct) on time, having been late the previous week.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My Dearest life.

At this moment (half past eleven O'Clock) I have not even commenced my sketch; and as I have received a pressing note from Dowling not to be behind time this week, I must sit here 'till I have finished it — a consummation devoutly to be wished,[†1] but not likely I fear to arrive very speedily, as my cold is really bad this morning, and I am consequently, more than usually stupid.

If I should be detained here until 8 O'Clock or so, I do not think I can manage to reach York Place to-night, more especially as it is so damp and wet. Should I be finished at an earlier hour, however, I will come immediately. If you should not see me this evening don't be alarmed, or think I am ill, but expect me for a long day tomorrow: — I say "if", because I hope I shall contrive to get out, somehow or other.

I send you the biscuits I promised, my dearest, together with some rusks for your Mama with my love. Fred also brings the "Linwoods"[†2] — Write me a note by him — as long a one as you please, and let me know how you are particularly; and how your Mama is.

Believe me
My ever dearest Katie
Yours most Sincerely & Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?22 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: probably CD's reply to Catherine's note brought back by Fred in answer to last. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Evening.[†3]

My dearest Katie.

Your letter of this morning expressed so much anxiety, and (I am happy to add) needless solicitude in my behalf, that I cannot refrain from sending Frederick out to-night to say that I am quite well;[†1] that my cold is a great deal better, and that I shall please God be with you tomorrow about Two OClock. I should have hazarded the damp, and come out to-night, if I had finished my sketch; but having turned aside for business of another kind[†2] this morning I have not yet completed it, and am therefore obliged to remain at home — Send me a particular account of your well-being, and how your Mama is.

Believe me
My Dearest Love

Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [?24 OCTOBER 1835]

MS Dickens House. Date: probably the Saturday on which CD had promised to repay the two sovereigns borrowed from Beard (see ?14 Oct). Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place.

13 Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Beard

I inclose the amount of your kind loan, with many thanks for your friendly readiness both on this and a former occasion, when I had not an equally early opportunity of acknowledging it.

Believe me
My Dear Beard
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: The references to Catherine's spirits and his own health suggest late Oct; handwriting supports. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn | Sunday Morning

My dearest love.

I am quite well this morning, I am happy to say; and shall be with you by five o'Clock most punctually.

I hope the spirits are better this morning, and that you have no intention of being "low" again. I am delighted to hear you had so good a night.

God bless you my dearest Girl

Believe me (in haste)
Ever Yours most truly & Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: perhaps the day after last; again supported by handwriting.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dearest Love.

"Barring" my cold, I am quite well this morning, as I am happy — most happy — to hear you are also. I have received the Adelphi order, and shall be with you, at a quarter before three o'clock.

— Not low this morning I hope? — You ought not to be, dear Mouse, and are very ungrateful if you are.

Love to Mary and your Mama

Believe me
Darling Tatie
Ever yours truly and Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE,[†1] [?27 OCTOBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: MS seems clearly to read "26th" — a Monday in 1835; CD was probably mistaken in the date of the month rather than the day of the week.

13 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning October 26th.

My Dear Sir.

Precisely the idea you suggest about the metallic bubbles, entered my brain after I left you the other day — bubbles from a spring impregnated with steel, I have heard of: but bubbles coming direct from a steel instrument would, I am inclined to think, be a natural curiosity. Are you particularly attached to the retention of the word "Bwain" — when we can't preserve the Parody on Head's title?[†1] — What do you think of

Sketches by Boz[†2]

and

Cuts by Cruikshank[†3]

Etchings by Boz

and

Wood Cuts by Cruikshank.

I think perhaps some such title would look more modest — whether modesty ought to have anything to do with such an affair, I must leave to your experience as a Publisher to decide.

I will go to the Chronicle Office this morning; and if I cannot get slips, procure copies, of the missing sketches. If you will have the kindness to send to Cochrane's[†1] (you are more likely to get what we want than I am) for the October and November numbers of The Monthly for last year, you will find "The Steam Excursion" in one of them — I think the former. "The Great Winglebury Duel" (which is the title of the paper which will appear in The Monthly for December)[†2] I will get a proof of, in the course of a few days.

Now if the whole collection[†3] fall something short of the two volumes, which we shall ascertain I suppose by the printing, I will be ready with two or three new Sketches[†4] to make weight; and with this view I have begged Black[†5] to get old Alderman Wood[†6] to take me to Newgate[†7] — as an Amateur of course. I have long projected sketching its Interior, and I think it would tell extremely well. It would not keep you waiting, because the printer has plenty to go on with; and a day's time is a handsome allowance for me — much less[†8] than I frequently had when I was writing for The Chronicle. In addition to "A Visit to Newgate", I find in some memoranda I have by me, the following Headings. "The Cook's Shop" — "Bedlam" — "The Prisoner's Van" — "The Streets — Noon and Night" —

"Banking-Houses" — "Fancy Lounges" — "Covent Garden" — "Hospitals" — and "Lodging-Houses"[†1] — So we shall not want subjects at all events.

I am much gratified by the kind expression of your good opinion of my Sketches contained in your note, and hope — and believe into the bargain — that your favourable augury of the success of the book may be realized, even to our joint satisfaction.

I will call on you on Thursday Morning, unless I should previously hear you are otherwise engaged.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?29 OCTOBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: the day before he sent Rookwood[†2] to Catherine (see ?30 Oct). Address: John Macrone Esqre | St. James's Square.

13 Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir —

I intended to ask you this morning, but although we talked about the very book, I quite forgot it, — whether you would have the goodness to lend me any old copy of Rookwood — I promised to borrow it for Mr. Hogarth if I could; and am three parts ashamed and the other sorry, for my neglect.

I have instructed the Bearer to wait for an answer, in the event of your being at home. He has been also to Alderman Wood; and should that worthy functionary have inclosed me an order for two to see that interesting spot[†3] to which an order for admission is very frequently granted, I will report progress tomorrow.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

I am, by the mercy of Black, and the Chronicle proprietors, at home this Evening — It would be an insult to suppose it worth your while to walk or Cab so far East, for Scotch Whiskey and Cigars — would it not?

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?29 OCTOBER 1835]

Text from The Dickens-Kolle Letters, ed. Harry B. Smith, privately printed, Boston, 1910, p. 64. Date: Reference to Rookwood shows written just after last. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by George Hogarth Esqre.

Furnival's Inn, | Thursday Night.

My dearest Katie,

It is nearly eight, and I have not yet even begun the Sketch;[†1] neither have I thought of a subject. Excuse the brevity of this note on that account and believe that it is only occasioned by my wish to see you as early as possible tomorrow.

I send you by George[†2] (who in Fred's absence on business, is kind enough to be the bearer of this) the volume which contains the Life of Savage.[†3] I have turned down the leaf. Now do read it attentively; if you do, I know from your excellent understanding you will be delighted. If you slur it, you will think it dry. I have written to Macrone for Rookwood; and shall have it tomorrow, I doubt not.

Give my best love to your mamma and Mary. Write me word how all is going on.
Ever yours, my dearest love,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?30 OCTOBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: not the day before his journey to Bristol (on Sat 7 Nov), since he was planning to meet Catherine next day; probably a week before (he was more likely to expect his cold to last eight days than 15).

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning ½ past 10

My dearest Katie.

Frederick had not left me half an hour last night, than through the stupidity of Frisby[†4] who was in attendance pro: tem: Frank Ross[†5] "dropped in" to my writing room, and remained there until twelve oClock, being too much immersed in the importance of his projects relative to his foreign trip, to take the slightest heed of my agonized appearance. The consequence is, that this morning just one slip of the unfortunate sketch is done, and I am more unwilling to go on with it, than ever. I am going to compose myself to the task, however, with closed doors — when it will be done God only knows.

My cold I am sorry to say is very bad indeed this morning, accompanied with a head-ache, and all the unpleasantries which usually follow in it's[†1] train. If it should be a damp night, and the fog should continue, would you advise me to stay at home, take some gruel, try hot water for my feet, and go to bed early? — Let me know; I am afraid if I don't get rid of it before I go to Bristol,[†2] I shall never get rid of it afterwards. Write me word too about tomorrow, and what time you will like to dine; and consult your Mama, dear, about the possibility of there being any fear of your being out after dark. I shall be with you (if[†3] I should not see you to night) by half past twelve.

I send you Rookwood which I hope will assist you materially in getting through the day. Let me know how Mary is, and all the news, in writing — and above all, write like yourself, or in other words just such a note as you sent me last night. It was faultless.

Love to all
Believe me
My Dearest Love
Ever Yours most Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

November

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [4 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests early Nov 35; Beard dined with CD on Thurs 5th (see next two letters).

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Morning

My ever dearest Katie.

I was taken so extremely unwell when we got to Knightsbridge last night, that I really thought I should have been unable to proceed; my head was so extremely bad, and the dizziness affected my sight so much that I could scarcely see at all, in addition to which cheerful symptoms my tottering legs gave me the appearance of being particularly drunk. Rather alarmed as you will readily believe, at these disorderly manifestations, as well as at the suddenness with which they came and went (for I was comparatively well again by the time we reached Hyde Park Corner) I immediately purchased and took a 5 grained Pill — which has quite removed the original symptoms but is performing such singular evolutions in my interior that I am at present quite unable to leave home. I have ordered broth, and other soothing preparations to be made without delay, and hope they will have the effect of setting me to rights — the pill was decidedly the most powerful piece of calomel I ever ventured upon, but I have no doubt my taking it directly, has prevented my being really ill.

If it should not be damp to-night, I shall be with you by 6. If it should, or if the pill should continue refractory you may prepare yourself for a walk with me tomorrow Morning at 12 precisely. Beard dines with me you know, my love, but I shall be with you from 12 to 3.

Write me word how you are; assure me that your dismal forebodings of last night have entirely vanished: and as an indispensable preliminary, believe that I am and shall ever be my own dearest love

Yours most truly and affectionately.

CHARLES DICKENS

— Coss?

To THOMAS FRASER,[†1] [4 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: This must have been the Wednesday before he and Beard left for Bristol. Address: Thomas Fraser Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Fraser[†2]

You will much oblige me, with a view to some business arrangements I have to make, if you can let me know on what day we are to leave town for Bristol — is it fixed for Saturday, or shall we start sooner?

Ever Yours truly

CHARLES DICKENS

Beard will dine with me tomorrow, and if you have any message relative to our calling for the needful &c, I will communicate it to him.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [5 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD had asked permission to visit Newgate the week before (To Macrone, ?27 Oct); he was still awaiting orders from the Chronicle office for his journey to Bristol. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Robert Hogarth Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday afternoon.

My dearest love.

I have been to-day over Newgate,[†1] and The House of Correction,[†2] and have lots of anecdotes to tell you of both places when I see you tomorrow — some of them rather amusing: at least to me, for I was intensely interested in everything I saw.[†3]

Beard is here, and Robert (who called just before dinner) will be the bearer of this note. I have not yet heard from the Office; whether I shall hear tomorrow or not, I cannot say — if I do I will send Fred out in the morning, but at all events I will see you tomorrow: for if I am very hard pressed for time, I will throw the Bell's Life over, altogether.[†4]

I hope your cold is better my dearest girl, and that you have no new complaints either bodily or mental: indeed I feel full confidence after last night that you will not have a renewal of the latter.

Love to all; and believe me my own darling

Ever Yours most truly & affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth

To JOHN MACRONE, [7 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Huntington Library. Date: 7 Nov, when he left for Bristol.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning 5 O'Clock

My Dear Sir.

I never regretted anything in my life so much as I do the unpleasant circumstance (the probability of which I hinted to you on Thursday) of my having to start for Bristol this morning. The journey would not have been a very enviable one under ordinary circumstances, but the contents of your last night's note render it still more "aggrawatin'".

I have two objects in perspective in writing this note, — and they are these. First and foremost will you have the kindness to tell Mr. Cruikshank how very much I regret the impossibility of seeing him this evening, and thereby gratifying my long cherished wish to obtain an introduction to a gentleman whose much appreciated talents (I don't say it egotistically) no one appreciates so highly as myself? — Secondly, will you add that I shall be most happy to accompany you to Myddleton Terrace[†1] on either Thursday, Friday, or Saturday Evening next? Thirdly — I quite forgot that thirdly before — will you write me a note on Monday informing me what evening you have fixed? My brother sends me some letters by post on that day; he will call in Saint James's Square between 12 and 1, forward yours, and I will take care to be in town again by the time you appoint.

You have thrown me into a fever of anxiety to see the sketches already done — why didn't you inclose them? — They would have done my heart good even now; and it must be[†2] something very special to excite any feeling half a degree removed from misery in my bosom at this moment. I am writing by candle-light shivering with cold, and choaked with smoke. The fire (which has been fed like a furnace at the gas works all night, with a view to my "early breakfast") has turned unaccountably white and dusty at the very moment when it ought to boil the kettle, and on the best calculation I am enabled to make at the moment I should say that event would occur about the time that I reach Hounslow Heath. I think it's rather a disagreeable morning, but I can't say exactly — because it's so foggy. My Laundress who is asthmatic, has dived into a closet — I suppose to prevent her cough annoying me — and is emitting from behind the door, an uninterrupted succession of the most unearthly, and hollow noises I ever heard. My portmanteau resolutely refuses to suffer itself to be locked, although it has[†3] been strapped and buckled and stood upon 'till no Guard will know it by that appellation, and rumours have just reached me that there "ain't no cabs on the stand". Conceive my feelings!

Looking forward to hearing from you in the mode I have mentioned, and trusting that before another week has passed over, we may have commenced operations in good earnest I am

My Dear Sir
Ever Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [8 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: PM Newbury 8 Nov 35. Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place | Queens Elms | Brompton | London.

George and Pelican Newbury | Sunday Morning.

My Dearest Katie.

We arrived here yesterday afternoon at three o'Clock, and were immediately installed into very comfortable quarters. The Times are before us and have completed their arrangements, but if we continue to be as successful in laying the Horses we require between this place and Bristol, as we have been on that part of the road to town which we have already traversed, we are in confident expectation of beating them by two hours at least. We share the expence with The Morning Herald, and are living and travelling with two gentlemen from that paper.

We leave this place for Bristol at twelve o'Clock to-day, and I shall write you again by tomorrow's Post — I hope at greater length. I am in such a chaotic state of confusion just now, surrounded by maps, road-books, ostlers, and post-boys that I have not time to devote to anything but business — not even to you, though I have snatched a few moments to redeem my promise in.

Will you tell Fred my love that I will write to him from Bristol tomorrow, but that I have not done so from here to-day, because I really have nothing to communicate. Give my best love to your Mama, Mary, and all the rest and Believe me

My own dearest girl
Ever Yours most affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

I hear the Coach at this moment.

To THOMAS FRASER, [8 NOVEMBER 1835]

Text from J. T. Fields, Yesterdays with Authors, 8th edn, 1874, p. 232. Date: see last. Address: Thomas Fraser, Esq., Morning Chronicle Office.

George and Pelican, Newbury, Sunday Morning.

Dear Fraser,

In conjunction with The Herald we have arranged for a Horse Express from Marlborough to London on Tuesday night, to go the whole distance at the rate of thirteen miles an hour, for six guineas: half has been paid, but, to insure despatch, the remainder is withheld until the boy arrives at the office, when he will produce a paper with a copy of the agreement on one side, and an order for three guineas (signed by myself) on the other. Will you take care that it is duly honored? A Boy from The Herald will be in waiting at our office for their copy; and Lyons begs me to remind you most strongly that it is an indispensable part of our agreement that he should not be detained one instant.

We go to Bristol to-day, and if we are equally fortunate in laying the chaise-horses, I hope the packet will reach town by seven.[†1] As all the papers have arranged to leave Bristol the moment Russell[†2] is down, we have determined on adopting the same plan, — one of us will go to Marlborough in the chaise with one Herald man, and the other remain at Bristol with the second Herald man to conclude the account for the next day. The Times has ordered a chaise and four the whole distance, so there is every probability of our beating them hollow.[†3] From all we hear, we think the Herald, relying on the packet reaching town early, intends publishing the report in their first Edition. This is however, of course, mere speculation on our parts, as we have no direct means of ascertaining their intention.

I think I have now given you all needful information. I have only in conclusion to impress upon you the necessity of having all the compositors ready, at a very early hour, for if Russell be down by half past eight, we hope to have his speech in town at six.

Believe me (for self and Beard) very truly yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [9 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: the day before Lord John Russell's speech of Tues 10 Nov. Address: Paid | Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place | Queens Elms | Brompton | London.

Bush Inn.[†4] Bristol | Monday Morning

My dearest Kate. You must not be surprised at the brevity and matter-of-fact style of my letters, for we have so much to do, and so many cares and anxieties about the successful result of our expedition, that I am scarcely able to devote one moment to any other considerations than those connected with the business. We arrived here at nine O'Clock last night, after a long and somewhat cold journey through a beautiful and very interesting country, and have been engaged ever since (with the exception of the time we were asleep) in making arrangements for the Express. We have not yet agreed upon the division of labour, or the best mode of proceeding, sufficiently to enable me to say when I shall be home. Either Beard or I (I think, myself) will leave here the moment Lord John Russell has finished speaking, and proceed as far as Marlborough in a chaise and four, where the Express will be met and carried forward by saddle horses. The other will remain here to write the conclusion of the dinner (which will take him all night) and return to town by coach next day.[†1] In either case, I hope I shall be home some time on Wednesday — it may be Thursday, but of course I shall choose the quickest mode.

God bless you my dear girl. I hope you have taken good care of yourself in my absence, and that no new "flare"[†2] has disturbed the repose of York Place. Give my best love to all and believe me, in ha[ste][†3]

My own dearest love
Ever Yours affecy. & [ ][†3]
CHARLES DICKENS

I am looking forward with gre[at][†3] anxiety to your letter of tom[orrow][†3] morning — tell Fred I have just received the paper.

Beard and I are on the point of starting on horseback down the road, to inspect the appearance and condition of the post horses we have ordered.

To THOMAS FRASER, [10 NOVEMBER 1835]

Text from N, I, 51. Date: the day of Russell's speech.

Bush Inn, Bristol | Tuesday Morning

Dear Fraser,

The conclusion of Russell's dinner will be forwarded by Cooper's Company's coach,[†4] which leaves here at half-past six to-morrow morning. The report of the Bath dinner[†5] shall be forwarded by the first Bath coach on Thursday morning — what time it starts we have no means of ascertaining till we reach Bath; but you will receive it as early as possible, as we will indorse the parcel "Pay the porter 2/6 extra for immediate delivery."

Beard will go over to Bath from here to-morrow morning, and I shall come back by the mail from Marlborough. I need not say that it will be sharp work, and will require two of us; for we shall both be up the whole of the previous night, and shall have to sit up all night again to get it off in time.

As soon as we have had a little sleep, we shall return to town as quickly as we can, for we have (if the express succeeds) to stop at two or three places along the road, to pay money and express satisfaction. You may imagine that we are extremely anxious to know the result of the arrangement. Pray direct to one of us at the "White Hart" Bath, and inform us in a parcel sent by the first coach after you receive this exactly at what hour it arrived. Do not fail on any account.

We joined with the Herald (I say this in reference to the first part of your letter) precisely on the principle you at first laid down — economy; not pushed so far, however, as to interfere with the efficiency of the express. As the conclusion of the dinner was to be done, we all thought the best plan we could pursue would be to leave two men behind, and trust Russell to the others. I have no doubt if he makes a speech of any ordinary dimensions it can be done by the time we reach Marlborough; and taking into consideration the immense importance of having the addition of saddle-horses from thence, it is, beyond all doubt, worth an effort.

Believe me
(For self and Beard)
Very sincerely yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

I thought of putting the accompanying letter to my brother in the post. Will you have the kindness to send a boy with it?

To [FREDERICK] DICKENS, [?10 NOVEMBER 1835]

Mention in last. Address: probably to Frederick, the eldest of CD's younger brothers.

To JOHN MACRONE, [14 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD had planned to call on Cruikshank with Macrone on 12, 13 or 14 Nov (To Macrone, 7 Nov 35); being ordered to Bath, he did not return until the 13th (Friday). Address: John Macrone Esqre. | St. James's Square.

13 Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Do you go to Cruikshank's with me? — And if so (which I think would be better as it is partially a business affair) will it suit you to go to-night, or shall we fix Monday Evening?[†1]

I only returned to town last night, or I should have called on you before. Will you send me back a message fixing time and place.

Believe me (in great haste)

Ever Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [18 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Macrone's first child, Frederick Joseph Bordwine, b. 20 Oct 35, died on Mon 16 Nov.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Morning

My dear Sir.

I am much grieved to hear of your sudden bereavement. If consolation can be offered to a father under such circumstances however, it may afford you some relief to reflect that you lost your poor little boy at an age when death is an easy transit to a better World; and before years of solicitude and anxiety, and the recollection of the thousand holds upon your affection created in that time would have rendered the shock far harder to bear, and infinitely more difficult to forget. I hope Mrs. Macrone[†1] is doing as well as even you could wish, under circumstances so trying to a young mother's feelings.

Will you have the kindness to leave out for me (and I will send for it about 7 O'Clock this evening) the bound volume of Monthly Magazines? — Cruikshank wishes to see it: I had a long interview with him yesterday morning, the result of which I will communicate to you when you are again enabled to attend to business. He only waits now to see you; and pledges himself, that as far as he is concerned, the book shall be out by Christmas without fail.[†2]

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?19 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: probably the Thursday before Mon 23 Nov, when he went to the Adelphi to review The Dream at Sea.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

My dearest Girl.

I had two or three interruptions this morning, and have not yet (7 o'Clock) finished my Sketch,[†1] although I am rapidly approaching that very desirable consummation. I fear I shall not be able to see you to-night, and therefore send out Fred. I have some business to transact to morrow, and fear I should only make you late if you were to wait for my escort into town — I have therefore arranged that Fred shall be with you at half past four precisely (rather before than after) if that hour will suit you.

I received a note from Fraser this morning in which he says that Black is out of town and has left no tickets, but that if he return by Saturday, as in all human probability he will, they are mine — the Adelphi I shall be sent to on Monday; but I hardly know how to arrange about it, as I fear I shall be late, and I do not like your traversing the West End of London, of all other parts, accompanied only by Fred.

If you knew how eagerly I long for your society this evening, or how much delight it would afford me to be able to turn round to you at our own fireside when my work is done, and seek in your kind looks and gentle manner the recreation and happiness which the moping solitude of chambers can never afford, you would believe me sincere in saying that necessity and necessity alone, induces me to forego the pleasure of your companionship for one evening in the week even. You will never do me the justice of believing it however, and all I can do until my book[†2] is finished will be to reflect that I shall have (God willing) many opportunities of shewing you for years to come how unjust you used to be, and of convincing you then of what I would fain convince you now — that my pursuits and labours such as they are are not more selfish than my pleasures, and that your future advancement and happiness is the main-spring of them all.

Believe me
My dear Girl
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [23 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: CD must have been sending Cruikshank the volume of the Monthly Magazine for which he had asked Macrone on 18 Nov.

13 Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

Mr. Dickens presents his compts. to Mr. Cruikshank and begs to forward a volume of The Monthly containing four stories by him — there are two more which Mr. Dickens will procure to-day.[†1]

Mr. Dickens saw Mr. Macrone this morning; and if convenient to Mr. Cruikshank they will both wait on him this evening to conclude the arrangement.

To JOHN MACRONE, [23 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD was presumably confirming the plan to meet Cruikshank that evening (see last). Address: John Macrone Esqre. | St. James's Square.

13 Furnivals Inn | Monday ¼ to 12

My Dear Sir —

No notice has arrived from the Office[†2] yet; and as I shall not accept any even if it should arrive, at this late hour of the day, I shall expect you at half past six — I have sent a note to Cruikshank to warn him that we shall be there this evening.

Believe me
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [23 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Huntington Library. Date: no doubt later in the same day, written at Furnival's Inn and left there for Macrone to find when he called at 6.30.

My Sir

I have been I am sorry to say, compelled by Black's special desire to go to the Adelphi. As Cruikshank remains at home for us the second time, he must not be disappointed. Will you do me the favor of proceeding there from hence, on my undertaking to join you at his house by 9? It is the first piece, and if I take a cab and put off writing my notice 'till we return, I can easily manage it.[†1] I shall come straight from the Theatre. Pray excuse me — it is not my fault.

Ever Yours Sincerely.
CD.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [25 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD must have begun his sketch "A Visit to Newgate" on Wed 25th (see To Macrone, ?27 Nov).

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Evening

My dearest Kate

Macrone has urged me most imperatively and pressingly to "get on". I have made considerable progress in my "Newgate" sketch, but the subject is such a very difficult one to do justice to, and I have so much difficulty in remembering the place,[†2] and arranging my materials, that I really have no alternative but to remain at home to-night, and "get on" in good earnest. You know I have frequently told you that my composition is peculiar; I never can write with effect — especially in the serious way — until I have got my steam up, or in other words until I have become so excited with my subject that I cannot leave off; and hoping to arrive at this state to-night, I have, after a great deal of combating with my wish to see you, arrived at the determination I have just announced — I hope to do a good deal.

I will not do you the injustice to suppose that knowing my reason and my motive for exertion, you of all people will blame me one instant for my self-denial. You may be disappointed: — I would rather you would — at not seeing me; but you cannot feel vexed at my doing my best with the stake I have to play for — you and a home for both of us.

Write me by Fred and Believe me, my own love

Ever Yours most sincerely & affy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [?27 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the Friday between Cruikshank's receiving from CD the volume of the Monthly (23 Nov) and CD's departure for Hatfield (1 Dec).

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I will give you a call on Monday Morning. I hope by that time we shall have the book from Cruikshank, and be enabled to put it in hand.

I was very busy yesterday and the day before doing a long paper for the book — "A Visit to Newgate" which I am very anxious for you to see a corrected proof of. Hogarth perused it very carefully last night, and bid me tell you that it would "make" any book — an opinion which Black more than confirms.

I don't say this egotistically of course, but merely to shew you that I have been exerting myself for both our sakes.

Believe me

Very Sincerely Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?27 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD had finished the Newgate sketch the night before; the new story was almost certainly "The Black Veil".

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My Dearest Girl.

I have finished my sketch and dispatched it; but I must stay at home for two reasons. First because I am anxious to see Mitton if I possibly can, on business;[†1] and secondly because an extraordinary idea for a story of a very singular kind occurred to me this morning, and I am anxious to commit it to paper before the impression it made upon me is lost. I will shew it to you the moment it is finished.[†2]

Frazer[†3] has sent me word that he fears the Drury Lane Ticket[†4] for tomorrow night is engaged. He adds that if it should be, he will get the Covent Garden one;[†5] and I am to send down for one or other to-night. — We are therefore pretty sure of going somewhere.

Either Fred or I will be with you at One o'Clock tomorrow, to fetch you to dine here before we go to the play. If Mary likes to come, I shall be of course most happy to see her, and Fred can be her escort in the evening.

Cupid[†1] will be the bearer of this — a most appropriate Messenger — and as he waits, I will not stay to add more than that I am

My dearest love
Ever Yours most truly & affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?30 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: probably the Monday on which CD had promised to call on Macrone: see ?27 Nov.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Afternoon

My Dearest Katie

I was very unwell all last night, and my head though better is far from being in its usual state to-day. Should it not be quite well tomorrow, I think I will make up my mind to be bled without delay.

I have not written a line yet[†2] (it is 4 o'Clock now) — I was at Macrone's until half past twelve and since I returned from his house I have been up to Cruikshank's though I am sorry to say I was not fortunate enough to find him at home. I strolled about Pentonville thinking the air did my head good, and looked at one or two houses in the new streets. They are extremely dear, the cheapest I looked at, being £55 a year with taxes.[†3] Their situation for business is undeniable certainly, and the houses themselves are very pretty, but this is too much. Mitton has drawn me a notice to quit, and when I pay my rent (tomorrow or next day) I shall give it to Fry[†4] myself. The knowledge of having taken that step will be a relief.

Of course I shall see you tomorrow, but I fear not before the evening, as I must make up for my not writing to-day — always supposing my head is better, for I could not have penned six original lines this morning, had I five pounds depending on them. It is a sad affair just now, but I hope it will go off.

God bless you my dearest girl: — I wish you were here to-night with all my soul, notwithstanding the pleasure you think I take in being away from you.

Love to all
Believe me
My own dearest love
Ever Yours most Affecy.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [30 NOVEMBER 1835]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: presumably the same day as last, after CD's visits to Macrone and Cruikshank.

13 Furnivals Inn | Monday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

I called on you this morning[†1] by Macrone's request to ask you when you thought you would be enabled to return me my books with a list of your intended Illustrations, and frontispieces. He has been taking advice on the subject, and is exceedingly anxious to get it out with all possible dispatch, in pursuance of which intention he wishes me to arrange the contents of each volume, and send some copy to the Printer's as quickly as I can.

As I was not so[†2] fortunate as to find you at home this morning, I trouble you with a few lines now, and have desired my small secretary[†3] to wait for an answer.

Pray present my compliments to Mrs. Cruikshank, and

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

December

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [1 DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD left for Hatfield on 1 Dec, to report the fire at Hatfield House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esqre.

Salisbury Arms. Hatfield. | Tuesday Night

My Dearest love.

The hurry in which I left town (receiving only three hour's[†4] notice, and being previously out of bed until three o'Clock) prevented my writing to you before I started for this place. I have been busy all day, but I embrace the first opportunity of explaining what without reflection might appear neglectful — I hope not for a moment unkind.

After driving about (as you will have probably heard from Fred) in quest of a stage, I procured a Leicester Coach at 8 this morning in which I left town with the intention of going direct to Saint Alban's. It struck me on my way however that if I crossed the country from Barnet I should get here quicker: I accordingly alighted and breakfasted there, and came on here in a Gig. And here I am, waiting until the remains of the Marchionness of Salisbury are dug from the ruins of her Ancestor's Castle. I went over the place this morning, and shall "flare"[†5] briefly in the Chronicle tomorrow.[†1] I am waiting for the Inquest which cannot be held until the bones (if the fire has left any) are discovered. None have been found up to the time I am writing (nine o'Clock) and I therefore see no chance of its being held before Thursday at soonest.[†2]

You know how vexatious it is to me to be away from you, more especially without notice of any kind enabling me to say good by'e[†3] first, and you can guess how it worries me to be away just now, when my presence in town is so essential to the appearance of my book. I was very unwell yesterday, but I am happy to say that I think the journey and the air have done me great good.

It would delight me — I speak sincerely when I say "more than I can possibly 'press" to receive a letter from you, but as the period of my stay here is so uncertain, and you will probably not receive this from Fred before tomorrow night, I fear you could not write without a chance of the letter and I crossing. If I should be unexpectedly detained longer than I now anticipate I will write to Fred and tell him, and you will then I hope write me a note to the address I have given at the commencement of my letter. I trust however that I shall be able to see your face before then, and without any disparagement to your letters my own dear Girl I would much rather have one kiss from you than half a dozen letters each on as many quires of paper.

Love to all
Believe me
My ever dearest Katie
Most sincerely and affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [8 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the letter mentioned in To Macrone, 9 Dec.

13 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

I fear I shall find it necessary to go over Cold Bath Fields Prison[†4] again, for I have seen so many places and written so much since I was there, that I have forgotten many important particulars.

Should you have any objection to oblige me with a line to Mr. Chesterton[†5] reminding him that I went over the Prison a short time since with Macrone on Mr. Laurie's[†1] (the magistrate's) introduction; and committing me to his charge again? It has occurred to me that perhaps you could do me this favour without laying yourself under any obligation, as that gentleman is a friend of yours.

I am sure you will excuse my troubling you with this request — it is your own fault, for you have shewn so much kind interest in my book, and your good opinion of it is so gratifying to me that I do not hesitate to trouble you about it when I should feel great reluctance in troubling other people.

If you have any objection to writing to Mr. Chesterton I beg you will not fail to mention it at once, for I can get another order from Mr. Laurie by calling on him.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

The Printer has instructions to forward proofs to you regularly every evening.

To JOHN MACRONE, [9 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: The specimen page and proofs must have arrived before Wed 16 Dec (see To Macrone, 17 Dec). On Wed 2 Dec CD was at Hatfield; this therefore must have been written on the 9th. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | &c &c.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

I have received neither specimen page nor proofs. I hope there is not going to be any more delay, but that both Cruikshank and I are to be supplied at once.[†2] Will you tell me what you have done?

I am highly gratified with your opinion of "Newgate" — no praise I have received or can receive for it, affords me greater pleasure. The two points you mention I had not forgotten; I rejected them purposely after mature deliberation. With regard to Mrs. Fry,[†1] I saw a Quakeress in the office, and turning round to you in jest, said — "Mrs. Fry"; but whether it was really her, or some other good quakeress of whom there are numbers, God only knows — I am not even sure she's alive; if she be, she must, I should think be older than the Lady we saw. Again, about the Kitchen. I know no place in which I could introduce the fact without weakening my subsequent description, and I left it out lest scrupulous ninnies who do not see these things as you and I do, should think there was something disgusting in the idea, and repulsive. When I have the proof I will look at it again, and endeavour to notice it in the right place en passant.[†2]

Lastly with respect to the House of Correction. I wrote to Cruikshank to give me a Note to Chesterton for another ramble over the place, but I would much rather not describe it for this series.[†3] You cannot throw the interest over a years imprisonment, however severe, that you can cast around the punishment of death.[†4] The Tread-Mill will not take the hold on men's feelings that the Gallows does; and Hogarth — whose judgment in these matters from long experience is not to be despised — says that he thinks the insertion of another Prison Paper would decidedly detract from the "hit" of the first.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Ever Yours most Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Signature rules out the early date (before his move to Selwood Terrace) given by Walter Dexter in Mr. and Mrs. CD, 1935, and points to some time in the period after his return to Furnival's Inn — probably Dec. For another instance of the cool salutation used here, see ?8 Mar 36.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

My Dear Catherine.

After your very welcome note of this morning, I feel much more disappointed than I should have been had I not heard from you, at being prevented from coming out to-night. But I had no sooner got to work this morning, than the Organ began, and the Organ had no sooner left off, than Beard and Philpott[†1] came, to hold a grand consultation upon the course the latter should pursue towards the Chronicle people. I was obliged to enter into a conference which lasted until three O'Clock: I have since had to write for the office; and at this hour (6 OClock) have not more than half finished my sketch. I have been thus tediously explicit, to shew you that my absence is no fault of mine.

With regard to your note my love, I will only say, that it displays all that amiable and excellent feeling which I know you possess, and for which I believe from my heart, you are unrivalled; — if you would only determine to shew the same affection and kindness to me, when you feel disposed to be ill-tempered, I declare unaffectedly; I should have no one solitary fault to find with you. Your asking me to love you "once more" is quite unnecessary — I have never[†2] ceased to love you for one moment, since I knew you; nor shall I.

I shall be out as early as the Court will allow me tomorrow — I wish I could say there was a chance of my being out tonight.

Believe me
My ever dearest Girl
Yours most truly & Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?11 DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: possibly a week before the action for debt brought against John Dickens on Fri 18 Dec,[†3] while CD was at Kettering; the "unhappy sketch" would in this case be "The Parlour", published 13 Dec.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My dearest Katie.

The unhappy sketch had only reached its third slip by dinner time — Father was worrying here this morning until nearly two OClock, and after he went I fell asleep; having been so unwell with my side last night as to be obliged to call up Fred.

I would give the guinea I am to receive for the paper, and another with it, if I could manage decently to escape to-night. I sent down to Dowling this Morning however to say he might rely on receiving it, however late the hour, and thus I have no alternative but to do it as I best can — and bad will be the best God knows, for I never felt less disposed to write in my life.

Of course I shall dine with you tomorrow, but I must leave by the 6 O'Clock Buss in order that I may not disappoint Cruikshank. Should it be a fine day, will you and Mary leave Brompton at a quarter past I, and walk on 'till you meet me? — I shall come down Piccadilly on the same side of the way as the Duchess of St. Albans'[†1] House[†2] until I come to Hyde Park corner, and then I shall cross over and continue on the same side as Slater's the Upholsterer's. Just write me a line by Fred, but don't keep him my love, as I want him this evening.

God bless you dearest. Excuse the brievity[†3] of this note; but I have made so little progress with my article that unless I return to it at once, I have very little hope of its being finished at all.

Believe me
My dear Girl
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [14 DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: PM 15 Dec 35 (Tuesday). Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place | Queen's Elm | Brompton | London.

White Hart Kettering[†4] | Monday Evening

My dear Kate.

I arrived here last night at nine O'Clock, the bad state of the roads having detained both the stage and Post-chaise beyond its usual time. I am sorry — very sorry — to say that I shall not in all human probability be home before Wednesday Week;[†5] but if I should get any opportunity of running up before that time, I shall not lose it, depend upon it.

I found here your friend Mr. Griffin[†6] and two other gentlemen, but not the Times people, whom I expect to-night. It is a dreadfully stupid and dull place, but we have discovered a Bagatelle Board, which we have had erected in our sitting room. We have played all day to-day, and I suppose except when there is work to do, shall amuse ourselves in a similar manner until the Election is over. The nomination takes place tomorrow; and miserably cold it will be.

You will readily believe my dearest that I have little to say beyond what I have said already. To say I very much regret being away, is I know unnecessary, and it is equally useless to say that I am most anxious to get back. Give my love to all at home, and tell your Papa that if he has anything to say about the proofs, or Mr. Mather's[†1] reception of Robert, I shall be very happy to receive a letter from him.

I have been misinformed about the time at which the Post leaves this place; and am obliged to close my letter just as I intended to commence it. I have only time to add that I rely upon receiving a long letter from you on Wednesday Morning.

God bless you my dearest Girl

Believe me
Ever Yours most truly and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

10,000 kisses — Not "coss" I hope?

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [16 DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: PM 17 Dec 35 (Thursday). Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place | Queens Elms | Brompton | London.

White Hart Kettering | Wednesday Morning

My dear Girl.

As I received your very welcome letter just now, and am alone for a few minutes, I think I cannot do better than sit down and write another without delay, though what on earth I am to write about I know not. This place is fearfully dull, and I have seen neither a newspaper or a book since I came down here.

You will see or hear by the Chronicle of yesterday, that we had a slight flare[†2] here yesterday morning, just stopping short of murder and a riot. Party feeling runs so high, and the contest is likely to be so sharp a one that I look forward to the probability of a scuffle before it is over. As the Tories are the principal party here, I am in no very good odour in the town, but I shall not spare them the more on that account in the descriptions of their behaviour I may forward to head quarters.[†3] Such a ruthless set of bloody-minded villains, I never set eyes on, in my life. In their convivial moments yesterday after the business of the day was over, they were perfect savages. If a foreigner were brought here on his first visit to an English town, to form his estimate of the national character, I am quite satisfied he would return forthwith to France, and never set foot in England again. The remark will apply in a greater or less degree to all Agricultural places during the pendency of an Election, but beastly as the electors usually are, these men are superlative blackguards. Would you believe that a large body of horsemen, mounted and armed, who galloped on a defenceless crowd yesterday, striking about them in all directions, and protecting a man who cocked a loaded pistol,[†1] were led[†2] by Clergymen, and Magistrates? Or that I saw one of these fellows with my own eyes, unbuckle one of his stirrup-leathers, and cut about him in the crowd, with the iron part of it — communicating to the blows all the additional force that swinging it at the end of the leather could give them? Anything more sickening and disgusting, or anything that roused my indignation so much, I never beheld.

I think I shall have to go over to Northampton to-day with the Times man, whose return from a gentleman's seat in the neighbourhood, whither he went on business before I was up, I am in momentary expectation of. If so, I shall sleep at Northampton to-night, and return here in the course of tomorrow morning. The polling begins on Friday and then we shall have an incessant repetition of the sounds and sights of yesterday 'till the Election is over — bells ringing, candidates speaking, drums sounding, a band of eight trombones (would you believe it?) blowing — men fighting, swearing drinking, and squabbling — all riotously excited, and all disgracing themselves. You will probably have heard from Fred that I shall have finished here by Monday. You shall hear from me again before then, and I will tell you the hour at which I shall expect to see you in Furnivals Inn. I expect a parcel from Fred to-night

God bless you my dearest Katie.

Love to all, and Believe me
Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

You won't forget the direction,[†3] if you feel disposed to write again.

To JOHN MACRONE, [17 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 18 Dec 35 (Friday). Address: John Macrone Esqre. | 3 St. James's Square | London.

Northampton | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir

Your letter has been forwarded to me at Kettering where I am watching the Election, and shall be compelled to remain until Monday when I shall return to town pr. Mail. During my absence Mr. Hogarth is reading the proofs — a task which he will execute quite as well as I could, as he knows all the sketches by heart, and takes an interest in the book in no way secondary to my own. I am perfectly satisfied with your arrangements with Whiting.[†1] The page is an extremely neat and pretty one, and they are getting on very quickly indeed. I hope we shall be out in the first week of the new Year.

I dare say you will have returned to town almost as soon as myself — I trust you will be enabled to inform me that Mrs. Macrone is doing well,[†2] and that you are "all right".

Believe me
Ever Yours very sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

If you could see the beastly swine who wallow in the Public Houses down here,[†3] under the denomination of "Conservatives"[†4] you would renounce your creed for ever.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [18 DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: Polling at Kettering began on Fri 18 Dec. Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place | Queens Elm | Brompton | London.

White Hart. Kettering. | Friday Noon

My dear Kate.

I am overjoyed to say that I have received a communication from the Office to the effect that it will be unnecessary for me to remain here for the Declaration of the Poll on Monday. I shall therefore leave by the "Peveril" tomorrow night at a quarter past one, and shall be in town about nine o'Clock on the following Morning. — I shall lie down for an hour or two, and be out at Brompton to dinner on Sunday.

I am very sorry my dear Girl that you should have thought my letter of the other day stiff and formal — I don't know how it is, but I am quite certain I had no notion of its being so, and if it really were (which I can hardly believe) it was quite unintentional. The noise and confusion here this morning — which is the first day of polling is so great that my head is actually splitting. There are about forty flags on either side, two tremendous bands, one hundred and fifty constables, and vehicles of every kind, sort, and description. These last mentioned nuisances are constantly driving about and in and out and up [and] down the town, conveying voters to the Poll; and the voters themselves are drinking and guzzling and howling and roaring in every house of Entertainment there is. Our house is so full, and the blue swine, or in other words the conservative electors are such beasts that we have retired into my bed room — a large apartment at the extreme end of a long gallery, with a couple of windows commanding an interesting view of the stable yard. There is a little passage leading to the room at the entrance of which is a door which we have fastened, and on the outside of which we have affixed a poker as a temporary knocker. Here we have removed the Bagatelle Board, and here we sit secure from interruption, with the bedstead wheeled into a corner. I have just ordered dinner in this curious den for five[†1] people — cod and oyster sauce, Roast beef, and a pair of ducks, plum pudding, and Mince Pies. Bearing in mind your objection to my doing anything in the Ducrow[†2] way, I persuaded[†3] on the Times, Post, and Advertizer, to alter their original plan of making a day of it yesterday on saddle-horses, to hiring a four wheeled chaise. A driver was chosen by ballot, and your humble servant was unanimously appointed Guard. We started at about 11 oClock for the Duke of Buccleugh's[†4] seat[†5] which is about 4 or 5 miles from hence: went over the House, dined at a country public house,[†6] and returned after dark, when our driver being very near-sighted and slightly overcome with potations of ale, and egg flip, ingeniously drove the party into a "water-splash". The Guard dismounted — the water being up to the calves of his legs — and after a great deal of dragging, splashing, and shouting, succeeded in leading the Horse back to the road, and we all arrived here in time for coffee. On the preceding day I was at Northampton, and "flore"[†1] slightly.

And now my dear Girl I have only time to add that business and want of space combined, compel me to close my letter abruptly. Its stiffness and formality I must leave you to judge of. The assurance that the prospect of seeing you two days earlier than I expected, gives me the utmost joy, I must judge of myself: only assuring you that it is most sincere and heartfelt. I am most happy to hear you have not been "coss" — though I perceive you have not yet subdued one part of your disposition — your distrustful feelings and want of confidence. However this may be, you may rest satisfied that I love you dearly — far too well to feel hurt by what in any one else would have annoyed me greatly. Tell Fred I had no time to write to him; and not[†2] to take any proofs to Brompton[†3] on Saturday Night, as I should like to see them when I return on Sunday Morning. Love to all. God bless you Pig, and Believe me (if you have any faith in your nature) Ever Yours most Sincerely & Affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

Damn the Tories — They'll win here I am afraid.[†4]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [21 DECEMBER 1835]

For text see Addenda, p. 701.

To JOHN MACRONE, [21 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the day after CD's return from Kettering, when Macrone also had been away (see 17 Dec). Address: John Macrone Esqre.

St. James's Square[†5] | Monday

My Dear Sir

I called on you this morning although with very little hope of finding you returned so soon. When you come back, will you be kind enough to write to Cruikshank impressing the necessity of dispatch upon him? — I think he requires the spur.

I will call on Thursday Morning and shall perhaps succeed in finding you at home.

Believe me

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [22 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: the day after last on evidence of "the spur" to be applied to Cruikshank and CD's intention to call on Thursday. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | St. James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I called at your house yesterday, and heard you would be home on Wednesday. I had occasion to communicate with the Printer this morning and saw Mr. Whiting, who said that they could finish by this day week (they have just begun the second volume) but that if they were to wait for Cruikshank after all, they might as well have the advantage of an extra week to complete it in. I said I would beg you on your return to ask Cruikshank by what day he would undertake to finish, and inform them without delay, for which Mr. Whiting said he would feel greatly obliged.

Will you have the kindness to write to Cruikshank on this subject and apply the spur? — I rather think he wants it. I understand you will probably be home on Wednesday. If the person who leaves the note, wait for an answer, we shall probably know for certain when he will have finished on Thursday Morning. I will call upon you about half past eleven.

It will be time to put in a preliminary advertisement soon, will it not?[†1]

Believe me
Dear Sir
Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [23 DECEMBER 1835]

MS British Museum. Date: CD clearly postponed his visit to Coldbath Fields (see To Cruikshank, 21 Dec: p. 701) a further day. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Robert Hogarth Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday — Two OClock

My dearest Katie.

Don't say you are angry to receive a letter from me, or that I could come to you if I would. I have only this moment returned from accompanying father to Cold Bath Fields: my sketch[†2] is not yet commenced, and Dowling tells me that if he has it at all, it must be before 9 O'Clock tomorrow morning. Even if I wrote till 7 (with the interval of dinner) and then came out, I should be obliged to disappoint him by several hours, and after all I could not finish it in the morning, as I have to be with Macrone at 11 O'Clock. This last engagement my dear Girl I quite forgot last night; remembering it now, I am obliged to determine with the most unfeigned reluctance, that I must not leave home to-day.

Now however strongly disposed to be "coss" you may feel at first, I am quite sure you will not continue so long, and that you cannot fail to see I have no alternative but to set to work with what appetite I may. If I be not detained tomorrow morning by business, I shall be out to Brompton to dinner at 3. If I am prevented doing that, I shall be out before 6. I wish I could receive a note from you to-night were it only a line, but as Fred has a sore throat still, I think it better to entrust this Epistle to Robert for delivering.

God bless you my dearest Girl. — I look forward to spending a nice quiet evening with you tomorrow. My debut at Mrs. Richards's,[†1] I defer to another opportunity.

Love to all
Believe me
Dearest Pig
Ever Yours most truly & affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS
9 9 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 [0 0 0 0]
0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 kiss[es][†2]

To JOHN MACRONE, [?26 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the Saturday after their meeting of Thurs 24 Dec. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

It occurred to me after you left me the other day, that we thoughtlessly did Cruikshank an injustice in supposing his past negligence would postpone the work for any very long time. We were marvellously indignant if you remember, at his saying you should have "a" plate next week, and "two" the week afterwards, but we quite forgot his having told us a minute before, that each plate would contain "four" subjects. The sixteen will therefore be accomplished much sooner than we expected, and perhaps at as good a season after all.

Of course I shall see the first proofs[†3] when the Printer has pulled them: I am not a little anxious to see him fairly at work. Let me know when you propose sending the first advertizement to the Chronicle. I will get a paragraph inserted, calling attention to it.[†4] — I can hardly begin to puff it without apprizing them of its being in preparation, in the legitimate manner.

Have you read "The Black Veil"?

Believe me
Ever Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH,[†1] [?29 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably not more than a fortnight before 12 Jan 36 when CD had nearly finished Sc. i of The Village Coquettes; signature supports. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

13 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

I regret to say that my being under orders from The Chronicle will prevent my enjoying the pleasure of seeing you tomorrow, and I am not quite justified in making any appointment for the next day, as I may possibly be busy for my paper. The moment I am quite certain of an hour or two (which I doubt not will be either on Thursday or Friday) I shall beseech you to take part in a very grave discussion.

What I am anxious to suggest to you is, the expediency of dropping the Venetian idea altogether, and making the Drama an English one. I really cannot please myself with any of the sketches I have made for an opera to which the title of "The Gondolier"[†2] would be applicable; and remembering the popularity and beauty of many of the old english Operas I am strongly prejudiced in favor of a simple rural story. I am the more induced to favor this notion when I consider with how little expense such a piece might be produced, and how very effective its situations might be made; while the Gondolier on the other hand would require a great many supernumeraries, and some rather costly scenery. Add to these considerations, the increased ease and effect with which we could both work on an English Drama where the characters would act and talk like people we see and hear of every day, and I think you will be of my opinion.[†3]

I have a little story by me which I have not yet published, which I think would dramatize well.[†4] If you approve of my idea, it is done in a twinkling

— if not, I will work out your original notion, but I will frankly confess that while I am at home in England, I am in Venice abroad indeed —

If you have time to turn the matter over in your mind, you will perhaps have decided by the time I see you —

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [30 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Morgan Library. Date: The printers had completed the text of Vol. I by Tues 22nd (To Macrone, that day); Macrone had presumably just answered CD's question of ?26 Dec about "The Black Veil".

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

You can form a very imperfect notion of the indefatigable perseverance with which the thousand and one friends of Newspaper Editors and Proprietors engage the Theatrical orders when a new piece is running. The Drury Lane Ticket is engaged to-night I know: I have written to Black for it for tomorrow, or if it be still bespoke, for the first night of its disengagement. I shall hear this evening, and you shall hear tomorrow.

I regret to see one or two errors in the first Volume, though I have the consolation of believing that none but practised eyes will observe them. I am glad you like The Black Veil. I think the title is a good one, because it is uncommon, and does not impair the interest of the story by partially explaining its main feature.[†1]

I give Cruikshank 'till Saturday: — I hope we shall have something to look at by that time.

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

I forgot to say that the order will be for two.[†2]

To THOMAS MITTON, [31 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Huntington Library. Date: almost certainly 31 Dec, since written on the back of a fragment of his sketch "The New Year", published in Bell's Life, 3 Jan 36. Signature supports.[†1]

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

Dear Tom

I am at home to-night and alone. I am writing as I was when I last saw you, but Fred is disengaged for a rubber at Cribbage, and I shall be very happy to see you —

Believe me
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esq

1836

January

To JOHN MACRONE, [7 JANUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 7 Jan 36. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

13 Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have not been engaged in devising a new title for the Sketches, for this reason — the greater part, if not the whole of the book, is worked off: I am not acquainted with the mechanical arrangement of such matters, but I confess I do not understand how the words "Sketches by Boz" which head every other page, can be altered without cancelling the whole impression. If any new title-page should occur to you, I shall be very happy to hear of it, and take it into consideration; the only reason that induces me to favor the present title at all, is that it is both unaffected and unassuming — two requisites which it is very desirable for a young author [not] to lose sight of.

When George Cruikshank called here on Monday, he said he would drop me a note towards the close of the week, begging me to go up to his house to spend the evening and see the plates. I shall hear from him I dare say either to-night or tomorrow, and if so I will call on you immediately.

I am highly gratified with Ainsworth's[†2] opinion of the Visit to Newgate, and for the very kind interest he seems to take in our proceedings. Has he seen the Black Veil?

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

Is it not time to begin advertizing? — Everybody asks me the same question.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?7 JANUARY 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD would probably not have sent the preface to the printers until the rest of the book was printed (see last). Address: George Cruik[shank Esqre] | Myddleton [Terrace.][†1]

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

As I have mentioned your name in the accompanying little preface to my book,[†2] I think it better to inclose it for your perusal, although I hope you will find nothing in it to object to. It will be sent to the printer's in the course of tomorrow, and you will perhaps have the kindness to return it to my messenger tomorrow morning — he will call for that purpose.

Pray make my compliments to Mrs. Cruikshank and Believe me

Dear Sir
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [8 JANUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: The first advertisement of Sketches appeared in the Morning Chronicle on Sat 9 Jan 36, at the top of the second Publications Column.

13 Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My Dear Sir.

If you send the advertizement to the Chronicle to-night, I will tell the Printer to place it at the head of a Column. I cannot take it. It is quite a different Department of the paper, and they are particular in such matters. It can be taken into the Printing Office after the outer shop is closed.

Pray do not misunderstand me about the title. — I am ready to adopt any you can suggest. All I meant was that I could think of none myself.

I have made one alteration in the advertizement.[†1] Tell my brother whether it is going to the Office to-night. If so he will call on the Printer as he comes back with instructions from me.

Ever Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HULLAH, [12 JANUARY 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: By Jan 21st CD had finished Act I of The Village Coquettes (see To Catherine, that day); the only Chronicle notice this month was of a play at the Olympic on Tues 12th. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Sir

I was obliged to notice a new piece, at the Olympic last night[†2] and have been engaged the greater part of the day. I have however, got on — the first scene (a long one) is nearly completed, and as far as I have gone it is copied, but I had rather not send it 'till it is finished.

This will be by one oClock tomorrow, and as I am prevented from seeing you to-night will you call upon me at that time?

Believe me (in haste)
Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?18 JANUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: CD probably began the second of the two acts of The Village Coquettes on Thursday 21st (see next). Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Alfred Dickens Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dearest love.

Up to the time of Alfred's leaving here this morng (nearly ten O'Clock) no ticket had arrived, and I therefore think there is now no chance of my being sent anywhere to-night. We will have the Office Ticket and go to Braham's[†1] next week as soon as the Dramatic portion of the Opera is done, as I should very much like you to see a place and a set of people in which we are likely to be so much interested.[†2]

I shall of course be out tomorrow night agreeably to my promise, and with me I will bring the results of my two days labour. I was up at 8 this morning — washed, dressed, and at work, by nine.

Believe me
My own dearest darling Pig
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

I have desired Alfred to see you home, and any little document you may have to send by him will be thankfully received

1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 kisses — Not coss?

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [21 JANUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: The ceremony (see below) took place on 21 Jan 36. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esqre.

Furnivals Inn, | Thursday Morning

My Dearest Love

I have been ordered by the Office to attend a Procession and ceremony at Lambeth this morning.[†3] I must leave here at 12 and do not expect to get back before 4 — Is it my fault that I cannot get out to-night? I must work at the Opera from the moment I have finished my dinner, until one or two o'Clock in the morning, or I shall be fearfully behind hand: and with the certainty of two political dinners taking place next week — the one at Liverpool, and the other at Birmingham — to which it is very possible I may be sent,[†1] I am even more impatient and anxious about it, than I was yesterday, when I did not know of this probability. I am going to begin the second act with a Scene founded on your suggestion.[†2]

I shall see you I hope and trust tomorrow evening, by which time if no unforeseen circumstance occurs, I hope I shall have made considerable progress towards the conclusion of my labours. Write me a note back by Fred telling me particularly how you are this morning, whether you have taken any Medicine, and if so, of what kind. If you have not, I positively insist on a three grain calomel pill instantly, and a draught two hours hence.

God bless you my darling Pig —

Long letter mind

Believe me
Dearest Mouse
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To HIS BUTCHER, [?21 or 22 JANUARY 1836]

Mention in next.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?22 JANUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: Probably CD had caught cold while watching the "ceremony at Lambeth" on Thurs 21 Jan.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My Dearest Love

I am so ill this morning that I am unable to work, or do anything. I wrote till 3 oClock this morning (I had not done for the paper till 8) and passed the whole night, if night it can be called after that hour, in a state of exquisite torture from the spasm in my side far exceeding anything I ever felt. It still continues exceedingly painful and my head is aching so from pain and want of rest, that I can hardly hold it up. Whether I caught cold from sitting in the open air yesterday, or not, I do not know, but I have not had so severe an attack since I was a child. I have sent to the Chemists to have an old prescription of Beard's brother's[†1] made up. It is a most powerful medicine in its effects upon the system (Hydroceanic[†2] Acid being the principal ingredient) and you will readily believe that I must not encounter the night air after taking it, even if I could walk about. My side is so bad however that I can scarcely stir. Don't mind on my account: I am so used to suffer from this cause that it never alarms me. I have little doubt but that I shall be well tomorrow.

You will be happy to hear my dearest, that Cruikshank called this morning with proofs of four plates, and that Fred is to fetch from his house to-night, proofs of four more — eight in all. He is now on the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth. So that I hope tomorrow week will see the Book at the Binder's. — I shall bring them out with me tomorrow. The Butcher wrote me last night to say that his boy was going to take out a warrant against me for an assault. I wrote word back that the sooner he did it, the better, and that I had instructed my clerk to take in no more insolent attempts to extort money. You shall see this precious correspondence too, tomorrow —

God bless you
My own dearest Girl
Believe me Ever yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?23 JANUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: near the completion of The Village Coquettes (see To Catherine, ?18 Jan).

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Morng

My Dearest Mouse

I send Alfred out (Frederick being very busily engaged in writing) to let you know that I am greatly better to day, though still in some pain, and had a very good night. I shall persevere in the Medicine which I really think does me a great deal of good.

I did set to work yesterday, and dragged on as well as I could 'till a little after One this morning. I was up at 8 and have made a rapid stride. I think and hope I shall be out to-night, but should my work, or my ill-health, or both, detain me at home, Fred will be out, with a Book of the Songs in both acts, to take to your papa. I have only two Scenes to write, and like the second act very much — I think it will tell.

If I should not be out to-night, of course I shall see you tomorrow. If I am not better I shall take a Cab to Hyde-Park-Corner, and walk on to meet you — Leave your house at the usual time.

I will not stay to add more now, than that I am

My own dearest Love
Most truly and Affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HULLAH, [?JANUARY 1836]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: Handwriting suggests Jan 36. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | 15 Cavendish Square.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My dear Sir.

The arrangements at The Chronicle Office respecting Theatre Tickets are so admirable that even at this moment I am unable to say with any degree of certainty whether I shall be able to obtain the order for Braham's this evening. The printed one is mislaid (though I think Hogarth has it) and Black has written me another which I feel tolerably certain would not be admitted even if we presented it.

Perhaps as you live so near Edward Street,[†1] you will take the trouble to look in there at half past six this evening. If I get the ticket I will join you — if not, you shall hear from me tomorrow morning. I think at the worst we are pretty certain of it tomorrow, and it is not at all improbable that we shall have it to-night.

Believe me
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqre.

February

To ROBERT [HOGARTH], [?1 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Berg Collection. Date: Signature points to early 1836; presumably refers to the Parliamentary session beginning on 4 Feb.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Robert —

I am truly sorry to say that I have no alternative but to postpone our First Lesson[†2] until Monday Morning. I have just been requested to hurry two articles[†3] I have to write this week; and as the House meets on Thursday, I really cannot spare the time.

Believe me
Ever Yours very sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?1 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Braham could hardly have read and accepted The Village Coquettes before Mon 1 Feb (see To Catherine, ?23 Jan); on the following Monday Sketches was published (see To Macrone, 7 Feb). Address: George Cruikshank Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I return your Portfolio with thanks; and forward Rookwood. I need not say that I am most delighted with the Plates you have done, and rejoiced to find that we have so nearly approached the termination of our labours in Boz's cause.

When you have a spare half hour or so, one of these days, I should like to spend it with you in talking over the idea you suggested sometime since relative to a little Satire on the class of pieces usually presented, at the Theatres in these times. I think I could turn it to the account you desire — a good one.[†1]

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

The opera I was busy on, when I saw you, has been accepted by Braham with the most flattering encomiums; and an assurance that it must succeed.

To THOMAS BEARD, [2 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 2 Feb 26. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Afternoon

My Dear Beard.

Le Maitre[†2] called on me this morning about the "Resolution"[†3] and after some consideration, I proposed the following course, to which he at once assented. The parties dissenting, are you, I, Le Maitre, Harfield, and Watts.[†4] Tomorrow afternoon when the preliminaries for the Session have been adjusted, let one of us (I have no objection to do it myself) say that the five wish to speak to Easthope[†1] — of course with the fellows who have signed, we have nothing to do. Let us then say that as there is some difference of opinion among us on the subject, we wish to understand distinctly, Yes or No, whether a refusal to sign, will be followed by dismissal at the termination of the present engagement. If the reply be in the affirmative, then we sign it under protest, and declaring our intention to accept the first annual Engagement elsewhere, we can get. If in the negative, then we refuse to sign, but express our readiness to conform to any arrangement (if such a one can be suggested) which while[†2] it does not interfere with the tenure of our engagements, will protect them against a recurrence of the annoyances of which they complain.

I have to go to the Adelphi tomorrow Night.[†3] They have sent the Office a Private Box in which I shall have room for you, if you like to accompany me & the Hogarths'.[†4] At all events as the meeting is at 5, dine with me at 3 precisely.

Believe me
Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [2 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Pasted at top of p. 1 of letter is a cutting from the Morning Chronicle, 2 Feb (see fn). Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My dear Macrone.

I inclose a modest paragraph[†5] which appeared this morning — it is not affectation; I really can*not* do the tremendous in puffing[†1] myself. Will you let me know in the course of tomorrow or next day, when you think you will have the first copies of the book; and I will come to your Office, and direct some to such Newspapers as I am interested in, and they can go at once. I suppose you will have some ready by Saturday Morning.

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?FEBRUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: Signature suggests Feb 36.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Evening

Dearest Mouse.

I have been at my (or rather your) desk all day; — in consequence of Frederick being at the Court I could not dine at half past four; since that time I have had a good deal to write for the paper; and now I have got to dress. — I shall be with you, half an hour after Fred. I have so many things to interrupt me, that I fear I must spend one night this week at work.

I thought best to write you a hasty line in explanation of my being so late; and I am

Dearest Titmouse
Ever yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?5 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: The "Article" CD was writing so laboriously must have been "The Tuggs's at Ramsgate", ready by 12 Feb (see letter from Chapman & Hall, that day, p. 648). Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My dearest Katie —

As Mrs. Slade will take herself off tomorrow morning, and as I shall consequently be in great confusion and messiness, I have written to mother to put off the sofa covering for a day or two. Sally will be here one day next week, and it can then be done comfortably — I shall, I hope, have finished my paper, by that time too, and it will be a better time on every account.

What a day it is again! I am sure I do not fancy without reason, when I think the weather makes me stupid. I have been poring over my desk the whole day, and have only perpetrated ten slips, or in other words one fifth, of the whole Article. I wish to Heaven it would clear up — I really shall not get on comfortably, 'till it does; I never worked with so little pleasure.

If I should hear at any reasonable time that the House is up to-night (which I half expect) I shall — as I must go as far as the Office — come out to Brompton. If it be not up, before I go on, of course I shall be prevented. Tomorrow I must[†1] write all day, or I really shall never get this thing done. If I can come out in the Evening I will, but at all events I shall meet you — on Sunday — at the usual hour if it be fine, and in York Place if it be not —

God bless you Wig. — If I should not get out to-night, write me a word or two, by way of good-night.

Believe me
My Dearest Katie
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

1 0 0 0

Edinburgh[†4] to whom I am anxious to forward them without delay, as I know they not only can but will[†5] do the work a great deal of good.

Ever Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To LORD STANLEY,[†6] 8 FEBRUARY 1836

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Monday February 8th. 1836.

My Lord —

When I was connected with "The Mirror of Parliament" in the capacity of a Reporter, I had the honor to wait on Your Lordship,[†7] for the purpose of taking a faithful Report of a portion of Your Lordship's Speech, on moving the Second Reading of the Irish Disturbances Bill,[†8] from your own mouth: Your Lordship having been pleased to express so high an opinion of the Report of that part of your Speech which had originally fallen into my hands, as to select me for the task.

I trust Your Lordship will forgive my recalling so unimportant a circumstance to your recollections when I advert to it, merely as an apology for the liberty I take, in entreating Your Lordship's acceptance of the accompanying Volumes — the first I ever published.

If there be anything singular or presumptuous in this request My Lord, there is so little singularity in my being an enthusiastic, though humble Admirer, of your distinguished character, that I feel almost confident in the strength of my excuse. The wish of Authors to place their works in the hands of those, the eminence of whose public stations, is only to be exceeded by the lustre of their individual talents, is, and always has been, so generally felt, even by the greatest Men who have ever adorned the Literature of this Country, that I hope it may be pardoned when it displays itself in so young, and so humble a candidate for public favor, as

My Lord
Your Lordship's most obedient,
Humble Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Honorable

Lord Stanley.

To JOHN MACRONE, [9 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD had received six personal copies the day before; no review copies had yet gone out.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

Have the copies arrived? We are losing time fearfully in getting the Notices. — I will write to Dilke[†1] to day, and tell him I am the Author of a Book he will receive from you.

Believe me
Ever Yours mo: Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

To C. W. DILKE, [9 FEBRUARY 1836]

Mention in last.

To JOHN MACRONE, [9 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: In answer to CD's last note, Macrone had promptly asked for the six copies back.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday afternoon

My Dear Sir

In three copies, I had unfortunately written, before your Messenger arrived, the names of Lord Stanley, Mr. Easthope, & Black. I can not therefore return more than 3, unless they can go to a Newspaper with the name erased.

I send you 5 — in two you will see names written, and if you like to take them out, you can. If not, you will perhaps return them to me by my brother, whom I will send to you about 6 to know whether you have anything to request. I would call myself but I shall be at the House. Pray don't forget the Chronicle. They expected to have been able to send it to Hogarth last night.

Ever Yours
CD

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [10 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: the Wednesday before Chapman & Hall's formal proposal of 12 Feb for the writing of Pickwick, following CD's verbal acceptance that day. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Evening

My dearest Katie —

The house is up; but I am very sorry to say that I must stay at home. I have had a Visit from the Publisher[†1] this morning, and the story[†2] cannot be any longer delayed — it must be done tomorrow. As there are more important considerations than the mere payment for the story, involved too, I must exercise a little self denial, and set to work.

They (Chapman & Hall)[†3] have made me an offer of £14 a month to write and edit a new publication they contemplate, entirely by myself; to be published monthly and each number to contain four wood cuts. I am to make my estimate and calculation, and to give them a decisive answer on Friday Morning. The work will be no joke, but the emolument is too tempting to resist.

I hope I shall be able to get out to Brompton to dinner on Friday. I have to see these people, and then Macrone with whom I shall be detained some time, but I trust I shall be able to manage it. Should I be disappointed (I don't think I shall be though) of course I shall be out, early on Saturday.

Believe me (in haste)
My dearest love
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [11 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Hogarth's review appeared in the Morning Chronicle of Thurs 11 Feb. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

I forward you a Chronicle with Hogarth's beautiful notice.[†1] I will keep my eye on the Evening papers to-night.[†2] There will be a notice in The Court Journal,[†3] and I hope in The other Morning Papers, whenever they can squeeze it in.

I have been busy with a Magazine Paper during the last three days; I shall finish it today I hope; and if you are likely to be at home at One O'Clock tomorrow, I will call on you then. I want to see you.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [14 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 15 Feb 36 (Monday). Address: John Macrone Esqre | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Sunday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

As I feared, the Sunday Papers did not receive the Copies in sufficient time to notice Boz this week[†1] — even the Spectator merely acknowledges the receipt of the Book, although there was the strongest disposition on the part of the Editor,[†2] to notice it, if possible. We shall look better next week. I know three daily papers where the review has been standing in Type for days past, without an opportunity offering, for its insertion — the pressure of other matter, has been so heavy. I hope you do not mean to delay the subscription[†3] beyond Tuesday: the sooner we push it now, I think, the better.

I hope I shall have the pleasure of seeing you tomorrow night. Should I be prevented, I will call on Wednesday.

Believe me
Ever Yours sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To J. B. HOLLAND,[†4] [FEBRUARY 1836]

Summary from Morning Advertiser, 13 June 70. Date: not many days before To James Grant, 16 or 17 Feb.

Saying, in the most modest terms, that as he had hitherto given all his contributions gratuitously [†5] he would be glad if Captain Holland thought his sketches worthy of any small remuneration; otherwise he would be obliged to discontinue them, because he was going very soon to get married, and therefore would be subjected to more expenses than he was while living alone.

To JAMES GRANT,[†1] [16 or 17 FEBRUARY 1836]

Summary from Morning Advertiser, 13 June 70. Date: presumably 16 or 17 Feb, just after arrangements for Pickwick had been made with Chapman & Hall.

In a reply by return of post to a letter from Grant praising his sketches, expressing the hope that he would continue them in the Monthly Magazine, and asking what his terms per sheet would be for furnishing similar sketches every month for a indefinite period, CD writes that he has just entered into an arrangement with Messrs. Chapman & Hall to write a monthly serial, and that as this serial will occupy much of his spare time from his duties as a reporter, he cannot undertake to furnish Grant with the proposed sketches for less than eight guineas per sheet.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 16 FEBRUARY 1836

Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 6.

Furnivals Inn, | Tuesday Morning | 16th Feby 1836.

Dear Sirs,

In reply to your Letter of Friday last,[†2] I beg to express my entire concurrence in the terms you propose, with one exception — I think the time you propose as the period during which the copy for every number should be in your hands, is too long. You will not object, I think, on consideration, to reduce it a little.

As I am removing to No. 15 in this Inn,[†3] I shall not be able to set to work until Thursday. I will call on you about 12 o'clock on that day, and bring you a Prospectus. Meanwhile, allow me to suggest that if you have the first number in the course of the first week in March, the second at the end of the third week in March, and so on, keeping you five weeks in advance, or thereabouts, your purpose will be fully answered.[†1] I have no doubt we can easily arrange this point, and I am quite sure you will not object to accommodate me, as much as you can, consistently with the interests of the yet unchristened Work.

Dr Sirs,
Very truly yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [18 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Berg Collection. Date: He presumably began Pickwick on Thurs 18 Feb, as promised in last, and was confident of finishing Ch. 1, a very short one, by the next day.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Evening

Dr. Sirs.

Pickwick is at length begun in all his might and glory. The first chapter, will be ready tomorrow.

I want to publish the Strange Gentleman.[†2] If you have no objection to doing it, I should be happy to let you have the[†3] refusal of it. I need not say that nobody else, has seen or heard of it.

Believe me (in Pickwickian haste)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To JOHN MACRONE, [19 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: the first Friday after CD's move to 15 Furnival's Inn (see To Chapman & Hall, 16 Feb). Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

15[†1] Furnivals Inn (I have moved) | Friday afternoon.

My Dear Macrone

Pray let me know by Bearer what the Subscription was. — I hear it was an excellent one. "Captain" Holland invited himself here tomorrow night, to take a glass of grog, and some oysters. Will you meet him? I shall be most happy to see you in my new quarters.

Believe me
Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [21 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: clearly the Sunday after 18 Feb; the Rochester coach journey begins in Ch. 2.

Furnivals Inn | Sunday Evening

My Dearest Life

You must not be "coss" with what I cannot help. I like the matter of what I have done to-day, very much, but the quantity is not sufficient to justify my coming out to-night. If the representations I have so often made to you, about my working as a duty, and not as a pleasure, be not sufficient to keep you in the good humour, which you, of all people in the World should preserve — why then, my dear, you must be out of temper, and there is no help for it.

I can fancy, if you began to read this note with a frown, that a smile has taken its place by this time: and so I shall speak rationally about what I have been doing, as I hope I shall always be able to do, to my own Wife. — I have at this moment, got Pickwick, and his friends, on the Rochester Coach, and they are going on swimmingly, in company with a very different character from any I have yet described, who I flatter myself will make a decided hit.[†2] I want to get them from the Ball, to their Inn,[†3] before I go to bed — and I think that will take me until one or two o'Clock, at the earliest. The Publishers will be here in the Morning, so you will readily suppose I have no alternative but to stick at my Desk.

Write me a long note by Fred, but if you can avoid crossing it, do: for my eyes are none of the best at night, and I feel some difficulty in reading it by candle-light[†4]. I hope and believe I shall be able to get out between my turns, tomorrow night — about half past 9. But should I be prevented, I hereby solemnly pledge myself to be out, God willing, on Tuesday. Tell me all the news about Braham —

Believe me

My dearest Love
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

I wish you were a fixture here — I should like to have you by me — so[†1] much.

To GEORGE THOMSON,[†2] 27 FEBRUARY 1836*

MS Berg Collection.

15 Furnivals Inn. London. | February 27th. 1836.

My Dear Sir

I feel a degree of pleasure I cannot describe, in begging your acceptance, of the accompanying Volumes; — not because it gratifies an Author's vanity, but because it affords me an opportunity of paying a very slight tribute of remembrance and respect, to such near Relatives of my dear Catherine as yourself, and Mrs. Thomson.[†3]

As I do not despair of seeing you both at Catherine's table, before any very long time has elapsed (indeed, we think you ought to indulge us, by making a journey to London on purpose) I will only add, that I most sincerely and earnestly hope it may afford you half the pleasure to receive my little productions, which I promise myself, from forwarding them to you — I trust for many, many, years to come.

Begging my best remembrances to Mrs. Thomson, and everybody I ought to know, but most unfortunately do not —

I am
My Dear Sir
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM THOMSON, 27 FEBRUARY 1836*

MS Berg Collection. Address: William Thomson Esqre.

15 Furnivals Inn | February 27th. 1836.

My Dear Sir.

I embrace a moment's opportunity before packing up my Parcel, to say that I hope you will call for your copy of "Boz", on your return to town; and also to beg you to execute a little commission for me, in Edinburgh.

Catherine is very anxious to have for her Establishment, a little — Toddy-water kettle,[†1] I suppose it should be called, like the one they have in York Place. Now such things can be got in London with great ease, but it appears that it must be brought from Scotland, or it is of no value. — Will you do me the favor to put one of these desirable kettles in your Portmanteau, and "charge the same to my account"?

Believe me
My dear Sir
Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [27 FEBRUARY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: see last two letters. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Evening

My Dear Macrone

Just as your messenger left the books, I had made up a parcel for Edinburgh to send to you as you were kind enough to promise to forward it. I did not, however, know he had been here, until it was too late to catch him.

If you will get it forwarded as soon as you can, I shall feel very much obliged to you —

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I shall be at home, writing, every morning next week. Call on me, like a good fellow, if you are passing this way.

To ROBERT SEYMOUR,[†1] [?FEBRUARY 1836]

Mention in undated letter [June 1889] from Seymour's son to Augustin Daly, given in Walter Dexter and J. W. T. Ley, The Origin of Pickwick, 1936, p. 96. Date: presumably while writing Pickwick, Ch. 2, in which the illustration "Dr. Slammer's Defiance of Jingle" appears.

Suggesting an alteration to the position of Dr Slammer's arm. [†2]

March

To JOHN MACRONE, [?MARCH 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: "Wind-up" strongly suggests after letters of 27 Feb. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Macrone.

A friend of my sister's Mrs. Levien,[†3] 13 Woburn Place Tavistock Square, wants a copy of "Boz". Will you allow your clerk to leave it? — She will no doubt give (she may have already given) the money to my sister: — I will procure, and forward it to you.

When you can spare me a couple of copies, by way of wind-up, will you let me have them?

Believe me
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Editor of "The Court Journal"[†1] told a friend of mine, as a mighty secret, that Boz was done by Leigh Hunt, and some one else,[†2] whose name my informant forgets. — Knowing fellow, is he not?

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?4 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: CD had undertaken to finish No. I of Pickwick "in the course of the first week in March"; his tone suggests fear of being a few days late, not confidence in being early. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esq.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Evening

My Dearest Love

I snatch a moment to say that Fred shall be out, for you and Mary tomorrow, about 4.[†3] Pickwick is not yet completed. The sheets are a weary length — I had no idea there was so much in them. It will certainly be finished by Sunday Morning, but I hope to do it to-night, if I get a short turn. I have lots of news to tell you — more irons in the fire: more grist to the Mill, but as I take some little pleasure out of telling you these matters, I will reserve them till I see you. I have bespoken Mother, to come and buy Linen &c, but Lætitia is so very ill (father says he is fearful she will never recover [from] her present state of debility) that I fear she may not be enabled to come.

God bless you dearest Pig. How long it is, since I saw you! Never mind — it will soon be over.[†4]

Macrone came here this morning, and said it would be a great convenience, if I would take £50 tomorrow, & the remainder on Thursday — I at once consented.

Keep the Secret —

Believe me
My ever dearest Katie
Faithfully & most affy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?8 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: CD was probably referring to the adjourned debate on the Irish Corporations Bill, resumed Tues 8 Mar: the House sat until 3.45 a.m. on the 9th. Address: Miss Hogarth | Edward Street.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday. 3 o'Clock.

My dear Catherine.

My time is 8 o'Clock, supposing only one house sits. As I must write 'till dinner, I need not say that I shall have no time to reach Edward Street,[†1] before I go on. There is expected to be a long Debate to-night, and I shall in all probability have a heavy turn. Should I be agreeably disappointed, I will see you, of course.

I presume from what I can read of your note, that you are going to stay in Edward Street, all day tomorrow too, and that you will return with your Mama and Mary at night — I hope you will enjoy yourself.

I am very glad to hear that your Mama is pleased with the Report of the kitchen. I hope she is not overcome at my cruelty in being vexed with the Tom-foolery of the Sunday-School Paragon.[†2]

Believe me
Ever Yours most Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Love to Hannah,[†3] and all at Home.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [10 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: presumably the Thursday on which Macrone paid "the remainder", as promised on 4 Mar (see To Catherine, that day). Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Afternoon

My Dearest Love.

As I have been walking about, all day, and have to be in the House at a quarter to six, I have only time to say, that I fear I shall not be able to get out to Brompton to-night. From what I see of the business for the Evening, I fear I shall have a heavy turn.[†4]

As your Mama has not seen the sideboard, and as there are a great number of new purchases which even you have not seen (!) I think the best way will be, for you, and she, and Mary, to spend the day here, on Saturday. I will ask Mother to come to tea: the purchases can be completed, and you can all get home by the last Buss. Let me know what you think.

I have bought today, a pair of quart Decanters, and a pair of pints, a chrystal[†1] Jug, & three brown dittos with plated tops, for beer and hot water, a pair of Lustres, and two magnificent china Jars — all, I flatter myself, slight bargains. Macrone has tipped up the balance manfully.

God bless you Wig. Believe me

Ever Yours most faithfully & affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?11 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: Tone suggests CD was working on Pickwick No. II (due at the end of the third week in March), not I, but not yet worried about it. Address: Miss Hogarth.

15 Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My ever dearest Mouse —

You ask me to write you a note to-night, be it ever so short a one. It must be brief, not from inclination but necessity, for I have been mistaken in the time, and am rather late. If I get Braham's Ticket tomorrow,[†2] as "Pickwick" must be attended to, I think the best way will be, for you to dine here, if you have no objection — Fred shall be with you, about 3. Should we be disappointed in getting it (which is however by no means probable) he shall be with you at the same hour, to say I am going to follow him directly.

Write me a note to-night, to tell me you approve of this arrangement and Believe me

My dearest Wig

Ever Yours most Affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

An unlimited number of kisses, dear.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?18 MARCH 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the Friday between the Morning Post review on 12 Mar and Macrone's use of four new extracts in advertising Sketches on 22 Mar. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Afternoon

My Dear Macrone

I inclose such notices as I have by me. The Morning Post,[†1] is as good as Hogarth's. Be good enough to preserve them for me, when you have made your Extracts. — Mrs. D[†2] takes some pride out of them.

Believe me

Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?19 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: probably the week after his unworried reference to Pickwick on 11 Mar. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My dearest Katie.

I am quite well this morning, and rejoiced to hear you have had so good a night. I have been sorely tempted to make holiday, and come out to you this morning, but a recollection of the advanced state of the month compels me with a very bad grace to stay at home until the Evening, when, please God, I shall be with you about seven.

God bless you my own dear love — take care of yourself for my sake, not for your own: I am very selfish.

Believe me
My dearest Love
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?20 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: References to work on Pickwick and to Catherine's health in this letter, the last and next, strongly suggest they were written on consecutive days. Address: Miss Hogarth | Favored by Fredk. Dickens Esq.

Furnivals Inn | Sunday Evening.

My dearest Katie —

A note, and not me. I am very — very — sorry. I am tired and worn out to-day, mind and body; and have that to do, which will certainly occupy me 'till 1 or 2 o'Clock. I did not get to bed till 3 o'Clock this morning; and consequently could not begin to write, until nearly one.

If you are unjust enough to be cross, I will not deprecate your anger, or ill humour. I have at least equal reason to be so; forced as I am to deny myself the least recreation, and to sit chained to my table, when a regard for my own health, or my own wishes, would move me away. — I don't think you are cross though — I am sure you are not — Write me a note, and let me know what you propose doing tomorrow. Shall I come to you, or will you come to me?

I have been thinking the matter over; and it strikes me, the best plan will be, when we are married, for us to go straight to Rochester. Mother can write to the "old Lady's"[†1] Servant:[†2] and she, I have no doubt, will procure us comfortable Lodgings there.[†3] More about this, tomorrow.

God bless you my dearest Pig

Believe me
Ever Yours most truly & Affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

How are you to-day? Better? Let me have a particular account; and don't be patched up, by that humbug, Gaskell.[†4]

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [21 MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: almost certainly two days after Sat 19 Mar, a fortnight before their wedding. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Afternoon.

My dearest Wig.

I have not made any astounding progress this morning, and must therefore — even supposing I get a light turn, which I am by no means certain of — stop at home, and write to-night. I hope to see you tomorrow without fear of disappointment.

Let me have particular word how your rheumatism is, old lady, together with "all the news" about everything.

Believe me
My Dearest Katie
Ever Most Affecy Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Here's another day off the fortnight. Hurrah!

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: Signature suggests March 1836. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Chronicle Office | Tuesday Evening

My Dearest Kate

I shall not I am sorry to say be able to get out to-night. I have not a great deal to write at present but as I have to be back at the house by half past eleven, it is impossible to escape between whiles. I will either come over or write the first thing in the Morning.

Believe me
My Dearest Girl
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

"Need I say?"[†1] how disappointed I am?

To JOHN MACRONE, [?25 MARCH 1836]

MS Huntington Library. Date: perhaps the week before the wedding. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | 3 St. James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

The unanimous voice of the ladies, confirms the authority of Mrs. Macrone. They say, with her, that I must be attended to the place of execution, by a single man: I have therefore engaged a substitute,[†2] and inclose you an Invite to the subsequent ceremonials, which of course you accept. Hogarth will be in town with me — most probably on Wednesday, when I will bring him to call on you, but I, in all human probability shall be passing your way, before.

Believe me
Most faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

You had a note, to alter the announcement of Pickwick, I hear.[†3]

To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [MARCH 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: Signature suggests March 1836. Address: Miss Hogarth | 18 York Place.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

Dear Pig.

James[†1] having told me a moment ago, that he was coming out to you, directly, I could not resist the temptation of writing one line, just to say that I shall expect you tomorrow, and that I am hard at work to-night; and moreover that I am now and ever

Dearest Wig
Most faithfully and affy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To MRS WILLIAM AUSTIN, [?MARCH 1836]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: Signature suggests Spring 1836; probably shortly before his and Catherine's marriage.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Mrs. Austin.

Inclosed is £5..10..0 — the amount I am indebted to you, which I forward with many thanks for your very kind patience.

I should do an injustice to myself, if I refrained from saying, that I have had many heavy and pressing demands upon me, during the past year; and that although I have been indefatigable in industry and perseverance, the numerous Irons I have been putting in the fire, for the last twelve months, are only just beginning to get warm — hence my apparent neglect.

Accept my warmest thanks for your kindness and attention in inviting Miss Hogarth to your party on Tuesday — a mark of recollection which affords me very great gratification — and Believe me

My dear Mrs. Austin
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Austin.

To JOHN EASTHOPE, [?MARCH 1836]

Mention in To Easthope, ?Apr 36. Date: "before the Easter recess".

To MRS C. W. CHARLTON,[†2] LATE MARCH 1836

Mention in next.

To T. C. BARROW,[†1] 31 MARCH 1836

MS Dickens House.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Thursday March 31st. 1836

My Dear Uncle.

The great success of my book,[†2] and the name it has established for me among the Publishers, enables me to settle at an earlier period than I at first supposed possible; I have therefore fixed Saturday next, for my marriage with Miss Hogarth[†3] — the daughter of a gentleman who has recently distinguished himself by a celebrated work on Music,[†4] who was the most intimate friend and companion of Sir Walter Scott, and one of the most eminent among the Literati of Edinburgh.

There is no Member of my family to whom I should be prouder to introduce my wife, than yourself, but I am compelled to say — and I am sure that you cannot blame me for doing so — that the same cause which has led me for a long time past, to deny myself the pleasure and advantage of your society, prevents my doing so. If I could not as a single man, I cannot as a married one, visit at a relation's house from which my father is excluded:[†5] nor can I see any relatives here, who would not treat him, as they would myself.

This is a very painful subject, and I have many associations connected with you, which render it much more painful in this case, than in any other. I cannot forget that I was once your little companion and nurse, through a weary illness,[†6] nor shall I ever cease to remember the many proofs you have given me, in later days, of your interest, and affection.

When I say, Uncle, that I should be more happy than I can possibly express, if you would place it in my power, to know you once again on those terms of intimacy and friendship, I so sincerely desire, I hope you will not misunderstand my meaning. I do not ask you — I should conceive that I lowered and disgraced myself, if I did — to alter your determination. I may think that time might have softened the determined ani[mosity [†1] y]ears; I may [ ][†1] do an injus[tice ( ][†1] I have no doubt) to my father's real character. I cannot, however, be an impartial judge, because I cannot be an unprejudiced one; and I do not presume therefore to arraign your decision.

Nothing that has occurred to me in my life, has given me greater pain, than thus denying myself the society of yourself and Aunt. I have only to add that the contents of this letter are unknown to everybody but Aunt Charlton, to whom I have written on the same subject: and that come what may, I shall ever be, at heart,

Dear Uncle
Your most affectionate Nephew
[CHARLES DICKENS][†1]
Thomas Barrow Esqre.

April

To ROBERT SEYMOUR, [14 APRIL 1836]

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Date: PM 15 Apr 36 (Friday). Address: Mr Seymour. | 11 Park Place West | Barnsbury Park | Islington.

15 Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir —

I had intended to write you, to say how much gratified I feel by the pains you have bestowed on our mutual friend Mr. Pickwick, and how much the result of your labours, has surpassed my expectations. I am happy to be able to congratulate you, the publishers, and myself, on the success of the undertaking, which appears to have been most complete.

I have now, another reason for troubling you. It is this. I am extremely anxious about "The Stroller's Tale"[†2] — the more especially as many literary friends, on whose judgment I place great reliance, think it will create considerable sensation. I have seen your design for an Etching to accompany it. I think it extremely good, but still, it is not quite my idea; and as I feel so very solicitous to have it as complete as possible, I shall feel personally obliged, if you will make another drawing. It will give me great pleasure to see you, as well as the drawing, when it is completed. With this view, I have asked Chapman and Hall, to take a glass of grog with me on Sunday Evening (the only night I am disengaged), when I hope you will be able to look in.[†1]

The alteration I want, I will endeavour to explain. I think the woman should be younger — the "dismal man" decidedly should, and he should be less miserable in appearance. To communicate an interest to the plate, his whole appearance should express more sympathy and solicitude: and while I represented the sick man as emaciated and dying, I would not make him too repulsive.[†2] The furniture of the room, you have depicted, admirably.

I have ventured to make these suggestions, feeling assured that you will consider them in the spirit in which I submit them to your judgment. I shall be happy to hear from you, that I may expect to see you on Sunday Evening — [†3]

Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [?MID-APRIL 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Not July as previously thought, since William Thomson was posted to the West Indies in May 1836. CD was probably writing soon after his return from Chalk, and referring to the publication of the first No. of Pickwick. Handwriting supports. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | &c &c.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Macrone —

I hear from Mr. Thomson (who has just returned to town, prior to his departure for the West Indies) that my parcel[†1] has not yet reached his father's house, and that he himself enquired for it, at Bell and Bradfute's,[†2] in vain. I am greatly concerned at this, as there were letters of importance in it, which I had undertaken to forward, and the non delivery of which, may be productive of serious inconvenience, and misunderstanding. Pray have the goodness to communicate with — whomsoever you confided the packet to, and let me know the result. I am sorry to trouble you, but it is such an awkward situation for me, that I have no alternative.

Believe me
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I wish you would let me have two Boz's — one for the commissary,[†3] and one for myself. I want the "Hints on Etiquette"[†4] too. PICKWICK, TRIUMPHANT.[†5]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 27 APRIL 1836

Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 7.

Furnivals Inn. | April 27th 1836.

Dear Sirs,

I have deliberated on the proposal you made me last night. Should you object to give me Twenty Guineas for the two sheets,[†6] until the appearance — say of the fourth, or fifth number; and increase the scale of payment at that time, in the event of the sale of the Work increasing as we expect? Making it twenty at once, would only be an addition of Two Pounds per number: If the Work[†1] should be very successful, after the period I have mentioned, I apprehend you would have no objection to go a little further.[†2]

Believe me
Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I enclose 47 slips of copy,[†3] and a short address about the Plates.[†4] I should like to see a proof of the latter.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?APRIL 1836]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting points to Spring 1836, and the formal reference to Catherine suggests early in their marriage. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | 3 Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening.

My Dear Macrone —

As Mrs. Dickens has been very unwell all day, I have waited until now, to see whether it was probable that she would be able to go out tomorrow. I am sorry to say she will not: and she therefore desires her compliments to Mrs. Macrone, and begs me to say that she has no alternative but to defer a visit, to which she had looked forward with the utmost pleasure.

I suppose you will give me a call one of these Mornings, when you pass this way.

Believe me
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN EASTHOPE, [?APRIL 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably a few weeks after Parliament's Easter recess (30 Mar-11 Apr).

15 Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dr. Sir —

I cannot forbear writing to you, to express my hope that there was nothing in the note I wrote to you, before the Easter Recess, on the subject of my Sketches[†1], which displeased you.[†2] I have waited some time for an opportunity to speak to you on the matter, but as I have not found one, I resort to this expedient.

I am perfectly aware that the heavy press of other matter at this season of the year, would have rendered the insertion of the new series I commenced, a task of great difficulty: but I merely wish to remind you, that I left the arrangement entirely to you; and that I am quite willing, either now, or when the Vacation commences, to concur in any views you may entertain respecting them.

I have felt it due to myself to say, that you have greatly mistaken the spirit and meaning of my Letter, if (as I almost fear you must have done) you have supposed me to entertain the slightest intention of putting you to any inconvenience, or of departing, myself, from the promise that was made to the readers of the Paper.[†3]

Begging to assure you, once more, that I shall be most happy to meet your wishes in any way —

I am
Dear Sir
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Easthope Esqre.

May

To J. P. HULLAH, [6 MAY 1836]

MS Mr N. C. Peyrouton. Date: PM 6 May 36. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street. | Cavendish Square.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

Dear Hullah

I inclose Cramer's[†1] answer — quite satisfactory. Do you think Coventry and Hollier,[†2] or Goulding and D'Almaine,[†3] would be likely to do it? If so, perhaps it would be better for you, as a musical person, to see them, using my name of course, in any way you please. Think of this.

Believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [9] MAY 1836

MS Huntington Library. Date: wrongly dated by CD; Monday was the 9th.

15 Furnivals Inn | Monday May 8th. 1836

My Dear Macrone.

I shall have great pleasure in accepting from you, the sum of Two Hundred Pounds for the first Edition of a Work of Fiction (in Three Volumes of the usual size) to be written by me, and to be entitled Gabriel Vardon, the Locksmith of London:[†4] of which, not more than one Thousand Copies are to be printed.

I also agree to your printing an extra number of copies, if it should appear desirable; on condition that the profits thereon, all expenses being first deducted, be divided between us.

I also understand that the before-mentioned Two Hundred Pounds, are to be paid by you, on delivery of the entire Manuscript — on or before the 30th. day of November next, or as soon afterwards, as I can possibly complete it — by your acceptances, at such dates as may be agreeable to both of us —

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?MAY 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Signature suggests May 1836; CD's "fame" was probably the result of the better reviews of Pickwick No. II.

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Afternoon. 7 oClock

My Dear Hullah —

Mr. Hogarth has just been here, with news which I think you will be glad to hear. He was with Braham yesterday, who was far more full of the opera, than he ever was; speaking highly of my Works and "fame" (!) and expressing an earnest desire to be the first to introduce me to the Public, as a dramatic Writer. He said that he intended opening at Michaelmas; and added (unasked) that it was his intention to produce the opera, within one Month of his first night.[†1] He wants a low comedy part, introduced, without singing: thinking it will take with the Audience. As he is desirous of explaining to me, what he means, and who he intends to play it, I am to see him on Sunday Morning. Full particulars of the Interview, shall be duly announced.[†2]

Perhaps I shall see you meanwhile. I have only time to add that I am

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [27 MAY 1836]

MS British Museum. Date: PM Ipswich 27 May 36. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 15 Furnivals Inn | London.

Suffolk Hotel. Ipswich[†3] | Friday Morning.

My dear Kate.

I shall be home please God, to dinner tomorrow at half past five, as I have booked my place by the Coach which leaves here at 9 in the morning. We arrived here about 5; the night was cold, but beautifully fine, and the ride upon the whole was a very pleasant one, the more especially as the mode of conveyance enabled us to partake of a good supper on the road. It is now half past one, and huge mobs are assembled to greet OConnell who is every moment expected. From the appearance of the crowd, and the height of party feeling here, I rather expect a Row.[†1] Keep the paper tomorrow, as our account will arrive by a Horse Express, unless it breaks down, which God forbid!

Tell Fred if the Pickwicks and Libraries of Fiction[†2] do not come tomorrow, to fetch them in the course of the morning from Chapman and Hall's.

Give my best love to Mary and

Believe me
My dearest Wife
Ever Yours most affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Beard who is sitting opposite to me, very sleepy, presents his "respectful compliments" —

June

To J. P. HULLAH, [?MAY or JUNE 1836]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: Signature suggests early Summer 1836. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Hullah.

I inclose you the Finale,[†3] which I shall very much like to hear, when you have completed it. I have not yet received an answer from Braham.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?17 JUNE 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: probably the Friday before 23 June when CD again mentioned the visit to Bedlam and had still not heard from Cruikshank. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Morning.

My Dear Macrone.

I have written to Cruikshank. As yet no answer. I think of going over Bedlam[†1] for the New Series, specially (fine subject) one day next week. I will give you due notice if you would like to go.

Believe me
Ever faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The paragraph shall certainly appear. We will concoct one together.[†2]

To JOHN MACRONE, [23 JUNE 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Norton v. Melbourne, which CD reported for the Morning Chronicle, was heard on 22 June 36.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Evening

My Dear Macrone —

I have not yet fixed the day for our Visit to Bedlam. Whenever I do, I will first ascertain that the time I propose, is convenient to you —

A Draft for the First of July, will suit me perfectly — could not be better. I have not yet heard from George Cruikshank. I think he must be out of town —

I am tired to death to-night, though I have been in bed all day. Melbourne v Norton[†3] has played the devil with me.

Ever faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [30 JUNE 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Sunday Under Three Heads was advertised on 29 June and Pickwick No. IV published the same day. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My dear Macrone.

I inclose you a Sabbath[†1] and a Pickwick. Let me beg your particular regard for the specimen of London Life "Sam Weller" in the latter, also "The Madman's MS."[†2]

My 'good lady' incloses a note to your'n. — I hope it's an apology for apparent, but most unavoidable neglect. I'm sure it ought to be —

Believe me
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

July

To J. P. HULLAH, [?19 JULY 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The reading of The Village Coquettes took place on Sat 23 July (see To Hullah, 26 July): this was presumably the Tuesday before.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday afternoon.

Dear Hullah.

I opened the Opera this afternoon, and shall not close it again, Please God, until it is finished. I inclose the new words for Lucy's Song,[†3] and the "Fair Home"[†4] as it will stand. I have made no further alteration in the latter than was absolutely necessary.

I have some alterations to make in the Poetry. These you shall have, either tomorrow Evening, or Thursday Morning. The sooner, the better, of course, as your words must tally with mine. This remark applies especially to "Love is not a feeling"[†5] — the Duett — "Some folks who have grown old and sour";[†6] — and as I best recollect, that's all.

We will settle tomorrow night whether the Reading shall come off next Saturday. I only want to be quite certain before we fix it, that we[†1] shall be ready ——

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqr.

After the 1st. Verse of "How beautiful at Eventide" —

The gay morning breaks,
The Mists roll away,
All Nature awakes
To the glorious day.
In my breast alone
Dark shadows remain,
The peace it has known,
It can never regain.[†2]

My fair home is no longer mine
From its roof-tree I'm driven away,
Alas! Who will tend the old Vine
Which I planted in infancy's day!
The garden, the beautiful flowers,
The Oak with its branches on high,
Dear friends of my happiest hours
Among thee, I once hoped to die.
The briar, the moss, and the bramble,
Upon the green paths will run wild;
The paths where I once used to ramble
An innocent, light-hearted child![†3]

To JOHN MACRONE, [?20 JULY 1836]

MS Huntington Library. Date: presumably the Wednesday before the reading. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | 3 Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

I intend reading my Opera and trying the Music next Saturday Evening at 7 OClock precisely. Mrs. Dickens desires me to say that if you will, with Mrs. Macrone, join the few friends who wish to hear it, she will be most happy to see you —

My Missis furthermore desires me to say that as I shall be busy all day next Saturday, she begs you will consider yourself engaged to dinner at 5 on that day week. I says the same, and I shall say no more till I see you — except that I called yesterday and found you out, much to my regret.

Believe me
Dear Macrone
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HULLAH, [26 JULY 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The Saturday fixed for the return of the opera must have been 30 July — "two clear months" before 1 Oct. CD was clearly writing the Tuesday before. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

15 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

Dr. Hullah.

If convenient to you, I think we had better fix Saturday, for the return of the Opera. I have some difficulty in getting it copied,[†1] and as there will be two clear months from that day, before the 1st. of October, there can be no doubt that it will be most excellent time. James bears the following letter to Braham, which if you approve, he will take on at once. I have blown the trumpet.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

Dr. Sir

Lest you should think I have neglected the Village Coquettes, I beg to say that I have made the whole of the alterations, and hoped to have been able to return the piece before. So far as Mr. Hullah and I are concerned, it is quite ready; we are merely waiting for the copying to be finished. This will be on Saturday next, and I shall have the pleasure of forwarding you the Drama in a very improved shape, together with the Piano Forte copy of the whole of the Music, on that day.

You will perhaps not be displeased to hear that we read the piece & tried the Music, on Saturday Evening, before a few confidential friends, literary and musical, some of whom will be called upon to express their opinion of it on its first appearance. These are not people who usually express any very strong opinion of a composition submitted to their private judgment, but they were enthusiastic in praise of the whole affair, from beginning to end. Macrone the Bookseller, purchased the copyright of the first Edition of the Piece at the termination of the first act.[†2]

Dr. Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CD.

John Braham Esqre.

Robert Hogarth will be with you this evening. You had better spare him to me afterwards. He has exerted himself, very much in getting the opera ready for the reading, and I think it (entre nous) but fair that he should have the advantage of what I pay for the copying. He will therefore begin it tomorrow evening, and finish it by Saturday. Let me know what time I shall see you on that day with the Music, to make up the parcel.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?27 JULY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: probably the day before next.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Morning.

My dear Macrone

If you still think that Fred would be of any use to you, I have made up my mind that I should very much like him to be initiated into business habits, in your Counting House. I know you will find him very quick and steady; and if you really want any sharp young fellow, you cannot have one better suited to your purpose. I have deliberated a long time about the propriety of keeping him at his present study, but I am convinced that at his present period of life, it is really only so much waste time. If you write me word that you will give him a stool, he shall sit himself upon it forthwith.

I have sent two Sketches to Cruikshank,[†1] and shall report further progress next week. I am happy to say that I see a decent prospect of the House being up, at last,[†2] and I devoutly hope 'ere next Session I may make some arrangements which will render its sittings a matter of indifference to me — as the story books say "for ever after".[†3]

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [28 JULY 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed in contemporary hand "Mr. Dickens | July 28th. 1836". Address: John Macrone Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My dear Macrone.

As I like to see Fred, before I go out in the evening, to set his studies for the night, and see what he is at, I should prefer his taking his tea at home, if agreeable to you. He will gain a quarter of an hour perhaps, this way, without inconveniencing you —

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esq.

To JOHN BRAHAM, [30 JULY 1836]*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the Saturday on which Braham was to receive the text of the opera (see To Hullah, 26 July 36). Address: John Braham Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Morning

Dear Sir.

I beg to inclose you the Drama of the Village Coquettes, complete. It has been entirely rewritten, and I have put the names of the performers in pencil,[†1] against those of the Dramatis personae, to assist you in the perusal.

The man who is copying the Music, finds it rather a longer job than he at first supposed. He promises to complete it, by Wednesday Evening. The moment I receive it from Hullah, I will forward it to you —

Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Braham Esqre.

To GEORGE THOMSON, 30 JULY 1836*

MS Berg Collection. Address: George Thomson Esqre. | 73 Queen Street | Edinburgh.

15 Furnivals Inn. London. | Saturday July 30th. 1836.

My dear Sir.

I have postponed twenty times at least, writing to say, how much I was gratified by your kind letter, and your invitation to us to visit Scotland. I need not, I am sure, tell you how greatly delighted I should have been, to have accepted it, or how much pleasure I should have derived from accompanying Catherine to her native place, and spending some time, however short, in the society of her dearest relations. Week after week, I have delayed writing, in the hope that I might see some opening which would enable us to visit you in Edinburgh, were it only for a week. I am sorry to say that I have been disappointed at last, and that the pressure of my different occupations renders it impossible for me to exceed the distance of twelve miles from Saint Paul's Cathedral. I am at present engaged in revising the proof sheets of the second Edition of the Sketches which will shortly appear;[†1] I am preparing another series which must be published before Christmas,[†2] I have just finished an opera which will be produced at Braham's Theatre in October, I have to get Mr. Pickwick's lucubrations ready, every month; and have, in addition, to perform the duties (neither slight nor few) which my engagement with The Morning Chronicle imposes upon me.

Situated as I have described, and anxious to see you, as I am, I have been casting about for a compromise: the one that occurs to me, is perfectly obvious, and quite practicable — you must come to London. If the only object you and Mrs. Thomson could gain, by doing so, were the gratification of beholding your grand-daughter's husband, I should not have the impudence to propose such a step: but when I remember how many hearts you would gladden by your presence, and recollect moreover that a son whom you have not seen for some years,[†3] is daily expected here, I confess that I not only suggest it without hesitation, but with very considerable confidence that you will gratify the whole of us. The passage is made in a very short time, at a very cheap rate, and without the least difficulty. Perhaps you will tell me that you are too old to make so long a journey, at this season of the year. I cannot admit this, as any excuse whatever, because from all I hear from those who must know best, I am satisfied that you are, to all intents and purposes, as young as I am.

Only conceive what a happy meeting it would be, if we could but all assemble together under the same roof; imagine what delightful evenings we might spend at this season of the year — what a family party we should be, on the first night of this never-sufficiently-to-be-talked-of Opera — what merry-meetings we should have — and what grand walks we might take (we shall be at Richmond for some time, and I know you like it), and if you do not persuade Mrs. Thomson to come, or supposing you to be perverse, if Mrs. Thomson does not persuade you to come, I shall be quite as much surprised, as disappointed — and that is saying a great deal.[†4]

Catherine is extremely well, and has got up a most admirable stock of good looks. She has not yet quite recovered the high and mighty satisfaction she derived from a supper of her own invention and arrangement which we gave to our first little party a week ago,[†5] but with this exception she is quite herself, and desires a thousand loves to a thousand relations and friends, whose names I have no room to write, and couldn't spell if I had. Perhaps you will fill up the blank, and place "Grandmama" and "Grandpapa", at the top. I have only to beg in conclusion, my dear Sir, that you and Mrs. Thomson will accept the sincere assurance of my affectionate regard and esteem: and that you will seriously consider my proposal for your coming to London, taking into consideration how many of those who are very dear to you, you would gratify by doing so, and last and least how much pleasure it would give to

Yours most affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

George Thomson Esqre.

August

To JOHN MACRONE, [3 AUGUST 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD's first sketch for the Carlton Chronicle appeared on 6 Aug 36. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My dear Macrone.

The Carlton Chronicle[†1] has got a new Editor,[†2] who has applied to me to write a series of short sketches for it, which I have consented to do, once a fortnight, as they will be very short, and the terms long; the Carlton club being as liberal as need be. I make my first appearance next Saturday. The circulation I believe is a small one. So much the better — Fewer people will see the Sketches before they are collected. It is all among the nobs too — Better still. They'll buy the book.

What I want to consult you about is the title. As I have the Copyright of the Sketches, don't you think the following would be a good one, for our purpose? —

LEAVES

FROM AN UNPUBLISHED VOLUME

BY BOZ

(which will be torn out, once a fortnight)[†3]

Let me know.

Hansard's people don't exhaust themselves with work. I have only had 5 sheets[†4] altogether.[†5]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?6 AUGUST 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Mr Pickwick's politics were discussed in Fraser's Magazine, 1 Aug 36. CD should have been paid for the Aug Pickwick on the day of publication, 1 Aug (see To Chapman & Hall, 16 Feb 36, fn).

Furnivals Inn | Saturday

D[r] Sirs——

When you have quite done counting the sovereigns, received for Pickwick, I should be much obliged to you, to send me up a few. I have lamed myself, and am a Prisoner, or I should have looked in myself. I hope Mr. Chapman is better.

I see honorable mention of myself, and Mr. Pickwick's politics, in Fraser this month.[†1] They consider Mr. P a decided Whig.

Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

I suppose you know that a second Edition of "Boz", is advertised.[†2]

To THOMAS TEGG,[†3] [?9 AUGUST 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably two days before CD accepted the proposal acknowledged here (see To Tegg, 11 Aug). Address: Private. | Thomas Tegg Esqre. | Cheapside.

15 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Tegg, and will furnish him with an immediate answer to his proposal, if he will previously favor him with a few lines of information upon the following points.

1st. Of about how much matter, the Book is to be composed.

2nd. When it is to be produced.

3rd. What amount of remuneration, Mr. Tegg proposes for the Author.

And Lastly whether Mr. Tegg wishes it to appear as the work of "Boz".

The idea described by Mr. Tegg, Mr. Dickens perfectly understands.

To THOMAS TEGG, [10 AUGUST 1836]

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: plainly between letters to Tegg of 9 and 11 Aug.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

Dear Sir.

I have made the nearest calculation in my power of the length of the little work you speak of; and guiding my own demand by the nature of the arrangements I am in the habit of making with other Booksellers, I could not agree to do it for less than a hundred and twenty pounds.

I am not aware what the profit is, upon this description of Book, or whether it would, or would not, justify you in such an outlay. If it would, I should be prepared to produce the whole, by Christmas — the sale at that time of year, I apprehend would be important.

For many reasons I should agree with you, in not wishing the name of "Boz" to be appended to the Work.

I shall be happy to receive your answer before I leave town,[†1] which will most probably be on Wednesday next.

I am
Dear Sir
Your very obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]
Thomas Tegg Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?10 AUGUST 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: CD's impatience suggests a week after Wed 3 Aug when the music should have been ready (see To Braham, 30 July). Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Evening

My dear Hullah.

When, oh when, will this Music be ready. I really begin to grow alarmed lest Braham think we are playing him some nonsense; and there is every reason to fear that he will have left town, long before it reaches his hands. A day's loss now, may be a month's after the Season has commenced. It is very disheartening.

I want to see you, about Cramer's & Co. to relate what passed between them and Hogarth, who has acted Godfather for us, and promised and vowed in our names, that no one else shall have the Opera without their being first communicated with. They say they should be very sorry to let it slip through their hands.

Ever Yours (in the utmost haste)
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS TEGG, 11 AUGUST 1836

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Thursday August 11th. 1836

Dear Sir.

I accept with pleasure, your offer of One Hundred Pounds[†1] for the child's book, to be called Solomon Bell the Raree Showman[†2] (unless we should hit upon some other title, which we should consider a more catching one) to be completed by me, by Christmas next; and to consist of about the same number of pages, and the same quantity of matter, as "Peter Parley's tales"——[†3]

I am
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Tegg Esqre.

To H. K. BROWNE,[†4] [MID-AUGUST 1836]

Facsimile in Joseph Grego, Pictorial Pickwickiana, 1899, I, 187. Date: clearly not later than mid-Aug since written beneath Browne's original drawing for "Mrs Leo Hunter's Fancy Dress Déjeûné", Pickwick No. VI, Sep 36.

I think it would be better if Pickwick had hold of the Bandit's arm. If Minerva tried to look a little younger (more like Mrs Pott, who is perfect) I think it would be an additional improvement.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?17 AUGUST 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Braham had received the revised libretto on 30 July, and the music presumably soon after Wed 3 Aug. CD was apparently writing on the Wednesday before he left for Petersham. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

Wedy. Morng

Dr. Hullah

I have a note from Braham approving of the alterations, and wishing to know "on the part of the writer, and composer of the Music, their views with regard to pecuniary compensation". To this note I have written the draft of an answer, and thereupon I wish to consult you. I shall be at home to-day till Evening, and all day tomorrow until 5 oClock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY,[†1] [17 AUGUST 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 18 Aug 36 (Thursday). Address: Richard Bentley Esqre | New Burlington Street.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Evening.

My dear Sir.

I have spoken to some confidential friends, on the subject of our yesterday's Interview. They concur in thinking, and strongly advise me, that for the copyright of a Novel in Three Volumes†1, I should have Five Hundred Pounds.

I have thought the matter over deliberately: and when I take into consideration, the time, the labour, the casting about, in every direction, for materials: the anxiety I should feel to make it a work on which I might build my fame, and the great probability of it's having a very large sale (we are justified in forming our judgment upon the rapid sale of everything I have yet touched) I think you will not object to raising your terms thus far. I should be very sorry to appear anxious to drive a hard bargain, as nothing is more opposed to my habits and feelings; I confidently believe that on reflection, you will consider I am quite justified in making this request.

If you will think the matter over, between the present time and Monday, I feel quite assured that when I look at the draft of our agreement, on that morning, I shall find that you have adopted my Amendment, and substituted the word "five" for "four".†2 Recollect that you are dealing with an Author not quite unknown, but who, so far as he has gone, has been most successful —

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [?AUGUST 1836]

Text from Percy Fitzgerald, Pickwickian Manners and Customs, [1897], pp. 87-8. Date: possibly soon after the similarly facetious letter of ?6 Aug.

Furnival's Inn | Friday Morning

Dear Sir,

I am very glad to find I shall have the pleasure of celebrating Mr. Pickwick's success with you on Sunday. When you have sufficiently recovered from the fatigues of publication, will you just let me know from your books how we stand. Drawing £10 one day, and £20 another, and so forth, I have become rather mystified, and jumbled up our accounts in my brain, in a very incomprehensible state.†3 Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS FRASER, [?18 AUGUST 1836]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: probably the Thursday before Parliament rose (20 Aug), when CD would be free to leave for his holiday. Address: Thomas Fraser Esqre. | Morning Chronicle Office.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My dear Fraser.

I am much obliged to you for your good-natured kindness in recollecting a matter which I thought it very likely you had long since forgotten. My address will be, at

Mrs. Denman's[†1]
Petersham
Near Richmond.

I shall not be away more than five or six weeks. It will be so flat a time, that you will hardly have occasion to write more than once or twice, I think.[†2]

Remember however that in any case of pressing emergency, I shall be happy to pay a special messenger. I have a horse of my own, so I can be in town in no time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I should think in the Vacation you might give an occasional Extract from Pickwick.[†3] — The other papers have done so, even in the Session.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?22 AUGUST 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: They had probably left for Petersham on Sat 20th, but CD must have returned to town for the day on Monday. For Hullah's response to the suggestion about Miss Rainforth, see To Braham, 25 Aug.

Petersham | Monday Evening

Dear Hullah.

Since I called on you this morning, I have not had time to look over the words of "the child and the old man".[†4] It occurs to me, as I shall see you on Wednesday Morning that the best plan will be for you to bring the music (if you possibly can) without the words, and we can put them in then. Of course this observation applies only to that particular song.

Braham having sent to me, about the farce,[†5] I called on him this morning.

Harley[†1] wrote, when he had read the whole of the opera, saying "It's a sure card — nothing wrong there. Bet you ten pound it runs fifty nights. Come; dont be afraid. You'll be the gainer by it, and you needn't mind betting; it's a capital custom."[†2] — They tell the story with infinite relish. I saw the fair Manageress,[†3] who is fully of Harley's opinion, so is Braham. The only difference is, that they are far more enthusiastic than Harley — far more enthusiastic than ourselves, even. That's a bold word — isn't it? It is a true one, nevertheless.

"Depend upon it Sir" — said Braham to Hogarth yesterday, when he went there to say I should be in town to-day "Depend upon it Sir, that there has been no such music since the days of Sheil,[†4] and no such piece since the Duenna"[†5] — "Everybody is delighted with it" — he added to me, to-day "I played it to Stansbury,[†6] who is by no means an excitable person, and he was charmed". This was said with great emphasis, but I have forgotten the grand point. It was not "I played it to Stansbury" — but — "I sang it, — all through"[†7]!!!

I begged him, as the Choruses are to be put into Rehearsal, directly the company get together, to let us have, through Mrs. Braham, the necessary passports to the stage, which will be forwarded. He leaves town, on the 8th. of September. He will be absent a month, and the first rehearsal will take place immediately on his return; previous to it, [†a](I mean the 1st. Rehearsal — not the return)[†a] I am to read the piece. His only remaining suggestion is, that Miss Rainforth[†8] will want another song, when the piece is in rehearsal — "a bravura — something in the 'Soldier tired' way."[†1] We must have a confab about this, on Wednesday Morning.[†2]

Harley called in Furnivals Inn, to express his high delight and gratification, but unfortunately we had left town. I shall be at head quarters by 12 Wednesday Noon.

Believe me Dear Hullah
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

PS Tell me on Wednesday, when you can come down here, for a day or two. Beautiful place — meadow for exercise — horse for your riding — boat for your rowing — room for your studying — anything you like.[†3]

To JOHN LEECH,[†4] [?24 AUGUST 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly same day as next; the Wednesday he came to London for the day (see last). Address: This Gentleman will call[†5] | — Leech Esqre.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning.

Sir.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your design from the last Pickwick,[†6] which I think extremely well conceived, and executed.

I can only repeat however, what I at first said when I had the pleasure of seeing you — namely that the plates for the Pickwick Papers are in the hands of a gentleman of very great ability, with whose designs I am exceedingly well satisfied, and from whom I feel it neither my wish, nor my interest, to part.

Thinking at the same time, that perhaps your wish may be, for Chapman & Hall to see your drawing, with the view of removing some erroneous impression of your ability, which you conceive them to have formed, I have forwarded it to them with a short note this morning. I think they are already provided with an artist for the Library of Fiction though, and can hold out no present hope of their requiring your assistance.[†1] I cannot speak with confidence relative to this last work, because I have no connection with it.

I am
Sir
Your most obedt. Servt.
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Leech Esqre.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?24 AUGUST 1836]

Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 7. Date: Presumably Leech did his sketch in Aug, the month in which Tom Smart had appeared in Pickwick; according to his Agreement, CD would have been between Nos towards the end of the month.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning.

Dear Sirs,

I am much gratified with the very handsome terms of your note, received this morning, and am extremely happy to have it in my power to reciprocate most cordially, every sentiment of satisfaction you have expressed relative to our mutual friend Mr. Pickwick. Our connexion has been throughout, a most pleasant one to me, and I hope it may continue for a very long period, with the same good-will and friendly feelings on both sides.

The terms you propose are precisely those which had suggested themselves to my mind. (25£ per mo:[†2] after Nov. 8th).[†3] I need not add that they are perfectly satisfactory to me.

I will furnish you with the subjects of the Plates for the next number, as soon as I possibly can. I shall begin again tomorrow, or next day at furthest, and will turn them out with all possible dispatch.

Cruikshank sent a young artist of the name of Leech to me about a month ago, who when he heard Pickwick was engaged, seemed very anxious to try his hand at the Library of Fiction, with which I told him, I had nothing to do. He left the Inclosed Sketch from Tom Smart,[†4] here yesterday — as a specimen I suppose. As he threatened to call to-day, I have left out a note for him, saying that I supposed he wanted you to see it, and I have sent it on accordingly.

Dear Sirs,
Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

The chair's not bad, but his notion of the Bedroom is rather more derived, I should be disposed to think from his own fourth pair back, than my description of the old rambling house.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?24 AUGUST 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably not very long after 10 Aug when Cramer's were negotiating to buy the music (see To Hullah, that day).

Wednesday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

After looking over your calculation, Mr. Hullah and I, have come to the determination of publishing the books of the Songs, ourselves. Being required only for distribution in the Theatre, they do not require a Bookseller's aid.[†1]

As to the Drama, I have made up my mind to leave the publication open, until it has been played, and the success ascertained. I have two other offers for it: and should the success be very great, I can make something better than half profits of it, at all events. The Music is purchased by Cramers' for a good round sum.

I hope to hear that your trip to Paris has been successful, and that you have not only arranged with Victor Hugo,[†2] but made something of Paul the needy.[†3] How goes on the negociation with Moore?[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I open the note again, to say that Hogarth has settled[†5] with Colburn.[†6]

To JOHN BRAHAM, 25 AUGUST 1836*

MS Lord Strachie. Address: John Braham Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | August 25th. 1836

Dear Sir

I accept with pleasure, your offer of Thirty Pounds for the copyright of a farce in two acts, called "The Strange Gentleman", to be produced at the Saint James's Theatre on the first of October,[†1] and paid for, on the third night of representation.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Braham Esqre.

To JOHN BRAHAM, 25 AUGUST 1836*

MS Lord Strachie. Date: see last, the "formal note" on the other side.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Afternoon.

Dear Sir.

We inclose you, the parts of the Village Coquettes, complete, with the exception of the Chorus, which will be ready in a few days.

I beg my compliments to Mrs Braham, for whose satisfaction I have written a formal note on the other side,[†2] in which I accept your offer for a farce, in due form. I have christened it "The Strange gentleman". Harley will be the strange gentleman of course, and there will be several little points about his first appearance, which I think both you and he, will like. I will call on you, with the piece complete, and ready for the Performers, next Sunday week. But if you should intend leaving town before that day, I will make an additional effort to get it finished earlier, so that you may see it, before you go. I think however, I recollect you to have said that you would not be absent until the 8th.

I have not filled up old Benson's part with the name of any Performer, because in the absence of Strickland,[†3] I do not know to whom you propose giving it.

I am
Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Braham Esqre.

Mr. Hullah will be most happy to write another song for Miss Rainforth, if you continue to wish it. Our only anxiety is, not to overburden the piece with songs. She has two already — one very showy one — and a great deal to do, in the concerted Music.[†1]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?27 AUGUST 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Rumours about The Village Coquettes had appeared on 21 and 26 Aug (see fn).

Mrs. Denman's. Petersham near Richmond | Saturday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

I don't know whether you have seen any of the "rumours"[†2] which have appeared in the papers, about my forthcoming opera at Braham's. It has excited some curiosity, inasmuch as it will be the first time for many years, that a "drama" has been united to music, or poetry to songs: and a great many competent judges who have heard it, consider it to possess both, in a high degree.

It has occurred to me recently, that if it should make a very great hit, and were published during the run, it would be very likely to have a considerable sale. "Boz's" first play — an old English story, and an attempt to revive the rustic opera — would, I think be purchased, if it were published at any reasonable price.[†3] Supposing[†4] it should be as successful as I, and every one else anticipate, should you feel disposed to make any agreement with me, for publishing it? I merely ask the question in order that I may know how to act. You can either see the Manuscript now, or be present on the first representation; or both. I may add that the Music (of which I have half the copyright) is purchased for a large sum, and the whole affair is expected to go off with great eclat. It will be produced about the middle of October.[†5]

If you will consider the matter, and favor me with your answer, here, I shall be much obliged to you: — I can call, and talk it over, if you think it worth while.

I am
Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

PS. Of course I do not like to say of my own production, that it is a good one; and therefore before we made any distinct agreement, I should like you to see it played, or to read it. If it were published at all, it would be most desirable to have it out, immediately after it had "taken". Mr. Hogarth is a good authority in these cases, and he prognosticates wonders.

September

To J. P. HULLAH, [?4 SEPTEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Cannot be the day after To Hullah, ?10 Sep, since rehearsals of The Strange Gentleman had clearly not yet begun: therefore the Sunday before. Originally the hope must have been to open on Mon 19th (see fn).

Edwards Street[†1] | Sunday Afternoon.

Dear Hullah.

Immediately after I left you the other day, I fell into the arms of Bentley; and immediately after that, into the ditto's of Harley who dragged me home with him, and forced me into town, again to-day. He is delighted with the farce and it will certainly be got up well. He has copied out his part in The Village Coquettes, himself, for the convenience of learning, and looks over it daily. They want to open, if they possibly can, tomorrow fortnight.[†2]

The immediate object of my writing, is to say that I am going to the Theatre on Tuesday at a little after one, to see Harley (who perhaps you know, is Stage Manager) about the farce, and if you can make your arrangements so as to accompany me, after we have been to Cramers', it will be a good opportunity. I shall not read the farce that day, but most probably the next.

What Bentley said about the Opera, I defer till I see you, on Tuesday Morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HULLAH, [?10 SEPTEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Probably The Strange Gentleman was rehearsed for two to three weeks and CD was writing on the first Saturday in the period. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

Edwards Street | Saturday Night.

Dear Hullah

I am most happy to report that the Miss Smiths'[†3] are very nice-looking, well dressed, agreeable-mannered, lady-like girls. I should say that Rose especially, is a very knowing little person — rather fat, but not a bit too much so, with a very nice smiling pretty face. The father is all bows and politeness; and they all readiness and satisfaction. I don't think you could have picked out a nicer looking girl for the part, if you had picked all London through.

The farce is in active Rehearsal, and the company have begun business. I would rather you didn't see it, till they drop the written parts (about the end of the week) but you will find me at the Theatre every day at half past 12 o'Clock.

I have settled with Parry[†1] that you and I will drink tea with him next Saturday Evening. Will that suit you?

If I have any news about the opera, you will hear from me forthwith.

Believe me (in haste)
Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [17 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the Saturday before he returned to London "permanently" (see To Beard, 23 Sep). Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street.

Petersham. | Saturday Night

My Dear Sir.

I send up a special messenger to bear my apology for the apparent neglect and rudeness of which I have been guilty to-day, but which, when explained, involves a situation sufficiently ridiculous for a farce. The fact is that I had come up to town in the rain; been at the Theatre all the morning, and afterwards plodded about in the mud and wet until five o'Clock, when in the expectation of a very pleasant evening to recompense me for my day's fatigue, I went to my chambers to dress, and discovered that by some extraordinary accident the change I had selected had not arrived from Petersham. I waited; six came, half past six, seven — no change of dress, and too dirty to come. So I was just obliged to put myself on the top of a stage coach, and return again.

I hope and trust you did not wait dinner for me. If you did, I am more than sufficiently punished; for any inconvenience you can have sustained, cannot equal my disappointment. I hope you will give me an early opportunity of being more fortunate.

I shall return permanently to town on Friday. I shall take an opportunity of calling on Saturday Morning, and repeating my regret in person.

Believe me
My dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH, [20 SEPTEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM 21 Sep 36 (Wednesday). Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

Petersham | Tuesday Night

Dear Hullah.

I have thought over Beale's[†1] request, and cannot consent to give up (what I consider) the best verse of the best song in the whole piece.[†2]

If the young ladies are especially horrified at the bare notion of anybody's going to bed, I have no objection to substitute for the objectionable line

"Around, old stories go".

But you may respectfully signify to Cramer's that I will see them d——d before I make any further alteration.

As I thought you might see them, before I come back, I considered it better to write you a line. I am sure on reflection you will see that we ought not to emasculate the very spirit of a song to suit boarding-schools, and in the opinion I have formed, I am not singular.

I shall see you on Monday at 4.

Meanwhile believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. D desires her best remembrances.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [20 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS Private. Date: the Tuesday before his return to London; The Strange Gentleman was postponed from 26 to 29 Sep. Address: Messrs. Chapman and Hall | 186 Strand.

St. James's Theatre. | Tuesday Morng

Dr. Sirs.

The Theatre will not open till Thursday[†1] instead of Monday.[†2] I shall therefore forward you the remainder of the Pickwick by post tomorrow, and send Fred on Friday. We shall be in town on Saturday.

I have no doubt I shall know about the places on Monday, and I will call & tell you directly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?21 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS University of Texas. Date: probably the Wednesday before his return, enclosing the MS promised in last.

Petersham. | Wednesday Afternoon

Dr. Sirs.

I inclose the conclusion of the number — a very good bit to finish with.[†3] I hope to find the proof, complete, in Furnivals Inn on Saturday. If so, it shall be returned, revised, before 9 oClock on Monday Morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To THOMAS BEARD, [23 SEPTEMBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 23 Sep 36. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Petersham. | Friday Morning.

Dear Beard.

This is to give notice that we return to town tomorrow, and that the St. James's Theatre opens with my piece next Thursday, preparatory to which night, I should like to make arrangements with you, for going.

We shall be quite alone on Sunday. If I should not hear from you to the contrary, we shall expect you to-dinner[†1] at 5 oClock.

Believe me
Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HULLAH, [?25 SEPTEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably the first Sunday after the return to Furnival's Inn; CD had arranged to meet Hullah on the 26th (see 20 Sep); signature supports. Address: John Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street | Cavendish Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Sunday Afternoon

My Dear Hullah.

I inclose both the Duett and song[†2]. For the latter, I have found a very dramatic situation, and I think you will find the words sufficiently passionate for display.[†3] The duett[†4] carries on the plot, and I have therefore been able to dispense with a page of dialogue. Bring either the inclosed, or legible copies, with you to the Theatre tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [29 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: clearly Thurs 29 Sep, the day of the first performance of The Strange Gentleman. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir —

"The Strange Gentleman" is my only apology for not having called. I assure you it is more than a sufficient one, for I have been superintending its preparation, morning, noon, and night. You mistake my promise. It is not the opera — merely a farce; and the only admission I have, is a private box, which Mrs. Dickens, and her father's family occupy for the evening. Had I received your note yesterday, I could have got you orders; were Braham in town, I could get them even now, but situated as we all are, at the moment, I am not able to lay my hand on one. I most sincerely regret it. I should like you to be there of all things, for I confidently expect it will go well. — Can't you sacrifice a pound out of the profits of the novel:[†1] realising them by anticipation?

When the opera comes out, you may depend on my promise: I can get you orders, another night for this, if you wait — but I hope you won't.

In the utmost haste My dear Sir
Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To P. W. BANKS, [?29 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954). Date: presumably the same day as last. Address: P. W. Bankes Esqre. | Garden Court | Temple.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My dear Bankes[†2]

If you knew the hours I have spent at the Theatre for the last fortnight, about this one piece, and the day's work I shall have of it, again this morning, in a place like Braham's where everything is at sixes and sevens 'till the last moment, you would know how impossible it is for me to spare time to accede to your request about the plot,[†3] which I should otherwise have had the greatest pleasure in doing.

In great haste, believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. COLLIER, [?29 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library. Date: Seems clearly same day as last two; handwriting supports.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My dear Sir.

I am so over head and ears in work this week, that I cannot[†4] find time to write a Sketch. I therefore purpose making it up next week by writing two — one for Tuesday's paper, and the other for Saturday's, which arrangement will, I hope, answer the purpose equally well.[†1]

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?30 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Although endorsed "To see the Village Coquettes | RB.", handwriting is clearly not as late as Dec. Bentley went to the first night of The Village Coquettes (Tues 6 Dec), but missed the opening of The Strange Gentleman (see To Bentley, 29 Sep): these orders were perhaps for the second night. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Afternoon.

My Dear Sir.

I hasten, though late in the day, to send you six box orders for to-night which I hope you will be able to make use of. If you give me timely notice, I shall be happy to get you a private box for any other evening.

Perhaps you will say to the bearer, whether the inclosed are of any use to you.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours.
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

October

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?3 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: CD apparently saw Cruikshank on Wed 5 Oct, and three days later sent Macrone the MS (see To Macrone, ?6 and ?8 Oct).

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Morning.

My dear Sir.

I am so engaged with Pickwick (being rather behind-hand this month) that if it makes no difference to you, I should rather say Wednesday Evening. If half past six would suit you, we could get it over in half an hour. I will be punctual to the minute.

Macrone bid me ask you for the MS,[†2] if you have done with it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To P. W. BANKS, [?4 OCTOBER 1836]*

MS Yale University. Date: Handwriting points to Oct 36. The amiable tone suggests before rather than just after the piracy on 8 and 15 Oct, in Banks's Carlton Chronicle, of two of CD's new Morning Chronicle sketches (see To Easthope, 1 Nov 36, fn).

15 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My dear Bankes.

I received your note at the Office last night, and hasten to reply to it.

I am very — very — much engaged just now, having many new things on the stocks;[†1] but if I can meet your views in any way, it will afford me the utmost pleasure to do so.

I will take the chance of finding you at home, at half past one to-day. If I should miss you, let me know what hour will suit you better, tomorrow.

Believe me
Dear Bankes
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. W. Bankes Esqe

To THOMAS BEARD, [5 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 5 Oct 36. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Beard.

Will you dine with us tomorrow at four? — Mr. & Mrs. Hogarth, and a couple of people from the country whom you have seen just as often as I have. We shall all go to the Saint James's in the evening; and I hope you will join us.

Apropos, if you want any orders for any of your family, say the word, and I will procure them on any night you please.

Believe me
My Dear Beard
Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?6 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Date: The postscript seems to have been the first written message to Mrs Macrone after the birth of her baby on 30 Sep. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

St. James's Square. | Thursday Afternoon

My Dear Macrone

I called here to say that I was with Cruikshank last night, when we finally determined on eight[†1] illustrations for the First Volume.[†2] He has not, however, quite done with the MS, being anxious to be quite exact in following my descriptions. We will not keep it above two days more, and will then return it. If it come to me, it shall be forwarded here forthwith.

I am sorry to hear the sale was nullus eo.[†3] I understood that it had answered Tilt's[†4] purpose, very well.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

Missis's love[†6] up stairs

To JOHN MACRONE, [?8 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Cruikshank had apparently finished with the MS on 7 Oct (see To Macrone, ?6 Oct). Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square. Written above, in CD's hand, is: "With a Roll of Paper".

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Morng

My Dear Macrone.

I forward the MS, just as Cruikshank left it here yesterday, during my absence from home. I will forward some more in a day or two, but as to the second Volume, I must again say that I am quite certain I cannot get it out before Christmas. There really is not time, unless Hansard's people, have greatly under-calculated the quantity sent.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?10 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably two days after CD's promise of 8 Oct to send further copy. The sketch would have been "Doctors' Commons", published 11 Oct. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Morning.

My dear Macrone.

I am obliged to stop at home this morning, to write a sketch for the Chron — so much the better for the second Series.

I will send you all the Copy I have, in the course of the day. Have you got a "Scotland Yard"? If so, be good enough to give it to Fred, and I will insert it, in its proper place.

The Puddleport Papers[†1] I have forwarded and recommended. The humour I was not fortunate enough to discover (this is entre nous of course) in the glance I gave them on Saturday Night; and really, if a man wishes his MS to be read, he should take the trouble to write something bearing a faint resemblance to the characters generally in use. I never waded through such a scrawl.

I hope to hear that Mrs. Macrone is doing as well as you could wish. Will you give Kate's best love, and return a full account of her?

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [?15 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: endorsed 1836. The Wednesday for which CD had invited Holland was probably 19 Oct: see next. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Night

Dear Beard.

I inclose the tickets, and shall see you please God, on Monday Evening.

I met my old Editor Holland, to-day, and asked him to dine with us on Wednesday at half after four. Will you join us? We shall just be a Rubber[†2]
Thomas Beard Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?19 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Could hardly be less than about three weeks after the birth of the Macrones' baby (30 Sep). Macrone presumably kept Cruikshank's letter (see below) for a week before showing it to CD. Address: John Macrone Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My dear Macrone.

I have long believed Cruikshank to be mad; and his letter therefore, surprises me, not a jot. If you have any further communication with him, you will greatly oblige me by saying from me that I am very much amused at the notion of his altering my Manuscript,[†1] and that had it fallen into his hands, I should have preserved his emendations as "curiosities of Literature".[†2] Most decidedly am I of opinion that he may just go to the Devil; and so far as I have any interest in the book,[†3] I positively object to his touching it.

I think it a great question whether it requires any illustrations at all,[†4] but if so, I think my Pickwick man had better do them, as he is already favorably known to the public, by his connection with that immortal gentleman. This will be matter for reflection, and you are the best judge about it.

I am strongly of opinion that it would do you good to spend an hour or two here now, and then, while Mrs. Macrone is up stairs, and Catherine bids me say that she cordially agrees with me. Say when you will come, so that I may be at home, and not at work. I met Holland the other day in the street, and as he appeared much delighted to meet with his old contributor, I invited him to dine here to-day. I suppose it's a compliment, or rather no compliment at all, to ask you to meet him?

Take care of Mrs. Macrone. How could you let her come down to dinner so soon? Catherine is all anxiety to hear of her getting better. I trust you have a good account to send this morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHAPMAN & HALL, [?19 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: Handwriting points to Oct; at the end of the Nov Pickwick (Ch. 23) Sam Weller lays his plans against Jingle and Job Trotter.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

Dr. Sirs.

Have you got the second Design from Mr. Browne — or is it to go on the Steel, without our seeing it?

I hope you will be able to get me a proof — no matter how rough — of all the MS tomorrow. It is particularly important that I should know exactly where to end, this month, for the story will be just on the turn about Jingle and Job Trotter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [?21 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: probably two days after To Macrone, ?19 Oct. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Morning

My dear Macrone.

I quite forgot last night 'till Missis reminded me, five minutes after you left me, that we are engaged at Chapman's[†1] to-day, and that there is no help in us.[†2] Will you compromise the matter by dining with us on Sunday at 5? We shall be quite alone, and if you are out, you will deprive Mrs. M of any temptation to come down stairs again.

Send us a particular account this morning of her well-being, and young whats-his-name's.[†3]

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MACRONE, [?27 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Mrs Macrone had probably recovered four weeks after the birth — a customary time for coming downstairs. Address: John Macrone Esqre. | Saint James's Square.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

I am indeed delighted to hear you are doing so well at home, and I need not add how overjoyed Kate is, or how warmly she desires to be remembered to Mrs. Macrone.

I should very much like to meet you and the goose on Saturday, but as I have good reason to consider Mr. Moran[†1] a very insolent pretender,[†2] and am moreover by no means anxious to be taken notice of by him, in the street, for sundry good and sufficient reasons, — I cannot meet him.[†3]

To THOMAS BEARD, [28 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 28 Oct 36. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Morning

My Dear Beard —

I was very sorry we were out when you called last night — the more so, as we had a large private box at the Saint James's,[†4] and could have accomodated[†5] you, well. I should like to have a chat and a glass of grog with you. We shall be at home tomorrow evening, and Monday, and I hope we shall see you. I have received a card from Phippen[†6] for Goding's rowing Match.[†7] Of course you have one, and I should like to arrange for going with you.

I have not been able to bring that Sunday Times affair to bear: — I could not get enough, and I saw no reason for doing it cheap.[†8] As matters stand at present, therefore, I think I shall exhibit in the Gallery next session — till Easter at all events, unless I see cause, good and sufficient, to change my mind, between this and then.[†9] We dine at half[†10]

To MRS GEORGE CRUIKSHANK,[†1] [?28 OCTOBER 1836]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Kitty Smith's name was omitted from the play-bills 31 Oct to Wed 2 Nov; presumably she had been out of the cast some days before the 31st and the fact not advertised.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My dear Mrs. Cruikshank.

As one of the principal Actresses in my piece is ill, and her place supplied by a very inefficient and imperfect substitute;[†2] and as I should wish you to see The Strange Gentleman with all due advantages, I have ventured to take on myself the responsibility of disappointing you to-night. I think there is no doubt that the young lady in question will be at the Theatre again, on Wednesday next. If I should not hear from you that you are engaged on that night I will forward you tickets for that evening in the course of Tuesday. If you should be engaged, you will perhaps do me the favor to name your own night.

Mrs. Dickens begs her kindest regards.

I am
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cruikshank.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?OCTOBER 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed 1836; handwriting points to October.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My dear Macrone.

This will introduce to you, my friend the Reverend Mr. Dixon,[†3] who after contributing to the New Monthly, and Metropolitan, has just come up to town with a Novel which he wishes to publish. I do not know whether you are at liberty, or would feel disposed, to undertake it; but I have given him this introduction to you, in order that you may speak for *your*self, and Mr. Dixon for *him*self.

Believe me,
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Macrone Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?AUTUMN 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn 1836; the private box would therefore have been for The Strange Gentleman.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

My brother, who bears this note, will give you a ticket for a private box to-night. You will see by the paper itself, how many it holds. If your family be larger than the box I have instructed him to let you have as many more box orders as you require.

I hope I shall have the pleasure of looking in upon you, at the Theatre this evening.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To [T. C. HANSARD],[†1] [?AUTUMN 1836]

MS Miss Gladys Storey. Date: The enclosed title must have been for Sketches, Second Series, since the only edn of Keeper's Travels published during this period was in 1837. Handwriting suggests Autumn 1836. Address: clearly to T. C. Hansard, printer of both Sketches, Second Series, and Keeper's Travels.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

Dear Sir —

I am reduced to the humiliating avowal that I am not the Author of "Keeper's Travels".[†2] I therefore return the proofs you sent me on Saturday, *un*corrected.

I inclose the title, which perhaps you will have the goodness to arrange in decent order.

Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

November

To JOHN EASTHOPE, [1 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Four Morning Chronicle sketches, "New Series", had appeared by 26 Oct; No. 5 was due to appear on Tues 1 Nov. Address: Private | John Easthope Esqre. | Morning Chronicle Office.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I perceive that "Bells[†1] Life" — "The Carlton Chronicle", and some other Weekly papers, are in the habit of re-publishing my sketches from the Chronicle verbatim. As their doing so without acknowledgment, would induce many people to believe that they appeared originally in those Publications, and thereby injure both me and the Chronicle, I would submit to you that some remonstrance in the paper might have the effect of inducing the Privateers at all events to acknowledge the source from whence they derive the Articles.[†2]

I have another motive in writing to you, which is to explain why No. 5 has not yet appeared. I have been labouring under one of those severe colds which bring with them a state of semi-stupefaction, and have been wholly unable to set pen to paper for some days past. I am much better now, however, and shall prepare another sketch immediately.[†3]

I am

Dear Sir
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 1 NOVEMBER 1836

Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 8.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Evening
November 1st 1836.

My Dear Sirs,

I have been exceedingly gratified by your very kind letter; not so much by the intelligence you communicate to me of Pickwick's success, and the consequent advantage it holds out to me (though they are something) as by the very kind tone in which it is couched, and the very handsome terms in which your intelligence is communicated.

I am well aware of the lingering disease under which Mr. Pickwick has recently laboured, and of the great aggravation of the symptoms which has gradually taken place.[†4] You may rest assured that the disease has reached its height, and that it will now take a favourable turn. Avoiding all showy promises, I will endeavour to prove to you, before this day week,[†1] that I am serious and in earnest. I only entreat you to recollect two things — first that I have many other occupations; and secondly that spirits are not to be forced up to Pickwick point, every day. Although thank God I have as few worldly cares as most people, you would scarcely believe how often I sit down to begin a number, and feeling unequal to the task, do what is far better than writing, under such circumstances — get up, and wait till I am. It is needless for me to say how cordially I am interested in its success, or how proud I am of it. If I were to live a hundred years, and write three novels in each, I should never be so proud of any of them, as I am of Pickwick, feeling as I do, that it has made its own way, and hoping, as I must own I do hope, that long after my hand is withered as the pens it held, Pickwick will be found on many a dusty shelf with many a better work.

There — enough of Pickwick, and now for future periodicals. I should be the most insensible, and at the same time the most jolter-headed scribe alive, if I had ever entertained the most remote idea of dissolving our most pleasant and friendly connection. So I hereby nominate and appoint William Hall and Edward Chapman of No. 186 Strand, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, my periodical publishers, until I am advertised in the daily papers, as having been compressed into my last edition — one volume, boards, with brass plates; and in common with my very kind friend of the Advertiser,[†2] I hope it may be long before I come out in so unique a form.[†3]

I had intended when I began this Letter, to close it by saying how much — how very much — I feel your honorable conduct. But as I know I should grow very sentimental if I said anything more about it, I will not trust myself to add more than that I am My dear Sirs,

Most faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 2 NOVEMBER [1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The Agreement with Bentley for editing the Miscellany was signed 4 Nov 36. Address: Private | Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Evening Novr. 2nd.

My dear Sir.

I have well weighed the subject on which we conversed this morning; and feeling perfectly satisfied that it will not interfere with Pickwick, shall be happy to undertake the editorship of the new Magazine,[†1] on the following conditions being settled between us.

I should like in my agreement to have my duties specifically set forth, together with the emoluments you propose, and a stipulation relative to the quantity of matter I am to furnish monthly, which I understand is never to exceed a sheet. As I should immediately throw up my connection with the Chronicle in the event of my closing with you, I make it a sine qua non that my engagement is for a year certain. I have little doubt that it would last for many years, but as I must resign a certain income elsewhere, this condition is indispensable.

The terms I leave to you to propose. I need not enlarge on the rapidly increasing value of my time and writings to myself, or on the assistance "Boz's" name just now, would prove to the circulation, because I am persuaded that no one is better able to form a correct estimate on both points, than you are.

I thought it might facilitate our dispatch of business on Friday, if I stated these points at once. Within four and twenty hours after you make me a definite proposal, I will return a final answer. Of course I understand that until we agree to make it public, the project remains a secret.

I am
Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN EASTHOPE, 5 NOVEMBER [1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Easthope Esqre.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Saturday November 5th.

My Dear Sir.

In inclosing to you, the accompanying Letter to the Proprietors of The Morning Chronicle,[†2] I am anxious to express to you personally, my warmest and most sincere thanks for all the courtesies and kindnesses I have received at your hands. Although I exchange for a less burdensome and more profitable employment, I can assure you that I feel great regret in leaving an Establishment where I have uniformly discharged my duties with so much pleasure to myself, and I hope I may add, with so much satisfaction to my Employers.

Notwithstanding that my time will not be very much occupied immediately, I have deemed it right to beg you to accept my notice from to-day. I only concluded my other arrangements this morning, or I should have given it before.

The additional salary,[†1] if you please, will now cease. Between this time, and the period at which my notice will expire, I shall take care to make the number of sketches bear the proper proportion to the amount I have received. I should be happy to speak to you further, on this subject, if you will have the goodness to write me word when I may hope to see you at the Office.

I am
Dear Sir
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Easthope Esqre.

To THE PROPRIETORS OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE, [5 NOVEMBER 1836]

Mention in last.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [5 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The Agreement had been signed on the 4th; the first advertisements appeared on the 7th. Address: Private | Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street.

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

I fear the agreement has missed me by some means or other — at all events I have not received it. Perhaps you will do me the favor, either to send it by the Bearer, or direct that it be forwarded to me.

I inclose a short prospectus.[†2] I think that until we are actually afloat, we had better not be too facetious: I have therefore confined it to a mere statement of the objects of the work.

Perhaps if you will be disengaged, I may as well look in, on Monday Morning, about 11 o'Clock. It is almost time the advertisements were out, is it not?

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN MACRONE, [?9 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Huntington Library. Date: probably the first Wednesday after the Agreement of 4 Nov; on 7 Nov Bentley had announced Mahony (under the name "Father Prout") as a contributor to the Miscellany.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Macrone.

Will you have the goodness to write me down Mahoney's[†1] titles — and address if you know it. Is he "the Reverend",[†2] or what?

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To THE REV. FRANCIS MAHONY, [?9 or 10 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Mr W. J. Carlton. Date: probably very soon after last; the letter of which this is a fragment was clearly a request for a contribution.

[†3] I shall be happy to receive your answer — I hope in the affirmative — at your earliest convenience; and am, My dear Sir.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Francis Mahony.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD,[†4] [?10 NOVEMBER 1836]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: Jerrold had been announced as a contributor on 7 Nov. Address: Douglas Jerrold Esqre. | Thistle Lodge | Thistle Grove | Chelsea.

15 Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Although I have not the pleasure of knowing you personally, I am on such intimate terms with your writings that I almost feel an apology to be unnecessary when I say that I intend calling upon you tomorrow afternoon between three and four o'Clock, in the hope that I may [be] able to obtain your promise of a paper for the first number[†1] of Mr. Bentley's "Wits Miscellany".[†2]

If an apology be necessary, I hope you will accept my unaffected assurance that I am exceedingly sorry to trouble you, and attribute my doing so, to the right cause — my anxiety to enroll you as a fellow contributor.

I am
Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?NOVEMBER 1836]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: presumably during the rehearsal period of The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

I have not been able to get out all day, and have thus been prevented from getting any orders from Mrs. Braham. If you will have the goodness to send down to the gentleman who bears this, a pass for two to the boxes, you will very much oblige me.

I shall be "to the fore" at 11 tomorrow.

Believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?12 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Presumably Mahony had called as a result of CD's letter to him of ?9 or 10 Nov. Signature supports Nov 36.

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday — ½ past 2.

My Dear Sir.

Mahoney has just been here, and we have had a long talk about his contribution to the Miscellany. He wishes to know what you propose to give him for an article of four or five pages, containing a song in Latin, English, and French, with notes, and an introduction.[†1] He says at the same time, that unless the remuneration be a degree better than Fraser's he should be unwilling to leave his old Publisher. He objects to having it left to himself, and wishes to know distinctly, what you offer.

I said I would talk with you, and communicate with him directly. If you will let me know the extent to which you would like to go, I will write to him, at once.

Dr. Sir, Believe me,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

I have received a letter from Harrison Rankin[†2] — I think him a very clever man, and a good name.

To JOHN MACRONE, [EARLY NOVEMBER 1836]

Mention in Ainsworth to Macrone, 14 Nov: see Ellis, Ainsworth and his Friends, I, 305-6.

Apparently telling Macrone that he wished to withdraw from his Agreement of 9 May to write "Gabriel Vardon", as Bentley had offered him £500 for the novel.[†3]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?15 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Sir Sydney Roberts. Date: Handwriting points to Nov 36; presumably the Tuesday before To Easthope, 18 Nov, saying that he had been "very ill".

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Evening

Dear Sirs.

I have been so very unwell all day, and am still suffering under so violent a head-ache, that I have been wholly disabled from putting pen to paper. If you will call on me at one o'Clock tomorrow, I hope to get up well enough to go on. At all events as I know what the subject will be, I can put it down on a piece of paper — as indeed I could to-night, if any particular object were gained by a few hours in advance. I suppose, however, if Mr. Brown[†1] is etching the first subject, that he will not want this one, before tomorrow noon.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To P. W. BANKS, [?18 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor. Date: Handwriting points to Nov; presumably the Friday after last. Address: Percival W. Bankes Esqre | Garden Court | Temple.

Furnivals Inn. | Friday Morning

Dear Bankes.

I would assist you, with pleasure if I possibly could, this morning, but I am grievously behindhand with Mr. Pickwick, and cannot leave him until I have finished.

Believe me (in haste)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. W. Bankes Esqre.

To JOHN EASTHOPE, [18 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly the letter which elicited Easthope's draft reply dated "M.C. Office. Friday. | Nov. 19" (a mistake for 18).†2

15 Furnivals Inn. | Friday Morning

Dear Sir.

If you imagine that I was guilty of the least intentional disrespect in not returning to the office the other day, you do me the greatest injustice.

Having left Mrs. Dickens in a shop hard by; and having consumed in waiting at the office and going to Cecil Street, a much longer time than I supposed I should have been absent, I did not choose to leave her any longer in a strange place; knowing as I did how very easily I could account for my not returning (if you had thought anything of it at all, which I considered highly improbable) when I did see you. I have not called since, because I have been very ill, and have not left the house for several days, and have since been obliged to devote my whole time, morning and night, to recovering the ground I had lost by indisposition.

You will permit me to assure you, very respectfully that you are greatly mistaken in imagining that I had forgotten that I was to supply a Sketch weekly. I merely pursued the same course as I adopted when I wrote the Sketches before. We had the same agreement then, but I wrote sometimes two in one week, sometimes none, as suited my convenience, and that of the paper. The very circumstance of the revising Barristers' Courts being open at the time, assured me that the Chronicle would sustain no injury by my doing so. Its columns must have been pretty full, for on one occasion, a Sketch was lying at the Office, I think three days, before it was inserted. I have only to add that I shall return the six guineas with the utmost pleasure, and that I wish I could return at the same time every additional six pence beyond my regular salary as a reporter that I have received from the Establishment, although I have rendered in return for it, the money's worth.

I should have been well content to have left; and to have considered the constrained and abrupt terms of your former letter, as one of those matters of course which so often pass between master and servant, when the servant gives his month's warning, and takes his services elsewhere. But I will say now, in the same frankness and honesty with which you express your feelings to me, that I did expect on leaving, to receive some slight written acknowledgment from the Proprietors of the Morning Chronicle of the sense they entertained of the services I had performed. I may say now, that on many occasions at a sacrifice of health, rest, and personal comfort, I have again and again, on important expresses in my zeal for the interests of the paper, done what was always before considered impossible, and what in all probability will never be accomplished again. During the whole period of my engagement wherever there was difficult and harassing duty to be performed — travelling at a few hours' notice hundreds of miles in the depth of winter — leaving hot and crowded rooms to write, the night through, in a close damp chaise — tearing along, and writing the most important speeches, under every possible circumstance of disadvantage and difficulty — for that duty have I been selected.[†1] And I did not think when I made great efforts to perform it, and to eclipse (as I have done, again and again) other papers with double the means, that my reward at last would be a regret that I had ever enjoyed a few week's[†1] rest, and a fear lest at the close of two years, I should have received six pounds six, too much! I have, however, the satisfaction of knowing that there is not another Newspaper Office in London where these services have not been watched and appreciated — that there is not one of my colleagues who will not cheerfully bear testimony to them — and with the respect and esteem of both Editors and reporters,[†2] I am happy to say that I can afford to part with the thanks of the Proprietors, although I feel much hurt, and much surprised at the conduct they think proper to pursue towards me.

Depend upon it, Sir, that if you would stimulate those about you to any exertions beyond their ordinary routine of duty, and gather round you competent successors to the young men whom you will constantly find quitting a most arduous and thankless profession, as other prospects dawn upon them, this is not the way to do it.

I am
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Easthope Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [18 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: The first night of The Village Coquettes was then expected to be Mon 5 Dec.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Pray do not blame me, for delaying the inclosed. Fredk. forgot his commission, or they would have been sent, this morning. I shall chance the finding you at home tomorrow evening, as I rather wish to see you.

I am glad you went to the Theatre the other night:[†3] still more glad that you thought the piece was badly acted (that being very like my own impression) and only sorry that you saw the Tradesman's Ball, and the Miniature — two severe trials.

I hope you and Mrs. Cruikshank will accompany us, on the first night of the opera — next Monday fortnight. I am sanguine about that.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?19 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably the Saturday before the first night of Fra Diavolo, 23 Nov. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre.

Brompton | Saturday Evening

My Dear Hullah —

Mr. Hogarth succeeded in obtaining an Interview with Braham this morning. He expressed his entire and perfect satisfaction with the opera, and his regret that you could not wait on him tomorrow morning. His theatrical avocations prevented his fixing any other day but tomorrow week; and for that time your next visit is fixed —

Between ourselves I am rather inclined to think that the production of our opera at this advanced period of the Season, chiefly depends on the success of Fra Diavolo.[†1] Braham said this morning that he was extremely anxious to get it (The Village Coquettes) out, but that he could not just at this moment distinctly pledge himself whether it would appear this season, or whether they would begin with it, at the opening of the next. — The matter is still undecided of course. We shall know for certain, I imagine, next Sunday.

I shall see you I suppose sometime next week. — You will take the score with you, complete, will you not?

Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?26 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: presumably the Saturday before To Bentley, 30 Nov, when CD and Cruikshank settled on the illustration for CD's paper.

Furnivals Inn. | [Saty][†2] Morning

My Dear Sir

I will call on you on Monday Evening. I have not written the paper[†3] yet, so if anything should occur to you as a good illustration, I shall be happy to adopt it. I will arrange so that next month you may have the MS. by the 5th. and so on for the future.

Believe me in haste
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?27 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The title, last advertised in the London newspapers as "The Wits' Miscellany" on 26 Nov, was changed to Bentley's Miscellany on Thurs 1 Dec — the day on which CD, newly recovered from his illness, dined with Bentley (see To Bentley, 30 Nov).

Furnivals Inn. | Sunday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I hasten to say that I shall have the greatest pleasure in dining with you on Thursday — always supposing I am free from the torment of rheumatism in the face, under which I have suffered with scarcely an hour's intermission, since I saw you last.[†1] I have been obliged to wrap up, and cool myself at the Theatre every day: and I rather think, although a novel mode of treatment for such a complaint, it has not been a very effectual cure.

I have lain in bed all this day however, and had a good hot-watering and warm cordialing last night, so I hope to be rewarded for my patience and perseverance, by finding myself quite well tomorrow. Rintoul called here to-day, and told Mrs. Dickens to tell me, that he intends laughing you out of our title, which he considers a singularly bad one.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

I have had several aggravations of my indisposition, in the shape of voluntary contributions for the Miscellany — one man has sent about as much as would fill half a dozen numbers; and nearly all have forwarded the most appalling nonsense I ever had the ill fortune to peruse.

To F. CREWE,[†2] [?27 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor. Date: clearly written during the attack described in last.

Furnivals Inn. | Sunday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

I have been in bed all day with an attack of rheumatism in the face, — a pleasant little complaint under which I have been labouring for a week past, and of which I think I laid the foundation stone in that confounded brewery.[†3] Had I been up, in reasonable time, I should have answered your note before.

Mrs. Dickens is a great stay-at-home[†1] just now; and between Pickwick, the Sketches, the Theatre, and the Wits' Miscellany, I deserve no great credit for keeping her company.

I hope however at some future period, that we may be enabled to accept your kind invitation. In the mean time, accept our joint thanks for the very obliging terms of your note, and our assurance that we hope to take no very distant opportunity of acknowledging them.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Crewe Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [28 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: a week before Mon 5 Dec, the expected first night of The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

I have heard nothing from Macrone about bringing out one Volume before Christmas, although I think it, under all the circumstances, an excellent notion.[†2] If I receive any such proposition from him, I shall at once meet him, in any way he can desire.

The copy must (as I warned Macrone) linger a little just now. For the last fortnight I have been very unwell — unable for many days to put pen to paper, and the unlooked-for extent of the preparations for the opera, occupies my whole day. I cannot do more than one pair of hands and a solitary head can execute, and really am so hard pressed just now that I must have breathing time.

Pray hold yourself in readiness for this day week. I think we shall come out, then.[†3] Mrs. D will write to Mrs. Cruikshank, or call, as soon as we are certain.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To THE REV. FRANCIS MAHONY, [?NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Signature suggests Nov 1836; the appointment was perhaps at Macrone's office (see fn).

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Night.

My Dear Sir.

I take the opportunity of my boy coming your way, early tomorrow morning, to say that I shall be at leisure either on Saturday or Monday next, before 12, or after 3; and shall be happy to keep any appointment on either day, that it may suit Mr. Maclise[†1] to make.[†2]

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Reverend Francis Mahoney.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?29 NOVEMBER 1836]

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: presumably the Tuesday before the 50th night of The Strange Gentleman. Address: J. P. Harley Esqre. | Saint James's Theatre.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Mrs. Braham has written to me to say that the Tailor complains of not having yet received the costumes of the Village Coquettes from me; and that he ought to have them without delay.

I am sorry to say that I am once again detained at home by indisposition. I shall come out tomorrow, however on purpose to see you about this matter. Perhaps if I am at the Theatre at one o'Clock exactly, you will do me the favor to devote ten minutes to the Wardrobe people with me.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

I suppose the Strange Gentleman is going on for his fiftieth night, now?[†1]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [30 NOVEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The magazine was first advertised in the London newspapers as Bentley's Miscellany on Thurs 1 Dec; CD was presumably shown the advertisement the day before.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Night

My Dear Sir.

I am greatly better. The alteration of the title[†2] would have restored me at once, had I been worse. The show of names[†3] is excellent. As the others are "little unknowns", I think the less we say about them, the better. I cannot express the pleasure it affords me, to see the title altered.

Cruikshank has been here to-day, and we have settled on a capital subject for the first illustration.[†4]

I shall certainly have the pleasure of seeing you tomorrow, and will turn over the prospectus[†5] in my mind, meanwhile.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I return the prospectus lest you should want it.

To MISS FRANCES DICKENS, 30 NOVEMBER [1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 30 Nov was Wednesday in 1836.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Evening Novr. 30th.

Dear Fanny.

Here's the Autograph.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Dickens.

December

To T. C. HANSARD, [?1 DECEMBER 1836]

MS Morgan Library. Date: perhaps the day before next.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Evening.

Dear Sir.

I have had an hour's time to think over your proposition of this morning; and as you say Mr. Macrone would prefer an early answer, I think it better to reply at once. I would take two hundred and fifty pounds (not less) for the two copyrights,[†1] if we could arrange satisfactorily. My account with Mr. Macrone would then stand thus —

For the second Edition of the first series
Balance of the first Edition of the second
For the copyright of both

T

I wish to know how Mr. Macrone (supposing he consents to give the additional £50) would propose to pay this — I mean in what amounts, and at what dates. I also wish to know whether Mr. Macrone intends to continue to advertize a novel by me, and to retain possession of a letter of mine,[†2] respecting which, a misunderstanding has arisen between us. Mr. Macrone's reply on these points, will regulate my decision.

I am
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. C. Hansard Esqre.

To T. C. HANSARD, 2 DECEMBER 1836

MS Morgan Library. Address: T. C. Hansard Esqre. | Paternoster Row.

Furnivals Inn. | December 2nd. 1836

Dear Sir.

You are quite right in supposing that my mind is made up, with reference to the second series, and that I accept the offer made to me by you as well as that of £100 for the Second Edition of the first, which you proffered on behalf of Mr. Macrone. I will sign these two agreements together, but not one without the other.

You will allow me to observe, that knowing nothing of my misunderstanding with Mr. Macrone, you are not competent to judge of the propriety of my connecting it with the offer for the two Copyrights. I decline entering into any negociation with Mr. Macrone having reference to any other engagements than those I have mentioned above, so long as that misunderstanding remains in its present state.

Dear Sir.
Yours obedtly.
CHARLES DICKENS

T. C. Hansard Esqre.

To P. W. BANKS, [EARLY DECEMBER 1836]

Composite text from Sotheby's catalogue, 26 June 50, and Maggs catalogue 798; MS 1 ½ pp.; from Furnival's Inn. Date: no doubt two or three days before the first night of The Village Coquettes.

I hear from Ainsworth, that he has asked you to write a notice of Crichton in No. I of the Miscellany ...[†1]

I enclose you a book of the songs in my new opera, and an admission for two, for Tuesday Evening, when it will be represented for the first time. If I see you there, we can settle when we are to have this same chat you speak of ...

I hope you receive Pickwick regularly.[†2]

To THE EDITOR OF THE EXAMINER,[†1] 3 DECEMBER 1836

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC)[†2]; almost certainly in Catherine's hand.

Saturday. December 3d. 1836

"Boz" presents his compliments to the Editor of the Examiner and begs to enclose him a Book of the Songs in the new Opera which will be produced at the Saint James's Theatre on Tuesday next.[†3]

To WILLIAM AYRTON,[†4] [3 DECEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the Saturday before the first night of The Village Coquettes.

15 Furnivals Inn | Saturday Evening

Mr. Dickens presents his compts. to Mr. Ayrton, and begs to inclose him a book of the songs in the new Opera which will be produced at Braham's on Tuesday. Mr. Dickens also begs Mr. Ayrton's acceptance of a few admissions for that evening.

To JOHN BRAHAM, [?3 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Lord Strachie. Date: Signature suggests Dec 36: Mon 5 Dec was the dress rehearsal of The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I have received your note, and will make a point of seeing you at the Theatre on Monday Evening.

I am
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Braham Esq.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [5 DECEMBER 1836]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: see reference to CD's Miscellany paper in next. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre | With a parcel.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

Dear Sir.

I inclose the paper[†1] for the Miscellany complete, which I want for the printer as soon as you have done with it. I shall be glad to have your opinion of it tomorrow, if you have time to read it meanwhile. I think you will like it.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqr.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [5 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day before the first night of The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

I have the satisfaction of informing you that I have finished my paper for the Miscellany, and that it is in George Cruikshank's hands. I shall be glad to receive copy. It is time we had it.

I will send you some orders for tomorrow, to-night. I hope you will be there, as I am anxious to get the Drama published,[†2] and rather think it will tell. I am so worried with it just now, that I have hardly time to write this hasty note.

I spent a very pleasant evening on Thursday, I assure you. I am delighted with Jerdan,[†1] pleased with Lover,[†2] and amused with Captain Glascock[†3] — I think the last-named is a very honest fellow, but he has the fault of all officers I ever met — gets tipsy soon, and prates about "the service". I never met an officer yet, who didn't seem to think an Epaulette, and a brawling licence, synonymous terms.

I kept very quiet, purposely. Since I have been a successful author, I have seen how much ill-will and jealousy there is afloat, and have acquired an excellent character as a quiet, modest fellow. I like to assume a virtue, though I have it not;[†4] it has served me with a subject more than once.

If you should have any occasion to send to me this evening, perhaps you will do so, about 5. I shall be at home then, and will send back the orders. I have communicated with Bankes. I have begged him to write us another paper for No. 2 on some catching subject.[†5] He is a clever man, but his name must not appear.[†6] He is a practising barrister, and attornies don't like authors.

You may however, if you please, add to our list of names "Charles Whitehead Esqre.[†7] author of the Cavalier[†8] &c". — a man who has more in him than three parts of the writers alive. In humourous and grave sketches he is equally admirable. He wants training, but I think I can make him of great use.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [5 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the same day as last.

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I inclose four box orders for tomorrow night. Whatever you do, come early. I like your notion of a dramatic sketch, and have this moment, oddly enough, received one[†1] from A'Beckett:[†2] I have only had time to glance at it, but it looks clever and pointed. If I find it good, I will send it off to the Printers.

Believe me
Dear Sir
(In haste)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To T. C. HANSARD, [7 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Macrone received the "last sheet" of Sketches, Second Series, from CD on 9 Dec (see next). Address: T. C. Hansard Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Evening.

My Dear Sir

The little tale[†3] I am on, is a very good one (I think). I have taken great pains with it, as I wished to finish the Volume with eclat.[†4] It will run to 28 slips,[†5] and I am on the 26th. but I must keep the whole to read, in order that I may give it the finishing touch here and there. It, and the Preface, shall be in Paternoster Row, at 7[†6] in the morning, precisely.[†6] I would willingly send it now, but as we should gain nothing by that, if I am punctual in the morning, I prefer keeping it by me, an hour, or so, to look coolly over. You may depend upon me.

I should certainly wish to see the proof of this sketch. I will not detain it one hour. The Messenger who brings it, may wait while I correct it. The other proof I inclose.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?10 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Hook's paper appeared in the Jan Miscellany, the contents of which were apparently chosen on 12 Dec (see To Bentley, that day). Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning.

My Dear Sir

Pray do me the favor to give directions in your office that if Macrone sends any advertisement of "Gabriel Vardon"[†1] for the Miscellany, it be rejected, at my express request.[†2] He has just sent to the Pickwick (having only yesterday, received the last sheet of the second Series of Sketches) a similar advertizement for insertion there; and I have requested Chapman and Hall to send it back, which they have done.

Is Hook's[†3] paper,[†4] coming?

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH, [11 DECEMBER 1836]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The Village Coquettes was reviewed in the Examiner on 11 Dec. Address: J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street.

Furnivals Inn. | Sunday Morning

My Dear Hullah.

Have you seen the Examiner? It is rather depreciatory of the Opera, but like all their inveterate critiques against Braham, so well done that I cannot help laughing at it, for the life and soul of me.[†1]

I have seen the Sunday Times, the Dispatch, and the Satirist, all of which blow their little trumpets against unhappy me, most lustily.[†2] Either I must have grievously awakened the ire of all the "adapters"[†3] and their friends, or the drama must be decidedly bad. I haven't made up my mind yet, which of [the][†4] two is the fact.

I have not seen the John Bull[†5] or any other of the Sunday papers except the Spectator.[†6] If you have any of them, bring 'em with you on Tuesday. I am afraid that for "dirty Cummins's"[†7] allusion to Hogarth,[†8] I shall be reduced to the necessity of being valorous the next time I meet him —

Believe me
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?12 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: presumably a week after his request to Bentley of 5 Dec for copy.

Furnivals Inn. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Macrone has driven me so hard this month, that I really cannot get out this morning, or there certainly will be no Pickwick. But I must contrive to see you this evening, if you will be at home.

I have just got from the Printer, a statement of all the copy, and the length of every article, which he has furnished at my request. The selection is made in five minutes: I have made it on paper, already.

All the papers I have by me, will of course be returned at the end of the month. People cannot be so unreasonable as to expect them sooner, surely. I see no paper signed M. B. S — jocose papers, God help the volunteers, I have none of.

Dr. Milligen's[†1] paper,[†2] he must re-write the last half of; it has cost me three hours this morning, and I can make nothing of it. I think very little of the gentleman who writes so complacently from Northampton with his first of a Series; but I suppose he's a great man in a small way.

Nothing but being over head and ears in work, and really half dead with fatigue (for I have been at it, early and late) should have prevented my coming up to you, immediately. Do take pity on me.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To P. W. BANKS, [?12 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954). Date: The Carlton Chronicle, edited by Banks, had reviewed The Village Coquettes on 10 Dec.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My dear Bankes.

I cannot resist writing to say that I still think I am right. When I am not practically certain of the subject I am writing about, I generally take care, and look about me. I did this, in the case of the country song we spoke of. After I dismissed my two friends last night, I went out to a little evening party, and felt my ground in a great many undoubted sources. Depend upon it, that in this part of the United Kingdom, Snipes are only to be found when Ice and Snow are on the ground.[†1] I have not the least doubt about the matter; and as they are only to be found in Ireland at other times by legitimate sportsman, the only conclusion I can come to, is, that when it snows in England, the Irish snipes come over here.

I am always glad to correct an error when it is suggested to me from a good quarter, and I therefore say this, in self defence.

Believe me
Dear Bankes.
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. W. Bankes Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, DECEMBER 1836

Facsimile in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Apr 1941. Date: This dedication, as printed in The Village Coquettes, is dated 15 Dec — the day on which Bentley first advertised the book as "ready". CD presumably wrote it shortly before.

DEDICATION

TO J. P. HARLEY ESQRE.

December 1836.

My Dear Sir.

My dramatic bantlings are no sooner born, than you father them. You have made my strange gentleman exclusively your own; you have adopted Martin Stokes with equal readiness, and you still profess your willingness to do the same kind office for all future scions of the same stock, no matter how numerous they may be or how quickly they may follow in succession.

I dedicate to you, the first play I ever published; and you made for me, the first play I ever wrote. The balance is in your favor, and I am afraid it will remain so.

That you may long contribute to the amusement of the Public, and long be spared to shed a lustre, by the honor and integrity of your private life, on the profession which for many years, you have done so much to uphold, is the sincere and earnest wish of

My Dear Sir
Yours most Faithfully
Boz

To J. P. HARLEY, [15 DECEMBER 1836]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: The Village Coquettes was advertised by Bentley on 15 Dec as ready "this day", but in fact not published until the 22nd (Bentley's List); The Strange Gentleman, though not advertised in the press, was performed on the 15th (playbill, Victoria & Albert Museum) — the only Thursday performance after the opening of The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I am so engaged with my respectable friend Pickwick (on whom I have only just commenced) that I cannot get out this week, even to the Theatre. I hope by Monday or Tuesday night, however, to be free, and at liberty.

As I cannot see you 'till then, may I beg you by letter to let them put in the bills of the Village Coquettes, "the drama is published by Mr. Bentley, New Burlington Street".[†1] — It will be really out, tomorrow night, or next morning; — the moment it is;[†2] of course I shall have the pleasure of forwarding you a copy.

I am pleased to see that you are doing the Strange Gentleman to-night. He will soon be out, also.[†3]

Believe me (in haste)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?18 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Sketches, Second Series, was advertised in the Morning Herald of 17 Dec as having "this day been published". Probably CD sent Bentley a copy next day.

Furnivals Inn | Sunday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Let me beg your acceptance of the accompanying copy of Boz. I shall be glad to hear that you have prospered in your offer to Macrone,[†4] but I rather doubt his accepting it.

I send at the same time, a parcel for Dr. Millingen which you will perhaps direct to be forwarded immediately.

Dr. Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [19 DECEMBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: The only Wednesday performance of The Strange Gentleman during Dec 36 was the revival for one night on 21 Dec. The time lost had clearly been over The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Night.

My Dear Sir.

The Strange Gentleman is under weigh, with my Pickwick Publishers. I see it is advertized for Wednesday. I shall be at the Theatre, and will bring the gentleman who illustrates Pickwick with me. If you will leave his name at the Stage Door, he can come round to your dressing room afterwards, and make whatever Sketch he thinks will be best. — It will be a complete scene, with two figures.[†1]

The time I lost at the beginning of the Month, at the Theatre, has nearly killed me, with work; but I have nearly done, thank God.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqe.

To JOHN BRAHAM, [?22 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Lord Strachie. Date: He was probably sending Mrs Braham The Village Coquettes (published 22 Dec), rather than Sketches, Second Series.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your obliging note. Let me beg Mrs. Braham's acceptance of Boz's last, which I inclose.

I shall be at the Theatre this evening, and will see you.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Braham Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?22 DECEMBER 1836]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The Miscellany copy was finally ready for the printer soon after 12 Dec (see To Bentley, that day); presumably the Thursday on which he was expecting proofs was the 22nd. Address: Wait | Richard Bentley Esqre.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

The Printer informs me that you have desired him to apply to me for notices to correspondents for the wrapper. Beyond a general notice that various articles are under consideration, and have just been received,[†1] I have really no notices to insert. The papers you sent me yesterday, of course I know nothing about, yet. All the others, with the exception of one from Isabel Hill,[†2] and one[†3] from her brother,[†4] I must return. With respect to Jerdan[†5] and the others whose papers cannot appear in No. I, will it not be far more polite and agreeable to them, if I write a private note in preference to a public notice? I am expecting proofs every minute, or I would have come up to you myself.

Dr. Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES HICKS,[†6] [?23 DECEMBER 1836]†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Presumably refers to the one-page Address issued in Pickwick No. x; no doubt CD was writing on the Friday after 19 Dec when he told Harley he had "nearly done, thank God".

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

Dr. Sir

I have just given three cheers over the end of the number which I now forward. If you can spare a boy, be good enough to send him up in about an hour's time for the proof, which I have not yet had time to correct.[†7] If he doesn't come, I will conclude you can't spare him, and will send it.

There will be a short address[†8] to face the plates, which will be left out for your Messenger, when you send up the other proof in the morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?26 DECEMBER 1836]

Extract in unidentified catalogue, Eastgate House, Rochester; dated Furnival's Inn, Monday morning. Date: Chapman & Hall had The Strange Gentleman "under weigh" by 19 Dec 36.

I return the proof of Pickwick. The Strange Gentleman I cannot return till I have been down to the theatre, for the Dramatis Personae.

To [?J. P. HARLEY], [?DECEMBER 1836]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: possibly the note referred to in next. CD was proposed for the Garrick Club before 6 Jan (see To Bentley, 7 Jan 37). Address: probably to Harley, who seconded him.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I have been worried, and worried again, by Bentley cum multis aliis to allow myself to be proposed as a Member of the Garrick.[†1] I have consented to undergo the honor, and am to be proposed forthwith — by whom, I really don't know, out of the number.[†2] However, when the proposition does take place I should like you to second it. I think you will have no objection, and I should very much like your doing it.

Believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HARLEY, [?DECEMBER 1836]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: perhaps a week after 21 Dec when Browne was to make his sketch of Harley. Signature supports.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

There is one thing I forgot to mention in my yesterday's note. If you have got an impression of yourself in The Strange Gentleman, will you send it me? — I think before Mr. Browne sees you again, he may just as well take your head from the plate; and then, if he comes down to the Theatre with me on Friday Night, he can complete the likeness in no time. Send it to me at once if you have got it, for I am anxious to get the play out, and it only waits for the Illustration.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [?DECEMBER 1836]

MS Dickens House. Date: endorsed 1836; handwriting points to end of year. The turkey could not be for Christmas Day — a Sunday. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Night

My Dear Beard.

We propose giving the Turkey until 4 tomorrow, in order that he may be well done. Be punctual and don't place too much reliance on our excellent friend Warburton.[†2] I arrived home at one oClock this morning dead drunk, & was put to bed by my loving missis. We are just going to Chapman's sisters' quadrille party,[†3] for which you may imagine I feel remarkably disposed.

Believe me ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 29 DECEMBER 1836*

MS Berg Collection.

Furnivals Inn | December 29th. 1836

My Dear Sir.

If I don't see you this afternoon, here, I will call on you at about a quarter before 7. I cannot consent to take the onus of Father Prout's paper. I have no doubt it is very good, but I decidedly object to fathering anybody else's articles.

I have been clearing off all the rejected articles to-day, and nice work I have had.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JAMES THOMSON,[†1] 29 DECEMBER 1836*

MS Southwark Public Libraries. Address: James Thomson Esqre. | 25 Fenchurch Street.

December 29th 1836.

The Editor of Bentley's Miscellany presents his compts. to Mr. Thomson, and begs to inform him that the paper[†2] by the Author of "Tales of an Antiquary"[†3] is accepted with many thanks, and will appear in the second number of the Miscellany.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?DECEMBER 1836]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: late 1836 on handwriting. Address: Immediate and Important[†4] | J. P. Hullah Esqre. | Princes Street.

Furnivals Inn | late on Friday[†4] Night.

My Dear Hullah.

The inclosed has just arrived. I rather think I got the steam up this morning, and they[†5] couldn't help it. I did the ferocious. I shall wait at home for you, until 10 Minutes before 12. If you can come to breakfast so much the better. I most[†6] particularly[†7] wish to speak to you.

Ever Yours

CD in great haste

To DR J. G. MILLINGEN, [?DECEMBER 1836]

Mention in next.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?DECEMBER 1836]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Presumably refers to Millingen's first Miscellany paper (see To Bentley, ?12 and ?18 Dec).

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I inclose a note of Doctor Millingen's in reply to mine begging him to finish his paper. He requests an early answer. What can I say to him, after what you have said? —

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?DECEMBER 1836]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 21 July 1914. MS 1 p. Date: perhaps shortly before publication of The Strange Gentleman.

I enclose Mr. Leech's sketch,[†1] you can tell me what you think of it, when I see you to-morrow morning. I think he has not got the face well, or the hat. The general character is very good,[†2]

1837

January

To J. P. COLLIER, [3 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Mr N. C. Peyrouton. Date: The Morning Chronicle notice of Miscellany No. I appeared on Wed 4 Jan.

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Collier

I address this copy of the Miscellany to you, because I know that like some of your bretheren[†3] in Office, you will not be indisposed to notice it for me, and *un*like the bretheren aforesaid will not put it off until it is of no use.

I should have taken an earlier opportunity of doing so, had it been possible; but until this morning I have not been able to procure the necessary number of Copies for the Morning Papers.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. COLLIER, [6 JANUARY 1837]

MS Folger Shakespeare Library. Date: the Friday after the Morning Chronicle notice of Wed 4 Jan.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning.

My Dear Collier.

I feel very much obliged to you for your kind note, and also for the trouble you have taken in my behalf. Nobody I assure you is more sincerely desirous to stand well with every one than I am, but I cannot write to thank Mr. Easthope for the notice,[†1] since I cannot retract one syllable of the letter of which he complains.[†2] It is odd enough that in the correspondence which passed between us, he complains before[†3] this letter was written or thought of, the real and only ground of complaint seeming to be that I should ever have contemplated the possibility of having anything better to do, than reporting for the Chronicle.

At some pecuniary loss, I gave my notice a long time before I need have done so. I knew that I could by no possibility have anything to do for some time to come, but I was unwilling to take advantage of the system the Proprietors had established, and so gave my notice at once. I acted with great fairness by them, and I have nothing to atone for, or explain.

I am very anxious that you should now see the letter Mr. Easthope complains of, and the Epistle which produced it.[†4] I am chained to Mr. Pickwick just now, and cannot get away, but on Tuesday Morning I hope to be at liberty, and shall take the chance of finding you at home.

I may add that in writing to you about the Miscellany, I had not the most distant intention or idea of asking for any notice out of the ordinary course — much less had I any notion of asking a favor at Mr. Easthope's hands. Knowing the difficulty of having any notice in the paper when half a dozen Proprietors and agents are pulling different ways — each for himself — I appealed to your kindness and friendship to see that they did not neglect what after all I am strongly disposed to think they would have done with the first Number of a new periodical of Bentley's, had Powell[†5] himself been the Editor.

Believe me
My Dear Collier
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Payne Collier Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [7 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Charley[†1] was born on 6 Jan 37.

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

After a day and night of watching and anxiety, I was yesterday made — not a Member of the Garrick Club; but a father. Need I, under such circumstances, beg you to postpone our appointment from 12 oClock to day, until ½ past[†2] 3 in order that I may have time for a little rest? —

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [9 JANUARY 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: the Monday after Charley's birth.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

According to all established forms and ceremonies, I ought to have written on Friday Evening last, to duly acquaint and inform Mrs. Cruikshank that Mrs. Dickens had at a quarter past six oClock P.M. presented me with a son and heir. But as I know that you are not ceremonious people, and as we are very much in the same way, I thought I might just as well defer the communication until I had something else to say; knowing that the importance of such intelligence diminishes very materially outside one's own house.

What I have to say is, that the bustle et cetera has rather put me out this month, and that I want you to give me as long a time to prepare the subject[†3] in, as you can, on my promise to behave better next time. Say until what day you can conveniently give me; and I will call on you at your own time, and settle our illustration.

With Compts. to Mrs. Cruikshank

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To J. P. HULLAH, [?12 JANUARY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: after 22 Dec 36, publication-day of The Village Coquettes. Clearly this and next To Hullah refer to the two Jan revivals (Thurs 12th & Sat 14th), not to those in Feb, when CD was at Chalk.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Evening

My Dear Hullah.

Herewith I inclose you, a copy of the Opera, and another of the new series of Boz, of which I beg your acceptance.

And now, I must take an opportunity of saying, that I think Cramers' people ought to make some arrangement for liquidating our demands upon them, and to abide by the terms they offered themselves. For myself I have no hesitation in saying that I have suffered the most severe and unlooked-for inconvenience from their negligence and delay. Depending upon them, with the same certainty with which I am accustomed to depend on booksellers and other people with whom I am engaged in business, I have accepted payment in bills where I should otherwise have required ready money, and have put money to uses to which I should never have put it at all, had it not been for a reasonable calculation of the Profits of the Opera; and this at a time when of all others, my expences are the most heavy, and my engagements the most pressing. As yet, it has proved in every way, nothing but a source of loss, and annoyance to me.

I know perfectly well, that this is no fault of yours, and I can imagine equally well, that you have sustained inconvenience from the same cause. I merely mention my feelings upon the subject, because I consider any negociation or representation with Cramer's can only come from you; I do not feel myself authorised to interfere at all with them, and having said my say, I shall have no more to add, if they never take any more notice of us, which from present appearances, I think very probable.

I shall be with you about six o'Clock on Saturday Evening. Perhaps one of us — you can, if you are at the Theatre in the morning — may ascertain in the mean time, at what hour the Rehearsal begins.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqre.

To H. K. BROWNE, [JANUARY 1837]*

Facsimile in Dickens House. Date: clearly not later than mid-Jan, since written beneath Browne's original drawing for "The First Interview with Mr. Serjeant Snubbin", Pickwick No. XI, Feb 37.

I think the Sergeant should look younger, and a great deal more sly, and knowing — he should be looking at Pickwick too, smiling compassionately at his innocence. The other fellows are noble — CD

To J. P. HULLAH, [?14 JANUARY 1837]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: not long after Charley's birth. For the revivals of The Village Coquettes mentioned here, see | To Hullah, ?12 Jan.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My Dear Hullah.

Come whenever you please; there is not the least fear of your being in the way. Although Catherine is not quite so well to-day, we are as quiet as if nothing had happened, and have been since the young gentleman's first appearance.

Braham wrote to me this morning, begging me to send in plenty of orders.[†1] I have written fifty, and have arranged for you to write your own, which you will begin to do to-night, if you please. I am not at all surprised to hear that the opera went off wretchedly. What is to be expected when the Theatre that has by many degrees the worst company in London, charges the highest prices?[†2]

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esqre.

To E. S. MORGAN,[†3] [?JANUARY 1837]

Mention in To Bentley, ?19 Jan. Date: two or three days before the 19th.

To SAMUEL LOVER, [?JANUARY 1837]

Mention in To Bentley, ?19 Jan.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?18 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the first of three letters | to Bentley mentioning Lover, clearly written on successive days. The reference to Oliver in the third could hardly have been earlier than Fri 20 Jan, since CD was behind-hand on the 9th (see To Cruikshank, that day).

Furnivals Inn. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I must beg you once again, not to allow anybody but myself to interfere with the Miscellany.[†1] I have received a note from Lover, complaining with some justice that the effect of Handy Andy[†2] was greatly and materially impaired last month, in consequence of the whole disposition of his Dialogue having been altered after he saw a proof. If we do this, we may go look for contributors in Grub Street.

I am very happy to say that I think the next No. will be an exceedingly good one.[†3] I have bestowed great pains and time upon it, and shall consider the arrangement, well. Moreover, I think I have hit on a capital notion for myself, and one which will bring Cruikshank out.[†4]

I shall see you on Saturday if I do not hear from you before. Meanwhile Believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?19 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: see last.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir

I shall of course be with you at 12 o'Clock on Saturday. Meanwhile will you have the goodness to ascertain that copies of the Miscellany are sent to all the Sunday Papers.[†5] I wrote to Mr. Morgan about it, two or three days ago, but I add this refresher in order that it may not be forgotten.

I am hard at work cutting down Jerdan's paper, and touching it up as well as I can. It is hard work indeed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

PS. I have written to Lover. I have received two serious ballads from Haynes Bayley[†1] with Latin Versions by Archdeacon Wrangham.[†2] They will both go into a page;[†3] and the name of the latter is worth having.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?20 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: see last.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My Dear Sir

I wrote to you about Handy Andy, just what Lover wrote me. I am not responsible for the Printer,[†4] and shall return that reply if I am assailed again on the same score. I only beg him not to alter my dialogue.

Have you seen Oliver Twist yet? I have taken a great fancy to him — I hope he deserves it.

Dr. Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [?21 JANUARY 1837]

MS Berg Collection. Date: presumably the Saturday after 19 Jan, when he was working on Jerdan's paper.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir

I inclose you a proof of "John Richardson"[†5] which you will perhaps have the goodness to revise and return to me directly.

I have been compelled by great press of matter to cut it a little here and there, but I hope you will not think the effect of the paper impaired thereby.

I have been obliged to perform the same kind office to my own articles, and was last month at the very greatest disadvantage.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?21 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: This must refer to the farce (Is She His Wife?) which CD took to Chalk to alter (see 6 Feb). He had finished his month's work by 24 Jan (see To Culliford, that day). Address: J. P. Harley Esqre. | Saint James's Theatre.

Furnivals Inn. | Saturday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

Between the anxieties of my private affairs, and the distractions of my public engagements, I have not yet got over Pickwick and the Miscellany and consequently can admit no "other lodger"[†1] into my brain at this moment. I have by me a little piece in one act called "Cross Purposes",[†2] which I wrote long before I was Boz. It would admit of the introduction of any Music;[†3] and if you think there is anything in it, it is at your service.

I had intended to send the MS to you to-night, but if you are likely to be at home and disengaged at any reasonable hour tomorrow, I will call with it in my pocket, and discuss affairs in general.

You can send me a verbal answer by my brother. Of course the Lodger will be forthcoming.

Faithfully Yours my dear Sir,
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [24 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Clearly this and next refer to the same indisposition.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Oliver Twist making nearly eleven pages, I have only five more[†1] to write for the next Miscellany — and those five I am compelled — really[†2] compelled; — in such matters, it is not a word that I easily admit into my vocabulary — to defer until some future opportunity, and to make up, as I am carried on by my subject.[†3] Mrs. Dickens has been for some days past, in a very low and alarming state; and although she is a little better this morning, I am obliged to be constantly with her, being the only person who can prevail upon her to take ordinary nourishment. I have been labouring for two days past, under a violent attack of God knows what, in the head; and in addition to all my other worry, am experiencing the debility, sickness, and all the other comfortable symptoms consequent upon about as much medicine as would be given to an ordinary-sized horse. Although I have perhaps the best subject I ever thought of, I really cannot[†4] write under these combined disadvantages.

If I thought it would injure the next Number, I should find no relief in sitting idle, but it will not, I am certain. I have thrown my whole heart and soul into Oliver Twist, and most confidently believe he will make a feature in the work, and be very popular. The gossip of Lady Mary[†5] exceeds our calculation; and without this second paper of mine, the table of contents will be exactly what we agreed upon. I have still a very great deal to do in reading communications, and preparing answers to correspondents; I have done a great deal in altering the papers that will appear, wherever they were weak; and between the one and the other, I really have done, with anxiety and sickness about me, more than nine people out of ten could have performed. We shall have a very strong number, and I am sure you cannot doubt my anxiety and interest in our joint behalf.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. [J.] CULLIFORD,[†1] [24 JANUARY 1837]

Composite text from Autograph Prices Current, VI, 49, Maggs catalogue, 1939, and N, I, 100. Date: endorsed 24 Jan 37, according to APC. No reason to doubt this was a contemporary endorsement.

Furnival's Inn | Tuesday Afternoon

My Dear Uncle,

I regret to say that I cannot leave home this evening. Catherine is not so well as she was; and we have a consultation here, at six o'clock.

I was seized last night with a violent pain in my head (fortunately, just as I had concluded my month's work), and was immediately ordered as much medicine as would confine an ordinary-sized horse to his stall for a week. [†a]Whether it arises from the "influentials",[†2] or from close application, or from worry, or from the wind cholic, to quote King Arthur,[†3] I know not; but this I know — that surely against my will, much to my disappointment, here I am, and in a gloomy and miserable state, here I must remain.[†a]

Believe me
Affectionately yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

T. C.[†4] Culliford Esqre.

To [?E. S. MORGAN], 26 JANUARY [1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Address: more likely to be to Morgan, Bentley's general factotum, than to Wilson, the foreman printer.

Furnivals Inn | January 26th.

Sir.

Have the goodness to inform Mr. Bentley that having had no further communication with him on the subject, I have not written the address[†5] to which your note refers; and that beyond speaking to the artist upon the subject, I have given no directions for the wood cut. Mr. Bentley is aware that I have been extremely unwell; and I presume charged you with this commission before I acquainted him with the fact.[†1]

Yours &c
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS CHAPMAN,[†2] [27 JANUARY 1837]

MS Professor Guy Chapman. Date: endorsed in a contemporary hand "Jany. 27. 1837."

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I beg innumerable pardons for omitting to write to, or call on you; still more for having forgotten that my sisters, Mrs. Dickens, and I, have been engaged for the last month to a party tonight. I need not say that Mrs. Dickens is not going,[†3] but I must, even at the loss of the ancient Roman game of the Flying Ball[†4] which I have no doubt I should have found far more amusing than the modern entertainment of a dancing one.

I may venture to return thanks on the part of Miss Hogarth for your kindness, although she has left us.

Pray remember me to all in Arundel Street,[†5] and Believe me

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [28 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: two days after his reference to the "address" in To ?Morgan, 26 Jan.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Much obliged for your good wishes. I hope to find on Monday at 12 o'Clock, that you have turned the corner, and come back again. I shall bring the prospectus with me — the address, rather — and moreover the block, ready for cutting. I am glad to find that you altered the Notices to Correspondents.[†1] Of course I did not know without previous communication with you, who were, or who were not, privately known to you. We can have a mark on such communications in future.

I have spoken to my Pickwick artist. He is delighted at the prospect of doing an etching for the Miscellany.[†2] His demand is £5. I suppose it is not too much, considering all things. This drawing on the block,[†3] you had better commission me to give him what you think proper, for.

I am much pleased with the number, and am certain we shall improve. Buss[†4] has treated a very good subject,[†5] in a very indifferent manner. Lover writes better than he draws.[†6]

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I am very glad to see that you advertise "Crichton".[†7]

To THOMAS BEARD, [28 JANUARY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: the Saturday before publication of the Feb Miscellany, in which the first instalment of Oliver ("my glance at the new poor Law Bill") appeared. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Night.

My Dear Beard

I cannot lay my hand on that confounded Letter. I fear it must have been destroyed by mistake.

I shall be in New Burlington Street at 12 oClock on Monday. Perhaps if you should be coming in to town on that day, you will have no objection to enquire for me at Bentley's at about a quarter past 12. If you have been to Watts I can hear what you have done; if you have not, we can go together.

I send you herewith, the forthcoming Miscellany, with my glance at the new poor Law Bill.[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I want a walk; — we can have a stroll on Monday, if you are not engaged. The top of the Monument is one of my longings; the ditto of Saint Pauls, another.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 31 JANUARY 1837*

MS Morgan Library.

15 Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Jany. 31st. 1837

My Dear Henry.

As every succeeding day's acquaintance with you, has only tended to heighten the friendship I have so long entertained, and the esteem I have always so imperfectly professed for you, you may imagine that nothing could give me more heartfelt pleasure than the prospect of forming a nearer and lasting connection with you,[†1] which I hope promises many years of close and happy intercourse.

The feelings you express in your note, I can well understand. I have no doubt that you have taken this step after the maturest consideration; and I have as little doubt, that being the case, that it will be mainly conducive to your welfare and felicity.

I speak most unaffectedly and plainly — when I say, that had I a marriageable daughter (which thank God I have not) of all the young men I know or ever did know, I should delight in seeing her set her cap at you; and when I have one (if ever such an event should happen, which Heaven in its mercy postpone) I only hope she may be fortunate enough to meet your exact copy. As I don't think you would "keep" until that time, I give you up to Letitia most cheerfully; having the favorite street consolation that you are "one of the family".

I hope you will find that you have a wife, who is at least most conscious of your worth and value; I hope you will meet all the success in life which your industry deserves, and your ability will sooner or later command; I hope you will meet with every happiness that you picture to yourself in these palmy days; and I hope, lastly, though not least heartily, that you will meet your eldest brother-in-law in the staunchest and truest-hearted cordiality, for at least sixty years to come.

Believe me
My Dear Henry
Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esqre.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?JANUARY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Signature suggests late Jan 37. Address: Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Morning

Dr. Sir.

The Fraser[†2] I have returned. The Metropolitan I will, but I can't lay my hand upon it at this moment, and don't like to detain the Messenger; Lewis's Sketches,[†3] I do.

Hard at work, at Pickwick.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To E. M. FITZGERALD,[†1] [?JANUARY 1837]†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Handwriting suggests early 1837.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Evening

My Dear Sir.

†a I am, I very much regret to say, prevented from seeing you to-day, by one of the worst and most annoying colds that even in this season, can well attack one.(a It depresses me so much, and I have the prospect of so many days labour before me, that I am afraid of increasing it, and compelled though sorely against my inclination, to remain at home.

†b I assure you most unaffectedly that I am exceedingly sorry to be deprived of the pleasure I anticipated from your very kind invitation. I have only one consolation — it is, the hope that you will give me another opportunity of enjoying your society and hospitality on some future occasion.†b

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Fitzgerald Esqre.

February

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [4 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Whitehead's receipt is dated 6 Feb 37.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to pay Mr. Charles Whitehead eight guineas for his paper "Edward Saville".†2

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [6 FEBRUARY 1837]

MS Huntington Library. Date: PM 6 Feb 37. Address: J. P. Harley Esqre. | Saint James's Theatre | King Street | Saint James's | London.

Mrs. Nash's Chalk†3 nr. Gravesend | Monday afternoon

My Dear Sir.

Not having had time to finish altering the farce†4 before I left town, I brought it down here with me on Saturday; altered it on Saturday Night; and (by previous arrangement) forwarded it pr. Mail directed to Mr.

Hogarth Junr. to be left at the office in the City 'till called for. He was to finish copying it on Sunday, & leave it at the Theatre for you, to-day.

To-day there comes down to me a Special Messenger from Furnivals Inn to relate how the Mail came, and the Parcel didn't, according to the Booking Office Clerk's report. How on earth this can be, I cannot for the life and soul of me, make out. I have sent the Messenger back to make further enquiries, and have no doubt it will be found to be a mistake. I wrote a letter to you, which you will receive in the parcel when it turns up — I write this hasty communication to account for the delay.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?8 FEBRUARY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: presumably the Wednesday mentioned in To Bentley, 10 Feb — by which date the March Oliver was finished. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

Since I came up by the Boat this morning, I have been detained for a long time at Bentley's, and since then, in looking at a house. I have missed the steamer, and shall have to go back by a Dovor[†1] coach. I hope therefore, you will excuse my not coming up to you, for I really am so driven for time, that I know not where to turn. The accompanying MS is the next Chapter of Oliver Twist; there will be another — a short one — in the same number. The place which I think will make a good Illustration is at p 17, but to understand it thoroughly, I fear you will have to read the whole. We had better not give Oliver's real master and mistress this number, because we shall want them in the next plate; and for this reason I have substituted a preliminary negociation with Mr. Gamfield the Sweep.[†2]

If you have anything to write or say to me, my brother will forward it. I shall be in town again, tomorrow week for the whole day.

You may imagine that I am anxious to get back, for Mrs. D will expect me at 5, and I shall not be there 'till 3 or 4 hours after. She is very well & desires her best love to Mrs. Cruikshank. — Believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

"Regular Habits"[†3] I have read. If the writer does not object to my careful curtailment it shall appear — but I fear not in the next No.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [8 FEBRUARY 1837]

Mention in To Bentley, 10 Feb 37. Date: the Wednesday before.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [10 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM Gravesend 10 Feb 37. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street. | London.

Chalk. | Friday Night.

My Dear Sir

I wrote an order on you, when I was in town on Wednesday, in favor of one Mr. Lyddy,[†1] who wrote Richie Barter.[†2] It has just occurred to me that, mistaking the length of the article, I made it five pounds instead of two pounds ten. The latter would be quite enough, as it is only 5 pages; and for him, payment at the rate of eight guineas a sheet, would be quite sufficient.

If the order has not been presented, will you have the goodness to rectify this mistake? If it has been, I will set the matter right when I next come to town.

I am happy to say that Oliver is finished, and the other paper[†3] in hand.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [13 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Lyddy's receipt is dated 15 Feb (Bentley Papers, BM).

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to pay Mr. Lyddy, the author of "Richie Barter" three guineas for that contribution? —

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

New Burlington St.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 13 FEBRUARY 1837*

MS British Museum.

Feby. 13th. 1837

Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to pay Mr. A' Beckett Five Pounds for his paper, entitled "Authors & Actors"?

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To W. WILSON,[†1] [?13 FEBRUARY 1837]

Mention in next. Date: probably the same day.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [13 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: clearly the covering letter to the two orders for payment of 13 Feb.

Chalk | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I find that the order about which I wrote to you, has not reached the gentleman's hands. I have written him another for Three Pounds,[†2] which he will present in due course. I have also written Mr. A Beckett, one for Five.[†3]

Oliver and the Pantomime of Life are both finished, and with the Printer. The working off an additional thousand of the last No. has thrown him back; and as we could not begin[†4] working off any sheet before, we can now commence from the beginning of the Magazine, and go regularly on. I have written to Wilson to this effect, and shall see him on Friday Morning.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I don't think much of the Devil and Johnny Dixon.[†5]

To THOMAS BEARD, [22 FEBRUARY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM Gravesend 22 Feb 37. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Mrs. Nash's Chalk near Gravesend. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Beard

I am only this "blessed day" finishing my month's work,[†1] or I should have written to you before. I now write to say that Catherine and I, both agree, that it will do you a vast deal of good to spend from Saturday to Monday here, until such time as we leave, which I fear will not afford you scope for more than two visits. I want you to come down by the first boat (8 O'Clock I think) from London Bridge Wharf on Saturday Morning, as I want to set off to Chatham with Kate and Mary, as soon as you come; inspect the fortifications; and order a snug little dinner at the Sun. On Sunday I am unfortunately engaged to dine at the Marine Barracks,[†2] but I dare say you will not mind being left for a few hours with the ladies and the Cigars. We can give you a bed, and shall feel much disappointed if you do not comply with our requisition and come at once.

I shall be in town tomorrow, and most probably next day, too, but as I shall be hurried about very much between Pickwick and the Miscellany, I can make no appointment with any degree of certainty. The best plan therefore, will be for you to write me by return.

With best remembrances from Kate and your Godson

Believe me
My Dear Beard
Most sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [LATE FEBRUARY 1837]

MS Public Library of Victoria. Date: Signature points to early 1837; since CD sent Jerdan a proof of his article for the Feb Miscellany (on 21 Jan), this probably refers to his March article. Plainly written late in the month.

Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have been at the Printer's this morning, and have managed I am happy to say, to get your article[†3] into the forthcoming Number. Being so late there was no time to send you a proof, but I looked over it myself, carefully.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?24 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: perhaps the Friday before 28 Feb when he asked Bentley for an advance to help with the "expences attendant upon [his] new house". Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street.

Furnivals Inn | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

I have offered for the house I mentioned,[†1] and have taken the liberty of mentioning your name, among those of other references, to testify to my being "sober and honest" &c — to testify in short to my being Boz.

I spoke to Chapman and Hall about the Speeches.[†2] They desired me to say that they will require 14,000, and that they must be had, by tomorrow morning.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [28 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 1 Mar 37 (Wednesday). Address: Private | Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street | London.

Chalk | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

As I want to ask a favor of you, which perhaps on your part may require a little consideration, I think it better perhaps to write to you to-day, although I shall no doubt see you at Ainsworth's dinner tomorrow evening.

If you can do it without inconvenience, I want an advance from you of £100. I do not want this to be considered as an advance on account of the Miscellany, but as on account of the Novel;[†3] — on the distinct understanding that if I do not proceed with the latter with reasonable expedition, you shall be at liberty to deduct it from what I receive from you, under our agreement for the former.

The expences attendant upon my new house will exhaust such available funds as I have by me; and this would be a very great convenience to me, without, I hope, at all inconveniencing you. If, however, I am wrong in this last supposition, I hope you will feel no delicacy in saying so at once, for although I would rather ask you for the money than any one else, connected as we are likely to be, I can easily obtain it elsewhere, if "the worst come to the worst" —

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To F. H. RANKIN, [?FEBRUARY 1837]

Extract in Rankin to Bentley, 3 July 39 (MS BM). Date: probably not long before Rankin's first contribution to the Miscellany, "The Biography of Aunt Jemima", Apr 37.

Rankin, after asking Bentley what he might expect to receive for "three trifles inserted in your Miscellany", added that CD as editor had written to him: Mr. Bentley's terms for contributions to the Miscellany, are of the most liberal description.[†1]

March

To JOHN FORSTER,[†2] [?2 MARCH 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: "early in March" according to F, II, i, 85; CD apparently left Chalk on 6 Mar (see To Beard, 22 Feb, mentioning two further week-ends in Chalk before their return to London).

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday afternoon

My Dear Sir.

I have been hurried about this morning, among a crew (I know no better word for them) of house agents and attornies, until I have nearly missed my conveyance to Chalk, and am more than half wild besides. I am really disappointed at not being able to call on you, but will most certainly and without fail do myself that pleasure on Monday Morning.

My Dear Sir
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, [?MARCH 1837]*

MS Dickens House. Date: Signature points to Mar 37. CD and Catherine probably returned to London on the 6th, in time to see the first night of Is She His Wife?

Furnivals Inn. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your invitation, but I have solemnly pledged myself to Mrs. Dickens to-night.

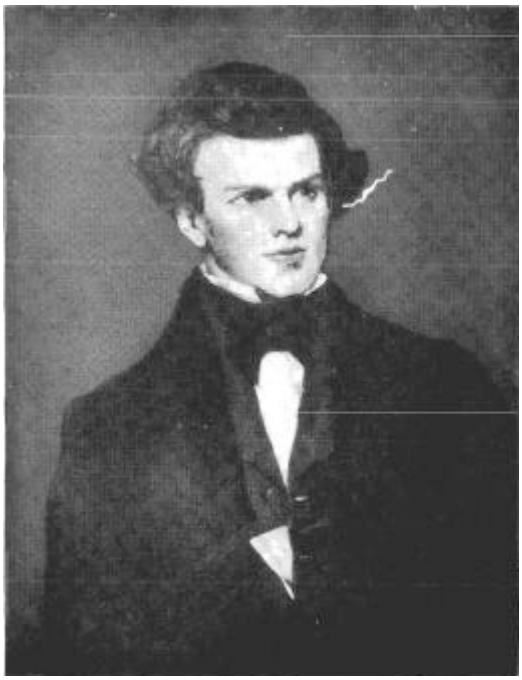
Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esqre.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [1834-7]

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2007 (1925); dated Furnival's Inn, Thursday evening. Date: any time from Dec 34 to Mar 37 while CD at Furnival's Inn.

To someone in want of employment, referring him to John Dickens and Charles Ross at the Times Office.



8. John Forster in 1830
From the painting by Warrington and Maclise

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [9 or 16 MARCH 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The new Agreement was signed Fri 17 Mar. This must have been written either one day or eight days before.

30 Upper Norton Street[†1] | Thursday.

My Dear Sir.

I have looked over the agreement you gave me yesterday; and I do not think that the advantages it holds out, are sufficient to compensate me for pledging myself not to write for any other periodical (with the exception recited in our original agreement) for so long a period as five years. If you will alter the agreement under the following heads, I shall be very happy to reconsider it, — being sincerely desirous to meet your views if possible.[†2]

1 — I propose that the clause empowering you to renew the agreement at the end of five years, be wholly omitted.[†3]

2 — That the sum to be paid to me on your discontinuing the Miscellany shall be two hundred and fifty pounds, or the notice, twelvemonths.[†4]

3 — That instead of allowing me an additional ten pounds for every additional thousand of the Miscellany sold, you agree to raise my salary as its Editor on the publication of the 6th., 12th., 24th. and 36th. Numbers; the proportions are of course matters for consideration. We know that the more firmly it becomes established, the less will be the expence of advertizing it, and the greater the profit of advertizing in it. We have every right, judging from what we have already done, to calculate on a steady increase of its sale; and I think this is not an unreasonable request.[†5]

With these alterations, and a slight alteration in the 6th. Clause of our original agreement,[†6] to which I feel certain you could entertain no objection, I should be very willing to give any agreement you might feel disposed to enter into with me, the most favorable consideration. If you object to re-modelling it, I would rather the matter remained where it is. As the Miscellany has certainly made a most successful beginning, and has before it a very promising career, I feel quite sure that you must feel desirous by any second agreement to place me in a better situation than the first places me in. This is but fair, and I think the mode I have pointed out, would be mutually advantageous to us.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To H. K. BROWNE, [MID-MARCH 1837]

Facsimile in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue No. 1468 (1953). Date: clearly not later than mid-March, since written above and below Browne's original drawing for "Mr. Winkle's Situation when the Door blew-to", Pickwick No. XIII, Apr 37.

Winkle should be holding the Candlestick above his head I think. It looks more comical, the light having gone out.

A fat chairman so short as our friend here, never drew breath in Bath. I would leave him where he is, decidedly. Is the lady full dressed? She ought to be.

CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [MARCH 1837]

Mention in Thomas Wright, Life of CD, 1935, p. 113; from "Furnivals Inn, I mean Upper Norton Street". Date: Mistake over address suggests early in his period at Upper Norton Street.

To THOMAS HANDISYDE,[†1] [17 or 18 MARCH 1837]

Summary from Handisyde to Banks, 18 Mar 37 (MS Dickens House). Date: According to Handisyde he had just received CD's offer.

Saying that he would be willing to treat for No. 48 Doughty Street, if the landlord were disposed to let it on a simple agreement for three years at the rent of £80 p.a.;[†2] that he would paint the front Drawing Room and blind frames round windows; that it was extremely probable that he would remain its tenant for a considerable time as he had engagements which would keep him in London for many years to come, but he objected to take a lease of any house whatever; that it was unnecessary to add that the best references would be given.

He would be glad to secure an early answer (directed to him at No. 30 Upper Norton Street or 15 Furnival's Inn) as he had to make choice out of the houses he had seen by Ladyday. He mentioned also that the ceiling required to be cleaned.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [22 or 29 MARCH 1837]

MS Berg Collection. Date: March since from Upper Norton Street; revised proof would not have been ready before the third week in the month, and might have been even later.

Upper Norton Street. | Wednesday Morning.

Dear Sirs

Have the goodness to get me, while the bearer waits, a revised proof of the new Pickwick. I want it particularly.

In haste
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 MARCH 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Sketches, First Series, 3rd edn, and Second Series, 2nd edn, were published on 11 and 21 Mar respectively.

Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

You will say it is no compliment, to beg your acceptance of a couple of books which, being in their second and third editions are no longer new, and which you have already seen.

As I wish you to consider it anything but a compliment, I am perfectly content that you should say so; and if you will receive them as a very small testimony of the donor's regard and obligations, as well as of his desire to cultivate and avail himself of a friendship which has been so pleasantly thrown in his way — in short if you will receive them for my sake, and not for their own, you will very greatly oblige me.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [29 MARCH 1837]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: presumably on seeing in final form the Apr Miscellany, in which the "Memoirs of Sheridan" appeared.

Wednesday afternoon

My Dear Sir

I will take the chance of finding you at home, tomorrow at ½ past 12. I am very sorry to say, that the alterations which have been made in the contents of the Miscellany very greatly injure it — in my opinion at least. That article on Sheridan[†1] is a desperately heavy one to close with.

In haste my dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [30 MARCH 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Chapman & Hall's formal invitation to Beard for the Pickwick dinner was dated 29 Mar 37.[†2] Clearly CD was writing the next day. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Upper Norton Street | Thursday

My Dear Beard

I suppose you have by this time received formal announcement that the dinner at Chapman and Hall's is fixed for Saturday the 8th. of April. In case you have not, I write to tell you so.[†3]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [31 MARCH 1837]

Text from N, I, 104. Date: Presumably Chapman & Hall had sent the cheque shortly before the anniversary of the publication of Pickwick No. I, and their note on the anniversary itself.

Upper Norton Street | Friday Evening

Dear Sirs,

I received the Shakespeare letter[†4] and cheque[†5] in due course. I have been so deeply involved in the worry and turmoil of "moving"[†6] that I have put off acknowledging the receipt of the very acceptable tria juncta in uno till now, and I fear should not have done so until I saw you tomorrow had not your note arrived just now.

Accept my very best thanks for your handsome communication, and for the time and manner you chose for making it which renders it doubly gratifying. It was not because I was insensible of your most honourable conduct that I have not acknowledged it, but because (as I have said) I was much put about; and as I knew I should see you tomorrow, I fancied I had an additional excuse for my most unbusiness-like behaviour.

Believe me
Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

April

To J. P. HARLEY, [?APRIL 1837]

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Date: Handwriting strongly suggests Spring 1837; therefore presumably refers to the revival of The Village Coquettes in Apr, rather than to the revivals of Jan or Feb. Address: J. P. Harley Esqre. | St. James's Theatre.

Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

As I have two or three business engagements this morning, I inclose the altered book of the Village Coquettes, in case I should not be able to reach the Theatre. I shall come down if possible some time in the course of the day, to know when you intend to call it —

Believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?5 APRIL 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: Apr or first week in May on conjunction of Doughty Street address, signature, and absence of mourning paper for Mary Hogarth's death (7 May)[†1]. Clearly CD was referring to a rehearsal for the revival in Apr.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Have you called the Coquettes yet? If so, for when?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [7 APRIL 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The name "Boz" was first omitted from The Village Coquettes playbills on 8 Apr, for the revival on 10 Apr, having appeared in playbills of the 6th and 7th. Address: J. P. Harley Esquire | 14 Upper Gower Street | Bedford Square.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

Have the goodness in the bills of the Village Coquettes to omit all mention of our respectable friend "Boz". After the choppings and changings[†1] which this most unfortunate of all unfortunate pieces has undergone, I am not anxious to remind the Public that I am the perpetrator.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 APRIL 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: the day before the dinner of 8 Apr (see To Beard, 30 Mar).

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I am very sorry to hear that you have considered it necessary to bestow a second thought on our mistake of Saturday last. We only called upon you a second time, in the hope of getting you to dine with us, and were much disappointed not to find you.

I have delayed writing a reply to your note, meaning to call upon you. I have been so much engaged however, in the pleasant occupation of "moving" that I have not had time, and I am obliged at last to write and say that I have been long engaged to the Pickwick publisher's[†2] to a dinner in honor of that hero, which comes off tomorrow. I am consequently unable to accept your kind Invite which I frankly own I should have liked much better.

Believe me My Dear Sir
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?10 APRIL 1837]

MS Hr Jacob Christensen. Date: see covering letter to Bentley, below, clearly written the same day.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have looked over Uncle Sam,[†1] and am still of the opinion I originally formed, that we could not use it for the Miscellany without great injury to the Author. It contains a great deal of matter; and if I took a few pages here and there, occasionally, it would neither, I am convinced, serve his purpose nor ours. I therefore think it better to return the MS to you without further delay, wishing it to be distinctly understood that in so doing, I wish by no means to be considered as expressing any unfavorable opinion of the MS itself.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?10 APRIL 1837]

Mention in next. Date: same day as last.

Enclosing the MS of "Tales of a Judge".

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?10 APRIL 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: probably before the middle of the month when CD and Bentley normally made up the contents of the Miscellany. "A Visit to the Madrigal Society" appeared in the May No.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

One of the accompanying parcels contains "Uncle Sam"; the other — "tales of a Judge."[†2] In each is a note to yourself stating that their great length has induced me to return them, and that in so doing, I pronounce no unfavorable opinion of the papers.

I forgot to mention the other evening, that I have got a nice little paper

(about 5 pages) by a friend of Hogarth's called a visit to the Madrigal Society.[†1] I have pledged myself to insert it in the next No.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [?12 APRIL 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: Apr or first week in May on address, handwriting, and absence of mourning paper; probably refers to Sat 15 Apr, since in the following week he would have been too busy to sit to Cruikshank, and for Sat 29 Apr and Sat 6 May he had different arrangements. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | Morning Chronicle Office.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Beard.

John Ross[†2] dines with us on Saturday. Will you do the same at 5 oClock? Let me know.

Tell Edward Barrow if you see him this evening, that I was sitting for my portrait to George Cruikshank[†3] when he called to-day, and George being a ticklish subject could not leave him.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?14 APRIL 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Apr or first week in May on address, handwriting, and absence of mourning paper; perhaps between the return of the two papers on 10 Apr and the making up of the contents of the May Miscellany on the 20th. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Eg.

My Dear Sir

The articles I get for the Miscellany are entered by name in a book as they arrive. The mistake about Prout's song[†4] originated in your giving me the wrong name when you sent for it. I am very unwell indeed, to-day, and only gave out half the copy by mistake.

Faithfully Yours
My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?20 APRIL 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Apr, since soon after the move to Doughty Street; CD's anxiety about Oliver and the Miscellany strongly suggests that he was writing in the third rather than the second week in the month.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Sir

Oblige me by saying that you will come and take your coffee with me to-night, at your own hour. I would not ask you, if I were not over head and ears with Oliver. My removal and the numerous takings off attendant thereupon have thrown me back so, that my time this month is more precious than ever. And as if these causes of delay were not enough, I do verily believe that I have had to read as many papers for the Miscellany, as all the Editors and Sub Editors of all the other Magazines put together.

Do not fail to come to me this evening, if you can, as I am most anxious to make up the contents at once, and have the means of doing so, here.

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?20 APRIL 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Apr or first week in May 37 on address, signature, and absence of mourning paper. Bentley's presence that evening and the promise to send Oliver point to same day as last. Address: | Wait[†1] | George Cruikshank Esqe.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir

Excuse my troubling you with a note which I know you abhor, but Mr. Bentley is here, and it is matter of life or death to us, to know whether you have got Ainsworth's MS[†2] yet. Oliver you shall have tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esq.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?21 APRIL 1837]*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales. Date: probably the day after last. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Would you object to illustrating Barker's[†1] paper for the next No.? We can wait no longer for Ainsworth. You shall have a fair proof of it,[†2] with Oliver Twist this morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?21 APRIL 1837]*

MS Mr Philip Blackwell. Date: Apr or first week in May on address, signature, and absence of mourning paper; the references to "last night" and arrangements with Cruikshank suggest 21 Apr.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

There are two things I forgot to mention to you, last night. The first is, that I want to introduce Mr. Whitehead to you, about his Novel.[†3] I think you mistake some other man[†4] for him, for he has never seen, or heard from you. He is anxious to do either the one or the other, and I think the shortest plan will be for me[†5] to bring him to you[†6] one of these mornings if you have no objection.

The second thing I forgot to mention, is, that I want at the usual trade allowance (if that be proper in an Author's case) a complete set of the Standard Novels[†7] up to this time, if you will have the goodness to direct them to be sent to me — and also the numbers to follow, as they come out.[†1]

I hope I have arranged with Cruikshank this morning, to our satisfaction.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [?21 APRIL 1837]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Jerdan's paper, "John Pooledoune, the Victim of Improvements", appeared in the June Miscellany; plainly, therefore, received too late in Apr for the May No.; unhurried tone of reference to "the end of the Month" suggests 21 not 28 Apr.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I had feared that you were not going to introduce me to the victim at all — so long have I expected him without avail.

I think the best plan will be to have him set up at the end of the Month, and a proof sent to you which you will be able to keep a week or two, and correct at your leisure. Do you think so, too?

It is really very unfair of you to charge any mistakes in your last paper[†2] upon me. — I exerted myself about it at the very last moment when there was not time to take it away from the printer's at your own special request. I can have no object but to please the contributors to the best of my power — more especially yourself — and this is very discouraging indeed.

I have not yet had time to read your friend's paper, but I will do so and return you an answer before the close of the Month. I have another paper about Ceylon you sent me, which I will return.

I want to see you about the Wictim, and also to ask you a question having reference to the "Hanniwersary".[†3] Shall you be passing near here any morning, or shall I call upon you?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esqre.

To R. F. WILLIAMS,[†1] [?21 APRIL 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Williams's paper appeared in the Apr Miscellany. The receipt for payment is dated Fri 21 Apr.

Friday Morning.

The Editor of Bentley's Miscellany presents his compts to Mr. Williams, and begs to forward him the No. for the present month which he would have received before, but for a mistake in the delivery. The payment for his paper[†2] Mr. Williams will receive on application at the publisher's.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?24 APRIL 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Perhaps Cruikshank had asked for a choice of papers before agreeing to illustrate Barker's "Nights at Sea" No. 2, and hence the three days' delay after CD's letter of ?21 Apr; both Barker's paper and "The Blue Wonder" appeared in May.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I inclose the Blue Wonder[†3] and the Nights at Sea.[†4] I think if you read the last, you may save yourself the trouble of reading the first. It seems to me, in the old Sailor's very best style.

Have you done with Oliver? I want to return the Copy to the Printer's. Have the goodness to let me have these proofs when you have done with them, as they are corrected by myself.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [24 APRIL 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Wade's[†5] "Song of the Month" appeared in the May Miscellany; CD is unlikely to have corrected the proofs before the last week in Apr.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I really don't know how I can make way for Darby the Swift[†6] in the next

No., unless by the omission of Falstaff.[†1] I think it had much better stand over, more especially as we shall have Wade's songs, and I have only just received the last chapter without which we could not have printed the first.

The Number is an excellent one as it stands, and I think it will be a great pity to disturb it. We had enough of that, in the last number.

I corrected the proof of the Second No. of "Nights at Sea" yesterday, and I am happy to say that I think it one of the very best papers the old Sailor ever wrote —

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [28 APRIL 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Bentley's reminiscences[†2] show that he dined with CD on the Saturday before Mary Hogarth's death, i.e. on 29 Apr.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I called on you to-day to ask you whether if you had no better engagement, you would dine with me tomorrow at 5. There are only Hogarth and Cruikshank coming, and we shall be very quiet, with a little Music in the Evening. If you can I shall be very happy to see you.

You will perhaps let me know by my brother who bears this. If you will be at home tomorrow morning too, I will call to speak with you on divers Miscellany matters.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?SPRING 1837]

Composite text from MDGH, I, 5 and Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, 18 Apr 1944. Date: between early Apr 37 when CD moved to Doughty Street, and Dec 37 when he began writing "My Dear Harley"; possibly not long after Braham's production of Is She His Wife? (6 Mar 37).

48, Doughty Street, Saturday Morning.

My dear Sir,

I have considered the terms on which I could afford just now, to sell Mr. Braham the acting copyright in London of an entirely new piece for the St. James's Theatre; and I could not sit down to write one in a single act of about an hour long, under a hundred pounds. For a new piece in two acts, a hundred and fifty pounds would be the sum I should require.[†1]

I do not know whether, with reference to arrangements that are made with any other writers, this may or may not appear a large sum. I state it merely with regard to the value of my own time and writings at this moment — and in so doing, I assure you I place the remuneration below the mark rather than above it.

As you begged me to give you my reply upon this point, perhaps you will lay it before Mr. Braham. If these terms exceed his inclination or the ability of the Theatre, there is an end of the matter, and no harm done.

Believe me ever faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS†2

To THOMAS MITTON, [?SPRING 1837]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: watermark 1836; handwriting suggests Spring 37; cannot be later since seal red. Address: Mr Mitton.

Dear Tom

I don't know yet, but I will see you before; — either tomorrow or Friday. I inclose the £10 for Connor,†3 but I cannot accept the bill until I know from him (my little book being mislaid) on what days the other two bills are due. Will you be so kind as to inclose him the £10 and ask him the question?

Faithfully Yours
C.D.

May

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [3 MAY 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Whitehead's receipt is dated 6 May. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Will you have the goodness to pay Mr. Charles Whitehead, Three Guineas for his paper "The Youth's new Vade Mecum" in the last Miscellany.†1

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?EARLY MAY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Apr or first week in May on address and absence of mourning paper; signature suggests early May.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have read the several articles by Major Pryse Gordon,[†2] which I herewith return. Although they would possess considerable interest for military or naval gentlemen, I fear that to the public generally — our public at all events — they would present few attractions. Perhaps you will do me the favor to present my best compliments and thanks to Major Gordon and to suggest that the United Service Journal would be the best medium he could select for the publication of his papers.[†3] Beg him to understand distinctly that in returning them, I by no means question their merit, but merely express my opinion that they are not adapted to the pages of the Miscellany.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?4 MAY 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: According to normal practice, Hullah would have been paid shortly after publication of the May Miscellany; absence of mourning paper supports this. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Afternoon.

My Dear Sir.

Will you have the goodness to pay the Author of the "Visit to the Madrigal Society" in No. 5, three pounds for his paper?

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [7 MAY 1837]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Mary Hogarth died on Sunday 7 May.

Doughty St. | Sunday Night

My Dear Sir

We are in deep and severe distress. Miss Hogarth after accompanying Mrs. Dickens & myself to the Theatre last night, was suddenly taken severely ill, and despite our best endeavours to save her, expired in my arms at two[†1] O'Clock this afternoon.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†2]
Edwd. Chapman Esqre.

To GEORGE THOMSON, 8 MAY 1837

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

48 Doughty Street Mecklenburgh Square.
Monday May 8th. 1837.

My Dear Sir.

It is my painful and melancholy duty to inform you, that poor Mary died here at three oClock yesterday afternoon. She had been with us to the Theatre the evening before; was taken suddenly ill in the night; and breathed her last in my arms at the time I have mentioned. She lies here, and Mrs. Hogarth who was present at her death has ever since remained insensible in this house.

We lost no time in procuring medical assistance, or in applying every remedy that skill and anxiety could suggest. The dear girl however sank beneath the attack. The medical men are of opinion that her heart had been diseased for a great length of time. Her general state of health, and above all the awful suddenness of her death induce me to think they are right.

You cannot conceive the misery in which this dreadful event has plunged us. Since our marriage she has been the grace and life of our home — the admired of all, for her beauty and excellence — I could have better spared a much nearer relation or an older friend, for she has been to us what we can never replace, and has left a blank which no one who ever know[†1] her can have the faintest hope of seeing supplied.

Believe me My Dear Sir
Affectionately and Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Thomson Esqre.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [8 MAY 1837]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: PM 8 May 37. On mourning paper.[†2] Address: William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre. | Kensal Lodge | Harrow Road.

48 Doughty St. | Monday Morning

My Dear Ainsworth.

It is my melancholy task to inform you that Mrs. Dickens' sister whom you saw here, and at the dinner on Wednesday,[†3] died in my arms yesterday afternoon. She had accompanied us to the Theatre the night before apparently in the best health; was taken ill in the night, and lies here a corpse. She has been our constant companion since our marriage; the grace and life of our home. — Judge how deeply we feel this fearfully sudden deprivation.

My Dear Ainsworth
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [8 MAY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 8 May 37. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington St. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I am most sorry to inform you that Mrs. Dickens' sister whom you saw here, after accompanying us to the Theatre on Saturday Evening in the best health and spirits, was taken suddenly ill, and died in my arms yesterday afternoon — since which time her mother has been also lying here in a state of insensibility. She was our constant friend and companion, and the loss independent of its fearful suddenness, is[†1] severely felt by us. I have given the Printer matter to go on with, and tomorrow or at furthest next day, will send him more. I must entreat you to spare me in the meanwhile.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To GEORGE COX,[†2] [8 MAY 1837]

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: same day as last. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday 3 o'Clock

Dear Sir.

My reply to your kind Invite of yesterday, is a melancholy one indeed. A sister of Mrs. Dickens' a young and lovely girl, who has been the grace and ornament of our home for the whole time of our marriage, died here yesterday. She was at the Theatre with us on Saturday Night well and happy, and expired in my arms a few hours afterwards.

Faithfuly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cox Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [12 MAY 1837]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day before Mary Hogarth's funeral. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

†[a]My Dear Sir

We are as yet, entirely undetermined about our proceedings. I rather think my father will go to Blackheath this morning, but as we are so wholly unresolved, I think we should do wrong to detain your sister in town a moment on our account. Mrs. Dickens desires her best love to her, and all the female Members of your family; and bids me say that she feels their kindness and attention in this trial most deeply, and will ever feel sincerely grateful for it.

I fear I must trouble you for as much as I had from you the other day. If it were at all inconvenient to you, you know that by one word or line I could get it elsewhere, but you have so often urged me to look upon you as my Bankers, and I am so much more disposed to avail myself of your friendly feeling than of that of any body else, that while I think you can do it without injury to yourselves, I have no hesitation in drawing upon you.†[a]

I feel that as tomorrow†[1] draws nigh, the bitterest part of this calamity is at hand. I hope that for that one day at all events I may be able to bear my part in it with fortitude, and to encourage and console those about me — it will be no harder time to anyone than myself.

They are all as well as can be looked-for this morning. Perhaps you will let me hear from you in the course of the day?

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [17 MAY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM 19 May 37 (Friday), clearly date of receipt. On mourning paper. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Collins's Farm.†[2] North End | Hampstead | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Beard.

I received your kind letter in due course. I should have written to you myself, to communicate the dreadful occurrence, but I had so many distressing appeals to my attention and exertions, that I was compelled to postpone doing so for a time.

I presume you heard from my father, that on the Saturday Night we had been to the Theatre — that we returned home as usual — that poor Mary was in the same health and spirits in which you have so often seen her — that almost immediately after she went up stairs to bed she was taken ill — and that next day she died. Thank God she died in my arms, and the very last words she whispered were of me.

Of our sufferings at the time, and all through the dreary week that ensued, I will say nothing — no one can imagine what they were. You have seen a good deal of her, and can feel for us, and imagine what a blank she has left behind. The first burst of my grief has passed, and I can think and speak of her, calmly and dispassionately. I solemnly believe that so perfect a creature never breathed. I knew her inmost heart, and her real worth and value. She had not a fault.

Mrs. Hogarth has suffered and still continues to suffer most deep and bitter anguish. Kate, I am glad to say, made such strong efforts to console her, that she unconsciously summoned up all her fortitude at the same time, and brought it to her own assistance. She knows that if ever a mortal went to Heaven, her sister is there; she has nothing to remember but a long course of affection and attachment, perhaps never exceeded. Not one cross word or angry look on either side, even as children, rises in judgment against her; and she is now so calm and cheerful that I wonder to see her.

I have been so shaken and unnerved by the loss of one whom I so dearly loved that I have been compelled to lay aside all thoughts of my usual monthly work, for once;[†1] and we have come here for quiet and change. We have a cottage of our own, with large gardens, and everything else on a small but comfortable scale. Kate is very anxious indeed to see you and as I can assure you that you will derive any thing but pain from seeing her, I hope you will join us in the old way. Name your own time, and believe me that there is no one whom it would give us so much pleasure to welcome as yourself.

Believe me My Dear Beard
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [17 MAY 1837]

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 19 May 37 (date of receipt, as last). On mourning paper. Address: William Ainsworth Esqre. | Kensall Lodge | Harrow Road.

Collins's Farm. North End. Hampstead | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Ainsworth.

I have been so much unnerved and hurt by the loss of the dear girl whom I loved, after my wife, more deeply and fervently than anyone on earth, that I have been compelled for once to give up all idea of my monthly work, and to try a fortnight's rest and quiet. We have hired a very small cottage here, and have repaired hither for a little change of air and scene.

I believe there is some cross road which leads out very near your house. I wish you would show me the way by coming here. You cannot think how glad I should be to see you just now. I have given you the address above, and must leave the rest to you.

With compliments to the Ladies
Believe me
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

I had folded this note, when I saw, lying on the table, the inclosed card[†2]

among others. Thinking it the shortest plan, I have folded that up, also. Whether I have done right or no, I am not certain. I rather suspect, not.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH [?21 MAY 1837]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: The two calls paid by Ainsworth were surely the result of CD's letter to him of 17 May and followed quickly after it. On mourning paper.

Hampstead | Sunday Evening

My Dear Ainsworth.

I am very sorry that I was at Church when you called this morning, the more so as I had the misfortune to be in town when you called before. If nothing occur to prevent me, I shall have very great pleasure in meeting our friends on Tuesday. Mrs. Dickens is getting on excellently here and begs me to thank you for your kind remembrances.

Believe me
My Dear Ainsworth.
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?23 MAY 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: On mourning paper; handwriting points to May-July 37; therefore written either on return from Hampstead or from France (in July). Wording of first sentence strongly suggests the former; he had given the printer "matter to go on with" on 8 May (To Bentley, that day).

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Sir

I have returned to town, and am to be found here every evening.[†1] I have, as yet, received nothing whatever, made up. The Printers had the matter for two or three sheets, long ago.

I called upon you this morning, and found you had not returned. Will you look in upon me, whenever you think we can do anything?

I shall be much obliged to you, if you will send me tomorrow morning, on account of our monthly settlement, a cheque for £30. I have various calls this month, and it will help me, greatly.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?MAY 1837]

MS Huntington Library. Date: on mourning paper with wide black border, as for several letters of May 37; perhaps the "notes & visitors" were the result of CD's return to work (see To Bentley, ?23 May). Address: Mr. Thomas Mitton.

Thursday Mg

My Dear Tom

I was so worried with notes & visitors yesterday that I was not only prevented from coming but forgot to write to you. — I will be with you tomorrow Morning at ½ past One.

Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26 MAY 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; careful handwriting and tone suggest early in their friendship; probably shortly before Forster's visit to Hampstead "at the close of May".[†1]

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster.

Let me beg your acceptance of the accompanying Nos. of the Miscellany, — not as a matter of business, or with any view to notices thereof, past present or to come, but because I should really be greatly disappointed if I wrote anything which you had not an early opportunity of reading. This looks very like vanity I dare say, but I do not mean it so. Believe me that it affords me great pleasure to hear that you continue to read my writings, and far greater gratification than I can well describe to you to hear from your own lips that poor Oliver "affects" you — which I take to be the highest of all praise.

Believe me with great sincerity
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

I shall expect you on Tuesday, remember.

To RICHARD JOHNS,[†1] [31 MAY 1837]

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 2 June 37, presumably date of receipt; on mourning paper. Address: Richard Johns Esqre. | &c &c | Royal Marine Barracks | Chatham.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Johns.

I should have written either to you or Mrs. Johns long 'ere this, had I not had so many painful and distressing demands on my time and exertions, as to render me for a time apparently unmindful of many kind and esteemed friends.

The loss we deplore and to which the Pickwick notice[†2] bears reference, is the sudden death in this house, of our dear sister Mary Hogarth. On the day previous to that on which you dined with us she had gone home to see her Mama. On the day after, she returned. On the Saturday Evening we went to the Saint James's Theatre; she went up stairs to bed at about one o'Clock in perfect health and her usual delightful spirits; was taken ill before she had undressed; and died in my arms next afternoon at 3 o'Clock. Everything that could possibly be done was done but nothing could save her. The medical men imagine it was a disease of the heart.

From the day of our marriage the dear girl had been the grace and life of our home, our constant companion, and the sharer of all our little pleasures. The love and affection which subsisted between her and her sister, no one can imagine the extent of. We might have known that we were too happy together to be long without a change.

The change has come, and it has fallen heavily upon us. I have lost the dearest friend I ever had. Words cannot describe the pride I felt in her, and the devoted attachment I bore her. She well deserved it, for with abilities far beyond her years, with every attraction of youth and beauty, and conscious as she must have been of everybody's admiration, she had not a single fault, and was in life almost as far above the foibles and vanity of her sex and age as she is now in Heaven.

Mrs. Dickens has had a trying task for in the midst of her own affliction she has had to soothe the sufferings of her bereaved mother who was called here in time to see her child expire, and remained here in a state of total insensibility for a week afterwards. She has borne up through her severe trial like what she is — a fine-hearted noble-minded girl. I have removed her to a quiet cottage at Hampstead where we think of staying for some weeks to come; and the first anguish of her grief being passed she is quite resigned and cheerful. From their earliest infancy to this moment she can call up no single recollection of an unkind word or look having ever passed between them, and she looks forward to being mercifully permitted one day to rejoin her sister in that happy World for which God adapted her better than for this.

I should have said that the affliction we have suffered brought on a miscarriage but that she has perfectly recovered from it.

Pray present my best remembrances to Mrs. Johns, and believe me that it will afford me the very greatest gratification if you will make this house your own when you next come to London.

My Dear Johns
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To C. J. DAVIDS,[†1] [?LATE MAY 1837]*

MS Eastgate House, Rochester. Date: Mourning paper (wide black border) and handwriting suggest May 37; perhaps one of the business letters CD wrote soon after his return to work in late May.

48 Doughty St. Mecklenburgh Square |
Wednesday Morning

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Davids, and begs to return him the inclosed papers with many thanks. None of them appear to him exactly suited to the Miscellany, or he would have been happy to have availed himself of them.

To W. H. WILLS,[†2] [?LATE MAY 1837]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: on mourning paper (wide black border); perhaps same day as last. The "little poetic tale" appeared in the July Miscellany.

48 Doughty St., Mecklenburgh Square |
Wednesday Morning.

Mr. Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. W. H. Wills, and begs to apologise to him for the delay which has occurred in returning the inclosed paper, which has been quite accidental. Mr. Dickens would have accepted it with much pleasure, had not so many papers founded on the same idea (translations and otherwise) appeared in our periodical Literature of late years. It is curious that he has by him at this moment no less than three which have been offered for the Miscellany, and the main feature of each of which, is, the very same delusion that Mr. Wills describes.

The little poetic tale[†1] pleases Mr. Dickens very much, and he proposes to insert it in the July Number. He will be happy at all times to pay the promptest attention to anything Mr. Wills may send him.

To E. W. P. SINNETT,[†2] [?LATE MAY 1837]

Text from N, I, 113. Date: "The Blue Wonder" had appeared in the May Miscellany; probably CD heard of its earlier publication within the next few weeks.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Sinnett, and begs to inform him that he finds a precisely similar translation of the Blue Wonder to that which Mr. Sinnett furnished for the Miscellany, appeared in a cheap publication called the Rover[†3] nearly two years ago.

Mr. Dickens need scarcely say that he is quite sure Mr. Sinnett was not aware of the other translation having appeared; but as it is of the very greatest importance to the work that these mistakes should be avoided, Mr. Dickens wishes to know whether Mr. Sinnett can assure him that The Adventure of New Year's Eve[†4] has not appeared in an English dress.

To MRS C. B. WILSON,[†1] [?LATE MAY 1837]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 20 Mar 1941; MS 1 p.; dated Wednesday Night — possibly late May as last. "Elegiac Stanzas" appeared in the July Miscellany.

I cannot tell you how much affected I have been by your beautiful lines,[†2] or with how much melancholy pleasure I shall insert them in the miscellany.

June

To THOMAS BEARD, [?2 JUNE 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: Since Mary was born on 6 Mar 38, Catherine was presumably "well over" her miscarriage by the beginning of June 37. CD would no doubt have sent Beard the Miscellany on publication. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Beard.

I suppose father told you that we thought of christening the baby tomorrow. Circumstances have rendered it a painful ceremony, and I wished to get it quietly over.

We have been obliged to postpone it however, at this very short notice. We now think of taking him into the Church's bosom next week, but of this I will give you ample notice as soon as we can determine.[†3]

As I apprehended, Kate's grief and agitation has brought on a miscarriage, but she has got well over it, and is now Thank God, all right again. I inclose you the Miscellany. When are we going to see you again? —

Believe me My Dear Beard
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thos. Beard Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Mourning paper and handwriting point to May-June. "Read" rather than "I inclose" suggests that the notice was part of a larger whole: therefore presumably either the brief notice about Mary Hogarth's death[†4] or the Address on the completion of the first volume, both in the June Miscellany. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty St. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster.

Read the notice and tell me whether you like it. Have you heard from Jerdan? And at what hour tomorrow shall I see you?

Faithfully Ever Yours
C.D.

To THOMAS HAINES,[†1] 3 JUNE 1837

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Thomas Haines Esqre. | Mansion House. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty St. — Mecklenburgh Square |
Saturday June 3rd. 1837.

My Dear Sir.

Beard, our mutual friend, was to have been the medium of an introduction between us, but as he has not seen you for some time, I venture to introduce myself as "Boz", and when I tell you why I have not had patience to wait for his intervention, I dare say you will feel highly gratified.

In my next number of Oliver Twist, I must have a magistrate; and casting about for a magistrate whose harshness and insolence would render him a fit subject to be "shewn up" I have, as a necessary consequence, stumbled upon Mr. Laing[†2] of Hatton Garden celebrity. I know the man's character perfectly well, but as it would be necessary to describe his appearance also, I ought to have seen him, which (fortunately or unfortunately as the case may be) I have never done.

In this dilemma it occurred to me that perhaps I might under your auspices be smuggled into the Hatton Garden office for a few moments some morning. If you can further my object, I shall be really very greatly obliged to you.

I am staying at Hampstead at present; but if you will direct a line to my house in town, stating when I shall call on you, or you on me, I will be punctual. Whether you can render me the assistance I require, or not, I shall be happy to avail myself of that opportunity of becoming known to you.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Haines Esqre.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [8] JUNE 1837

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: misdated by CD; Thursday was the 8th. Address: probably written to one of Mary's relations. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty St. Mecklenburgh Square London. |
Thursday June 9th. 1837.

My Dear Sir.

What I see written on the back of Mrs. Hogarth's letter; and I dare say what you will find in some other inclosed in this packet, will prepare you for the intelligence of dear Mary's sudden death under our roof — I have been requested to write you a few lines; and if they be few and hurried, believe that it is because the heart bleeds while the pen traces the characters.

Why should I say more than that she was taken ill without an instant's warning on the night of Saturday the 7th. of May, almost immediately after she retired to bed — that although every effort was made to save her, and no danger apprehended until nearly the very last, she sank under the attack and died — died in such a calm and gentle sleep, that although I had held her in my arms for some time before, when she was certainly living (for she swallowed a little brandy from my hand) I continued to support her lifeless form, long after her soul had fled to Heaven.

This was about 3 o'Clock on the Sunday afternoon. They think her heart was diseased. It matters little to relate these details now, for the light and life of our happy circle is gone — and such a blank created as we can never supply.

Her body lies in the beautiful cemetery in the Harrow Road. I saw her grave but a few days ago, and the grass around it was as green and the flowers as bright, as if nothing of the earth in which they grew could ever wither or fade. Beneath my feet there lay a silent but solemn witness that all health and beauty are but things of the hour.

Mrs. Hogarth has suffered and still suffers deeply from this dreadful calamity. For her who is dead I can feel no sorrow, for I know that before a single care of life had wounded her pure heart, she has passed quietly away to an immortality of happiness and joy. Those who are left behind to recollect what she was here; to miss her sweet face and her winning smile, and all the countless endearments that a guileless heart and affectionate nature gave birth to, are indeed objects for sympathy and compassion. Among these mourners as none loved her better living, so, believe me, none laments her more constantly and deeply in death, than, My Dear Sir

Yours most affectionately and faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To E. S. MORGAN, [8 JUNE 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: endorsed "£6. 6s. for Lieut. Johns sent to Mr. Dickens 8 June pr his servant". Address: Wait | — Morgan Esqre. On mourning paper.

Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Pray oblige me by sending me pr. bearer for Mr. Johns (who has presented an order from me, in vain, very much to my annoyance) six guineas — that is to say, four for the little bit of Tape,[†1] one for the Song of the Cover,[†2] and one for the Epigrams.[†3]

Believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Morgan Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?EARLY JUNE 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Although Holl's receipts for this and for a paper which appeared in Sep are both dated 15 Sep 37 (see To Morgan, that day), handwriting shows clearly that this order to pay was written in June, probably early in the month as usual. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

Will you have the goodness to pay Mr. Holl,[†4] the Author of Mrs. Jennings in Number 6 of the Miscellany,[†5] five guineas for that paper?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: the beginning of the dispute with Macrone which culminated in Macrone's sale on 17 June of the copyright of Sketches; must be before To Forster, ?15 June.

48 Doughty Street Mecklenburgh Square. | Friday Evening.

My Dear Forster.

I heard half an hour ago on authority which leaves me in no doubt about the matter (from the binder of Pickwick, in fact) that Macrone intends publishing a new issue of my sketches in monthly parts of nearly the same size and in just the same form as the Pickwick papers.

I need not tell you that this is calculated to injure me most seriously, or that I have a very natural and most decided objection to being supposed to presume upon the success of the Pickwick, and thus foist this old work upon the public in its new dress for the mere purpose of putting money in my own pocket. Neither need I say that the fact of my name being before the town, attached to three publications at the same time, must prove seriously prejudicial to my reputation.

As you are acquainted with the circumstances under which these copyrights were disposed of,[†1] and as I know I may rely on your kind-feeling,[†2] may I beg you to wait upon Macrone, and to state in the strongest and most emphatic manner, my feeling on this point. I wish him to be reminded of the sums he paid for these books — of the sale he has had for them — of the extent to which he has already pushed them — and of the very great profits he must necessarily have acquired from them. I wish him also to be reminded that no intention of publishing them in this form was in the remotest manner hinted to me, by him, or on his own behalf, when he obtained possession of the copyright. I then wish you to put it to his feelings of common honesty and fair-dealing whether after this communication he will persevere in his intention.

I feel it necessary to add — not as a hasty threat but as my deliberate and well-considered determination — that if this new issue does appear, I shall advertize in all the Newspapers that it does so — not only without my sanction, but in opposition to my express request; that it is of no advantage whatever, to me; and that I most earnestly and emphatically entreat all my friends and supporters to abstain from purchasing it. Wherever he advertizes the work, I will advertize this statement.

I have only to add that in case you should be met with the assertion that the preparations he has made have involved him in great expence already, and that this is a reason for his persisting in his design, Chapman and Hall, knowing my feeling on the subject are ready and willing to buy the copyrights, and to consider this circumstance in settling the amount of the purchase money.

If you will undertake this mission you will confer a lasting obligation on

My Dear Forster

Yours most faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Forster dates this "mid-summer 1837" (F, II, i, 93); the reference to Macrone suggests the day before next.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I suspect that Prout's sapient advice like his ditto muse, is slow in the Delivery, and hence Macrone's note. I think it will be advisable to give him till tomorrow — there is little doubt that you will hear to-night.

I inclose you my agreement with Bentley, with reference to the Miscellany.[†1] It is a very extraordinary fact (I forgot it on Sunday) that I have never had[†2] from him a copy of the agreement respecting the Novel[†3] which I never saw before or since I signed it at his house one morning long ago. Shall I ask him for a copy, or no? I have looked at some memoranda I made at the time, and I fear he has my second novel on the same terms, under the same agreement. This is a bad look-out, but n'importe — we will mend it.

You will tell me that you are very much surprised at my doing business in this way. So am I, for in most matters of labour and application I am punctuality itself. The truth is — and I need not explain the matter to you my dear fellow — that if I had allowed myself to be worried by these things, I could never have done as much as I have. I fear in my desire to avoid present vexations, I have laid up a bitter store for the future.

Perhaps I may see you here this evening if there be any news? — If not, I shall hold myself in readiness to come down to you whenever you wrote.[†4]

Ever Yours my Dear Forster
Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Of course I shall not forget Sunday.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Urgent tone, supported by Forster's comments on CD's haste in these negotiations (F, II, i, 87)[†5], points strongly to the Thursday before their culmination on 17 June. Black seal. Address: John Forster Esqre. | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Afternoon

My Dear Forster.

I called on you this morning, but was not fortunate enough to find you, I am very anxious to ask your further advice, without delay, respecting Macrone. I will therefore take the chance of finding you tomorrow, at a quarter before one. I do not wish to delay the matter, even until Saturday. if I can help it.

Believe me
My Dear Forster
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?15 JUNE 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: clearly during the negotiations with Macrone; this must have been the first note whose tone offended Bentley: see next. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir.

The negociation[†1] is still pending. Up to this time I have heard nothing.

My only immediate object is to prevent the publication of the Sketches in parts. I have an ulterior object also. I unfortunately parted with these valuable copyrights (as I have done with others) without advantage or reflection. In the high tide of my popularity and success I feel that I must no longer act with the same thoughtlessness, and that it is quite time that I should seek to derive some permanent advantage from works from which booksellers derive so much present gain. If I could purchase these copyrights for myself, I would do so (indeed I am prepared to do so) at almost any temporary sacrifice.

Faithfully Yours
My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?17 JUNE 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Bentley had presumably arranged an interview with CD immediately after receiving last. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I inclose you a Letter I have received among some Miscellany communications, which does not come within my province.

At the risk of offending you by the tone of my second note upon the subject (which I really intend, as little as I did by that of my first) I must say that after the Interview we had, yesterday morning, I was surprised to hear through Mr. Hansard that you had been in communication with him on the previous day relative to the copyright. You made no distinct "proposal" I know, but the interference was not the less injurious to my interest notwithstanding — more so than it otherwise would have been indeed, for they have formed some magnificent notions of what you are prepared to do, which from what you tell me of the extent to which you would go, I know to be greatly exaggerated.

That you had a perfect right to step in and bid for these apples of discord, of course I know perfectly well. It is only your assurance of yesterday morning that has led me to say a word on the subject.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17 JUNE 1837]

Text from F, II, i, 87-8. Date: presumably between last and the Agreement of 17 June.

I sent down just now to know whether you were at home (two o'clock), as Chapman and Hall were with me, and, the case being urgent, I wished to have the further benefit of your kind advice and assistance. Macrone and his friend[†1] (arcades ambo[†2]) waited on them this morning, and after a long discussion peremptorily refused to take one farthing less than the two thousand pounds.[†3] The friend repeated the statement of figures which he made to you yesterday, and put it to Hall whether he could say from his knowledge of such matters that the estimate of probable profit was exorbitant. Hall, whose judgment may be relied on in such matters, could not dispute the justice of the calculation. And so the matter stood. In this dilemma it occurred to them (my Pickwick men), whether, if the Sketches MUST appear in monthly numbers, it would not be better for them to appear for their benefit and mine conjointly, than for Macrone's sole use and behoof; whether they, having all the Pickwick machinery in full operation, could not obtain for them a much larger sale than Macrone could ever get; and whether, even at this large price of two thousand pounds, we might not, besides retaining the copyright, reasonably hope for a good profit on the outlay. These suggestions having presented themselves, they came straight to me (having obtained a few hours' respite), and proposed that we should purchase the copyrights between us for the two thousand pounds, and publish them in monthly parts. I need not say that no other form of publication would repay the expenditure; and they wish me to explain by an address that they, who may be fairly put forward as the parties, have been driven into that mode of publication or the copyright would have been lost.[†4] I considered the matter in every possible way. I sent for you, but you were out. I thought of [ ][†5] and consented. Was I right? I think you will say yes.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: endorsed by Forster Nov 37, but June was the only month in which the 19th was Monday, and handwriting strongly supports. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Forster

Don't come to-night, don't come. I have been obliged to request the illustrious George[†1] to keep himself to himself. After the most virtuous and inflexible resolutions to be up at 7, I rose at 12, and have not yet written one word. Pity my condition on this nineteenth morning of the month.

Shall we say One tomorrow for settling the Pickwick?[†2] I have communicated with Chapman and Hall to that effect.

Ever Yours faithfully

C.D.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: given in F, II, i, 89 as referring to the July No. when "the hero finds himself in the Fleet"; handwriting supports. One of the few letters in this period not on mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

Here.[†3] I am slippered and jacketted, and like that same starling who is so very seldom quoted, can't get out.[†4]

I am getting on thank Heaven "like a house o' fire" — and think the next Pickwick will bang all the others. I shall expect you at 1.[†5]

If you know anybody at Saint Paul's I wish you'd send round and ask them not to ring the Bell so.[†6] I can hardly hear my own ideas as they come into my head and say what they mean.

Faithfully Yours my Dear Forster

CD.

John Forster Esqr

To MRS GEORGE HOGARTH, [?JUNE 1837]*

MS Dickens House. Date: on mourning paper; probably written soon after CD and Catherine returned to Doughty Street from Hampstead.

My Mrs. Hogarth

Kate is out, and I think it possible that she may not be home until 5 which is our dinner hour. I have a business engagement this afternoon at 4 which I think may detain me from then 'till 5. I am so very anxious to see Mr. Thomson and am so busy just now into the bargain, that I think the best plan will be to fix our meeting beforehand. Is he engaged tomorrow? Or can he and Mrs. Thomson dine with us at 5? If not, will they fix their own time and place? Suppose I were to call on them tomorrow morning and arrange the matter — will you write me a line and say what I had best do, and it shall be done.

I want to see you very much, and to hear your account of all that has been done since we have been away. I hope I shall be able to do so tomorrow.

I wish I could hear that you had been out to walk. You cannot think how much it would please me. It is really time you made the effort. If it were painful at first, you would very soon find ample compensation in the additional strength and cheerfulness which I am sure it would give you[†1]

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [21 JUNE 1837]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: the Wednesday before Tues 27 June, the day fixed for the visit to Newgate (Macready, Diaries, I, 401). On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Ainsworth.

I do not exactly remember whether I reminded Forster to tell you that I shall expect you to dine with me on Tuesday, after we have been to Newgate. This is to give notice that I shall expect you.

Believe me
My Dear Ainsworth
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?21 JUNE 1837]

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Nov 1924; MS 1 p.; dated Wednesday morning — possibly same day as last.

Saying that he has an appointment (not a compulsory one) at Newgate, and will have to decline the Manchester trip.[†1]

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [22 JUNE 1837]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 23 June 37 (Friday). Address: William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre. | Kensal Lodge | Harrow Road. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Evening

My Dear Ainsworth.

This cross-firing of notes makes me smile as I commence, for in all likelihood your Postman is bearing some fresh epistle to me at this moment, which this one is destined to pass on the road.

If I have finished my monthly work (which please God I shall have done) I shall be very happy indeed to join you on Monday and to lend my mite of applause to Mr. Cartlitch[†2] and the other wild beasts.)

I ought to have said that I think 12 oClock on Tuesday will be the best time for us to meet here. Among other advantages of situation, we have the inestimable one of living in the immediate neighbourhood of the House of Correction.[†3]

Believe me
My Dear Ainsworth
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; probably CD was sending Forster a draft of the Address on Mary Hogarth's death which appeared in the July Pickwick, published 30 June; handwriting supports.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Night

My Dear Forster.

I rose at 12 to-day with a most unaccountable head ache (!) and was so much engaged afterwards, that I could not call on you. If I can manage it, be it only for a second, tomorrow — I will. I inclose the Address.[†1]

Believe me
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: the day before the visit to Newgate. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I received a letter from W Harrison[†2] last night, excusing himself from our projected "Visit to Newgate"[†3] and from dining with us here, afterwards, at 5 on the plea of business.[†4] Qy. Mrs. Touchitt's[†5] wrath?

I suppose our engagement still holds good. I hope so, for I only finished work last night, and want a little good fellowship.

I should like to ask your friend Cattermole[†6] to dine with us as I am — to use a scotch expression — very fond of him. Do you think he would come. If so, perhaps the best plan will be for us to go up and call on him to-day. Shall you be disengaged if I call on you about One? A Verbal answer will do.

Believe me
My Dear Forster
Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?26 JUNE 1837]*

MS Commodore T. E. Barham Howe. Date: June or July on mourning paper and handwriting. CD was apparently expecting to leave for France on Fri 30 June (To Bentley, that day).

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I have received a Letter from Captain Medwin,[†1] strongly prohibiting the use of his name in any way, as connected with the papers you have purchased.[†2] Lest you should make use of it in ignorance of his wish, I write to tell you.

I am going out of town on Friday. I will call on you on Thursday at 12. Read Oliver. I think he flourisheth this month.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 JUNE 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: The reference to Ainsworth and Mrs Touchet strongly suggests the day after To Forster, 26 June, although letter not on mourning paper. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty St. | Tuesday

My Dear Forster

Hogarth[†4] happened to be here when your note arrived. He will come with much pleasure.

I am very queer but I must come and will.

I am glad I was right about Ainsworth. Mrs. Touchitt for ever.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

The Kiveen has taste, I see.[†5]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?27 JUNE 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: perhaps Tues 27 June when Macready, Harley and others dined with CD after the visit to Newgate (Macready, Diaries, I, 402); handwriting supports. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Evg.

My Dear Sir.

I sent a verbal message to you, because Macready[†1] and Harley were dining with me, and I really had not time to write.

Your Messenger mistook me. I expressly said that I should have great pleasure in meeting Mr. Barham[†2] (whom, from a very great respect for his genius, I shall be most happy to know) on Thursday: I merely added that I should previously call on you, on business, on Thursday Morning at 12.[†3]

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?30 JUNE 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Presumably refers to Hogarth's series of articles for the Miscellany, accepted 7 Aug (To Bentley, that day); CD was probably writing at the end of June, just before he left for France. Mourning paper and handwriting support. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Friday Afternoon

My Dear Sir.

I have seen Mr. Hogarth. As he is waiting in town expressly with the view of settling this business finally (which really is of the last[†1] importance) and as I am detained here by no other cause, we intend to call upon you at 5 o'Clock when I hope we shall be able to arrange it.

I am
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

July

To JOHN FORSTER, 2 JULY 1837

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Address: John Forster Esqre. | 58 Lincoln's Inn Fields | London. Black seal.

Hôtel Rignolle. | Calais, le 2nd. July 1837

My Dear Forster.

We[†2] arrived here in great state this morning — I very sick, and Missis very well. Just as the boat was leaving Dovor,[†3] a breathless Boots put a letter from town, and "The Examiner" into my hands, the latter of which, I verily believe preserved me from that dismal extremity of qualmishness into which I am accustomed to sink when I have "the blue above and the blue below". I have always thought that the "silence wheresoe'er I go"[†4] is a beautiful touch of Barry Cornwall's (otherwise Procter) descriptive of the depression produced by sea-voyaging. I know it's remarkably silent wherever I go, when I'm on the briny.

But seriously — how can I thank you for your beautiful notice?[†5] — Can I do so better than by saying that I feel your rich, deep appreciation of my intent and meaning more than the most glowing abstract praise that could possibly be lavished upon me? You know I have ever done so, for it was your feeling for me and mine for you that first brought us together, and I hope will keep us so, till death do us part. Your notices make me grateful but very proud; so have a care of them, or you will turn my head.[†1]

We have arranged for a post coach to take us to Ghent, Brussels, Antwerp, and a hundred other places that I cannot recollect now and couldn't spell if I did. We went this afternoon in a barouche to some gardens where the people dance, and where they were footing it most heartily — especially the women who in their short petticoats and light caps look uncommonly agreeable. A gentleman in a blue surtout and silken Berlins[†2] accompanied us from the Hotel, and acted as Curator.[†3] He even waltzed with a very smart lady (just to show us, condescendingly, how it ought to be done) and waltzed elegantly too. We rang for slippers after we came back, and it turned out that this gentleman was the "Boots". Isn't this French?

I think we shall be home on Sunday Night or Monday Morning — I shall see you, please God, directly we return — at least, so soon as my sea-sickness shall have disappeared. Meanwhile curse my negligence for having forgotten Bentley's letter, and mislaid the draught. I sent another to him by the same Post which brings this, — very nearly the same I think. Mrs. D and Browne beg their best remembrances; and I beg you (no hard task I hope) to believe me ever

Faithfully and sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 2 JULY 1837

MS Berg Collection. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | 8 New Burlington Street. | London.

Hôtel Rignolle. | Calais, le 2me. Juillet 1837.

My Dear Sir.

I wrote you a few lines the morning I left town, but in the hurry and confusion of coming away, I forgot to leave out the letter to be forwarded to you. I write it again from here, because the subject is one of great importance to me, and because I am very anxious that you should have a full opportunity of considering it, before you return me any reply.

You have often told me that it is your anxious desire to treat me "with the utmost liberality" relative to my first novel;[†1] and I sincerely believe it. I need scarcely say, that taking into consideration the great alteration of circumstances which has occurred since our agreement[†2] was entered into; my very different situation, and the increased popularity of my works, it would neither suit your views nor mine to produce it on any other terms.

Will you have the goodness to turn the matter over in your mind, and to let me know when you have done so, distinctly what the footing is on which you propose to place me, and what are the terms you intend to offer? Will you oblige me at the same time by sending me a copy of our agreement,[†2] which I have never yet had?

I expect to be in London about Sunday next.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To C. BARING WALL,[†3] [?12 JULY 1837]

Text from N, I, 120. Date: 19 July was Wednesday in 1837; probably written on 12 July since on 5 July CD was in France.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday

Mr. Charles Dickens greatly regrets that a prior engagement for the same day, prevents his accepting Mr. Baring Walls[†4] kind invitation for Wednesday the 19th of July.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 14 JULY 1837

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday July 14th. 1837

My Dear Ainsworth.

How unfortunate! I have two engagements for tomorrow. One to a wedding breakfast which, as there is a sister of mine in the case I am bound to attend;[†1] the other to dinner at Greenwich with the Literary Fund[†2] I think, or some elegant extracts compiled therefrom by Jerdan.[†3]

I must go to work in earnest on Monday,[†4] but as I hope to have nearly finished by that day week, I shall confidently look forward to hearing from you again in a few days respecting the dinner and the quiet evening.

With best compts. to the ladies, believe me
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Turn over
William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

Just as this was going to the Post, your messenger arrived — Don't you dine at Greenwich tomorrow — do. Jerdan has just written to ask me if I know whether you are coming. The place is the Crown and Sceptre. The time five precisely.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 14 JULY 1837

MS Berg Collection.[†5] Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | 98 King's Road | Brighton. PM 17 July 37, explained by delay in posting: see next. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday July 14th. 1837.

My Dear Sir.

I did intend writing to say that through the kindness of a friend[†6] who posts to Brighton and back next Sunday, I could have seen you for two hours on that day. I am so terribly behindhand, however, that I am compelled to give up all thoughts of leaving town this month, even for a day.

As I shall not see you then, until you return to town, I state in this short letter the alterations I propose in our agreement, with the view of facilitating the dispatch of business when we meet.

1st. That you should give me £600[†7] for permission to publish 3000 copies of my first Novel Barnaby Rudge — this number to be divided into as many editions as you think proper, and the whole of the MS to be furnished by the 1st. of March 1838 at the latest.[†8]

2nd. That for permission to publish the same number of copies of my second Novel Oliver Twist you should give me £700, deducting from that amount all that may have been paid to me for the appearance of different portions of it, in the Miscellany up to the time of my furnishing the whole MS which I propose, at the very latest, shall be Midsummer next.[†1]

I have considered the subject very carefully, and this is the fixed conclusion at which I have arrived. I am sure it is a fair and very reasonable one, but if you are resolved to think differently of course you have the power to hold me to the old agreement. Understand, however, that if you hold me to the strict letter of the agreement respecting the Novels, I shall abide by the strict letter of my agreement respecting the Miscellany, and arrange my future plans with reference to it, accordingly.

I am My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To E. S. MORGAN, [15 JULY 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Having written to Bentley on 14 July, CD evidently found he had mislaid his address: hence this request the next day. Address: Wait[†2] | — Morgan Esqre. | Richard Bentley Esqre. | 8 New Burlington Street. On mourning paper.

Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to give me Mr. Bentley's address at Brighton? He wrote it down for me very carefully, and I have as carefully mislaid it.

The inclosed note was sent to me last night. The paper alluded to is a long one and will appear in the next Miscellany.[†3] If you see no objection to advancing the money, perhaps you will send it on to me by the Bearer. The writer is a clever man and I think it would be as well to do so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Morgan Esqre.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?18 JULY 1837]

MS Bernard Halliday. Date: on mourning paper; therefore 1837 and referring to Pickwick; presumably written mid-month. Only in the Nos of Aug and Sep is there an illustration to the last chapter; and the reference here is probably to the Aug No., since in that the illustration goes with the very last page.[†1] Address: Messrs. Chapman & Hall | 186 Strand.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning.

Dear Sirs

I have been a good deal bothered by not having the plates. I can't possibly do the last part of the last chapter without them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 JULY 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; handwriting suggests Summer 1837. Probably the "flare" was the Crown and Sceptre dinner on 15 July (see To Ainsworth, 14 July). Address: John Forster Esqre. | Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster. I owe you £2..10..0 — two thirds of the Crown and Sceptre flare. Your postponement of these matters makes me as uncomfortable as your restlessness, so I send to settle. I have done nothing yet, but purpose writing this evening. I suppose I shall see something of you soon.

Faithfully Yours. C.D.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?20 JULY 1837]*

MS Dickens House. Date: Only in Ch. 45 (No. XVI, Aug) do Mr or Mrs Raddle and Master Bardell appear together, making a printer's error understandable. The "62nd. line" shows this must have been a galley-proof, and therefore earlier than the final proof sent with To Hicks, 26 July. On mourning paper.

Thursday Morning

My Dear Sirs.

In the slip[†2] of Pickwick paged "675" at the 62nd. line from the top I think I left uncorrected "Master Raddle" for "Master Bardell". Will you have the goodness to see to this, and by substituting Master Bardell's name, to do justice to the memory of that distinguished child?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To THOMAS BEARD, [21 JULY 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 21 July 37. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Beard.

Now as upon every possible occasion, believe in my sincere and anxious desire to testify my friendship by every means in my power; and let me intreat you not to turn your thoughts to this small enclosure until you have devoted every ten pounds you have, to every demand that presses upon it.

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

You dine with us tomorrow, recollect. ½ p 4.

To J. R. LLOYD[†1], [22 JULY 1837]

Text from N, I, 124. Date: 22 July 37 according to N, perhaps on evidence of an endorsement, as in To E. Lloyd, 23 Oct 37.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

Sir,

In reply to the application you have done me the honor to make me, on behalf of the City of London Literary and Scientific Institution,[†2] I beg to assure you that it would have afforded me very sincere pleasure to have complied with their request, by presiding at the half-yearly meeting of the Elocution class on Saturday next, had I not unfortunately made a business engagement some days since, which will render it necessary for me to be out of town on that Evening.

May I beg to inform the Committee that I very sincerely regret this circumstance, and that if it had been possible for me to postpone the engagement I would cheerfully have done so. As its nature will not admit of delay, however, I can only state the real cause of my declining your Invitation and express my warmest and most cordial wishes on behalf of the Institution. — I am — Sir — Your very faithful and obedt. Servant

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26 JULY 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; the Miscellany accounts for 1837 record payment to CD for the Aug "Song of the Month"; he was working on the Pickwick proofs as late as 26 July (see next). Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

I am in an *un*poetical state, and am hammering over this infernal Song of the Month,[†1] which will be a rum 'un.[†2] I shall be with you by 2 I hope. Stay at home for me. My Missis is going out to day, and I want you to take some cold lamb and a bit of fish with me, alone.[†3] We can walk out both before and afterwards but I must dine at home on account of the Pickwick proofs —

Ever Yours

CD.

To CHARLES HICKS, [26 JULY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: endorsed "July 26/37". Pickwick No. XVI appeared in Aug.

Private and confidential

To Mr. Hicks

Oh Mr. Hick
—S,, I'm heartily sick
Of this sixteenth Pickwick
Which is just in the nick
For the publishing trick,
And will read nice and slick,
If you'll only be quick.
I don't write on tick,

That's my comfort, Avick!

To S. D. KNOTT[†1], 27 JULY 1837*

MS Private. Address: Samuel D. Knott Esqre. | The Castle | Exeter. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street Mecklenburg Square London. |
July 27th. 1837.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Knott and has much pleasure in complying with his request.[†2] He would have answered Mr. Knott's letter before, had he not been prevented by the pressure of many engagements.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 27 JULY 1837

Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 9.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday July 27th 1837.

My dear Chapman and Hall,

I cannot tell you how very much I am gratified and delighted by the receipt of your most unique and beautiful present,[†3] which I shall lay up in lavender for my boy to shew his boys — and girls likewise — as a Pickwickian relic of his respected father. It is indeed a pleasure to be connected with such men (I was going to say booksellers) as you, and I do most unaffectedly and sincerely assure you that my whole endeavours at this moment are directed to perpetuating our most pleasant and friendly association.

Believe me that any sentiments of private and personal esteem that you may entertain for me, I most cordially and warmly reciprocate towards you both — and trust me that with feelings most sensitive by nature to honorable and generous treatment, I am and shall ever be impressed with the highest possible sense of your unvarying conduct towards me.

With very many thanks for this last mark of your delicate and warm-hearted feeling — of which within the last three months I have observed other proofs that have touched me deeply — Believe me always

Most faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To GEORGE BEADNELL, [?LATE JULY 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: The cobbler tells his story in the last chapter of Pickwick No. XVI (Ch. 44), published Aug 1837.

Doughty Street. | Monday Evening

My Dear Sir

I have purposely abstained from replying to your note before, in order that if our friend Mr. Clarke[†1] communicated with you again, you might be enabled to tell him with perfect truth that you had heard nothing from me.

My reason is this — if I were in the slightest instance whatever, to adopt any information so communicated, however much I invented upon it, the World would be informed one of these days — after my death perhaps — that I was not the sole author of the Pickwick Papers — that there were a great many other parties concerned — that a gentleman in the Fleet Prison perfectly well remembered stating in nearly the same words — &c &c &c. In short I prefer drawing upon my own imagination in such cases. Mr. Clarke's own story I have put into a Cobbler's mouth who tells it in the next number; and this is the only reality in the whole business of and concerning the Fleet. Fictitious narratives place the enormities of the system in a much stronger point of view, and they enable one to escape the personalities and endless absurdities into which there is a certainty of rushing if you take any man's account of his own grievances.

If you should receive any other application from the same quarter, perhaps you will have the goodness to say that you communicated the first to me, and there an end of it.[†2]

Believe me ever My Dear Sir
Faithfully and sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Pray present my best Compts. to Mrs. & Miss Beadnell.

To AN UNKNOWN CLERGYMAN, [?SUMMER 1837]

Extract in Marcus Stone, "Some Recollections of Dickens", D, VI (1910), 62. Date: "a few months" after the appearance of the April instalment of Oliver, containing (in Ch. 5) the description of the callous behaviour of the clergyman officiating at the pauper's funeral.

In reply to a letter of protest, in which his correspondent expressed incredulity that such a thing could ever occur, CD wrote: Thou art the man.[†3]

August

To T. N. TALFOURD,[†1] [?AUGUST 1837]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; handwriting suggests early Aug.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I must unfortunately be at work to-night. Engagements multiply so quickly that I had better take time by the fore lock and work while I may. Be with me at a quarter past one tomorrow. There is a train at 12; but that being too soon, we must go by the 2 o'Clock one. I have received a note from Talfourd and written in reply to say that I am most happy to accept his Invitation.

My very best remembrances to Cattermole. I wish I were with you, and Jiggins[†2] with a bottle of iced champagne beside me.

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD,[†3] [?AUGUST 1837]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: near last on mourning paper and handwriting.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Evening

Dear Sir.

I have to apologize to you most heartily for the mistake into which my unknown correspondent led me; and to thank you for your polite note acquainting me with it.

I have lost the epistle which the wiseacre in question sent me with his paper, and therefore do not recollect the address he gave, but I remember perfectly well that he signed himself either "L.W." or "W L" Blanchard and that the whole tenor of his note was obviously intended to bear the construction that it came from you and nobody else. So little doubt had I about the matter, that having lost the address of this person, I sent to the Court Journal Office as a matter of course.

I must admit on reflection that I did no very great credit to your intellect in taking this step, or rather taking this jump at a conclusion, but the real honest truth is, that as some very juvenile attempts do now and then appear in the Miscellany, I thought you might possibly have written the paper when you were a promising boy of fifteen or sixteen; — it occurred to me at the same time that what your youth promised, your riper years had a great deal more than fulfilled, and that you were much more clever as a man than you ever held out any hope to your friends and parents of being, when a boy.

I shall not regret the absurdity which has led to this correspondence if, whenever I have the pleasure of meeting you, it supersedes the necessity of a more formal introduction, and enables me to say with little preface how very truly I am

Yours My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

Laman Blanchard Esqre.

To C. J. DAVIDS, [5 AUGUST 1837]†

MS Huntington Library. Date: PM 8 Aug 37 — presumably day of receipt, since PM on back of envelope. Address: C. J. Davids Esqre. | Lower Heath Place | Bexley Heath | Kent. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Evening

Sir.

I have to thank you for your very polite note regarding Horatio Sparkins.[†1] Let me say in one word that I really have not the time to peruse it; and that so far as any recommendation of it is concerned, I feel that it is much better both for you and myself that I should not in the remotest degree mix myself up with any dramatic version of a paper of which I am the Author. I have declined doing so, I assure you, in many cases where the parties interested had the claim of old acquaintance.

[†a]I hope your health is better, and that you are by this time enabled to resume your pain without pain[†1], if not with pleasure.

I am Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. J. Davids Esqre.

I should have answered your obliging note long ago, but numerous matters of business have driven it from my recollection.[†a]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?5 AUGUST 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: presumably after publication of the Aug Oliver, from which CD was quoting, and before To Bentley, 7 Aug. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Saturday Evening

My Dear Forster.

No ride. Dine at 5.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

No news as yet from the "infernal, rich, plundering, thundering old Jew".[†2]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [7 AUGUST 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 7 Aug 37. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | 98 King's Road | Brighton. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I shall be desirous for many reasons to receive your reply to my letter,[†3] as soon as possible; if it be delayed until a late period of the month, we may both be greatly inconvenienced.[†4] I shall be at home on Saturday next from ten 'till five, and shall perhaps see or hear from you then.[†5]

I will give immediate directions for preparing the second and third sheets of the Miscellany. The papers will be — The Poisoners of the Seventeenth Century, by Mr. Hogarth[†1] — The adventures of John Ward Gibson by Whitehead[†2] (which ought to have appeared last month) a paper which I received anonymously called — Passages in the life of a disappointed man — and next, whatever paper seems to me when I look over Wilson's list, the best adapted to the purpose and the most pressing from having been postponed.[†3] Hogarth's paper is very curious and interesting,[†4] and I think will tell quite as well as, if not better than, the Beaumarchais.[†5] The other two that I have mentioned are also very good.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Do not forget the Song of the Month.[†6]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; handwriting points to Aug-Sep. Perhaps "the Robber's" note was the reply CD had requested in last. Address: John Forster Esqre.

My Forster. I shall be with you exactly one hour (One Hour that's meant for) from this time. A note has arrived from the Robber.[†7] Ever Yrs.

CD.

To J. P. HULLAH, [AUGUST 1837]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: presumably not long before 16 Aug when Macready recorded "Dickens called with Mr. Hullah, who has a comic opera nearly ready" (Diaries, I, 406). Address: John Hullah Esqre. | Favored by George Hogarth Esqre. On mourning paper.

My Hullah.

I quite forgot yesterday when I arranged to see you to-night that I had made an engagement for tomorrow by which I shall lose the whole day; and that it was of very great importance that I should finish a Tale[†1] I am writing, to-night. I have tried hard this Morning but the Muse was unpropitious and I am reluctantly compelled to remain at home. You know, I am sure, that in so doing I deny myself a pleasure proportionate to the interest I take in your proceedings but I have two consolations — the first that it is of much greater importance that Mr. Hogarth should hear the opera[†2] than that I should — and secondly the hope that we may have a quiet evening here, in a week's time, when I may hear it all.

If you wish for a note to Macready, you know where to find me; and to any extent my poor services will reach, confide in my anxious desire to render them. They have one opera at Covent Garden,[†3] but with this exception and the substitution of Stretton for Giubelei,[†4] I know of nothing new there.

I shall be at home tomorrow till one, and next day till two. With best regards from Self and Missis to your Mother and brother, Believe me Ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esqre.

To H. K. BROWNE, [?MID-AUGUST 1837]

Facsimile in D, XXXII (1936), 268. Date: not later than mid-Aug since the note is written beneath the original drawing for "Mr. Winkle Returns under Extraordinary Circumstances" in the Sep Pickwick.

Are Sam and the housemaid clearly made out; and [be]tter[†5] if he were looking on with his arm round [ ][†5] I raythe question the accuracy of the housemaids [ ].[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 AUGUST 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: the same day as next. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I regret to say that I have too many things to do to-day, to be able to take a ride, much as I should like it. A pleasant one to you.

I will write to Beard at once, and appoint him to call with me on you, at ½ past 12 tomorrow if that will suit you. I hope he may be in town and disengaged.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to return her best thanks for the Books.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [14 AUGUST 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: The meeting suggested between Beard and a friend of Bentley's took place on Wed 16 Aug, Beard obviously having agreed at once (To Bentley, 18 Aug). Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Beard.

I want to avail myself of your friendly services in a rather delicate matter — don't be alarmed; not in a duel.

My dispute with Bentley is still pending. He, merely as a colourable proceeding and to gain time, wishes a friend of mine to meet a friend of his, to discuss the subject.[†1] Now, as any reasonable man will feel convinced that my proposal is a most fair and moderate one, I merely want to concede this to him for the sake of appearances, without in the slightest degree departing from my point.[†2] Will you do this for me? It will oblige me most highly, and relieve me of a great difficulty, because as my acquaintance lies chiefly with people intimately connected with literature, I cannot find anybody else who would be supposed to feel with strict impartiality.

If I may rely upon your friendly feeling to undertake this task (as I think I may) will you call upon me tomorrow at 12 at noon? We will walk down to Forster's Chambers, put you in possession of all the facts and documents, and determine exactly on the course to be pursued. If you are at home, write me one word in reply.

Believe me Ever
My Dear Beard
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [15 AUGUST 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: clearly the Tuesday before To Bentley, 18 Aug. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

My friend Mr. Beard of 42 Portman Place Edgeware Road, will call in Burlington Street tomorrow morning at 12 o'Clock, with the view of meeting your friend, agreeably to your desire.

Have the goodness to send me, by bearer a copy of the agreement.[†1] I expected it long since.

Some message has just been delivered here, relative to the second plate. As I waited on Cruikshank yesterday and begged him to furnish a second one, it is quite impossible that I can now countermand it.

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [16 AUGUST 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: Bentley had evidently not sent the copy of the Agreement (see last) until half an hour before the meeting. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. On mourning paper.

Wednesday Morng ½ p 11

My Dear Beard. I have just received the inclosed. As I do not recollect one word in the agreement, for God's sake do nothing until they shew you the original with my signature.

Ever Yours CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 18 AUGUST 1837*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Friday August 18th. 1837.

Sir.

I was very much surprised (I need not have been, I own) to hear from my friend Mr. Beard that the gentleman whom you appointed to meet him on Wednesday — the disinterested, unprejudiced, private friend whom you were to select with so much care — was no other than your own Solicitor.[†2] I was advised by my friends to depute a professional man to meet your referee on the occasion, but I rejected the proposal at once, as a gross breach of the distinct understanding between us, and as an act of bad faith which nothing could extenuate.[†1]

I must now declare that any direct communication between us, would henceforth be most unpleasant to me, and most repugnant to my feelings. I have therefore to request that any correspondence which it may be necessary to hold with me relative to the Miscellany, may be held through some third party, and that the amount due to me at the end of each month may be forwarded in the same manner.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; handwriting suggests late Summer, probably August.

Doughty Street | Saturday

My Dear Forster.

I ought to dine in Bloomsbury Square[†2] tomorrow, but as I would much rather go with you for a ride, and had a strong aversion to going to the other place under any circumstances, that's off, and Longman's[†3] is on. So engage the Osses.

I don't know what to say, — either about your beautiful present,[†4] or the equally pleasant and gratifying expressions with which you accompany it. Conclude that I am like the Parrot who was doubly valuable for not speaking, because he thought a great deal more.[†5] Accept my and Mrs. Dickens' very best and warmest thanks for this mark of your friendship and esteem, coupled with an expression of our most selfish hope that our friendship may be lasting as sincere. Believe that if I meant less, I should say a great deal more; and that I am My Dear Forster

Ever faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. W. CHALLIS,[†1] [?26 AUGUST 1837]*

MS Boston Athenaeum. Date: Challis's verses appeared in the Oct Miscellany. The previous No. would hardly have been in type before the third week in Aug. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Mecklenburgh Square | Saturday Night

My Dear Sir

Here (with the exception of the last line) is my address complete. I am very sorry that when your capital squib from Vesuvius[†2] arrived, the next No. was in type. Trust it to me for the number following. It is too good to have lost any of it's[†3] attractions by that time.

When are you going [to] gladden with another London Legend,[†4] the eyes (nearly blinded with reading nonsense) of an unfortunate Editor?

Very truly Yours, My dear Sir,
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry. W. Challis Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 AUGUST 1837]*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: late Summer 1837 on handwriting; presumably therefore the Monday before the visit to Broadstairs at the end of Aug. In fact CD did not leave until Thurs 31st, no doubt having been delayed by Miscellany business (see To Wilson, 30 Aug).

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Forster.

What on earth put it into your head that you were only engaged to me tomorrow — in which case I grant you would have been at full liberty to have postponed your engagement? — I have asked Bankes, Harley, and half a dozen other people expressly to meet you. Really and seriously it is quite impossible that I can let you off. You know I leave town the next day, and my arrangements are such that I must positively insist on my prior claim. Mrs. Dickens says the same, so you have not the shade of a chance.

Mind, I expect you at five.

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; handwriting suggests late Summer, probably Aug or Sep.

Doughty Street. | Monday Night

My Dear Forster.

Mr. Thomson and Hogarth are coming in tomorrow evening (early)[†1] to say — the former at least — good bye before going to Dovor.[†2] With this exception we shall be quite alone. Will you look in? I shall be delighted to see you.

In haste my dear fellow
Ever Yours Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 30 AUGUST 1837*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday August 30th. 1837.

My Dear Sir.

Knowing that you intended going to Scotland almost immediately after I received your kind letter and present, I have delayed answering the former until now.

Accept my warmest and most sincere thanks for the private copy of Ion[†3] which I shall always be more proud of, and value more highly, than any book I possess. For the kind and flattering terms in which you speak of my works — my sketches I should rather say — in the letter which accompanies it, how can I ever thank you! Believe my dear Sir that I speak most unfeignedly and honestly when I assure you that nothing that has ever occurred to me in the course of my brief career ha[s a][†4]fforded me half so much satisfaction and pleasure. I acknowledge that I do feel proud of my little productions when I reflect upon the glowing terms in which you have expressed your opinion of them, and remember that they were the means of creating a friendship between us.

That this friendship may last as long as we do, and that you may never have cause to regret the having formed it, is my earnest hope and belief. I have too strong an appreciation of the meaning of the word "friend" to make many new ones; and this, perhaps, is the cause of my being so warmly and affectionately attached to the few whom I designate by the name. There is no one to whom every sentiment of respect and admiration (existing long, very long, before I knew you personally) bind me more strongly, than yourself.

Although I am almost disposed to fear that the kindness of heart which you have discovered in my writings, is the mere reflection of your own good-feeling and worth, I am very proud of your discovery, and anxious to improve upon it. So, when my memory becomes indistinct or my fancy fails me, I shall turn to you for materials: — I should spoil the picture if I were to let you into the secret now, or hint at one-thousandeth[†1] part of the visions of public and private excellence that crowd upon me when I think of it.

Believe me, Ever
My Dear Sir

Most faithfully and Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Noon Talfourd Esqre.
&c &c &c

To W. WILSON, [30 AUGUST 1837]*

MS Berg Collection.[†2] Date: the Wednesday before To Morgan, 3 Sep, which refers to these instructions.

Doughty St. Wednesday night

Dear Sir

I send you several accepted papers for the Miscellany; and as there are a good many of them, I will tell you at once for your guidance, what I want set up first for the next No.[†3]

1. The Poisoners of the 17th. Century.[†4]
2. An Excellent Offer.[†5]
3. Autobiography of a good Joke.[†6]
4. The Secret.[†7]
5. Dr. Maginn's[†8] paper.[†9]
6. The Man with the club-foot.[†10]

Of these, I want proofs of Nos. 2, 3, 4, & 6 sent to Mr. Cruikshank, Myddleton Terrace Pentonville, as soon as you can conveniently get them worked,[†1] as he is very anxious to select his subjects for illustration. I am going out of town for a few days,[†2] and these instructions will keep you employed and the Miscellany progressing, until I return.

As my own paper[†3] will not occupy the first sheet next month, you can make up if you please (as far as these papers go) regularly on from the commencement of the No., sending proofs to my house as usual.

Faithfully Yours
(signed) CHARLES DICKENS

To
Mr. Wilson

The green-covered book at the bottom of the packet, is the translation which Mr. Bentley wants, for the purpose of returning to Mr. Miles.[†4]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [30 AUGUST 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly written immediately after last. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Night.

My Dear Cruikshank.

There will be no Oliver Twist next month;[†5] and as my paper although the best I can make it of it's[†6] kind, will not afford a subject for illustration, I have directed the Printer to send you proofs of four tales, called "An excellent offer" — "The autobiography of a good joke" — "The Secret" — and "The man with the Club foot".[†7] — If you cannot select two good subjects from these, I will add a paper I expect from the old Sailor,[†8] and any comical one that may turn up in the course of the next week. It will not be long before I am in town again, and if I find you have not made a selection of both subjects, I will assist you with more matter.

Believe me, Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Geo: Cruikshank Esqre.

To MADAME SALA,[†1] [?AUGUST 1837]

MS Walter T. Spencer. Date: on mourning paper; handwriting suggests Aug 37.

48 Doughty Street | Mecklenburgh Square | Tuesday Morning

Dear Madame Sala.

I very much regret that a pressing engagement elsewhere, will prevent my having the pleasure of seeing you on Wednesday Evening. If I could by any possibility have accepted your Invitation I should gladly have done so. I shall be exceedingly happy to know Mrs. Norton;[†2] and regret this circumstance the more, because it is only a few weeks since I was prevented from meeting her at another friend's house.

If you see Mr Sheridan[†3] you will perhaps have the goodness to communicate my address and inform him that I shall be happy to see him if he will call upon me. Or, you can if you please tell Mrs. Norton from me that as I am a most unceremonious person, and most anxious to have the pleasure of her acquaintance, I shall be happy to call on her, if she will communicate the when and where.

Believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Madame Sala.

September

To E. S. MORGAN, [3 SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: At the head of the page is written: "Copy Letter sent to Mr. Morgan Sep 3rd."[†1]

12 High Street Broadstairs[†2]

My Dear Sir. — May I beg you to deliver Mr. Bentley's cheque in my favour for the Month, to my brother who bears this note? Will you also oblige me by informing Mr. Bentley in reply to a letter which he addressed to me here yesterday, that I have already arranged the contents of a greater part of the next number; and given the Printer the fullest instructions on the subject which will enable him to make up the magazine from the commencement as it goes on. You can add if you please I have communicated with Mr. Cruikshank and arranged that the papers I consider best adapted for illustration shall be sent to him with as little delay as possible in order that he may be enabled to select his subjects.

I am
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yrs.
C.D.

E. S. Morgan Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 SEPTEMBER 1837]

Extract in F, II, i, 94. Date: given by Forster as 3 Sep, from Broadstairs.[†2]

He reports himself just risen from an attack of illness. I am much better, and hope to begin Pickwick No. 18[†3] to-morrow. You will imagine how queer I must have been when I tell you that I have been compelled for four-and-twenty mortal hours to abstain from porter or other malt liquor!!! I done it though — really.... I have discovered that the landlord of the Albion[†4] has delicious hollands[†5] (but what is that to you, for you cannot sympathise with my feelings), and that a cobbler who lives opposite to my bedroom window is a Roman Catholic, and gives an hour and a half to his devotions every morning behind his counter. I have walked upon the sands at low-water from this place to Ramsgate, and sat upon the same at high-ditto till I have been flayed with the cold. I have seen ladies and gentlemen walking upon the earth in slippers of buff,[†1] and pickling themselves in the sea in complete suits of the same. I have seen stout gentlemen looking at nothing through powerful telescopes for hours, and, when at last they saw a cloud of smoke, fancying a steamer behind it, and going home comfortable and happy. I have found out that our next neighbour has a wife and something else under the same roof with the rest of his furniture — the wife deaf and blind, and the something else given to drinking. And if you ever get to the end of this letter you will find out that I subscribe myself on paper as on everything else (some atonement perhaps for its length and absurdity), - - -

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 SEPTEMBER 1837]

Extract in F, II, i, 95. Date: given by Forster as "from 12 High Street, Broadstairs, on the 7th".

He alludes to one of the many piracies of Pickwick:[†2] I recollect this 'member of the dramatic-authors'-society'[†3] bringing an action once against Chapman, who rented the City Theatre,[†4] in which it was proved that he had undertaken to write under special agreement seven melodramas for five pounds, to enable him to do which a room had been hired in a gin-shop close by. The defendant's plea was that the plaintiff was always drunk, and had not fulfilled his contract. Well; if the Pickwick has been the means of putting a few shillings in the vermin-eaten pockets of so miserable a creature, and has saved him from a workhouse or a jail, let him empty out his little pot of filth and welcome. I am quite content to have been the means of relieving him. Besides, he seems to have suffered by agreements![†5]

To E. S. MORGAN, 12 SEPTEMBER 1837*

MS British Museum. Address: E. S. Morgan Esqre. On mourning paper.

Tuesday Septr. 12th. 1837

My Dear Sir.

Will you have the goodness to pay Mr. Thackeray[†1] Twelve guineas for his tale "The Professor"[†2] in the last No. of The Miscellany?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Morgan Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?13 SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: soon after CD's return from Broadstairs, on signature and mourning paper; presumably the Wednesday before his letter of 16 Sep resigning from the Miscellany.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

Sir.

Having returned to town sooner than I expected,[†3] I beg to inform you with reference to your message, that I am ready to receive any communication by letter that you may wish to make to me.

I am Sir
Your obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To MRS ROBERT THOMSON,[†4] [?14 SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: on mourning paper; therefore the reference is to the Broadstairs visit of Aug-Sep 37; presumably the day after last.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Mrs. Thomson.

I owe you more apologies than I can find time to pay (your friend Mr.

Poignaud[†1] being kind enough to wait for this note) for not previously answering your and Colonel Thomson's[†2] most kind letter. The truth is that we have been staying at Broadstairs, whither we prevailed upon Mrs. Hogarth to accompany us, and I made up my mind before we went to get over to Dovor[†3] and tell you in person how much indebted we felt to you for your Invitation, and how much we regretted that our previous engagements and my future arrangements prevented our accepting it. I was prevented from carrying this design into execution, by being suddenly called to town in consequence of a robbery, (to no very great amount, I am happy to say) being committed here in our absence.

I fear you will find me at all times a bad correspondent, but I must plead a thousand distracting engagements and throw myself upon your mercy. With very best remembrances to Colonel Thomson and your family in which Kate joins — and trusting that you will afford me some future opportunity of saying all that I have not time to write.

I am
My Dear Mrs. Thomson
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Thomson.

To C. J. DAVIDS, [?MID-SEPTEMBER 1837]†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting suggests Sep 37, probably on his return from Broadstairs.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

Dear Sir.

I return you the October Song with many thanks for the Offer. The songs of the Month I am sorry to say, are not open to competition.

[†a]The little trifle you sent me at the same time, I am happy to retain.[†a]

In reply to your enquiry I can only say that I am extremely happy to receive any contributions for the Miscellany, †b and most anxious to accept them when I can possibly do so. I think the idea you mention a very good one, but of course I can give no distinct pledge on the subject without seeing the paper.

I am Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS†b

C. J. Davids Esqre.

To E. S. MORGAN, [15 SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS British Museum. Date: Holl's receipt for "Biddy Tibbs" is dated 15 Sep. Address: E. S. Morgan Esqre. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Have the goodness to pay Mr. Holl the Author of Biddy Tibbs†1 in No. 9 eight guineas for his paper.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Morgan Esqre.

To W. WILSON, [15 SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection.†2 Date: Clearly this was the "written notice to the Printer" referred to in To Bentley, 16 Sep.

Doughty Street | Friday Morning

Mr. Wilson

I request that my directions respecting the contents of the Miscellany may be complied with and that in place of the enclosed proofs you have the goodness to send me proofs of the articles I have directed to be inserted, and for the insertion of which I have pledged myself to the authors. I shall neither correct nor sanction the appearance of the Legends of Ballar†3 &c. in the present number, and I request you to take notice that I object to its insertion.

Yours Truly C.D.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [16 SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales. Date: plainly same day as next. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I would give you a call with pleasure, but if it be on Mr. Bentley's behalf[†4] that you wish to see me, I would rather receive a more formal communication — the more especially as his insolence in sending to me last night 16 pages of printed matter for the Miscellany which I have never seen before, renders it necessary for me to-day to give him legal notice through my Solicitor of my intention to withdraw myself from the Miscellany if these articles appear.[†1]

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1837*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Saturday September 16th. 1837.

Sir.

When I left town, I placed a number of accepted articles in the Printer's hands, with directions to set them up in sheets, beginning at the commencement of the number, and to send proofs to me. The whole of this arrangement has been altered by you; proofs of articles which I never saw in Manuscript have been forwarded to me; and notwithstanding my written notice to the Printer that I would revise no such papers, this course has been persisted in, and a second sheet sent.

By these proceedings I have been actually superseded in my office as Editor of the Miscellany; they are in direct violation of my agreement with you, and a gross insult to me. I therefore beg to inform you that henceforth I decline conducting the Miscellany or contributing to it in any way; but in order that you may suffer no inconvenience or embarrassment from the shortness of this notice, I will write a paper this month, and edit the Magazine this month — no longer.

As I feel this course of treatment most strongly, I beg you to understand that it is my firm intention to abide by this determination, regarding the propriety of which, my feeling of what is due to myself, is strengthened by the best advice from others.

I am
Sir,

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [16 SEPTEMBER 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: same day as last; handwriting confirms. Wrongly given in N as Jan 39 — the date of CD's actual resignation from the Miscellany. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Evening

My Dear Sir

Although my feelings were so much excited this morning by Mr. Bentley's treatment (rendered doubly insulting by the proofs received from the Printer's last night) that I could not refrain from hinting at the determination at which I had arrived, I forbore to announce it openly until I had taken a little time to consider and deliberate upon it, maturely.

I now write to say that you are released from any further trouble in the negociation regarding Oliver Twist, for I have ceased to be the Editor of the Miscellany.

Believe me Ever
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 19 SEPTEMBER 1837

MS Berg Collection. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre. | New Burlington Street. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning Septr. 19th. 1837.

Sir.

Mr. Molloy of No. 8 New Square Lincoln's Inn, is my Solicitor. I have laid your last letter before him,[†1] and have merely to request that you will have the goodness to make any further communication you may deem necessary, to that gentleman and not to me.

Of course it is my intention[†2] to abide by the determination I have given you notice of, or I should not have announced it.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?SEPTEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; probably during the quarrel with Bentley which culminated in the Agreement of 28 Sep.

Thursday Morng.

My Dear Forster.

Don't call to-night, for Mr. and Mrs. Thomson have returned to town, and I fear we must go to Hogarth's to see them.

I will be with you about One o'Clock tomorrow. Cruikshank has been here — deputed by Bentley to say nothing. He is going to call again tomorrow Morning, and it may be necessary for me to see Talfourd afterwards. Full particulars when I see you.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 22 SEPTEMBER 1837*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Septr. 22nd. 1837

Sir.

In reply to your note, I must refer you to Mr. Molloy in accordance with the determination expressed in my notes of Saturday and Tuesday last.

I am Sir
Your obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To THE EDITOR OF THE BRIGHTON GUARDIAN, [23 SEPTEMBER 1837]

MS G. P. Romer Ltd. Date: PM 23 Sep 37. Address: To | The Editor of | The Brighton Guardian | Brighton. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street London | Saturday Evening.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Editor of The Brighton Guardian,[†1] and begs to inform him with reference to a paragraph in his paper of Wednesday,[†2] (to which a friend who accidentally saw it, has called his attention) that the article entitled "Smoke" which appeared in the last

Number of Bentley's Miscellany,[†3] was forwarded to him by an anonymous correspondent who signed himself Snodgrass, as an original paper — the lines being at once announced as accepted,[†4] the swindling gentleman unknown wrote again to enquire why they were not inserted, some accidental[†5] delay having taken place in their publication.

No apology is due to double L, A, double B, Mr. Dickens' only sin against him being that he was struck with the merit of his production directly he read it. It would be absurd to suppose that Mr. Dickens can be acquainted with every poetical effusion that appears in every Newspaper in England. He is not aware of anybody, however much time he may have on his hands, who is sufficiently acquainted with this most extensive department of literature to be secure from a similar imposition.

Whether the Editor of The Brighton Guardian might have used some more delicate term than Piracy in his indignant paragraph, or have done Mr. Dickens more justice by assuming in the first instance that[†1] he had been imposed upon, Mr. Dickens must leave to him with this explanation.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 SEPTEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: On Fri 22 Sep Bentley was prepared to offer CD an additional 20 guineas a month as editor of the Miscellany (draft Memorandum, MS Berg Collection).[†2] On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Sunday Morning

My Dear Forster.

As I have been sticking to it pretty hard all last week, I intend ordering a Oss to be at this door at 11 OClock in the morning to convey me on [†a]a fifteen mile ride out, ditto in, and a Lunch on the Road.[†a] Can you spare time to join me? We will return here to dinner at 5. I must dine at home, because Mitton will be here at that hour, with a full report of an Interview which is to take place tomorrow.

Gregory went down to Molloy's unsolicited on Saturday and offered an increased remuneration of 20 Guineas per month! Of course we refused it — a new agreement and copyright, being the War Cry.[†3]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqr

To T. N. TALFOURD, 27 SEPTEMBER 1837

Text from Pickwick, 1st edn, Chapman & Hall, 1837.

TO
MR. SERJEANT TALFOURD, M.P., ETC., ETC.
48, DOUGHTY STREET, | SEPTEMBER 27, 1837

MY DEAR SIR,

If I had not enjoyed the happiness of your private friendship, I should still have dedicated this work to you,[†1] as a slight and most inadequate acknowledgment of the inestimable services you are rendering to the literature of your country, and of the lasting benefits you will confer upon the authors of this and succeeding generations, by securing to them and their descendants a permanent interest in the copyright of their works.[†2]

Many a fevered head and palsied hand will gather new vigour in the hour of sickness and distress from your excellent exertions; many a widowed mother and orphan child, who would otherwise reap nothing from the fame of departed genius but its too frequent legacy of poverty and suffering, will bear, in their altered condition, higher testimony to the value of your labours than the most lavish encomiums from lip or pen could ever afford.

Beside such tributes, any avowal of feeling from me, on the question to which you have devoted the combined advantages of your eloquence, character, and genius, would be powerless indeed. Nevertheless, in thus publicly expressing my deep and grateful sense of your efforts in behalf of English literature, and of those who devote themselves to the most precarious of all pursuits, I do but imperfect justice to my own strong feelings on the subject, if I do no service to you.

These few sentences would have comprised all I should have had to say, if I had only known you in your public character. On the score of private feeling, let me add one word more.

Accept the dedication of this book, my dear Sir, as a mark of my warmest regard and esteem — as a memorial of the most gratifying friendship I have ever contracted, and of some of the pleasantest hours I have ever spent — as a token of my fervent admiration of every fine quality of your head and heart — as an assurance of the truth and sincerity with which I shall ever be,

My dear Sir,
Most faithfully and sincerely yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [28 SEPTEMBER 1837]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: on mourning paper; presumably the Thursday before the opening of Covent Garden under Macready's management, 30 Sep; Macready recorded that Forster and Procter came to his room after the performance (Diaries, I, 413).[†1]

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Ainsworth.

Procter,[†2] Forster, and I, having procured a Private Box are going to Covent Garden together on Saturday Evening to give Macready a welcome.[†3] We shall all three be delighted if you will join us. Write me word that you will dine here at 4 precisely. I have not seen you, for ages.

With best compts. to the Ladies
Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS C. B. WILSON, [AUTUMN 1837]*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop. Date: The poem was either "Lady Blue's Ball" (Miscellany, Oct 37) or "My Father's Old Hall" (Nov 37). CD must have been writing in Sep or Oct.

Doughty Street. | Thursday
Dear Mrs. Wilson

I will use the poem with much pleasure. The land of our Birth[†4] shall be returned to you at the end of the month.

Trusting you have recovered your health, I am

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Baron Wilson

October

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?1 OCTOBER 1837]*

MS Somerville College, Oxford. Date: The final double No. of Pickwick was published on 30 Oct; CD is unlikely to have been finishing it earlier than the beginning of Oct. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Sunday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I must ask you to excuse me to-day. I need not, I hope, ask you to believe that by staying away, I deny myself the greatest pleasure and enjoyment.

The two Pickwicks for the month are so heavy a task, and it is so important that they should be out of my hands this week, that I am obliged in violation of my established usage to write this evening. I have postponed making this resolution until this morning in the hope that I might make some great start[†1] which would render it unnecessary. No such start I am sorry to say has taken place, so I must plod on.

As I shall sit down to work about the same time as you sit down to dinner, I shall take a glass of wine with you in imagination, and fancy I hear your sympathising with my solitary condition — which will be a great relief and consolation, and very appropriate moreover, you being the tutelar deity of my black-gaitered acquaintance.

With best remembrances to Mrs. Talfourd[†2] and Miss Ely[†3]

I am, My Dear Sir,
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Sergeant Talfourd.

To CHARLES ROSS, [?2 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Mr W. J. Carlton. Date: The tables appeared in the first No. of the Statistical Journal,[†4] 1 Oct 37, which Ross probably sent CD on publication. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Evening

My Dear Ross.

Many thanks for your statistical Magazine, which contains some tables concerning juvenile delinquency that I was particularly anxious to see in a well-digested form.[†5] Reciprocating all your kind wishes most cordially, I rest

Most Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Ross Esqre.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [4 OCTOBER 1837]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: Abraham Hayward's review of CD's work up to Pickwick No. XVII appeared in the Quarterly Review of Oct 37.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Night.

[†a]My dear Talfourd.

I write a line before going to bed, just to say that no preparation for my trip Peak-wise[†1] or otherwise will prevent my having the great pleasure of a trip with you either on Friday or Saturday if your engagements will permit — and that I shall look anxiously for the note in which you fix your own time.[†a]

Murray,[†2] supposing I presume that any notice in the Quarterly must drive so young a man as myself nearly distracted with delight, sent me the Quarterly yesterday. I think Hayward[†3] has rather visited upon me his recollection of my declining his intimate acquaintance, but as the Notice[†4] contains a great deal that I know to be true, and much more which may be, but of which I am no impartial judge, I find little fault with it. I hope I may truly say that no writer ever had less vanity than I have; and that my only anxiety to stand well with the world in that capacity, originates in authorship being unhappily my trade, as it is happily my pleasure.

I am sorry you blush to think of "that other matter"[†5] — even in modesty. I wish I had any better means of assuring you how honestly and sincerely I am your most affectionate and attached friend.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; perhaps refers to the trip mentioned in To Talfourd, 4 Oct. Address: John Forster Esqre.

My Forster. I could hug you and Talfourd too — I am so delighted to find that you are going to participate in my holiday. Come to me, and don't be later than 11. I think Richmond and Twickenham through the Park, out at Knightsbridge, and over Barnes Common, would make a beautiful ride. I sent Fred down just now, in the agonies of despair, to know if you were going. CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?9 OCTOBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: after the Agreement of 28 Sep giving Bentley power to insert articles in the Miscellany, and before 30 Oct when CD returned Bentley the Grimaldi MS (see To Bentley, that day). Reference to the Miscellany suggests same day as next. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning.

My Dear Sir

I cannot consent to any one article of Mr. Wilks's[†1] agreement. I will not bind myself to any man, either to commend Mr. Wilks, or Mr. Hughes,[†2] or Mr. Richard Hughes[†3] or Mr. Alfred Bunn[†4] or anybody else.[†5] As I have exercised an impartial judgment on Mr. Wilks's previous productions, I do not choose to recognize him as a regular contributor to the Miscellany, although you have the power of inserting his compositions if you like.

Let the matter drop here. We shall never agree about it I see plainly.

Mr. Wilks's conditions are exceedingly presumptuous and arrogant, and I cannot entertain them for an instant.

I will see you on Wednesday Morning at 12 about the Miscellany if that will suit you.

Faithfully Yours My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?9 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: presumably Oct, soon after CD had settled his quarrel with Bentley and agreed to continue Oliver in the Miscellany. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I have selected three papers for you to choose a subject from. The inclosed by friend Barker[†1] is one. The printer promises the others on Tuesday Evening.[†2]

The other subject will (as I suppose you have already heard from Bentley) be our young charge Oliver.

In haste Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Forster says this refers to Pickwick, No XIV, published 30 Apr (F, II, i, 89); impossible since letter has mourning seal. Signature strongly suggests Autumn: not Sep as no Oliver to be written then; not Nov as Pickwick finished: therefore presumably Oct.[†3] Probably 12th, since the final Nos of Pickwick were in proof and Oliver still to do. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty St. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I have so many sheets of the Miscellany to correct, before I can begin Oliver, that I fear I shall not be able to leave home this morning. I therefore send your[†4] revise of the Pickwick by Fred, who is on his way with it to the Printers'. You will see that my alterations are very slight, but I think for the better.

Let me know by a line in writing how you are. I hope you did not find that the couple of glasses of wine you took, injured you at all — that you took no cold — and that you got home well, and slept well. Take care of yourself, and tell me that you are in good stout spirits at least.

Believe me Ever
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To E. S. MORGAN, [?13 OCTOBER 1837]*

MS Bodleian Library. Date: after the completion of Miscellany, Vol. I (June 37). CD no doubt needed the first instalment of Oliver (Miscellany, Feb 37) while writing the brief account of Oliver's birth and childhood which Bumble gives Mr Brownlow in the Nov No. (Ch. 17). Letter probably written before the middle of the month.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Will you have the goodness to send me a No. 2 of the Miscellany. I have distributed all I had of that part, and have nothing to refer to for that portion of Oliver's history.

Perhaps you will remember to have the first Volume bound up for me. I mentioned it to Mr. Bentley the other day, but I have no doubt he has forgotten it.

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Morgan Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?13 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Refers to the illustration to the Nov No.; probably written same day as last.

Doughty Street | Friday Night

My Dear Cruikshank

I inclose you the first eleven slips of Oliver[†1] which I will send for on Monday Morning early. I think you will find a very good subject at page 10, which we will call "Oliver's reception by Fagin and the boys".

In haste
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?18 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Ernest Maltravers was published on 25 Sep 37; handwriting suggests Autumn 1837; perhaps the Wednesday after last.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I have never yet seen Ernest Maltravers,[†1] although I am very anxious to read it. If you will lend it me, I will take great care of it.

You are surprised at not having seen me? — I am surprised at not having seen you, though I suppose I need not be, 'till Covent Garden closes which Heaven postpone.[†2]

I should have called on you before, though, but I have been much worried with other people's affairs. I rashly consented too, to dine with Prentis[†3] yesterday and consequently have got the last chapter of Oliver to write to-day. Tomorrow I shall be with you between 12 and 1.

I suppose Frederick has told you that Henry[†4] came back after a week's absence and begged of me with great humility to give him another trial. I lectured him as severely as I could, and consented to do so. And here he is!

If you have any engagement tomorrow morning, let me know, and I will call at some other hour of the day.

In great haste
My Dear Forster
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To E. LLOYD, [23 OCTOBER 1837]*

MS University of Texas. Date: endorsed "Charles Dickens (Boz) | 48 Doughty Street | 23 Oct 1837 | Recd. do. | Ansr. needless | Cannot take the Chair at Elocution Class on 28th. in consequence of going out of Town on finishing the Pickwick Papers."

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

Sir.

I have waited the arrival of the Post this morning, and regret to say that a long-planned visit which the conclusion of the Pickwick Papers enables me to pay, will unfortunately prevent my taking the chair at the Institution[†5]

on the 28th.[†1] I have endeavoured to postpone leaving town for only one day, but I find it would occasion so much inconvenience and disappointment that I am obliged to adhere to my original arrangements.

I am Sir
Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Lloyd Esqre.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [25 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Date: the Wednesday before Mon 30 Oct, when the two final Nos of Pickwick were published.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

In order that the curiosity of Mrs. Talfourd and Miss Ely, may be set at rest as speedily as possible, I send you proofs of the double number of Pickwick which comes out on Monday. The complete copy of the Work of which I shall beg your acceptance, will not be ready I fear before the 9th. or 10th. of next month.

With best remembrances, Believe me My Dear Sir
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd

To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; handwriting suggests Autumn 1837, probably Oct. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I have sent Fred. What time do we dine — Please send the Books. — CD.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?OCTOBER 1837]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: on mourning paper; signature suggests Autumn 1837, probably Oct.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My dear Talfourd

As I had forgotten an old engagement with Mrs. Dickens in the forenoon of Sunday, I have made bold to order the horses for 10 minutes past 1 instead of 12. It will make very little difference if we trot the first mile or two, instead of walking.

Believe me Ever
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CAREY, LEA & BLANCHARD,[†1] 26 OCTOBER 1837

MS Messrs Lea & Febiger.

48 Doughty St. Mecklenburg Square London
October 26th. 1837.

Gentlemen.

I owe you an apology for not having returned an earlier reply to your obliging letter.[†2] I was not in London when it arrived, and have been so much engaged since my return that for a short time it escaped my recollection.

I need scarcely say that it affords me great pleasure to hear of the popularity of the Pickwick Papers in America — a country in which in common with most Englishmen I take a high interest, and with which I hope one day to become better acquainted.

I should not feel, under the circumstances, quite at ease in drawing upon you for the amount you so liberally request me to consider you my debtors in; but I shall have very great pleasure in receiving from you an American Copy of the Work, which — coupled with your very handsome letter — I shall consider a sufficient acknowledgement of the American sale.

The Novel, Barnaby Rudge of which you speak will not be published until late in the Autumn of next year. Oliver Twist will appear in June next. I shall be very happy to enter into any arrangement with you for the transmission of early proofs of the latter book, if I should hear from you that you consider it desirable.[†3]

I am Gentlemen
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Carey and Co.[†4]

To MRS GEORGE HOGARTH, [26 OCTOBER 1837]†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD had received from Mrs Hogarth "a chain of Mary Hogarth's hair" (MDGH, 1882, III, 6) on 25 Oct, her birthday.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Night

My Dear Mrs. Hogarth.

I need not thank you for your present of yesterday; for you know the mournful pleasure I shall take in wearing it and the care with which I shall prize it, until — so far as relates to this life — I am like her.

I have never had her ring off my finger by day or night, except for an instant at a time to wash my hands, since she died. I have never had her sweetness and excellence absent from my mind so long. I can solemnly say that waking or sleeping I have never once lost the recollection of our hard trial and sorrow, and I feel that I never shall.

It will be a great relief to my heart when I find you sufficiently calm upon this sad subject to claim the promise I made you when she lay dead in this house, never to shrink from speaking of her as if her memory were to be avoided, but rather to take a melancholy pleasure in recalling the times when we were all so happy — so happy that increase of fame and prosperity has only widened the gap in my affections by causing me to think how she would have shared and enhanced all our joys, and how proud I should have been (as God knows I always was) to possess the affection of the gentlest and purest creature that ever shed a light on earth. I wish you could know how I weary now for the three rooms in Furnival's Inn, and how I miss that pleasant smile and those sweet words which, bestowed upon an evening's work in our merry banterings round the fire, were more precious to me than the applause of a whole world would be. I can recal[†1] everything we said and did in those happy days, and could shew you every passage and line we read together.

[†a]You and I will probably be oftener alone together in Kate's coming confinement,[†2] which will be a truly heavy time to me, reminding me how we spent the last.[†a] I see now[†3] that you are capable of making great efforts even against the affliction you have to deplore, and I hope that then our words may be where our thoughts are, and that we may call up these old memories, — not as shadows of the bitter past, but as lights upon a happier future.

Believe me My Dear Mrs. Hogarth,
Ever truly and affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 OCTOBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to Autumn 1837. Presumably the sitting was to Laurence, whose drawing was finished by 23 Nov at latest (see To Bentley, that day). Probably 27 Oct, since notices to correspondents were written near the end of each month. Address: John Forster Esqre. Black seal.

Doughty St. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster.

Send a boy to me at about 6 or 7 oClock this Evening. I forgot that I had to sit this morning, besides finishing my notices to Correspondents —

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn 1837. Address: John Forster Esqre | 6 Manchester Buildings.[†1] Black seal.

Friday

My Dear Forster

Many thanks. — I saw the 3rd. 4th. & 5th. Acts and was exceedingly delighted. Ever Yours CD.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 30 OCTOBER [1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: PM 31 Oct 37 (Tuesday). Address: William Ainsworth Esqre. | Kensal Lodge | Harrow Road. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday October 30th.

My Dear Ainsworth.

I am going to Brighton tomorrow for a week, but I shall make a point of returning on the 8th.[†2] — for I derive so much pleasure from my visits to Kensal Lodge that I would come from the Land's End to pay one. By the bye, you must dine with me on the 14th. at Degex's[†1] No 1 Leicester Place Leicester Square at a kind of semi-business Pickwickian celebration.[†2] I shall take no denial, and I am sure you will give none.

Hayward of Faust notoriety[†3] is the Author of the Quarterly Notice. I declined the honor of his intimate acquaintance when he came to inform me about four months ago with a patronising air, that Lockhart[†4] had requested him to write it; and I think he has not quite forgotten or forgiven the circumstance. I have cared very little about the matter from the first, and care less now,[†5] since it has been the means of calling forth the kind and friendly remarks in your note contained.

Our worthy friend the Mogul[†6] has been very unwell for some days, and has worn a dark and gloomy appearance in consequence. I found him yesterday, in company with a phial and a basin of mutton broth, but he is recovering. He has been in a very blaspheming and foaming condition in consequence of Westmacott's[†7] attacks[†8] upon him, but he is now greatly softened down — quite reasonable in fact.

I should have written to you to-day to thank you for your flattering and kind-hearted mention of myself in the new Preface to Rookwood;[†9] if the weather had been finer I intended riding out to tell you how warmly I felt it, and how much sincere delight your friendship affords me.

We will appoint a time for making some necessary arrangements in poor Mrs. Macrone's behalf,[†1] when I dine with you; till then and ever after, believe me My Dear Ainsworth.

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My best remembrances to the Ladies. I hope Miss Harrison[†2] is married — if I were a single man I should hate her husband mortally.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [30 OCTOBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day before CD left for Brighton. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Lady Blessington's[†3] desultory thoughts I have retained.[†4] I see nothing likely to be of the slightest service to us in any of the accompanying books, and as I received them all from you, I send them back to you.

I also return the Grimaldi MS.[†5] I have thought the matter over, and looked it over, too. It is very badly done, and is so redolent of twaddle that I fear I can not take it up on any conditions to which you would be disposed to accede. I should require to be ensured three hundred pounds in the first instance without any reference to the Sale — and as I should be bound to stipulate in addition that the work should never be published in Numbers, I think it would scarcely serve your purpose.

I have given out some copy for Wilson to get on with. I shall be at the Old Ship Hotel at Brighton for a week, and any letter will find me there in case you have anything to communicate.

I am
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

November

To JOHN FORSTER, 3 NOVEMBER [1837]†

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Address: John Forster Esqre. | 58 Lincoln's Inn Fields | London. On mourning paper.

Brighton. | Friday Morning Novr. 3rd.

[†a]My Dear Forster.

Your letter, although a most welcome one, disappointed me sadly, inasmuch as I confidently expected that it would have announced your intention of coming down on Saturday or Sunday at any rate, and returning with us which would greatly have enhanced the pleasure of my expedition. You know best, but I really think such a trip would have done you more good than a dozen bottles of that same medicine that you make wry faces at.[†a]

It is a beautiful day to-day and we have been taking advantage of it, but the wind has been so high and the weather so stormy, that Mrs. D[†1] has been scarcely able to peep out of doors. On Wednesday it blew a perfect hurricane breaking windows, knocking down shutters, carrying people off their legs, blowing the fires out, and causing universal consternation. The air was for some hours darkened with a shower of black hats (second-hand) which are supposed to have been blown off the heads of unwary passengers in remote parts of the town, and have been industriously picked up by the fishermen. Charles Kean[†2] was advertized for Othello "for the benefit of Mrs. Sefton, for which occasion he had most kindly postponed for one day his departure for London". I have not heard whether he got to the Theatre, but I am sure nobody else did. They do The Honey Moon[†3] to-night, on which occasion I mean to patronise the Drama.[†4]

We have a beautiful bay-windowed sitting room here, fronting the sea, but I have seen nothing of Beard's brother who was to have shewn me the Lions,[†1] and my notions of the place are consequently somewhat confined being limited to the Pavilion, the chain Pier, and the Sea. The last is quite enough for me, and unless I am joined by some male companion[†2] is most probably all I shall see here.

I am glad you like Oliver this month[†3] — especially glad that you particularize the first chapter.[†4] I hope to do great things with Nancy. If I can only work out the idea I have formed of her, and of the female who is to contrast with her,[†5] I think I may defy Mr. Hayward[†6] and all his works. I have had great difficulty in keeping my hands off Fagin and the rest of them in the evenings, but as I came down for rest, I have resisted the temptation, and steadily applied myself to the labour of being idle.

Did you ever read — of course you have though — Defoe's history of the Devil?[†7] What a capital thing it is. I bought it for a couple of shillings yesterday morning, and have been quite absorbed in it ever since.

We must have been jolter-headed geniuses[†8] not to have anticipated Macready's reply. My best remembrances to him. I see Hullah at this moment. I must be present at a Rehearsal of that opera.[†9] It will be better than any Comedy that was ever played. Talking of Comedies, I still see "No Thoroughfare" staring me in the face, every time I look down that road.[†10]

I have taken places for Tuesday next; we shall be at home at Six o'Clock, and I shall hope to see you that evening. I am afraid you will find this letter extremely dear at eightpence, but if the warmest assurances of friendship and attachment and anxious lookings-forward to the pleasure of your society be worth anything, throw them into the balance — together with a hundred wishes for your speedy recovery and one hearty assurance that I am, my dear Forster,

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS no room for the flourish. I'll finish it the next time I write to you.

To J. P. HARLEY, [?NOVEMBER 1837]

Extract in Walter T. Spencer catalogue, n.d. Date: before Dec 37 when CD was beginning his letters "My Dear Harley"; perhaps shortly after his return from Brighton — when he was behindhand with Oliver (see next).

Dear Sir,

Having been very much out of town, I regret to say that I am obliged to shut myself up every morning now (except Sundays) and cannot have the pleasure of seeing any one.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Black seal and handwriting point to Autumn 1837, probably Nov. The holiday in Brighton would have delayed work on Oliver. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank.

Shall you be at home at Two oClock to-day? I have been prevented from writing Oliver, so perhaps had better settle the Illustration[†1] with you at that time if convenient. A verbal answer will do.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS HILL,[†2] [13 NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: the Monday before Sat 18 Nov, the night of the Pickwick dinner. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you dine with me on Saturday next at Degex's the Prince of Wales No. 1 Leicester Place Leicester Square — at 5 o'Clock for half past exactly? I shall be truly delighted to see you.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esqre.

To CHARLES HICKS, [13 NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: same day as last. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I shall be happy to see you to dinner on Saturday next at five for half past, punctually, at Degex's the Prince of Wales No. 1 Leicester Place Leicester Square. Pray give me the pleasure of your company.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Hicks.

To JAMES THOMSON, [?13 NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: presumably the first Monday after CD's return from Brighton on 7 Nov. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Monday Evening

Sir.

I have been out of town or I would have replied to your letter at once.

I shall be most happy to avail myself of your brother's paper,[†1] which if anything should prevent its appearance in the next Miscellany, shall certainly form a part of the January Number.

I beg to thank you for your kind congratulations on the completion of the Pickwick, and am, Sir,

Yours very obedtly.
CHARLES DICKENS

James Thomson Esqre.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [MID-NOVEMBER 1837]

Extract in Jerdan, Autobiography, IV, 364. Date: shortly before 15 Nov, when CD told Macready that Jerdan would be present at the dinner.

Inviting him to a semi-business Pickwickian sort of dinner.[†2] ... I depend upon you above everybody. Faithfully yours, always,

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, [15 NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Presumably this was the "very nice note from Dickens" which Macready answered on Wednesday night 15 Nov 37 (Diaries, I, 425). On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

There is a semi-business semi-pleasure little dinner which I intend to give at Degex's the Prince of Wales in Leicester Place Leicester Square, on Saturday at five for half past precisely, at which only Talfourd, Forster, Ainsworth, Jerdan, and the publishers will be present.[†1] It is to celebrate (that is too great a word, but I can think of no better) the conclusion of my Pickwick labours; and as I intend before you take that roll upon the grass you spoke of, to beg your acceptance of one of the first complete copies of the work, I should be very much delighted if you would join us.

I know too well the many anxieties that press upon you just now,[†2] to seek to persuade you to come if you would prefer a night's repose and quiet. Let me assure you notwithstanding most honestly and heartily that there is no one I should be more happy or gratified to see, and that among your brilliant circle of well-wishers and admirers you number none more unaffectedly or faithfully yours, than

My Dear Sir
Yours most truly
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esqre.

To SAMUEL LOVER, [16 NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: same day as last. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My dear Lover.

There is a semi-business semi-pleasure kind of dinner in honor of the completion of Pickwick, to come off on Saturday at Degex's the Prince of Wales Leicester Place Leicester Square at 5 o'Clock for half past 5 precisely. If you will make one of my guests you will gratify me exceedingly.

Talfourd and Macready and one or two more will be there to counterbalance the publishers and printers, so I hope I can promise you a tolerably pleasant evening.

I would have given you longer notice, but having to consider the engagements of different members of the party, I have only just been able to "name the day".

Write me a line off-hand like a decent Irishman (if there be such a thing) and say you'll come.

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?16 NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting points to Nov 37; perhaps refers to the Pickwick dinner, although no evidence that Cruikshank was present. Black seal. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre. | Myddleton Terrace | Pentonville.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank

Have you made up your mind about Saturday? You will meet Talfourd, Macready, and a very pleasant party.

Let me know.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

PS. I am obliged to ask you for a reply, as I am making up the little table-full.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16 NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper; probably the Thursday before the Pickwick dinner. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My dear Forster.

I will call upon you about 3 o'Clock or a little after. The dinner, recollect, is on Saturday.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK [?MID-NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting points to Nov 37; No. VI of Barker's "Nights at Sea" appeared in the Dec Miscellany, illustrated by Cruikshank. Black seal. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre.

Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank

I send you a paper by Barker, which perhaps you will like for the subject of the second illustration. If not, let me know, and I can give you another most excellent one.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting points to Nov 37; Bentley had possibly called about Grimaldi (see 30 Oct and ?23 Nov).

Doughty Street. | Sunday Evening

Dear Sir.

I am sorry that I was not at home when you called on Saturday, and also that I did not receive your message in time to call on you. I shall be at home the whole of tomorrow Morning — if you are coming any where in this neighbourhood perhaps you will look in; if not, write and let me know when and where I shall see you.

Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?NOVEMBER 1837]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn-Winter 1837; perhaps refers to the illustration mentioned in To Cruikshank, ?mid-Nov. On mourning paper.

I am delighted with the drawing, which is most admirable. I shall be at home tomorrow morning 'till a quarter to 12, and if you don't call on me, I will call on you about ½ past one. CD.[†1]

To MISS MARION ELY, [?NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: The reference is to finishing a part not the whole of Oliver, since handwriting points clearly to late 1837, probably Nov.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Afternoon

My Dear Miss Ely.

I am just finishing Oliver Twist for which the Printer is waiting. If I should conclude it sooner than I expect, I shall be only too delighted to join you at Drury Lane, but I fear — very much fear — I shall not be able.

I hardly ever regretted being so engaged before, but you make the labour which is generally a pleasure, a labour indeed, when you throw such temptations in my way.

Believe me Ever
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ely.

To EGERTON WEBBE,[†1] [NOVEMBER 1837]*

Extract in Webbe to Bentley, 22 Nov 37 (MS BM). Date: presumably shortly before Webbe's letter.

Webbe informs Bentley of a letter from CD telling him that, on his application in Burlington Street, Bentley would settle with him for "Sonnet to a Fog" [†2] and "Genius; or, the Dog's-Meat Dog", [†3] and adding:

I do not know what pecuniary value Mr. Bentley may set on your contributions, but I sincerely hope it may be such as will induce you to favor me with many more. I am sure the Dog's meat dog cannot get more than he deserves, and will not get half as much as my high appreciation of his merits would hold him entitled to.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?23 NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: probably the Thursday before 29 Nov when the Agreement for Grimaldi was signed. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir

I forward you the draft agreement you sent me, and the draft of another agreement which I propose in lieu, which I think you will find not to differ materially from yours except in respect to the time of payment.[†4] If you could see half the offers that lie in my desk at this moment for the employment of the next three or four months, you would deem this a very reasonable alteration. If you cannot accede to these emendations, there is no harm done and Grimaldi can stand upon his own head as he has often done before.

I am very much obliged to you for the books, which are a handsome and most acceptable present. I wish you would oblige me by calling at Laurence's the Portrait Painter's.[†1] It would gratify him exceedingly, and I should like you to see his illustrious work.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?24 NOVEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: "The Seal Caverns" (presumably the article CD refers to as "The Seal Hunt") was declined in the Notices of the Nov Miscellany. The reference to the draft Agreements (cf. last letter) was no doubt a reminder to Bentley to bring them when calling on CD that afternoon. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I am obliged to wait at home to-day in expectation of a message (not a hostile one) and so shall be here from 2 to 3. You have the drafts of agreements. I inclosed them to you, you know.

The Seal Hunt is returned. It lies at your office, and was included in the last Notices to correspondents. I recollect nothing about the Prize Master,[†3] but will have looked over the book[†4] by the time you arrive.

Faithfully Yours, Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To F. NOYES,[†5] [?1837]

Envelope only, MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: 1837, not later than Nov, on handwriting. Address: F. Noyes Esqre. | Saint James's Street | Nottingham.

December

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Clearly refers to an article for the Examiner, of which Forster was dramatic critic. The only likely article covering all three theatres was on 3 Dec 37.[†1] Address: John Forster Esqre. Black seal.

Doughty Street. | Friday.

My Dear Forster

I send you a good whack of copy concerning Common Garden, the Delphi, and Saint James's. I am sorry to say that I cannot find time to do Doory[†2] Lane so send back the extracts. Were I you, I would condense the Chronicle.[†3]

Ever Yours
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 2 DECEMBER [1837]*

MS Society of Antiquaries, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Date: on mourning paper; 2 Dec was Saturday in 1837.

Doughty Street | Saturday Decr. 2nd.

My Dear Henry

Your friend need not have been under any apprehension that his paper would have remained unread, had it not been accompanied with a special introduction. I am sorry to say I read them all.

May I beg you to return it with my thanks? It is very neatly done indeed, but as it is a mere versification of the prose description of the chess-Players, I do not think it would do either the author or the Miscellany any good — especially unaccompanied by the outline it describes.

Believe me Ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esqre.

To E. V. KENEALY,[†1] [4 DECEMBER 1837]

Mention in Percy Dobell & Son's catalogue, Oct 1916; dated 48 Doughty Street, 4 Dec 37; on mourning paper.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?5 DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: on mourning paper with widest black border, such as used in Dec; similar references to Grimaldi suggest this and next were written on consecutive days.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am getting on with Grimaldi, and I think am bringing the points out as well as it is possible to do from Mr. Wilks's dreary twaddle.

Did Wilson cast off[†2] the MS? The pages look to me as if they were too heavy. Let him be as quick as possible on Cruikshank's account.

Faithfully Yours (in haste)
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on mourning paper with widest black border; the baby was christened Charles Culliford Boz on Sat 9 Dec.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday

My Dear Forster

I cannot possibly dine at Bulwer's[†3] on Saturday, because it is my boy's christening and we have invited a host of people here in the evening — nor can you, unless you break your engagement to us, which I have no doubt you have forgotten, but which my better half remembering the occasion will not fail to recollect.

About the Saint James's it will be better if you call here in a cab when you leave the Ourang Outangs, and come here. We will then go together.

Grimaldi speeds but twaddles.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To THOMAS BEARD, [6 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 6 Dec 37. Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Beard.

We christen the living wonder on Saturday at 12, at New Pancridge,[†1] and shall expect you here at half past 11.

We hope to have the pleasure of seeing you and your sisters to meet a few friends in the evening, or shall be much disappointed.

Always yours most faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esqre.

To SAMUEL LOVER, [6 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Dickens House. Date: same day as last.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday

My Dear Lover.

We christen an infant phænomonon[†2] on Saturday, and expect a few friends in the evening in honor of the occasion. If you will join us at about eight o'Clock you will give both myself and Mrs. Dickens very sincere pleasure.

Mrs. D begs me to remind you that we are very unceremonious people and so forward a very unceremonious and improper message to Mrs. Lover[†3] — which is, that if she will set aside all preliminary forms, and come with you, she will gladden our hearts the more by being so friendly. Pray enforce this communication with a grain or two of your eloquence and say I am requested to add that Mrs. Dickens would have called on Mrs. Lover and brought her own message, but that she is in delicate health, and the weather keeps her at home.

Believe me, always,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esqre.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [6 DECEMBER 1837]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1248 (1916); dated 48 Doughty Street, Wednesday. Date: same day as last.

My Jerdan

We are going to bring within the pale of Christianity on Saturday next, an infant "whose name is velocity, and nature, genius"[†1] and in honor of him and his faith assemble a few friends in the evening to music and a rubber.

To T. J. CULLIFORD, [6 DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Mr L. C. Staples. Date: presumably same day as last.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Night

My Dear Sir

As my better half is "doing her hair" she begs me to reply to your note in manner following. First, we propose that the Infant phænomonon's name shall be Charles Culliford;[†2] secondly we find a substitute for you at the font; and thirdly we shall expect to see you in the evening when we gather together a few friends in honor of the occasion. So no more at present from your loving nephew to command

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Culliford Esqre.

PS. Missis's love.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?7 DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: on mourning paper with widest black border; the reference to Grimaldi suggests shortly after To Bentley, ?5 Dec.

Doughty Street | Thursday Night

My Dear Sir.

Order the Miscellany just as you please. I have no wish or care about the matter.

I merely wish to set myself right with you on two points.

First, I do not choose Captain Marryatt[†3] to suppose that I pillage his articles from American papers, and advertize his name as a contributor to the Miscellany.[†1] I shall write him a line to that effect tomorrow, in my own justification.[†2]

Secondly, I cannot and will not bear the perpetual ill will and heartburnings and callings and writings consequent upon my accepting papers which are never inserted. In future therefore I would much rather forward you my opinion of the papers I receive, towards the close of every month, and leave you to make out the Notices to correspondents as you think proper.

The Grimaldi grows under the alterations much better than I supposed possible. But if you extend the quantity of matter in each page, remember that we shall stop short somewhere about the middle of the Second Volume.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, 11 DECEMBER 1837

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Monday Evening Decr. 11th./37

My Dear Forster.

Chapman and Hall have just sent me[†3] three "extra Super" bound copies of Pickwick — as per specimen inclosed.[†4] The first I forward to you, the second I have presented to our good friend Ainsworth, and the third Kate has retained for herself.

Accept your copy with one sincere and most comprehensive expression of my warmest friendship[†5] and esteem; and a hearty renewal (if there need be any renewal when there has been no interruption) of all those assurances of affectionate regard which our close friendship and communion for a long time back, has every day implied.

Our boy took the measles last Saturday to celebrate his birthday, and has been ill ever since. "He's got 'em very mild" in nursery phrase, so I am not sorry for it as it will now be quickly over.

That beautiful passage[†6] you were so kind and considerate as to send me, has given me the only feeling akin to pleasure — sorrowful pleasure it is — that I have yet had, connected with the loss of my dear young friend and companion for whom my love and attachment will never diminish, and by whose side if it please God to leave me in possession of sense to signify my wishes, my bones, whenever or wherever I die, will one day be laid.[†1]

Tell Leigh Hunt[†2] when you have an opportunity how much he has affected me, and how deeply I thank him for what he has done — you cannot say it too strongly.

Ever My Dear Forster
Faithfully and truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]
John Forster Esqre.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [11 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly same day as last. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street. | Monday Evening

My dear Ainsworth.

We take horse next Sunday at 10 — and I have arranged — I dare say much to the disappointment of the opposite neighbours[†4] — for the Serjeant to be put on his horse at his own residence, and for us to mount at the place where the animals live.

The accompanying copy of Pickwick is one of three bound according to the taste of Chapman and Hall; I beg your acceptance of it — not for the sake of the binding or the gilt edges or the contents, but of the Author, who I trust may long continue to occupy a place among your chosen friends, and to rank your name among the names of those for whom he entertains sentiments of no common regard and esteem.

With best compliments to the ladies, and many wishes that they may not think Pickwick in his new suit too gaudy or presuming, I rest, My dear Ainsworth

Faithfully and Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esqre.

To W. C. MACREADY, [12 DECEMBER 1837]

Mention in Macready, Diaries, I, 431, under date 12 Dec 37.

A "note from Dickens with his volume of Pickwick".

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Lockhart noted in his diary for Tues 12 Dec 37: "Dine at Mr. George Cruikshank's to meet Mr. Dickens, alias Boz" (Andrew Lang, Life and Letters of John Gibson Lockhart, 1897, II, 182). Black seal. Address: John Forster Esq.

Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I cannot come out to-day, for I dine at Cruikshanks[†1] at 5 to meet Lockhart. Dine with me tomorrow at the same hour, will you?

Ever Yours
CD.

To J. P. HARLEY, [12 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Berg Collection. Date: on mourning paper with widest black border; the only revivals of The Strange Gentleman during CD's period of mourning were on 29 May, 12 and 13 Dec; of these only 13 Dec was Wednesday. Address: J. P. Harley Esqre.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Night

My dear Harley.

I entrust this to Burnet's[†2] care (who has just called in here) to say that we are anxious to see our old friend the strange Gentleman tomorrow

(Wednesday) Night. As I do not know where to find Mrs. Braham now, on a short notice, may I rely on you to ask her to leave word with the man at the door to let us have either a pit or proscenium box on the same side as that in which we used to sit; but not a box on the same tier, or opposite. Old recollections make us shun our old haunts, or the sight of them.[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?MID-DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting points to late 1837, probably Dec.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

I very much regret to say that my cold is so exceedingly bad that I cannot leave home to-day. I went out yesterday and was a burden to myself and everybody about me. To-day I really am extremely unwell — so much so, that although I have deferred writing 'till the last moment and had determined to come in spite of myself, I am so dead beat that I cannot.

I am exceedingly sorry for this on every account, but if I were not firm there would be no last chapter to Oliver this month. I cannot write with comfort when I am so out of condition.

Remember me to all our friends and beg them to do the same good turn by me in their cups.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Mourning paper and handwriting make it certain that this cannot refer to the last chapter of the book (completed Oct 38); CD must be referring to the last of an instalment, probably in Dec 37. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Thursday

My Dear Forster.

Come and give me a call, and let us have "a bit o' talk".[†2] My missis is going out to dinner (I ought to go, but I have got a bad cold). Come and sit here and read, or work, or do something, while I write the last[†1] chapter of Oliver which will be arter a lamb chop. Excuse a wafer and believe me ever yours — CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Pierre Bertrand was performed at the Haymarket Thurs 14 Dec 37. Clearly CD was promising the review which appeared in the Examiner on 17 Dec. Black seal. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Friday

My Dear Forster

I will be with you to-night at from 7 to half past. I will bring Bertrand with me, for I do not know yet, at what time I shall be able to knock him off.[†2]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?19 DECEMBER 1837]

MS Huntington Library. Date: on mourning paper with widest black border; presumably the Tuesday after 14 Dec, when Forster told Macready that he had undertaken not to attack Bunn in the Examiner "if the Age attacks on Talfourd were discontinued" (Macready, Diaries, I, 431).

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Talfourd

I have had Mr. Molloy with me this morning, who has been urging upon me what I urged upon you on Saturday night, with reference to Macready's action against Westmacott,[†3] and expressing his hope that after the altered tone of the Age and their present readiness to drop any system of annoyance against you[†4] — you will not aid and abet Macready in the proceeding. I should say that he adds it is a mere conspiracy with Polhill[†1] against Bunn, to serve a purpose of his (Polhill's) own, which he declares White and Whitmore[†2] have unconsciously disclosed to him, and of which it is his intention if the action be pressed to take every advantage. He adds to this, a great deal about having heard that you take an active part in the action, and about Westmacott's desire not to worry or annoy you as exemplified in the readiness with which he desisted from his attacks &c &c &c.

I relate the substance of this conversation to you because as you were the party to whom it bore reference, I think it in any case right to do so. I merely said that I had expressed a strong opinion to you against Macready's extending the action to Westmacott at all, and that I had reason to believe that so far from having fomented it, your opinion on the subject coincided with mine.[†3]

I feel quite certain that it will be better for all parties not to carry the war into Westmacott's camp on this point. Only look to the Observer of the very same Sunday[†4] in which the Age declares the Salaries at Covent Garden were not paid — and judge from thence what rumours were actually afloat about Macready's losses.

I have written these few lines however — not for Macready's information or anybody's but your own. Whatever you do, I know will be right, and perhaps you may see something in Molloy's stirring in the affair which I do not.

Ever My Dear Sir
Faithfully and Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?19 DECEMBER 1837]

Envelope only, Berg Collection. Date: PM 19 Dec 37. Address: Private | Messrs. Chapman & Hall | 186 Strand.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Dec 37. Widest black border. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I was in the humour for writing last night — had begun admirably, and was regularly set in — when there came a double knock, and (Henry being out) Mr. Hullah was announced. And as Mr. Hullah stopped, I was stopped too.

So I am a prisoner for the day and evening. I will report progress tomorrow morning, and I hope it may not be necessary to ask leave to sit again.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To WILLIAM HOWISON,[†1] 21 DECEMBER 1837

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: William Howison Esqre. | 2 Lothian Road | Edinburgh.

48 Doughty Street London. | Thursday December 21st. 1837.

Sir.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of the institution of an "Edinburgh Pickwick Club"[†2] — and conveying to me from its Members a most gratifying and welcome assurance of their good-will and regard.

I believe with you that this is the first society of the kind, established North of the Tweed, and I cannot tell you how much delight it has afforded me to hear of its existence. All my relations by marriage are of Scotland. Many of my dearest living friends are natives of your fine city, and my most cherished recollections are of a dearly loved friend and companion who drew her first breath in Edinburgh and died beside me.

I need not, I am sure, tell you that these are all reasons for endearing to me the place and everything savouring of it. If I wanted any additional sources of gratification beyond those which you acquaint me with, I should find them in the tone of your intelligence and the terms of your letter.

If a word of encouragement from me, can as you say endow you with double life, you will be the most lively club in all the Empire, from this time; for every hearty wish that I can muster for your long-continued welfare and prosperity, is freely yours. Mr. Pickwick's heart is among you always.

Nothing in the course of my brief career — numerous as my causes for gratification have been — has afforded me so much delight as the being so pleasantly and cheerily remembered by the rising spirits of distant places in their moments of relaxation and enjoyment. Trusting that I may long hold a place in your remembrances and that whenever I visit Scotland again I may find you flourishing wi[th][†1] greater vigour than ever,

I [am]
Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howison Esqre.

&c &c

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Dec 37. Widest black border.

Doughty Street | Saturday

My Dear Forster

Can you come and take a cutlet with us to-day at 5? Let me know and we'll add a bit of fish.

Do.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 1837 on handwriting and black seal; Christmas Eve was a Sunday. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Sunday Morning

My Dear Forster

The same to you — Many happy Christmases for us all in company.

At 10 tomorrow

Ever Yours

CD

To FREDERICK YATES, [?DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: during the run of Valsha at the Adelphi, 30 Oct 37 to 15 Jan 38, and probably later than CD's review of it on 3 Dec (see To Forster, ?1 Dec, fn). On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

I should feel very much obliged to you if on any occasion when your private box is disengaged (if ever) you would permit my better half to behold Valsha therefrom. You pack your other boxes so closely that although I have ventured to brave the heat, Mrs. D being in delicate health is afraid.

I have to apologize to you very sincerely for adding this request to your numerous managerial nuisances, and am

My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Yates Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1837]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to Dec 37. Black seal. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Forster

Dine with us by all means. We have a piece of roast beef, and — there being only you, I, Kate, and Frederick — we shall be as Mrs. Ramsbottom[†1] says, "a pleasant little tete a tete of four."

5 is the hour.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?1837]*

MS Messrs Henry Start & Sons. Date: on mourning paper; therefore probably 1837.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I received the accompanying note from Mr. Hogarth on Sunday, which I inclose for the edification of your ingenious informant.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To GEORGE COX, [?1837]

Extract in Naylor's catalogue No. 86 (1881); MS 4 pp.; dated Doughty Street [1837].

I have many things to acknowledge, but let me take them in turn. Firstly, I have to thank you for your verses. Need I say that however much of truth there may be in them, I should be guilty of very bad taste if I placed them before the public eye; or that the reference to myself and the feelings upon which it is founded are better kept within my own heart ... Lastly, I beg you to accept my best thanks for your novel;[†1] I hope to read it with much pleasure. Let me say candidly in one word that I have never, either on my own behalf, or that of my most intimate friend, made a request of any kind the most remotely connected with the noticing of a work to any [reviewer][†2] I know, directly or indirectly. I always most cautiously and carefully abstain from doing so.

To MRS JOHN DICKENS, [?1837]

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 425 (1922). Described as a fragment of a letter of 38 lines, n.d. circa 1837.

Believe me (in haste)
Dear mother
Affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?WINTER 1837-8]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Winter 1837-8.

Sunday

My Dear Forster. Good. Say about half past one, as I am not going out. Kate dines out to-day, so I wish to dispose of myself to dinner. Shall we dine somewhere?

I won't send the Cannon Row letter[†3] till I see you.

Faithfully
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?WINTER 1837-8]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting suggests Winter 1837-8.

Dear Tom — I am sorry I missed you. We have some roast beef at 5.[†4] As I hear you wished to see me, I shall expect you to join us. Ever Yours CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?WINTER 1837-8]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to Winter 1837-8. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morng

My Dear Forster

I am not well, and want a ride. Will you join me — say at 2 o'Clock for a hard trot of three hours? Yes or No.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

1838

January

To MRS GEORGE HOGARTH, [1 JANUARY 1838]

Summary in CD's Diary (MS Victoria & Albert Museum), 2 Jan 38: see p. 629. Date from Diary.

Taking advantage of the opportunity afforded him by Mrs Hogarth sending a pen-wiper of Mary's as a New Year's token, CD implores her to think of the many remaining claims upon her affection and exertions, and not to give way to unavailing grief.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?5 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably Fri 5 Jan, the day CD noted in his Diary that Grimaldi was finished except for his introduction and conclusion (see p. 630). Address: John Forster Esqr.

My dear Forster.

I cannot well come out, but shall be at home and delighted to see you here, any time after 8. My father is here, and we shall have finished Grimaldi I hope by that time.

Ever Yours CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?EARLY JANUARY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: One imitation of Oliver, by "Bos", began in Dec 37 or Jan 38; another, by "Poz", in Jan 38. Gilbert à Beckett denied the authorship of both imitations in Figaro in London, 13 Jan 38. CD was probably writing early in Jan.

Doughty Street. | Friday Night

My Dear Sir

I inclose you the commencing number of two imitations of Oliver "by different hands".[†1] The vagabonds have stuck placards on the walls — each to say that theirs is the only true Edition. They will follow us through the book, of course.

I forgot to speak to you the other day respecting a gentleman who bears a letter to me from a friend, and whom I wish to give a letter to you. I shall hope to see you at the Club[†1] on Wednesday.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?7 JANUARY 1838]

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Date: presumably Jan, before CD's trip to Yorkshire (the only possible journey "North"); early in month, as Oliver not yet written. He dined with Talfourd on Sun 14th (Diary, p. 632).

Doughty Street. | Sunday Noon

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks for the Sparkling Moselle which besides the merit of coming ready iced, has the far greater merit of coming from you, which I have no doubt will improve its flavor, as it will enhance its value, materially. I shall try its inspiration (as Oliver will be lighter this month)[†2] this very night.

If you are at home next Sunday, I shall hope for the pleasure of taking a family dinner with you, and receiving your commissions for the North.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: CD went to the Sun office to insure his life on 9 Jan (Diary, p. 630). Address: John Forster Esqre.

My Dear Forster

Hard at it.

Fred is out now, but he will be in shortly, and I will communicate your message.

I am going to insure my life this morning for Mrs. D.[†1] It is necessary to give a reference as to my identity. May I give them your name and address — you know who I am I think.

Kean be blowed.[†2]

Ever Yours
CD.

To THOMAS GRISSELL, SAMUEL MORTON PETO & EDWARD GARDNER, 9 JANUARY 1838*

MS Dickens House.

Gentlemen

I hereby give you Notice that on the Twenty fifth day of December next I shall quit and deliver up possession of All that set of Rooms or Chambers situate on the South Side of the Third floor of the Messuage No. 15 in Furnivals Inn in the County of Middlesex consisting of Three Rooms on that floor together with a Kitchen No. 8 in the Basement a Cellar No. 9 and a Lumber Room No. 5 in the Roof of the said Messuage which I now hold of you under an Agreement dated the 7th. January 1836 for a term which expires on the said 25th. day of December Next.

Dated this 9th. day of January 1838

Yours &c
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]
Tenant

To Thomas Grissell Samuel
Morton Peto and Edward Gardner Executors of the last Will and Testament of the late Henry
Peto Esquire deceased

Landlords of the above mentioned premises &

Mr. Stephen Fordham their Steward.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11 JANUARY] 1838

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to early 1838; Diary entry for 11 Jan (see p. 631) suggests perhaps written that day. Address: John Forster Esqre.

My Dear Forster.

You don't feel disposed, do you, to muffle yourself up, and start off with me for a good brisk walk over Hampstead Heath? I knows a good 'ous there where we can have a red hot chop for dinner, and a glass of good wine.[†1]

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. I[†2] am as dull as a Codfish.

Faithfully Thine CD.

If you can, say "Yes" & I'll come down to you.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?MID-JANUARY 1838]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: not later than mid-Jan 38, since Cruikshank's illustration, "Mr. Bumble and Mrs. Corney taking tea", appeared in the Feb Miscellany. Address: George Cruikshank Esqre.

My Dear Cruikshank

I have described a small kettle for one on the fire — a small black teapot on the table with a little tray & so forth — and a two ounce tin tea cannister.[†3] Also a shawl hanging up — and the cat & kittens before the fire.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?15 JANUARY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The papers CD lists, less "Martha Mites", appeared in the Feb Miscellany; CD was probably writing mid-Jan. Address: Richard Bentley Esqre.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I send you the arrangement of the Magazine — the best I have been able to make, after much trouble.[†5] There are so many short papers which we want to get in this month, that Maginn must stand over.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Oliver Twist	16
Mr. Hogarth's paper and Mr. Barham's poetry (if any)[†1]	16
Sporting Ramble in the Highlands	6
Innkeeper of Andermath (Captn. Medwin)	6
Portrait Gallery	10
Two of a trade (Morier)[†2]	6
Nights at Sea Illustrated by George Cruikshank	12
English Comforts. From the German of Doctor Francis Kottenkamp	8
Artists and Works of Art (Sinnett)[†3]	8
Memoir of Robert Hogg (Maxwell)[†4]	8
Martha Mites (which has been standing over for a long time & a portion of which, must be got into the next Number)[†5]	8
	104

To MRS C. B. WILSON, [?15 JANUARY 1838]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: Verses by Mrs Wilson had appeared in the Miscellany in July, Oct and Nov 37. Handwriting suggests early 1838; perhaps Jan, and mid-month — after the contents of the Miscellany had been settled.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Madam.

I have been waiting for my printer's report. We are so very crowded that I cannot possibly avail myself of your daughter's lines.

I have no concern with, or controul over, the money affairs of the Miscellany which rest entirely with Bentley. If you write to him, stating that you consider yourself under-paid and usually receive more, I have not the slightest doubt that he will immediately do what you require.

I am Dear Madam
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Baron Wilson

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: CD noted in his Diary, 14 Jan, that he was to hear Talfourd's play (The Athenian Captive) read next night (see p. 632).

My Dear Forster

I am as badly off as you are.[†1] I have not done the young gentleman,[†2] nor written the preface to Grimaldi, nor thought of Oliver Twist, or even suggested a subject for the plate. Add to this, that I had no sleep last night in consequence of some vagaries of my son and heir, and I leave you to form some idea of my woeful plight.

I was very glad indeed to have a note from you to-day though, as it almost seems as if we had had a mortal falling out. I hope we shall have a lasting falling in again, soon — How do you get on; you don't say?

I heard Talfourd's play[†3] last night which, as an acting piece, I think admirable; I am as much surprised as you to imagine by what mental process such a very striking and complete thing can have been forged in so short a time. What has come to Macready? Has management driven him mad? To hesitate between a five act play by Serle[†4] and a Tragedy by Talfourd, looks to me like the last stage of imbecility. He'll play Lear to the life if he goes on thus. — Let the Legitimate Drama[†5] put this, and Joan of Arc[†1] as a first piece into her pipe, and take the Pantomime and the Original[†2] for tobacco stoppers[†3] — and she's restored triumphantly.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: clearly same day as next, which uses the same words about The Athenian Captive. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty St. | Thursday

Dear Forster

Half past four — the entertainments to terminate at half past six precisely. I inclose the woman's ages,[†4] and much good may they do you.

The play haunts me, and did so all last night. I am in raptures with it.

Be exact at dinner time.

Ever Faithfully Yours
Chas. D.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [18 JANUARY 1838]

MS Harvard University Library. Date: presumably two days after CD's letter to Forster of 16 Jan, praising Talfourd's play.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Night

My Dear Sir.

Have you heard anything from Macready, and are you going to dine with him next Saturday? I have received an invitation, and as I am very busy and ought not to go, shall not accept it unless I hear you are going.

I had occasion to write to Forster the other day, and in so doing expressed my high opinion of the striking merits of your most excellent play (which haunts me); I added that I was astonished to hear there was a possibility of Macready's hesitating between it and a five act play by Serle. He returned me a profoundly mysterious message importing that the five act play announced in the bills was not Serle's.[†1] This gave me some reason to hope it was yours, and hence this Note.

Let me hear one word from you to ease my doubts.

With best compliments to Mrs. Talfourd and Miss Ely —

Ever My Dear Sir
Faithfully and Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests early 1838. Forster was ill on Thurs 25 Jan (and therefore unable to review Macready's King Lear);[†2] CD was probably writing on Tues 23 Jan.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I am very sorry to hear you are still unwell, and will call upon you in Lincolns Inn Fields tomorrow. I shall be exceedingly glad to see you there, once again.

I will write to the Serjeant and inform him of the contents of your note.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?23 JANUARY 1838]*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: plainly same day as last. Talfourd's evenings would have been occupied since the opening of Parliament on 16 Jan. Address: Thomas Noon Talfourd Esqre. M. P. | &c &c | Russell Square.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Afternoon

My Dear Sir.

I have received a note from Forster to-day excusing himself from the Richmond expedition tomorrow, on the plea of ill health. If your professional business should admit of your taking a holiday, and you should still feel disposed to go, perhaps you will meet me here at one, as we originally proposed. I think you will enjoy it more, if we trust to our legs, or the stage coaches, and therefore have not ordered the horses. I am entirely in your hands, so deal with me as you like; but let me know what your intentions are, that I may arrange accordingly.

My best remembrances to Mrs. Talfourd and Miss Ely. I hope they will lay an embago[†1] on me to escort them to Covent Garden very often now that your own Evenings are engaged.

Believe me Ever
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?24 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to early 1838; possibly refers to the irritation between Macready and Talfourd over Macready's cold reception of The Athenian Captive: see To Forster, 16 Jan. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster

How do you get on? I have done,[†2] and am tired out. I am delighted to hear that Macready and Talfourd are all right again.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [25 JANUARY 1838]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly the Thursday before CD planned to leave for Yorkshire.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Ainsworth

Little Hall[†3] and his little wife and his big partner[†4] are going to dine here on Saturday next at half past five. I think it very unlikely that we shall have any opportunity of broaching "London"[†5] but perhaps it would do it no harm if we met together. Will you, then, dine with us? The illustrious George[†1] and his stout lady are coming, so that the Anti-Bores will be triumphant and keep the Bores in due subjection.

I should have written to you before, but my month's work has been dreadful — Grimaldi, the anonymous book for Chapman and Hall,[†2] Oliver and the Miscellany. They are all done, thank God, and I start on my pilgrimage to the cheap schools of Yorkshire[†3] (a mighty secret of course) next Monday Morning.

Your agreement is — in Wellerian phraseology — gammon. They can assign it to nobody, and the fifty pounds[†4] affects it in no way and makes no earthly difference. So set your mind at rest and be merry with Scroope Darrell.[†5]

The Mogul[†6] is in the last agonies of procrastinated composition[†7] — hunted down by that prince of humbugs Lardner,[†8] baited by Longmans,[†9] and bullied by the Printers. He related dreadful and mysterious anecdotes of not having been in bed for a fortnight, and is reduced to such a fearful ebb of nervous exasperation that Mrs. Cooper has temporalily[†10] fled No. 58[†11] and resigned her duties to a deputy who is under a course of violence. Seriously the book is to be out on Wednesday,[†12] and to-day only three sheets are worked off. There are 70 pages still to do which "must" be furnished to night, and you may guess Forster's situation. I have descried an amanuensis in the Eastern apartment marvellously busy in making

Extracts of which I suspect there will be no lack. Isn't it a pity that so clever a fellow should not give himself a little fairer play; knowing as he must that there are 20 people eagerly watching for an opportunity to attack him?

A word in your ear. Macready objected to Talfourd's play — declined it, in fact; whereupon Talfourd grew fierce and Macready more managable[†1] less manageriable, so it is to be done next after a new 5 act play now in the Bills.[†2]

Always My Dear Ainsworth
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably the Thursday before 28 Jan, when the two reviews CD mentions appeared in the Examiner. Address: John Forster Esq.

Thursday afternoon

My Dear Forster

I shall see you tomorrow. I have been obliged to read for the Miscellany all day.[†3]

There is a short extract from the Sporting Book.[†4] That is a Literary notice, and the other a Fine Arts one.[†5]

Faithfully
CD.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [26 JANUARY 1838]

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Date: the Friday before 30 Jan, when CD left for Yorkshire.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Jerdan

I was going into Yorkshire on Monday Morning, but having fortunately been able to take a place for Tuesday, can accept your kind Invitation.[†6]

Be assured that among all the congratulations which will be offered to you on the delightful occasion of our meeting, there will be none more cordial and warm-hearted than mine. By the time we dine together again, to celebrate the fiftieth birthday of your healthy offspring, I shall study to find appropriate language to clothe them in; 'till then, however, I fear they must remain locked up in breast[†1] — where they will at any rate keep warmer than on the lips — of — My Dear Jerdan

Yours most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to early 1838; presumably, therefore, written just before the trip to Yorkshire.

Doughty Street | Sunday Morning

My Dear Forster

I must cancel our dinner engagement for to-day, and substitute another for Eight oClock this Evening, if you will come then and have a chat — you must because it is the only opportunity I shall have of seeing you before I leave town.

The reason which leads me to trust to our friendship and put you off in the earlier part of the day, is, that Mrs. Hogarth wishes to have such advice and assistance as I can afford her[†2] in some trying matters, and I promised her yesterday evening that I would dine with her to-day and devote a couple of hours to the subject.

Always My Dear Forster
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [W. H. HUGHES],[†3] 29 JANUARY 1838

Text from N, I, 155. Address: W. H. Hughes, according to N.

48 Doughty Street, London | Monday January 29th 1838

Sir,

I regret that I cannot accept your obliging offer of a tale for the Miscellany simply because we have not space for any further continuations, as I have more than once taken occasion to announce in the monthly notices to correspondents.[†1]

If you offered your romance to Mr. Bentley or any other bookseller accompanied by a letter with your real name and address, I have little doubt that it would be carefully perused and promptly attended to. I need scarcely say that I can be of no assistance to you in this respect, and that the manuscript would be judged by its own merits. I believe this is a very common course of proceedings and often a successful one.

From the title of your book I infer that I should address you as a clergyman, but as titles have very often as little reference to the authors as to the contents of books, I fear to do so. If I have committed any error you will excuse me.

I am Sir
Your most obedient Servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS REYNOLDS,[†2] 29 JANUARY 1838[†3]

Facsimile in The Broad Arrow, 14 Nov 1913.

48 Doughty Street London | Monday January 29th. 1838

Madam.

I have read the paper you were kind enough to forward to me, and very much regret that I cannot avail myself of it. It is not in a style of composition which would be serviceable to the Miscellany of which I am the Editor, neither is it in my power to commence any new series of papers just now.

I trust you will not feel hurt by this communication; be assured that I am perfectly sensible both of the kind womanly feeling which pervades your little tale, and of the excellence of the motive which prompted you to write it.

If I may venture to advise you, I would beg most strongly and earnestly to recommend that you endeavour to save the friend to whom you refer, by some other means than by the exercise of your pen. You cannot conceive the store of troubles and vexations you are preparing for yourself by entering upon the trade of authorship — constant harassing and annoyances which will embitter the life of seclusion you describe yourself as leading, and no pecuniary returns from which can ever repay you for the mental peace you will sacrifice.

I will return the paper to any place you may mention, or by any conveyance you may point out. Let me beg you to believe that these few words are written in the purest sincerity, and have been called forth by the terms of your letter which I could not make up my mind to answer in mere business terms.

I am Madam
Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Reynolds

To THOMAS GASPEY,[†1] [?29 JANUARY 1838]

MS Dickens House. Date: "The Grand Juror" by "H.T." (Thomas Gaspey) appeared in the March Miscellany; CD was probably writing just before publication of the Feb No. in which there had been no room for it.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

As you have long since ceased to be "a colt"[†2] in the periodical paddock, you will not be surprised at my not having been able to find room in the next No. for that same paper. If you will leave it in my good keeping until the 28th. (February is a short month) we will astonish the Grand Jurors with it. I have laughed very heartily over it, and although I have never served (for I always pay my taxes when they won't call any longer, in order to get a bad name in the parish and so escape all honors) I can see it is true to the life.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Squib[†3] comes with this — Take care.

Is there no possibility of shortening that O P[†4] business? I am afraid a great many readers recollect it too well, to make such a very long paper on the subject acceptable.[†5]

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [29 JANUARY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day before CD left for Yorkshire; Jerdan's dinner in fact took place the following Monday, 5 Feb.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Jerdan.

I thought your dinner was to-day,[†1] and but for a note from Tom Hill yesterday in which by mentioning it, he induced me to refer again to your letter, should assuredly have presented myself at the FreeMason's[†2] this evening and demanded to be shewn to your party.

I cannot tell you how much grieved I am to find that I am disappointed and cannot be present. I go away tomorrow Morning and cannot be back in time. All good wishes and joys attend you and yours (including the Gazette of course) to the end of time.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esqre.

To GERALD GRIFFIN,[†3] 29 JANUARY 1838

Extract in James Hayes, "Adventures of an Irish Giant", The Bookworm, V (1892), 41; dated 48 Doughty Street, 29 Jan 38; addressed Gerald Griffin, Esq., Pallas Kenry, Ireland. On mourning paper.

Sir,

Mr. Bentley has handed to me the first part of your "Adventures of an Irish Giant".[†4] As the subscribers to the Miscellany have complained bitterly of our numerous continuations we have been obliged to discontinue them.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?JANUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: early 1838 on handwriting. Address: J. Forster Esqr.

Dr. Forster

I shall expect you — chops await you.

CD.

February

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 1 FEBRUARY 1838

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens. | 48 Doughty Street Mecklenburgh Square | London.

Greta Bridge.[†1] | Thursday February 1st. 1838.

My Dearest Kate.

I am afraid you will receive this, later than I could wish, as the Mail does not come through this place until 2 o'Clock tomorrow Morning. However, I have availed myself of the very first opportunity of writing, so the fault is that mail's, and not this.

We reached Grantham between 9 and 10 on Tuesday night, and found everything prepared for our reception in the very best Inn I have ever put up at.[†2] It is odd enough that an old lady who had been outside all day and came in towards dinner time turned out to be the Mistress of a Yorkshire School returning from the holiday-stay in London. She was a very queer old body, and shewed us a long letter she was carrying to one of the boys from his father, containing a severe lecture (enforced and aided by many texts from Scripture) on his refusing to eat boiled meat.[†3] She was very communicative, drank a great deal of brandy and water, and towards evening became insensible, in which state we left her.

Yesterday we were up again shortly after 7 and came on upon our journey by the Glasgow Mail which charged us the remarkably low sum of six pounds, four for two places inside. We had a very droll male companion until seven oClock in the evening, and a most delicious lady's maid for twenty miles who implored us to keep a sharp look-out at the coach windows as she expected her carriage was coming to meet her and she was afraid of missing it.[†4] We had many delightful vauntings of the same kind; and in the end it is scarcely necessary to say that the Coach did not come, and a very dirty girl did.

As we came further North, the snow grew deeper. About eight o'Clock it began to fall heavily, and as we crossed the wild heaths hereabout, there was no vestige of a track.[†5] The Mail kept on well, however, and at eleven we reached a bare place with a house standing alone in the midst of a dreary moor, which the Guard informed us was Greta Bridge. I was in a perfect agony of apprehension, for it was fearfully cold and there were no outward signs of anybody being up in the house. But to our great joy we discovered a comfortable room with drawn curtains and a most blazing fire. In half an hour they gave us a smoking supper and a bottle of mulled port (in which we drank your health) and then we retired to a couple of capital bedrooms in each of which was a rousing fire half way up the chimney.

We have had for breakfast, toasts,[†1] cakes, a yorkshire pie[, a][†2] piece of beef about the size and much the shape of my portmanteau, tea, coffee, ham and eggs — and are now going to look about us. Having finished our discoveries, we start in a postchaise for Barnard Castle which is only four miles off, and there I deliver the letter given me by Mitton's friend. All the schools are round about that place, and a dozen old abbies[†3] besides, which we shall visit by some means or other tomorrow. We shall reach York on Saturday I hope, and (God willing) I trust I shall be at home on Wednesday Morning. If anything should occur to prevent me, I will write to you from York, but I think that is not likely.

I wish you would call on Mrs. Bartley[†4] and thank her for her letter; you can tell her when I expected to be in York.

A thousand loves and kisses to the darling boy whom I see in my mind's eye crawling about the floor of this Yorkshire Inn. Don't leave him alone too much. Bless his heart I would give two sovereigns for a kiss. Remember me too, to Frederick who I hope is attentive to you. Take care of yourself my dearest, and let me find by your letter at the York Post Office that you are in both good health and good spirits.

Is it not extraordinary that the same dreams which have constantly visited me since poor Mary died, follow me everywhere? After all the change of scene and fatigue, I have dreamt of her ever since I left home, and no doubt shall 'till I return. I should be sorry to lose such visions for they are very happy ones — if it be only the seeing her in one's sleep — I would fain believe too, sometimes, that her spirit may have some influence over them, but their perpetual repetition is extraordinary.[†5]

Love to all friends.

Ever my dear Kate your affectionated[†6] husband

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 FEBRUARY 1838]

Mention in F, II, iv, 123-4. Date: probably written from Barnard Castle, shortly after seeing the Yorkshire schools.

Giving Forster the description of his Barnard Castle visit which he later used in the Preface to Nickleby, First Cheap Edn, 1848 — Forster having returned the letter to him for that purpose.

To THE EDITOR OF THE DURHAM ADVERTISER, [3 FEBRUARY 1838]

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 3 Feb 38. Address: To | The Editor of | The Durham Advertizer[†1] | Durham.

Darlington. | Saturday Morning

Sir.

Waiting in this place for a York coach this morning, I chanced in the course of the few minutes I stayed here, to take up your paper of January the 26th. in which I saw a brief Autobiography of myself by Dr. Mackenzie.[†2] Dr. Mackenzie[†3] whoever he may be, knows as much of me as of the meaning of the word autobiography, in proof of which may I beg you to state on my authority that when I commenced the Pickwick papers I was not living on five guineas a week as a Reporter on the Morning Chronicle — that Messrs. Chapman and Hall were never persuaded with some difficulty to become the Pickwick publishers but on the contrary first became known to me by waiting on me to propose the work — that no such pecuniary arrangement as the paragraph describes ever existed between us — that by the Pickwick Papers alone I have not netted between £2000 and £3000[†4] — that the Sketch called Watkins Tottle never appeared in The Morning Chronicle — that I am not now in the receipt of £3000 a year, and that Mr. Bentley does not give me £1000 a year for editing the Miscellany and twenty guineas a sheet for what I write in it.[†1]

I have the honor to be Sir
Your most obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To the Editor of

The Durham Advertiser.[†3]

To [?MRS HENRY] BELCOMBE, [3 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Private. Date: see last.

Black Swan Hotel York | Saturday Evening

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss[†4] Belcombe, and (having just arrived in York) begs to forward her the accompanying letter from Mrs. Bartley.[†5]

To MRS HENRY BELCOMBE,[†6] 8 FEBRUARY 1838

MS Berg Collection.

48 Doughty Street London | February 8th. 1838.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his best compliments to Mrs. Henry Belcombe, and begs her acceptance of one of a few copies of the Pickwick Papers, which the zeal of his publishers has put into a much smarter dress than his own modesty might have suggested as an appropriate costume.[†7] He ventures to forward it to Mrs. Belcombe as a slight acknowledgement of the great kindness and attention he received from her family in his recent visit to York, and of the great pleasure he derived from their society.

To JOHN FORSTER, [FEBRUARY 1838]

Extract in F, II, ii, 107; presumably from a letter since in quotation marks. Date: shortly before he began writing Nickleby.

As the time for beginning Nickleby came on, and as he thought of his promise for November,[†1] he had the sense of something hanging over him like a hideous nightmare.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 10 FEBRUARY 1838†

MS Berg Collection.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday February 10th. 1838[†2]

My Dear Sir

I should wish at your convenience to have an account of the sale of the Miscellany.[†3] You may recollect that you promised a statement should be made out for me, some time since.

I have recently been thinking a great deal about Barnaby Rudge. Grimaldi has occupied so much of the short interval I had, between the completion of the Pickwick and the commencement of the new Work, that I clearly see it will be wholly impossible for me to produce it by the time I had hoped, with justice to myself, or profit to you.

What I wish you to consider, is this — Would it not be far more to your interest, as well as within the scope of my ability, if Barnaby Rudge began in the Miscellany immediately on the conclusion of Oliver Twist, and were continued there for about the same period, and then published in three Volumes?[†4] — Take these simple facts into consideration. If the Miscellany is to keep its ground, it must have some continuous tale from me when Oliver stops. If I sat down to Barnaby Rudge, writing a little of it when I could (and with all my other engagements it would necessarily be a very long time before I could hope to finish it in that way) it would be clearly impossible for me to begin a new series of papers in the Miscellany. The conduct of three different stories at the same time, and the production of a large portion of each, every month, would have been beyond Scott himself.[†1] Whereas, having Barnaby in the Miscellany we could at once supply the gap which the cessation of Oliver must create, and you would have all the advantage of that prestige in favor of the work which is certain to enhance the value of Oliver Twist, considerably.

Just think of this, at your leisure. I am really anxious to do the best I can for *your*self as well as *my*self; indeed in this case the pecuniary advantage must be all on your side. If you turn over in your mind what I have said, I think you cannot fail to see the advantages of this proposition.[†2]

When shall we meet about the Miscellany for the Month?

Faithfully Yours My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11 FEBRUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Forster's life of Henry Marten was published on 2 Feb 38. CD was in Yorkshire on Sunday 4th, but would probably have been given the book soon after his return and written his thanks on Sunday 11th.

Doughty Street | Sunday Evening

My Dear Forster.

A hundred thanks for your beautiful present.[†3] I am "up" in Harry Marten already, and delighted with the staunch and jolly hero.[†4] The biography is glorious.

Believe me that I require no presents to render more lively my assurance of your friendship, or my deep conviction of its worth. I know your sterling value, and [†a]look back with unmingled pleasure to every link which each ensuing week has added to the chain of our attachment. It shall go hard, I hope, 'ere[†1] anything but Death impairs the toughness of a bond now so firmly riveted.[†a]

Believe me
Ever
Faithfully and wholly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

About the riding tomorrow. — Come here at your own time, and we will walk to the stable together.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [12 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: clearly 12 Feb, the same date as the enclosed letters which follow.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Before you look at the accompanying mass of paper, let me assure you that I would not ask you to frank four letters for me on my own individual account.[†2] Ainsworth and I are attempting to get up a one volume collection of original fragments for the benefit of Macrone's (the publisher's) widow[†3] who is left utterly destitute with two helpless infant children. With this view we are writing to all those for whom he published, seeking their assistance as contributors; and four of the letters having to be sent by the General Post, we make bold in such a cause to ask you to frank them.

I mean to ask you for something more, in the event of this scheme being brought to bear, as I fervently hope it may. I think you must have a spare sonnet[†4] which you could bestow upon us. It's[†5] value to this poor creature would be really incalculable, so one of these days prepare yourself for a great appeal to your feelings when we are out riding together.

I shall see you at the new club[†6] on Saturday, if I fail to set eyes upon you before; and shall be truly delighted to have that opportunity of shaking hands with you again.

Believe me, ever,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd MP.
&c &c &c

To ALLAN CUNNINGHAM,[†1] 12 FEBRUARY 1838

MS Morgan Library. Signed by CD, but otherwise wholly in the hand of John Dickens.

48 Doughty Street | 12 February 1838.

Sir

Mrs. Macrone the widow of the late publisher of St. James's Square, is left, after several meetings of her deceased husband's creditors, in a state of utter destitution; not one farthing remaining for her support and that of two infant children.

This distressing circumstance having become known to Mr. Ainsworth and myself, it has occurred to us that if some small collection of papers, in one Volume, could be made for this young widow's benefit, the produce of the sale of an edition to some respectable bookseller, would afford her the means of setting on foot some little scheme for her future support. If this be done at all, it must be done immediately.

Mr. George Cruikshank has kindly offered his gratuitous assistance in illustrating this book. For its literary contents we can appeal only to those who were on any occasion connected, however slightly, with poor Mr. Macrone in business.

May we venture to ask whether your engagements will admit of your assisting us with any trifle from your pen? I need scarcely say how much it would aid the project, nor can I describe to you how much of real charity you would be instrumental in promoting.

I may add that besides lending our humble assistance in the same way, we are willing to take upon ourselves the entire arrangement of the volume, and to negociate for its Sale and publication, which we trust is a sufficient security to you, that no improper use would be made of your contribution.

I trust the urgency of this distressing case is a sufficient excuse, both for my troubling you with this letter, and begging the favor of a reply, at your earliest convenience.

I am Sir
Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Allan Cunningham Esq.

To G. W. LOVELL,[†1] 12 FEBRUARY 1838*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Text identical with To Cunningham, 12 Feb 38. Also in John Dickens's hand except for signature.

To DR J. A. WILSON,[†2] [?14 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Mrs Humphry House. Date: Grimaldi was finished by 21 Jan and review copies were distributed before 17 Feb. It seems more likely CD was writing on Wed 14 Feb than on 7 Feb, immediately on his return from Yorkshire.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Let me thank you most cordially for your very kind note and inclosure which is exceedingly interesting, and of which I should certainly have availed myself, if poor Grimaldi's memoirs had not already passed through the Press; but for which I am not the less obliged to you on that account.

I am very happy to find that I had not formed a wrong estimate of the poor fellow's character. I have merely been editing another's account, and telling some of the stories in my own way, but I was much struck by the many traits of kindheartedness scattered through the book, and have given it that colouring throughout.

If you will permit me to retain the autograph for a few days, I shall be happy to return it in person,[†3] and to thank you by word of mouth for your polite attention.

I am Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson
&c &c

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 FEBRUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably the Thursday after CD's request to Bentley of 10 Feb about Barnaby Rudge. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I got out yesterday, after all. I was not able to leave home until a little after three, but rode at a slapping pace and went to Finchley and back.

I hope you will not be able to ride to-day, for I can't. I dine at Bentley's and want to get on with Oliver before I go there — Added to which considerations I have somehow rubbed such a desperate sore in my left leg just under the knee, that I can scarcely crawl about. I suppose one's flesh chafes more easily in the frost, for I never had anything of the kind before. However that may be, it is really so bad that I can scarcely crawl up and down stairs.

Bentley was here yesterday. He at once gave in about Barnaby Rudge, and said I could direct Molloy to alter the agreement as I liked, to meet the object in view![†1] He appears desperately savage with Ainsworth's delay,[†2] and I suspect contemplates a breeze.

I will write you tomorrow morning, and let you know whether I am in riding condition.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. W. LOVELL, [?15 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: perhaps the Thursday after CD's first letter to Lovell. Address: George. W. Lovell Esqre. | 60 Upper Seymour St. | Euston Square.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir

I have to thank you very cordially for your obliging note, and most kind exertions in Mrs. Macrone's behalf. I wished very much to have had the pleasure of making your acquaintance yesterday, but being compelled to dine out today and having a vast deal to do just now, I was constrained (much against my will) to absent myself from the Club.

I will write to Mr. Harrison[†3] immediately. It is unnecessary to say how much he will assist us.

I am happy to inform you that in every quarter in which I have made application, I have received the most cheerful and ready acquiescence in our little undertaking. If you can forward me your contribution (its length and subject of course rest wholly with yourself) by the end of the first week in March, I shall hope to send you a proof sheet very shortly afterwards.

I am
My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George W. Lovell Esqre.

To R. SHELTON MACKENZIE, 16 FEBRUARY 1838

MS Pennsylvania Historical Society. Address: Dr. Mackenzie | Liverpool.

48 Doughty Street London | Friday February 16th. 1838.

Sir.

I have to thank you very cordially for your letter of the twelfth, and to assure you that your explanation is quite satisfactory.[†1]

I saw the paragraph in question during a stay of a few minutes at Darlington in Yorkshire,[†2] and wrote a hasty contradiction to the Editor of the news paper[†3] in which it appeared. It certainly contained nothing ill-natured or offensive, but I felt for the moment annoyed at my private affairs being dragged before the public, and stated incorrectly in every particular.

Any impression of this kind is at once removed by your frank and manly letter; and I hasten to assure you that I care nothing for the paragraph since it has been the means of calling forth so polite and ready a communication.

I am Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Mackenzie.[†4]

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS The Rev. Noel Boston. Date: presumably some time in Feb after CD's return from Yorkshire.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Cattermole

Why do you always ask me to dinner on days when I can't come? I have been engaged for next Tuesday a fortnight back, and you pick out that unfortunate day as if there were no other days in the week and no other weeks in the year. I regret this very much, and take it exceedingly ill.

I went over York Cathedral the other day. I had scarcely set foot in the Nave when the Verger taking me by the shoulder led me to a particular pillar to contemplate a particular window.[†1] "There!" said the old man "Mr. Britton[†2] the great artist and architect says that's the first window in all Europe; and if Mr. Britton don't know a fine window when he sees it, who does, — as the Dean says."

I know this will please you, and so write it for your satisfaction.

Believe me always
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17 FEBRUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to early 1838, probably Feb, in which month the only Saturday not ruled out by CD's other activities was the 17th. Address: John Forster Esqre.

Doughty St. | Saturday ½ p 2

My Dear Forster

Being utterly unable from intense stupidity to write a line, I have gone out riding after anxiously hoping to see you the whole morning. I have gone the old road, and should be truly delighted to meet or be overtaken by you.[†3]

Ever Yours. CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [18 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day after the Athenaeum notice of Grimaldi on 17 Feb.

Doughty Street | Sunday Night

My Dear Sir.

How is it that the Athenæum have neither my Preface nor conclusion to the Grimaldi?[†4] You see that you have already defeated your own end by not sending them. Pray do not make it necessary for me to call upon Dilke with my own proofs.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [21 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: clearly the Wednesday after last.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

No harm done — only it looked bad, and as if we were trying to get Notices under false pretences; and was more especially annoying to me as I had set great store by those same introductory and concluding chapters.[†1]

The next Miscellany will be excellent;[†2] I am much pleased with it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?21 FEBRUARY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: presumably the day before 22 Feb when CD told Chapman & Hall that the first chapter of Nickleby was ready. A brief extract in F, II, iv, 124 is given as "two days" after CD's birthday — i.e. on 9 Feb (a Friday).

Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I am afraid it is too dirty, yet will I adventure on foot to your rooms about two or shortly before, and if we decide upon a little ride we can have it.

Bulwer requires consideration.[†3] The first chapter of Nicholas is done. It took time but I think answers the purpose as well as it could.

Perhaps we can substitu[t]e a small walk for the small ride. I have just looked out of window, and fear we should be smothered.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 22 FEBRUARY 1838*

MS Berg Collection.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Evening 22nd. Feb./38

My Dear Sir.

I have been requested by Mr. Walker†1 a line engraver of great promise (and who has executed some popular subjects respecting which he can enlighten you better than I can) to give him a letter of introduction to you.

I am not aware whether you have any opportunities of putting this gentleman's talents to the test, but as I am enabled to speak most highly of them and him, and moreover oblige an old friend by doing so, I have much pleasure in complying with his request.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 22 FEBRUARY 1838

Text from N, I, 160. Address: It seems clear that it was Chapman & Hall who made the offer accepted here: see fn.

Doughty Street | Thursday Feb 22nd 1838

My Dear Sirs,

I accept with much pleasure your offer for my new Comic Work entitled ["Boz's]†2 Annual Register and Obituary of Blue Devils"†3 to be published in one octavo volume at Christmas next, on the following terms — you to pay me £300,†4 on the day of publication, and to account to me besides for one clear half of the whole amount of profits; on which conditions I undertake to transfer to you a half interest in the copyright of the work.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 22 FEBRUARY 1838

Text from N, I, 161. Address: same day as last.

Doughty Street | Thursday Night, 22nd Feby 1838

My Dear Sirs,

I inclose you a formal acceptance of your offer for the Register — leaving a blank for you to supply which I think you may perhaps afford to fill up with the figures 300; they will look much better in your books, and far nicer in mine.

Never mind the anonymous wiseacre.[†1] If you will promise to engage him to write twenty plays for Webster's Acting Drama[†2] I will tell you his name, but not otherwise.

I have been decoyed to the play, and seduced from Nicholas by a thousand blandishments, but the first chapter is ready, and I mean (God willing) to begin in earnest tomorrow night, so you can begin to print as soon as you like. The sooner you begin, the faster I shall get on.

Ever yours faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, [23 FEBRUARY 1838]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 24 Feb 37 (Saturday). Address: Thomas Beard Esqre. | 42 Portman Place | Edgware Road.

Doughty Street | Friday Evening

My Dear Beard.

I have had a note from Bulwer begging me to dine with him next Sunday. As I have repeatedly disappointed him of late, I fear I must do so. Will you dine with us on the following Saturday; that is, next Saturday week instead? And so ease the mind of

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, 24 FEBRUARY [1838]

Text from W. Justin O'Driscoll, A Memoir of Daniel Maclise, R.A., 1871, p. 63. Date: 1838, from Memoir.

Twenty-fourth February, Saturday Morning.

Mr. John Forster (of Lincoln's Inn Fields) and Mr. Charles Dickens (of universal popularity) request the favour of Mr. Maclise's company at supper at the Parthenon Club[†1] to-night, at half-past ten o'clock exactly.

Thinking it possible that Mr. Maclise may have gone to court at an early hour this morning, they address this letter both to his private house and the Athenæum; and but for the veneration due to their youthful sovereign, they would have forwarded a duplicate to the Palace at Pimlico.[†2]

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?25 FEBRUARY 1838]

Composite text from N, I, 116 and Sotheby's catalogue, 23 June 1903; MS 1 p.; dated 48 Doughty Street, Sunday Evening — probably the day after the first monthly Shakespeare Club supper.[†3] Talfourd joined the Oxford Circuit on Wed 28 Feb for the Spring Assize.

I very much regret (like a dutiful son) that my father came to dine with me to-day, and so prevents my seeing you to-night, [†a]although I still hope by hook or by crook to shake hands with you before you start upon the circuit[†a] ... [†b]I don't think I drank half a pint of the bad wine altogether yesterday, and yet I was the worse for it this morning. Shakespeare will have a great deal to answer for if the port always comes from the same binn.[†b]

March

To JAMES WINSTON,[†4] [?1 MARCH 1838]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly 1838 on handwriting; under Rule 19 CD's name would have been "put up" on Thurs 1 Mar.[†5]

Doughty Street | Thursday Evening

Sir.

I am just reminded by your note, that I have entirely forgotten my subscription, for which I inclose you a cheque with many apologies.

As the 19th Rule authorised my name to be put up in the Club Room, I hope some other rule is in existence authorising it to be now taken down again.

If the form of the order to which your note alludes, had been inclosed I would gladly have signed it, and thus prevented any future unpleasant consequences arising from my forgetfulness, but as it is not, I can do no more than forward you one for the current year. Perhaps it has been put up by accident instead of my name.

I am Sir Your very obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Winston Esqre.

To MRS METZE,[†1] 2 MARCH 1838*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Evening March 2nd./38

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Metze, and begs to inform her that he will be happy to avail himself of her paper "The French Governess",[†2] and to insert it on the earliest opportunity. He regrets to add, however, that from a great pressure of other matter, he fears some delay is inevitable.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MARCH 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Spring 1838; perhaps March, when he was sitting to both Pickering and Laurence. He probably wrote the first No. of Nickleby in the early part of that month. Under the draft Agreement of 18 Aug 37 it was to be delivered to Chapman & Hall "on or before" the 15th (see p. 658).

Doughty St. | Saturday

My Dear Forster

No ride for me to-day. Sitting first, then a business appointment with Mitton (who remained here the other evening) then a hasty dinner, and then Nickleby who has scarcely advanced a jot.

I will be busy all tomorrow morning with Miscellany Papers, but if you ride out in the course of the day, will you call here?

Ever Yours

CD.

To THE SUB-EDITOR OF BENTLEY'S MISCELLANY, [MARCH 1838]†

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.[†1] Date: doubtless written as a result of the review of Grimaldi in the Athenaeum, 3 Mar.[†2]

CONCERNING GRIMALDI
A LETTER FROM THE EDITOR TO THE SUB EDITOR

My Dear Sir

I understand that a gentleman unknown is going about this town, privately informing all ladies and gentlemen of discontented natures that on a comparison of dates and putting together of many little circumstances which occur to his great sagacity, he has made the profound discovery that I can never have seen Grimaldi whose life I have edited, and that his biography must therefore and consequently and of necessity be bad.

Now Sir although I was brought up from remote country parts in the dark ages of 1819 and 1820 to behold the splendour of Christmas Pantomimes and the humour of Joe, in whose honor I am informed I clapped my hands with great precocity; and although I even saw him act in the remote times of 1823, yet as I had not then aspired to the dignity of a tail coat (although I had been forced by a relentless parent into my first pair of boots) I am willing with the view of saving this honest gentleman further time and trouble to concede that I had not arrived at man's estate when Grimaldi left the stage, and that my recollections of his acting are — to my loss — but shadowy and imperfect.[†3] Which confession I now make publicly, and without mental qualification or reserve, to all whom it may concern.

But the deduction of this pleasant gentleman that therefore the biography must be necessarily bad, I must take leave through you to deny, although upon the question of fact I leave the public to decide between us. I never heard it established as a sound position before, that to write a biography of a man (having genuine materials) or to edit his own notes[†4] it is essential that you should have known him. Parvis componere magna,[†4] I am not aware that either Hazlitt or Scott was on terms of close intimacy with Napoleon Bonaparte or ever saw him in action; neither do I apprehend that Lord Braybrooke had more than a very slight acquaintance with Mr. Pepys whose memoirs he edited two centuries after he died, or that Plutarch had a personal knowledge of all the gentlemen whose lives he wrote, or that Doctor Johnson was on visiting terms with the Earl of Rochester, or[†1] in short that any author sitting himself down to a similar task, has felt himself bound, or been considered bound, to prove — speaking literally — his familiar acquaintance with his subject.

Do Sir make a corner for this letter, so that my small word may find its way where this merry gentleman found his.

Your faithful colleague to command

BOZ[†2]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [5 MARCH 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day before Mamie's birth (see next), on evidence of handwriting and the spelling "Esqre.".[†3]

Doughty Street. | Monday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens perversely and obstinately took it into her head to fall ill at 7 O'Clock this morning. I have been with her all day, but as I am advised by the most experienced authorities that I may safely absent myself from home, so that I am within reasonable call, I have ordered dinner for us at the Garrick at 5 precisely. You who are a family man will I am sure require no apology for this change of place under circumstances common to all well regulated families.

Ever My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [6 MARCH 1838]*

MS New York Public Library. Date: Mary (Mamie)[†1] was born on 6 Mar 38.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

We were all right here at One o'Clock this morning, when I had an instalment of posterity in the shape of a daughter.

Will tomorrow morning, before One and as early as you please, suit you for the Miscellany?

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 MARCH 1838]

Extract in F, II, ii, 108. Date: same day as last.

CD closes his announcement of the birth of a daughter with the postscript: I can do nothing this morning. What time will you ride? The sooner the better for a good long spell.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [7 MARCH 1838]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Ainsworth's wife died on Tues 6 Mar 38.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Friend.

I am truly grieved to hear of the affliction which has befallen you, and know from sad experience how to sympathize with your sorrows. If anything can soften the first sharp moments of bereavement it is such a reflection as you possess — the consoling thought of having by all available means promoted the peace of mind and comfort of the object we regret. Your separation in life was not to be avoided, and if you were both (or either of you were) the happier for it, there is little reason to deplore it now.[†2]

Your mind will naturally turn from the contemplation of this sad subject, to many bright hopes of the happiness in store for you, in the society of your dear children, who will now possess a double claim upon your love and affection. That Heaven may long preserve them to be your comfort and pride, and that in their domestic happiness you may witness the realisation of the gayest visions of your gayest days is the earnest and heartfelt prayer of

My Dear Ainsworth
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

William Ainsworth Esquire[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 MARCH 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: presumably same day as last. Address: "William Ainsworth Esquire" cancelled; "John Forster Esquire" substituted.

Wednesday Morng

My Dear Forster.

I have also had a note from Ainsworth, and have written to him. Poor fellow!

All as well as even I could wish.

Ever Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 MARCH 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting and "go on well" suggest very soon after Mamie's birth — probably the day before next. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

Thank God, all continues to go on well — except Nickleby and he does not go on well, and therefore we do not dine together, but I stick to it, in thorough style until a late hour of the night, and hope I shall be able really to "report progress" tomorrow.

I will call or write, the very first thing in the Morning.

Ever Yours

CD.

[ ][†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 MARCH 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Progress on Nickleby and the further report on Catherine and the baby strongly suggest the Friday after last. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster

[†a]I wrote 20 slips of Nicholas yesterday, and only left 4 to do this morning.[†3] Up at 8 oClock too!

I have ordered my horse at one[†a] exactly, as I am to be at the cemetery[†1] by a quarter before Two. Will you go with me? If not, shall I call upon you about four or half past? — But do if you can.

All wonderfully well.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?12 MARCH 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: probably not long after CD's protest at the review of Grimaldi of 3 Mar; but clearly not on same Monday as To Bentley, 5 Mar.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I have considered the Grimaldi point, and consulted some friends on the subject. The result is, that I do not consider Mr. John Hamilton Reynolds[†2] of sufficient importance to be noticed, nor the necessity of the case strong enough to justify it — in both of which opinions I think you will be disposed, on reflection, to concur.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, [13 MARCH 1838]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Fox's notice of the opening night of Macready's Coriolanus appeared in the Morning Chronicle of 13 Mar.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Have you any objection to allow my name to be put down among the admissible at the Stage Door? I have passed (I don't know by what authority, now I come to think of it) fifty times this season, but as the porter was not particularly sober last night, and exceedingly insolent, I should like to have right upon my side — having which, I can spare the civility.

It has done my heart good to read the Chronicle notice of Coriolanus this morning. If there were more of such men as Fox,[†1] your management would be a less thankless office.[†2]

Believe me
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, 13 MARCH 1838

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty St. | Tuesday Morning | March 13th. 1838

My Dear Forster

No going out to-day. The morning is not inviting, and I am †asitting patiently at home waiting for Oliver Twist†3 who has not yet arrived.†a

Will you call here tomorrow morning before Leigh Hunt comes to you; or how?

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-MARCH 1838]

Extract in F, II, ii, 108. Date: given in F as 9 Mar, probably on assumption that written a few days after Mamie's birth, but To Forster, "I wrote 20 slips of Nicholas", seems far more likely to be that date. Probably this was written soon after last.

I was thinking about Oliver till dinner-time yesterday, and, just as I had fallen upon him tooth and nail, was called away to sit with Kate. I did eight slips, however, and hope to make them fifteen this morning.

To FREDERICK YATES, [?MID-MARCH 1838]†

MS Private. Date: presumably before CD knew of the first dramatization of Oliver, produced at St James's, 27 Mar 38. Spelling "Esqre" suggests not later than mid-March.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Supposing we arrange preliminaries to our mutual satisfaction, I propose to dramatize Oliver for the first night of next Season.†1

I have never seen Mrs. Honnor†2 to the best of my recollection, but from the mere circumstance of her being a Mrs, I should say at once that she was "a many sizes too large" for Oliver Twist. If it be played by a female, it should be a very sharp girl of thirteen or fourteen — not more, or the character would be an absurdity.†3

I don't see the possibility of any other house doing it before your next opening night.[†4] If they do, it must be done in a very extraordinary manner, as the story (unlike that of Pickwick) is an involved and complicated one. I am quite satisfied that nobody can have heard what I mean to do with the different characters in the end, inasmuch as at present I don't quite know, myself; so we are tolerably safe on that head.

Any way, I am quite sure that your name as the Jew[†5] and mine as the author would knock any other attempts quite out of the field. [†a]I do not however see the least possibility of any other Theatre being able to steal a march upon you.[†a]

Believe me always
Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Yates Esqre.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?19 MARCH 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The election of Beadle was held on 26 Mar 38; on Mon 19th CD noted "Mr. Hicks" in his diary, perhaps as a reminder to canvas support for him. Address: Richard Bentley Esquire.

Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you do me the favor to sign the petition of the Bearer Mr. Hicks (overseer to Bradbury and Evans) who is a candidate for the vacant office of Beadle to the Stationers' Company?[†1] I have recommended him most warmly myself, and know him to be a man of very high character and deserts.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To CHARLES HICKS, [?MARCH 1838]*

MS Dr David Ross. Date: Handwriting points to Feb or Mar 38; the resetting would then be of Nickleby No. I, proofs of which would have been ready during the third week of March.

My Dear Sir

As Nickleby is to be re-set, I send it you *un*corrected — or at least with only a very few corrections made; and one insertion. According to my calculation of the quantity, the number will not bear more, but if it should require anything to make up, I will insert it directly you send me the new proofs.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Hicks.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?MARCH 1838]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: not on mourning paper; handwriting points to Spring 1838, probably March.

Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Ainsworth

Kindly remember that you promised to speak to the gardener at the Cemetery[†1] for me. And if for some fee, he will plant a rose tree or a few little flowers on that early grave, oblige me by giving it to him until I see you.

Best remembrances at home and Believe me Ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 MARCH 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: presumably the Sunday before the reference to Catherine's relapse in To Bentley, 28 Mar. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Sunday Evg.[†2]

My Dear Forster

Kate is so ill this morning that I fear it is almost certain I cannot go, but if you will call at Laurence's[†3] (it is not much out of your way) there may be a chance as I shall then have seen Pickthorn.[†4]

In haste
Ever Yours
CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE MARCH 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: F, II, ii, 104 implies soon after first week of publication of Grimaldi; more probably later in the month after Kate's relapse.

[†1] deliberately upon it, except by means of this glossary.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Kate is better, I think, this morning. 1700 Grimaldis have been already sold, and the demand increases daily![†2] ! ! !

Any way, I hope you will spend Sunday here.[†2] If she is too ill to see you, we can easily dine in another room. So meet me at the Shakspeare[†3] on Saturday Evening at 8, order your horse at midnight, and ride back with me to the bed I shall order for you.[†4]

Directly you receive this write a line back by the twopenny post, and let me know that I may engage your bed and tell them to sit up for us. Tell Fred if you see him, to stop at home on Saturday after 5 o'Clock till I come.

In great haste
Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

April

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?2 APRIL 1838]

Mention in next.

A note to the authoress of "The Radical Aristocrat", [†1] rejecting her paper.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?2 APRIL 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Probably refers to CD's request to Bentley of 10 Feb to give him an account of the sales of the Miscellany. Could not be Mon 5 Mar (see To Bentley, that day); probably therefore the first Mon in Apr.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

Dear Sir.

The Radical Aristocrat is sent with the other rejected papers this month. The parcel contains a private note for the Authoress.

There is also among the papers, one piece of absurdity by Mr. Grantley Berkeley,[†2] called "Chariot versus coach"[†3] which I had previously read and returned, and consequently suppose has been sent back to me by mistake.

I wrote to you some weeks ago, begging at the close of the year to know what sum the increased sale of the Miscellany entitled me to, under our agreement. As you have taken no notice of the note, let me recal your attention to it.

I have not received a single copy of the Miscellany although it has been published two or three days![†4]

The receipt of the cheque acknowledged.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?APRIL 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to Spring 1838; the only occasion on which CD and Catherine were away from their children was the visit to Richmond for Catherine's convalescence.

My dear Forster

I forward the volume you want — after detaining your messenger nearly half an hour, for I was not up when he arrived.

There are rumours in the camp, of anxiety to see the children and get home to-day. I will tell you when I see you between 12 and 1, whether we strike our tents or not.

Ever Yours
CD

Head achey, and hand unsteady.

To E. S. MORGAN, [11 APRIL 1838]*

MS British Museum. Date: letter endorsed "Dft of £9 sent in a note to Mr. Dickens 12 April" (Thursday). Address: E. S. Morgan Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to give the Bearer the amount due to the Author of John Ward Gibson in the last No.?[†1] He cannot come or send for it,[†2] and I have promised to remit him what is due.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Morgan Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 APRIL 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to Spring 1838; CD was probably writing on the first Friday after their return from Richmond. Black seal. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street | Friday Night

My Dear Forster

I am ashamed to tell you that I have not had time to do that. I need not assure you that nothing but one uninterrupted series of botherations arising out of our removal would have prevented me.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To SAMUEL LAURENCE, [?14 APRIL 1838]

Text from N, I, 140. Date: after 25 Mar (see To Forster, that day); perhaps the first Saturday after their return home, before Catherine's complete recovery.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir,

I intended calling on you to thank you for your very kind note and present[†1] and lest business engagements should postpone those thanks until they become quite worthless (if they be not so already) I forward them through this medium.

You will forgive my saying that much as I wish to have Mrs. Dickens[†2] portrait done by you, I cannot allow her to sit without previously stipulating that this time I shall have my own way and that we be on the terms of strangers.[†3] This being understood, I shall as soon as she recovers, consign her to you at all convenient times and season and as often as you think proper.

Accept her very best and warmest thanks for the present of my picture and believe me my dear Sir

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 APRIL 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Spring 1838 on handwriting; "that 'ere" was perhaps the piece of work he said on ?13 Apr he was ashamed not to have done. Reference to Cruikshank suggests CD was writing the day before next. Black seal. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

The cold, or the mulled wine, or the driving, made me as bad as you. I couldn't write a line 'till three oClock, and have yet 5 slips to finish,[†4] and don't know what to put in them for I have reached the point I meant to leave off with.[†1]

Conseqvently[†2] I have not done that 'ere.

I think I shall have to go to Cruikshank's tomorrow Evening, but in any case I shall dine with you.

The Poney had tight shoes on, with nails an inch or so too long, and was nearly crippled.

Yours in misery

CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [16 APRIL 1838]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Spring 1838 on handwriting; his being already a day late with Nickleby perhaps explains the sense of urgency. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire.

Monday afternoon

My Dear Cruikshank

Will you give me a cigar on Friday Night, instead of this evening? I am at work on something which I am anxious to finish, and fear I shall be at my Desk 'till very late?

In order that we may settle Oliver[†3] before, I will (if you think proper) call upon you on Tuesday Noon at One[†4] o'Clock.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Geo Cruikshank Esq.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?APRIL 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Conjunction of handwriting, black seal and "Esquire" point to Apr 38. CD noted in his Diary dinner engagements for the 17th and 19th (see p. 633). Address: Wait | John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster

Hullah came in last night, and I did nothing, so I must work hard to-night, or the numerous dinners of this month will lay me on the small of my back. It is a fine morning — what say you to a ride? Can I tempt you? — If you come up here, we can go to Gray's[†1] together, and they will mount you on something in no time. I should not object to an early chop at some "village inn".

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?APRIL 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: as last, on conjunction of handwriting and black seal. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Forster

If you are disposed for a ride to-day, I can give you one gratis, for at one o'Clock there is coming here a tall black horse with a saddle on, which was tried yesterday in harness, and if you like to ride him I will take the cob.

Let me know before hand. If you come, be here at 10 minutes before One.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS,[†2] [?APRIL 1838]

Composite text from catalogues of Parke-Bernet Galleries, Apr 1946, and Anderson Galleries, Apr 1926; dated Doughty Street, Monday Morning. Date: Perhaps the joke about Hicks was connected with his candidature for the office of Beadle on 26 Mar and CD was writing the following month; he would probably have received proofs in the third week. The word "estimate" supports a date early in the writing of Nickleby.

Dear Sirs.

As I am induced to think from your estimate that I have still a couple of pages or so to write, and consequently cannot correct the first sheets until I see the last, perhaps you will make another wonderful exertion not exhausting yourselves but having regard to your healths and the happiness of your wives and children. Mr. Hicks, I presume, is no more. Poor fellow! He fell a victim to a rash spirit of enterprise, and I regret him deeply.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE PICKWICK CLUB,[†1] 21 APRIL [1838]*

MS Cornell University Library. Date: 21 Apr was Saturday in 1838.

48 Doughty Street London | Saturday April 21st.

Sir.

If the dinner of the Pickwick Club had been on Monday Week, I would have joined it with all the pleasure which you will readily imagine this most gratifying recollection of my works by so many gentlemen, awakens in my mind.

At any personal inconvenience to myself, I would have joined you on the day you name, but I regret to say that if I were tempted to do so, Nicholas Nickleby and Oliver Twist would make a much longer stay in London this month than is good for their health — and although this might be of no very great importance to buyers in the country, I think sellers would murmur.

Let me beg you to offer my best remembrances and thanks to the Committee; and to assure them that I should have felt more pleasure and delight than I can express to you in a hasty note, if I could have been present on their approaching anniversary.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. J. CRACKENBOTTOM,[†2] [?SPRING 1838]†

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting suggests Spring 1838.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I am much indebted to you for your great patience which is so exemplary and peculiar that I fear you will never make an author, as you can never be one of the genus irritabile.

The cause of the delay of your paper is simply this — Mr. Bentley considers it too broad, although it does not strike me as being so broad as to render its insertion dangerous. The question is, whether you can so alter it as to make the doubtful lady a mantua maker, and give the interview more of a "courting" character. [†a]To this end I have directed the printer to send you either the MS or a proof in the course of tomorrow, and I shall be happy to receive your early reply.[†1]

I am
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

John Julius Crackenbottom Esquire

To EDWARD OLIVER,[†2] [?SPRING 1838]

Mention in To Oliver, June-July 38. Date: presumably several months before CD's apology of that date.

Declining two papers submitted for the Miscellany.

May

To SPENCER HALL,[†3] [?MAY 1838]

Extract in John Waller catalogue, 1859; MS 2 pp.; from 48 Doughty Street. Date: probably not long after the Athenaeum's General Meeting of 8 May 38, when it was decided to elect 40 new members. CD was elected on 21 June.

My dear Sir

I am really more obliged to you than I can express for the kind interest you take in my behalf ... But having my name proposed and recorded[†4] I shall leave all the rest to fortune.[†5]

To SPENCER HALL, [?MAY 1838]*

MS Mr J. L. Douthwaite. Date: probably soon after last.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

One more last word in reply to yours. I never canvass anybody for anything. If the committee elect me, well and good; if not I shall forget it, and them, and all about the matter in fact except the kind interest you have taken in it.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Spencer Hall Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MAY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably late in May, shortly before they took the cottage at Twickenham. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Saturday Morng

Dear Forster

Kate is going in a fly to Twickenham to look at the cottage[†1] this morning, and we are to join her there. Don't make it later than half past 12, but be earlier if you can.

Ever Yours CD.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 20 MAY [1838]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 23 July 1903; MS 3 pp.; dated 20 May.

Refers to a dinner invitation from Lord Holland;[†2] also mentions a play of Talfourd's.

I am desperately hard up just now, having only written one chapter of Nickleby number three.[†3] I hope to make a great dash tomorrow, however, to proceed at rail-road pace.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MAY 1838]

Extract in F, II, iv, 124. Date: Refers to Nickleby, according to Forster; presumably shortly after last.

I remain dissatisfied until you have seen and read number three.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?24 MAY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting points to Apr-May 1838; "by Post" in cancelled sentence (see fn) suggests shortly before CD's departure for Twickenham; since postscript refers to a returned paper, probably towards end of the month.

Doughty Street | Thursday Night

My Dear Sir

The inclosed I received a day or two since from Mr. Maxwell.[†1] It was directed to you but my brother seeing it on my table thought it an unopened Miscellany Paper, and broke the seal by mistake. He immediately found out his error, and I send it to you with this hasty explanation.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T.O

Richard Bentley Esquire

I have never had "Dismal Treatises by Minimus Little Gent".[†2]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?31 MAY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Probably refers to the accounts for the year July 37 to June 38 (see fn). Handwriting strongly suggests not later than May; presumably 31 May, the day the June Miscellany went to the booksellers. No Thursday in June seems possible.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

Dear Sir.

On looking over the account of Miscellany sales, I find that the odd pages of Oliver each month are deducted — that this meanness is carried so far, that in four instances there are fifteen pages and a half[†3] put down; in one fifteen, and in five fourteen.[†4]

Now I distinctly recollect that in the case of Nicholas Tulrumble,[†1] two pages and a half were cut by me out of the printed proof to suit the exigencies of the Number, and that since that time I have twice cut Oliver Twist to the extent of a page each time, with the same object.[†2] But I have no wish to put the matter on this ground. I merely wish to ask you whether when there may be some thirty or forty pounds due to me on account of the Miscellany sales,[†3] you think it is liberal towards your editor and principal contributor to deduct his half pages and count him down by the line, to make a set-off against such a paltry sum — whether you do not think that the pains and care bestowed upon the tale of which you count the words, deserve a better return — and whether you consider that such treatment (so different from any I have received elsewhere) is likely to make me wish for a very long continuance of our business connection?[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richd. Bentley Esqre.

June

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?6 JUNE 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: probably the Wednesday after last, the appointment having been to discuss the Miscellany accounts.

Twickenham Park. | Wednesday Morning

Dear Sir

I went to town yesterday, according to our appointment, and waited for you in Doughty Street until Two oClock. I dare say you had forgotten it, so this is to let you know that I shall be there again on Saturday next from 12 to 2, and glad to see you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To G. H. LEWES,[†5] [?9 JUNE 1838]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: probably a week before To Lewes, ?16 June, and concerned with the same meeting.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir

I write — fortunately for you — short notes, having no time (if I had the inclination) to make them longer.

I will take soundings in Counting-House Quarters and report about that very deep mine to which you devote yourself, in due course.[†1]

I don't think I shall be in town again until next Saturday, but between twelve and two on that day I shall be here. I have I am sorry to say several unfixed dinner engagements afoot, but I have at present no reason to fear that any one of them will clash with whatever day may suit Leigh Hunt best. I merely stipulate that you discharge me at an early hour, as I shall go back to Twickenham that night.

With reference to that question of yours concerning Oliver Twist I scarcely know what answer I can give you. I suppose like most authors I look over what I write with exceeding pleasure and think (to use the words of the elder Mr. Weller) "in my innocence that it's all wery capital". I thought that passage a good one when I wrote it, certainly, and I felt it strongly (as I do almost every word I put on paper) while I wrote it, but how it came I can't tell. It came like all my other ideas, such as they are, ready made to the point of the pen — and down it went. Draw your own conclusion and hug the theory closely.[†2]

I strongly object to printing anything in italics but a word here and there which requires particular emphasis, and that not often. It is framing and glazing an idea and desiring the ladies and gentleman[†1] to walk up and admire it. The truth is, that I am a very modest man, and furthermore that if readers cannot detect the point of a passage without having their attention called to it by the writer, I would much rather they lost it and looked out for something else.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?11 JUNE 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The second appointment broken by Bentley was presumably for the Saturday after the first one: i.e., for the 9th, when CD was in London (see last).

Twickenham Park | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I have twice kept appointments which you have traitorously violated. Write to me here, and tell me what day this week at one oClock at Noon you will be in Doughty Street to meet me.

Always
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, [12 JUNE 1838]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 12 June 38. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Twickenham Park | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Beard

I hasten to reply to your note. I will come up to town tomorrow, and going first to Doughty Street to get a cargo of books for your amusement while I am at work, will be with you at three exactly. We shall then get down here to dinner. NB. We have a very unseemly-looking back to the front seat of the chaise, for country rides, which shall be put on specially for your ease and comfort.

Burnett and his wife are coming down on Saturday but Mrs. D and I have taken council[†1] this morning, and find that the resources of the establishment are more than sufficient for a greater number of visitors. We therefore lay violent hands on you until some days after you are perfectly restored, and assure you with great sincerity that the longer you stay, the better you will please us. You must forget in the present crisis that there is such a thing as a Chronicle (except on Saturdays) content that there is no chance of their forgetting you.

Kate desires her best love to your sisters, and I beg my best remembrances to all.

Believe me, ever,

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?14 JUNE 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: presumably the Thursday after letter of ?11 June.

Twickenham Park. | Thursday Evening 6 oClock

My Dear Sir

I only received your note two hours ago. Say Saturday in Doughty St. between 12 and 2, and I will be punctual — the earlier after 12, the better.

I am anxious to hear your offer for poor Mrs. Macrone's book. Things have come to that pass that I must dispose of it without delay, somewhere.

Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To G. H. LEWES, [?16 JUNE 1838]

MS Huntington Library. Date: in June, the month of the Coronation; probably "next Wednesday week" was the 27th, when CD would be free from Miscellany proofs.

Parthenon Club | Saturday Evng

My Dear Sir

In consequence of the Coronation,[†1] the Booksellers make the 26th. of this month, the day for delivering periodicals to the trade, and I am consequently obliged to go hard to work.

Will you change our day to next Wednesday week instead of Monday, and meet at the appointed place and hour?

Believe me
Always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire

To MISS AGNES STRICKLAND,[†1] [?17 JUNE 1838]*

MS University of Texas. Date: probably the day after the meeting with Bentley arranged for the 16th.

Twickenham Park | Sunday Morning

My dear Miss Strickland.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here, but unfortunately the MS tale has been by some accident left in town, where I shall not be until next Saturday, and then only for a few hours.

Will you do me the favor to leave the two printed tales and the Manuscript in my hands for a few days? I shall be very happy to retain "Irmingland Hall" for insertion in Mrs. Macrone's book,[†2] and to determine on the original tale after I have perused it.

I saw Mr. Bentley yesterday, and mentioned to him what you had said to me relative to the copyright of your papers. He thinks eight guineas a sheet, you reserving to yourself the right of collection "after a reasonable time", would be fair. Do you think so too?

I had intended to do myself the pleasure of calling on you before I left town, but the remarkable phænomonon of a sunshiny day decoyed me suddenly away — and since that surprising appearance I have been waiting patiently here looking out for another.

Believe me
Dear Miss Strickland
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Strickland.

To JOHN FORSTER, 23 JUNE 1838

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

Gammon Lodge | Saturday Evening | June 23rd. 1838

Sir.

I am requested to inform you that at a numerous meeting of the Gammon Aeronautical Balloon association[†3] for the encouragement of Science and the Consumption of Spirits of Wine — Thomas Beard Esquire, Mrs. Charles Dickens, Charles Dickens Esquire, the Snodgering Blee, Popem Jee,[†4] and other distinguished characters being present and assenting — the vote of censure of which I inclose a copy was unanimously passed upon you for gross negligence in the discharge of your duty, and most unjustifiable disregard of the best interests of the Society.

I am Sir
Your most obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS
Honorary Secretary[†1]

John Forster Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?24 JUNE 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Summer 1838, probably June, on handwriting; clearly CD was urging Forster to join him at Twickenham; towards the end of the month, since correcting proofs. Perhaps the letter he was answering had crossed his last. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

A thousand thanks for that joke (new!) respecting the Thames Tunnel.[†2] I shall certainly put it into Nickleby.

[ ][†3]

[†a]We start precisely[†4] — precisely mind — at half past one. Come, come, come, and walk in the Green Lanes. You will work the better for it all the week.

Come.[†5] I shall expect you.[†a]

Ever & Ever

CD.

Sunday Morning

NB. Not at church, but correcting proofs.

To [?MR HAWKINS],[†1] [29 JUNE 1838]

Summary in James Hawkins to E. B. L. Dickens (Plorn), Oct 1889 (MS Mr W. A. Foyle). Date: the day after Coronation day.

Asking for the return of a provisions basket he had left in the third floor front room of Mr [?Hawkins's] house, which he had engaged for Coronation day in order to witness the procession.

To CHARLES HICKS, [?29 JUNE 1838]

Text from N, I, 165. Date: Since the misprint was not corrected in the first issue of Nickleby No. IV, published 2 July 38, CD was presumably returning the proofs on 29 rather than 22 June.

Twickenham Park | Friday Evening

My Dear Mr. Hicks,

On looking hastily over the proof, I see no mistake except at page 123 where at line 17, the word "sister" should be substituted for "visiter."

Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 JUNE 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Presumably the "few lines about the fair" were the final part — plainly by CD — of the long article on the Coronation in the Examiner, 1 July 38, p. 403. No other fair is described in the Examiner during this period. CD was probably writing the morning after the Coronation. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

I have not done anything, for I got caught in the rain, came home, and have been beset ever since. I'll do, I'll do, I'll do,[†2] however, and when I call in Pulteney Street[†3] will bring a few lines about the fair.[†4] Pray Heaven they may fall in pleasant places![†5]

Faithfully

CD.

To [?MESSRS CAREY, LEA & BLANCHARD], [?JUNE 1838]

Mention in To Talfourd, ?9 July 38. Date: perhaps not long before that letter.

Asking them to send him some copies of the penny edition of Talfourd's Ion.

July

To J. P. HARLEY, [JUNE-JULY 1838]

MS Mr L. T. Edwards. Date: during CD's stay at Twickenham.

Twickenham Park. | Thursday Night

My Dear Harley.

This comes hoping you are well, as it leaves me at this present. Likewise to inform you that I have a small box with a spare bed in it down here, and shall be glad to see you to dine (and sleep) next Sabbath. Forster is coming, and offers to pilot you, with which hospitable view he intends sounding you at the Theayter to-night. We shall be quite alone with this exception, and Missis hopes to see you.

N.B. Neat Wines.

In haste
My Dear Harley,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J P Harley Esquire

&c &c

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, [JUNE-JULY 1838]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [JUNE-JULY 1838]*

MS Admiral Sir Gerald Dickens. Date: during CD's stay at Twickenham.

Twickenham Park | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster

Here is my note to Fonblanque, and — a curiosity — Hogarth's note to me, which I inclose for your perusal.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To EDWARD OLIVER, [JUNE-JULY 1838]*

MS Mr M. B. Ashford. Date: during CD's stay at Twickenham. Address: —— Oliver Esq | Surgeon | Ebury Street.

Twickenham Park | Monday Evening

Sir.

I very much regret that your note has so long remained unanswered. It was put aside among some answered letters, and so escaped me.

I recollect very shortly after I received your two papers, writing you a note in which I ventured to say that I did not think the idea of a Surgeon's Diary at all a promising one after the Physician's;[†1] and that I did not consider your articles adapted to the Miscellany. I therefore declined them with many thanks for your preference.

As you have not received this communication, I infer that the parcel must have been, since that time, lying at Mr. Bentley's. But I shall be in town on Saturday, and will take care that it is sent to your residence.

I am, Sir,
Your very obedt. Servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Oliver Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?3 JULY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The Miscellany volumes were no doubt for Leigh Hunt, to go with the first four Nos of Nickleby (see 13 July). CD probably made up the parcel on 3 July, the day after publication of Nickleby No. IV.

Twickenham Park. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I gave your invitation to Mr. Forster, and he begged me to tell you that he would be exceedingly happy to join us. We shall be at Hungerford Market[†2] at a quarter to 4.[†3]

Will you have the goodness to send me (to Doughty Street) a set of the Miscellany in boards? I wish to present one to a friend in the country.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. H. KUENZEL,[†1] 9 JULY 1838

Mention in catalogue of J. W. Jarvis & Son, 1884; dated 9 July 38.

Expressing his pleasure at acquiring popularity in Germany.

To LORD ROBERT GROSVENOR,[†2] 9 JULY 1838*

MS Mrs Margaret Dorling. Address: The Lord Robert Grosvenor | Park Lane.

Twickenham Park. | July 9th. 1838

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Lord Robert Grosvenor and begs to inform him that Mr. Squeers and Do-the-boys Hall were originally suggested to him by such advertisements as Lord Robert Grosvenor has had the kindness to enclose. Those particular advertisements had never come under Mr. Dickens' notice before, although he was in the immediate neighbourhood of Mr. Twycross[†3] (as he finds by his printed address) in the course of a little tour among the Yorkshire Schools which he made last winter. Mr. Dickens feels much flattered by Ld. R. Grosvenor's enquiry on behalf of Oliver Twist and begs to inform him that the tale will shortly be published in three volumes.

To JOHN LIMBIRD,[†1] 9 JULY 1838*

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd. Address: Mr. Limbird | 143 Strand.

Twickenham Park Twickenham | Monday July 9th. 1838.

Mr. Charles Dickens in acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Limbird's note, begs to inform him that he is staying out of town for the summer, but that he will be in 48 Doughty Street for an hour on Monday next, the 16th., and will be happy to see him at One o'Clock on that day.

If Mr. Limbird's proposition be one which requires an earlier answer, and he will have the goodness to state it in a note directed to the address whence this letter is dated, Mr. Dickens will have much pleasure in giving it immediate attention.

To MR PARKER, 9 JULY [1838]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1933; MS 1 p; dated 9 July 1858, plainly a mistake for 1838, as Doughty Street mentioned.

Have the goodness to send to Doughty Street for two pairs of boots of mine to mend. Put light soles to them and don't be an age about it.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?9 JULY 1838]

Text from N, I, 166. Date: probably the Monday before 15 July — the first anniversary of Letitia's wedding; seems clearly to refer to CD's first invitation from Lady Holland, since on 15 July he wrote to Talfourd of the invitation being "renewed".

Twickenham Park | Monday evening

My dear Talfourd,

I am more sorry than I can tell you to find your note on returning from a walk. I have not been out for weeks, and have purposely kept aloof from Sunday engagements in expectation of Lady Holland's[†2] most agreeable invite; but two days ago I contracted an engagement for next Sunday (in fancied security) which I cannot now postpone as it is a family anniversary, and I have moreover engaged myself with Mrs. Dickens.

May I ask you to let Lady Holland know how very much I regret this circumstance, and how anxiously I hope to have another opportunity of retrieving my loss?[†1]

I don't know whether you are aware of your great popularity in America, where Ion is sold for a penny! Thinking you might not have seen one of these curiosities I have requested some booksellers in Philadelphia[†2] with whom I have been in communication, to send me a copy or two.

I write in great haste, and in the dark, to save the next post; but in haste or leisure, or darkness or light, I am always.

Most faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [10 JULY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD noted in his Diary, Thurs 12 July: "Bentley and Hullah to come down early and sleep here"; and on 7 July: "Finished Oliver for the Month".

Twickenham Park | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Sir.

Don't fail to be early on Thursday, as I project a visit to Hampton Court, and a ride by the River side.

Wilson has Oliver for the Month. I have planned the tale to the close, and if I have any fortune in preparing the next No. of Nickleby expeditiously, hope to make a great start this month.[†3]

In haste
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

over

Your best way, if you can manage it, would be to come down by the boat from Hungerford Market. They leave (I think) at 10 and 11 o'Clock.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?10 JULY 1838]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting points to July; "Water Party" possibly refers to the Hampton Court expedition mentioned in last.

Twickenham Park. | Tuesday Night

Dear Tom

I sat down this evening and put on paper my testamentary meaning. Whether it is sufficiently legal or not, is another question, but I hope it is. The rough draft of the clauses which I inclose, will be preceded by as much of the fair copy as I send you, and followed by the usual clause about the receipts of the trustees being a sufficient discharge. I also wish to provide that if all our children should die before 21 and Kate married again, half the surplus should go to her, and half to my surviving brothers and sisters, share and share alike.

This will be all, except a few lines I wish to add, which there will be no occasion to consult you about, as they will merely bear reference to a few tokens of remembrance, and one or two slight funeral directions. And so pray God that you may be grey and Forster bald long before you are called upon to act as my executors.[†1]

I suppose I shall see you at the Water Party on Thursday? We will then make an appointment for Saturday Morning, and if you think my clauses will do, I will complete my copy, seal it up, and leave it in your hands. There are some other papers which you ought to have. We must get a box.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To HENRY COLBURN, [?13 JULY 1838]

For text see Addenda, p. 701.

To LEIGH HUNT, [?13 JULY 1838]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably ten days after CD's request to Bentley of ?3 July for a set of the Miscellany.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Evening

My Dear Sir

Here is the unhappy parcel which, after being safely booked and entered in my own mind as gone, has been lying on my table in the dust of fourteen days.

It contains the first four numbers of my new work, a portion of Oliver Twist (which you will find in the two Miscellany Volumes) and an American Edition of Pickwick, which is curious from the singular vileness of the Illustrations.[†2] Do me the favor to read Oliver and Nickleby first. Of the latter work I have directed the publishers to send you all future numbers regularly; and of the former I will send you more anon, if it interest you — an old stager — sufficiently.

You are an old stager in works, but a young one in faith — faith in all beautiful and excellent things. If you can only find it in that green heart of yours to tell me one of these days that you have met, in wading through the accompanying trifles, with any thing that felt like a vibration of the old chord you have touched so often and sounded so well, you will confer the truest gratification on, My Dear Sir,

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 15 JULY 1838

Text from MDGH, I, 10.

Twickenham Park, Sunday, July 15th, 1838.

My dear Talfourd,

I cannot tell you how much pleasure I have derived from the receipt of your letter. I have heard little of you, and seen less, for so long a time, that your handwriting came like the renewal of some old friendship, and gladdened my eyes like the face of some old friend.[†1]

If I hear from Lady Holland before you return, I shall, as in duty bound, present myself at her bidding; but between you and me and the general post, I hope she may not renew her invitation until I can visit her with you, as I would much rather avail myself of your personal introduction. However, whatever her ladyship may do I shall respond to, and anyway shall be only too happy to avail myself of what I am sure cannot fail to form a very pleasant and delightful introduction.[†2]

Your kind invitation and reminder of the subject of a pleasant conversation in one of our pleasant rides, has thrown a gloom over the brightness of Twickenham, for here I am chained. It is indispensably necessary that "Oliver Twist" should be published in three volumes, in September next.[†3] I have only just begun the last one,[†4] and, having the constant drawback of my monthly work, shall be sadly harassed to get it finished in time, especially as I have several very important scenes (important to the story I mean) yet to write. Nothing would give me so much pleasure as to be with you for a week or so. I can only imperfectly console myself with the hope that when you see "Oliver" you will like the close of the book, and approve my self-denial in staying here to write it. I should like to know your address in Scotland when you leave town, so that I may send you the earliest copy if it be produced in the vacation, which I pray Heaven it may.

Meanwhile, believe that though my body is on the banks of the Thames, half my heart is going the Oxford circuit.[†1]

Mrs. Dickens and Charley desire their best remembrances (the latter expresses some anxiety, not unmixed with apprehension, relative to the Copyright Bill,[†2] in which he conceives himself interested),[†3] with hearty wishes that you may have a fine autumn, which is all you want, being sure of all other means of enjoyment that a man can have.

I am, my dear Talfourd,
Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. — I hope you are able to spare a moment now and then to glance at "Nicholas Nickleby," and that you have as yet found no reason to alter the opinion you formed on the appearance of the first number.

You know, I suppose, that they elected me at the Athenæum? Pray thank Mr. Serjeant Storks[†4] for me.

To MESSRS CAREY, LEA & BLANCHARD, 18 JULY 1838

MS Messrs Lea & Febiger.

48 Doughty Street London | 18th. July 1838

Gentlemen

I take the opportunity of my friend Mr. Thompson[†5] leaving England on a voyage of discovery to the New World, to thank you most cordially for your box of books, and also for your acknowledgment of the popularity of the Pickwick papers in America, which (both the acknowledgment and the popularity, and especially the last) affords me the greatest delight and satisfaction.

I have never seen your Agent Mr. Miller[†1] upon the subject of Nicholas Nickleby, but if I had I should have been unable to have sent you early proofs of any Number that has yet appeared, as I have been rather behind-hand than in advance and have only completed each Number a day or two before its publication.

I shall be glad to hear that Nicholas is in favor with our American friends (whom I long to see) and if you can point out to me any means by which, either in this case or any other, I can give you a preference or serve your interests, believe me that I shall be most willing and prompt to do so.

I am
Gentlemen
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Carey Lea and Blanchard.

To MISS JANE SHIRREFF,[†2] 18 JULY 1838*

MS Private.

48 Doughty Street Mecklenburgh Square.
Wednesday July 18th. 1838

My dear Miss Shireff.

Hearing that you have taken your passage for America in The Great Western,[†3] I wish to have the pleasure of introducing to you my friend Mr. Thompson, the bearer of this letter, a gentleman of great attainments and accomplishments who is starting for a tour in the Far West. I am happy to believe that in making you known to him, I shall repay some portion of the pleasure which you have so often afforded me, in common with all playgoers and admirers of beautiful music.

I hope you will not be persuaded to cast so great a slight on your own countrymen as to bestow your heart on an American in this long trip.[†4] Above all I hope (I regret to say, most selfishly,) that whatever you do, you will not be persuaded to remain in the United States, and deprive old England of the light of your countenance and voice.

Believe me
Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN WILSON,[†1] 18 JULY 1838

MS Walter T. Spencer.

48 Doughty Street Mecklenburgh Square

Wednesday July 18th. 1838

My Dear Sir.

Mrs. Dickens and myself are anxious to introduce to you the Bearer of this letter, a friend of ours — Mr. Thompson by name — who has taken his passage for America in the same vessel by which you travel thither, and will deliver this letter to you on board. We are sure that you cannot fail to like him greatly, and feeling equally assured that he cannot fail to like you, anticipate receiving the thanks of both parties when both return.

Accept our united and most sincere wishes — I will not say for your success, for of that there is no doubt — but for your safe, and happy return. And Believe me

My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Wilson Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?19 JULY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting of both letter and the MS of the second "Mudfog Association" paper, published in Sep, points to July; supported by the reference to Twickenham. The meeting with Cruikshank suggests about the middle of the month.

Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir

The inclosed papers are by a young man[†2] whom Leigh Hunt introduced to me some time since. He is going to Germany on Saturday, or Sunday, and if they are accepted wishes to be paid in advance. Under these circumstances I think it best to send them to you; merely observing that if you think them worth paying for on the usual terms, I shall be very glad on the writer's account. Will you let me know by post to Twickenham, and without delay, whether you think proper to comply with this request or not?

I have seen Cruikshank this morning, and he has left me in transports with his Mudfog association subject.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [20 JULY 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: plainly the Friday after Bentley's visit of 12-13 July.

Twickenham Park | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

Wilson will receive the proofs revised, early tomorrow. There are a good many of them, and my time has been much occupied.

I am glad you liked your country trip the other day, and shall be truly pleased to give you an opportunity of repeating it before we leave this.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To F. P. BECKER,†1 [?20 JULY 1838]

Text from Walter T. Spencer catalogue No. 104 (1901); MS 1 p.; dated Twickenham Park, Friday — perhaps same Friday as last, since the illustration appeared in the Aug instalment of Oliver.

Mr. Dickens' compliments to Mr Becker, and begs to inform him that the lettering for the Oliver Twist plate will be —

"Mr. Fagin and his pupils†2 recovering Nancy."

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 JULY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: presumably not long after Leigh Hunt's reply (see p. 685) to CD's letter of 13 July.

Twickenham Park | Monday Morning

My dear Forster.

I wish you would write to Hunt, and tell him that now I am so busy I can't see him. What with the two days dissipation in this week, and a wasting diarrhœa I have got upon me somehow or other, all my work is in the most foggy perspective I ever saw it in.

You can easily lay it upon the conclusion of Oliver.

Be punctual on Wednesday and Believe me always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I don't know whether you are aware that under the new law of registration†3 it is necessary for a man to register his intention to get married, three weeks†4 before the ceremony can take place. I mention this as a friend, and to prevent disappointments.†5

To MADAME SALA, [?23 JULY 1838]

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd. Date: If referring to Madame Sala's benefit at the Haymarket Theatre on 3 Aug 38, after her recovery from smallpox, CD must have been writing on 23 July, envisaging an announcement in the Examiner on Sun 29th.

Twickenham Park | Monday Evening

My Dear Madame Sala.

You will I am sure believe that my delay in answering your letter, has arisen from no want of sympathy with your very severe misfortune,[†1] or indifference to your success and recovery for which I am sincerely anxious. I have been out of town for some weeks, and so hard pressed with business that I have not had ten minutes' time to spare.

I regret that I have not the remotest influence with any daily or weekly paper — not the slightest. I am always most careful to solicit no favors from such gentlemen connected with them as I happen to know personally — and I need not, I am sure, point out to you — situated as I am — the necessity of my adopting this course.

All I have been enabled to do, has been to mention precisely what you tell me in your note, to my friend Mr Forster, who will most cheerfully say or do anything you wish in the Examiner,[†2] or — if there should not be time for that — in the Morning Chronicle, which will perhaps be of even greater importance to you. He is very desirous to serve you by any means in his power, and you may fully depend on his doing so.

For myself I can only say that if you will point out to me any mode by which, either now or at any future time, I can advance your interests or be of service to you, I pray you to command me. I do not say this as a mere compliment, but in all truth and sincerity. And I hope you will let me know before long, that you have read this note with your own eyes, and written me a short bulletin in reply with your own fingers.

My Dear Madame Sala
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Madame Sala.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26 JULY 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably the same day as next; Forster must have replied at once, advising CD to write to Bentley himself. Getting his papers together suggests shortly after CD's return to London.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My dear Forster.

I have only time (having just got up) to say that if you see Bentley to-day, you will oblige me greatly by broaching the idea of another month's rest from the Miscellany, and hint that we must hold a great discussion thereupon (he, you, and I) before the month is out.

I have my papers to get together, and therefore shall not come out this morning. Will you come here, or pick a bit with us at five, or how?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dine here if you can, and we will discuss all grave matters.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?26 JULY 1838]†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting points to Summer 1838; the return home must therefore have been from Twickenham — some time after 20 July (see To Bentley, that day). Since the Miscellany of Sep 38 contained no Oliver, "after next month" suggests CD was writing in July.

Doughty Street. | Thursday.

My Dear Sir

†a This is to give you notice that I have come home.†a

I wish you to consider whether — after next month — it would hurt the Miscellany if (the announcement that I was about to begin a new tale therein, being meanwhile very conspicuously displayed)†1 I wrote nothing in it for a number. I really see no other way of making a great start with Oliver, for †b I no sooner get myself up, high and dry, to attack him manfully than up come the waves of each month's work, and drive me back again into a sea of manuscript.†b

†a There is plenty of time for you to think this over; I wish you would consider it well.†a

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 27 JULY 1838

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

July 27th. 1838.†1

Dr. Sir.

Poets tell us that love is blind;[†2] — I fear indifference is more so. It is many months since I sent you a slight gage d'amour; it is many years (do not be alarmed, I am still very young) since I first became acquainted with your worth and excellence. I have seen you — met you — read your works — heard you speak — listened, in a breathless state, to your eloquent and manly expression of the sentiments which do you honor; and still by no word or sign have I discovered that you recognized in me the giver of the simple worthless riding whip which I have often seen in your hand, and once (when you [ ][†3] it) nearly touched.

Mr. Forster — dear Mr. Forster let me say, as it is but on paper, and through the distant medium of an anonymous communication — I have loved you, and I could have wished, and have wished with all a woman's ardour that you were mine. You are no ordinary man. When I tell you this, believe that love — a love of which I am not ashamed, but proud, since its object exalts even that great passion — has rendered me superior to the common foibles of my sex. I love you still, but I know neither jealousy, envy, nor hatred. You love another. Heaven send you may be happy — as happy, Mr. Forster, as you deserve. As happy as in the wildest dreams of your youth you can ever have hoped to become.

I have but one object in writing, and that is soon stated. I might say two, since it will be a consolation to know that your eye traces these lines — but I will not. Think me capricious — strange — romantic — what you will — but when this engagement arising out of the acquaintance you have recently formed, is ratified (it may be already, I have no reason to doubt it) return that whip to the booking office of the Golden Cross Charing Cross, directed "To T.B.K. To be called for." I shall receive it within four and twenty hours. The Reflection that you have used it, kept it, had it by you, looked upon it, wondered whence it came, and perhaps felt proud of it at times, will support me under the heavy infliction of knowing that you are another's.

Dear Mr. Forster, bless you. In the society of your future wife, and your excellent friends Mr. Dickens, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd and Mr. Macready who respect and admire you as a kindred spirit and find their genius mirrored in your own, may you be happy; — happier Dear Mr. Forster than Louisa.

To J. H. KUENZEL, [?JULY 1838]

Text from Walther Fischer, Des Darmstädter Schriftstellers Johann Heinrich Kuenzel, Giessen, 1939, p. 12.[†1] Date: probably after CD's return from Twickenham, but not long after 16 July, when his Diary records an appointment to see a "German Gentleman", presumably Kuenzel.

Doughty Street | Monday Evening.

My Dear Sir.

Pray keep the English Authors as long as you please. I only wish the collection were a more comprehensive and interesting one.

I am ashamed to confess that — in the hurry of many engagements — I have quite forgotten your request.[†2] That I may forget it no longer, I will tell you "all I know" at once.

I was born at Portsmouth, an English Seaport town principally remarkable for mud, Jews, and Sailors, on the 7th. of February 1812. My father holding in those days a situation under Government in the Navy Pay Office, which called him in the discharge of his duty to different places, I came to London, a child of two years old, left it again at six, and then left it again for another Sea Port town — Chatham — where I remained some six or seven years, and then came back to London with my parents and half a dozen brothers and sisters, whereof I was second in seniority.

I had begun an irregular rambling education under a clergyman at Chatham, and I finished it at a good school in London — tolerably early, for my father was not a rich man, and I had to begin the world. So I began in a Lawyer's office — which is a very little world, and a very dull one — and leaving it at the expiration of two years, devoted myself for some time to the acquirement of such general literature as I could pick up in the Library of the British Museum, — and to the study of Short Hand, with a view to trying what I could do as a reporter — not for the Newspapers, but legal authorities — in our Ecclesiastical Courts. I was very successful in this pursuit — was induced to join the Mirror of Parliament — a publication, which was at that time devoted solely to the Debates — and afterwards to attach myself to the Morning Chronicle, where I remained until the four or five first numbers of the Pickwick Papers had appeared,[†3] and in the columns of which Journal most of my shorter sketches were originally published. Some few appeared in the old Monthly Magazine. I may tell you that I was considered very remarkable at the Chronicle for an extraordinary facility in writing and so forth — that I was very liberally paid during my whole connection with the paper — and that, when I quitted it, Pickwick was rapidly approaching the zenith of its fame and popularity.*[†1]

The rest of my career up to this time, you know. I may add for your guidance in any little notes you may throw together of my "Life and adventures" that I was a great reader as a child, being well versed in most of our English Novelists before I was ten[†2] years old — that I wrote tragedies and got other children to act them — that I won prizes at school, and great fame — that I am positively assured I was a very clever boy — that I am now married to the eldest daughter of Mr. Hogarth of Edinburgh, a gentleman who has published two well-known Works on Music,[†3] and was a great friend and companion of Sir Walter Scott's — and that, being now in my twenty-seventh year, I hope with God's blessing to retain my health, spirits, fancy, and perseverance (such as they are) for many years to come.

As to my means of observation, they have been pretty extensive. I have been[†4] abroad in the world from a mere child, and have lived in London and travelled by fits and starts through a great part of England, a little of Scotland, and less of France, with my eyes open. Heaven send that some kind wind may ere long blow me to Germany!

There — I have said more about myself in this one note than I should venture to say elsewhere in twenty years. If you can make anything of such a jumble of matter, and — more than all — interest anybody in it, your ability, my dear Sir, will have exalted your subject.

Believe me
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Kuenzel

If it be any consolation to the German Ladies to know that I have two children, pray tell them so.

*The Sketches, I should have told you, had been previously collected and published with amazing success, and have since gone through many editions.[†5]

To E. J. STANLEY,[†6] [SUMMER 1838]

Mention in To Stanley, 10 Nov 38, as written "last summer".

Presumably asking his help in promoting Frederick Dickens's career at the Treasury.

To E. J. STANLEY, [?SUMMER 1838]

Extract in unidentified catalogue; no correspondent or date mentioned. Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2007 (1925) mentions a letter to E. J. Stanley, dated 48 Doughty Street, Monday morning, in "gratification for his remembrance" of CD's brother. Presumably both catalogues refer to the same letter. Date: no doubt not long after last.

I cannot tell you how very much I am obliged to you, for your most kind recollection of my brother. Believe me that few things have ever occurred which have afforded me more gratification than your handsome conduct, of which — I honestly assure you — I feel a more lively sense than I could well express upon paper if I were to send you a treatise in lieu of this brief note.

August

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 AUGUST 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Forster dates this May (F, II, iii, III). But the Agreement with Colburn for The Pic Nic Papers was signed on Fri 10 Aug 38, and CD was probably writing two days before.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My dear Forster

I worked pretty well last night — very well, indeed, — but although I did eleven close slips before half past twelve I have yet four to write to complete the chapter;[†1] and as I foolishly left them 'till this morning have the steam to get up afresh.

I do not think I shall be able to call upon you before 3 o'Clock, but if Mr. Colburn will sign the agreement[†2] (you will see that it is all right) and leave it with you, I will sign a duplicate — if he will leave that too — and return it to him this evening, in which case you can receive the cash.[†3]

If he would rather see me, I can be with him at a quarter to 4. Any way I hope he will complete the arrangement to-day.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?AUGUST 1838]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: The "last published No." must have been the Aug instalment, to which the illustration "The Evidence Destroyed", which did not appear in the Miscellany until Dec, properly belongs. Probably the copy promised here was the "go" sent in next.

Doughty Street | Sunday

My dear Cruikshank

I have written a long chapter since I saw you, but it has no subject. In the course of the week, I will send you some more copy. In the mean time may I venture to call your attention to the last published No. (which I inclose) and to suggest that possibly there may be one more subject there? I confess that I thought there was, when I wrote it.

With best remembrances from Mrs. D and self to Mrs. C

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?AUGUST 1838]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Presumably refers to the four chapters following the Aug instalment, which have only one illustration between them.[†1] Postscript, implying that he was now ahead of publication in the Miscellany, supports. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank

I inclose you a "go" of Oliver, and although I am of necessity in that part of the story which is not so productive of subjects for illustration as in the sequel it will become when I have cleared two chapters more, I hope you will find something in it suitable to your purpose.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

PS. Pray do me the favor to be very particular "until further notice" in returning the MS only to me.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably shortly after 18 Aug, when the first report appeared in the Newcastle press of arrivals for the British Association meeting.

My Dear Forster

Kate has settled to go from Lawrence's[†2] to the illustrious Mister Springate's[†3] per Richmond Stage about half past Three. As I have been correcting proofs all the morning, I fear I shall not be able to leave home until 7 or 8 when I shall drive down to Barnes.

Kate of course goes alone, and you will suit yourself. I have some uncooked chops here, dressable at any time. If you feel disposed to take one with me, send back the lively bearer and name your time. If not don't take no furder notice.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

Thanks for the Newcastle paper. The Quackery is of extra strength this year I think. Among the "most interesting of the arrivals" I see Dr. Lardner and W Jerdan Esquire[†1]

So let us scream long live the Queen
And Jerdan long live he,
And when he dies, let's have no more
Of sitch humbuggere.[†2]

To CHARLES SMITHSON,[†3] [?AUGUST 1838]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Handwriting suggests not long after return from Twickenham, perhaps Aug. Address: Charles Smithson Esquire.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday afternoon | at Dinner

My Dear Sir.

It appears to be a mistake — all knowledge of your umbrella is strongly denied, and nobody has seen it — wherefore I plead with legal distinctness — first that we sent it back, secondly that it was an old one when it came, and thirdly that we never had it at all.

Our best remembrances wait on Mrs. Smithson.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 AUGUST 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: presumably the Wednesday before CD's review in the Examiner of 2 Sep 38.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I inclose you a review — very moderate in tone, if not in length — of the Ballantyne pamphlet,[†1] together with a volume of Lockhart for a short extract. I have thought it better not to make use of anything I know from the Hogarths',[†2] and have taken all the facts from the Refutation itself. I hope you may like it.

As I sat down to it yesterday morning, Oliver is still in waiting.

I forgot to say to you (as I had intended last Sunday) that if you want any plate for the forthcoming Sabbath, of course our chest is at your service.

Believe me always

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [29 AUGUST 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD returned from the Isle of Wight on Wed 12 Sep; clearly his visit must have begun on Mon 3 Sep not 10 Sep. Address: Richard Bentley Esquire | 8 New Burlington Street | Regent Street.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morng.

Dear Sir

I have some idea of sheltering myself for a week (for Oliver purposes) in the Isle of Wight next Monday. Will you come & settle the Miscellany some morning this week?

Truly Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To THE REV. WILLIAM GILES,[†1] [?AUGUST 1838]

MS Private. Date: Handwriting suggests not long after return from Twickenham, perhaps Aug.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday afternoon

My Dear Sir.

I send you such books as I have already finished.[†2] I wish that Oliver were among the number, but when he appears in three volumes, I shall find means of forwarding him to Manchester.

Two of these little books — to wit the Sunday under three heads, and the Sketches of Young Gentlemen — I wrote sub rosâ as the fancy struck me, and they are not generally known to be mine. For the condition of the first-mentioned, and indeed for the appearance of the greater part of them, I should perhaps make some apology, but the truth is that some are out of print, others are the only copies I have by me at the moment, and all have been my reference volumes since their publication. I have the vanity to hope that you will not like them the less because they have been thumbed by your old pupil, however, and therefore send them as they are.

Accept with them, my dear Sir, all the warm and earnest wishes for your happiness and prosperity which a vivid remembrance of your old kindness and excellence can awaken. And believe that whether I be on "the pinnacle" or in the darkest coal-cellar of Fame's Temple,[†3] I shall ever be

Affectionately and sincerely Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Giles.

To THOMAS MALKIN,[†1] [31 AUGUST 1838]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 31 Aug 1838. Address: Thomas Malkin Esquire | 58 Seymour Street | Euston Square.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

Sir.

I regret that I have been out of town or engaged when you have called upon me, but my time is at present so completely occupied that if I did not shut myself up, strictly, I should never have a moment for rest and relaxation.

I leave town tomorrow for a few weeks, and shall not perhaps be at home until October. I regret to say that I am not aware of any means by which I can promote your interests in London, but if you can at any time suggest any mode of doing so to me, I pray you to believe that I shall be truly happy to adopt them if possible.

I am Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Malkin Esquire
&c &c

To [MESSRS WILEY & PUTNAM],[†2] 31 AUGUST 1838

Text from G. H. Putnam, George Palmer Putnam, 1912, p. 402. Address: salutation omitted in printed source; presumably to the firm (as letter of 13 Dec 38), not to Putnam personally.

48 Doughty Street, | Friday, Aug. 31, 1838.

I beg to thank you for the books you have been so obliging as to forward me. I have only had time to glance at them, but have been already much pleased, and hope to be more so. I assure you that nothing would yield me greater pleasure than to be the humble means of introducing any American writer to this part of the world. I would only entreat you to remember that our means do not always keep pace with our inclination, and that the claims upon the very limited space of such a magazine as the Miscellany are necessarily more than it is possible to answer with any speed or regularity. I should be very happy to write something for the Knickerbocker[†1] and American Monthly;[†2] but I do assure you I have scarcely time to complete my existing engagements. So I think I must defer this pleasure until I visit America, which I hope to do before very long; and then I shall be more independent and free, which will be more in keeping.[†3]

I am your obedient servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

September

To LADY HOLLAND, [2 SEPTEMBER 1838]*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter. Date: The anecdote about Sydney Smith appeared in the Miscellany of Sep 38, published on the 1st.

48 Doughty Street | Sunday Night

Dear Lady Holland,

You will I hope forgive my troubling you with this note when I mention the reason which prompts me to write it.

Although my name appears as that of the editor of "Bentley's Miscellany" I have little to do with the business part of the publication, and hence I saw yesterday evening for the first time that in this month's number there is some impromptu of Sidney[†4] Smith's,[†5] purporting to have been written at your table some years ago — which Bentley I presume obtained gratis from some well-informed babbler, and printed accordingly.[†1]

So insignificant a matter will very probably have escaped your attention, but I entertain so great an abhorrence of printed recollections of private conversations, and so great a detestation of the impertinence and vulgarity which make them public (I see little difference whether the subject discussed be of great moment or none at all) that I am most anxious you should understand that the production in question has never been authorised by me.

This anxiety has occasioned this note, and perhaps I cannot furnish a better apology for its length than making it no longer.

Pray believe me
Dear Lady Holland
Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lady Holland

To JOHN GROVES,[†2] [EARLY SEPTEMBER 1838]*

MS Winifred A. Myers Ltd. Date: The MS is headed in an unknown hand: "Epistolary lines to Mr. Groves of the Needles. (by Charles Dickens Sept. 1838)". No doubt written in Groves's hotel between 3 Sep, when CD and Catherine went to the Isle of Wight, and 10 Sep when they moved on to Ventnor.

1.

Oh Mr. Groves
If so be you approves
Of writings in rhyme
Knocked off in quick time
And set down at once
By an insolent dunce
Who to Alum bay runs —
Read these lines Mr. Groves.

2

For those same twenty heads
Who are coming for beds
From Cowes or from Ryde
Of from some hole deside
Don't fit up that "Tent"[†3]
Which in our room is meant
For some very small child
Of years meek and mild

Because I've a wife
And I swear on my life
It would our blushes bring
To have that sort of thing, —
So no stranger coves
If you please Mr. Groves

3.

And when people repair
Here, to dine in the air
Just give 'em their grub
On some barrel or tub
In the cow-yard or garden;—
I'll bet a brass farden
They'll eat as much cheese,
And cough spit and sneeze
And make as much shindy
As outside our windy;
So there but their loaves
If you please Mr. Groves.

4

And as Ann is a maid
By no means afraid
Of doing what's right
By day or by night,
And perfectly able
To wait well at table,
If she's wrong here or there
Don't bluster and swear
But of slight faults absolve her.
Yours truly —

Revolver.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [SEPTEMBER 1838]

Mention in next.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [10] SEPTEMBER [1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: PM 12 Sep 38, clearly date of receipt. 9 Sep 38 was in fact a Sunday; CD must have been writing on the 10th. Address: Richard Bentley Esquire | 8 New Burlington Street | London.

Ventnor Isle of Wight. | Monday Evening Septr. 9th.

My Dear Sir

I have received a letter with some double or treble postage tacked to it from one "Omega"[†1] relative to some german[†2] translations. This Omega is an impertinent gentleman who has done me the favor to write a continuation[†3] of Pickwick and ask me to father it. In case you should hear from him again, I think it best to let you know that I have written him a reply, stating that I do not wish to accept his papers, firstly because the greater part of them are too long, and secondly because you do not require translations from new Contributors — the strong probability being (this I have not told him) that they have appeared somewhere else before.

I shall be home, please God, on Wednesday Evening. Shall I see you this week?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?17 SEPTEMBER 1838]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD signed a receipt for 12 guineas from Bentley on Holland's behalf on Thurs 20 Sep 38 (MS BM); he was more likely to send Holland the money in advance and reimburse himself than to keep him waiting until Monday 24th.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

Dear Tom

Are you going into the City — or are any of your people going to the City, who could get me a bank post bill for the inclosed twelve guineas, that I can forward to poor Holland[†1] at Paris to-night? If so it will be a great thing for me, as I cannot by any means set out this morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?17 SEPTEMBER 1838]*

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd. Date: Signature points to Sep or Oct 38; since "this paper" suggests prose, not verse, CD was probably sending "Marcel's Last Minuet", illustrated by Cruikshank in the Oct Miscellany, rather than one of the Ingoldsby Legends, illustrated in Nov. He would have been writing about the middle of the month.

Doughty Street. | Monday

My Dear Cruikshank

Will you look over this paper, and see if you like the subject?

There is no Kidd[†2] in Ainsworth's book.[†3]

I know you like short letters.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?18 SEPTEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Sep-Oct 1838; the reference seems to be to the negotiations Forster was conducting on CD's behalf in Sep; perhaps written the day before next. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My dear Forster.

I have no doubt you will find that all the important matters in dispute, are clearly right and necessary. I will be with you between 3 & 4. I don't know what hour you sent Browne to bed, but he has done nothing.[†1]

Ever Yours
CD.

John Forster Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [19 SEPTEMBER 1838]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Clearly refers to the interview mentioned in next.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Night.

Dear Tom.

Bentley and Follett[†2] were with Forster yesterday nearly all day; they went through the draft, and everything (except one or two mere matters of words) was settled in my favor. I want you to come over to Forster's with me in the morning (Thursday morning I mean, on which you will receive this) to go through the draft without delay, as they appointed Saturday for its execution, and it will have to be ingrossed. I will be with you at a quarter past Ten.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [20 SEPTEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The Agreement was executed on Sat 22 Sep 38.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I saw my friend Mr. Forster yesterday evening, who communicated to me the result of the interview he had had with you and Mr. Follet.[†3]

While I have most unfeigned pleasure in saying that the arrangement you have consented to is alike highly satisfactory to me and highly creditable to yourself and that gentleman, I feel sure you will acknowledge that it embodies no unreasonable or unfair proposal of mine, but merely carries out the wishes and intentions which have been expressed or implied between us on many occasions.[†1]

That this arrangement should have been so long delayed I very much regret, — the more especially as its postponement has greatly chafed and irritated me, and so led to expressions of feeling on my part which I should be hurt if I supposed likely to give you any pain. Let me assure you with real sincerity that in our future intercourse all proposals emanating from you in a spirit of fairness and candour will be most cheerfully and cordially responded to by me; and that it will be my endeavour as I feel assured it will henceforth be yours to make our connection a source of mutual pleasure and advantage.

We execute the agreement I am told at Mr. Forster's on Saturday at Three o'Clock. Will you help me to put a less formal termination to our differences by dining with me on Wednesday at five o'Clock? — long before which time I hope we shall have forgotten them all.

I am, My Dear Sir,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [20 SEPTEMBER 1838]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: same day as last.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank

Bentley and I have at length come to a cessation of hostilities and made a fair and most satisfactory arrangement respecting Oliver Twist; to celebrate which long-deferred event he dines with me on Wednesday at five o'Clock. My Missis's love to your'n and will she join us with you?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To CHARLES HICKS, [?20 SEPTEMBER 1838]

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting points to Sep-Oct 38; clearly refers to Nickleby, since written to Bradbury & Evans's foreman; therefore probably Sep. (In Oct he was occupied with Oliver until the 20th, and the "Monday Morning" after Thurs 25th would have been too late for sending the final Nickleby chapter.)

Doughty Street | Thursday Night

Dear Mr. Hicks

I send you a chapter — 12 pages I hope. You will have another (please God) either on Sunday Night, or Monday Morning. When you have time be good enough to look me up all the old copy you have of mine, as I am very anxious to have it complete.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PHILIP VERINI,[†2] [?22 SEPTEMBER 1838]*

MS Manchester Central Library. Date: Handwriting points to Sep-Oct 1838; probably CD was referring to the dinner with Bentley arranged for 26 Sep.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have a semi-business dinner party next Wednesday which will hold me a prisoner until a late hour. Will you have the kindness to excuse me to your friends with all due acknowledgements for their courtesy and all good wishes for the success and safe return of Mr. Price[†3] from Venice?

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best regards to Miss Verini (whom we are very sorry to have missed on Sunday) and I am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. Verini Esquire

October

To THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE LITERARY FUND, 2 OCTOBER 1838*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

48 Doughty Street | Tuesday October 2nd. 1838.

Gentlemen.

May I beg to solicit your attention to the case of a Mr. Wilmington Fleming,[†4] a distressed author, who was relieved by you by an advance of £30 in 1825? I am very unwilling to trouble you with any application on behalf of anybody; but the case of this person appears to me to be one deserving your attention, and as he is entirely friendless and destitute, I venture (unasked) to appeal to you in his behalf.

He applied to me some months ago for pecuniary assistance which I afforded him then, and have since, to some slight extent. He resides at No. 6 Plumtree Court Shoe Lane where he and an idiot mother rent one small room, and where I verily and in my heart believe they often want bread from day to day. I have never seen him myself, but when he first applied to me, I sent my brother not only to see him but to enquire among the neighbours, who corroborated his own account of his distress in every particular, and represented him to be a perfectly sober and well-conducted person. He has written some poems not destitute of merit, and in his letters to me expresses himself with feeling and like a gentleman.

I should add perhaps that I recollect on mentioning this case to my friend Mr. Serjeant Talfourd some time since, he assured me that it had once come under the notice of his clerk who had made very particular enquiries with the same result as has attended my own.

I state these circumstances very briefly to save your time and my own, feeling assured that you will attribute my presumption in troubling you to the right cause — a conviction that this unfortunate person's case is one of great urgency, and that if you deem it to be so, too, you will be very far from finding fault with me for venturing to lay it before you.

I beg to remain, Gentlemen,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To

The Committee of The Literary Fund.

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 OCTOBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: presumably the Tuesday after publication of the Oct Edinburgh Review containing a long article on Sketches, Pickwick, and the Nickleby and Oliver instalments to date.[†1] Wrongly dated "at the opening of August" in F, II, iii, 111.

Doughty Street | Tuesday night

My Dear Forster

I need not tell you how delighted I have been with the notice in the Edinburgh.[†2] It is all even I could wish, and what more can I say!

[†a]Hard at work still. — Nancy is no more. I shewed what I have done to Kate last night who was in an unspeakable "state",[†1] from which and my own impression I augur well. When I have sent Sikes to the Devil, I must have yours.[†a]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esqr.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [3 OCTOBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: clearly the day after last.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I have such work in point of quantity and time with Oliver, and am applying to it with such hearty energy, that I have given out at my door that I am out of town for a fortnight. Pray favor the notion with all Miscellany ladies and gentlemen that may happen to come under your notice.

I think you will be struck with the last volume. It is difficult to manage, but I am doing it with greater care, and I think with greater power than I have been able to bring to bear on anything yet. I saw the Edinburgh Review notice last night, and it praises Oliver to the skies.[†2]

I want to speak to you about the printing and so forth. Will you call upon me between eleven and two, either tomorrow or next day? — You had better get it in hand,[†3] for unless we are out in November, the Miscellany will spoil it in the best part.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To MRS W. C. MACREADY, [?4 OCTOBER 1838]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1722 (1923); MS 3 pp.; dated Doughty Street, Thursday Morning. Date: Covent Garden had opened on 24 Sep; Hamlet and Othello were appearing alternately from 1 Oct; before 13 Oct when Macready recorded that CD used his box (Diaries, I, 473).

Saying he is unable to dine with her because of most pressing, more solitary, and less agreeable engagements.... I have had the resolution to shut myself up so strictly with Oliver Twist, as not to enter the doors of Covent Garden Theatre since the opening night, despite Hamlet and Othello. What do you think of that?

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?6 OCTOBER 1838]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Nancy was dead by 1 Oct; To Forster, 2 Oct, strongly suggests that CD went straight ahead with sending "Sikes to the Devil"; thus the escape would have been written by Sat 6th rather than 13th Oct, and the intervening "Monks" chapter probably written later.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My dear Cruikshank

I find on writing it, that the scene of Sikes's escape will not do for illustration. It is so very complicated, with such a multitude of figures, such violent action, and torch-light to boot, that a small plate could not take in the slightest idea of it.

I am expecting to see you with some designs. When I do, we will settle upon the substitute for this.[†1] I shall finish (please God) next week.

Always Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10 OCTOBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting and pale blue watermarked paper point to Autumn 1838; the "explanations" were surely therefore Ch. 51 of Oliver, "Affording an Explanation of more Mysteries than one". Address: John Forster Esquire.

Wednesday

My Dear Forster

"I can't get out."[†2] I am in the midst of explanations and must stick to 'em till late to-night — unless you chop with me at 5. Will you? If you won't or can't, I will see you at about 2 tomorrow. If you will or can, you shall go free at 7.

Ever Faithfully Yrs.
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 or 13 OCTOBER 1838]†

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: one of the last two Saturdays before 20 Oct, "the day of the delivery of the concluding part of the Manuscript Copy" (see p. 677) — depending on the order in which he wrote the "explanations" (Chs 49 and 51) and the chapter disposing of Fagin (Ch. 52). Address: John Forster Esquire.

Saturday Morning

My Dear Forster,

I dreamt last night — strange to say — of the books you have sent home. †aI don't ride till tomorrow,†a †bnot having yet disposed of the Jew who is such an out and outer that I don't know what to make of him.†b

The play†1 you have with this.

Always
CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?20 OCTOBER 1838]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: probably written on day of delivery; no doubt Cruikshank protested at this request — hence CD's next note. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire | Myddleton Terrace | Pentonville.

Saturday afternoon

My Dear Cruikshank.

Will you give the bearer (the printer) the copy you have of Oliver? If you have not read it, you can have it back again. They want to cast it off.†2

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?20 OCTOBER 1838]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Sketches on back of letter†3 show the "marvellous tale" was Oliver, due for delivery on 20 Oct (see above); but CD apparently gave Cruikshank an extra day's grace. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire.

Saturday.

My Dear Cruikshank

Don't hurry with that MS. The printer bothered me, or I would not have bothered you. If you send it me any time tomorrow, that will do. I shall be glad to hear what you think of the last portion of this marvellous tale.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esqre.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER, [?OCTOBER 1838]

Mention in To Bulwer, 15 Nov 38. Date: probably towards the finish of Oliver.

A note about Oliver Twist.

To DUDLEY COSTELLO,[†1] 22 OCTOBER 1838

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

48 Doughty Street | October 22nd. 1838

Dear Sir.

I have to apologise to you most earnestly and sincerely for my apparent neglect of your note, and favor from Blanchard. But the most constant and unremitting labour during the whole month has alone occasioned my delay in writing to you, and I hope that under such circumstances you will forgive me.

Your name I recollected immediately, coupled with two most pleasant productions.[†2] The Every Day Life in Hanover has been in the printer's hands for some time, and has been twice in the draft table of contents, whence it has been unfortunately displaced by more pressing (and very inferior) matter.[†3]

I am going to Wales on Monday for a fortnight, but when I return I shall be most happy to see you whenever it is convenient to you to call — and I hope by that time I may have more definite and satisfactory intelligence to communicate to you of both your papers.

I am Dr. Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dudley Costello Esquire

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, 22 OCTOBER 1838

Text from N, I, 174.

Doughty Street | October 22nd 1838

My Dear Blanchard,

I beg your pardon a hundred times. I have been so incessantly occupied, night and day, that I have not opened a letter this month until today.

What on earth you, or Mr. Costello, can think of me, I can't conceive, but to induce you to think better, I write this, and to induce him to do the same have dispatched a note post-haste.

Always yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. G. R. GLEIG,[†1] 22 OCTOBER 1838*

MS Mr N. C. Peyrouton.

48 Doughty Street. | October 22nd. 1838.

My Dear Sir.

I venture to address you as an old friend; for your writings — I believe — have had no more constant and admiring acquaintance than myself even among their large circle of friends.

Mr. Bentley sent to me your paper for the Miscellany, which I have read with much pleasure and think exceedingly well-adapted to its pages. But I understand from him that he thinks it scarcely worth while it should appear, unless it has the sanction of your name.†2

As my interest in the Magazine is very slight and temporary,†3 and as I should be most unwilling that you should suppose I entertained any but a most earnest desire to have you for a fellow-labourer, I have determined to make this known to you, in perfect confidence, and to ask you whether you really entertain any very strong feeling on the subject, and wish to remain anonymous?

I am going into Wales on Monday next for a fortnight. If you will write me a line at your convenience, I shall be glad to hear from you.

In the hope that it may not be very long before I have the pleasure of knowing you personally,†4

I am
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Reverend —— Gleig &c &c

To WILMINGTON FLEMING, [?24] OCTOBER [1838]*

MS Bodleian Library. Date: clearly same month as To The Literary Fund, 2 Oct 38; but since 22 Oct was a Monday, CD was presumably writing on the 24th.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Octr. 22nd.

Sir.

I beg to inform you in reply to your last note (which constant occupation, almost day and night, has hitherto prevented my answering) that I wrote on the 2nd. of this month a most urgent appeal on your behalf to the Committee of the Literary Fund upon whom I pressed your case as strongly as I could. To this letter I received an immediate reply from Mr. Crofton Croker†1 informing me that the Committee would not meet until the 14th. of next month, but that when they met, your case would be immediately taken into consideration. Directly I hear from them, you shall hear from me.

I have not what you ask me for, to give away, as such matters are the perquisites of some people about me. But I inclose you a trifle to procure it, and wish other claims left me at liberty to send you more. As they do not, I can only hope that the Literary Fund will listen to my appeal in your behalf.[†2]

I am Sir
Your most obedt. Servant.
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Wilmington Fleming

To J. P. HARLEY, [?24 OCTOBER 1838]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Handwriting and spelling "Esquire" in full make it clear that this was the Wednesday before 29 Oct when CD and Browne left for Wales, not the Wednesday before the trip to Yorkshire the previous Jan.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Harley.

I regret beyond measure that I am prevented from dining with you on Sunday. Browne never gets up in the morning without the application of force, and deeming it prudent to have him here in order that we might not miss the coach in the morning, I have invited him to come on Saturday and stop till we go away on Monday. This is the only reason which prevents me, and I assure you it disappoints me greatly.

I shall see you at the Theatre one night this week.

Always Believe me
Faithfully and truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 OCTOBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: endorsed by Forster "1838 | Time I was busy on Cromwell & wh[en] Macready had Cov. Garden"; on pale blue watermarked paper often used in Oct 38. Preface to Forster's Cromwell, Vol. I, is dated Oct 38; Vincent Crummles first appeared in Nickleby that month. Probably CD was writing on the Thursday between completion of Oliver and his trip to Wales and the Midlands.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Afternoon

My Dear Forster

Kate incloses you her humble "tribute" with all good wishes and kindest remembrances.

Miss Foster[†1] goes with us on Saturday, so that we shall be joined by the redoubtable Hullah. I have also asked Browne which will make us six in all. 5, mind, if you dine with us — and do, if you can.

Kate boasts very much to-day, of having "frightened" you last night, and moreover of having told you "a piece of her mind". We must investigate this, when we meet.

How goes Crummle — the great great unconstitutional Crummle I mean?[†2]

Faithfully Always

CD.

John Forster Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [27 OCTOBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD was clearly writing on the last Saturday in Oct, since the correction to "Bolter" did not appear in the early copies of the Miscellany of Nov 38.

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning

Dr. Sir

I don't know who prints the plates. He has made a mistake in the lettering of the Oliver. Instead of "Morris *D*olter" it should be "Morris Bolter".[†3] If it is too late to correct this for the Miscellany, he should be careful to do so for the book.[†4]

The Jew and Morris Bolter begin to understand each other.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUTUMN 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn 1838. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty St. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I will be with you, God willing, very shortly after ten. Be ready for me, and don't look out of that infernal little kennel in your shirt.

Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?AUTUMN 1838]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn 1838. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire.

Wednesday

My Dear Cruikshank

I haven't got it — C & H have.

Always Faithfully
CD.

To MR JOHNSON, [?AUTUMN 1838]*

Text from MS copy by Walter Dexter, source unknown. Date: Handwriting, apparently carefully copied, suggests Autumn 1838.

Doughty Street | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to send us five tons of coals supposing them not to be inordinately and frightfully dear just now. I am obliged to add this for you Coal merchants are such — I won't say what sort of fellows you are.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Johnson

To THOMAS MITTON, [?AUTUMN 1838]*

MS Bodleian Library. Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn 1838.

Southampton Buildings | Friday Morning

Dear Tom

I called on you this morning, but "found you out".

In witness &c
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUTUMN 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests Autumn 1838.

My Dear Forster

Do you and George[†1] come if you can. — I shall not be out to-night.

All I can say regarding the visit of Mr. and Mrs. T,[†2] is, damn the impudence of Mr. T.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

November

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 1 NOVEMBER 1838

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 48 Doughty Street | London.

Lion Hotel. Shrewsbury.[†3] | Thursday November 1st. 1838.

My dearest Love.

I received your welcome letter on arriving here last night, and am rejoiced to hear that the dear children are so much better. I hope that in your next or your next but one I shall learn that they are quite well. A thousand kisses to them — I wish I could convey them myself.

We found a roaring fire, an elegant dinner, a snug room, and capital beds all ready for us at Leamington after a very agreeable (but very cold) ride. We started in a postchaise next morning for Kenilworth with which we were both enraptured, and where I really think we must[†4] have lodgings next summer, please God that we are in good health and all goes well. You cannot conceive how delightful it is. To read among the ruins in fine weather would be perfect luxury. From here we went on to Warwick Castle (which is an ancient building newly restored and possessing no very great attractions beyond a fine view and some beautiful pictures) and thence to Stratford upon Avon where we sat down in the room where Shakespeare was born and left our autographs, and read those of other people, and so forth.

We remained at Stratford all night, and found to our unspeakable dismay that father's plan of proceeding by Bridgenorth was impracticable as there were no coaches. So we were compelled to come here by way of Birmingham and Wolverhampton, starting at eight o'Clock through a cold wet fog, and travelling when the day had cleared up, through miles of cinder-paths and blazing furnaces and roaring steam engines, and such a mass of dirt gloom and misery as I never before witnessed. We got pretty well accomodated here when we arrived at half past four, and are now going off in a post-chaise to Llangollen — 30 miles — where we shall remain to-night, and where the Bangor Mail will take us up tomorrow. Such are our movements up to this point, and when I have received your letter at Chester I shall write to you again and tell you when I shall be back. I can say positively that I shall not exceed the fortnight, and I think it very possible that I may return a day or two before it expires.

We were at the play last night. It was a bespeak[†1] — The Love Chace,[†2] a ballet (with a phenomonon!)[†3] divers songs, and a Roland for an Oliver.[†4] It is a good theatre, but the actors are very funny. Browne laughed with such indecent heartiness at one point of the entertainments that an old gentleman in the next box suffered the most violent indignation. The bespeak party occupied two boxes; the ladies were full dressed and the gentlemen, to a man, in white gloves with flowers [in][†5] their button holes. It amused us mightily, and was real[ly] as like the Miss Snevellicci business as it could well be.[†6]

My side has been very bad since I left home, although I have been very careful not to drink much — remaining to the full as abstemious as usual — and have not eaten any great quantity, having no appetite. I suffered such an ecstacy[†7] of pain all night at Stratford that I was half dead yesterday, and was obliged last night to take a dose of henbane.[†8] The effect was most delicious. I slept soundly and without feeling the least uneasiness, and am a great deal better this morning; neither do I find that the henbane has affected my head, which from the great effect it had upon me — exhilirating[†7] me to the most extraor[din][†9]ary degree, and yet keeping me sleepy — I feared it would. I suppose all this is the penalty for sticking so close to Oliver; whatever the cause is, the effect is a very sad one. If I had not got better I should have turned back to Birmingham, and come straight home by the railroad. As it is, I hope I shall make out the trip.

If you see Forster, my love, tell him that I am [ ][†10] an end of this letter, and hope my next may be a longer and more entertaining one. God bless you my darling — I long to be back with you again, and to see the sweet Babs — Your faithful and most affectionate Husband.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 NOVEMBER 1838]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: PM Llangollen 2 Nov 38.[†1] Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincoln's Inn Fields | London.

Llangollen. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster

I wrote you last night, but by mistake the letter has gone on Heaven knows where in my portmanteau. I have only time to say, go straight to Liverpool by the first Birmingham train[†2] on Monday Morning and at the Adelphi Hotel in that town you will find us.[†3]

I trust to you to see my dear Kate, and bring the latest intelligence of her & the darlings. My best love to them.

In the utmost haste
Always your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 NOVEMBER [1838]

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 48 Doughty Street | London.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool. | Monday Night November 5th.

My Dearest Love.

I write these hasty lines to say that in order to ensure that there shall be no mistakes in Oliver — or at least in order that all I can do to prevent it, shall be done — I have made up my mind to return to town with Forster.[†4] We shall leave here at 3 o'Clock on Thursday Morning, and shall be at the Euston Square Station of the Birmingham Railway — I should think about two on Thursday afternoon but Henry can ascertain exactly what time it will be, if he enquires there. Let him be in waiting that he may get a coach and so forth.

God bless you my darling, and the dears. I am rejoiced to think that I shall see you so soon.

Forster sends his kindest regards. He came down safe.

Always your most affectionate husband

CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [9 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).[†2] Date: CD returned to London on Thurs 8 Nov (see last).

My dear Cruikshank.

I returned suddenly to town yesterday afternoon to look at the latter pages of Oliver Twist before it was delivered to the booksellers, when I saw the majority of the plates in the last volume for the first time.[†3]

With reference to the last one — Rose Maylie and Oliver.[†4] Without entering into the question of great haste or any other cause which may have led to its being what it is — I am quite sure there can be little difference of opinion between us with respect to the result — May I ask you whether you will object to designing this plate afresh and doing so at once in order that as few impressions as possible of the present one may go forth?[†1]

I feel confident you know me too well to feel hurt by this enquiry, and with equal confidence in you I have lost no time in preferring it.

To E. J. STANLEY, 10 NOVEMBER 1838*

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor.

48 Doughty Street. | Saturday Novr. 10th./38.

My Dear Sir.

I do not know whether your more important avocations ever leave you time to devote to such writing as mine, but I venture, nevertheless, to beg your acceptance of the accompanying volumes,[†2] in asmuch[†3] as in forwarding them I am enabled to say how very much and very sincerely I am obliged to you for your kind and ready attention to the note I wrote you last summer, and how strong a sense I entertain of your handsome behaviour towards me on that occasion.[†4]

As I do not remember your private address, and have not a reference book at hand, I send this to the Treasury — partly on that account, and partly under the impression that by this means it will reach you more speedily and conveniently.

Believe me, My Dear Sir,
Your very faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

E. J. Stanley Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?10 NOVEMBER 1838]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: presumably the day after publication of Oliver, as last. Address: Mr. Serjeant Talfourd M.P. | &c &c.

48 Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Talfourd.

As my childish anxiety that you should finish Oliver Twist without delay, has undergone no diminution in the course of my trip, I send you one of the earliest copies I have been able to lay my hands on — only upon the understanding that you let me have it back without loss of time, to bind uniform with your Pickwick.

[†a]With best remembrances to all at home, and anxious hopes that neither you nor they may be disappointed in the close of the fortunes of Oliver and Co.

Believe me, as always,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

To LEIGH HUNT, [?10 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: same day as last.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My dear Hunt (for I will not call you "Sir", as you do me)

I send you herewith one of the earliest copies of Oliver Twist, and I would at the same time complete your set of Nickleby if I remembered what was the last number you had — which, unfortunately, I do not. Resolve me upon this point, and I will enable you to keep pace with me. I cannot bear the notion of your being behind-hand.

You cannot think how glad I was that you did not read your play[†1] when you proposed, for urgent business would have kept me away. I hope you will be in a condition to remember your promise shortly, for I am sincerely desirous to hear it, and am greatly interested in its (the tragedy's I mean) behalf.

I should like to have a note from you when you have skimmed over such part of Oliver as is new to you; — I wish you would tell me in it that you will come and dine with me here, quietly, any day you like to name. Don't you think you can manage it, if we are very temperate?

Believe me always,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [12 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the Monday after 9 Nov, publication-day of Oliver.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Your people were to have sent me six copies of Oliver the day before yesterday, which they have not done. Pray let me have them to-day. And if they are at hand, have the goodness to give them to the Bearer.

Cruikshank is doing the last plate again, or rather a new subject with the same title. Do not therefore let the printers take off more impressions of it than you absolutely require,[†1] as it will be cancelled in a day or two.

If you will alter your advertisements according to what the title page is to be, you will oblige me greatly. The substitution of "Charles Dickens" for "Boz", is the extent of the alteration I wish in them.[†2]

Wilson cries out for Miscellany papers. Can you come to me to-day to settle the Miscellany? I shall be at home all the morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [15 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: presumably the Thursday after last, when CD had suggested a meeting to settle the Dec Miscellany (in which the contributions listed below appeared).

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning.

Dear Sir.

On the other side I forward you a copy of the making-up. I had sent it to Wilson before receiving your note.

I wish to see you about the plates, respecting which I have forgotten to ascertain your intentions. I will call on you at half past two tomorrow, as I shall be passing in the neighbourhood.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

If the hour I have named will not suit you, let me know early in the morning when I shall see you here.

Oliver Twist	16
Walter Childe[†1]	8
Parisian Cafés[†2]	7
Count Gonello[†3]	3
Nights at Sea[†4]	13
Anecdotes of Service[†5]	5
Double-bedded Room[†6]	5
Uncle Sam[†7]	9
The claqueur system[†8]	9
	75

To SIR EDWARD BULWER, 15 NOVEMBER [1838]

MS Lytton Papers.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday November 15th.

My Dear Sir Lytton.[†9]

May I beg your acceptance of a copy of Oliver Twist? — As I troubled you with a note the other day relative to this son of misfortune, I am the more anxious to introduce him to your notice.[†10]

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: On Thurs 15 Nov CD paid £57.2.6. by cheque to Edward Barrow (cheque-counterfoil, MS Mr H. C. Dickens).

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

Dear Forster.

How is the tooth-ache? I have the heart-ache, for I paid fifty seven pounds, two and six pence for Edward Barrow this morning.[†11] And so it always is; — directly I build up a hundred pounds, one of my dear relations comes and knocks it down again.

Let's have a bulletin about the tooth. My pipe is out for this morning, but I hope to be at work to-night. Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?15 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting suggests late 1838; perhaps CD had told Mitton as well as Forster of his payment to Barrow.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Night

Dear Tom.

Don't dream of it. I have plenty to carry on with — abundance. I merely told you of it, as I should have told you anything else of importance, in our usual confidence. Nothing was further from my thoughts than any allusion to the fifty pounds which I beg (and insist upon it indeed) that you retain until you have touched your profits to such a tune as will enable you to return it easily.

I have not begun[†1] yet — not begun! Correspondence has been unusually heavy, and to-day I was upset early and have not yet recovered. I think of coming out for a walk, and if so will call upon you in Southampton Buildgs. (where I understand you are) before ½ past 8 to night.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To JOHN EDMONDS, [?NOVEMBER 1838]

Extract in Alwin J. Scheuer catalogue No. 6 (1931); MS 1 p.; dated Doughty Street, Thursday Morning; addressed to Mr. Edmonds, Silversmith, Strand. Date: Possibly the order was for a ring for H. K. Browne; but CD, perhaps not satisfied, in fact bought him one on 30 Nov 38 from Simmonds — another jeweller with whom he dealt (see cheque-counterfoil, p. 645).

Requesting a selection of a few cameo rings, from which he may choose one ... for the little finger of a gentleman ... as a present to an artist, and asking for a statement of ready money prices.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [16 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: the Friday between 12 Nov, when Cruikshank was working on the new plate (To Bentley, that day), and 21 Nov when CD reminded Bentley about the Rabelais article.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning.

My Dear Sir —

The Rabelais article[†2] accompanies this. Will you oblige me with two or three copies of Oliver with the amended title page, and new plate? My list of presentations among friends and relatives (not book-buyers I am sorry to say) is a long one.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?17 NOVEMBER 1838]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, 2 Feb 1922; MS 1 ½ pp. Date: The Miscellany of Dec 38 was the only one to contain two Oliver illustrations. Bentley had apparently called on CD on 16 Nov.

Sending him a box ticket for a play; referring to the illustrations to Oliver Twist; and concluding:

Bentley called on me yesterday, and said that he meant to put in two Oliver plates this month and one portrait,[†1] so you will not have the trouble of doing another, which I presume — at this late period of the month — you will not be sorry for.[†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, [?19 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD read his farce to Macready on 5 Dec 38 (Diaries, I, 480). He was probably writing the Monday before 24 Nov.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning.

My Dear Macready.

I have not seen you for the past week, because I hoped when we next met, to bring the Lamplighter[†3] in my hand. It would have been finished by this time, but I found myself compelled to set to work first at the Nickleby on which I am at present engaged, and which I regret to say — after my close and arduous application last month — I find I cannot write as quickly as usual. I must[†4] finish it at latest by the 24th. (a doubtful comfort!) and the instant I have done so, I will apply myself to the farce. I am afraid to name any particular day, but I pledge myself that you shall have it this month, — and you may calculate on that promise.

I send you with this, a copy of a farce[†5] I wrote for Harley when he left Drury Lane, and in which he acted for some seventy nights. It is the best thing he does. It is barely possible you might like to try it. Any local or temporary allusions could be easily altered.[†6]

Believe me that I only feel gratified and flattered by your enquiry after the farce, and that if I had as much time as I have inclination, I would write on and on, and on, farce after farce and comedy after comedy, until I wrote you something that would run. You do me justice when you give me credit for good intentions, but the extent of my good-will and strong and warm interest in you personally, and your great undertaking,[†1] you cannot fathom nor I express.

Believe me, My Dear Macready,
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready.

For Heaven's sake don't fancy that I hold "The Strange Gentleman" in any estimation, or have a wish upon the subject.

To JOHN FORSTER, 19 NOVEMBER 1838*

MS Mr A. Malcolm.

Monday Novr. 19th./38

My Dear Forster

My man's an Ass. We dine

at 4
4!
4!!
4!!!
4!!!!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: "Nov. 20, 1838" written in by Forster under CD's "Tuesday Morning".

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

[†a]I have just begun my second chapter[†2] — cannot go out to-night — must get on — think there will be a Nickleby at the end of this month, now, (I doubted it before) and want to make a start towards it, if I possibly can.[†a]

Should I prove very[†3] successful to-day, so that I finish this division before dinner tomorrow, I think I might adventure on an expedition to the Adelphi tomorrow night.[†4] Perhaps the best plan will be for me to write you the very first thing in the morning, so that if we go you can apply for a private box without loss of time (you will have Yates's of course); and in that case we will dine here at 5 and have a glass of wine before we go.

Manchester at Christmas, most assuredly. William Harrison, William Harrison![†1] — "Poor fellow".

I guessed Crossley[†2] at once, by the "shibboleth of authorship", and the repetition of the "no" which is the style of oratory that regaleth the ears of the Borough-reeve.[†3] It is a malicious thing to say, but I should better like to see our dear good friend at a dinner of his fellow townsmen (or by his fellow townsmen) than any mixed sight of pleasure and comicality that I can imagine.

Always Yours, My dear Forster,

CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?21 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: "Mr. Peter Punctilio" appeared in the Dec Miscellany; since not included in the make-up CD sent Bentley on 15 Nov, it was presumably added by Bentley and corrected by CD the following week.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of the cheque, which I found when I returned home to-dinner.[†4] I am sorry I was not at home when you called.

Don't dream of disturbing or postponing your modern Rake's Progress[†5] arrangements, for me. I don't like the notion, and would not touch it on any account. I feel well assured it would never do.

I have just corrected Mr. Peter Punctilio.[†6] As all our readers who have ever seen a dreary face will have known him for many years, I hope they will respect him accordingly.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

Don't forget the Rabelais.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?23 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: presumably two days after last, Bentley having meantime returned Banks's Rabelais paper for revision.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

I find that I cannot be with you to-day, for I have been obliged to appoint any time this morning most suitable to Mr. Bankes, for the purpose of going over his Rabelais paper. Can you call on me in the course of the morning, or early tomorrow?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 NOVEMBER 1838]

Composite text from MS Victoria & Albert Museum and F, II, iv, 124-5. Date: Fri 23 Nov on assumption that CD and Forster went to the Adelphi to see Stirling's Nickleby on the 21st (as proposed in To Forster, 20 Nov), and that the account of the performance in this letter was what CD had failed to send Forster the previous day.

On Friday morning [23 Nov] he explains the sudden failure of something that had been promised for the previous day: I was writing incessantly until it was time to dress; and have not yet got the subject of my last chapter, which must be finished to-night.

He goes on to describe the performance, praising the skilful management and dressing of the boys, the capital manner and speech of Fanny Squeers, the dramatic representation of her card-party in Squeers's parlour and the careful making-up of all the people ... Mrs. Keeley's[†1] first appearance beside the fire[†2] (see wollum[†3]), and all the rest of Smike, was excellent; bating sundry choice sentiments and rubbish regarding the little robins in the fields[†1] which have been put in the boy's mouth by Mr. Stirling[†2] the adapter.

[†a]- - - and the rest you saw[†3] — and Ralph you did not see, there being nothing of him but a wig, a spencer,[†4] and a pair of boots.

The tableaux from Browne's Sketches exceedingly good.

I have a rich account to give you of last night[†5] — quite glorious. Our procrastinating friend[†6] was there, and in great force. He tells me you are probably going down tomorrow with a Mr. — Something or other beginning with an L, I think. Only let me know in time what you mean to do, that I may arrange accordingly.

Don't forget Cruikshank's box for tomorrow night, regarding which he is in an agony of suspence.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

John Forster Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?24 NOVEMBER 1838]†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Perhaps the invitation was for Sun 25 Nov, when Macready also was to see one of Elliotson's experiments (Diaries, I, 478). Signature supports. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire.

Doughty Street | Saturday Afternoon

My Dear Cruikshank

Elliotson[†1] has written to me to go and see some experiments on Okey[†2] at his house at 3 o'Clock tomorrow afternoon. He begs me to invite you. Will you come? Let me know.

Ever Faithfully Yrs.
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

[†a]I have kept your messenger some time, for I trusted the box to Forster and he forgot it. So I had to send to Macready. CD[†a]

To THE HON. J. ERSKINE MURRAY,[†3] 27 NOVEMBER 1838

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

48 Doughty Street London | 27th. November 1838

Dear Sir.

I am greatly obliged to you for your contribution to Mrs. Macrone's book, and shall be most happy to receive one from your brother.[†4]

I shall be much delighted to receive, at any time or season, a contribution from you for the Miscellany.[†1] I should have replied to your letter immediately — were it only to say this — but I have been in Wales and have not long returned.

I may perhaps add that, personally, I have no connexion with the pecuniary arrangements of the Magazine, but that Mr. Bentley will no doubt pay for your contributions according to his established scale, whatever it be. If you will inform me to whom in London you wish the payment to be made, I will take care that your directions are remembered.

I am,
Dear Sir,
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon J Erskine Murray
&c &c

To JAMES WINSTON, 28 NOVEMBER 1838*

MS Mr David Borowitz.

48 Doughty Street. | 28th. November 1838.

Dr. Sir.

May I beg you to inform the Committee that with their permission I wish, at the close of the present year, to withdraw my name from the list of Members of the Garrick Club?[†2]

Dr. Sir
Yours very truly
CHARLES DICKENS

— Winston Esquire
&c &c

To THOMAS HILL, 29 NOVEMBER [1838]

Facsimile Dickens House. Date: 29 Nov was Thursday in 1838.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Novr. 29th.

My Dear Sir.

Have you any better occupation for next Saturday evening than to dine with me on that day at half past five punctually? It will give Mrs. Dickens and myself much pleasure to see you. I have not set eyes on you this age.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esquire

To FREDERICK YATES, [?29 NOVEMBER 1838]†

MS Private. Date: presumably not long after CD's visit to the Adelphi of 21 Nov; written perhaps on the 29th, since To Forster, 4 Dec, shows that he had a private box that Tuesday night.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I am very glad indeed that Nickleby[†1] is doing so well. You are right about the popularity of the work, for its sale has left even that of Pickwick far behind.

My general objection to the adaptation of any unfinished work of mine simply is, that being badly done and worse acted it tends to vulgarize the characters, to destroy or weaken in the minds of those who see them the impressions I have endeavoured to create, and consequently to lessen the after-interest in their progress.[†2] No such objection can exist for a moment where the thing is so admirably done in every respect as you have done it in this instance. I felt it an act of common justice after seeing the piece, to withdraw all objection to its publication, and to say thus much to the parties interested in it, without reserve.[†3]

[†a]Would you think me very unreasonable if I asked you not to compare Nicholas with Tom and Jerry?[†a†4]

If you can spare us a private box for next Tuesday, I shall be much obliged to you. If it be on the stage so much the better, as I shall really be glad of an opportunity to tell Mrs Keeley and O Smith[†5] how very highly

I appreciate their Smike and Newman Noggs. I put you out of the question altogether, for that glorious Mantalini is beyond all praise.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Yates Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: between CD's acceptance of Mrs Metze's tale, 4 Mar 38, and its publication in Feb 39; handwriting suggests Nov 38.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Mrs. Metz[†1] — a lady who was introduced to me by Mr. Banks and who has written a pretty little tale which I accepted some time ago for the Miscellany, but have not yet been able to find room for[†2] — is desirous of obtaining an introduction to you, for the purpose of submitting to you some volumes for publication. I have much pleasure in introducing her, and shall feel greatly obliged if you can afford her an early interview.

Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To SAMUEL LOVER, [?NOVEMBER 1838]

Extract in Antiquarian Booksellers Association, Middle Atlantic States, 7th catalogue. Date: Three instalments of "Handy Andy" had appeared in the Miscellany by Apr 37; four more appeared Jan to May 39. Probably CD was writing not later than the end of Nov.

Asking for a new "Handy Andy" story for the Miscellany: I have a special respect for Handy Andy, and want to see more of him. I hope he will have some complicated adventures — a story.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [?NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Date: Handwriting sugests Nov-Dec 38.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Jerdan

When you come here tomorrow, will you put that caricature of Thackeray's relative to Forster and Bulwer, in your pocket?[†3]

I wish to have an opportunity of glancing at it for an instant — alone of course — and you promised me you would shew it to me.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Jerdan Esquire

To J. P. HARLEY, [?NOVEMBER 1838]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: Handwriting suggests Nov-Dec 38.

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning.

My Dear Harley.

George Cruikshank and his wife, and Burnett and his'n, dine with us on Wednesday. Will you please me by joining us? I don't know what they put up at the Theatre for that night, but as we shall dine at 5 o'Clock sharp, you will be in time for the afterpiece if we should be so unfortunate as to be obliged to let you go.

Always believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqr.

December

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Macready noted in his diary, under 5 Dec 38: "Dickens brought me his farce, which he read to me" (Diaries, I, 480). Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster

Just as I was about to write a note to you and say that nobody was going with us,[†1] Cruikshank came in to say that they were. Haven't you an order for two? If so, perhaps you will take my father, and join us in our box. Kate and I go in Cruikshank's Fly. Let me know how we arrange.

The farce[†2] I hope will be finished before dinner. It is copied up to the point I have reached, and certainly doesnt[†3] get more dull as it gets on. Macready will have it tomorrow evening.[†4] I want to know whether I shall read it to him after the Lady of Lyons[†5] or on Thursday Morning — if you go out to-day, perhaps you will ask him for me.

The stoical and aristocratical Fred came here at 11 o'Clock last night, breathless with the remains of the William Tell[†1] enthusiasm. It must have been great.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CAMILLA TOULMIN,[†2] [?DECEMBER 1838]

Extract in Chas. J. Sawyer catalogue No. 103 (1931); MS 1 p.; from Doughty Street. Date: "London by Moonlight" in fact did not appear until Sep 39. CD was probably writing in early Dec, before the Jan Miscellany was made up.

London by Moonlight has been in the printer's hands for many months ... If it be not in the January number, Mr. Dickens will take care that it appears in the February.[†3]

To MASTER W. H. HUGHES,[†4] 12 DECEMBER 1838

MS Colby College, Waterville, Maine. Address: William Hastings Hughes Esquire | Donnington Priory. | Favored by the Reverend R. H. Barham.

Doughty Street. London. | December the twelfth | 1838.

Respected Sir.

I have given Squeers one cut on the neck and two on the head, at which he appeared much surprised and began to cry, which being a cowardly thing is just what I should have expected from him — wouldn't you?

I have carefully done what you told me in your letter,[†5] about the lamb and the two sheeps for the little boys. They have also had some good ale and porter, and some wine. I am sorry you didn't say what wine you would like them to have. I gave them some sherry which they liked very much, except one boy who was a little sick and choaked a good deal. He was rather greedy, and that's the truth, and I believe it went the wrong way, which I say served him right, and I hope you will say so, too.

Nicholas had his roast lamb as you said he was to, but he could not eat it all, and says if you do not mind his doing so, he should like to have the rest hashed tomorrow, with some greens which he is very fond of and so am I. I said I was sure you would give him leave. He said he did not like to have his porter hot, for he thought it spoilt the flavour, so I let him have it cold. You should have seen him drink it. I thought he never would have left off. I also gave him three pounds of money — all in six pences to make it seem more — and he said directly that he should give more than half of it to his mama and sister and divide the rest with poor Smike. And I say he is a good fellow for saying so, and if anybody says he isn't, I am ready to fight him whenever they like. — There.

Fanny Squeers shall be attended to, depend upon it. Your drawing of her is very like, except that I don't think the hair is quite curly enough. The nose is particularly like hers, and so are the legs. She is a nasty disagreeable thing and I know it will make her very cross when she sees it, and what I say is that I hope it may. You will say the same, I know — at least I think you will.

I meant to have written you a longer letter but I cannot write very fast when I like the person I am writing to, because that makes me think about them, and I like you and so I tell you. Besides it is just eight o'clock at night, and I always go to bed at eight o'Clock except when it is my birthday, and then I sit up to supper. So I will not say anything more besides this — and that is my love to you and Neptune, and if you will drink my health every Christmas Day, I will drink yours — Come.

I am

Respected Sir
Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I don't write my name very plain, but you know what it is, you know, so never mind.

To R. H. BARHAM, [12 DECEMBER 1838]

Text from N, I, 171. Date: clearly enclosing last.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Sir,

Accept a thousand thanks for the Epistle which found me cogitating the next number of Nicholas, and instantly took me away from it to write an answer, which I inclose. I send it open for your edification, but when you have read it pray seal it with a very large seal, in order that it may bear an appearance of becoming form and gravity. The communication to which it is a reply, has amused me highly.†1

When do you mean to send me those "fugitive pieces" concerning the rebellion in the [Garrick]?†2 I am in the last stage of hope deferred.

My Dear Sir
Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

My best remembrances to your son,†3 and congratulations on his honors.†4

To W. C. MACREADY, 13 DECEMBER 1838

MS Morgan Library.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday December 13th. 1838

My Dear Macready.

I can have but one opinion on the subject — withdraw the farce†5 at once, by all means.

I perfectly concur in all you say, and thank you most heartily and cordially for your kind and manly conduct which is only what I should have expected from you, though under such circumstances I sincerely believe there are few but you — if any — who would have adopted it.

Believe me that I have no other feeling of disappointment connected with this matter, but that arising from the not having been able to be of some use to you. And trust me that if the opportunity should ever arise, my ardour will only be increased — not damped — by the result of this experiment.

Believe me always

My Dear Macready,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To MESSRS WILEY & PUTNAM, 13 DECEMBER [1838]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: undoubtedly misdated by CD. There is no mourning border; and the signature, flourish and individual letters in the text point clearly to Dec 38.

Doughty Street. | Decr. 13th. 1837.

Dr. Sirs.

I shall be exceedingly happy to make an exchange[†1] with the Editor of the Knickerbocker[†2] which I read with very great pleasure. An exchange of proofs is, I am sorry to say, impossible, for we never get our matter together until the very last moment, and my connection with the arrangements of the Magazine is too slight to enable me to effect a reform in this particular.

[ ][†3] in a complete form before, and often not 'till long afterwards.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Wiley and Putnam.

To HENRY JACKSON,[†4] 13 DECEMBER 1838

Text from N, I, 182.

Doughty Street | Thursday Decr. 13th. 1838

Dear Sir,

Of course you cannot know until I tell you that I have at this moment at least thirty papers — many of them by authors pretty favourably known — which have been lying in my cabinet, not for six months merely, but for twelve, and which I have been wholly prevented from inserting by the pressure of other matter and the numerous engagements entered into by the publisher before the first number of the Magazine appeared.

These delays are not more annoying to anyone than to me. I assure you that when my present engagement expires, I would not connect myself with a periodical where I could be held responsible for this part of its arrangements, on any consideration whatever.

Your paper is in type as you will see, and when the printer returns it to you (in compliance with your request) he will forward a printed slip also. You will see from this, that it has neither escaped my memory nor been held by me to be inadmissible.

I may add that I retained it, in the hope that its brevity would have assured it a place before now; and because I was pleased with the modest and gentlemanly note which accompanied it.

I am Sir,
Your most obedient servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE HON. J. ERSKINE MURRAY, [14 DECEMBER 1838]

MS (envelope only) Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: The Honorable | James Erskine Murray | &c &c | Aberdona | Near | Alloa | N.B. Date: PM 14 Dec 38.[†1]

To JOHN HULLAH, [17] DECEMBER 1838*

Text from The Life of John Hullah LL.D. By his Wife [Frances Hullah], 1886, p. 23. Date: probably the Monday before Hullah's wedding-day, 20 Dec.

Doughty Street | December 1838 | Monday evening, 11 o'clock

My dear Hullah

I am very sorry indeed that an engagement of pure business prevented my being in the way to see you to-night and shake hands with you as a bachelor for the last time. Believe me that my warmest and heartiest wishes are with you and your amiable wife,[†2] and that among many sincere wishers for your welfare whom you will both — happily — be enabled to number, neither of you will count one more true or stedfast[†3] than myself. I say God bless you with the gravity of an old man and the warmth of a young one, and am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [MID-DECEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: late 1838 on handwriting; progress of Nickleby suggests the middle of the month. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Tuesday

My Dear Forster

Winter[†1] I will see

Rutt[†2] I will wisit
Vincent[†3] I have.
[†a]I got to the 16th. slip last night, and shall try hard to get [to] the 30th. before I go to bed.[†a]

In great haste
Ever Faithfully CD

To H. K. BROWNE, [DECEMBER 1838]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Postscript clearly refers to the Courier of 20 Dec 38.

CD went to a rehearsal of the Covent Garden pantomime on Mon 24 Dec (see Diary, p. 637).

Doughty Street. | Thursday Evening

My Dear Forster.

I am very glad to see the note, which does Jack Sheppard[†4] credit — great credit I think, and gives me much pleasure.[†5]

I dreamt odd dreams all night, but they were not funny by any means, and I suffered desperately from my side. Nevertheless I have been at work all day and hope to finish this chapter by bed-time. Tomorrow I shall have a stiff job.

On Saturday morning I shall expect to see you. I have written to Browne anent the Pantomime[†1] on Monday, and the something desperate afterwards.

All well.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Qy. connection — as the Printers say — Wasn't it the burlesque that made you dream such absurdities?

[†a]I wish you'd let me know what Sir Francis Burdett[†2] has been saying about Oliver Twist at some Birmingham Meeting. Blanchard has just sent me the Courier containing some reference to his speech,[†3] but the speech I haven't seen.[†a]

To CHARLES HICKS, [?21 DECEMBER 1838]

Facsimile Sotheby's catalogue, 30 Nov 1931. Date: Handwriting points to late 1838; presumably same morning as next.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning 1 a.m.

Dear Mr. Hicks

If you can let me know in the course of the day, exactly how many more pages you want, it will greatly facilitate our progress. According to my calculation, five more will do it.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

I mean, of course, counting from the end of the copy which I now inclose.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Forster, in reply to CD's letter of 20 Dec, must have at once sent him a fuller newspaper report of Burdett's speech.

Friday Morning.

My Dear Forster

I only wished to understand what the allusion was. I see it clearly now, of course. Now what do you think of Bacon's[†1] honesty?

Five printed pages — or rather less I hope — to write. And I am getting on swimmingly.

I send you the Courier. I think the "Sure never was such a green old Age"[†2] exceedingly happy.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS MITTON, [?21 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Presumably the "inclosed matter" was the surrender of the lease of Furnival's Inn, which expired on 25 Dec 38. Handwriting supports.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

Dear Tom.

Will you see that the inclosed matter is all right at Furnivals and elsewhere, and tell me what I have to do? Or do it for me?

Perhaps I shall see you here some time to-day. I shall finish this Evening, please God.[†1]

To EDWARD CHATFIELD,[†2] [23 DECEMBER 1838]

Mention in next.

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, [23 DECEMBER 1838]

Text from Memoir by Blanchard Jerrold in The Poetical Works of Laman Blanchard, 1876, p. 37. Date: The references both to Christmas and to the paper sent by Blanchard (clearly the Courier of 20 Dec) make 23 Dec certain.

48 Doughty Street | Sunday morning

My dear Blanchard,

I have booked you — one inside — for the fly to Ainsworth's,[†3] wherein all available places are now secured. As we have one Mr. Lover, of Charles Street, Middlesex Hospital, in the way-bill, and the gen'lm'n is to be took up at his own door, I must trouble you to have your luggage ready at the "Courier Office" at a quarter-past five.

I am writing to you with a sad heart, for I have just indited a few lines to poor Chatfield, to whom I should have written long since but for Forster's confounded assurance that it would be better not. I do not like to break in upon him without notice, but I have told him you gave me reason to hope he would not be displeased to see me, and that if the changes of sickness leave him in the same mood I will see him on Christmas morning (alas, poor fellow! a merry time to us), at two o'clock.

I was very much obliged indeed to you for the paper. I was not aware of the quotation, and was greatly amused with the "leader." It seemed to me exceedingly happy, terse, pointed, smart, and quite an off [hand] leader in short.[†1]

I have been amused beyond all telling with your son's[†2] play, in which the rival kings talk a great deal more common sense than any stage kings I have ever known.[†3] I suppose its excessive length is an insuperable objection to its representation at Covent Garden — even if the character of Stephen were not an insuperable objection with "Macweady," who could never stand Anderson[†4] in such a part as that.

My dear Blanchard,
Always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?24 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests late 1838; Mrs Macready gave birth to a son (Henry Frederick Bulwer) on 21 Dec; perhaps CD was writing on the 24th, expecting to hear news of her at the rehearsal of the Covent Garden pantomime that evening (see Diary, p. 637). Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I yield to the sore temptation, hereby recording a Vow not to stir out of doors tomorrow.

Not quite so well this morning, which I hope[†5] arises as much from Physic (not Mr. Austin's) as anything else. I don't know about Mrs. Macready,[†6] but perhaps shall know better to-night.

Ever Yours. CD.

To [?MISS] H. DOWNING,[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1838

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

48 Doughty Street | 27th. December 1838

Dear Sir.

Pray do not heap upon me any more "little responsibilities" until I have thrown off those which now press heavily upon my conscience.

I hope and trust you will see the unfortunate Hen[†2] in the February Number. These delays are not mine, nor can I help them, although they press quite as severely upon me — in their consequences at least — as upon anybody else.

I return you — for the present — your last paper, and am

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. Downing Esquire

To MR HARDY,[†3] 27 DECEMBER 1838*

MS Herr W. T. Elson.

48 Doughty Street | December 27th. 1838.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hardy, and regrets that he does not think the accompanying Sketch of character sufficient to form a paper in itself. If Mr. Hardy can weave it into any little tale, or mingle it in any way with some other characters, Mr. Dickens ventures to think its oddity and humour would be much more apparent to general readers.

Mr. Dickens remembers Mr. Hardy's chapter on some old authors,[†4] with great pleasure. He is not aware whether Mr. Hardy knows that all payments for contributions to the Miscellany are made at the Publisher's immediately after the appearance of the current Number.

To JAMES HINE,[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1838*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

48 Doughty Street. | Decr. 27th. 1838.

My Dear Sir.

I am afraid the inclosed is too exclusively musical to suit the Miscellany, although I am not the less obliged to you for your kindness in offering it. If it were mine, I should send it to "the Musical World" whose readers I should think would relish it exceedingly.[†2]

My Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Hine Esquire

To T. BARRY,[†3] 27 DECEMBER 1838

MS Professor Clyde S. Kilby. Address: T. Barry Esquire, Jun'r. | 4 Thanet Place | Temple Bar.

48 Doughty Street | December 27th. 1838.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Barry, and begs to return him one of the papers he obliged him by forwarding; the other, Mr. Dickens retains for insertion with much pleasure.[†4]

It is difficult to answer Mr. Barry's question without seeing one or two of the Sketches to which he refers; but there is certainly nothing in the subjects he speaks of which would disqualify them for the Miscellany.

To MRS METZE, [28 DECEMBER 1838]

Mention in next.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 28 DECEMBER 1838

Text from N, I, 184.

Doughty Street | December 28th, 1838

My Dear Talfourd,

I cannot thank you too much, I cannot thank you enough for your beautiful and most gratifying remembrance of me, which as long as I live will afford me the truest pleasure and delight, and will be the pride of those dearest to me, many long years after I have been removed from those pursuits which such praise as yours and such friends as you, render a delight indeed.[†1]

I find that I shall not be able to ride on Saturday, but at dinner-time I joyfully hold myself engaged to you.

A card of invitation to a little party on the 7th. when we christen one of our children and keep the birthday of the other, has gone to Russell Square for you. I hope as you were with us last year, you will stretch a point to give us the same gratification on the coming anniversary.

Will you frank the accompanying letter for me, and let it go to the Post with yours? The direction is on the back of the envelope; the name (which I have not written very plainly) M.e.t.z.e.

Believe me always
My Dear Talfourd
Most faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, 28 DECEMBER 1838

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Presumably this invitation was sent out on same day as last.

48 Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Blanchard.

I inclose to Mrs. Blanchard an Invitation from my worser half to a gentle "flare" with which we are going to celebrate that stirring event, — a christening. We are very homely and unceremonious people, and Mrs. Dickens labours under some apprehension that there should have been previous callings and interchanges of formality. I have undertaken, however, to dispense with any such preliminaries, trusting that as we (i.e. you and I) understand each other moderately well, Mrs. B and Mrs. D may arrive at a similar interchange of friendliness without first playing at company.

I went to see poor Chatfield, and am going again to-day. Forster is going with me. He seemed better; was in good spirits, and talked like a man who meant to come back to the World again. I told him he looked much better than I had expected, but I looked at him a long time and narrowly too, before I could detect the faintest trace of his former self.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THEODORE MARTIN,[†1] 28 DECEMBER 1838

MS National Library of Scotland.

48 Doughty Street. | December 28th. 1838.

My Dear Sir.

The Modern Salathiel[†2] has been at the Printer's for some weeks, and I hope it will find its way from his hands to the Miscellany before long.

The fete at Weissnichtwo[†3] is not, I think, quite the thing for us, but why don't you turn it into a two-act comedy? It would make an excellent little piece for the stage and looks so like one even now, that when I read it I could scarcely help thinking you had originally written it in that form. If you will let me know when you have an opportunity whether you would like it returned to Edinburgh, I can send it to you through a Bookseller's parcel at the end of the Month. — I have this moment turned to your note, and find that you mention the very thing that struck me. I am happy to find that our opinions coincide. My objection to the paper is precisely your own.

The Dying Student[†4] is also at the Printer's. I will look him up, and entomb him in the February Number.

I don't at all know what Bentley's rate of payment is, but I know that the payments are always made, immediately after the appearance of the current Number. I should imagine that the easiest course would be, for him to remit to you under cover to his agent in Edinburgh.[†5] I will speak to him upon the subject, and let you know the result when I return your paper.[†6]

I am delighted to hear that Oliver is so well received in Edinburgh, and that Jeffrey[†7] awards high praise[†8] to the New Volume.[†9] It has done wonders here in the way of sale,[†1] — and as to Nickleby, I don't know where he is going to stop.

My Dear Sir, I am,
Very truly yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Theodore Martin Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [28 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting suggests late 1838; perhaps Fri 28 Dec, the only day on which CD recorded in his Diary an engagement to dine with Elliotson (see p. 637). Address: Wait | George Cruikshank Esquire | Myddleton Square | Pentonville.

Doughty Street | Friday Noon

My Dear Cruikshank

Do you dine at Dr. Elliotson's to day? — And if you do, will you call for me as you go along? A word (verbally) by bearer will suffice.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?28 DECEMBER 1838]

Composite text from Autograph Prices Current, I, 49 and N, I, 199. Date: This may refer to the dinner at Ainsworth's noted in CD's Diary for Sat 29 Dec 38: cannot be confirmed from handwriting, since MS untraced.

Doughty Street | Friday noon

My Dear Ainsworth,

Cruikshank has been here to say how that he thought your dinner was last Saturday, how that he now finds it is next Saturday, and how he means to come with me and surprise you. As the surprise, however agreeable, might be too much for Mrs. Touchet, I have thought it best to send you this warning. Mind, you must assume the virtue though you have it not,[†2] and feign extravagant astonishment at sight of the Illustrious George.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. P. HARLEY, [?29 DECEMBER 1838]

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. Date: probably sent the day after the invitations to Talfourd and Blanchard for 7 Jan.

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning.

My Dear Harley.

I am afraid from not having seen you since the Lamplighter was suffocated, that you may suppose I have some feeling of annoyance on the subject.[†1] If you have any notion of the kind, rest assured that I am quite satisfied with the opinions of those who must know so much better than myself what would tell upon the stage — and that if a good subject occurred to me, I would write another farce tomorrow. All my regret is, that we don't pull together again quite so soon as I had hoped.

My wife begs me to say that we intend to have a few friends on Monday Evening January the 7th.[†2] to celebrate our boy's birthday and our girl's Christening,[†3] and that she hopes you will give us the light of your countenance. She also begs me to say that you must not suppose it to be a large party from the length of the Invitation, but that the notice is long because the season is hazardous and so many friends engaged with so many other friends.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To MRS S. C. HALL,[†4] 29 DECEMBER 1838

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Doughty Street | December 29th. 1838.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note, and the interesting anecdote which you tell so well. I have laid it by in the MS of the first number of Nickleby, and shall keep it there in confirmation of the truth of my little picture.

Depend upon it that the rascalities of those Yorkshire schoolmasters cannot easily be exaggerated, and that I have kept down the strong truth and thrown as much comicality over it as I could, rather than disgust and weary the reader with its fouler aspects. The identical scoundrel you speak of, I saw — curiously enough. His name is Shaw;[†5] the action was tried (I believe) eight or ten years since,[†1] and if I am not much mistaken another action was brought against him by the parents of a miserable child, a cancer in whose head he opened with an inky penknife, and so caused his death.[†2] The country for miles round was covered, when I was there, with deep snow. There is an old Church near the school, and the first grave-stone I stumbled on that dreary winter afternoon was placed above the grave of a boy, eighteen long years old, who had died — suddenly, the inscription said;[†3] I suppose his heart broke — the Camel falls down "suddenly" when they heap the last load upon his back — died at that wretched place. I think his ghost put Smike into my head, upon the spot.

— I - 482 —

I went down in an assumed name,[†4] taking a plausible letter to an old Yorkshire attorney[†5] from another attorney in town,[†6] telling him how a friend had been left a widow, and wanted to place her boys at a Yorkshire school in hopes of thawing the frozen compassion of her relations. The man of business gave an introduction to one or two schools, but at night he came down to the Inn where I was stopping, and after much hesitation and confusion — he was a large-headed flat-nosed red-faced old fellow — said with a degree of feeling one would not have given him credit for, that the matter had been upon his mind all day — that they were sad places for mothers to send their orphan boys too[†1] — that he hoped I would not give up him as my adviser — but that she had better do anything with them — let them hold horses, run errands — fling them in any way upon the mercy of the World — rather than trust them there. This was an attorney, a well-fed man of business, and a rough Yorkshireman!

— I - 483 —

Mrs. Dickens and myself will be delighted to see the friend you speak of — we unite in regards to yourself and Mr. Hall[†2] — and I throw myself single-handed upon your good nature, and beseech you to forgive me this long story — which you ought to do, as you have been the means of drawing it from me. Believe me, Dear Mrs. Hall

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [E.M.] FITZGERALD,[†3] 29 DECEMBER 1838

Text from Edwin Hodder, The Life and Work of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., 1887, I, 227.

48, Doughty Street, | December 29th., 1838.

Dear Sir,

I went, some weeks ago, to Manchester, and saw the worst cotton mill.[†4] And then I saw the best. Ex uno disce omnes.[†5] There was no great difference between them.

I was obliged to come back suddenly, upon some matters connected with the publication of "Oliver Twist", and saw no more. But on the 11th. of next month I am going down again, only for three days,[†6] and then into the enemy's camp, and the very head-quarters of the factory system advocates. I fear I shall have little opportunity of looking about me, but I should be most happy to avail myself of any introduction from Lord Ashley[†1] which, in the course of an hour or so, would enable me to make any fresh observations.[†2]

With that nobleman's most benevolent and excellent exertions, and with the evidence which he was the means of bringing forward, I am well acquainted.[†3] So far as seeing goes, I have seen enough for my purpose, and what I have seen has disgusted and astonished me beyond all measure. I mean to strike the heaviest blow in my power for these unfortunate creatures, but whether I shall do so in the "Nickleby", or wait some other opportunity, I have not yet determined.[†4]

Will you make known to Lord Ashley (confidentially) my intentions on this subject, and my earnest desire to avail myself, either now or at some future time, or both, of his kind assistance?[†5] Pray thank him warmly, from me, for tending it, and believe me,

Very truly yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN DICKENS, [?DECEMBER 1838]*

MS Miss Elizabeth Joyce.[†6] Date: Handwriting points to late 1838. Address: John Dickens Esquire | 30 King Street.

Doughty Street | Wed[ne]sday[†7] Morning

Dear Father

Can you dine with us to-day at 5, and go to the Adelphi afterwards?

Affy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Dickens Esquire

To JOHN DICKENS, [1838]

Extract in Noel Conway & Co catalogue, 1893; MS ½ p., fragment of 3-page letter. Date: given in catalogue as 1838; after 6 Mar, since CD refers to his "children".

I will tell you further particulars of this enquiry when I have received your answer. I have scarcely a moment to spare and can only add best love from Kate and the children, to you, Mother, and Augustus,[†1] — and hope that mother reached home in safety.

Affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]
John Dickens, Esq.

To CHARLES MACKAY,[†2] [1838]

Extract in Charles De F. Burns catalogue, Jan 1880; MS 2 pp. Date: given in catalogue as 1838.

Remembering Charles Lamb's most happy glances at the same subject, I think you have treated it too seriously, and am sure you could do it much better in another vein.[†3]

To J. P. HARLEY, [?1838]

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 101; dated Wednesday evening. Date: perhaps 1838 when CD and Harley were meeting frequently.

Can you take a family dinner with me next Saturday at four. Forster dines with us, and a man named Thackeray, whom perhaps you know;[†4] no one else.

To W. H. HARRISON, [1838]

Extract in W. E. Benjamin catalogue, Dec 1896; MS 2 pp. [1838].

I have so much correspondence that I always forget somebody, and generally the most important among the complete letter-writers to whom I owe a line.

To W. B. ARCHER,[†5] [?1837-8]*

Extracts in Thomas F. Madigan catalogue, Nov 1928; MS 4 pp.; from 48 Doughty Street. Date: presumably during CD's editorship of the Miscellany.

I venture to return it to you with a few suggestions which perhaps you will not object to comply with. If so, I shall be happy to receive it again at your convenience.

I would condense — greatly condense — the opening scene with the priest, so that the reader might come to the story. I would materially shorten the commencement of the story itself, and I would describe a little more forcibly the Hero's boldness when he sees the shade and rushes after it, and his fear when he finds it gone — it is a very natural idea, and would bear a few lines more ...

I have thrown out these crude remarks very hastily, and trust you will not consider them hypercritical or impertinent.

I reserve my final suggestion for a fresh paragraph, because it is a sweeping one. I beg you to understand that I leave it entirely to yourself, and if you prefer the paper in its present shape, do not make the alteration an indispensable condition of its appearance in the Magazine. But to my mind you would make the tale a much better one if you wholly omitted the visit of the Priest and yourself to the castle, and finished it at the "I believe", adding a few words to the effect that our spirits commonly hold intercourse with those of the beloved dead in waking thoughts and dreams in which we see them (knowing them to be no longer in this world) without fear or pain, and that if there be any case in which strong and blameless sympathy could be supposed to bring the dead and living together, it would be such a case as you describe.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?WINTER 1838-9]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: watermark 1838; handwriting suggests late in the year — presumably after CD had met Beaver in Manchester (see fn). Address: John Forster Esquire | Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning.

My Dear Forster

Beaver[†2] is going away tomorrow morning, and will be at home at 2 o'Clock to-day. Will you call there with me? And if so, will you be here in a cab at a quarter before?

Faithfully CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?WINTER 1838-9]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank.

I quite forgot on Sunday that I had an old engagement for to-night, which a note came last night to remind me of. As I cannot decently get off, I fear we must postpone our Adelphi visit until next week; there is the one consolation in this, that by so doing we shall see better pieces.

If you will think between this and Saturday what day will best suit you and Mrs. C, we will make another engagement then.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To FRANK STONE,[†1] [?WINTER 1838-9]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: the first known letter to Stone; Winter 1838-9 on handwriting.

48 Doughty Street. | Tuesday

My Dear Sir.

Nobody can tell me your number, so I forward the inclosed per-post, trusting that the Postman will find you out.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?WINTER 1838-9]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Tuesday Night

My Dear Forster

I don't think I can be bothered with old Rutt just now, so I'll take the chance of seeing him some other day.

If nothing takes you out tomorrow between 12 and 2, I will be with you between those hours. If they don't suit you, say when.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?WINTER 1838-9]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting. Address: Wait | John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

My cold is so bad, and my eyes so much worse, that I am compelled to disappoint Procter to-day; for I am sure that if I go to the Shakspeare on Saturday, I must stay at home until that time. I am so heavy and unwell that I know going out would render me unfit for work for days to come.

Send me back word what his address is. I would rather forward my excuse to his house than to his Chambers, and have forgotten the whereabout of the former. Don't ask me to go, for it is of no use. I must be quiet with my own leave, or I shall be made quiet without it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?WINTER 1838-9]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster

Between you and me, I anticipated as much, — and devoutly thank the cold and my own resolution. I did not write much last night but I wrote something, and am much better today as is Missis also.

I promised to call on Bentley at two, and will come straight to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

1839

January

To EDWARD CHATFIELD, [?3 JANUARY 1839]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?3 JANUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting; the reference to visiting "poor Chatfield", who died in Jan 39, supports. Perhaps the news which had so disturbed CD was the suggestion of suicide in the report of Letitia Landon's[†1] death published on Thurs/3 Jan. Address: John Forster Esquire.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

I think the number of poor Chatfield's is 66,[†2] and I have put it on the letter. I have also written a line to say how sure I am that he will be pleased with Quin's[†1] intelligence and kindness; and have inclosed it in your envelope.

I fear I shall not be able to go with you to Chatfields,[†2] and consequently think that you had better not come out of your way to call for me. After you have been, you will come straight here, of course? Ninety nine chances and three quarters out of a hundred that I shall be at home, but if not I shall be close upon your heels.

[†a]I have not yet seen the paper, and you throw me into a fever. The comfort is, that all the "strange and terrible" things come uppermost,[†3] and that the good and pleasant things are mixed up with every moment of our existence so plentifully that we scarcely heed them.[†a]

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR F. H. F. QUIN, [3 JANUARY 1839]

Text from N, I, 195. Date: Clearly this was the "more formal note" enclosed in next.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Quin,

As you were kind enough to be the bearer of Lady Morgan's[†4] Invitation to me, may I beg you to complete the good work by presenting my compliments to her Ladyship (with whose address I am unacquainted) and assuring her that it would have given me the greatest pleasure to wait upon her, but for an old engagement which I cannot postpone, and which takes me to-night half-way to Harrow.

This note, (or another very like it) should have reached you yesterday morning, but my man being more than commonly ingenious carried it in his pocket all day, and returned it to me with modest confusion at breakfast time this morning. Believe me always

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR F. H. F. QUIN, [3 JANUARY 1839]

Text from N, I, 195. Date: the Thursday before Mamie's christening (see Diary, p. 638).

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Quin,

Inclosed is a more formal note nor this here, addressed likewise to yourself, which will be your warrant and voucher to Erin's daughter for not producing me to-night.

I dine, in fact, at Ainsworth's, or I should have been glad to go with you for a joke's sake. The hereditary bondswoman[†1] was at a party at Braham's on Tuesday, but she had left, I think, before I got there. Otherwise I should have answered for myself.

We christen a "babby" here next Monday,[†2] and hold sundry festivities in the evening, whereof quadrilles and supper do form a part. I need not say how much pleasure it will give us to see you, if the light of your countenance be not already bespoken by some more majestic bushel.[†3]

Believe me
Heartily yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 3 JANUARY 1839*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Messrs. Chapman & Hall | 186 Strand.

48 Doughty Street | Thursday January 3rd. 1839

Dear Sirs

Will you have the goodness to send in the course of the Day by the Parcels Delivery Company, a set of Nickleby (complete as far as it has gone) directed to Leigh Hunt Esquire 4 Upper Cheyne Row, Chelsea?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 JANUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting; clearly Forster wanted the name Shakabac for his notice of the pantomime Bluebeard in the Examiner of 6 Jan 39. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster.

If I had a copy of the Arabian Nights, I could shew you where it is in a second. But I haven't, and for the life of me I can't at a pinch remember the fellow's name, though I think it was Shacabac.[†1] At all events I know it was one of the barber's brothers, and if you describe him as "the barber's brother" I'll engage that you are right.

[†a]I have begun. I wrote four slips last night,[†a †2] and but for Pickering[†3] the snobbish, should get on like a house on fire this forenoon. As it is, I can do little or nothing 'till evening, as he comes to proceed with his practical joke against me this morning. However, [†b]the beginning is made, and — which is more — I can go on, so I hope the book is in training at last.[†b]

I shall not be out to-day I reckon. [†c]This snow will take away the cold weather, and then for Twickenham.[†c]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charley bolted into the spare room this morning and was much disappointed to find that you had not taken up your quarters there, permanently.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, [9 JANUARY 1839]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD, Forster and Ainsworth left for Manchester on Sat 12 Jan.

Doughty Street | Wednesday

My Dear Sir

In fulfilment of a rash promise and Vow, I am going with Mr. Ainsworth to Manchester on Saturday Morning, and shall return on the following Thursday. Will you call upon me tomorrow morning between 10 and 2 to arrange the Miscellany?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS MITTON, [?JANUARY 1839]

MS Huntington Library. Date: in turkey-season: signature has curious "C" found in several letters of Jan-Feb 39. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire.

At your Office | Wednesday Morning

Dear Tom

I called to ask you to come and partake of Smithson's turkey at 5 O'Clock to-day — and also to leave with you the papers I looked out yesterday, which (not finding you) I have put into the Pigeon-hole opposite the Indian Rubber. I shall hope to see you at 5.

You are a pretty fellow, as I should have told you if I had got you alone yesterday. What do you mean by trying to get married "unbeknown" to your friends?[†1]

Always Yours

To W. WILSON, 13 JANUARY 1839†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Manchester | Sunday January 13th. 1839

Mr. Wilson.

Have the goodness to strike out the music to Mr. Ainsworth's song,†2 and to print the song without†3 it. Also to restore the passage erased in page 128, beginning "the hurricane" and ending "by the excess of their fears". †aDo not fail to make these alterations and to send a revise to Doughty Street before Thursday when I shall be in town.

Do not neglect the two pieces of poetry I sent you.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS†a

To JOHN NOBLE,†1 [?21 JANUARY 1839]

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD and Catherine dined with the Nobles on 29 Jan 39 (see Diary, p. 638); Mon 21 Jan seems the probable day for this letter, since on 14 Jan CD was in Manchester and on the 7th involved in a christening party.

Doughty Street | Monday Evening

My Dear Sir

It will give Mrs. Dickens much pleasure to see the ladies of your family†2 on Wednesday, — and both she and I will be most happy to dine with you on the 29th.

Accept my best thanks for the Highland Whiskey, which, as in honor bound, I intend trying this very night. As I shall be at work on Nickleby, you will know what has inspired me, if the next Number should contain anything specially good.

My Dear Sir, I am,
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Noble Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 JANUARY 1839]

Extract in F, II, iii, 116. Date: 21 Jan 39, enclosing To Bentley, 22 Jan, according to Forster.

From what I have already said to you, you will have been led to expect that I entertained some such intention. I know you will not endeavour to dissuade me from sending it. Go it MUST. It is no fiction to say that at present I cannot write this tale. The immense profits which Oliver has realised to its publisher, and is still realising; the paltry, wretched, miserable sum it brought to me (not equal to what is every day paid for a novel that sells fifteen hundred copies at most);[†3] the recollection of this, and the consciousness that I have still the slavery and drudgery of another work on the same journeyman-terms; the consciousness that my books are enriching everybody connected with them but myself, and that I, with such a popularity as I have acquired, am struggling in old toils, and wasting my energies in the very height and freshness of my fame, and the best part of my life, to fill the pockets of others, while for those who are nearest and dearest to me I can realise little more than a genteel subsistence: all this puts me out of heart and spirits: and I cannot — cannot and will not — under such circumstances that keep me down with an iron hand, distress myself by beginning this tale until I have had time to breathe; and until the intervention of the summer, and some cheerful days in the country, shall have restored me to a more genial and composed state of feeling. There — for six months Barnaby Rudge stands over. And but for you, it should stand over altogether. For I do most solemnly declare that morally, before God and man, I hold myself released from such hard bargains as these,[†1] after I have done so much for those who drove them. This net that has been wound about me so chafes me, so exasperates and irritates my mind, that to break it at whatever cost — that I should care nothing for — is my constant impulse. But I have not yielded to it. I merely declare that I must have a postponement very common in all literary agreements; and for the time I have mentioned — six months from the conclusion of Oliver in the Miscellany — I wash my hands of any fresh accumulation of labour, and resolve to proceed as cheerfully as I can with that which already presses upon me.[†2]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 22 JANUARY 1839

Mention in Bentley to CD, 25 Jan (see To Bentley, 26 Jan, fn). Date: letter referred to as "of the 22nd. instant".

CD writes requiring a postponement of six months before beginning Barnaby in the Miscellany.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 JANUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: early 1839 on signature; no doubt "the inclosed" was Bentley's letter to him of 25 Jan.

Dear Forster

I must break in upon you for a few minutes this morning by coming down and advising with you on the best way of answering the inclosed which I found lying at home last night. I think perhaps we might as well take Talfourd into our Council.

In haste

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER [?26 JANUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: early 1839 on handwriting; presumably enclosing next.

My Dear Forster

I have dreamt of Bentley all night, and am fierce. The answer ought to go to-day to make the blow the stronger. What say you to the inclosed? Say that you see no objection to it, and I will send it at once.

Faithfully
CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 26 JANUARY 1839*

MS (Galley proof[†1]) Berg Collection.

Doughty Street, | January 26, 1839.

Sir,

In reference to the lawyer's letter (fairly re-written and signed by yourself) which you sent me last night,[†2] I have merely to say that I do not "require" and demand this postponement: — firstly, because as one who is enriching you at the expence of his own brain, and for a most paltry and miserable pittance, I have a right to some regard and consideration at your hands; and, secondly, because such postponements are matters of common literary custom, taking place as you well know every day, and in three-fourths of the arrangements in which you are concerned. I have further to say that I do not, and will not receive it as a favour or concession from you — that I will not consent to extend my engagements with you for the additional term of six months — that I will not give you the pledge you so insultingly require — and that if you presume to address me again in the style of offensive impertinence which marks your last communication, I will from that moment abandon at once and for ever all conditions and agreements that may exist between us, and leave the whole question to be settled by a jury as soon as you think proper to bring it before one.[†1]

And I am, yours,
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]
Richard Bentley, Esq.

To CHARLES HICKS, [?26 JANUARY 1839]*

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Date: Unusual formation of the "C" in signature points to Jan-Feb 39; probably 26 Jan, the day CD was Chairman at the Shakespeare Club dinner (see next). Reference in both letters to working late supports.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning.

Dear Mr. Hicks.

I felt quite certain when I received your note last night, that there must be some mistake. However, it put me out of heart, and instead of sitting up and finishing as I should otherwise have done, I left off at 3 O'Clock this morning and went to bed.

I shall write 5 slips more in addition to what I now send, which will be amply sufficient. If you send up for them about 2[†3] o'Clock, I have no doubt I shall have them ready for you.

When you send the proofs, be good enough to send a duplicate — never mind waiting until it's revised — I am obliged to go to a public dinner to-night, but if they arrive this evening or tomorrow morning, I will lose no time on their correction and return.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Hicks.

To W. C. MACREADY, [26 JANUARY 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Macready recorded in his diary for 26 Jan 39 "Received a note from Dickens, wishing me to look in upon the Shakespeare Club in the course of the evening" (Diaries, I, 493).

Shakspeare Club | Piazza Coffee House. | Saturday Evening.

My Dear Macready.

In my capacity of chairman at the dinner to-day, I promised the Committee of this noble Institution that I would exert my influence to get you to look in here this evening, were it only for ten minutes.[†1] Seriously, let me say that as there [is] a little band of your most devoted adherents (comprising a few of whose high opinion I am sure you would feel proud) assembled together, it would give me the utmost pleasure to be the means of inducing you to gratify them by so slight a sacrifice of time. It would really infuse a new spirit into the Society; and as I hold any society to be valuable which recognizes something of slight interest in the Drama shorn of Lions and Tigers,[†2] I have at great inconvenience, and after wearing work protracted far into the watches of the night, joined them myself.

I only mention this last circumstance to shew you that I am not selfish, and that if you should come you have at least one fellow-sufferer.

My Dear Macready, always faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [26 JANUARY 1839]*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales. Date: 1839 on signature. The Queen paid a state visit to Drury Lane on Tues 29 Jan, and a command performance took place at Covent Garden on Fri 1 Feb. Macready was not told the date of the "command" until 26 Jan (Diaries, I, 493).

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Evg.

My Dear Cruikshank.

We are in an awkward position which I forgot yesterday. We are engaged to Macready for sundry entertainments and a Ball at Covent Garden Theatre, on the night of the Queen's "command". Now, what night that will be is not yet known, but it is supposed as she goes to the other house on Tuesday, that it will be this very identical Thursday Night.

In such a state of things, what is to be done?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [28 JANUARY 1839]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: clearly written on 28 Jan after his return from dinner at the Parthenon with Forster and Ainsworth (see Diary, p. 638). Address: This must go before 7 in the morning | William Ainsworth Esquire | Kensal Lodge | Harrow Road.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday Night

My Dear Ainsworth.

You will receive this before you are out of bed, and will be no doubt not a little surprised at so untimely a communication; but I send a messenger out to Kensall[†1] Lodge in the middle of my night to relieve myself of an anxiety which has pressed greatly upon me since we parted this evening.

The object I have in view is, to entreat you to see Mr. Bentley without an instant's delay, and to offer yourself as the future Editor of the Miscellany.[†2] I think such a connexion would not prove unpleasant to you (who have time to devote to it) and that it is of vital importance to the publication. I need not say that a great proportion of those who were friendly to me as its Editor will be more friendly to you than to any other man — that you will have my warmest wishes and best assistance whenever I can render it in any way — and that you will moreover have the assistance of a very influential body of friends, all anxious and willing to oblige you, personally, on every possible occasion.

As you can confide in my feelings of friendship towards yourself, and as you may naturally suppose that I have yet some lingering interest in the well-being of a periodical which has cost me so much time and so many anxious hours, and in which poor Oliver first saw the light, I urge you most strongly not to neglect this opportunity. I should be really grieved to see it go down; I am quite sure — on all the considerations I have mentioned, and taking into account also, the successful connexion with it, you have just begun — that no man is so likely to keep it up as you — and I feel confident that if you offer your assistance frankly and without reserve at this critical period of its existence, you will do Mr. Bentley the greatest service (while you do that which is not disagreeable to yourself) that you could by [any] possibility render him.

Do not neglect this advice my dear Ainsworth, or lose an hour. And believe me now, as ever,

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

William Ainsworth Esquire

To MRS FRANCES TROLLOPE,[†1] [30 JANUARY 1839]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: The engagement with Mrs Trollope which CD cancelled was for 30 Jan (see Diary, p. 639).

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

Dear Mrs. Trollope.

As if a spell were set against my having the pleasure of dining with you, a friend of mine[†2] has come up from the country to-day to request my assistance in some very intricate and unpleasant business which I fear must occupy me until a late hour to-night. I cannot refuse to lend him my heartiest aid as he is an old and valued friend, and I fear this circumstance — which would not occur with me once in ten years — will deprive me of the happiness of joining your party. If I should be released in any decent time, and be enabled to make one, though it be only for half an hour, I shall make bold to lay ceremony aside and tell you in words how much I regret this.

Believe me with sincerity
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Trollope

To R. H. HORNE,[†1] [?30 JANUARY 1839]*

MS State Library of Victoria. Date: presumably the day before next.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I can see no objection to the "Private List"[†2] which I think has been managed with the utmost delicacy and very best feeling. Will you have the kindness to let me know when you want my subscription. It is at your service at any time.

I do not know whether you have sent to Bentley's for the remuneration for your paper. The custom is to call or send for it immediately after the appearance of the Magazine. I have received a very droll letter thereanent from Moon the print publisher[†3] (a good-natured little man) which will amuse you very much.

Believe me
My Dear Sir
Very cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To [R. H. HORNE], 31 JANUARY [1839]*

MS Francis Edwards Ltd. Address: see last.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday January 31st.

My Dear Sir.

I inclose a cheque for the Private list. I think it was five guineas, but I am not sure. If I have made any mistake, pray have the goodness to set me right.

I most heartily thank you for your kind congratulations on my recent miraculous deliverance. Her Majesty's Chief Baker[†1] was not quite careful enough. He "did" me so remarkably brown, that I became crusty all over, and the rasp being injudiciously applied flew with great violence into an extraordinary number of sharp pieces which entered the eyes nose and pockets of the Chief Baker aforesaid, and caused him the most exquisite irritation. He still itches and sneezes very much, but we have him now, and like the other Baker — the great actor of Drury Lane,[†2] I mean — he is meek and harmless.

I am My Dear Sir
With very great truth
Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. L. SAMMONS,[†3] 31 JANUARY 1839

Text from MDGH, III, 12.

48 Doughty Street, London, January 31st, 1839

Sir,

Circumstances have enabled me to relinquish my old connection with the "Miscellany" at an earlier period than I had expected. I am no longer its editor, but I have referred your paper[†4] to my successor, and marked it as one "requiring attention." I have no doubt it will receive it.

With reference to your letter bearing date on the 8th of last October, let me assure you that I have delayed answering it — not because a constant stream of similar epistles has rendered me callous to the anxieties of a beginner, in those doubtful paths in which I walk myself — but because you ask me to do that which I would scarce do, of my own unsupported opinion, for my own child, supposing I had one old enough to require such a service. To suppose that I could gravely take upon myself the responsibility of withdrawing you from pursuits you have already undertaken, or urging you on in a most uncertain and hazardous course of life, is really a compliment to my judgment and inflexibility which I cannot recognize and do not deserve (or desire). I hoped that a little reflection would show you how impossible it is that I could be expected to enter upon a task of so much delicacy, but as you have written to me since, and called (unfortunately at a period when I am obliged to seclude myself from all comers), I am compelled at last to tell you that I can do nothing of the kind.

If it be any satisfaction to you to know that I have read what you sent me, and read it with great pleasure, though, as you treat of local matters, I am necessarily in the dark here and there, I can give you the assurance very sincerely. With this, and many thanks to you for your obliging expressions towards myself,

I am, Sir,
Your very obedient Servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [31 JANUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: clearly the day after CD, Ainsworth, Barham and Forster dined together, "settling Miscellany business" (Diary entry for 30 Jan, p. 639).

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Forster

Ainsworth must have made some ridiculous mistake, and carried off Barham's letter to Bentley in his pocket.[†1] I searched for it directly you had left last night, and again this morning, but can find it nowhere. Pray let him know of this the instant he comes to town, or there will be the devil to pay.

If you suppose that anything which fell from me last night could by the utmost latitude of construction imply the smallest dissatisfaction on my part with your warm, unflinching, and friendly exertions for me, for God's sake dismiss such a feeling from your mind.[†1] Believe me my dear Forster that I am too well aware of the energy and steadiness of your friendship ever to entertain or express the least approach to doubt or discontent where you have been mediating for me, and that I see the value of you and appreciate the sterling openness[†2] and honesty of your heart, more and more (if that be possible) as I behold it in contrast with the hearts of other men.

I could say more on such a subject as this, but you would think me foolish and rhapsodical, and such regard as I have for you is better kept within one's own breast than vented in imperfect and inexpressive words.

In great haste —
Always My Dear Forster
Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. N. TALFOURD, 31 JANUARY [1839]

MS Berg Collection.

Doughty Street | Thursday Jany. 31st.

My Dear Talfourd.

I return your Oliver, which has only just now reached me. And once again let me impress upon you that its gaudy dress is no choice of mine.

The binder chose it at first, and as I hope to present you with long shelves of books by the same author, I am anxious that they should have an appearance of uniformity.

You will, I am sure, be glad to hear that I have burst the Bentleian bonds — that I have relinquished the Miscellany (in favor, I hope, of our friend Ainsworth) — that Barnaby Rudge will be published next year as a Novel, and not in portions — and that I have two thousand pounds certain, on the delivery of the Manuscript, and two thousand more conditional upon the Sale![†1]

My best regards at home and believe me

Always faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd
&c &c

To J. A. OVERS,[†2] 31 JANUARY [1839]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 18 Dec 1905; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Doughty Street, Thursday 31 Jan.

Unexpected circumstances have enabled me to terminate at a much earlier period than I had expected, my old connection with the Miscellany. In the ordinary course I should have to return your papers[†3] and refer you to the new Editor; but if you will allow me I will place them in the hands of that gentleman (when he is appointed) myself, and accompany them with a brief explanation of the circumstances under which they were written and forwarded to me, which may possibly do them some service.

To MISS CAMILLA TOULMIN, [?JANUARY 1839]

Mention in Maggs catalogue No. 258 (1910); MS 1 p. Date: News of the death of Mrs Maclean ("L.E.L.") was published in the London Courier on 1 Jan 39; Camilla Toulmin's lines appeared in the Miscellany, Feb 39, V, 144.

Concerning her lines "On the Death of Mrs. Maclean".

To THOMAS MITTON, [?JANUARY 1839]*

MS University of Texas. Date: Unusual "C" of signature is found in several letters of Jan-Feb 39.

[Doughty][†1] Street | [Thurs]day Morning

Dear Tom

I will call on you at or about one.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?JANUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Signature suggests Jan-Feb 39. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Sunday Night.

Dear Forster

It rained so hard to-day, that I was glad to get under cover — and so was the mare. Kate wants the loan of the Observer if you can oblige her.

Shall we see anything of you to-night — Or no?

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

February

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 or 2 FEBRUARY 1839]

Extract in F, II, V, 132. Date: Almost certainly refers to the review on 3 Feb of Hood's Comic Annual for 1839 — the only book of his reviewed in the Examiner in this period.

Describing a book by Hood he is reviewing for the Examiner as rather poor, but I have not said so, because Hood is too, and ill besides.[†3]

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?3 FEBRUARY 1839]

Text from transcript in Eastgate House, Rochester. Date: Clearly refers to the "Familiar Epistle" which appeared in the March Miscellany (not, as sometimes thought, in Feb). Probably CD was writing on the first Sunday after handing over, and the Thursday mentioned was his birthday.

Doughty Street | Tuesday night.

My dear Ainsworth

I have sent the notice to Wilson and should like to see a proof. It is not so long as I thought it would be, but it is a very difficult thing to do and has given me more trouble in pleasing myself than a paper of half a dozen pages would have done.[†1] I hope you will like it.

On Thursday I shall expect you.

With best regards,
Ever yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HARLEY, [7 FEBRUARY 1839]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: CD's 27th birthday.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Harley.

This is my birth-day. Many happy returns of the day to you and me.

I took it into my head yesterday to get up an impromptu dinner on this auspicious occasion — only my own folks, Leigh Hunt, Ainsworth, and Forster. I know you can't dine here in consequence of the tempestuous weather on the Covent Garden shores, but if you will come in when you have done

Trinculizing[†2] you will delight me greatly, and add in no inconsiderable degree to the "conwiviality" of the meeting.

Lord bless my soul! Twenty seven years old. Who'd have thought it. I never did!

But I grow sentimental.

Always Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, 9 FEBRUARY [1839]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Morning Feby. 9th.

My Dear Blanchard.

Let me thank you with great sincerity for the trouble and interest you have taken in the factory matter,[†3] and also for the perusal of Mr. Colburn's letter to you,[†4] which I return herewith.

That gentleman is quite right in supposing that Barnaby Rudge has nothing to do with factories, or negroes — white, black, or parti-coloured. It is a tale of the riots of Eighty, before factories flourished as they did thirty years afterwards, and containing — or intended to contain — no allusion to cotton lords, cotton slaves, or anything that is cotton.

The advertisement is quite a matter of taste. As there is a lady in the case, I suppose it is in the very best taste possible. Whether or no, I care so little about it that I have rejected urgings and promptings from a hundred quarters to write to Mr. Colburn about it, and have left him in the peaceable enjoyment of his own course. If Mrs. Trollope were even to adopt Ticholas Tickleby as being a better-sounding name than Michael Armstrong, I don't think it would cost me a wink of sleep, or impair my appetite in the smallest degree.

Believe me, always,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Laman Blanchard Esquire
&c &c

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, [9 FEBRUARY 1839]*

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold. Date: no doubt enclosing last.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Blanchard.

I am more obliged to you than I can possibly express for your very kind and friendly conduct, which gives me I assure you — as everything in our intimacy has — the utmost pleasure and satisfaction.

The whole affair of Mrs. Trollope's is a "do" — suggested in the first instance I am inclined to believe (though this is mere suspicion) by Bentley,[†1] when he found I was gone to Manchester, the first time.[†2] As it is certain to burn Colburn's fingers,[†3] there being no room for them to come into any decent circulation in that form, I will express no further opinion of Mrs. Trollope, than that I think Mr. Trollope must have been an old dog and chosen his wife from the same species.

In case you should wish or like to shew Colburn a reply to his letter, I inclose a more formal "statement of facts", which you can use as you please. Any way let me thank you once again most heartily.

I was dead all day yesterday, being first aware of the circumstance at ten minutes past 11 oClock A.M. Slight symptoms of returning animation have manifested themselves this morning, but the "wital spark" requires a deal of bellows.

Believe me
My Dear Blanchard
Always faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Laman Blanchard Esquire.

To CHARLES RICHARDS,[†1] 11 FEBRUARY [1839]

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 25 Feb 1918; MS 3 ½ pp.; dated 48 Doughty Street, 11 Feb — plainly 1839, soon after CD's resignation from the Miscellany.

Saying that he has no longer any connection with the Miscellany, having been succeeded by his friend Harrison Ainsworth, and that he feels unable to recommend to Ainsworth the translation which his correspondent has sent him, as it is too long.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 FEBRUARY 1839

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1722 (1923); MS 1 p.; dated Doughty Street, 13 Feb 39.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14 FEBRUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: early 1839 on handwriting; plainly Feb ("this short month"); probably the Thursday between the 9th, when he was "thinking about Nickleby" (see Diary, p. 640) and ?21 Feb when he was finishing it. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster

Don't come in to-night, for I want to get on: having moved slowly this short month. I have gallantly refused dinner Invitations from Talfourd, Milnes,[†2] Elliotson, and two others, and really begin to hope that I shall be able to keep on at Nickleby. Tomorrow we are obliged to go to Hullah's, which makes it the more necessary that I should stick like a leech to Nicholas to-night.

I will report progress on Sunday if you dine here — Let me know tomorrow or Saturday whether you do or not.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

15 slips achieved.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [?MID-FEBRUARY 1839]*

MS Mrs Marjorie Graham. Date: soon after CD's resignation from the Miscellany. Perhaps Jerdan was trying to raise money in the week before 19 Feb when he defaulted on his debt of £70 to Macready (Diaries, II, 496).

Doughty Street | Friday Afternoon.

My Dear Jerdan.

It pains me, I assure you with real sincerity, more than I can express, to be obliged to say that I cannot render you the assistance you require — And believe me that I use no common form of words when I declare that if it were in my power to do so — consistently with other obligations and demands — I would.

Within the last three months I have lost at one swoop the whole sum you mention, by one of my own relatives.[†1] Within the last twelve, I have expended double and treble its amount on others — I have sacrificed the profits (editorial profits I should say — not publishing) of the Miscellany, such as they were, to be quit of Bentley; and I am really at this moment, for the first time, in the way of making what I ought to have made long since.

I say thus much to shew you why I am not in a condition to help you. I feel nothing but regret to have received your note under such circumstances. And I consider this matter so strictly confidential between us, that I shall not mention it — even to my wife.

I owe an apology to your son for not seeing him. Pray tell him from me, with my regards, that my servant dropped his card as she was bringing your letter into my room, and I did not receive it until after he was gone.

I am My dear Jerdan
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esquire.

To S. C. HALL, [?18 FEBRUARY 1839]

Extract in N, I, 199; dated 48 Doughty Street, Monday morning — probably the Monday after 15 Feb 39, date of the first No. of the Art Union.

All good fortune to the Art Union,[†2] I think the idea a very good one, striking as it does into the only unoccupied field ... Thank you for the perusal of Mr. Warner's[†3] letter, which I inclose. He was not quite correct in the facts of the "petty cash" story, the realities of which are far more honorable to the noble fellows concerned ... The 18th of this fraudulent month of February, which for the sake of periodical Writers should be blotted from the calendar, although I was born in it, or made a reasonable length, you know that of old.

To THE REV. W. H. LANDON,[†1] [?18 FEBRUARY 1839]

Facsimile in unidentified catalogue, New York Public Library. Date: plainly Feb; since referring to Nickleby, must be Feb 39; perhaps Mon 18th, as last.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir,

I beg you a thousand pardons — In the hurry of my Nicklebeian Engagements in this most fraudulent month of eight and twenty days, I forgot your note. Pray excuse me.

I enclose a more formal acknowledgment of the return of the Sovereign, — and am, My Dear Sir,
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. H. Landon

To JOHN FORSTER, [?FEBRUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Signature suggests early 1839; must be before 21 Feb when Henry was dismissed. Address: Wait | John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster

I think I may venture to go out to-night. Will you dine with us at 5 — and see about a box without loss of time? If you want a messenger, Henry is available.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?21 FEBRUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: This and next, To Mitton, clearly refer to the "cashiering" of Henry the groom, elaborated on in To Forster, ?22 Feb. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I must contrive, please God, by hook or by crook to finish to-night. Will you come in tomorrow evening — or to dinner at 5 — ?[†2] let me know.

I have been obliged to dismiss Henry summarily, for impudence to his "Missis". Therefore if you should hear by any chance of a steady groom, not to be drunk on the premises——

Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?22 FEBRUARY 1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: see next.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning.

My Dear Tom

I inclose a letter from the veterinary Surgeon. I have not time to go to-day, having appointments at home; and I have been compelled to discharge Henry for impertinence to his "Missis".

Can you, as it is not far, take a cab and go over for me, this morning? Very possibly you will be able to see a trial too. I should think the five and forty guinea one would be about the touch, and I shall be perfectly satisfied with your report and description. If you find him good, we can have the veterinary Surgeon's warranty and close at once.

I shall be greatly obliged to you if you can conveniently do me this favor. Will you dine with us at 5? Send a line and say. If not — the evening.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 FEBRUARY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Between Mr Kenwigs's first appearance in Nickleby, July 38, and the last No. in Sep 39, the only advertised performances of King Lear on any Mondays were Macready's at Covent Garden on 4, 11, 18 and 25 Feb 39. The finishing of the Nickleby No. suggests late in the month. Postscript shows plainly written same day as last, presumably the Friday before the performance of 25 Feb.

My Dear Forster

Henry fell a victim to no festivities (by the wedding, there hangs a tale though) but kicked up his heels very high indeed in cold blood, and was instantly cashiered.

Sunday at half past four — punctivally, as Mr. Kenwigs has it.

If you come in decent time to-night, we might have a little reading — but half past ten is the middle of the night as times go now. See if you can't expedite yourself.

Nickleby is finished — and (I think) as good a Number as the last. [ ][†1]

I begin again (God willing) on Monday!!![†1] But I hope to see Lear on Monday night.

Always faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

An Express has just arrived regarding three "Osses". As I have no groom to send and don't like the job myself I have despatched Mitton who I hope will not fail to unscrew their tails.

To MRS CUTHBERT,[†2] 22 FEBRUARY 1839

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mrs. Cuthbert | Ponducle | Ryde | Isle of Wight.

48 Doughty Street London | Friday February 22nd. 1839.

Madam.

In reply to your letter of the 15th. Instant, I beg to inform you that as I have relinquished my connexion with Bentley's Miscellany, and am only connected with one other periodical work, which is of my own writing, I have no opportunity of receiving papers in the manner you describe.

I may add for your information that great numbers of original contributions are constantly offered anonymously to monthly Magazines; and that if[†3] any of them should happen to suit the Editor's taste and the wants of his Magazine, they are not unfrequently accepted. I believe any respectable literary journal would pay for articles so retained for insertion. The Magazine of which I have recently resigned the Editorship, always did so.

I am, Madam,
Your very obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cuthbert.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?24 FEBRUARY 1839]

Text from N, I, 200. Date: between Mitton's abortive inspection of horses (?22 Feb) and CD's payment to Mr Turtill, harness-maker, of £20.8 on 1 Mar (CD's account-book, MS Messrs Coutts).

Doughty Street | Sunday

My Dear Tom,

Looking back to all the trouble and botheration of horse seeking, remembering the carthorse of yesterday and the slow mare of Cheapside and anticipating a hundred other grievances in the pursuit of animals and phaetons I have made up my mind if that Craven Street turn-out be not disposed of, to purchase it and to spend some fifteen pounds on its decoration.[†1] If you have no decided objection to this course (which upon the whole, and as Kate likes them, I take to be the best we can adopt) will you make the purchase before you come to me in the morning and we can then take council about driving to the coach painters and Harness Makers.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To save you trouble and ensure you settling this before you come to me, I have made 2 copies of this letter and sent one to your chambers and one to the office.

To ROBERT MUNRO,[†2] 25 FEBRUARY 1839

MS Morgan Library. Address: Robert Munro Esquire | 15 Adelphi Street | Laurieston | Glasgow.

48 Doughty Street London | February 25th. 1839.

Sir.

In reply to your letter (forwarded to me from Mr. Bentley's this morning) I beg to say that no such papers as you describe have ever been accepted or seen by me. I have lately relinquished my connection with Bentley's Miscellany; and whether they have been accepted by Mr. Bentley himself or anybody on his behalf I cannot inform you.

Whoever the "respectable authority" may be who assumes to be so well acquainted with my proceedings I can assure him in this instance that he is utterly in error. And assuring you that any apology for requesting an answer on this head was wholly unnecessary,

I am Sir
Your very obedt. Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Munro Esquire
&c &c

To H. K. BROWNE, [FEBRUARY 1839]

Facsimile in F. G. Kitton, CD and his Illustrators, 1899, facing p. 64. Date: Feb 39 since the note is written beneath the original drawing for "A Sudden Recognition, unexpected on both sides" in the March Nickleby.

I don't think Smike is frightened eno[ugh or Squeers][†3] earnest enough — for my purpose.

To ANGUS FLETCHER,[†1] [?FEBRUARY 1839]

Extract in N, I, 209. Date: Pickering was apparently working on a portrait of CD during the early months of 1839 (see To Forster, 4 Jan, and Diary entry for 21 Feb).

Wedy. Morn.

We find that to be dutiful and relation-like we must alter our plans, and ask divers Aunts and Uncles to dine with us today at 6.0. Will you alter your plan of coming in the evening, and dine with us too?

Faithfully always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

A most mean signature, but I am writing under the soothing influence of Mr. Pickering, the author of that meek portrait still unfinished ... Kate wants her picture (only for the day).

To JOHN DICKENS, [1838-9]*

MS Dr A. S. M. Severn. Date: between Mar 38 (when CD started writing "Esquire" in full) and John Dickens's move to Devon in Mar 39.

Doughty Street | Wedy. Morning

Dear Father

Will you dine with us at ½ past 5 to-day, and let me know about Wapping?

Affy Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Dickens Esquire

March

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 MARCH 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: the Monday before 4 Mar when CD left for Exeter. Address: Immediate | John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Doughty Street | Friday Night

My Dear Forster

Since I saw you this morning, I have reflected seriously and constantly on the matter in hand.[†2] The result is, that I have taken my place to Exeter for next Monday Morning[†3] in order that they may join me — or at least leave town for that purpose — on the following Saturday when their notice expires.[†4]

I have mentioned this to my mother who is to be with me tomorrow morning at half past 10. I have also given her the option of joining me at Exeter if she wishes, a day or two before the Saturday, that she may get things in better order than I could do. I have done this verbally — not by letter.

The money for the coach-fares and road expences will be paid by you and Mitton to whom I will forward a cheque by post from Exeter. I fear it is too much to hope that you can accompany me in this toilsome journey. If you could, you know how much you would lighten its weariness and inconvenience.

The rent Mitton arranges tomorrow morning. To tradespeople let them say nothing. The only hope I have of making any composition short of paying in full, is founded upon their being previously non est inventus.

This hasty preparation leaves me but one day of hurry. Will you dine here at 5? Say yes or no, before 12.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

This promptitude is necessary[†1] and worth a thousand prospective resolutions. Some present arrangement for Frederick must be contrived in my absence. His mother gives him a good character, and if father bestirs himself, it can be surely done without much difficulty.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY,[†2] 3 MARCH [1839]

MS Messrs Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Date: clearly 1839: see To Catherine, p. 523. Address: To be left at Messrs Bradbury and Evans. Printers — Whitefriars. | Mr. Bradbury | 1 Clarence Terrace.

48 Doughty Street | Sunday Morning March 3rd.

My Dear Sir.

I read your note last night with heartfelt pain and sorrow. But I hope and believe that from the very depth and strength of your affection for your dead child, will arise your best and truest consolation.

The certainty of a bright and happy world beyond the Grave, which such young and untried creatures (half Angels here) must be called away by God to people — the thought that in that blessed region of peace and rest there is one spirit who may well be supposed to love and watch over those whom she loved so dearly when on earth — the happiness of being always able to think of her as a young and promising girl, and not as one whom years and long sorrow and suffering had changed — above all, the thought of one day joining her again where sorrow and separation are unknown — these are all sources of consolation which none but those who have suffered deep affliction can know in all their force, and which will whisper comfort and resignation to you and your poor wife.

To many, these would sound as very very slight considerations to fortify the mind against such a loss. It is nearly two years ago since I lost in one short night a young and lovely creature whom — I can say even to you now — I loved with the warmest affection that our nature is capable of, and in whom I had the fondest father's pride. The first burst of anguish over, I have never thought of her with pain — never. I have never connected her idea with the grave in which she lies. I look upon it as I sometimes do upon the clothes she used to wear. They will moulder away in their secret places, as her earthly form will in the ground, but I have long since learnt to separate her from all this litter of dust and ashes, and to picture her to myself with every well-remembered grace and beauty heightened by the light of Heaven and the power of that Merciful Being who would never try our earthly affections so severely but to make their objects happy, and lead our thoughts to follow them.

I venture to hope my dear Sir, that the day is not far distant when you will be able to think of this dear child with a softened regret which will have nothing of bitterness in its composition — when it will be a melancholy but not a painful satisfaction to call up old looks and thoughts and turns of speech — and when you will be able to reflect with a grateful heart that those who yield most promise and are most richly endowed, commonly die young, as though from the first they were the objects of the Almighty's peculiar love and care. It is, no doubt, a heavy blow to lose so sweet a child; but who that loved her would call her back, if any soul could return to tell the bliss of that distant land to which she has winged her early flight?

Receive my Dear Sir the assurance I cannot refrain from conveying to you at such a time as this, of my earnest and sincere sympathy and warm regard. And may the influence which the blessed spirits of those who have toiled on earth, have been supposed by many good and wise men to exercise over sorrowing mortals, bring comfort to you and yours in this sad bereavement.[†1]

My Dear Sir, I am always,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. W. Bradbury.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [5 MARCH 1839]

MS British Museum. Date: clearly the morning of 5 Mar (see next). Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 48 Doughty Street | London.

New London Inn Exeter. | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Kate.

If this letter is a short or uninteresting one, do not complain, for I have been travelling about all the morning and it is now nearly Two o'Clock. The post leaves at a quarter past, and I have barely time to jot down a few words in anything like sensible order.

Consider too, my dear, that this letter is addressed to my mother as well as yourself, for I wish to say something to her and have not time to write to you both.

I cannot tell you what spirits I have been put into by the cottage I have taken — taken, and paid the first quarter in advance!! I walked straight to it this morning. I heard nothing from the Bank and walked out to look about me. Something guided me to it, for I went on without turning right or left, and was no more surprised when I came upon it and saw the bill up, than if I had passed it every day for years. It is a jewel of a place — Mile-End Cottage, Alpherton;[†1] the one mile stone from Exeter opposite the door. It is on the road to Plymouth, in the most beautiful, cheerful, delicious rural neighbourhood I was ever in. The old landlady,[†2] the finest old countrywoman conceivable — lives next door, and her brother and his wife in the next cottage to that. They have been known there for half a century and have the highest possible character at the Bank and from the clergyman[†3] who formerly lived himself, in the cottage which I have taken. I lunched with the old woman this morning, and we were quite affectionate in no time. There is an excellent parlor with an open beaufet[†4] in the wall and a capital closet, a beautiful little drawing-room above that — a kitchen and little room adjacent — and I forget whether two or three bedrooms besides. There is a noble garden, and there are cellars and safes and coalholes everywhere. The rent (including taxes) is £20 a year.[†5] The old lady has a "lined" (she dwelt a good deal upon that) a "lined" pew in the best part of the church, and in it are two sittings for nothing. The place is exquisitely clean and the paint and paper from top to bottom are as bright as a new pin. I have seen the upholsterer who furnished it when the clergyman lived there, and arranged with him for the greater part of the things. All articles here are cheap, even to furniture.

Now, if my mother can — I don't urge it, if she objects — if she can make up her mind to come down to me by the Telegraph on Thursday Morning, the house will be perfect by the Saturday Night, and I shall be saved — not only a world of uneasiness, but a good deal of money, for the people will take me in and I can't help it. I have not time to dilate upon all the advantages of her doing so, but if she can, you must let me know by return of post. I send below a cheque[†1] (which you will tear off)[†2] for the amount of her travelling expences and that little matter of the spoons, which I had forgotten. The fare inside is Three Pounds. She must eat and drink whenever and wherever the coach stops for the purpose. It goes from the Black Bear Piccadilly, just beyond the Burlington Arcade. The place should be taken.

I cannot tell you, my love, how much delighted I am with this success, and how much and what unexpected pleasure I am sure she will feel when she sees the place and the arrangements that are in progress. I have only time to send a thousand loves and kisses to the dear Babs and to say that I will write you a long letter tom[orro]w,[†3] and that by the same post, Forster will receive the necessary directions for Father's and Augustus's journey on Saturday. I shall also write to Mitton with his needful instructions as to their rent. Ever Affectionately Yours — CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 MARCH 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: PM Exeter 6 Mar 39 (Wednesday). Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields | London.

New London Inn. Exeter. | Tuesday Night.[†4]

My Dear Forster.

I took a cottage for them this morning. If they are not pleased with it — I shall be grievously disappointed; that's all. It is at a place called Alphington, exactly one mile beyond Exeter on the Dawlish, I think, but I know on the Plymouth-Road. There are two white cottages together, built of brick with thatched roofs. One is theirs and the other belongs to their landlady one Mrs. Pannell. I almost forget the number of rooms and cannot say positively until I have been there again, but I can report on solemn affirmation that on the ground floor there are an excellent parlor, a nice kitchen, and a little third room of comfortable proportions; and that in the yard behind there are meat-safes cellars coal holes wood houses and such like accomodations in rural abundance. Upstairs there is really a beautiful little room over the parlor which I am furnishing as a drawingroom, and I am not sure whether there are two or three bedrooms besides. There is a splendid garden and the rent of the whole (the landlady paying all taxes) is twenty pounds a year! The paint and paper throughout is new and fresh and cheerful-looking: the place is clean beyond all description; and the neighbourhood I suppose the most beautiful in this most beautiful of English counties.[†1]

Mrs. Pannell of whom I must make most especial mention is a Devonshire widow with whom I had the honor of taking lunch to-day. She is a fat, infirm, splendidly-fresh-faced country dame, rising sixty and recovering from an attack "on the Nerves" — I thought they never went off the stones,[†2] but I find they try country air with the best of us. In the event of my mother's being ill at any time, I really think the vicinity of this good dame (the very picture of respectability and good humour) will be the greatest possible comfort. Her furniture and domestic arrangements are a capital picture, but that, with sundry imitations of herself and some "ladies" who called while I was there (evidently with a view to the property) I must reserve 'till I see you, when I anticipate a hearty laugh. The cottages communicate at the back — that is, our people pass close behind hers to get to their garden — she bears the highest character with the bankers and the clergyman — who formerly lived in my cottage himself — and is a kind-hearted worthy capital specimen of the sort of life, if she is properly managed, or I have no eye for the real and no idea of finding it out.

The good lady's brother and his wife live in the next nearest cottage, and the brother transacts the good lady's business, the nerves not admitting of her transacting it herself, although they leave her in her debilitated state something sharper than the finest lancet. Now the brother having coughed all night 'till he coughed himself into such a perspiration that you might have "wringed his hair", according to the asseverations of eye witnesses, his wife was sent for to negociate with me, and if you could have seen me sitting in the kitchen with the two old women, endeavouring to make them comprehend that I had no evil intentions or covert designs and that I had come down all that way to take some cottage and had happened to walk down that road and see that particular one, you would never have forgotten it. Then to see the servant-girl run backwards and forwards to the sick man, and when the sick man had signed one agreement which I drew up and the old woman instantly put away in a disused tea-caddy, to see the trouble and the number of messages it took before the sick man could be brought to sign another (a duplicate) that we might have one apiece, was one of the richest scraps of genuine drollery I ever saw in all my days. How, when the business was over, we became conversational — how I was facetious and at the same time virtuous and domestic — how I drank toasts in the beer, and stated on interrogotary[†3] that I was a married man and the father of two blessed infants — how the ladies marvelled thereat — how one of the ladies, having been in London, enquired where I lived and being told, remembered that Doughty Street and the Foundling Hospital were in the Old Kent Road, which I didn't contradict,[†1] — all this and a great deal more must come with Stebbing[†2] when I return, and will make us laugh then I hope, and makes me laugh now to think of. Of my subsequent visit to the Upholsterer recommended by Mrs. Pannell — of the absence of the upholsterer's wife and the timidity of the upholster,[†3] fearful of acting in her absence — of my sitting behind a high desk in a little dark shop calling over the articles in requisition and checking off the prices as the upholsterer exhibited the goods and called them out — of my coming over the upholsterer's daughter with many virtuous endearments to propitiate the establishment and reduce the bill — of these matters I say nothing, either, for the same reason as that just mentioned. The discovery of the cottage I seriously look upon as a blessing (not to speak it profanely) upon our efforts in this, I hope no longer sad, cause. I had heard nothing from the Bank and walked straight there, by some strange impulse, directly after breakfast. I am sure they may be happy there, if they will. If I were older and my course of activity were run, I am sure I could, with God's blessing, for many and many a year.

The Theatre[†4] is open here, and Charles Kean is playing for his last night to-night. If it had been the "rig'lar" drama I should have gone, but I was afraid Sir Giles Overreach[†5] (are there two r's?) might upset me so I stayed away. My quarters are excellent and the head-waiter is such a Waiter! Knowles — not Sheridan Knowles,[†6] but Knowles of the Cheatham Hill Road[†7] — is an ass to him. This sounds bold but truth is stranger than fiction. By the bye, not the least comical thing that has occurred was the visit of the upholsterer (with some further calculations) since I began this letter. I think they took me here for the wonderful Being I am; they were amazingly sedulous, and no doubt looked for my being visited by the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood. My first and only visitor came to-night. — A ruddy-faced man in faded black with extracts from a feather bed all over him — an extraordinary and quite miraculously dirty face — a thick stick — and the personal appearance altogether of an amiable bailiff in a green old age. I have not seen the proper waiter since, and more than suspect I shall not recover this blow. He was announced (by the waiter) as "a person". I expect my bill every minute.

[†a]I have left so little room for business that I must be brief. I wrote to-day for my mother to come down on Thursday, and inclosed her — for herself — the wherewithal. Please to advance to father for himself and Augustus to follow on Saturday five pounds. Don't forget your letter by Friday's post, and let it be a long one. If you should have time to see little Evans[†1] or Hicks you will relieve my mind by telling them how it is that they will not get the copy for the next No. as soon as I promised. I want my mother for some matters of curtains, blinds, and so forth in which — with her — I can save greatly. Forgive this jumble of incoherence (penned under the pressure of two other letters and some sleepiness) and believe me my dear Forster if I need ask it

Always Your attached friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I hope to be home on Monday Evening at half past eight.[†a]

The waiter is laughing outside the door with another waiter — This is the latest intelligence of my condition.

[†b]I open this on Wednesday Morning to say that Charles Kean is gone, and I have moved into his sitting room. I am sitting at this instant in his wery chair!!! I was bursting into the water-closet this morning, when a man's voice (of tragic quality) cried out — "There is somebody here." It was his. I shall reserve this for his Biographer.[†b]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 MARCH 1839

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 48 Doughty Street | London.

New London Inn Exeter. | Tuesday Evening March 5th. 1839.

My Dearest love.

I hope to be home on Monday Evening at half past eight. I will write you again on Saturday, so that you may know when and where to send Topping[†2] to meet me. I am looking eagerly forward to a letter from you, and shall expect to receive one by Thursday's post from town. If my mother comes down on Thursday — about which, by the bye, I am rather doubtful and anxious — I shall have a line by her of course. Were you surprised at my request that she should? I made it for two reasons. Firstly, because she really can be the means of saving money in many items of expenditure, and secondly because I thought that the suddenness of the call would break the force of the separation, and spare much of the pain of coming away.

It was a delicious day yesterday and the journey was most pleasant, although the morning and evening were both bitterly cold, with a sharp and cutting wind. I found everything most comfortable here — roaring fires in sitting-room and bedroom and supper ready — a capital bed, and all as nice as nice could be, under such circumstances. I slept well, being very tired, as I am to-night with all the bustle and running about of the day.

I cannot tell you — although I have thought coolly about it since the morning — how much pleased I am with the cottage, which really can, at as little expence as one could hope for be made a place that anybody might be proud of. It stands adjoining [the][†1] landlady's and has a thatched roof. You enter into a neat [?little] passage. There is an exceedingly good parlour, a regular [ ] kitchen, another little room on the same floor, and either [ ] little bedrooms upstairs besides the pretty drawing room from which there is a distant view of Exeter with the cathedral which is quite lovely. Add to this such a garden as there is — so many comforts and conveniences — and the beautiful situation — and think of it being all had tax free for twenty pounds a year!

I have begun with the furniture which, with the exception of one or two trifling articles, is contracted to be put in by Friday night. The outside of every expence will be I hope Seventy Pounds. I trust it may be done for less, but I take the very outside. I have put, or rather shall put, into the worst sitting-room, six painted in imitation of rosewood chairs, a pembroke table, a round dining-table, a kidderminster carpet, and some second-hand red curtains; cost price thirty shillings. In the best sitting-room six better chairs, a second-hand sofa table, a couch, white muslin curtains, and a second-hand brussels carpet. In the best bedroom a tent bedstead with best bedding and white dimity furniture; in the next a french bed and mattress; and in both painted furniture en suite of course. Then there are the kitchen necessaries, the crockery and glass, the stair-carpet, and the floorcloth. One "Betty Peek" officiates as servant pro tem; there will be fires in all the rooms on Thursday Morning; and the neatness and cleanliness of the place is beyond description.

I entertain you with these particularities because as you are interested in the proceedings, which are as much your own as mine, I think you will prefer them to facetiousness of which I have picked up great store. Indeed I have let loose some of it upon Forster this very [?day;] but I have a capital story concerning my interview with the [brother] to whom the house belongs, and her sister in law — and how [ ] what the Devil ever took me there, and evidently suspected [ ] and at length got quite assured, and asked me if I [?were married and] wondered to hear I had two children, and "supposed now" that belike the lady had a pretty little bit of property, and a great deal more which I must save to tell you. If you could have seen me sitting on one side of the kitchen-fire drawing up an agreement for taking the house, and explaining it with great perspicuity but without infusing into them the slightest notion of its nature, you would never have forgotten it. Of course I made myself quite at home, and I think — don't be alarmed, though the youngest is not seventy — I think I made an impression. Then I went to the upholsterer's with whom I am already on the most familiar terms, and to whose daughter I have been most attentive all day in the hope of keeping down the small account. I meant to have gone to the Theatre to-night, but I thought better of it when I found Charles Kean was doing Sir Giles Overreac[h] and so stopped by the fireside, reading a book of celebrated [trials][†1] for High Treason which I bought to-day, and which has interested me deeply.

To say how much I miss you, would be ridiculous. I miss the children in the morning too and their dear little voices which have sounds for you and me that we shall never forget. I have not forgotten the Mouse's[†2] birthday to-morrow, and shall keep it though after a lonely fashion. If you will drink her health at six o'Clock exactly, I will do the same as if we were together. Tell her at th[ ][†3] and fill us with pleasant thoughts when the lighter things that can charm us now, are no longer remembered. I hope and believe that these three or four hundred pounds will come back to us one-day in three or four hundred thousand recollections which nothing else could buy.

I hope my love you saw and sent poor Bradbury's letter which was on my desk. It was one of condolence, and I should grieve if it were delayed. Don't[†3]

To THOMAS MITTON, 6 MARCH 1839†

MS Huntington Library.

New London Inn, Exeter. | Wednesday Morning March 6th. 1839

Dear Tom.

Perhaps you have heard from Kate that I succeeded yesterday in the very first walk, and took a cottage at a place called Alphington one mile from Exeter which contains on the ground floor a good parlor and kitchen, and above, a full-sized country drawingroom and three bedrooms — in the yard behind, coal-holes, fowl-houses, and meat safes out of number; in the kitchen a neat little range; in the other rooms good stoves and cupboards — and all for £20 a year taxes included. There is a good garden at the side well stocked with cabbages, beans, onions, celery, and some flowers. The stock belonging to the landlady (who lives in the adjoining cottage) there was some question whether she was not entitled to half the produce, but I settled the point by paying five shillings and becoming absolute master of the whole!

I do assure you that I am charmed with the place and the beauty of the country round about, though I have not seen it under very favorable circumstances, for it snowed when I was there this morning, and blew bitterly from the East yesterday. It is really delightful, and when the house is to-rights and the furniture all in, I shall be quite sorry to leave it. I have had some few things second-hand, but I take it Seventy Pounds will be the mark even taking this into consideration. I include in that estimate, glass and crockery, garden tools, and such like little things. There is a spare bedroom of course. That I have furnished too.

I am on terms of the closest intimacy with Mrs. Pannell the landlady, and her brother and sister in law who have a little farm hard by. They are capital specimens of country folks, and I really think the old woman herself will be a great comfort to my mother. Coals are dear just now — 26/- a ton[†1] — They found me a boy to go two miles out and back again to order some, this morning. I was debating in my mind whether I should give him eighteenpence or two shillings, when his fee was announced — Twopence!

The house is on the high road to Plymouth, and though in the very heart of Devonshire, there is as much long-stage and posting life, as you would find in Piccadilly. The situation is charming. Meadows in front, an orchard running parallel to the garden hedge, richly-wooded hills closing in the prospect behind, and away to the left, before, a splendid view of the hill on which Exeter is situated; the Cathedral towers rising up into the sky in the most picturesque manner possible. I don't think I ever saw so cheerful or pleasant a spot. The drawing-room is nearly if not quite as large as the outer room of my old chambers in Furnivals Inn. The paint and paper are new, and the place clean as the utmost excess of snowy cleanliness can be.

You would laugh if you could see me powdering away[†2] with the upholsterer, and endeavouring to bring about all sorts of impracticable reductions and wonderful arrangements. He had by him two second-hand carpets; the important ceremony of trying the same, comes off at three this afternoon. I am perpetually going backwards and forwards. It is two miles from here, so I have plenty of exercise, which so occupies me and prevents my being lonely that I stopped at home to read last night and shall to-night, although the Theatre is open. Charles Kean has been the star for the last two evenings. He was stopping in this house and went away this morning. I have got his sitting-room now, which is smaller and more comfortable than the one I had before.

You will have heard perhaps that I wrote to my mother to come down tomorrow. There are so many things she can make comfortable at a much less expence than I could, that I thought it best. If I had not, I could not have returned on Monday, which I now hope to do and to be in town at half past eight. [†a]I think Duncombe's[†1] rent is £18 altogether. Will you ascertain from my father (remembering that you are supposed not to know the cause of all this) and will you tell him besides,[†a] that if he could devise any means of bringing him down, I think it would be a great thing for him to have Dash if it be only to keep down the trampers and beggars? The cheque I send you below. [ ][†2]

To THOMAS HILL, 13 MARCH 1839

MS Berg Collection.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday March 13th./39

My Dear Sir

Accept the Oliver with my best and most cordial wishes,[†3] and an assurance of the sincere pleasure it gives me to count you among the number of my best-wishing friends.

I have been in Devonshire on family business, and having reached town late over-night was not out of bed when your messenger came yesterday.

Always believe me
My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, [13 MARCH 1839]†

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 14 Mar 39 (Thursday). Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Night

My Dear Beard

I haven't seen anything of you (except at the buttonless party) for time out of mind. Can you dine with us next Sunday — quite alone — at half past four? And if you can, will you come at Two and ride out with us in the morning?[†4] I want your opinion of the new turn-out, which I take to be — but I won't go on.

I have made some arrangements concerning the settling-down for life of the governor which will a little surprise you.

With best remembrances believe me, ever,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

[†a]Do you know that a disgusting idea connected with the glass shade of Browne's table lamp is constantly present to my imagination? It is exactly like the pan of a tavern water closet and haunts me, waking and sleeping.[†a]

To T. J. OUSELEY,[†1] 14 MARCH 1839*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales.

Doughty Street London | March 14th. 1839

My Dear Sir.

I sent the Dream of the Dying Girl[†2] to Mr. Bentley's and specially marked it (when I relinquished the Editorship of the Magazine) as "requiring attention". I cannot think that they will be so senseless as to hesitate for an instant to avail themselves of it, but if you do not see it in the next No., I would recommend you to address Mr. Bentley himself at No. 8 New Burlington Street. When I next see Mr. Ainsworth I will speak to him on the subject and tell him what I really think of that beautiful little poem.

I am My Dear Sir
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Ouseley Esquire.

To MISS CAMILLA TOULMIN, [14 or 15 MARCH 1839]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the Thursday or Friday (see fn) after his return from Devonshire, 11 Mar.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday[†3] Morning

My Dear Madam

I have only just returned to town from Devonshire, which is the reason that I had not the pleasure of seeing you when you called. I should recommend you to write to Mr. Bentley on the subject of your little poem,[†4] mentioning that it was accepted by me. If you should not receive a satisfactory reply, I shall be happy to render you any assistance in my power if you will communicate with me again.

Let me assure you that it has always given me real pleasure to be the humble means of rendering you better known to the public — if any attention and opportunity so slight as mine can have led to that result — and that I am, Dear Madam,

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Camilla Toulmin.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 MARCH 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Ch. 41, "Containing some romantic Passages between Mrs Nickleby and the Gentleman in the Small-Clothes next-door" was part of the April Nickleby; CD was probably writing on the Friday after his return from Devonshire. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster

†aI must be alone in my glory to-day and see what I can do. I perpetrated a great amount of work yesterday and have every day indeed since Monday, but I must buckle to again and endeavour to get the Steam up. If this were to go on long, I should "bust" the boiler.

I think Mrs. Nickleby's love scene will come out rather unique.†a

If you are likely to be in the way tomorrow about 2 o'Clock, I'll give you a call.

Always Faithfully CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MARCH 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: a Saturday, since the day of a Shakespeare Club meeting; handwriting suggests Spring 1839; perhaps March, shortly after his parents had moved to Alphington. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

My Dear Forster

Pickthorn has administered some more physic of such extra strength that I have deemed it prudent to put Marjoribanks†1 off. I shall therefore not be at the "Shikspere" to-night, but shall confine myself to my own room and Nickleby.

An unsatisfactory epistle from mother this morning.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To DR F. P. B. PICKTHORN, [?MARCH 1839]

Text from N, I, 173. Date: possibly Mar 39, following the expenses resulting from his father's move to Alphington.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir,

I very sincerely regret that I cannot do what you require just now, having had a most serious drawback this month which has rendered it necessary for me to draw a hundred pounds[†1] at a time when it was of the very utmost importance that it should be elsewhere. If £10 on the last day of this month will be of service to you, and you will let me hear from you to that effect, you may depend upon it.[†2]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS MITTON, [22 MARCH 1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 1839 on handwriting; CD was presumably writing on the Friday before 29 Mar, Good Friday. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | Southampton Buildings.

Doughty Street | Friday Morning

[D]ear[†3] Tom

Bradbury and Evans are driving me so [ha]rd in consequence of the coming of [G]ood Friday and Easter Week, that I fear I must postpone our engagement for to-day, and stick to the work. To which end I shall dine early.

I will call upon you early on Monday Morning.

Always Faithfully
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, [22 MARCH 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the day before Sat 23 Mar, when Macready called on CD to discuss Haynes Bayly and CD "promised to go to the Literary Fund about the £50" (Macready, Diaries, I, 503); "finishing Nickleby for the month" supports.

Doughty Street | Friday

My Dear Macready.

What have you done about Haynes Bayley? Is any application to be made to the Literary Fund tomorrow?[†1] The committee meet at Three o'Clock. I am very busy finishing Nickleby for the month, but if[†2] his case is to be brought forward, I shall make a point of attending and supporting his claim.

Perhaps if it is too much out of your way to call here as you go to the Theatre tomorrow morning, you will write me a line and say yes or no to this, so that I may act accordingly,

Believing me always
Most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, [?23 MARCH 1839]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Handwriting points to Spring 1839; probably the Saturday before the Shakespeare Club dinner of 30 Mar, when CD was in the chair (Macready, Diaries, I, 504).

Doughty Street | Saturday Night.

My Dear Sir

I shall have a hard week's work and very late hours at my Desk; but I shall be at the service of the Club notwithstanding, and only too happy if I can save them any inconvenience by appearing as the faint shadow of their proper President.[†3]

Believe me (in haste)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Stone Esquire

To HENRY COLBURN, 25 MARCH 1839

Extract in N, I, 208; dated 48 Doughty Street, 25 March 39.

Will you make arrangements with some printer for getting on with Mrs. Macrone's book.[†4] I shall be ready to give out the copy this week.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 26 MARCH 1839†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning March 26th. 1839.

My dear Ainsworth.

If the subject of this letter, or anything contained in it, should eventually become the occasion of any disagreement between you and me, it would cause me very deep and sincere regret. But with this contingency — even this — before me, I feel that I must speak out without reserve and that every manly honest and just consideration impels me to do so.

By some means — by what means in the first instance I scarcely know — the late negociation's[†1] between yourself myself and Mr. Bentley, have placed a mutual friend of ours in a false position and one in which he has no right to stand; and exposed him to an accusation — very rife and current indeed, just now — equally untrue and undeserved, namely that he, who a short time before had pledged himself to Mr. Bentley (in the presence of Mr. Follett) to see my last agreement with that person executed and carried out, counselled me to break it and in fact entangled and entrapped the innocent and unsuspecting bookseller — who being all honesty himself had a child-like confidence in others — into taking such steps as led to that result.

Now I wish to remind you — †afor a purpose which I will tell you presently†a — that even by me no agreement whatever was broken; that I demanded a postponement of my agreement for the term of six months — that Forster (to whom I have been alluding of course) expressly and positively said when you pressed upon me the hardship of my relations with that noblest work of God, in New Burlington Street, that he could not and would not be any party to a new disruption between us — that he was bound to see the old agreement performed†2 — that he wrote to Mr. Bentley warning him of my dissatisfaction — that he saw Mr. Bentley for a full hour, in his own rooms †b(a man must be in earnest to do that)†b — read to him a letter of mine†3 in which I had expressed my feelings on the subject and strongly urged upon him the necessity and propriety of some concession — that Mr. Bentley went away thanking him and appointing to call again — that he never called again — that he wrote me an insulting letter dictated by his lawyers†4 — that Forster then washed his hands of any further interference between us — that Mr. Bentley then went out to you at Kensal Green — and that you and he, between you, and without any previous consultation or advising with Forster settled upon certain terms and conditions†5 which were afterwards proposed to me through you, and communicated to Forster, for the first time and to his unbounded astonishment, by both of us.†1

I remind you of all this because Mr. Bentley is going about town stating in every quarter what may or may not be his real impression of Forster's course — †cbecause Mr. Bentley does appeal as an authority to you — because you do countenance Mr. Bentley in these proceedings by hearing him express his opinion of Forster and not contradicting him — and have aggravated him, indeed, by such thoughtless acts as first procuring an unfavorable notice of the Miscellany in the Examiner†2 (by dint of urgent solicitation) and then shewing it to him with assumed vexation and displeasure.†c I remind you of all this, because Forster must and shall be set right — not with Mr. Bentley, but with the men to whom these stories are carried, and his friends as well as foes — because there are but two persons who can set him right — and because I wish to know distinctly from you who shall do so, without the delay of an instant — You or I.

There is another reason which renders this absolutely necessary. Forster, acting for Mr. Savage Landor, arranged with Mr. Bentley for the publication of two tragedies by that gentleman,†3 which were proceeding rapidly through the Press when these matters occurred, and have since been taken from the printers by Mr. Bentley — not published, though the time agreed upon is long past; not advertized though they should have been long ago†4 — their existence not recognized in any way — †dand all this as a means of annoyance and revenge against Forster who is placed in the most painful situation with regard to Mr. Landor, that it is possible to conceive.

Mr. Landor who holds such men as Mr. Bentley in as little consideration as the mud of the streets, and[†d] who is violent and reckless when exasperated, is as certain by some public act to punish the bookseller for this treatment (if he be not prevented by an immediate atonement) as the Sun is to rise tomorrow. This would entail upon me the immediate necessity, in explanation of the circumstances which led to it, of laying a full history of these proceedings before the public, [†e]and the consequence would be that we and our private affairs would be dragged into newspaper notoriety and involved in controversy and discussion, for the pain of which nothing could ever compensate.[†e]

But however painful it will be to me to put myself in communication once again with Mr. Bentley, and openly appeal to you to confirm what I shall tell him, I have no alternative unless you will frankly and openly and for the sake of your old friend as well as my intimate and valued one, avow to Mr. Bentley yourself that he is not to blame, that you heard him again and again refuse to interfere although deeply impressed with the hardship of my case — and that you proposed concessions which he — feeling the position in which he stood — could not have suggested. Believe me Ainsworth that for your sake no less than on Forster's account, this should be done.[†1] [†f]You do not see it I know, you do not mean it I am persuaded, but he is impressed with the idea, and nine men out of ten would be (if these matters were stated by anybody but you) that to enable yourself to gain your object and stand in your present relations towards Mr. Bentley, you have used him as an instrument by suppressing that which would have shewn his conduct in the best and truest light, and have shrunk from the friendly and manly avowal of feeling which your own impulses and freer and less worldly considerations so generously prompted.

Once more let me say that[†f] I do not mean to hurt or offend you by anything I have said, and that I should be truly grieved to find I have done so. But I must speak strongly because I feel strongly, and because I have a misgiving that even now I have been silent too long.

My Dear Ainsworth I am
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Ainsworth Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26 MARCH 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to 1839; after engagement of Topping in Mar 39 and probably before CD left for Petersham on 30 Apr. (He was not living in London again until Oct, by which time the last Nos of Nickleby were in print and no proof-correcting was necessary.) Perhaps the day of his visit to Mrs Talfourd mentioned in next.

My Dear Forster

I am correcting the proofs and have but a minute to spare.

To Mrs. Talfourd's we must go, but we can go to Finchley too. Topping will be with you at 25 minutes past two. Then come on to me at Maclise's and don't keep him waiting.

Faithfully Always

CD

To THOMAS MITTON, [?26 MARCH 1839]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Spring 1839 on handwriting; promise of the cheque, supported by reference to Kensal Green (see fn), suggests the day before next.

Tuesday

Dear Tom

I was prevented from keeping my appointment with you to-day — firstly by Frederick, secondly by little Hall, and thirdly by circumstances which rendered it necessary for me to pay an unpleasant visit to Kensal Green[†1] whence I have only now returned barely in time for Mrs. Talfourd's.

I will inclose you the cheque early in the morning — by 10 OClock. You will be glad to hear that Stanley[†2] sent for Fred to the Treasury this morning, and appointed him to the Secretary's Office in the Custom House[†3] — a "much better place" but how much until he has [enquired][†4] I don't know.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thos. Mitton Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?27 MARCH 1839]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Spring 1839 on handwriting; a payment of £50 to Mitton on Thurs 28 Mar is recorded in CD's Account-book (MS Messrs Coutts).

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

Dear Tom

I inclose a cheque for £50. You know there are some I have to pay myself, and as well as I remember — excluding Parrell[†1] — this will be more than our unknown genius[†2] (unknown at least, to me,) will require.

Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To J. H. CARLETON,[†3] 27 MARCH 1839*

MS Harvard College Library. Address: Mr. James Henry Carleton | Bangor | Maine | United States.

48 Doughty Street London | March 27th. 1839.

Dear Sir.

Your letter has occasioned me very great embarrassment. I am most anxious to respond to the frank and confiding feeling in which it is written, and to answer it in the gentlest and kindest tone. And yet I fear I shall offend you — for the moment merely — or disappoint you, which I should regret even more.

To tell you that your self-education and perseverance under such circumstances as you describe, are most honorable and praiseworthy, would be merely to tell you what you know and very properly feel already. But to tack to this tardy encouragement, an earnest caution that you consider well before you mistake your future course in life and struggle through a troublesome and thorny track in which the tombs of many great and adventurous spirits like the stone-stricken adventurers in the Eastern Tale warn you to recede[†4] — to remind you how many men who have gone before, have confounded thoughts and impulses with the power of realizing them, and languished in hopeless obscurity and chilling neglect — to entreat you to consider that in quitting your own country for England, bound on that most precarious and uncertain voyage, the quest of literary fame, you are deserting a certainty which might be comfort and content for an uncertainty which may be all bitterness and sorrow — to point out to you the numerous obstacles in the way, to which even your eyes are now partially opened — these are most unpalatable hints I know, but, notwithstanding, I feel it my bounden duty to lay them thus briefly before you and to beg you to reflect upon them seriously and often.

I am not, of course, so good a Judge as you should be of the degree of encouragement which America affords to her own Citizens. At the same time I cannot but think that good tales — especially such as you describe, connected with the customs and history of her aboriginal inhabitants who every day become more interesting as their numbers diminish — would surely find some patrons and readers in her great Cities. If they do not, I should very nigh despair of their ever being read or appreciated here. I can call no parallel case to mind, to which this argument does not strongly apply. I see your newspapers and Magazines — usually the readiest channels for beginners here — crowded with contributions from American Writers. It may be that interest, influence, good fortune, or a thousand things may be necessary to give a reasonable chance of success, and that a young and unknown man has great impediments and difficulties to contend against. Believe me that this is not peculiar to America, and that in England his difficulties are most mighty and gigantic.

You wish to know whether, in the event of your coming to England, you might command me as a friend. My inability to answer that question, is in exact proportion to the great weight I attach to the name, and the care with which I bestow it upon but a few out of troops of acquainta[nces.][†1] I have some friends who have been my friends from boys, and others — more intimate still — whom I have known but a few months or years. I hope that most young men who have appealed to me, have had such sympathy and assistance as I could render them. But they have not been among my "friends" for all that; and to pledge myself to find a friend in a man whom I have never seen and with the whole tenor of whose thoughts and feelings I am unacquainted — save as I find them expressed in one enthusiastic letter — would be to prostitute the term, and not, I am convinced, to advance myself in your estimation when you came to consider the subject more dispassionately and calmly.

Advise you as a countryman and [a brother, I will.][†2] And my advice is, that you satisfy yourself beyond all doubt that you are qualified for the course to which you now aspire — that you employ that perseverance of which you speak, in the sphere that is open to you — that you try to achieve something in your own land before you venture on a strange one — and that 'ere you wander from home you feel quite sure that you are neglected at home, and are really summoned elsewhere. Otherwise, the more enthusiastic, the more lofty the more fervent your aspirations, the more certain and complete will be the dejection and disappointment of your after-life.

I am, Dear Sir,
Yours very truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE MARCH 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: The Boy's Country Book; being the Real Life of a Country Boy [by William Howitt] was reviewed in the Examiner, 7 Apr 39. Presumably "copy" here was CD's review on 31 Mar of The Ballantyne-Humbug Handled (see To Forster, 29 Aug 38, fn). Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

Behold copy — and send again between 6 & 7.

I don't think you'll want the Country Boy, for I shall have three or four slips more of this. Tell me whether you will or no.

Always
CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [29 MARCH 1839]*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales. Date: The Loving Ballad of Lord Bateman was published in June 1839. Good Friday was 29 Mar that year.

Good Friday

My Dear Georgius.

I forgot I was engaged ('till Missis reminded me) for next Wedy. You left Lord Bateman[†1] as he appeared when the Turkish Lady drank[†2] his health.[†3] Here he is.

In haste
CD[†4]

To WILLIAM BEHNES,[†1] [?MARCH 1839]

MS Mr W. J. Carlton. Date: Signature suggests Spring 1839, probably March.

48 Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

With a sorrowful pen and a contrite heart, I sit down to tell you that I lost your card (a matter of course with me) before the dinner was over the other day — that I booked my engagement to you for the following Tuesday with great gravity and precaution — and found when Tuesday morning came and I was all ready to come also, that I was prevented by the one trivial circumstance of not having the faintest idea where you lived.

In this unhappy state I remained up to last evening when a friend who called here, related how that he had a friend who knew a man who had been once heard to say that you lived in Osnaburgh Street near the Regent's Park. Having been a pretty close prisoner at my desk for the last fortnight I have not had an opportunity of seeking more authentic information, and I now send this Dove through the Post Office in quest of your studio. If any other Dove should return on twopenny wings bearing but a leaf of olive in assurance of your yet peaceful disposition towards me, I shall be but too happy to avail myself of a second opportunity of knowing you.

I feel the absurdity of telling a man so famous as you that one didn't know where to find him. But I really did not, and my failing to inquire in quarters where I might have learnt, is attributible[†2] — not to constitutional laziness but constitutional activity in other matters, which often leaves me for weeks together nothing but pen ink and paper and the best means of using them, to think of.

Believe me My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Behnes Esquire

April

To J. P. HARLEY, 1 APRIL 1839*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday April 1st. 1839.

My Dear Harley.

Behold the Oliver and the American Pickwick. I'll enquire after my head,[†1] and tell the present possessor that I can't do without it any longer.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 1 APRIL 1839*

MS Morgan Library.

Doughty Street | Monday April 1st. 1839.

Dear Ainsworth.

I preferred the "formality of a correspondence" between us, because what we had to say bore reference to a third person,[†2] and I have had sufficient experience of the mistakes and misconstructions to which conversations are liable in such cases.

It is not a point of any importance, but I think you must confound me with somebody else, when you speak of our discussing at Macready's, the subject of the Examiner Notice.[†3] If we did, I have most strangely and unaccountably forgotten it. The impression on my mind is, that we never exchanged a word upon the subject except here, one morning, and that from you I never heard one word relative to your having shewn it to Mr. Bentley. I am not infallible, and may possibly be mistaken.

I have forwarded your letter to Mr. Forster, together with that from Mr. Bentley[†4] beginning "My dear Ainsworth" and ending "Ever my dear Ainsworth, faithfully Yours" — &c — and with that, my share in these proceedings is at an end.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Ainsworth Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 APRIL 1839

Extract in Thomas F. Madigan catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated London, 4 Apr 39.

I am so much engaged just now, and have so many prior claims in England, and one in America, that I cannot possibly enter into any new engagements (even engagements to the ladies of New York)[†1] however much I may feel disposed to do so.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [APRIL 1839]

Mention in To Mitton, 7 Apr 39.

Replying to an advertisement of a "villa". [†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, [7 APRIL 1839]

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the day after Sat 6 Apr when Macready decided to announce his retirement from Covent Garden (Diaries, I, 506).

Doughty Street. | Sunday.

My Dear Macready.

I will have, if you please, three dozen (that's meant for 3)[†3] of the extraordinary champagne; and I am much obliged to you for recollecting me.

I ought not to be sorry to hear of your abdication,[†4] but I am notwithstanding — most heartily and sincerely sorry, for my own sake and the sake of thousands who may now go and whistle for a Theatre — at least such a Theatre as you gave them. And I do now in my heart believe that for a long and dreary time that exquisite delight has passed away. If I may jest with my misfortunes and quote the Portsmouth critic of Mr. Crummles's company, I say that "as an exquisite embodiment of the poet's visions and a realisation of human intellectuality gilding with refulgent light our dreamy moments, and laying open a new and magic world before the mental eye, the drama is gone — perfectly gone."[†5]

With the same perverse and unaccountable feeling which causes a heartbroken man at a dear friend's funeral to see something irresistibly comical in a red-nosed or one-eyed undertaker, I receive your communication with ghastly facetiousness. Though on a moment's reflection I find better cause for consolation in the hope that relieved from your most trying and painful duties, you will now have leisure to return to pursuits more congenial to your mind, and to move more easily and pleasantly among your friends. In the long catalogue of the latter, believe that there is not one prouder of the name or more grateful for the store of delightful recollections you have enabled him to heap up from boyhood, than My Dear Macready

Yours always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]I inclose the cheque for HB, which I ought to have sent you before.[†a†1]

To THOMAS MITTON, [7 APRIL 1839]

MS Huntington Library. Date: same day as last. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | Southampton Buildings.

Doughty Street. | Sunday.

Dear Tom

I am doing the Snail at present — not the Railroad, and if I finish the next No. by next Saturday shall consider myself well off. The devil of it is, that I am afraid I must spoil a number now and then, for the sake of the book. It's a hard case, but I ought to be hard as iron to my own inclinations and do so.[†2]

I am sorry to say that I had a note from Macready to-night, saying that the negociations with the proprietors have terminated in his final abandonment of the Theatre. The next Lessee, whoever he is, will have a good chance of making his fortune[†3] — Don't you think so? This is "Most private" at present, of course.

I almost forgot that I am writing to say how much obliged to you I am for your alacrity in sending me the advertisement of the "Willa".[†4] I answered it directly. Further particulars in future bills.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

The King Street business has almost floored me.[†5] If Coutts's were to be broken open by a riotous mob tomorrow,[†6] I should be quite magnanimous and christian-like.

To J. P. HARLEY, [8 APRIL 1839]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly the invitation to which Harley sent a verse reply on 9 Apr: see fn.

Two Aunts and two uncles, a sister and brother,
Dine with us next Wen'sday; — will you make another?

Doughty Street | Monday Evening.

My Dear Harley.

The above though exquisitely poetical is literally matter-of-fact. The hour is Six. If you are put up for the afterpiece, we'll let you go, and if you an't, why then we won't. Do come; and don't ever leave off believing that I shall ever keep on perpetually remaining

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

J. P. Harley Esquire
&c &c

To J. P. HARLEY, 9 APRIL 1839

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

[Doughty Street April 9th. 1839][†2]

RECITATIVE

You're wery funny so you air,
Good peoples' sides you shake,
But in that 'ere poetic flare
You've made a small mistake;
For "Thursday"[†3] ain't the day young Snipe,
But "Wen'sday"[†4] is the cry:

So please to put that in your pipe
And act according-ly.

AIR

Oh come then tomorrow and taste of that cheer
Purwided for good 'uns like you:

With the light of your countenance soften my beer,
My champagne, and my other Wines too.
And if in your fun, of that Beer you should think,
(For you are old Momus's child)
Take a maxim from it while your sherry you drink,
And pray Harley — pray — draw it mild.
Oh come then tomorrow when church-clocks strike six,
Dum vivimus — live while we may —
And when you have eaten and drunk too "like bricks",[†1]
Oh then, like the Page — "Go and Play".[†2]
[Please to hang up this bill in the kitchen.][†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, [11 APRIL 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Clearly CD was writing the day after T. J. Serle's defence of Macready at the meeting held on 10 Apr: see fn.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Macready.

Nicklebeian fetters bind me here to-night. I may not sup abroad.

I am in perfect [tran]sports[†4] this morning with Se[arle.][†4] I cross-examined somebody last night who was at the meeting yesterday, and he (Searle[†5] that [is)] seems to have stood up most manfully and gallantly.[†6] It does my heart good to think of him. I could hug him for it, or Mrs Searle[†7] either, if it were strictly platonic.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, [11 APRIL 1839]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 12 Apr 39 (Friday). Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Beard

I am in a manner obliged to dine with Lord Jeffrey next Sunday, for he has just come to town and makes but a short stay.

As you are a much older acquaintance than he or any other lord I shall use you as one and ask you to say Sunday Week at half past four for dining here, instead of next Sunday. I hope by that time I shall be enabled to report final arrangements relative to the Twickenham matter, which is still in abeyance.

I long to be in the fields again. I am so unsettled with hope that I can scarcely work.

Best remembrances
Always My Dear Beard
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To JOHN MURRAY,[†1] 12 APRIL 1839*

MS Sir John Murray.

48 Doughty Street | April 12th. 1839

My Dear Sir.

My friend Mr. Bell,[†2] the bearer or sender of this note, is a gentleman who wishes an introduction to you. Let me tell you first what he is, and next what he wants.

He is a gentleman who has been for some years engaged in writing leading articles for the public papers — who once engaged in the expensive amusement of establishing a new property of that description — who has recently put forth some opinions through the same medium which has attracted my great attention and regard — and for whose strict honor, punctuality, perseverance, and zealous devotion to anything in which he engages, I cannot too strongly or warmly vouch. He is a man of very great acquirements, very deeply versed in political science and many abstruse works and questions of which most people know little but the names, and has habits and opportunities of research, of which — as I hope you will have an opportunity of testing their usefulness — I will say no more than that they are very rare and most highly valuable.

This gentleman having seen the announcements of your forthcoming "Universal Biography"[†3] has thought that in a work of such great labor and extent you might possibly require such assistance as it [is] in his power to render towards it. He has spoken to me upon the subject and as I think it highly probable that he may be correct in this supposition, I have readily given him this letter. Not to detain you, I refer you (if your arrangements are not wholly completed) for any further information to himself; merely begging you to understand that if this were an ordinary case, or one in which I did not feel very strongly or was not well assured of the merit and ability of the party, I would not thus have troubled you.

I beg my compliments to your father. I address this letter to you under the impression that it may reach both of you sooner by finding you in Albemarle Street. I hope you may one of these days have it in your power to retort an introduction upon me. And I am My Dear Sir

Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Junr. Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, [15 APRIL 1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: On 11 Apr "the Twickenham matter" was "still in abeyance" (To Beard, that day); CD was clearly writing on Mon 15th (see postscript).

Dr. Tom

Twickenham Park can't be had. I am wild with apprehension, and start at ½ past 10 this morning for Richmond, Petersham, and Hampton.

Is business very pressing? Or can you get anybody to mind the Shop — and come with us?
Faithfully CD.

Monday Morning

15th:[†1] end of 1st. chapter in next No.[†2]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 19 APRIL 1839*

MS Mrs Murray Sowerby.

Doughty Street. | April 19th. 1839.

My Dear Thompson.

I know not how to thank you for your elegant and most gratifying present.[†3] If I could imagine such a case in a work of fiction I might perhaps do justice to the feelings of the receiver, but when it comes home to myself I am quite powerless and have not words to use.

Believe me that among some most pleasant and happy recollections which it is my good fortune to entertain, this will henceforth occupy a conspicuous and prominent place; and that I am most sincere in expressing my earnest hope that this is but the commencement of a friendship between us, of which the best memorial will be in the hearts of both.

As you have added so materially to the cheerful thoughts of which an author who seeks to beguile men of their cares need have a plentiful store — and given me a testimonial of your kind feeling of which my children will one day have reason to be very proud — I hope you will not forget that henceforth you have some share in my works, and that when you meet with anything of which you particularly approve you will say (as you will have good reason) — "I had a hand in that."

Believe that I am always
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To ANDREW BISSETT,[†1] 25 APRIL 1839

Composite text from American Book Prices Current, 1941, Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4148 (1935), and Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Doughty Street, 25 Apr 39.

I have to thank you and Mr. Chadwick[†2] for the constabulary report. He goes on to say that he has read it with the greatest interest ... though it contains a vast number of statements which must be taken with great allowance, the sources whence they are drawn being so very impure, and these fellows being, as Chesterton and all governors of Jails will know, the most extraordinary and gratuitous liars that ever drew the breath of life[†3] ... I will be [at] the Scholar's Hall, and take care that you have it. I shall send on in a week or two a proof of the article[†4] you were so kind as to give me for Mrs. Macrone's book.

To WILLIAM LONGMAN,[†5] 26 APRIL 1839

Extract in Union Galleries catalogue No. 33; MS 3 pp.; dated 26 Apr 39.

Engagements of business and engagements of (so-called) pleasure come upon me in such showers that this week and next week I am booked for no peace or quiet. I shall be at Petersham from the latter end of next week until the end of September. If you will write to me here (the letter will be forwarded) appointing any day that may be convenient, except the 10th of May, on Saturday or on Monday — any other day but those — I shall gladly respond to your call and present myself at Hampstead. The longer the notice the better, May, June, July, August, or September.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

William Longman, Esquire

To FRANK STONE, [?APRIL 1839]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Handwriting suggests not long before his departure for Petersham at the end of April.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

Say Friday Morning at 12 — or any hour on Friday that will suit you best, so that you let me know (if there is any change in the time) beforehand.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Stone Esquire

To J. A. OVERS [?APRIL 1839]

Mention in To Overs, 27 Sep 39. Date: clearly sometime before CD left for Petersham, since, between writing this and the letter of 27 Sep, he had been "out of town, in different places, for some months".

Concerning Overs's songs.

To WILLIAM LONGMAN, [?APRIL 1839]

Text from MDGH, I, 24. Date: Since CD had met Sydney Smith (see Diary entry, p. 641) by the time he returned to London in Aug, this was clearly written some time before he left for Petersham.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My dear Sir,

On Friday I have a family dinner at home — uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters, cousins — an annual gathering.

By what fatality is it that you always ask me to dine on the wrong day?

While you are tracing this non-consequence to its cause, I wish you would tell Mr. Sydney Smith that of all the men I ever heard of and never saw, I have the greatest curiosity to see and the greatest interest to know him.

Begging my best compliments at home,

I am, my dear Sir,
Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [1837-APRIL 1839]*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop. Date: some time in the Doughty Street period, while working on either Pickwick or Nickleby. Since CD had no proofs on hand in the weeks between his return to London (after Petersham and Broadstairs) and the move to Devonshire Terrace, this must have been written before he left London.

Doughty Street | Thursday

Dr. Sirs

Pray send me a proof of the plates. I am stopping for the first one.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman & Hall

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS,[†1] [1837-APRIL 1839]

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 522 (1929); MS 1 p.; from Doughty Street. Date: as last.

I have one hundred slips of copy ready for you,[†2] but cannot send it 'till I see Mr. Browne whom I have expected these two days. If he comes today, I can send you more than two sheets tonight.

May

To S. C. HALL, 7 MAY 1839*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Doughty Street. | May 7th. 1839.[†3]

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks to you — not so much for the words being helping words, but for their most kind and friendly tone, which comes home to me more.

My best regards to Mrs. Hall. And believe me always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. C. Hall Esquire.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD, 7 MAY 1839

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1891.

To J. A. OVERS, 8 MAY 1839

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mr. J. A. Overs | Messrs. Springweiler & Co.[†1] | 2 Duke Street | West Smithfield | London.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday May 8th. 1839.

Sir.

I fear you are right in your conjectures — appearances look very like it.

I think if I were you I should address a private note to Mr. Ainsworth, reminding him that I placed in his own hands a composition of yours[†2] — informing him that you have sent others to the bookseller[†3] without receiving the smallest notice — and that you hope his respect for me, if not his courtesy towards a humble contributor who has treated him with no disrespect or petulance, will at least induce him to secure the return of your papers, if it does not prompt that common notice and attention which every decent man deserves from another.[†4]

I believe the bookseller is the active person in the Magazine at present,[†5] and you may possibly have heard that booksellers (as a class) are not remarkable for anything but dishonesty. But you may very fairly address Mr. Ainsworth notwithstanding — firstly because you are not supposed to be aware of this circumstance — and secondly because my having communicated personally with that gentleman respecting you, when I declined further connection with the Miscellany, gives you a direct claim upon him.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 MAY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: CD, presumably accompanied by Catherine, went to Virginius on Mon 13 May 39, the last performance that season (Macready, Diaries, II, 3).

Petersham | Thursday Evening

My Dear Forster.

I cannot say for certain whether we shall be able to come to town next Monday or no. I think it probable we may. As I am very anxious that Kate should see Virginius[†6] I shall do my best towards that end.

Perhaps the best way will be for you (if you will take the trouble) to ask Macready to oblige me with a box if convenient, and to send your boy with the ticket inclosed to Doughty Street before 2 oClock on Saturday. If you can manage to do so, Fred will bring it down and we can go straight to the Theatre from here.

How do you get on? I move but slowly.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES HICKS, [?10 MAY 1839]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly May, since Madeline Bray is first mentioned by name in the June Nickleby (Ch. 46); CD was probably writing on the 10th, expecting Evans to receive the enclosed copy next day — in fact on the 11th.

Elm Cottage, Petersham, Surrey | Friday Evening

Dear Mr Hicks

The copy which precedes that now inclosed has gone to Mr. Browne,[†1] who will send it to Chapman and Hall who will send it to you. In the first half of slip 20, "Cray" is written for "Bray", and "Janet" for "Madeline". Perhaps you will alter this, if you remember it, and save your readers some botheration. Please to be careful of the MS.

Send me the proof, if you please, by the twopenny post. I hope to get on like a house on fire, and will of course come up to town to correct the last chapters, and lose no time in sending copy as I write it.

My compliments to Mr. Evans and ask him what will be his feelings when he gets the copy on the 10th.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Hicks

To THOMAS MITTON, 13 MAY 1839

MS Huntington Library.

Elm Cottage Petersham. | Monday May 13th. 1839

My Dear Sir.

You wish to know what my recollection is, of the arrangements I had with Mr. Macrone relative to my Sketches. I will tell you.

For the first edition of the first Series, I had, three or four days after the publication £100. I never was a partner, I never signed any agreement to be a partner, I never claimed or received one six pence as a partner, in the publication of that work.[†1]

I think for the first edition of the Second Series, I had a hundred and fifty pounds, but I am not certain what the precise amount may have been. I only know that I had no partner's share — no share at all — in the profits, and never dreamt of such a thing. A dispute arose between myself and Mr. Macrone whether an agreement for a novel,[†2] which we had together, was not understood to be cancelled between us. As it was not actually cancelled and he had the legal power of enforcing it, or claiming damages against me, I — upon the negociation of this very same Mr. Hansard who acted for "his friend" Mr. Macrone, and acted so very strongly too, that my friends and I always supposed him to have been a pretty considerable sharer with that gentleman in the profits of my works — I gave up to Mr. Macrone the copyright of both series of Sketches on getting back the novel agreement.[†3] The rest you know. First and last by those books, I had some 400£.[†4] Macrone had some £4000[†4], and the copyrights were purchased back again by Chapman and Hall for £2,000.

Of this purchase Mr. Hansard was cognizant, and not a word said he, then, of his bill being unpaid or my having ever been a partner — which indeed he knows I never was, as well as any man alive, and better. For all evidence and explanation upon these matters, pray apply to my friend Mr. Forster, who negociated matters on my behalf with Mr. Macrone and his fidus Achates Mr. Hansard, and can set the question entirely at rest. Whatever you do, pray apply to me no more. You have my assurance that I will not pay this money or a six pence of it.[†5] I will not characterize this proceeding of the printer's just now as it deserves, but I'll bide my time, and may perhaps have a word or two to say about it one of these days which will raise his honest wrath.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To MISS MARION ELY, [?MAY 1839]

Text from N, I, 126. Date: probably not long after the beginning of one of CD's absences from London, either at Twickenham in Summer 1838 or at Petersham in Summer 1839.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My dear Miss Ely,

I did not receive your note until I came home here after the play last night.[†1] I need scarcely tell you that if I had been more fortunate and less foolish (for I might have had it sooner, it seems) I should have been most delighted to avail myself of the Invitation it contains.

The next time you give me a similar notice, give me in charity a longer one. For although I shall receive all future letters that may be sent here in quicker time, still I shall be out of town and may have to wait a little.

With best regards at home
Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FRANK STONE, [15 MAY 1839]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: PM 15 May 39.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Near Richmond | Wednesday

My Dear Stone.

I shall be "to the fore" on Saturday.[†2] Burnett's ticket I have sent him. If you have any other communication to send me and will address it straight here, it will come to me direct.

In haste
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Stone Esquire.

To SAMUEL LOVER, [?29 MAY 1839]

Extract in Edgar H. Wells & Co. catalogue No. 15 (1926); dated Doughty Street, Wednesday Morning — perhaps the Wednesday before the celebration on board HMS Howe of 1 June 39.

My dear Lover. I am sorry to say that a month's laziness will prevent my forming one of the party to H.M.S. Howe which is a great disappointment to me as I have no doubt it will be to the vessel.[†3] I received a note from the aforesaid Howe 3 or 4 days back which I wish to answer. I may trouble you I suppose to bear so will send it to you on Friday evening and if you can remember to deliver it and not bring it back again in your pocket will increase the obligation.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?MAY 1839]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Clearly refers to Lord Bateman; CD could hardly be writing later than May, since by 15 June the ballad (see fn) was advertised as published.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Friday Night

My Dear George.

I send you the song. I have altered a line or a word here and there, and substituted a new last verse for the old one. I have also added some notes, though it was not easy to make anything of them, for the song's too good.

I have not been able to see Mrs. Burnett. She lives in Argyll Street King's Cross — the last house but one on the left — name on the door. Your shortest plan will be to write her a line and ask her when you can call and hum the tune while she jots it down. Tell her to be sure to mark the shakes and the expression.[†1]

You had better let me have the proofs to look over.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

June

To THOMAS BEARD, [7 JUNE 1839]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 7 June 39. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Petersham | Friday Morning

My Dear Beard

Come down at your own time and in your own way. We shall then be sure of no mistakes which otherwise I apprehend.

Always yours faithfully
& at present hastily
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [7 JUNE 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: plainly the same day as next.

Elm Cottage Petersham. | Friday Morning

My Dear Macready.

Enticed by sundry dark and mysterious invitations from Stanfield,[†1] I am coming to your Rehearsal[†2] tomorrow night — for which condescension I dare say you are exceedingly obliged to me. But I have a friend[†3] stopping here whom I cannot leave behind, and wish to bring too. I know that if you have the smallest objection, you will not hesitate to write a line to Doughty Street and tell me so, and you know that I shall only feel gratified by your treating me in this, as in all other matters, without ceremony. Therefore my conscience does not reproach me for preferring this humble suit by post, although it warns me not to waste your time by writing another word

Always My Dear Macready
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 JUNE 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: On 8 June Macready recorded in his diary: "Forster, Mr. Kenyon, Dickens and his friend[, and][†4] Maclise came to the night rehearsal of King Henry V, which went off tolerably smoothly" (Diaries, II, 6).

Petersham. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster.

Thanks for the newspapers. I have barely time to acknowledge their receipt, for we are just starting (for the third time) to the Races,[†5] at which we have worked much harder than the running horses.

As there seems to be a probability that the Thompsons[†1] will favor us until Monday, I have written to Macready asking his permission to bring the excitable gentleman of that name to the rehearsal tomorrow night. Maclise (who will spend Sunday here) will join our little party too, but for him of course no permission is necessary.

As I presume that you have no wish for such a run upon your chops, the best plan will be for we three (Thompson, Mac, and I) to dine together and join you and Kenyon[†2] afterwards. At ½ past 12, or from that to 1 oClock, I shall see you on all other matters.

Faithfully Always

CD.

You shall have the full glory of breaking out to Maclise the coming jollity.[†3]

To E. W. BANKS,[†4] [10 JUNE 1839]*

MS Dickens House. Date: letter misdated by CD: PM appears to be 10 June (a Monday) and the cheque was presented on the 12th (CD's Account-book, MS Messrs Coutts). Address: Edward Banks Esquire | Witham | Kent. "Kent" crossed out by unknown hand, clearly because it should be Essex.

Petersham Surrey | Monday June 20th. 1839.

Dear Sir.

I have this day paid into Hankey's, a cheque for £30 — deducting from the half year's rent, the sum of £10 paid on the 25th. of April last for ground rent to Mr. Gotobed,[†5] whose receipt I have left out in Doughty Street under cover to you.

I am living out of town at present, and so missed your brother, which I trust, however, has not occasioned you any inconvenience.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Bankes[†6] Esquire.

To WILLIAM BEHNES, [11 JUNE 1839]

Text (in part from fascimile) from Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Apr 1941. Date: wrongly given as 11 June 55 in catalogue; must be 1839 since from Elm Cottage; confirmed by handwriting.

[†a]Left his home
On the evening of Tuesday the Thirtieth of April last,
A remarkable Dog
answering to the name of
B O Z .

He had on at the time a white collar, marked with the initials "C.D." (in marking ink) and was last seen, in company with some other dogs, lying on the banks of the Thames at Richmond.

He is decidedly a Setter,[†1]
And the property of Mr. Behnes of Osnaburgh Street Regent's Park.
He has been traced to
Elm Cottage, Petersham, Surrey,
Where it appears probable he will remain until the end of the summer.

This is to give notice

That if he be not restored to his owner by the 24th. of this present month (up to which time he will be perpetually engaged, it is supposed, in a monthly fit of barking to which he is unfortunately subject,)

The aforesaid Mr. Behnes
Will himself repair to Petersham on the finest morning he can select[†a] and claim his property.
Knives and Forks
have been seen in very suspicious attitudes on the premises, and there is strong reason to believe that the animal is fed on Joints, roast or boiled,
Every Day
at Half-past four.

To MISS MARY BERRY,[†1] [?JUNE 1839]

Text from N, I, 216. Date: CD dined with Miss Berry on 1 July (see Diary entry, p. 641); the reference to his work suggests the middle of the month.

Petersham | Wednesday Morning

Dear Miss Berry,

I am exceedingly sorry that I was, with Mrs. Dickens, at Windsor when you called. I still more regret that I am not able to dine with you to-day as I must shut myself up for my monthly labours, and remain shut up for ten days to come. When I emerge again, I shall hope to be enlightened on the subject of the Pictures,[†2] and I shall seek consolation, if not inspiration, in the thought.

Yours very truly
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 18 JUNE 1839*

MS Hr Jacob Christensen.

Elm Cottage | Petersham | Tuesday the 18*th.*[†3] (only) of June 1839

Dear Sirs.

I am quite astonished to find that you have not received the whole copy of the next No. which I can only conclude must have been stolen by some blackguard coachman.

Always ready to spare you trouble and uneasiness, I have rewritten the first chapter and will with great pleasure re-write the rest. The number will be a leetle later than I could wish, but this you will attribute (I know) to my good nature and friendliness, and the immorality of the Richmond coachmen, who are very benighted indeed. I know you are overflowing with gratitude, but that you needn't mention I assure you.

I send the first chapter with this — and am Dear Sirs

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 28 JUNE 1839*

MS Richmond Public Library.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Friday June 28th. 1839.

My Dear Maclise.

When I had read your note, I fell into a stupefaction from which I have not yet recovered, and under which I am still labouring so heavily that I have only sense and energy sufficient to say "Come down — Come down — Revive yourself by country air — Come down — and that without loss of time — and leave the rest to me, and I'll warrant you good health for 12 months at least. Come to the Shakspeare on Saturday, bring your bag with you, and return with me and the trusty Topping."

Beard is hearty, new and thicker ropes have been put up at the tree, the little birds have flown, their very nests have disappeared, the roads about are jewelled after dusk by glow-worms, the leaves are all out and the flowers too, swimming feats from Petersham to Richmond Bridge have been achieved before breakfast, I myself have risen at 6 and plunged head foremost into the water to the astonishment and admiration of all beholders, a series of performances have been invented for the swing which out-Blackmore Mr. Blackmore.[†1] You haven't a notion of the glories we have been working, which to be appreciated must be seen.

Your intelligence has so exhausted me, that I have but strength enough for one more word COME; and in that one strong gasp, I sink backward on the large sofa, and can add no more.

Ill! He ill![†2]
Any time while the —
Sick a gettin' up —
My strength is gone

To J. P. HARLEY, 28 JUNE 1839

MS John Rylands Library.

Elm Cottage Petersham | near Richmond | June 28th. 1839.

My Dear Harley.

I have "left my home" and been here ever since the end of April — and shall remain here, most probably, until the end of September; which is the reason that we have been such strangers of late.

I am very sorry that I cannot dine with you on Sunday, but some people are coming here and I cannot get away. "Better luck next time" I hope.

I was on the point of writing to you when your note came, to ask you if you would come down here next Saturday — tomorrow week, I mean — and stop 'till Monday. I will either call for you at the Theatre at any time you name, or send for you "punctiwal" and have you brought down. Can you come — if it's fine? Say yes, like a good fellow as you are, and say it Pr. post.

I have countermanded that face. Maclise has made another face of me,[†1] which all people say is astonishing. The engraving will be ready soon and I would rather you had that, as I am sure you would if you had seen it.

In great haste to save the post, I am My Dear Harley.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire.

To [WILLIAM] FINDEN,[†2] [?JUNE 1839]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 12 Dec 1950; MS 1 p.; from Petersham. Date: perhaps soon after last.

My mother who is resident in the country and shortly returning to the place from whence she came, is very anxious before she leaves town to see the Portrait of her beloved son.[†3]

July

To THE EDITOR OF THE KNICKERBOCKER MAGAZINE, [?JUNE or JULY 1839]

Extract in the Knickerbocker Magazine, New York, Aug 39, XIV, 196; quoted as "in a recent letter to us".

I never commit thoughts to paper until I am obliged to write, being better able to keep them in regular order, on different shelves of my brain, ready ticketed and labelled, to be brought out when I want them.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†1] 1 JULY 1839*

MS Morgan Library. Address: (in another hand, probably Catherine's) Miss Coutts | Stratton Street.

Doughty Street | Monday July 1st. 1839.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Coutts, and exceedingly regrets that a prior engagement prevents his accepting her and Lady Langham's[†2] invitation for the ninth, which he would otherwise have had great pleasure in doing.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [3 JULY 1839]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: This clearly refers to the notice in the Morning Post of 2 July: see fn.

Petersham. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank.

I understand that the Morning Post yesterday, mentioned me as "the author of the Introduction and Notes" to Lord Bateman.[†3] Pray be strict in not putting this about, as I am particularly — most particularly — anxious to remain unknown in the matter, for weighty reasons.[†4]

You never did anything like those etchings[†5] — never.

Always Yours

C.D.

To H. K. BROWNE, [EARLY JULY 1839]

Text from D. C. Thomson, Life and Labours of Hablot K. Browne, 1884, p. 73. Date: plainly early in July 39, since CD is giving the subject for the first illustration[†1] for the Aug Nickleby.

— A hairdresser's shop at night — not a dashing one, but a barber's. Morleena Kenwig[s] on a tall chair having her hair dressed by an underbred attendant with his hair parted down the middle, and frizzed up into curls at the sides. Another customer, who is being shaved, has just turned his head in the direction of Miss Kenwigs, and she and Newman Noggs (who has brought her there, and has been whiling away the time with an old newspaper), recognise, with manifestations of surprise, and Morleena with emotion, Mr. Lillyvick, the collector. Mr. Lillyvick's bristly beard expresses great neglect of his person, and he looks very grim and in the utmost despondency. —

To MRS JOHN DICKENS, [11 JULY 1839]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 JULY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: PM 13 July 39 (Saturday). Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields | London.

Petersham | Thursday Night.

My Dear Forster.

Read my mother's letter inclosed, and my reply (from which I have struck out sundry "sneezing"[†2] passages) and let Mitton have them, please. I do swear that I am sick at heart with both her and father too, and think this is too much.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, [11] JULY 1839

Text from The Poetical Works of Laman Blanchard, 1876, p. 39. Date: misread by Jerrold or misdated by CD, since 13 July 39 was Saturday. Clearly CD must have been writing the Thursday before Macready's farewell performance at Covent Garden on Tues 16 July.

Elm Cottage, Petersham | Thursday night, July 13 1839.

My dear Blanchard,

Living in these remote and distant parts, with the chain of mountains formed by Richmond Hill presenting an almost insurmountable barrier between me and the busy world, I know no more than that there is to be a dinner to Macready on Saturday week,[†1] and that I am a steward. But I shall be in town and at the theatre on Tuesday night. You will be there too, no doubt? In the Proscenium box on the Bow Street side I will hold further converse with you when the play is over; and if I have gained no further information by that time I will procure it for you next morning, and I have little doubt that I can "do your business" both ways. Macready has, as Talfourd judiciously and justly remarked in one of his speeches on the night of the Stone snuff-box,[†2] "cast a new grace round joy and gladness, and rendered mirth more holy!" Therefore are we preparing crowns and wreaths here, to shower upon the stage when that sad curtain falls[†3] and kivers[†4] up Shakspeare for years to come.[†5] I try to make a joke of it, but, upon my word, when the night comes I verily believe I shall cry.

I am very glad to read what you say about Nicholas. It is very difficult indeed to wind up so many people in parts, and make each part tell by itself, but I hope to go out with flying colours notwithstanding. I have been at work all day, so if this note is illegible it's not my fault, but number seventeen's, which is yet an infant.

Always believe me,
My dear Blanchard,
Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 JULY 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: endorsed in Forster's hand "July 39"; presumably the Sunday before Macready's farewell performance.

Petersham | Sunday

My Dear Forster

Your two Suns[†1] came safe to hand and were received with joyfulness.

I send you, in order that you may have time to make yourself master of the subject, my rough notes of proposals for the New Work.[†2] And now I tell you what I think, when you see Chapman and Hall, you may safely throw out: —

[†a]First, that they may admit you into their confidence with respect to what they mean to do at the conclusion of Nickleby, without admitting me.

Secondly, that I am well disposed towards them, and that if they do something handsome — even handsomer perhaps than they dreamt of doing — they will find it their interest and will find me tractable.

Thirdly. That I have had straightforward offers from responsible men to publish anything for me at a pr. centage on the profits, and take all the risk. But that I am unwilling to leave them, and have declared to you, that if they behave with liberality to me I will not on any consideration, although to a certain extent I certainly and surely must gain by it.

In addition to this, you may expatiate on the glories of this new project, and you may hint that when Barnaby is published[†3] I am clear of all engagements, and that if they wish to secure me and perpetuate our connection, now is the time for them to step gallantly forward and make such proposals as will produce that result.

I feel sure that if you do this, as I know you will,[†4] the negociation will be of the most vital importance to me and mine, and that a very great deal may be done to recompense your humble[†5] for very small profits and very large work as yet.

You will see that I have been thinking the subject over. Indeed I have been doing so to the great stoppage of Nickleby and the great worrying and fidgetting of myself.

I shall see you [please God][†1] on Tuesday Night. If they wait upon you on Wednesday, I shall remain in town until that evening.[†a] I say all this to you now, instead of on Tuesday, because we shall be excited and hurried then I know, and by this means you can receive it coolly.

I have had a petition from Frederick and Alfred for two corners of our Box. I suppose, "under the circumstarnces" there is no prejoction?[†2]

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

The Notes may be handed over to C & H when the palaver has been holden, of course.

[†b]I should be willing to commence on the thirty-first of March, 1840, a new publication consisting entirely of original matter, of which one number price threepence should be published every week, and of which a certain amount of numbers should form a volume, to be published at regular intervals.[†3] The best general idea of the plan of the work might be given perhaps by reference to The Tatler, The Spectator, and Goldsmith's Bee;[†4] but it would be far more popular both in the subjects of which it treats and its mode of treating them.

I should propose to start, as The Spectator does, with some pleasant fiction relative to the origin of the publication; to introduce a little club or knot of characters and to carry their personal histories and proceedings through the work; to introduce fresh characters constantly; to reintroduce Mr. Pickwick and Sam Weller,[†5] the latter of whom might furnish an occasional communication with great effect; to write amusing essays on the various foibles of the day as they arise; to take advantage of all passing events; and to vary the form of the papers by throwing them into sketches, essays, tales, adventures, letters from imaginary correspondents and so forth, so as to diversify the contents as much as possible.

In addition to this general design, I may add that under particular heads I should strive to establish certain features in the work, which should be so many veins of interest and amusement running through the whole. Thus the Chapters on Chambers which I have long thought and spoken of, might be very well incorporated with it;[†1] and a series of papers has occurred to me containing stories and descriptions of London as it was many years ago, as it is now, and as it will be many years hence, to which I would give some such title as The Relaxations of Gog and Magog,[†2] dividing them into portions like the Arabian Nights, and supposing Gog and Magog to entertain each other with such narrations in Guildhall all night long, and to break off every morning at daylight. An almost inexhaustible field of fun, raillery, and interest, would be laid upon by pursuing this idea.

I would also commence, and continue from time to time, a series of satirical papers purporting to be translated from some Savage Chronicles, and to describe the administration of justice in some country that never existed, and record the proceedings of its wise men.[†3] The object of this series (which if I can compare it with anything would be something between Gulliver's Travels and the Citizen of the World[†4]) would be to keep a special look-out upon the magistrates in town and country, and never to leave those worthies alone.

The quantity of each number that should be written by myself would be a matter for discussion and arrangement. Of course I should pledge and bind myself upon that head. Nobody but myself would ever pursue these ideas, but I must have assistance of course, and there must be some contents of a different kind. Their general nature might be agreed upon beforehand, but I should stipulate that this assistance is chosen solely by me, and that the contents of every number are as much under my own control, and subject to as little interference, as those of a number of Pickwick or Nickleby.

In order to give fresh novelty and interest to this undertaking, I should be ready to contract to go at any specified time (say in the midsummer or autumn of the year, when a sufficient quantity of matter in advance should have been prepared, or earlier if it were thought fit) either to Ireland or to America,[†5] and to write from thence a series of papers descriptive of the places and people I see, introducing local tales, traditions, and legends, something after the plan of Washington Irving's Alhambra.[†6] I should wish the republication of these papers in a separate form, with others to render the subject complete (if we should deem it advisable), to form part of the arrangement for the work; and I should wish the same provision to be made for the republication of the Gog and Magog series, or indeed any that I undertook.

This is a very rough and slight outline of the project I have in view. I am ready to talk the matter over, to give any further explanations, to consider any suggestions, or to go into the details of the subject immediately. I say nothing of the novelty of such a publication now-a-days or its chances of success. Of course I think them great, very great; indeed, almost beyond calculation, or I should not seek to bind myself to anything so extensive.

The heads of the terms upon which I should be prepared to go into the undertaking would be — That I be made a proprietor in the work and a sharer in the profits. That when I bind myself to write a certain portion of every number, I am ensured, for that writing, in every number a certain sum of money. That those who assist me, and contribute the remainder of every number, shall be paid by the publishers immediately after its appearance, according to a scale to be calculated and agreed upon, on presenting my order for the amount to which they may be respectively entitled. Or, if the publishers prefer it, that they agree to pay me a certain sum for the whole of every number, and leave me to make such arrangements for that part which I may not write, as I think best. Of course I should require that for these payments, or any other outlay connected with the work, I am not held accountable in any way; and that no portion of them is to be considered as received by me on account of the profits. I need not add that some arrangement would have to be made, if I undertake my Travels, relative to the expenses of travelling.

Now I want our publishing friends to take these things into consideration, and to give me the views and proposals they would be disposed to entertain when they have maturely considered the matter.[†2†b]

To J. P. HARLEY, [14 JULY 1839]*

MS Cornell University Library. Date: PM 16 July 39 (Tuesday) — presumably day of receipt. Address: J. P. Harley Esquire | 14 Upper Gower Street.

Petersham | Sunday Evening

My Dear Harley.

With joy and best regards[†1]

Faithfully Yours

BOZ.

J. P. Harley Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, [?17 JULY 1839]*

MS Private. Date: Probably refers to the dinner to Macready on 20 July; possibly written on Wed 17th when CD expected to be in London (To Forster, 14 July).

Doughty Street. | Wednesday afternoon

My Dear Stone.

I have been so very busy all day, that I have not been able to reach your house. I inclose you a couple of tickets — one for yourself and one for Charles Landseer.[†2] — I mentioned the matter you spoke of, but I believe the arrangements as to toasts are concluded.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Stone Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?22 JULY 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: perhaps the Monday before 25 July when CD dined with Miss Coutts: see To Mitton, 26 July. Address: Miss Coutts | Stratton Street.

Petersham. | Monday Morning.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Coutts, and has the greatest pleasure in accepting her kind Invitation.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?24 JULY 1839]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: probably Wed 24 July, the day before CD dined with Miss Coutts and went straight back to Petersham (see To Mitton, 26 July).

Petersham | Wednesday Noon

My Dear Maclise.

I am sure we both deserve — richly deserve — a holiday by this time. Come and ruralize again, and refresh your imagination. I dine in town tomorrow and shall leave for here[†1] at 10 at night. I have instructed Topping to call in Russell Place for yourself and bag at a quarter before 10. You can then come on to Miss Coutts's in Piccadilly (which is all in the way) and call for me.

You see it's of no use saying no, for the arrangements are made and MUST[†2] come off.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I meant to have dragged you forth yesterday but business prevented me

To [?MRS GODFREY],[†3] 25 JULY 1839

Composite text from facsimile in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, 16 Jan 1941, and N, I, 220. Address: almost certainly to the Mrs Godfrey to whom CD wrote on the same subject on 3 Oct 39.

[†a]Elm Cottage Petersham | Thursday July 25th. 1839.

My Dear Madam

The tales you have sent me will be quite sufficient in point of quantity to make the little book for your own distribution, in which I will immediately have them printed for you — indeed, I would suggest the omission of the tale about the pin cushion, as it does not seem to me very likely to please and you will have quite enough for your purpose without it.

There is some want of explanation concerning Brownwing[†4] himself and the little girls to whom he addresses his tales. That, if you please, I will supply.[†a] A very few words will render this quite intelligible to children, and as I have marked the passages where they appear to be wanted, I can perhaps set this right more readily than you could.

In acknowledging the receipt of your parcel, and requesting you to let me know whether you will like your name in the little title page and the addition (as I suppose you will) of the name of your school, I feel it necessary to suggest to you whether you do not think there are some passages in the story "The loss of beauty" which are calculated (and very naturally so) to give offence to the very class of persons with whom you desire to stand well — whether it does not appear to be designed more for the correction of parents than the instruction of children — whether the points about the grandmama do not touch upon very delicate ground and one upon which there is always more or less of sore feeling in families where there is a grandmama and whether, the teaching children (who always apply stories to their own cases) to decide so positively in her favour against their own parent is exactly judicious and very likely to create a prepossession in your own favour? You should be a better judge of this than I, but I know you will rather thank me than be displeased for mentioning these doubts as they have occurred to me on reading your tales.

There is one other point upon which I have at all times and in all cases so strong and violent a feeling, that (although I do not ask you to make any alteration, for my opinions are peculiar, I daresay, and quite as likely to be wrong as yours) I cannot forbear expressing my opinion upon it. I do most decidedly object, and have a most invincible and powerful repugnance to that frequent reference to the Almighty in small matters, which so many excellent persons consider necessary in the education of children. I think it monstrous to hold the source of inconceivable mercy and goodness perpetually up to them as an avenging and wrathful God who — making them in His wisdom children before they are men and women — is to punish them awfully for every little venial offence which is almost a necessary part of that stage of life. I object decidedly to endeavouring to impress them with a fear of death, before they can be rationally supposed to become accountable creatures, and so great a horror do I feel at the thought of imbuing with strict doctrines those who have just reflection enough to know that if God be as rigid and just as they are told He is, their fathers and mothers and three fourths of their relations and friends must be doomed to Eternal Perdition, and if I were left to choose between the two evils I would far rather that my children acquired their first principles of religion from a contemplation of nature and all the goodness and beneficence of the Great Being Who created it, than I would suffer them with such strict construction ever †bto open a Bible or a Prayer Book, or enter a place of Worship. I do declare to you my dear Madam, that I daily see such evil and misery springing up from this fatal mistake, that whenever I see the slightest approach to it, I cannot in my conscience let it go by without my most solemn protest.

I am always Dear Madam
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS†b

To ANGUS FLETCHER, [25 JULY 1839]*

MS New York Public Library. Date: PM 26 July (Friday). Address: Angus Fletcher Esquire | Messrs. Loft & Company†1 | Dean Street | Soho | London.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Near Richmond | Thursday Evening

My Dear Fletcher.

I am missing from my home, and am to be heard of, as above. I think you would like this place, I am sure we should be marvellously jolly together, and I am anxious to give you (out of hand and without an hour's delay) a general invitation — not in the ordinary sense of the term but in the extraordinary sense, which you must understand to include the assurance that there is always a bed for you at five minute's†2 notice, and that we shall be most delighted to see you at every time and season. If you don't come, and very often too, I'll wear an entirely new face wherever I go, and disgrace the bust.

Could you manage to ride home with us from Wilkie's†3 — it will be a Friday Night — and make holiday on the following Saturday and Sunday? You can bring a pair of slippers you know, and leave them behind you, so that they may always be ready for you.

Let me hear what you have to say to all this. And believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire
&c &c

I forget your No., so I put a business address on this.

To THOMAS MITTON, 26 JULY 1839

MS Huntington Library.

Petersham | July 26th. 1839.

Dear Tom.

I am extremely sorry to hear you have been so unwell. — You cannot do better than get out of town with all speed; and really if I were you I would see some good medical man, put myself into a good and regular course of living, and get well systematically. There must be something in the weather I think, for I — who never have a headache — have scarcely had anything else of late, but have been in a moping and heavy condition, at least six hours out of the four and twenty.

Since Tuesday I have only been into town once, which was last night to dine with Miss Coutts and then I did not go on to Doughty Street but went straight there and came straight back. I was prevented from seeing you on Tuesday by being engaged all day with Forster, checking Chapman and Hall's calculations and rejecting and making proposals. The terms of the new thing were finally agreed upon before I left town at night, and they advertize it for the first time in the next number.

Before I tell you what they are, I should premise that the form being much more expensive, the profits are less than those of Pickwick and Nickleby which they do not deny were — upon the numbers and without the sale in books — £14,000 upon each. I should also tell you that every estimate has been (unknown to them) rigidly checked by printers and paper-makers and pronounced perfectly accurate.

First — they give me £1,500 more for Nickleby. Five hundred of this I have had, so there is a thousand more to pay.[†1]

Secondly — they pay me £50 a week for the new work, out of which I pay for such assistance as I require which upon a liberal allowance may average £12 a week, but certainly not more. They also pay all expences of printing, advertizing, and illustrations (the last being wood-cuts will be very expensive) and then of all profits allow me one clear half — not deducting the expences.

By this arrangement, upon a sale of 20,000 copies they get nothing; upon a sale of 40,000, they get half the profit upon the additional 20,000 and I add the other half to my £50 — you understand? If the work went on for two years, and were to sell 50,000 (which Bradbury and Evans think[†2] certain, but which I confess I do not, though there is a good chance of it) my profits would be between ten and eleven thousand pounds, and theirs five thousand.

I think this very good — as good as could be, and if the secret of the form and nature of the new publication be rigidly kept, as no doubt it will, I hope it may make a tremendous stand. If so, I don't despair of making a decent thing out of some one of my works yet — and as to time, if it continues to be popular it may go on for five years as well as for two.

I should like to hear what you think of this. Let me know, and if you go by Chapman and Hall's call there — tell them you are going out of town — and get the next No. of Nickleby. It may amuse you for half an hour.

Always Faithfully

CD

Alfred is instructed by his Papa that it's "all up"!!!

To W. C. MACREADY, 26 JULY 1839

MS Morgan Library.

Petersham | July 26th. 1839.

My Dear Macready.

Fix your visit for whenever you please. It can never give us anything but delight to see you, and it is better to look forward to such a pleasure than back upon it, as the last gratification is enjoyable all our lives, and the first for but a very few short stages in the journey.

I feel more true and cordial pleasure than I can express to you, in the request you have made. Anything which can serve to commemorate our friendship and to keep the recollection of it alive among our children is — believe me — and ever will be, most deeply prized by me. I accept the office[†1] with hearty and fervent satisfaction, and to render this pleasant bond between us the more complete, must solicit you to become godfather to that last and final branch of a genteel small family of three which I am told may be looked for in that auspicious month when Lord Mayors are born and Guys prevail.[†2] This I look upon as a bargain between us, and I have shaken hands with you in spirit upon it.

Family topics remind me of Mr. Kenwigs. As the weather is wet and he is about to make his last appearance on my little stage, I send Mrs. Macready an early proof of the next Number, containing an account of his baby's progress.[†3]

I am going to send you something else on Monday — a tragedy — don't be alarmed; I didn't write it, nor do I want it acted. A young Scotch lady whom I don't know (but who is evidently very intelligent and accomplished) has sent me a translation of a German play, soliciting my aid and advice in the matter of its publication.[†4] Among a crowd of Germanisms, there are many things in it which are so very striking, that I am sure it will amuse you very much — at least I think it will — it has me. I am going to send it back to her; when I come to Elstree[†5] will be time enough; and meantime if you bestow a couple of hours upon it, you will not think them thrown away.

It's a large parcel, and I must keep it here 'till somebody goes up to town and can book it by the coach. I warrant it — large as it looks — readable in two hours, and I very much want to hear what you think of the first act, and especially the opening, which seems to me quite famous. The metre is very odd and rough, but now and then there's a wildness in it which helps the thing very much; and altogether it has left a Something on my mind which I can't get rid of.[†6]

Mrs. Dickens joins with me in kindest regards to yourself, Mrs., and Miss Macready.[†1] And I am always My Dear Macready

Faithfully and truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A dreadful thought has just occurred to me that this is a quadruple letter and that Elstree may[†2] not be within the twopenny post.[†3] Pray Heaven my fears are unfounded!

To FRANK STONE, [?27 JULY 1839]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: probably the Saturday after the dinner of 20 July.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Saturday Morning

My Dear Stone.

The Stewards' accounts for the Macready Dinner are in course of settlement. Am I correct in having you down for two tickets, or am I thinking the thing which is not?[†4]

I'll back our dinner to Macready, (meaning the Shakspeare of course)[†5] against all other dinners to him or anybody else, past — present — or to come.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Stone Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 29 JULY 1839

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, v, 1919-21; MS ½ p.; dated Doughty Street, 29 July 39.

I hope you may live to increase your collection of autographs for at least eighty-four years more, and that you may present in your own person a choice specimen of the light and gentle hand in which Time writes when he is in his very best humour.

August

To MRS [SARAH] AUSTIN,[†1] 5 AUGUST 1839

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

Elm Cottage | Monday 5th. August 1839.

Dear Mrs. Austin.

I have delayed answering your letter until now, because we have had friends stopping here and I have not been master of my own time. I am sorry to say that I am no better off even now, as some of them yet remain — tomorrow I have to go to Elstree to a christening celebration[†2] which will occupy the week — and when I return I shall have for ten days or so, to sit steadily at my desk.

I cannot, however, reconcile it to my conscience to leave your most welcome note unanswered until I am enabled to fix some special time when I may have the pleasure of visiting you — though this was my first intention. Believe me that yours is one of the most pleasant invitations I have ever received — that it is completely after my own heart — that I am most sincerely anxious to improve the opportunity it affords me — and that entertaining in common with you and yours the strongest and most ardent feelings in behalf of those hundreds of thousands for whom (I am sorry to say) few people seem to feel at all, I seem when I read your note and write these few words in answer to it, as if I were among old friends already.

Your "affront" therefore, I endure with christian resignation; your "strange" invite does not appear in the least degree strange to me; and though I suppose I am bound to say in modesty that I wonder how you can see in the last Number of Nickleby or in anything else of mine material towards the formation of such a kind opinion of me, I will not even say that, but confine myself to reciprocating most cordially all your frankness and sincerity, and promising myself the pleasure of responding to it in person in my very first leisure moment from this time.

I am dear Madam, with sincere regard
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Austin.

To THOMAS ELLIS BRAMALE,[†1] 5 AUGUST 1839

Mention in Dawson's Book Shop catalogue No. 323.

To E. J. HYTCHE,[†2] 6 AUGUST 1839*

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

Elm Cottage Petersham | August 6th. 1839

Sir.

In reply to your letter, I beg to say — firstly that I can have no objection to the discussion to which it refers. Secondly that I am sincerely obliged to you for taking up the cudgels in defence of my unfortunate head, and thirdly that no other part of the bust was cast but the throat, which is a facsimile of my own property.

The idea of this controversy has amused me very much, for there is one little circumstance about Mr. Fletcher's cleverly executed bust, the possibility of which seems to have been wholly overlooked. My friends, artists and otherwise, tell me that it is not like — especially about the head.[†3]

I am Sir
Your very obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

E. J. Hytche Esquire.

To LADY HOLLAND, [EARLY AUGUST 1839]

Mention in next.

To LADY HOLLAND, [EARLY AUGUST 1839]*

MS Mr Robert W. Hompe. Date: during the week before the christening of Macready's son on Wed 7 Aug.

I don't know how to apologize to you, My Lady Holland, for having committed a most monstrous oversight in accepting yesterday (in my anxiety to accept) your and Lord Holland's kind Invitation for Wednesday. I had some misgiving when your card arrived that I was engaged, and sent out word to the bearer that I should be driving through Kensington in the course of an hour or two and my servant should leave an answer then; but as he said that Lord Holland had kindly sent him so far in order that he might bear an answer back, I wrote the card at once — quite forgetting at the moment that I promised some weeks since to be godfather to a child of Mr. Macready's, and that the christening takes place on that very day. I need not say how happy I should be to forego any other engagement for the honor of waiting upon you, but I fear that my absence from a high festival in which I have consented to sustain so prominent a character, would throw a damp upon the day, and perhaps hurt the feelings of a friend whom I hold in very high esteem. I should have asked your permission to wait upon you in the evening, but unfortunately Mr. Macready lives at Elstree — too far from town to enable me to stay [for] dinner there, and reach Kensington at any reasonable hour.

May I venture to hope that as the consequences rest so heavily upon myself, you will pardon me this very foolish mistake, which I think I should not have committed but that I was engaged at the time with some imaginary persons[†1] whose affairs have attained such a very complicated pitch just now, that they sometimes confuse me in my recollection of my own? And may I further venture to hope that you and Lord Holland will assure me of your forgiveness by affording me another opportunity of paying my respects to you? —

I am, My Lady Holland,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [10 AUGUST 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 10 Aug 39. Address: Miss Coutts | Stratton Street. | Piccadilly.

Elm Cottage, Petersham. | Saturday Morning.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Coutts, and greatly regrets that a far less pleasant engagement for Tuesday, prevents his accepting her kind invitation.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [21 AUGUST 1839]

MS Berg Collection. Date: Cattermole was married on 20 Aug 39; clearly CD was writing the day after.

Elm Cottage, Petersham. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Cattermole.

Why is Peveril[†1] lingering on my dusty shelves in town while my fair cousin and your fair bride[†2] remains in blissful ignorance of his merits? There he is I grieve to say, but there he shall not be long, for I shall be visiting my other home on Saturday Morning and will bring him bodily down and forward him the moment he arrives.

Not having many of my books here, I don't find any among them which I think more suitable to your purpose than a carpet-bag-full sent herewith, containing the Italian and German Novelists (convenient as being easily taken up and laid down again; and I suppose you won't read long at a sitting) Leigh Hunt's Indicator and Companion[†3] (which have the same merit) Hood's Own[†4] complete, A Legend of Montrose, and Kenilworth which I have just been reading with greater delight than ever, and so suppose everybody else must be equally interested in. I have Goldsmith, Swift, Fielding, Smollett, and the British Essayists handy; and I need not say that you have them at hand too if you like.

You know all I would say from my heart and soul on the auspicious event of yesterday, but you don't know what I could say about the delightful recollections I have of your "good lady's" charming looks and bearing, upon which I discoursed most eloquently here last evening and at considerable length. As I am crippled in this respect, however, by the suspicion that possibly she may be looking over your shoulder while you read this note (I would lay a moderate wager that you have looked round twice or thrice already) I shall content myself with saying that I am ever heartily My Dear Cattermole

Hers and Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My man (who, with his charge, is your man while you stay here) waits to know if you have any orders for him.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [SUMMER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: from Petersham, therefore May-Aug 39, since he did not know Forster at the time of his 1836 visit. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields | London.

Petersham. | Monday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

I shall be in town to-day, and will give you a call.

Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?SUMMER 1839]

Extract in catalogue of Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery, 1909; dated Petersham, Saturday: familiar tone suggests 1839 rather than 1836. MS 1 p.

Persecute me as you will, I am a Christian.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?SUMMER 1839]

Text from W. Justin O'Driscoll, A Memoir of Daniel Maclise, R.A., 1871, p. 67. Date: According to O'Driscoll (above), Maclise had returned the substantial cheque CD had sent for the Nickleby portrait,[†1] and this was CD's reply. Probably written within a few weeks of the finishing of the portrait.

Do not be offended. I quite appreciate the feeling which induced you to return what I sent you; notwithstanding, I must ask you to take it back again. If I could have contemplated for an instant the selfish engrossment of so much of your time and extraordinary powers, I should have had no need (knowing you, I knew that well) to resort to that little device I played off.[†2] I will take anything else from you at any time that you will give me, any scrap from your hand; but I entreat you not to disturb this matter.

I am willing to be your debtor for anything else in the whole wide range of your art, as you shall very readily find whenever you put me to the proof.

September

To JOHN FORSTER, 9 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields | London.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs. | Monday September 9th. 1839.

My Dear Forster.

There were no lodgings at Ramsgate (thank Heaven!) and after spending a night at an Hotel[†1] there we came on here, and with great difficulty established ourselves for a month — we couldn't get it for a shorter term — in this house, which is [†a]two doors from the Albion Hotel where we had that merry night two years ago,[†a] and has the most beautiful view of the sea from its bay-windows that you can imagine. It is a house — not a lodging — has a comfortable sitting room with the view aforesaid, a large bedroom with ditto, a ditto nursery with ditto, and towards the street a little sitting-room, spare bedroom, and servants' room — kitchens et cetera in their usual places, entrances front and back, surprisingly clean beds, and a costively inconvenient water-closet.

Miss Rainforth and her father and mother came down with us in the boat, and live a few doors off. Harley and his sister arrived on Wednesday and hang out in the next street, Rogers (bless his heart) dwelleth at the Albion, and Tom Longman[†2] and his wife are to be found at the Library. They have a baby with them, and I think at present that's all the friends and acquaintances — enough too soay you, and so say I.

I sent up to town last Wednesday for our cook. The landlady of the house recommended a woman on Tuesday morning to act 'till she arrived, who got drunk — remarkably drunk — on Tuesday night, was removed by constables, lay down in front of the house and addressed the multitude for some hours, and in short far out-cooked the cook of Petersham! Can you understand this, or explain it on any philosophical principle?

[†b]Chapman and Hall came down yesterday with Browne's Sketches and dined here. They imparted their intentions as to a Nicklebeian fete[†3] which will make you laugh heartily, so I reserve them 'till you come.[†b]

The last three words bring me to the main object of my letter, and I come to it at once with the greater pleasure as I have been writing all the morning and pant to get out. About your coming down: — [†c]I am hard at it, but these windings up, wind slowly,[†1] and I shall think I have done great things if I have entirely finished by the 20th.[†c] That's a Friday — can you come on Saturday the 21st? Consult the almanack and that Diary of yours[†2] which contains nothing, and then sit down, write, and say. If not then, when, — before or after, for how long, and why not for very long. Say too how you have enjoyed yourself at Bath,[†3] what news there is, how Macready is, and what his number is, for I shall want to write to him perhaps anent the Nickleby.

Kate and the children are well, and desire their loves. We enjoy the place amazingly, and so will you I'm sure.

Always my Dear Forster
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

DIRECTIONS FOR COMING DOWN

Take a Ramsgate[†4] boat from London Bridge Wharf at 9 precisely. Say when you draw near here, that you are for Broadstairs, and come ashore in the boat which will come along-side for you. If the weather should be so rough that the boat can't come off [not probable][†5] go on to Ramsgate and return — 2 miles — per fly.

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 14 SEPTEMBER [1839]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

40 Albion Street, Broadstairs | Saturday Evening September 14th.
(In a gale of wind)

My Dear Fletcher.

Our one spare bed will be at leisure (and so shall I) on Friday the 27th. If you will come — by Ramsgate boat from London Bridge Wharf at 9 — to a beautiful sea view, a quiet place, fresh air, famous walks and a hearty welcome, both Kate and I will be delighted to see you on that day — and unless we hear from you to the contrary shall expect you at dinner.

Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire.

Fred was mistaken in thinking I wanted the Night and morning[†1] for my bookcase. I design them for the dining-room.

To CHARLES HICKS, [15 SEPTEMBER 1839]†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly Sun 15 Sep, when CD recorded in his Diary: "Wrote the preface (to Nickleby)". Address: Mr. Hicks.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs.
Sunday Morning | (I mean afternoon)

Dear Mr. Hicks.

I send you 60 slips of copy, and the preface. I shall write 105 which will about settle your business — perhaps not more than 100, and perhaps between the two.[†2] I hope I may finish on Thursday — at latest on Friday — I will send you another parcel before the last, and dispatch the very last one with all possible speed.

You had better send proofs (I think) by Dovor Coach from the Golden Cross Charing Cross. Be sure that I will correct the last proofs without an instant's delay, and find speedy means of returning them to you. Let me have duplicates of all the proofs you send, and send them as often as you please. The titles of 2 chapters are wanting in the copy inclosed. I will supply them when I correct.

On Saturday morning Mr. Forster is coming down to me. Anything sent to him on Friday night, he will bring.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To CHARLES HICKS, [18 SEPTEMBER 1839]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 SEPTEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: PM Ramsgate 18 Sep 39. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields | London.

Broadstairs. | Wednesday Afternoon.

My Dear Forster.[†1]

I plainly see that I must come to town on Saturday, or I shall delay the proofs terribly, and perhaps endanger the appearance of the No. This necessity will bring one pleasure with it, for it will enable us to come back together on Sunday, and further to dine together on Saturday if you will give me a chop. I am very anxious that you should see the conclusion of Nickleby, the preface &c before it finally leaves my hands. I have therefore written to Hicks telling him to send proofs to your chambers on Saturday evening, and a note beforehand, saying when they may be expected. If you don't object, we will devote the evening to a careful reading. Will you send for me to Doughty Street telling them to have a bed ready for me, and ordering Topping to be at your place to take my bag? I shall be with you (I hope) between 4 and 5.[†2]

I have not written to Macready, for they have not yet sent me the little page of Dedication, which is merely "To W. C. Macready Esquire the following pages are inscribed, as a slight token of admiration and regard, by his friend the Author" — duly set out in lines and various types of course. I will write to him when I get it. Meanwhile will you let him know that I have fixed the Nickleby dinner for Saturday the 5th. of October — place, the Albion in Aldersgate Street.[†3] Time, six for half past exactly.

I shall not finish entirely, before Friday — sending Hicks the last 20 pages of MS by the Night coach. I have had pretty stiff work as you may suppose, and I have taken great pains. I shall be more glad than I can tell you to see you again, and look forward to Saturday and the evenings that are to follow it, with most joyful anticipation.

The discovery is made,[†4] Ralph is dead, the loves have come all right, Tim Linkinwater has proposed, and I have now only to break up Dotheboys and the book together. I have had a good notion for Barnaby, of which more anon.

It has been blowing great guns here for the last three days, and last night — I wish you could have seen it — there was such a sea! Fred (who is here) and I, staggered down to the Pier and creeping under the lee of a large boat which was high and dry, watched it breaking for nearly an hour. Of course we came back wet through, but it was most superb. One steamboat after getting to Ramsgate could not make her way into the harbour and was obliged to go back to Margate and put in there, and the boat from London didn't come at all. Heaven knows what became of it — nobody here does.

What a strange thing it is that all sorts of fine things happen in London when I'm away! [†a]I almost blame myself for the death of that poor girl who leaped off the Monument[†1] — she would never have done it if I had been in town; neither would the two men have found the skeleton in the Sewers.[†2†a] If it had been a female skeleton, I should have written to the coroner and stated my conviction that it must be Mrs. Sheppard. A famous subject for an illustration by George — Jonathan Wild forcing Mrs. Sheppard down the grown-up seat of a gloomy privy, and Blueskin or any such second robber cramming a child (anybody's child) down the little hole[†3] — Mr. Wood looking on in horror — and two other spectators, one with a fiendish smile and the other with a torch, aiding and abetting![†4]

My love to Macready, and to you — and no more at present from yours ever faithfully CD — except best regards from all here.

To W. C. MACREADY, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: W. C. Macready Esquire | Elm Place | Elstree | Herts.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | September 21st. 1839.

My Dear Macready.

I am so anxious to prefer a request to you which does not admit of delay, that I send you a double letter — with the one redeeming point though, of having very little in it.

Let me prefix to the last number of Nickleby and to the book, a duplicate of the leaf which I now send you.[†5] Believe me that there will be no leaf in the volume which will afford me in times to come more true pleasure and gratification, than that in which I have written your name as foremost among those of the friends whom I love and honor. Believe me that there will be no one line in it, conveying a more honest truth, or a more sincere feeling, than that which describes its dedication to you as a slight token of my admiration and regard.

So, let me tell the world by this frail record that I was a friend of yours and interested to no ordinary extent in your proceedings at that interesting time when you shewed them such noble truths in such noble forms — and give me a new interest in, and association with, the labour of so many months.

I write to you hastily and crudely, for I have been very hard at work, having only finished to-day, and my head spins yet. But you know what I mean, I am sure.[†1]

Always Believe me
My Dear Macready
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Kate sends her best regards to Mrs. and Miss Macready and the children, in which I cordially join. Forster will have told you about the dinner?

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | September 21st. 1839.

My Dear Cattermole.

The folks concerned in the publication of Nickleby, and one or two intimate friends, dine with me on Saturday the 5th. of October, at the Albion in Aldersgate Street at 6 for half past precisely, to celebrate its conclusion. Make one at the little table as you do in my little circle, and add to the pleasure of looking back upon this labour.

We return to town on Tuesday week, and shall duly report ourselves at Clapham — Meanwhile, best remembrances and all manner of loves.

Ever My Dear Cattermole
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire.

To CHARLES HICKS, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | September 21st. 1839.

Dear Mr. Hicks.

Do me the favor to dine with me on Saturday the 5th. of October at the Albion in Aldersgate Street, at 6 for half past precisely.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Hicks.

To THOMAS HILL, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs. | September 21st. 1839.

My Dear Sir.

I commissioned Jerdan — in my anxiety that you should not escape to Paris — to tell you that I could not possibly dispense with your attendance at my Nickleby dinner. It comes off on Sunday the 5th. of October at the Albion in Aldersgate Street at 6 for half past precisely — a very few friends indeed.

Always believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | September 21st. 1839.

My Dear Beard.

The Nickleby dinner on Saturday the 5th. of October at the Albion in Aldersgate Street, at 6 for half past precisely. Book it.

I have been so hard at work here, and we are so delightfully situated in a bay-windowed house in front of the sea, that we don't return to town until Tuesday week. Meanwhile all manner of remembrances to you and loves to your sister, from Kate.

Fred is spending a fortnight here. — I wish you could have seen him with his slippers, in a high wind.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839*

MS Clark Library, University of California.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | September 21st. 1839

My Dear Maclise

The Nickleby dinner on Saturday the 5th. of October, at the Albion in Aldersgate Street — 6 for half past precisely. Book this.

I return to town next Tuesday week, and am wearying to see you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire.

To SIR DAVID WILKIE, 23 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Sir David Wilkie R.A. | &c &c | Kensington | near | London.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | September 23rd. 1839.

My Dear Sir David.

I ought not to write you at all, for we return to town tomorrow week, and I am promising myself (in conjunction with Mrs. Dickens) the pleasure of immediately calling upon Miss Wilkie,[†1] and telling her how our sudden departure from Richmond and change to this place, prevented our doing so in more regular course, and so deprived us of opportunities of seeing her and you, of which we had hoped to avail ourselves long 'ere this.

Nevertheless, I have a plea for this departure from ceremony, and I will tell you at once what it is.

On Saturday the fifth of October I have a little dinner at the Albion in Aldersgate Street, to celebrate the conclusion of Nickleby. It is merely to the parties concerned in the publication, and one or two intimate friends — not more than a dozen in all. Will you give me an additional reason for remembering the occasion with pleasure, by joining this quiet party? I cannot tell you how happy I should be to see you, and how much true pleasure and delight your company will afford me.

If you are in town, and can send me a line in answer — do.

I beg my best remembrances to Miss Wilkie in which my wife joins — adding hers to you. And I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir David Wilkie
&c &c

I should have told you that the dinner hour is 6 for half past precisely.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 SEPTEMBER 1839]*

MS The Lady Mary Clive. Date: presumably the Thursday of the week in which CD was sending out invitations to the Nickleby dinner.

Broadstairs | Thursday

My Dear Forster.

What am I to do about Captain Macready[†1] at the Nickleby dinner? I must have him, and will.[†2] Look to this, for if you don't manage it (as you ought: I being away) I shall go express to Elstree and settle the matter myself.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To THOMAS ELLAR,[†3] 27 SEPTEMBER 1839

Text from Thomas Marshall, Lives of the Most Celebrated Actors and Actresses, [1847], p. 123.

Broadstairs, Friday, September 27, 1839.

Sir

It is with very great pain and reluctance that I feel obliged to tell you I cannot accede to your request. Many considerations, most of them obvious ones, and all too grave and weighty to be disregarded, render it quite impossible.

To dissuade you from any further thought of publishing your memoirs as a means of relief and support, would, I fear, be very difficult. Still I cannot refrain from telling you most strongly that I do not think you are likely to gain anything by such a proceeding but disappointment and vexation.

I should have replied to your letter before, but I have been out of town

— here and elsewhere — for some time; and being busily engaged besides, I did not receive it in regular course.

I assure you that I feel for your situation, and am extremely sorry that I cannot assist you in the mode you have pointed out.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

To Mr. Thomas Ellar.

To J. A. OVERS, 27 SEPTEMBER 1839

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mr. J. A. Overs | Messrs. Springweiler & Co. | 2 Duke Street | West Smithfield | London.

Broadstairs. | September 27th. 1839.

Dr. Sir.

I can have no objection to your stating either to the Editor of Tait's Magazine,[†1] or of Blackwood's,[†2] the substance of what I wrote to you concerning your Songs, or (if you have the note by you) the exact terms in which I expressed myself.

I should have answered your letter before, but I have been out of town, in different places, for some months and did not receive it in due course. This is the reason why I have not returned your play long ago. I shall be in town towards the end of next week, and will send it to you.

I am sorry to say — and would not say, but that I know you wish me to speak plainly, and that I ought to do so — that of the play itself, I cannot speak favorably. The production is most honorable and creditable to you, but it would not benefit you, either in pocket or reputation, if it were printed; — and acted, I do not think it ever could be. Not to mention that the verse contains most singular instances of inverted expressions (which I may describe more familiarly as putting the cart before the horse) and many words not to be found in the language — not to mention these faults which are easily susceptible of correction, there are some in the plot and characters, which seem to me incurable. The father is such a dolt, and the villain such a villain, the girl so especially credulous and the means used to deceive them so very slight and transparent, that the reader cannot sympathize with their distresses. Action too is terribly wanting, and the characters not being strongly marked (except in improbabilities) the dialogues grow tedious and wearisome. I read it with great care, and not long ago either, but I don't remember at this moment any difference in the mode or matter of their speech which enables me to distinguish, in recollection, one character from the other — except the maiden lady and the villain, of whom the former is very good, and the latter but an average villain who speaks in dashes and interjections and constantly interrupts himself.

I think so highly of the exertions you have made and the difficulties against which you have struggled, that I am unwilling you should suppose you had no mart for worthy labour, and were kept down by obstacles against which you could not contend. I firmly believe that if this play had been written by Sheridan Knowles or Sir Edward Bulwer, it would not have been acted. I am sure it would not, from what I know of the proceedings of both those gentlemen, and the friendly criticism and judgment to which they have several times submitted. Remember how very difficult it is to produce a good play, how very few men can do it, and how many fail and how few try — or if they do try, ever permit their trials to see the light.

Calling these things to mind, you will not (I am sure) be discouraged or hurt by what I tell you — remembering too, that I communicate but my individual opinion, and that I am as likely to commit an error in judgment as anybody else.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To THE EDITOR OF THE KNICKERBOCKER MAGAZINE, [SEPTEMBER 1839]

Summary in the Knickerbocker Magazine, New York, Nov 39, XIV, 464.

In reply to a request to exchange the manuscript of Oliver Twist for that of papers by "Geoffrey Crayon" [Washington Irving] contributed to the Knickerbocker, in order that the two might be published simultaneously in England and America, Dickens writes that having retired from the Miscellany he cannot comply with the proposition, which would otherwise have given him great pleasure; but that readers of the Knickerbocker will have an opportunity of hearing from him at first hand through those pages.[†1]

October

To MRS GODFREY, 3 OCTOBER 1839

MS Boston Public Library. Address: Mrs. Godfrey | care of | — Cockburn Esquire | Temple.[†1]

48 Doughty Street. | October 3rd. 1839.

Dear Madam.

I have only just arrived from Broadstairs, where I have been spending some weeks, and could not write to you before, for I had forgotten Mr. Cockburn's address.

I will have your little books[†2] printed, immediately. You must not be too anxious; they will take time — perhaps, a month.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Godfrey.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?3 OCTOBER 1839]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: probably same day as last. He had finished Nickleby on 20 Sep.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Cruikshank.

I have finished my Nickleby at last and returned to town. I am going forthwith tooth and nail at Barnaby, and shall have MS[†3] by the middle of the month for your exclusive eye. Meanwhile as many consultations and preliminary explanations as you like.[†4]

Faithfully Yours — and hastily
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [3 OCTOBER 1839]

MS Berg Collection. Date: the Thursday before the Nickleby dinner. Address: Wait | Clarkson Stanfield Esquire R.A. | &c &c | Mornington Place | Hampstead Road.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Stanfield.

On Saturday next, the printers and publishers of the Nickleby, and one or two mutual friends of ours, dine with me at the Albion in Aldersgate

Street at 6 for half past precisely to rejoice with me upon the conclusion of the book.[†1] Do give me an additional reason for remembering the occasion with pleasure, and join the little party.[†2]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have instructed the bearer to wait a reply.

To J. A. OVERS, 8 OCTOBER 1839

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mr. J. A. Overs | Messrs. Springweiler & Co. | 2 Duke Street | West Smithfield.

Doughty Street. | October 8th. 1839

Dr. Sir.

Of the songs you have sent me,[†3] I infinitely prefer that for May, which is extremely pretty, and I think would do you better service if sent somewhere alone, and not accompanied by the lays for April, June, and July. Of these, that one for June which begins "Night's conqueror I" seems to me to be the best. I think you succeed most when you are not comical, and you can scarcely pursue a better vein than your May vein.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To DR J. H. HUTTON,[†4] [?OCTOBER 1839]*

MS Mrs A. B. Hutton. Date: perhaps not long after Nickleby, Ch. 64, published Oct 39, in which Mr Mantalini is discovered in the cellar with a scolding woman.

48 Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform the ladies and gentlemen who have addressed him from Dr. Hutton's, that Mr. Mantalini's companion in the cellar is not his wife.[†1] He begs to thank them too for their kind acknowledgments.

To THE SECRETARY[†2] OF THE MANCHESTER ATHENAEUM,[†3] [22 OCTOBER 1839]

Mention in next.

To ROBERT PHILIPS,[†4] 22 OCTOBER 1839

Extract in N, I, 232; MS 1 p.; dated 48 Doughty Street, 22nd October 1839. Address: Robert Philips of Prestwich near Manchester, according to Maggs catalogue No. 449 (1924).

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind invitation, which I hope to acknowledge in person before long but cannot avail myself of at this time, for I have been obliged to write to the secretary of the Athenaeum by the same post which conveys this letter to you, expressing my regret that the present state of Mrs. Dickens's health[†5] prevents my leaving home.[†6]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [22 OCTOBER 1839]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: presumably the day before publication-day of Nickleby (23 Oct) and same day as next.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Night

My Dear Maclise

I don't know whether Chapman and Hall have it in contemplation to send you a more gorgeous and sumptuous Nickleby than the accompanying one; but though I think it very probable, still I don't see why I should suffer them to deprive me of the pleasure of sending you one myself.

If one dozen of the one hundred hearty and honest wishes for your continued success and fame and for the brilliancy of your career and happiness of your life, with which I send the book be realised (as in the case of such a man as you they must surely be) you will be a great fellow and I shall have many new reasons, albeit I do not require one, for always regarding our friendship with pleasure and pride.

Always believe me
Dear Maclise
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, [22 OCTOBER 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the Tues before 25 Oct when CD sent Macready a Nickleby in "gorgeous dress".

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Night

My Dear Macready.

You spoke to me (the day of our dinner) about Burnett. I made it my business to ask my sister whether it really was his intention to quit the stage, and learnt, as I expected, that this is so far from being the case that they are both most eagerly and painfully anxious that he should get an engagement.[†1] I think it my duty to tell you this after what passed between us, and ought to have done so before now. I thought however that we should have met, and was unwilling to trouble you by writing.

I suppose his extraordinary communication was the result of some timidity and confusion occasioned by your august presence.

Can you give me Charles Young's[†2] address? I promised him on the day of your dinner,[†3] that he should have a Nickleby, and have since quite forgotten where he lives.[†4] There is a mighty one binding for you (as I learn from Chapman and Hall) but it's not done yet, and the binder when questioned on the subject shakes his head mysteriously and says, "never mind", which his intimate friends take to be a kind of dark hint that it is to be something uncommon.

With best regards at home, always believe me My Dear Macready
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 23 OCTOBER 1839*

MS Princeton University Library.

Doughty Street. | October 23rd. 1839.

Dear Dr. Elliotson.

Let me have the pleasure of requesting you to accept the accompanying volume[†1] as a very feeble mark of my lasting esteem and admiration. And always believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Elliotson
&c &c

To MRS GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 23 OCTOBER 1839*

MS Princeton University Library.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday 23rd. October 1839

Dear Mrs. Cattermole

I have taken the liberty of writing your name in the accompanying volume,[†2] of which I entreat your acceptance together with the assurance of my best wishes and strong regard for you and yours.

Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. George Cattermole.

To W. C. MACREADY, 25 OCTOBER 1839

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Doughty Street. | Friday Night October 25th. /39

My Dear Macready.

The book, the whole book, and nothing but the book (except the binding which is an important item) has arrived at last, and is forwarded herewith.[†3] The red represents my blushes at its gorgeous dress; the gilding all those bright professions which I do not make to you; and the book itself my whole heart for twenty months, which should be yours for so short a term, as you have it always.

I meant to have thanked you in this note for your kindness about Burnett, and to have told you how I go to bed every night to horrid nightmares concerning a nurse who is not to be found, a doctor with a night-bell that can't wake him, and a cab with a motionless horse and wheels that go round without moving onward. But what are my experiences to yours? Three to — well, say ten,[†1] which I hope includes past, present, and to come.

With best regards to Mrs. and Miss Macready, always believe me My Dear Macready
Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esqre.

To EDWARD DOWLAND,[†2] 25 OCTOBER 1839

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1927; MS 1 p.; dated London, 25 Oct 39; addressed Edward Dowland Esquire.

I have much pleasure in complying with your request, and beg to thank you for the obliging terms in which it is conveyed.

To WILLIAM UPCOTT,[†3] 28 OCTOBER [1839]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: 1839 on handwriting, when 28 Oct was a Monday.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday Morning October 28

My Dear Sir.

In direct opposition to all my established usages and customs, I have such a violent and annoying cold upon me to-day, that I am compelled to nurse it and stay close at home. My usual course of treatment is to set such things at defiance, but I am in such a sneezing, winking, weeping, watery state as to be quite unfit for public inspection and a complete nuisance — even to an antiquary.

I remember your saying that you were going out of town this week. I shall therefore defer calling upon you until the latter end of next, when I shall take my chance of finding you at home.[†4]

My Dear Sir believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Upcott Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 OCTOBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting shows clearly this must refer to the birth of Kate (see next) rather than that of Mary in Mar 38. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

After being exactly the same all night, Kate was taken ill at 7 this morning, and violently so by 8. I have not heard for the last half-hour how she is going on, but Pickthorn is there, and I am in momentary hope of hearing that it is all safely over.

Wait at home for me. I will come to you directly I can leave home — may be in an hour, maybe in two, maybe in three, but whenever it is all right (as I hope, please God it will be) I shall drive down to you directly.

Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 OCTOBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Kate[†1] was born on Tues 29 Oct 39. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Night | 9 o'Clock

My Dear Forster.

Thank God it is just now all safely over, and Kate and the child — another little girl — as well as possible.

Always my dear fellow

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS LONGMAN, [?OCTOBER 1839]†

MS Mr Louis J. Heizmann. Date: Signature points to Autumn 1839, probably Oct. Presumably refers to a birthday outside the family, since no known family birthday except CD's own fell on a Thursday in 1839.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly grieved that I cannot dine with you tomorrow. [†a]I am the victim of another engagement.

You will forgive me this delay in answering your kind note when I tell you that I have been trying to free myself from this previous bespeak; but being reminded that it is a birth day and high festival, I am the melancholy bound one still.[†a]

I beg my Compliments to Mrs. Longman — and am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Longman Esquire

November

To MRS W. C. MACREADY, [1 NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: presumably same day as next.

Doughty Street | Friday Evening

My Dear Mrs. Macready.

[ ][†1] I have seen an extremely pretty house in Kent Terrace where you used to live (but larger, I think, than your old residence) which, as the terms seem promising, it is not impossible we may take — unless your recollection serves you with any decided objection to Kent Terrace itself which presents "a just cause or impediment".

With best regards, always believe me dear Mrs. Macready

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Macready.

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: endorsed by Forster "Oct 39 | after Kate's birth"; CD was presumably writing the day after the first performance of Bulwer's The Sea Captain, Haymarket Theatre, Thurs 31 Oct. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster.

[†a]Thank God, all goes on famously.

I have worked at Barnaby all day, and moreover seen a beautiful (and reasonable) house in Kent Terrace[†2] where Macready once lived,[†3] but larger than his.[†a] Mother[†4] is going tomorrow to scrutinize, and I really think it'll do —

I was disappointed last night — Oh! grievously! I can scarcely say how much. How could you, or Macready, let him do such things, out-Adelphiing the Adelphi?[†5]

In the Theatre to-night of course.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Postscript suggests soon after birth of Kate, and the reference to Barnaby one day rather than eight days after last.

Saturday[†1] afternoon

My Dear Forster.

Let me think. — Come here, HERE,[†2] at half past ten,[†3] and I will come to you, or before you, — the last, the most likely.

[†a]Barnaby has reached his tenth page. — I have just turned lazy and have passed into Christabel and thence to Wallenstein.[†4†a]

Always Yours

CD.

ALL WELL.

To THOMAS MITTON, [4 NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS University of Texas. Date: presumably the Monday after To Mrs Macready, 1 Nov.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Mitton

Macready tells me that when they lived in Kent Terrace (2 doors from No. 10) the stench from the stables at certain periods of the wind was so great that they could scarcely breathe — and this circumstance alone was the cause of their not retaining the house constantly, as, liking it very much, they would otherwise have done. He holds it to be a decided and insurmountable objection, and, when he speaks so strongly, I — alas! — am compelled to do the same.

Will you communicate without delay with Mr. Chamberlayne[†5] in order that he may tell his clients we are "off"? Perhaps I shall see you when you come to him.

My mother is going to look at the house in Ulster place and another one this morning, but I begin to droop and despair.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Knowles's orders,[†6] he is sorry to say, are all gone for tonight.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: the Thursday between 4 Nov when CD decided against Kent Terrace and 14 Nov when he invited Macready to see his new house — 1 Devonshire Terrace.[†1]

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

In fulfilment of an engagement of long-standing, I dined at Wilkie's yesterday, and having been house-hunting all the morning could not spare time or Topping to answer your note.

†a A house of great promise (and great premium) "undeniable" situation, and excessive splendour, is in view. Mitton is in treaty, and I am in ecstatic restlessness.

Kate wants to know whether you have "any books to send her". If you have any literary rubbish on hand, please to shoot it here.†a

I shall be obliged to go out this evening for a few hours, but I shall certainly be at home by a quarter before ten. Will you sup here?

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: perhaps the day after last, when the house-hunting had apparently just ended. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Friday

My Dear Forster

†a Barnaby has suffered so much from the house-hunting, that I mustn't chop to-day,†a — but if you can come to-night, all right.

I am obliged to be with Mitton at half past 2, and will call on you afterwards.

Faithfully
CD.

John Forster Esquire

To LADY HOLLAND, 9 NOVEMBER 1839*

MS Mr Robert W. Hompe.

Saturday 9th November 1839.

In begging you, my lady Holland, to accept from me a copy of Nickleby in a dress which will wear better than his every-day clothes, I am not influenced by any feeling of vanity or any supposition that you will find in the book, a solitary charm to which you have not already done more than justice. I must not scruple to say that I am actuated by a most selfish feeling, though, for I wish to have the gratification of acknowledging your great kindness, and I do not know how I can better do so than by this poor token; which I venture to send you — not for its own sake (for that would be presumptuous indeed) but simply and solely for the reason I have just mentioned.

I beg to be remembered to Lord Holland, and am always, Lady Holland,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. COLLIER, [?9 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: A proof of the engraving of Maclise's Nickleby portrait accompanied the letter; therefore 1839. Since the Oct Nickleby announced that proof impressions would be ready on 21 Oct, CD was probably writing on Sat 9 Nov, not 9 Oct (a Wednesday) — having made a slip in the month.

Doughty Street. | Saturday October 9th.

My Dear Collier.

I send you the best "proof" I have — bad is the best, I fear, but I have the consolation of believing that bad as it is,†1 you could not buy so good a one †afrom a most excellent and most mangled picture.(a

Always believe me
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Payne Collier Esquire

To E. W. BANKS, 11 NOVEMBER 1839*

MS Dickens House. Address: Free | — Banks Esquire | Witham | Essex.

Doughty Street London | November 11th. 1839.

Dr. Sir.

I have a proposition to make to you relative to leaving your house, which, under the circumstances, I think it very probable may meet your views as well as mine by enabling you to make whatever repairs or alterations you may deem advisable before letting it again, without losing rent or time in the meanwhile. Some repairs I presume you will deem it necessary to make at once, with a view to obtaining a Tenant on good terms. The drains for instance have been a serious annoyance to us, and although we have had the plumbers in the house half a dozen times, we have not been able to make them last our time without often receiving strong notice of their being in the neighbourhood.

The proposition I have to make to you, is this: — I will give you up possession at Christmas (paying the rent to March) if you will take the fixtures off my hands. I purchased them when I came in and have improved and added to them since, and as they stand — excellent blinds being fitted in every window, and many little conveniences here and there — they certainly improve the appearance of the house and give it an air of much greater comfort and accomodation. There is some pattern furniture, namely the drawing-room carpet, the fender and fire-irons, the curtains and fitted cornices, and the oil cloth in the passage — all in the best condition. These I wish to offer you too. If you feel inclined to take them all, I propose they should be valued by any respectable person — Mr. Handisyde for instance who valued for you before — and in consideration of your taking the whole, I would make an abatement in the price of fifteen per cent upon his valuation.

The advantage to you would be that besides having a certain profit on these things from the next tenant, you would have possession for three months, receiving the rent from me meantime, and could do anything you wished to the house without loss of rent, and perhaps let it before the quarter expired. The advantage to me would be that I should dispose of these matters at once (at a sacrifice which I would rather make than keep them) and so have done with them and the house together.[†1]

An answer at your convenience will oblige me. Meanwhile I am,

Yours very truly
CHARLES DICKENS

— Banks Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Clearly refers to Banks's letter of 12 Nov in answer to last (see fn). Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

I have received a letter from my present landlord in answer to mine, stating that he will call upon me at 2 to day.[†2] I cannot therefore come to you, and must trouble you to come to me.[†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, 14 NOVEMBER 1839

Text from MDGH, I, 27.

Doughty Street, Thursday, Nov. 14th, 1839.

My Dear Macready,

Tom Landseer[†1] — that is, the deaf one, whom everybody quite loves for his sweet nature under a most deplorable infirmity — Tom Landseer asked me if I would present to you from him the accompanying engraving, which he has executed from a picture by his brother Edwin; submitting it to you as a little tribute from an unknown but ardent admirer of your genius, which speaks to his heart, although it does not find its way there through his ears. I readily undertook the task, and send it herewith.

I urged him to call upon you with me and proffer it boldly; but he is a very modest and delicately-minded creature, and was shy of intruding.[†2] If you thank him through me, perhaps you will say something about my bringing him to call, and so gladden the gentle artist and make him happy.

You must come and see my new house when we have it to rights. By Christmas Day we shall be, I hope, your neighbours.

Kate progresses splendidly, and, with me, sends her best remembrances to Mrs. Macready and all your house.

Ever believe me,
Dear Macready,
Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 14 NOVEMBER 1839

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Inscription on end fly-leaf of 1st edn of Pickwick.

"How should you like to grow up a clever man, and write books?" said the old gentleman.

"I think I would rather read them Sir" replied Oliver.

"What! Wouldn't you like to be a book-writer?" said the old gentleman.

Oliver considered a little while, and at last said he should think it would be a much better thing to be a bookseller; upon which the old gentleman laughed heartily, and declared he had said a very good thing, which Oliver felt glad to have done, though he by no means knew what it was.[†3]

——————— ——————— ———————

Vide Oliver Twist in which the old gentleman does not say, though I do that Chapman and Hall are the best of booksellers past, present, or to come; and my trusty friends. Which I give under my hand for the benefit of Edward Chapman, his book, this fourteenth day of November 1839.

CHARLES DICKENS

Witness

BOZ.

To SAMUEL ROGERS,[†1] 14 NOVEMBER [1839]

MS Professor E. S. Pearson.

Doughty Street. | Thursday November 14th.

My Dear Sir

I was concerned to hear at Holland House yesterday, that you had left there in consequence of not feeling very well. I hope it was but a temporary ailing, and that this will find you as well as I wish you — in which case you will not have felt better in all your life, believe me.

I intended to have asked you yesterday, to let me send you a copy of Nickleby. Being prevented, I send it you now without permission, begging you to receive with it my dear Sir, the warm assurance of my esteem and admiration.

Did you ever "move"? We have taken a house near the Regents Park, intending to occupy it between this and Christmas, and the consequent trials have already begun. There is an old proverb that three removes are as bad as a fire. I don't know how that may be, but I know that one is worse.

Always believe me My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT,[†2] 14 NOVEMBER [1839]*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Doughty Street | Thursday November 14th.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Blewitt, and begs to inform him that Mrs. Philpott's[†3] address is No. 7 Stockwell Place Clapham Road.

Mr. Dickens may perhaps take this opportunity of congratulating Mr. Blewitt on his accession to his present office, and of venturing to thank him individually for the zeal and earnestness he evinced yesterday in the performance of its duties. Mr. Dickens is sensible that he needs an excuse for obtruding such an expression of opinion on Mr. Blewitt, but he would rather require it in such a case than do violence (by a formal silence) to his very warm and sincere feeling.

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 14 NOVEMBER [1839]

MS Private.

Doughty Street. | Thursday November 14th.

My Dear Sir.

Do me the favor to accept a copy of Nickleby, and with it the assurance of my warm regard and admiration.

I shall be removing in the course of a few weeks nearer to your neighbourhood[†1] — Devonshire Place,[†2] York Gate — and when this comes to pass, I cherish the hope of seeing you more frequently.

Believe me always My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire

To JAMES HALL,[†3] 19 NOVEMBER [1839]

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954).

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Novr. 19th.

My Dear Sir

I am in the agonies of house-letting, house-taking, title proving and disproving, premium paying, fixture valuing, and other ills too numerous to mention. If you have the heart of anything milder than a monster, you will pity me.

Although I was shut up the other day when you and your brother called, with a knot of worthies whose professional avocations are connected with the above headings, I was exceedingly sorry that I didn't know who it was until you were gone, as I should most joyfully have exchanged their society for yours.

Will you do me the favor to represent my unfortunate case to Captain Hall[†1] — to tell him that I shall be most flattered and happy to make and improve his acquaintance — and to say that I shall look for the pleasure of calling upon him next week, and should have done so 'ere now, but for these dismal engagements which (added to my others) have really not left me a moment of time.

I should like to take the same opportunity of seeing your picture,[†2] and perhaps you would accompany me. Would next Wednesday (tomorrow week) or the following Thursday suit you? If so, at what hour?

I beg you to believe me My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Hall Esquire.

To MESSRS LEA & BLANCHARD,[†3] 22 NOVEMBER 1839*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Messrs. Lea and Blanchard Publishers | Philadelphia | United States.

48 Doughty Street London. | November 22nd. 1839.

Gentlemen.

Messrs. Chapman and Hall, and myself, wish to treat with you for the transmission (at such times as will enable you to publish in America on the same day as we publish in England) of a complete cast[†4] of each number of my new work in parts, including the plates.[†5]

I have received overtures from other American houses within these few days, tending to this same object, but remembering our past correspondence I hold myself bound no less in honor than in inclination, to treat with you in the first instance.

I beg to ask therefore, whether you feel disposed to enter into an arrangement with us for this purpose. If you reply in the affirmative I will beg Messrs. Chapman and Hall to explain to you the nature of the work and such details as you may desire to know, that you may be the better enabled to state the terms on which you would be disposed to enter upon such an undertaking.[†6]

I am Gentlemen
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?23 NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: late 1839 on signature; probably CD was enclosing To Lea & Blanchard, 22 Nov, which is post-marked 23 Nov (Saturday).

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning

Dear Sirs.

Is there anything you would like added to this letter in the present state of the matter? If you let me have it back by bearer, I will have it put in the Post to-day.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: Very probably CD was making an arrangement cancelled later in the morning: see next.

My Dear Forster.

I should have been with you on Saturday night, but there was a false alarm regarding Mrs. Burnett,[†1] and I was obliged to stop and keep Kate company.

I have news also — about Cruikshank — and Ainsworth too. I am going to take Chapman up to Devonshire Terrace to day for the second time; he is a genius in houses, and has made a suggestion relative to the Water closet, which is to be forthwith carried out. Will you go with us? I am to be with him at two — shall have the carriage — and will call on you in passing — that is to say, about ten minutes before the hour.

[†a]Barnaby moves — not at racehorse speed, but yet as fast (I think) as under these unsettled circumstances could possibly be expected.[†a]

All other news when we meet.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire.

[†b]I return the form[†2] — it's the right Temple, I take for granted.[†b]

To JOHN FORSTER, 25 NOVEMBER 1839

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Address: Wait | John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street London | November 25th, 1839[†1]
Monday Morning

Dear Forster

I can't come out. Mrs. Burnett is taken ill — my mother and the nurse are gone — and it would be cruel to leave Kate. Dine with us at half past four, and lay this to the account of one of those[†2] accidents which are inevitable in all well-regulated and Kenwigsian[†3] families.

In haste
Faithfully Always
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, [25 NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Berg Collection. Date: On Mon 25 Nov CD paid the balance of the purchase money and received the lease of 1 Devonshire Terrace (MS Mr H. C. Dickens). Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire.

Monday afternoon

Dear Tom

A hundred thanks for so complete a conclusion. All safely received.

I will see you on Wednesday or Thursday, and report further progress. Handisyde was here after you, and believes the house is let to the gentleman who saw it[†4] — carpet, curtains, fixtures and all.

Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

Thos. Mitton Esquire

To HENRY COLBURN, [?NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS Mr Joseph W. Lynas. Date: Handwriting suggests Nov 39.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say that I cannot avail myself of your kind invitation, being already engaged.

I write in the utmost haste, as I was out all yesterday, and so did not receive your note until late last night.

Believe me
Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Colburn Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?NOVEMBER 1839]

Mention in next.

Accepting an invitation.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS Private. Date: Handwriting suggests Nov 39.

Doughty Street | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am more sorry than I can tell you, that I made an engagement last night which prevents my having the pleasure of dining with you to-day.

I had engaged to dine with Serjeant Goulburn.[†1] Hearing from him last evening that a death had suddenly occurred in his family, I dispatched a note to an old friend from whom I had another Invitation, and pledged myself to him.

I hope you will give me another opportunity of cultivating an acquaintance which will give me most cordial pleasure — and that you will believe me, my Dear Sir,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR F. P. B. PICKTHORN, [?NOVEMBER 1839]

Text from N, I, 173. Date: possibly a Nov in the Doughty Street period; if so, Nov 39 seems the most likely, in view of the expenses of his impending move to Devonshire Terrace.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir,

I could not reply to your note last evening, as I was engaged when it arrived. I shall be very happy to settle your account in the course of next month. If it would serve you particularly I should not object to your drawing upon me at such a date as will bring it — say to the 30th December. If you can do without my acceptance I would much rather that you did so; but if you are greatly pressed I will give it you.

I am, Dear Sir,
Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. (FC). Date: see next.

Doughty Street. | Friday Morning

My Dear Forster

By a happy touch of Kate's accustomed cleverness, I find now that the name is *Mull*rainy (MULLRAINY).[†1] Write — oh write — another and send it up. I would dispatch an emissary for it, but alas the gentle Topping is bespoke.

Faithfully Always
CD.

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE NOVEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: after 23 Oct 39 when Nickleby came out in one volume; presumably linked with last and therefore before leaving Doughty Street. Handwriting suggests late Nov. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

I haven't a decent Nickleby here — and no Pickwick. I'll try and get them in the course of the day.

I beg to thank you on the part of Miss Mullrainy for your obliging attention.

Faithfully

CD

To WILLIAM SNOXELL,[†2] 30 NOVEMBER 1839

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning Nov[†3] 30th. /39

Mr. Charles Dickens will thank Mr. Snoxell to send to a house to which he is on the point of removing, (No. 1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate — close to Marylebone Church) and measure the dining-room windows for white spring roller blinds.

Between three and four to day would suit well for the measuring, but if that is inconvenient to Mr. Snoxell, he can send as early as he pleases on Monday.

December

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY DECEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: late 1839 on handwriting; "the House" must have been 1 Devonshire Terrace, and CD was presumably writing shortly before the move — the books being perhaps for Miss Mullrainy.

Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

I inclose a note for Henry[†1] to take to Chapman and Hall's for the books. I am going up to the House this morning, and will call on you between three and four, or about three, to affix my sign-manual to the same.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

To BASIL HALL, [3 DECEMBER 1839]

MS Yale University Library. Date: the Tuesday in the week before his move to Devonshire Terrace, completed by 11 Dec.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Sir.

When I asked you the other day if you had been in Germany, I corrected myself precipitately, and added — "but of course you have", — for there rushed upon my mind at the moment a thought of this very book[†2] which is now lying on my table, and for which I beg to thank you with hearty cordiality.

You do me injustice if you suppose that it will "lie on the table" or on my shelves, without being first carefully perused. I don't pretend that I read all the books that are sent me, but to be suspected of not reading yours is to undergo a tacit accusation of dullness and insensibility which I am not meek enough to sustain in quiet; and I mean to seek satisfaction — in your pages.

I have a shadowy recollection of having seen or heard some extracts from the volume. The name, I need scarcely say, is familiar both to my eyes and ears. You shall find me quite "up" in the contents, and able to go through an examination in them very creditably, by the next time we meet.

Our moving accidents[†1] will be over I hope next week — sometime next week. I shall take the earliest opportunity of leaving a card at your door in token of their happy conclusion, and Mrs. Dickens's anxious wish to become acquainted with Mrs. Hall.[†2]

To whom I beg to be remembered, and to all your family — especially my particular young friend[†3] whose good-will I shall hope to cultivate personally.

Let me thank you again my dear Sir for your very kind recollection of me, and beg you to believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Basil Hall

To JAMES HALL, [?4 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS National Library of Scotland. Date: Signature points to end of Doughty Street period; probably refers to the final dinner of the Shakespeare Club on 7 Dec (see To Stanfield, that day, fn).

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Sir.

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind offer (conveyed to me through your brother) relative to the Shakespeare Portrait,[†4] of which I have no doubt the club will be delighted to avail themselves.

The dinner is on Saturday. If you can spare the precious curiosity for so long, and will leave it out for my man between 5 and 6 tomorrow afternoon, I can take it under my own care, and engage for its return to you on Sunday.

I should like the "knowing-ones" to be in possession of the facts. Would you mind writing a short note of the same?

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Hall Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?EARLY DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Mr David Borowitz. Date: late 1839 on handwriting; presumably Dec, when CD was still at Doughty Street but preparing 1 Devonshire Terrace for their move.

Friday Morning

I shall be at home until a quarter before 5, and shall hope to see you. I was at the house yesterday for the first time this long while, and shall be very glad to be able to air it. It stands in need of fires beyond all expression.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [?6 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: late 1839 on handwriting; probably 6 Dec, when Macready recorded in his diary "Dickens gave me a play to read, called Glencoe" (Diaries, II, 33): see To Talfourd, 12 Dec, fn.

At Your house | Friday Morning.

My Dear Macready.

I wish to see you without loss of time; having — I really believe — something to shew you which you will be glad to see. I'll therefore come down to the Theatre to-night at the end of the Play, to have a few words.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [7 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Mr C. W. Bliss. Date: late 1839 on handwriting; presumably refers to the Shakespeare Club dinner of 7 Dec, at which CD presided.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Stanfield

They have sent me the plan of the Shakespeare table for to-day,[†1] and I find that next to me on the right, is a blank for your name. For the love of all that is pleasant, come and support me — send a word (not a line) by bearer, and let it be "Yes", and by no means "No", — or bear the eternal malediction of (in that case) Your enemy

CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

To FRANK STONE [?7 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: probably same day as last; CD had clearly just heard that Stanfield was away. On 17 Dec he asked Beard about an accident to his eye.

Doughty Street. | Saturday

Dear Stone

Stanfield is out of town. — Beard has met with a slight accident, and will not be forthcoming.

Hastily & Faithfully

Yours

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1839]

Extract in F, II, v, 133*n*. Date: Forster, himself uncertain, suggests this letter may be connected with a dispute at the Shakespeare Club; if so, not later than Dec 39.

I need not, I am sure, impress upon you the sincerity with which I make this representation. Our close and hearty friendship happily spare me the necessity. But I will add this — that feeling for you an attachment which no ties of blood or other relationship could ever awaken, and hoping to be to the end of my life your affectionate and chosen friend, I am convinced that I counsel you now as you would counsel me if I were in the like case; and I hope and trust that you will be led by an opinion which I am sure cannot be wrong when it is influenced by such feelings as I bear towards you, and so many warm and grateful considerations.

To JOHN FORSTER, [1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: watermark 1839; before the move from Doughty Street. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster.

Letters and business press so hard to-day that I must not dine. Will you go into the 3rd. Circle at Drury Lane? I shall hope to join you there before 10.

In great haste
Faithfully
CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests late in Doughty Street period.

10 minutes to 5.

My Dear Forster. Be with me in Doughty Street, at 6.[†1]

CD.[†2]

To B. B. THATCHER,[†3] [1837-9]

Text from Merwin-Clayton Sales Co. catalogue, May 1906; dated 48 Doughty Street, Wednesday Evening.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Thatcher, and begs to inform him that as the Literary Fund Dinner has for its object the augmentation of a charitable Fund it is not in his power to procure him (or indeed anyone else) an admission to it. He has, however, forwarded his note to the Secretary of the Institution, who will no doubt ascertain the sentiments of the Committee on the subject. Mr. Dickens begs to add, with reference to Mr. Thatcher's last question, that Mr. Moore[†4] will be present.

To MRS WILLIAM AUSTIN, [1837-9]

Text from N, I, 187. Date: in the Doughty Street period.

Doughty Street | Sunday Morning

Dear Mrs. Austin,

When you called the other day I knew I was engaged to dine at Hampstead today, but I forbore mentioning the engagement, in the hope that I might be enabled to put it off. I regret however that as it is in part one of business, I have been unable to do so, and that as I must keep it, I cannot have the pleasure of being with you in Bloomsbury Square.

My better half will represent me worthily in my absence.

Believe me
Dear Mrs. Austin
Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. HARRISON, [1838-9]

Text from N, I, 141. Date: in the Doughty Street period; unlikely to be before Feb 38, when Harrison was suggested as a contributor to The Pic Nic Papers (see To Lovell, ?15 Feb).

Doughty Street | Monday Night

My dear Sir,

I should have sent you the enclosed before, but I forgot your address and trusted to your writing to remind me.

Many thanks for your kind note.

Pray believe me always
Very truly yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM HALL, [1838-9]

Text from unidentified catalogue cutting. Date: before 11 Dec 39, since from Doughty Street. The reference is probably not to monthly illustrations, but either to the cover design for the first No. of Nickleby (Apr 38) or to the device for the preliminary announcement of Master Humphrey's Clock (reproduced in the National Edn, 1908).

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

Dear Sir,

As Mr. Browne was engaged on Saturday, I did not see him until yesterday. I am to send for the designs at 10 tomorrow morning, and as there is now no time to lose I will return them to him direct the moment I have inspected them.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Hall Esquire

To J. P. HARLEY, [1838-9]

Text from N, I, 123. Date: probably late 1838 or 1839 when CD and Harley were on increasingly friendly terms.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

My Dear Harley

Are you safe for Saturday? I have been surprised not to receive a note from you; a word in reply.

Always Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE BEADNELL, [1838-9]

MS Winifred A. Myers Ltd. Date: between March 38 ("Esquire" in full) and the move from Doughty Street.

Doughty Street | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

Mrs. D and I have much pleasure in accepting your invite, and much regret that we were not in the way when you called.

Our best regards to Mrs. and Miss Beadnell.

Always believe me
Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Beadnell Esquire

To CHARLES SMITHSON, [1838-9]

Extract in N, I, 119; from Doughty Street. Date: between Spring 1838 (when Mitton joined the firm of Smithson & Dunn) and the move from Doughty Street.

Mr. Forster is engaged at 12, and proposes to make it ½-past one. If I don't hear from you, I shall conclude that hour will suit you.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [12 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS University of Texas. Date: On Thurs 12 Dec CD was too ill to accompany Macready to Talfourd's for dinner; after dinner Talfourd admitted his authorship of Glencoe — clearly the "communication" CD mentions here (see Macready, Diaries, II, 34). Address: Mr. Serjeant Talfourd M.P. | &c &c &c | Serjeants Inn | Chancery Lane.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Talfourd.

I am labouring under a very bad cold upon my chest, and a severe attack of indigestion which kept me sitting up nearly the whole of last night. — You may suppose how very unwell I am, when I tell you that I am obliged to deny myself the pleasure of dining with you to-day, and to take physic and slops at home. I have not been half so upset for a very long time.

It has occurred to me to suggest to you whether there may not be a reason for your not making the communication you thought of,[†1] until you are quite sure of Mrs. Talfourd. Would not your doing so now, and your declining to have it played after all, subject you again to all the past sorrows annoyances and vexations of the Athenian Captive?[†1]

I hope there is little chance of your preventing the representation of so noble a tragedy, but as you yourself touched on this point, I feel I should not do right if I refrained from saying what has occurred to me — especially as my genuine and heartfelt interest in your genius is my best excuse.

Always believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd

To THOMAS MITTON, [12 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: This must refer to the lease of 1 Devonshire Terrace, no doubt executed soon after CD took possession. Second paragraph strongly suggests same day as last.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

Dear Tom.

Will you walk up here this evening — take the Cheque from me — and name your own day and hour for the Execution of the lease at your office?

If you can't come (which I hope you can) will you send? I am exceedingly unwell to-day, and was up — for the same reason — nearly all last night.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To MESSRS SMITHSON & MITTON, 16 DECEMBER 1839*

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park.
December 16th. 1839.

Dear Sirs.

I happened to take up the Morning Herald on Saturday afternoon, and in it saw an advertisement from Mr. Bentley announcing "Mr. Dickens's new work Barnaby Rudge, in three volumes", as "preparing for publication".†2

I wish you if you please, without delay, formally to make known to Mr. Bentley (through his agents with whom you have already corresponded) what I presume he is already perfectly well acquainted with, through Mr. George Cruikshank — namely, that I am not prepared to deliver the Manuscript of Barnaby Rudge to him on the First of January.

At the same time have the goodness, unless you see some very strong reason to the contrary, to state to those gentlemen why I have placed it out of my power to have the work ready by that time, and why at the present sacrifice of from two to four thousand pounds I prefer leaving Mr. Bentley to avail himself, if he thinks proper, of that penal clause in our agreement (penal as regards me at least) which provides for this contingency.†1

My chief reason is, that Mr. Bentley in his advertisements and hired puffs of other books with which I never had and never can have any possible connection, has repeatedly within the last three or four months used my name and the names of some of my writings in an unwarrantable manner, dragging them before the public when he had no business to refer to them, and hawking them about in a manner calculated to do me serious prejudice.†2

When Mr. Bentley first began to publish these repeated allusions, undoubtedly seeking by such means to force the sale of other books by connecting them unfairly with my name, I was at work upon and was progressing rapidly with this Barnaby Rudge. My friends one and all remonstrated with me upon going further; they urged upon me that the publication by Mr. Bentley of a new work of mine under such circumstances would connect me still further with matters with which I have no connection; they pointed out to me how closely Mr. Bentley imitated in external appearance and form of publication everything I did;†3 and left me to judge how fairly he would use my name when he had it, from the manner in which he used it when he had it not. Yielding to these and many like considerations which I need not say nobody can feel so strongly as I, I devoted myself to another work†4 which I had long had in contemplation, and laid Barnaby Rudge aside.†5

Since this period Mr. Bentley has published a novel in three volumes at twenty five shillings, and with Heaven knows how many copies on the town, unsold by the booksellers to some of whom they had been delivered but the very day before, republished it immediately, in fifteen weekly parts at a shilling apiece.†6 I have no protection against Mr. Bentley's pursuing exactly the same course in my case; and I neither choose to be considered a party to such proceedings by those who could never know how bound and fettered I should be, nor to arm Mr. Bentley with such a powerful engine of annoyance and injury to my own reputation, as a new work of mine would assuredly become in his hands just now.

I therefore take the course which the Agreement distinctly recognizes the possibility of my adopting, and declare that when the specified time arrives, I shall not be prepared with the Manuscript.[†1]

I am Dear Sirs
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]
Messrs. Smithson and Mitton.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?17 DECEMBER 1839]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Probably this was sent as a covering letter to last; its business subject no doubt explains the formal salutation.

Tuesday Morning

My Dear Mitton

I inclose the letter. In any communication you have with the opposition, you must use entirely your own discretion as to the prospect you hold out of their having the MS at some *un*stipulated time.

Ever Yours
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, [17 DECEMBER 1839]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 18 Dec 39 (Wednesday).

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Beard.

Will you dine with us on Sunday? As we shall be quite alone, you needn't "mind your eye" — speaking of which reminds me to ask how you got it. Did you take it naturally, or bacchanalially?

We have been very sorry to hear of your sister's ill health. Our best remembrances and wishes wait upon her.

War to the knife and with no quarter on either side, has commenced with the Burlington Street Brigand.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS
P.T.O.

When you go down Oxford Street (for I forget his precise whereabout) will you order me from the immortal Harris[†2] a one pound box of the unrivalled Cubas?[†3]

To GEORGE BEADNELL, 19 DECEMBER 1839

MS Winifred A. Myers Ltd.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening Decr. 19th. 1839.

My Dear Sir.

One of the gentlemen who have so feelingly acquitted themselves of their melancholy duty in the letters which I now return to you, says it would be hopeless to offer you any consolation on the bereavement you have sustained in the loss of your dear son.[†4] I differ from him, and confidently trust that in the very letters which brought to you the sad intelligence of his death, you have long 'ere this found a source of deep and lasting reflection — reflection, which, whenever the loss presents itself to your mind will soften its first bitterness more and more, and render it less hard to bear.

It is nothing that death is inevitable; but it is something that it has been without pain — how much more that it has been resigned and tranquil — that the object of our love and regret has passed away in peace, leaving nothing behind but pleasant thoughts of his worth and excellence, and his timely reliance on that Merciful Being who did not desert him in his hour of need. In the plain and honest tribute to his memory which his old companions pay, there is — I am sure — more lasting comfort for you, than they (who are not fathers) can conceive; and sharp as the pain must be of losing a child, and that child one so well deserving of your love and affection, even his high deserts will, I feel assured, reconcile you only the sooner to his untimely fate.

Remember, my dear Sir, that the barrier which divides you now, is nothing to the gulf which has been between you ever since his boyhood. It is impossible to separate the idea of the dead from the companionship of the living. His thoughts were with you in life, but in that state which succeeds to death — in that happy state in which he surely is at this moment — to whom can his spirit cleave so strongly as to his mother and father? If in the living, the affections survive beyond the grave, it is but reasonable to hold that they survive with the dead. The Great Father who requires that His children should love Him, requires also that they should love their earthly parents; and when no fragment of our bodies perishes without producing something beautiful in its stead, it would be impious indeed to believe that a child's love and duty were buried in the grave, and that from their ashes nothing sprung again.

As his form is changed for one of whose brightness we can have no conception, so I believe his regard and care for you are exalted in like degree. He spoke of returning to England where at best he could have been with you but for a time. He is now with you always. The air about us has been said to be thick with guardian angels, and I believe it, in my soul. The meeting with you to which he now looks forward is darkened by no thought of separation. The idea of death, which would seem to have been frequently present to him, is past, — and he is happy.

That you and Mrs. Beadnell may be happy in your remaining children, and in the recollection of him who is spared all further trials, is the heartfelt and earnest wish of My Dear Sir, Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 23 DECEMBER 1839

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

Monday Morning 23rd. Decr. 1839.

My Dear Forster.

I shall be at home until a quarter before 2. We rather expected to have seen you yesterday.

The governor is both sore and sorely bruised[†1] — goes about in great anguish — and becoming the victim of Pickthorn is drenched with physic.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 27 DECEMBER 1839

MS Dickens House.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | 27th. December 1839.

My Dear Sir

The place where you pledge yourself to pay for my beef and mutton when I eat it, and my ale and wine when I drink it, is the Treasurer's office of the Middle[†1] Temple[†2] — the new building at the bottom of Middle Temple Lane on the right hand side. You walk up into the first floor and say (boldly) that you have come to sign Mr. Charles Dickens's bond which is already signed by Mr. Serjeant Talfourd. I suppose I should formally acquaint you that I have paid the fees,[†3] and that the responsibility you incur is a very slight one — extending very little beyond my good behaviour, and honorable intentions to pay for all wine-glasses, tumblers, or other dinner furniture, that I may break or damage.

I wish you'd do me another service, and that is to choose at the place you told me of a reasonable copy of the Beauties of England and Wales,[†4] and bid the man send it here with a bill and receipt any day between 11 and 1. You can choose it quite as well as I can, or better, and I shall be much obliged to you. I should like him to send it at once as I am diving into all kinds of matters at odd minutes with a view to our forthcoming operations.[†5]

The Brigand[†6] is sleeping, but I suspect with one eye open. Whether he is ogling the Vice Chancellor[†7] with it, or not, time will show.[†8]

Best remembrances to Mr. Hall.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To J. A. OVERS, 28 DECEMBER 1839

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regent's Park |
December 28th. 1839.

Dear Sir.

In reply to your letter, I wish you to understand that I am not on such terms with Mr. Ainsworth as would justify me in giving him trouble for others; and that I am not on such terms with Mr. Bentley as to render any communication with him, directly or indirectly, either pleasant or desirable.

As I cannot serve you, therefore, by reading your papers I would rather not peruse them — simply because I fear it would seem a kind of impertinence to pronounce an opinion upon them which might appear intended to guide some Editor unknown, and which would certainly seem to be given somewhat gratuitously, as I am not an Editor myself and have no Magazine purposes to consider. I will not add that I am very closely occupied and that the sight of MS (not my own) is a nightmare to me, for I would not allow this consideration to have any weight, if I saw a prospect of being useful to you.

I know it may be unpalatable to you that I should do so, but I cannot too strongly commend the resolution you propose to yourself of applying to certain pursuits, and not allowing your literary efforts to throw you back in the world, and by degrees disgust and weary you with your more profitable avocations. Such efforts as you have made are most laudable, but protracted beyond the bounds of hope or prudence they become less and less praiseworthy and by degrees culpable, when others look to the labour of one's hands for their sole support. If a ballad were printed here or a paper accepted there, do you think you would better your condition or be a happier man? I am bound to tell you — having the miseries of such a condition urged upon me by hundreds every day and hour of my life — that you would not. I am bound to tell you besides that in nine tenths of the distressing cases which are so made known to me, there is as much natural ability as in yours — neither more nor less — although it has seldom developed itself under the same disadvantages. Now do take this to heart, and if you still persevere do so when perseverance becomes a pleasure and relaxation from other toils, and may be indulged in without regret or pain.

I do not return your papers with this, because if you still wish me to read them and give you a private opinion upon them solely for your own guidance, I will cheerfully do so. You will let me know the conclusion at which you arrive on this point.[†1]

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To WILLIAM UPCOTT, 28 DECEMBER 1839*

MS Newark Public Library, New Jersey.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
28th. December 1839.

My Dear Sir.

If you ever read this penitent epistle, traced with a trembling hand and an amazingly bad pen, I think you will forgive me; and as antiquaries do sometimes suffer themselves to be deceived and take new lamps for old ones, so I am not without hope that you will ante-date my apparent neglect and consider it so old as to be quite beyond the memory of man.

I received your last note when my wife was very ill. Next day she was confined. "I will write" said I to myself, "to Mr. Upcott tomorrow." But with tomorrow there came all kinds of new anxieties and occupations, and then I said I'd write tomorrow. Meantime I disposed of my house (which I had been wanting to get rid of) and had to seek a new one. At last I found a new one; then came appointments with Carpenters bricklayers upholsterers and painters, journies[†1] to and fro by day and night, and at last the "moving". Then came Christmas time and with it a house full of relations from the country. All this while, I went on from day to day silencing a murmuring conscience by saying "I'll write to Mr. Upcott tomorrow." At last the[†2]

To CHARLES MOLLOY, 28 DECEMBER 1839

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate |
December 28th. 1839.

My Dear Sir.

Not mentioning your name, but stating that my informant was a banker in Lombard Street, I communicated to Mitton what you told me; begged him to see the parties immediately, to make the strongest representation from me in disapproval of their conduct, and rather to take the bill up than have it hawked about in such hands. The person to whom it was paid was a Mr. Price an auctioneer and house agent in Chancery Lane.[†3] He expressed the greatest surprise and astonishment at the report, and opening his cash box took out the bill which he solemnly assured Mitton had never left his hands and never would (except to be paid into his bankers) as he had himself, in pursuance of an arrangement between them, discounted it for his client, the gentleman who had this property before me.[†1] He further said (and quite truly) that as the terms required had been half the money down and the remainder in a note of hand at such months, he would have acted most unwarrantably and improperly if he had lent himself to such a proceeding as negociating it with Mr. Flight,[†2] — and begged that his most positive denial of the rumour or the possibility of its being true might be conveyed to me.

Now, of course I can do nothing more in this matter without your permission; and I very much wish to let this Mr. Flight know that I have been made acquainted with his statement respecting me, and to demand to know why he presumed to make it. I am the more anxious to do this as banking at Coutts's and being on terms of intimacy with Miss Coutts, and the other partners,[†3] I should be seriously annoyed if any such reports came to their ears. If you can enable me to do this, you will add to the obligation which your friendly interest in the matter has already imposed upon me. If not, I hold myself bound to you in the strictest confidence and secrecy.

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Molloy Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: watermark 1839; handwriting suggests late in the year. Perhaps Leigh Hunt was to give a reading of A Legend of Florence, first performed at Covent Garden on 7 Feb 40. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Friday Morning

My Dear Forster

As a family man, I really have not the face to dine out again to-day. But I will surely and certainly be with you before Hunt begins.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [?DECEMBER 1839]

Extract in MDGH, 1882, I, 33; given as penultimate paragraph of To Edward Chapman, 27 Dec 39. Date: perhaps of roughly the same period; reference to accounts would support end of year.

Will you mention to your book-keeper, that in case he should meet a Fair Copy of our accounts, walking about anywhere, I shall be glad if he will give her my compliments, and say she may rely upon a welcome, whenever she is disposed to come towards this end of the town.

To W. C. MACREADY, [?DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature and inclusion of "1" in address (dropped in To Macready, 29 Jan 40) suggest soon after CD's move to Devonshire Terrace.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Morning

My dear Macready

I omitted to take into account last night, the possibility of my having an engagement on Sunday, which is still uncertain, but to which I shall be in a manner bound if it should unluckily occur. On consideration, the best and surest plan perhaps will be to change our day to Sunday week — when we shall expect you and Mrs. Macready, the Major[†1] and your sister, to all of whom I beg you to commend me heartily.

Always Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1839]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting points to 1839; presumably after July when Macready's management of Covent Garden ended. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster

I am astonished at the Papers. There is little hope for them the next time they (the C. G. people) produce anything good, when they get such praise for what is so vilely bad.

At 5 I shall see you. — I hope Macready knows how Smith[†2] exerted himself — he really ought.

Faithfully Yours
CD

To THOMAS MITTON, [1836-9]

Text from N, I, 240. Date: 1836-9 on evidence of the salutation "Dear Tom" and suggestion in last sentence that CD was married.

Thursday Morning

Dear Tom,

If you are at the office tonight at ½ past 7, I shall be out and will be with you, as we may take a stroll together or find some other occupation. — Don't go 'till I come.

We were at the Adelphi last night.

Faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Addenda

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [21 DECEMBER 1835]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD returned to London from reporting the North Northamptonshire by-election on 20 Dec 35.

Furnivals Inn | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I was hurried off to Northamptonshire ten days ago, to be present at the Election from which I only returned yesterday. I should have called on you this morning to see how you had been getting on, but I was fearful of disturbing you, and thought the better way would be to write and make the enquiry. I hope to hear you have made considerable progress.

It occurred to me too that you might have heard I was out of town from Macrone. This is another reason for my writing to say that if you wish to see me about the plates at any time I am "to the fore" again.

Believe me
Dear Sir
Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Geo Cruikshank Esqre.

I am much obliged to you for seeing Mr. Chesterton.[†1] I think I shall visit the Establishment tomorrow, but as "Newgate" is rather long, and we have much more matter than we can use already, I think I shall make a Magazine paper of it, and offer it to the Metropolitan.[†2]

To HENRY COLBURN, [?13 JULY 1838]

MS Universiteits-Bibliotheek, Amsterdam. Date: Handwriting points to July 38; probably the Friday before Wed 18 July when CD expected to be in London for a party at T. J. Thompson's and might well hope to have finished the month's Nickleby; the Oliver was already finished (see Diary entries, pp. 633-4).

Twickenham Park | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

I think I shall be in town on Wednesday, but until I have finished for the month cannot certainly say. I will write you on Wednesday morning, and name an hour at which I will call upon you.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Colburn Esquire

Corrigenda to the letters in Volume I

NB. in counting text lines from the top or bottom of pages, we have not included the running-heads.

7 line 2 replace photograph Dickens House with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

10 n. 4 2nd col. line 13 for 1831 read 1830

25 line 16 anger" fn Hamlet, I, ii, 23.

29 line 22 necessarilly fn Thus in MS.

36 n. 1st col. line 12 for 11 May read 12 May

48 n. 5 line 1 for Staples read Staple

n. 5 line 3 for 1906 read 1897

57 line 17 for [our]^{4} read [our]^{3} line 29 for last^{3} read last^{4}

58 line 3 address should read Thos Beard Esqre|Exeter|Favored by John Neilson Esqre

66 n. 3 lines 6–8 for abuses of the present system of competition in architecture read Abuses of the Present System of Competition in Architecture

102 n. 2 line 1 for Autograph Prices Current, VI, 49, read Berg Collection Dickens Anthology, p. 17

131 line 13 add square brackets to headline date

line 14 replace Text from D, XXXIII (1936–7), 6 with MS Johns Hopkins University line 15 after 16th Feby 1836 add fn date added in another hand line 16 for Sirs, read Sirs.

line 21 for reduce it read reduce it,

132 line 5 for Sirs, read Sirs

n. 2 line 15 for 1834 read 1843

137 line 26 delete [from]: recover fn See OED 15.

147 8th line from bottom replace Text from D, xxxiii (1936–7) 7, with MS Dickens House

6th line from bottom for Dear Sirs, read Dr Sirs—

2nd line from bottom for sale read Sale

150 n. 1 3rd line from bottom for four songs read five songs

167 n. 4 line 2 delete; DNB

n. 6 line 2 for 1845 read 1843

176 n. 3 line 2 for old Lowten read Jack Bamber and delete final sentence

188 13th line from bottom replace Text from D, xxxiii (1936–7), 8 with MS Johns Hopkins University

10th line from bottom for Dear Sirs, read dear Sirs

189 12th line from bottom for dear Sirs, read Dear Sirs.

201 n. 1 line 13 for 1871 read 1874

202 n. 2 line 6 for Back Through read back through

209 line 15 "Gabriel Vardon" fn i.e. Varden.

212 line 3 for sportsman, read sportsmen,

240 n. 1st col. line 2 for 1835 read 1834

n. 2nd col. last line for xi–xiii. read xi–xvii.

244 line 17 replace Text from N, i, 104 with MS Johns Hopkins University line 21 for Dear Sirs, read Dr Sirs.

line 22 for letter[4] read letter,[4]

245 line 6 for unbusiness-like read un-business-like

254 line 8 replace Composite text ... 1944 with MS Mr Alfred Berol line 12 for 48, Doughty Street, read 48 Doughty Street line 13 for Sir, read Sir.

line 16 for St. read Sailine 17 delete comma after long

8th line from bottom read Believe me Ever|

8th line from bottom for yours read Yours.

7th line from bottom add subscription, J. P. Harley Esqre.

258 line 18 for Faithfuly read Faithfully

264 n. 2 line 9 for Cornwall read Cornwell

266 n. 1 line 2 for Cornwall read Cornwell

274 headline delete ? before 19

276 8th line from bottom for [?23 JUNE 1837] read [?22 JUNE 1837]

280 n. 3 for MS: read MS. and delete rest of note

288 line 11 replace Text from D, XXIII (1936–7), 9 with MS Johns Hopkins University line 13 for dear read Dear for Hall, read Hall.

2nd line from bottom for yours read Yours

293 n. 4 line 3 for St read Ste

297 n. 5 line for Abulists read Fabulists

317 n. 4 line 7 for continued read returned line 8 for until 1848. read in 1843–8.

340 4th line from bottom birthday fn In fact his christening, a slip of CD's

341 n. 2 2nd col line 4 for Edward read Edmund

348 n. 1 line 3 for on Winifred read by Winifred

353 line 13 To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?MID-JANUARY 1838] should come after

To JOHN FORSTER, 16 JANUARY 1838 (p. 355)

355 n. 2 line 6 for 5 read 3

375 n. 4 lines 12 and 13 for Durham Advertiser read Durham Advertiser

378 line 14 delete square brackets from MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL,

line 15 replace Text from N, i, 160 with MS Johns Hopkins University line 15 delete n. on Address.

11th line from bottom for Feb read Feby

10th line from bottom for Sirs, read Sirs.

8th line from bottom delete square brackets from "Boz's"[2]

2nd line from bottom for yours read Yours

last line delete square brackets from CHARLES DICKENS; add subscription,

Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

n. 2 line 1 add incorrectly. after "Don's" and delete rest of note.

379 line 1 delete square brackets from MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL,

line 1 add square brackets to headline date.

line 2 replace Text from N, i, 161 with MS Johns Hopkins University line 3 replace 22nd Feby 1838 with 22 Feb 1838; add fn date added in another hand.

line 4 for Sirs, read Sirs

line 16 for yours read Yours

line 17 delete square brackets from CHARLES DICKENS, and add subscription, Messrs. Chapman & Hall

388 line 2 replace MS Private. with MS University of Kentucky,

402 7th line from bottom for 1838] * read 1838]

408 line 7 To CHARLES HICKS, [?29 JUNE 1838] PM JU 23, 1838 according to Anderson Auction Co., Mar 1909

416 n. 5 line 2 for James read Thomas

n. 5 2nd col 4th line from bottom for the wife read the second wife

423 n. 1 line 2 title of book should read Zeitschrift fur Bucherfreunde Beziehungen zu England

429 n. 1 2nd col line 11 for To the Inimitable read to the inimitable

431 n. 1 line 12 for Maclise read Laurence

464 line 20 for Booksellers read Booksellers'

471 n.[aa] for 111; read 111.

474 line 13 for 23 read 21

line 16 for 23 read 21

line 17 for Sunday read Friday

483 11th line from bottom after 227 add checked from MS Christies. 10th line from bottom for 48, Doughty Street, read 48 Doughty Street.

for December 29th, read Dec. 29th.

9th line from bottom for Sir, read Sir.

8th line from bottom delete comma after Manchester

7th line from bottom Ex uno disce omnes should be roman

5th line from bottom delete comma after suddenly

4th line from bottom delete quotation marks from Oliver Twist,

3rd line from bottom substitute dash for comma after again

2nd line from bottom for enemy's camp, read Enemy's camp

n. 2 line 10 for Pecksniff read Pecksniff

484 line 4 delete comma after exertions line 10 delete quotation marks from Nickleby, line 12 transpose comma from after myself to after now line 14 for tending it, and read tendering it. And line 14 add Dear Sir

line 15 for yours, read Yours,

line 16 add subscription, Edward Fitzgerald Esquire &c &c

488 6th line from bottom for Thurs/3 Jan. read Thurs 3 Jan.

489 line 15 for Text from N, i, 195. read MS Mr and Mrs John Madden.

line 18 for Quin, read Quin.

line 24 for half-way read half way

last line add subscription, Doctor Quin | &c &c

delete square brackets round CHARLES DICKENS

499 n. 1 line 9 for 100 read 30

504 line 16 after 31 Jan. add Checked from MS Private.

line below add Doughty Street

above line 17 add Sir

below line 23 add I am/Your very obedt Servant/Charles Dickens add subscription, Mr. J.A. Overs.

505 4th line from bottom for Tuesday read Sunday

520 line 22 Cheatham fn i.e. Cheetham.

530 line 26 God, fn Pope, Essay on Man, IV, 248.

531 n. 3 line 7 for 1,360. read 11, 360.

546 bottom line delete square brackets from signature

15th line from bottom replace Text from MDGH, I, 24 with MS University of Reading

11th line from bottom delete comma after Sir

559 n. 1 line 2 for Burdett read Burdett-

561 n. 2 lines 4 and 5 for may well have been read was 575 line 13 delete [for]: stay fn See OED 17.

577 n. 1 2nd col. line 12 after generosity add But see Vol. III p. 418 and n.

584 line 7 for Sunday read Saturday

612 line 17 for spare read spares

614 line 14 for Text from ... cutting, read MS Private.

line 19 for Tuesday read Monday line 23 add comma after direct

631 n. 2 line 7 for (Experiences read (Some Experiences

690 line 15 for interest to read interest you

Volume II

1840 – 1841

— II - 1 —

1840

January

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1840

MS Dickens House.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night January 2nd. 1840

My Dear Sirs.

I determined not to thank you for the Turkey until it was quite gone, in order that you might have a becoming idea of its astonishing capabilities.

The last remnant of that blessed bird made its appearance at breakfast yesterday — I repeat it, yesterday — the other portions having furnished forth seven grills, one boil, and a cold lunch or two.

Accept my warm thanks (in which Mrs. Dickens begs to join) for your annual recollection of us, which we value very highly as one of the pleasant circumstances of a pleasant season — and couple with them my hearty wishes for many happy years to both of you and both of yours — and of good health and good work and good feeling to all of us.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To JOHN FORSTER,[†2] [3 JANUARY 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: clearly the day before CD's visit to Upcott of 4 Jan (see fn). His Diary entry for 9 Jan records correcting proofs of Sketches of Young Couples.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Afternoon

My Dear Forster.

Recollecting on consideration that the servants have been up very late indeed for a great many nights — and moreover that I have not yet finished the Couples[†3] and have to wait on Mr. Upcott[†4] tomorrow — I have determined to resist the Pantomime[†1] and to come straight home like a good boy — for which resolution blame Christmas and the New Year; not me.

I shall expect to see you at 2 on Sunday. Meanwhile and always

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY,[†2] [?JANUARY 1840]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1929; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Saturday morning. Date: possibly early 1840: in Oct 39 CD had discussed Burnett's future with Macready (see Vol. I, p. 592), and by 18 Jan 40 Burnett, having refused other engagements, was in Bath (see To Mrs CD, 1 Mar, fn).

Saying that he wants to come over to [Macready] and ask a question about Burnett who being in a cleft stick requires [CD's] advice.

To CHARLES MOLLOY,[†1] JANUARY [1840]

Extract in P. J. Dobell & Son catalogue, New Series No. I (1913); MS 2 pp.; from Devonshire Terrace. Date: Jan (1840) according to catalogue; presumably shortly before To Molloy, 9 Jan, on the same subject.

I am very much and very truly obliged to you for the interest you have taken in that annoying matter. If anything could have obliged me more than your frank and friendly communication to me in the first instance, it would have been this.

I am still very uneasy and nervous lest any gentleman unknown should be signing my name for his own convenience[†2] — and I think the best thing I can do will be to tell either Sir Edmund Antrobus[†3] or Mr. Marjoribanks[†4] what I have heard and beg them to look out carefully for me.

To CHARLES MOLLOY, [9 JANUARY 1840]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: PM 9 Jan 40 (Thursday). Address: Charles Molloy Esquire | 8 New Square | Lincolns Inn.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you, and think you are right. We will let the matter rest where it is.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Molloy Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON,[†5] [?9 JANUARY 1840]

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd. Date: Handwriting suggests early 1840. The parcel was perhaps the "proofs of Young Couples" which CD spent the whole of Thurs 9 Jan correcting, and the enclosed cheque perhaps the £19 to the Britannia Life Insurance Co. shown in his Account Book (MS Messrs Coutts) as paid on 18 Jan (the amount of the next premium, paid 8 Aug 40, was £18.17.6 — i.e. "something less" than the cheque sent in Jan). Apparently Mitton did not dine with CD as suggested: see next. Address: Mr. Thomas Mitton | Charles Molloy Esqre | 8 New Square | Lincolns Inn.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Mitton

I have received a parcel from Bradbury's people this morning which will oblige me (most unwillingly) to stay at home all day. Our engagement therefore must stand over.

I haven't my banker's book at home and consequently don't know exactly what the Insurance money is. But I think the amount is something less than that of the inclosed cheque.

I shall expect to see you to dine here tomorrow. Will you call in before you wait upon the prig next door,[†1] that I may shew you what I propose to do.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10 JANUARY 1840]

Extract in F, II, vi, 143. Date: according to Forster, "a few days" before next; but CD had not thought of the two possible titles until 9 Jan and did not dine out that day (see Diary, p. 461). Letter must surely have been written between his "considering new work in all possible ways" on the 9th (ibid) and starting work on the 11th: i.e. on the same day as next.

I will dine with you. I intended to spend the evening in strict meditation (as I did last night); but perhaps I had better go out, lest all work and no play should make me a dull boy. I have a list of titles too, but the final title I have determined on — or something very near it. I have a notion of this old file in the queer house, opening the book by an account of himself, and, among other peculiarities, of his affection for an old quaint queer-cased clock; showing how that when they have sat alone together in the long evenings, he has got accustomed to its voice, and come to consider it as the voice of a friend; how its striking, in the night, has seemed like an assurance to him that it was still a cheerful watcher at his chamber-door; and how its very face has seemed to have something of welcome in its dusty features, and to relax from its grimness when he has looked at it from his chimney-corner. Then I mean to tell how that he has kept odd manuscripts in the old, deep, dark, silent closet where the weights are; and taken them from thence to read

(mixing up his enjoyments with some notion of his clock); and how, when the club came to be formed, they, by reason of their punctuality and his regard for this dumb servant, took their name from it. And thus I shall call the book either Old Humphrey's Clock,[†2] or Master Humphrey's Clock; beginning with a woodcut of old Humphrey and his clock, and explaining the why and wherefore. All Humphrey's own papers will be dated then From my clock-side, and I have divers thoughts about the best means of introducing the others. I thought about this all day yesterday and all last night till I went to bed. I am sure I can make a good thing of this opening, which I have thoroughly warmed up to in consequence.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 JANUARY 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: clearly Fri 10 Jan, the day after he entered in his Diary: "Qy. Title | Old Humphrey's Clock | Master Humphrey's Clock" (see Appx, p. 461). He started work on the book on Sat 11th (To Cattermole, 13 Jan). Address: John Forster Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday.

My Dear Forster

Coutts's people had made a mistake in not entering the bill in my book for this year, and I was fearful that it might fall due before we had provided for it. I find now, that the day is the 14th.[†1]

I am thinking awfully,[†2] but not writing, as I intend (Please God) to start tomorrow. I incline rather more to Master Humphrey's Clock than old Humphrey's — if so be that there is no danger of the pensive confounding "master" with a boy.

Faithfully CD.

To THOMAS HUMPHREYS,[†3] [JANUARY 1840]

Mention by Dr Charles Rogers in Daily News letter reprinted in Notes & Queries, 30 July 70, and quoted by H. Burnett Watson in "The Story of Dotheboys Hall", Monthly Chronicle of North Country Lore and Legend, I (1887), 294-6. Date: probably soon after finally deciding on the title Master Humphrey's Clock.

Telling him that his clock[†4] had suggested the title of the new book.[†5]

To MESSRS LONGMAN & CO.,[†1] [JANUARY 1840]

Mention in next. Date: shortly before the 11th.

To MESSRS LONGMAN & CO., 11 JANUARY 1840*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 11th. January 1840

Dear Sirs.

I am obliged to you for your letter and am in the very best humour I assure you — in proof of which let me say that I am now quite sure you had no intention to annoy or do me an injustice, and that if I shewed you any want of courtesy (which, even under a mistaken impression, was not my intention) I am very sorry for it.

I had not the remotest idea that you intended to "knock me down with poor Jack". But I thought — and I was not alone in thinking — that you were twisting a paragraph for poor Jack's purposes;[†2] it always annoys and irritates me greatly to be dragged into print in connection with matters with which I have no concern;[†3] and I was the more annoyed that you should do this, as I had congratulated myself very much previously, on having such people as you in the same field. Your reply to my note assures me that I did not calculate upon your fairness and integrity without good reason.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Longman and Company.

To WILLIAM UPCOTT, [?JANUARY 1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Signature suggests early 1840; probably not long after CD's visit to Upcott of 4 Jan.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

Thank you a thousand times for your kind recollection of me, and useful inclosure.

I wish I could send you some autographs. A great many of the kind you wish come here sometimes, but I find on enquiry that my lady wife has been bestowing them upon her friends.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Upcott Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE,[†1] 13 JANUARY 1840

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Monday January 13th. 1840

My Dear Cattermole.

I am going to propound a mightily grave matter to you. My new periodical work appears — or I should rather say the first No. does — on Saturday the 28th. of March;[†2] and as it has to be sent to America[†3] and Germany[†4] and must therefore be considerably in advance, it is now in hand — I having in fact begun it on Saturday last. Instead of being published in monthly parts at a shilling each, only, it will be published in weekly parts at three pence and monthly parts at a shilling — my object being to baffle the imitators[†5] and make it as novel as possible. The plan is a new one — I mean the plan of the fiction — and it will comprehend a great variety of tales. The title is, "Master Humphrey's Clock".

Now, among other improvements, I have turned my attention to the illustrations, meaning to have wood-cuts dropped into the text, and no separate plates.[†1] I want to know whether you would object to make me a little sketch for a wood-cut[†2] — in indian ink would be quite sufficient — about the size of the inclosed scrap: the subject an old quaint room with antique Elizabethian[†3] furniture, and in the chimney-corner an extraordinary old clock — the clock belonging to Master Humphrey in fact — and no figures. This I should drop into the text at the head of my opening page.[†4]

I want to know besides — as Chapman and Hall[†5] are my partners in the matter there need be no delicacy about my asking or your answering the question — what would be your charge for such a thing, and whether (if the work answers our expectations) you would like to repeat the joke at regular intervals, and if so, on what terms. I should tell you that I intend asking Maclise to join me likewise,[†6] and that the copying the drawing on wood,[†7] and the cutting, will be done in first-rate style.[†8] We are justified by past experience in supposing that the sale would be enormous, and the popularity very great; and when I explain to you the notion I have in my head, I think you will see that it opens a vast number of very good subjects.

I want to talk the matter over with you, and wish you would fix your own time and place — either here, or at your house, or at the Athenæum, though this would be the best place, because I have my papers about me. If you could take a chop with me, for instance, on Tuesday or Wednesday, I could tell you more in two minutes than in twenty letters, albeit I have endeavoured to make this as business-like and stupid as need be.

Of course all these tremendous arrangements are as yet a profound secret, or there would be fifty Humphreys in the field.[†1] So write me a line like a worthy gentleman, and convey my best remembrances to your worthy lady.

Believe me always, My Dear Cattermole

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 JANUARY 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 158. Date: according to Forster, the day after CD's attendance as juryman at the inquest on a baby "alleged to have been murdered by its mother" (F, II, viii, 157). The inquest was almost certainly that held on 14 Jan at Marylebone Workhouse on the newly-born child of Eliza Burgess.†2

— II - 10 —

Whether it was the poor baby, or its poor mother,†1 or the coffin,†2 or my fellow-jurymen,†3 or what not, I can't say, but last night I had a most violent attack of sickness and indigestion which not only prevented me from sleeping, but even from lying down. Accordingly Kate and I sat up through the dreary watches.†4

To FREDERICK YATES,†5 [?15 JANUARY 1840]

MS Dickens House. Date: Handwriting points to Winter 1839-40; Forster in the Examiner, 29 Dec 39, announced his intention "to take an early opportunity" of reviewing the Adelphi Pantomime (see fn); 15 Jan was the first Wednesday after the 29th on which CD was free to accompany him.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

Forster and I — he for purposes of business, I suppose, and I for pleasure

— II - 11 —

— have just designed a visit to you to-night.†1 Have you an untaken box which you have no better means of bestowing than on such vagrants as we?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Yates Esquire

To H. G. ADAMS,†2 18 JANUARY 1840†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park.
Saturday Jany. 18th. 1840

Dear Sir.

The pressure of other engagements will, I am compelled to say, prevent me from contributing a paper to your new local Magazine.[†3] But I beg you to set me down as a subscriber to it, and foremost among those whose best wishes are enlisted in your cause. It will afford me real pleasure to hear of your success for I have many happy recollections connected with Kent, and am scarcely less interested in it than if I had been a Kentish man bred and born, and had resided in the County all my life.

[†a]I beg you to excuse, and to attribute to constant occupation, so long a delay in answering your note, and am Dear Sir[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?21 JANUARY 1840]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: probably eight days rather than one after CD's request of 13 Jan for a sketch of an "old quaint room".

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Afternoon

My Dear Cattermole

I think the drawing[†1] most famous, and so do the publishers, to whom I sent it to-day. If Browne[†2] should suggest anything for the future which may enable him to do you justice in copying (on which point he is very anxious) I will communicate it to you. It has occurred to me that perhaps you will like to see his copy on the block before it is cut,[†3] and I have therefore told Chapman and Hall to forward it to you.

In future, I will take care that you have the No. to choose your subject from. I ought to have done so, perhaps, in this case; but I was very anxious that you should do the room.

Perhaps the shortest plan will be for me to send you as inclosed, regularly, but if you prefer keeping account with the Publishers they will be happy to enter upon it when, where, and how you please.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [JANUARY 1840]

Extract in F, II, vi, 143. Date: On 29 Jan CD had a rough proof of No. 1 to send to Macready (see next); he would presumably have finished writing the No. not many days before.

I have finished the first number, but have not been able to do more in the space than lead up to the Giants, who are just on the scene.[†4]

To W. C. MACREADY, [29 JANUARY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Macready recorded under date 29 Jan 40: "Dickens sent me a parcel — the pamphlet relating to Glencoe, and the proof sheets of his first number of his new work — Master Humphrey's Clock" (Diaries, II, 43).

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Macready.

I inclose you the Pamphlet about Glencoe.[†1] I have not read it, and don't know whether it possesses any interest or no.

I also inclose you (sub rosa) the rough draft of the first Number of my new Work, being anxious to hear what you think of the idea.[†2] The blanks that you see are for Wood-cuts, and the part of which I want to know your opinion is the first article.[†3] You come fresh upon it, and I shall be greatly interested to know how it strikes you. When you have had time to look at it, send it back to me. — Of course I shall be proud to extend my confidence to the Ladies.

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [29 JANUARY 1840]*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: CD's birthday, 7 Feb, fell on a Friday in 1840; reference to Bentley and Barnaby makes that year certain.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Mitton.

I saw Cruikshank[†4] (who has — of course — quarrelled with Bentley)[†5] in the street the other day, and he told me that Bentley had told Ainsworth[†1] that if I did the New Work instead of Barnaby,[†2] he intended to publish all the letters I had ever written him!!![†3] I think this looks like desperation, and that the Sharks of Bedford Row are likely to bring it to a Compensation Question 'afore long. What do you think?

Hold yourself disengaged for the Evening of Friday Week, which is my birthday,[†4] and of which further particulars will be expressed in future bills. I should like to see you soon, if you can manage to get up here. I suppose you have no news of Adlington's Entire,[†5] or I should have heard.

Don't leave the inclosed about, 'till the First of Next Month.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 JANUARY 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests early 1840; but letter cannot refer to No. 1, which CD began on a Saturday (11 Jan). Probably refers to No. 2, begun about a fortnight later; Forster's "news", then, may have contained further details of Bentley's threats (see last). Address: John Forster Esquire.

Thursday.[†1]

Dear Forster

I was thinking all yesterday, and have begun at Master Humphrey to-day. Your news however has suddenly pulled me up and awakened my ferocity. I am going down to Mitton's and shall be with you — most probably as soon as Henry.[†2]

Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?JANUARY 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests early 1840.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Night

My Dear Forster.

I shall order the "Wan" at a quarter past Ten, and shall (I hope) assuredly be at home by the half hour. Whoever is here first, let him rush to the Study Fire.

Faithfully Yours

CD

Oh Bisery, bisery!

February

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†1] [1 FEBRUARY 1840]

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Date: the Saturday before CD's 28th birthday (Fri 7 Feb).

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning

My Dear Mr. Milnes

I never went out to breakfast in my life, and am afraid to try how one feels under such circumstances; but I will be with you next Friday at eleven o'Clock for purposes of small talk — that being the day which did itself the honor of presenting me to the world twenty eight years ago.

I really would immortalize myself if I were you by presenting that national anthem to Catnac[†2] of the Seven Dials.[†3] It is a capital notion. Perhaps you have heard that song in the streets about the Queen's marriage, whereof the burden is —

(Her Majesty being supposed to sing it)
So let 'em say, whatee'r[†4] they may,
Or do whatee'r they can;
Prince Hallbert he vill[†5] always be
My own dear Fancy Man.

There is also another prose composition in the form of a catechism. This is performed by two gentlemen and opens thus.

Question. Vell Mr. Bull Sir what is your private opinions vith respectin' to German Sassages — fresh as imported Sir from Saxe Humbug and Go-to-her?[†6]

Answer (in a melancholy growl) My opinion is Sir as they comes wery dear.

Question. Supposin' Mr. Bull as these here foreign sassages wos to cost the country a matter o' thirty thousand pound per annewum, who do you think ought to stand that 'ere wast and enormous expenditer?

Answer. Them as awails theirselves o' the sassages aforesaid. (a laugh in the crowd)

Question. Then in your opinion Mr. Bull they're a wery dear commodity?

Answer. I consider Sir as they would be uncommon dear at any price, and what I says is, let us rewert to the good wholesome home-made, dairy-fed native sassages — the Cambridge sassages of right down English Manafacter[†1] — the Protestant Sassages[†2] as our forefather and Marshal Blue Cur[†3] fought and bled for (Great applause)

(Both sing)
Oh didn't the Prince look as sveet as new honey
Ven Melbourne said, Johnny should get the full money;
And isn't his Missis vith Joe raythe vild,
Now they're almost too poor for to vet-nurse the child![†4]

— — — —

I return the letter which is a very extraordinary and a very sad one.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Milnes Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD,[†5] 4 FEBRUARY [1840]

Text in N, I, 247, checked from MS Sotheby's, 15 Dec 1964. Date: 4 Feb was Tuesday in 1840.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Tuesday 4th. February.

My Dear Talfourd.

Many thanks for the little book,[†6] which I hope will prove among the most interesting I shall ever leave to those for whom I work.

As you will come fresh upon the subject, I am curious to see how the idea of the first No. of my projected work, strikes you. I inclose you the proof (a secret yet, of course) which, when you have had time to look at, please return to me. It is the first article that I want you most to read. The blanks are for Wood Cuts.

Macready certainly is most singularly warm upon the[†1] subject.[†2] I saw him at dinner the other evening,[†3] and he took me aside and dwelt upon what he felt he could do with his part[†4] (which it seemed he had been going over that day) in a manner which for him is most extraordinary.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd | &c &c.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 FEBRUARY 1840*

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park, London

4th. February 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to his fair correspondent unknown, & begs to inform her that Mr. Mantalini's companion in the cellar is certainly not his wife, and that her appreciation of the lady's character is perfectly correct and just.[†5]

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, [?7 FEBRUARY 1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Handwriting suggests early 1840. Perhaps Fri 7 Feb, the day fixed in To Milnes, 1 Feb, for CD's visit; Milnes had possibly given him the choice of Friday or Saturday. Address: Richard Milnes Esquire MP. | &c &c | 26 Pall Mall.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am very much annoyed that an unexpected arrival from the country obliges me to postpone the pleasure of seeing you, until tomorrow.

In haste | Believe me
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Milnes Esquire

To JOHN OVERS,[†1] [?7 FEBRUARY 1840]†

MS Berg Collection. Date: Signature suggests Feb 40; CD was perhaps referring to Ainsworth's note of 4 Feb: see fn.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Afternoon

Dear Mr. Overs.

I have been much occupied — not with business, I am sorry to say, but with pleasure — [†2] during the past week, but have nevertheless sat down to alter your story. I find it, however, almost an impossible job without having you at my elbow, for I cannot cut it down to anything like the limits that will give you a fair chance of seeing it in Print without having all the story at my fingers' ends as I go on — [†a]the referring backwards and forwards, being a most grievous trial to me and by no means the best course for you. If you can be with me at 12 exactly next Sunday, I can spare an hour and a half, and I have no doubt that will be quite sufficient for our purpose.[†a]

I regret to say that I have no occupation for anybody, such as you describe. I never copy,[†3] correct but very little, and that invariably as I write. But I fancy that I see something in Mr. Ainsworth's note which may be worth your keeping in view.[†4] What it is, I will explain to you when we meet.

[†a]I beg that you will not mention any slight pains I may be at in your behalf (which are in truth so many pleasures to me) or rate slight services so very highly. I most sincerely wish that I saw any clearly-defined and certain way of assisting you in your design. It would afford me nearly as much pleasure as it would yield you, and whether we hit our mark or fall short of it, believe me that my interest in you will remain the same.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To R. H. HORNE,[†1] [?FEBRUARY 1840]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Handwriting suggests Feb 40, in which month Ainsworth's Jack Sheppard had terminated in the Miscellany. For the coupling of Oliver and Jack Sheppard in print in Jan and Feb 40, see fn.

At Forster's | Saturday Night

My Dear Horne.

I am by some jolter-headed enemies most unjustly and untruly charged with having written a book after Mr. Ainsworth's fashion.[†2] Unto these jolter-heads and their intensely concentrated humbug, I shall take an early opportunity of temperately replying.[†1] If this opportunity had presented itself and I had made this vindication, I could have no objection to set my hand to what I know to be true concerning the late lamented John Sheppard,[†2] but I feel a great repugnance to do so now, lest it should seem an ungenerous and unmanly way of disavowing any sympathy with that school, and a means of shielding myself.

Believe me that I concur heart and hand and shall be ready to do so at all needful times with pen and purse, in your great object,[†3] and that I sincerely regret being with-held by this consideration of delicacy from being among the Pioneers. I hope I shall shew not unworthily in the van, yet.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. J. THOMPSON,[†1] [?9 FEBRUARY 1840]*

Facsimile in unidentified catalogue. Date: Handwriting suggests early 1840. Possibly the Monday morning engagement was for 10 Feb, to see the Queen's wedding procession from Thompson's chambers, 63 Pall Mall.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday.

My Dear Thompson.

Maclise[†2] and I, coming from the place where you were not last night, and going in to the Piazza to supper, then and there encountered Forster who learning how we were engaged tomorrow Morning[†3] enquired (with much humility and prostration of spirit) whether I thought you would give him house-room. I ventured to make answer that I thought you would — and write to inform you of the heavy responsibility which I have herein contracted.

I am confined at home with the worst cold you can conceive, and am all alone. You are such a gentleman of England and live at home so much at ease[†4], or I should ask you to come in and take your wine in my sanctum ——?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

— II - 23 —

To W. S. LANDOR,[†1] [11 FEBRUARY 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 155. Date: "the 11th of February, the day after the royal nuptials", according to Forster.

Society is unhinged here, by her majesty's marriage, and I am sorry to add that I have fallen hopelessly in love with the Queen,[†2] and wander up and down with vague and dismal thoughts of running away to some uninhabited island with a maid of honor, to be entrapped by conspiracy for that purpose. Can you suggest any particular young person, serving in such a capacity, who would suit me? It is too much perhaps to ask you to join the band of noble youths (Forster is in it, and Maclise) who are to assist me in this great enterprise, but a man of your energy would be invaluable. I have my eye upon Lady...,[†3] principally because she is very beautiful and has no strong brothers. Upon this, and other points of the scheme, however, we will confer more at large when we meet; and meanwhile burn this document, that no suspicion may arise or rumour get abroad.[†4]

— II - 24 —

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 FEBRUARY 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 156. Date: 12 Feb 40 according to Forster.

I am utterly lost in misery, and can do nothing. I have been reading Oliver, Pickwick, and Nickleby to get my thoughts together for the new effort, but all in vain:

My heart is at Windsor,[†1]
My heart
isn't here;
My heart is at Windsor,
A following
my dear.[†2]

I saw the Responsibilities this morning, and burst into tears. The presence of my wife aggravates me. I loathe my parents. I detest my house. I begin to have thoughts of the Serpentine, of the regent's-canal, of the razors upstairs, of the chemist's down the street, of poisoning myself at Mrs. ——'s table, of hanging myself upon the pear-tree in the garden, of abstaining from food and starving myself to death, of being bled for my cold and tearing off the bandage, of falling under the feet of cab-horses in the New-road, of murdering Chapman and Hall and becoming great in story (SHE must hear something of me then — perhaps sign the warrant: or is that a fable?), of turning Chartist,[†3] of heading some bloody assault upon the palace and saving Her by my single hand —— of being anything but what I have been, and doing anything but what I have done. Your distracted friend, C.D.[†4]

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?12 FEBRUARY 1840]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Since No. 1 of Master Humphrey was presumably finished not long before 29 Jan when CD sent Macready a proof, and No. 3 was finished by 28 Feb (To Chapman & Hall, that day), Wed 12 Feb seems the probable date for his sending Cattermole "the greater portion" of No. 2.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Cattermole.

This (that I sen[d][†5] you now) is the greater portion of No. 2. I am writing such things as occur to me without much regarding, for the present, the order in which they will appear,[†1] and thus you will receive in the course of the week another Story.[†2] When you have looked over the two, perhaps I shall see or hear from you?

— II - 25 —

In haste, believe me
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, [13 FEBRUARY 1840]†

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly the Thursday after the Queen's wedding.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Thompson

[†a]I called to enquire after the bill[†3] yesterday, but it was not made out. When I have it, I will not fail to call a settlement of the same.[†a]

Maclise and I are raving with love for the Queen — with a hopeless passion whose extent no tongue can tell, nor mind of man conceive. On Tuesday we sallied down to Windsor, prowled about the Castle, saw the Corridor and their private rooms — nay, the very bedchamber (which we know from having been there twice) lighted up with such a ruddy, homely, brilliant glow[†4] — bespeaking so much bliss and happiness — that I, your humble servant, lay down in the mud at the top of the long walk and refused all comfort — to the immeasurable astonishment of a few straggling passengers who had survived the drunkenness of the previous night. After perpetrating sundry other extravagances we returned home at Midnight in a Post Chaise, and now we wear marriage medals next our hearts and go about with pockets full of portraits which we weep over in secret. Forster was with us at Windsor and (for the joke's sake) counterfeits a passion too, but he does not love her.[†5]

Don't mention this unhappy attachment. I am very wretched, and think of leaving my home. My wife makes me miserable,[†1] and when I hear the voices of my Infant Children, I burst into tears. I fear it is too late to ask you to take this house, now that you have made such arrangements of comfort in Pall Mall;[†2] but if you will, you shall have it very cheap — furniture at a low valuation — money not being so much an object, as escaping from the family. For God's sake turn this matter over in your mind, and please to ask Captain Kincaide[†3] what he asks — his lowest terms, in short, for ready money — for that Post of Gentleman at Arms. I must be near her, and I see no better way than that - - for the present.

— II - 26 —

I have on hand three Numbers of Master Humphrey's Clock, and the two first chapters of Barnaby.[†4] Would you like to buy them? Writing any more in my present state of mind, is out of the question. They are written in a pretty fair hand and when I am in the Serpentine may be considered curious. Name your own terms.

I know you don't like trouble, but I have ventured, notwithstanding, to make you an Executor of my will. There won't be a great deal to do, as there is no money. There is a little bequest having reference to her[†5] which you might like to execute. I have heard on the Lord Chamberlain's authority, that she reads my books and is very fond of them[†6] - - I think she will be sorry when I am gone. I should wish to be embalmed, and to be kept (if practicable) on the top of the Triumphal Arch at Buckingham Palace[†1] when she is in town, and on the north-east turrets of the Round Tower when she is at Windsor [†a] [illegible] [†a]

— II - 27 —

From your distracted and blighted friend

C.D.

[†b](Don't shew this to Mr. Wakley,[†2] if it ever comes to that)[†b]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [13 FEBRUARY 1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: obviously same day as last.

V. R.[†3]

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Afternoon

My Dear Maclise[†4]

I send you a copy of Pickwick and the two little books.[†5] Let the authorship of the last-named trifles remain in the bosom of your family.

— II - 28 —

The last aggravating word has touched that tender chord in my heart which you understand so well. Have you heard from Forster this morning? I have, but oh what a mockery it is. He does not love her.[†1]

I have seen my wife — spoken to her — been in her society. I burst into tears on hearing the voices of my infant children. I loathe my parents. I hate my house. I love nobody here but the Raven,[†2] and I only love him because he seems to have no feeling in common with anybody. What is to be done. Heavens my friend, what is to be done!

What if I murder Chapman and Hall. This thought has occurred to me several times. If I did this she would hear of me; perhaps sign the warrant for my execution with her own dear hand. What if I murder myself. Mr. Wakley is a beast — a coarse unsympathizing coroner — and would not understand such feelings as mine. I feel that, and lay down my razor as the thought occurs to me. Is there no sentimental coroner? I have heard of Mr. Baker[†3] but I don't know how his mind is constituted. I have also heard of Mr. Higgs[†4], but the name is not promising. I think there is one named Grubb.[†5] Perhaps he has high feeling and could comprehend me. The Serpentine is in his district, but then the Humane Society[†6] steps in. They might disfigure me with drags — perhaps save me and expect me at the next Anniversary Dinner to walk round Free-Mason's Hall with a bible under my arm. She would never love me after that. — All is difficulty and darkness.

What is to be done? Would any alliance with the Chartists serve us? They have no doubt in contemplation attacks upon the palace, and being plain men would very likely resign her to us with great cheerfulness. Let us then toss — the best out of three — and the loser to poison himself. Is this feasible?

I dreamt of Lady Fanny Cowper[†7] all night, but I didn't love her, sleeping, nor do I now that I am awake although I did but a few days back. I feel tenderly towards your sister[†8] because she knows our secret. With the great exception that I need not name, she is now the only woman on Earth that I do not shrink from in horror. Here is a state of mind!

How are you to-day. It will be some consolation to me to receive a detail of your sufferings. On Saturday Morning I shall call upon you. Conceive my misery until then! Tonight — tomorrow — all tories[†1] — nothing but slight and insult upon her generous head[†2] — Gracious Powers where will this end!

— II - 29 —

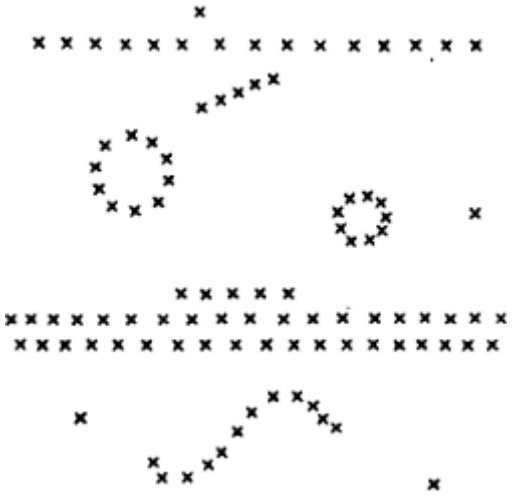
I am utterly miserable and unfitted for my calling. What the upshot will be, I don't know, but something tremendous I am sure. — I feel that I am wandering.



Your distracted friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?13 FEBRUARY 1840]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Watermark 1839; handwriting suggests early 1840; perhaps 13 Feb, referring to Mrs Rolls's dinner that night (see last, fn). Mitton, who had been away from London earlier in the week, had perhaps now received the letter of 8 Feb from Bentley's solicitors (see To Mitton, 29 Jan, fn) and wished to report on it to CD. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Mitton.

I am obliged to attend a dinner party to-day, and another (I grieve to say it) tomorrow. All the morning to-day and tomorrow I shall most probably be at home, but if the matter you write of may rest until Saturday, I can be with you then at 12 o'Clock.

Let me know in one line if this will do. — If not, make your own appointment.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To JOHN OVERS, 16 FEBRUARY 1840

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | February 16th. 1840.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I have read your Legend of Canterbury with great interest and pleasure. It would have been a most creditable performance to anybody — it is strikingly and remarkably so to you, who write under so many disadvantages — and if I had the controul of any Magazine, I would publish it immediately.

It has occurred to me that as this Story possesses a local as well as a general interest, it would be excellently adapted to a Kentish Magazine. Now although there is no such thing in existence (that I know of) at this moment, I have reason to believe that there soon will be, as a gentleman who has such a periodical in contemplation wrote to me about it a few weeks since.[†1] I strongly recommend you to write to this gentleman yourself — to mention me in any way you please — and to say that you will be happy to send him your tale for perusal, if he will permit you. His address is "H. G. Adams Esquire — J Bryant Esquire's Parsonage House — Chatham". I think it will be an acquisition to him, and that you will be mutually obliged to each other.[†2]

I don't know what the resources of this local Magazine may afford — very little, I dare say — but the gentleman of whom I speak, cannot be offended by your asking the question and I have no doubt will return you a straight forward answer. I would lose no time, but write to him immediately, and I again empower you to make the fullest use of my poor recommendation.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To W. C. MACREADY, [21] FEBRUARY 1840*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Letter misdated by a week, no doubt through exasperation. Bentley's advertisement of Barnaby "was repeated" on 21 Feb (see fn).

Friday Night 28th. Feby/40

My Dear Macready.

The advertisement was repeated today in the Times and Herald;[†1] and the dog's solicitors (God forgive me for libelling his good animals) doggedly inform us that they mean to repeat it. The contradiction, therefore, — from my solicitors — appears in the Evening papers tomorrow, the respectable Sunday Papers, and all the Morning Papers on Monday.[†2] This done, he means, as he tells us, to advertize the agreements — and that done, I don't know what happens.[†3]

If I have any news, I shall be able to tell it you on Sunday.[†4] It would be a very bad return for your kind and affectionate interest, if I made any shew of apology for wearying you with these details.

For to-day, the Vagabond has stopped my clock — and he knows that as well as I. I shall try to sleep it off and go to work tomorrow; and if I do, with any success, he may go to — but I won't anticipate, having no doubt his ultimate destination is already arranged.

Always My Dear Macready | Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

W.C. Macready Esquire

— II - 32 —

To W. C. MACREADY, [?23 FEBRUARY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: There is a discrepancy between CD's "Sunday" (if correct, clearly Sun 23 Feb) and entry under 23 Feb in Macready's Diaries (II, 45). Almost certainly CD's date is right and the Diaries entry refers to Sat 22 Feb, not the 23rd. See fn.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning.

My Dear Macready

I fear I may not have sufficiently expressed to you yesterday,[†1] my sense of your most kind and friendly interest in the matter of Bentley. Nor can I express it now, although I desire to do so. Like most men who are sensitive to irritation and annoyance, I am at least equally alive to their reverse; and I do assure you that the few words which passed between us yesterday brace me up even against the Court of Chancery,[†2] and give me a feeling of true pleasure which I can scarcely separate from the subject that give[s][†1] it birth.

— II - 33 —

I am exceedingly anxious that you should understand that I do not reject your good offices from any obstinate or wrong-headed feeling, but simply because I know the hopelessness of any mediation just now, and know this man as well as anybody living. The law, bad as it is, is more true and more to be trusted than such a hound as he, and unless he gives me the opening for a negociation, I must trust myself to its tender mercies, and submit to its vexations with what philosophy I may. If I were a builder or a stone-mason I might fulfil my contract with him, but write for him I really cannot unless I am forced and have no outlet for escape.

If the question should resolve itself into one of compensation (which I devoutly hope it may) then I shall not scruple to avail myself of your friendly mediation. Mean time believe me that if it had been used and had been attended with the most triumphant success, it could scarcely have made me happier than the proffer of it has already.

I am always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To JOHN BROWNLOW,[†2] 26 FEBRUARY 1840*

MS[†3] Thomas Coram Foundation for Children.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | February 26th. 1840.

Sir

I am much indebted to you for your obliging note. We have removed have forgotten to give notice at the Foundling,[†1] and the chapel[†2] being too far for us (which we greatly regret, as we miss it very much) shall be glad if you will have the goodness to hold the Pew at your disposal.

Yours very truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Brownlow

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 FEBRUARY 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably two days before 29 Feb when they left for Bath to see Landor; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster

I waxed rather stupid yesterday and consequently must keep close today. Will you dine with us tomorrow at a quarter before 4? If so, we can go to Southampton Buildings in a body, calling for Mac as we go.[†3]

You write to Landor I suppose? Mitton has taken places, but at what hour the Coach starts, this Deponent knoweth not, — though he verily believes it is 10 from the Railroad.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?27 FEBRUARY 1840]*

MS Mrs Percy W. Valentine. Date: probably the Thursday after 23 Feb, when CD had not yet received Bacon's opinion (see To Macready, 23 Feb, fn).

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate.
Thursday Morning | (I should say, afternoon)

My Dear Mitton

Nothing can be clearer or more satisfactory than Bacon's[†1] opinion.[†2] We may put our hands in our pockets and wait for the Dragon's approach with perfect philosophy.

I have not received the message you refer to. I will call tomorrow or next day, and do the needful.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 28 FEBRUARY [1840]*

MS New York Public Library. Date: Handwriting shows this must refer to the journey to Bath of 29 Feb 40.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Afternoon 28th. Feby.

Dear Sirs.

Herewith I send you No. 3. I meant to have seen you to-day; but having to finish it, could not get out.

I mark on the other side,[†4] such subjects in it as occur to me for illustration. — You will see that the story is not finished, but runs into No. 4.[†5]

I go to Bath tomorrow morning and return on Wednesday Night by Mail. You are not likely to have any occasion to write to me, but if you have, Mrs. Dickens will give you the address.

Accept my blessing, each partner on one knee (the left) to render it the more impressive — and believe me

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

March

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 1 MARCH 1840

MS British Museum.

35 Saint James's Square, Bath.[†1] | March 1st. 1840.

My Dearest Kate

We reached here in safety last night, after a very pleasant ride, during a great part of which (the day being so very fine) we came outside; stopping to lunch vigorously at two o'Clock, and arriving here shortly before 8. We were alone at dinner, and although desperately learned and frequently first-person-singular-ish, we were much better than I had expected.[†2] Indeed I was not bored — for which I am very thankful and devout this morning.

We sleep at the York House — the largest hotel here — where the beds are very good and very warm. Of course I arranged both the room and my luggage before going to bed, and had everything very tidy.

The first thing I did on arriving, was to look at a play-bill, wherein Rob Roy[†3] was announced for last night, and Somnabula[†4] for tomorrow, but no mention of Burnett in either,[†5] the tenor being one Mr. T. Bishop![†6] Upon my life I begin to think that Burnett has been writing deceitful letters — has never been here at all — and is hiding himself in some remote corner, whence he steals out now and then, and issues to the Post Office for his letters. — I communicated this suspicion to Forster this morning, and amused him mightily with it. Seriously, it is odd enough that there is no mention of him in the Posters on the walls; and as for excitement — oh dear you can't think how calm the place is. It seems as if there were no Burnett here.[†1] I shall make it my business to investigate the truth tomorrow, and shall report it when I come home, which will be on Thursday Morning about Six or half past. You must have one of the servants up by six, and perhaps you will have a fire lighted in our bedroom in order that I may warm myself and get a cup of coffee.

You may suppose that having been on a Coach all day yesterday, I have no great News, though I hope to bring back amusing intelligence of one kind or another.[†2] Meantime I look forward to Wednesday Night with great eagerness, and am charmed to think that besides to-day only Monday and Tuesday stand between. God bless you my love. Kiss the darling babs and write a long letter (and don't forget to put it in the post, which you must if you wish it to reach me) as soon as you receive this.

Always yours truly & affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Forster's best regards — Landor's ditto. I see Yates announces another portion of Nickleby.[†3] Unless you have already written for a box, I would rather you didn't go, until I return.

To WILLIAM UPCOTT, 6 MARCH 1840*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday 6th. March 1840.

My Dear Sir

I hope the inclosed will do.[†4] If not, tell me and I'll try another form.

I am in haste to answer your note as I have just come back from Bath and fear you may think me neglectful.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Upcott Esquire

To H. K. BROWNE, [?6 or 7 MARCH 1840]

Facsimile in F. G. Kitton, CD and his Illustrators, 1899, facing p. 72. Date: CD's comments are written at the foot of Browne's sketch for "Master Humphrey and his companion",†1 which on 9 Mar CD sent on to Chapman & Hall, Browne having presumably made the small changes requested without delay.

Master Humphrey admirable.†2 Could his stick (with a crooked top) be near his chair? I misdoubt the deaf gentleman's pipe and wish he could have a better o[ne].†3

To JOHN OVERS, 7 MARCH 1840

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 7th. March 1840.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I think Mr. Adams a very unconscionable person, a very obtrusive one, and extraordinarily self-sufficient. His enquiry whether you can make out a relationship with Kent is ridiculous in the last degree (coming as it does after his acceptance of the story) and his cool confession of having copied a part of my note to you is "something more", — and I would fain hope not a necessary ingredient in the Kentish character.

If he paid you, I would cheerfully give you (not him) the permission he seeks.†4 As he does not, I beg you to with-hold it and to say that you have not the inclination to make any such request to me, — as your note assures me you have not. I have a nervous dread and horror of being supposed to direct the judgements of people who can judge very well for themselves, or of seeming to patronize — both of which I should certainly appear to do if I yielded this permission.

Nevertheless if it would do you any tangible service, you should have it. As it can do no such thing, but would on the contrary place you in a position with reference to this gentleman in which you have no right to stand, I know you will agree with me that it should not be given.

I will read your paper†5 in the course of next week, and communicate with you when I have done so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs

To MRS A. T. THOMSON,[†1] 8 MARCH [1840]†

MS Huntington Library. Date: 8 Mar was Sunday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Sunday 8th. March

My Dear Madam

I should have answered your letter immediately, but that I have been on a short visit to Bath whence I have only just returned.

Sir Edward Bulwer[†2] has already applied to me with reference to the subject in which you so kindly interest yourself,[†3] and I have already arranged with Mr. Forster — a mutual friend of ours who communicated with me on Bulwer's behalf — for promoting it with my slight assistance.[†4] I have not seen Sir Edward himself lately, but he understands this, I have no doubt.[†5]

[†a]In all that you say so well concerning poor Mrs. Landon[†6] and her unfortunate daughter[†7] I most cordially and heartily concur.[†a] Let me thank you for your note and especially for your kind expressions towards myself, and beg you to believe me

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Thomson.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 MARCH 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 145. Date: 4 Mar according to Forster; but unless CD changed his plans he and Forster did not reach London until early in the morning of the 5th (see To Catherine, 1 Mar). Probably CD was writing on the day before the 9th, when he announced the changes in Master Humphrey to Chapman & Hall and Cattermole.

If you can manage to give me a call in the course of the day or evening, I wish you would. I am laboriously turning over in my mind how I can best effect the improvement we spoke of last night, which I will certainly make by hook or by crook, and which I would like you to see before it goes finally to the printer's. I have determined not to put that witch-story into number 3,[†1] for I am by no means satisfied of the effect of its contrast with Humphrey. I think of lengthening Humphrey, finishing the description of the society,[†2] and closing with the little child-story, which is SURE to be effective, especially after the old man's quiet way.[†3]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [9 MARCH 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the same day as next.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

Dear Sirs

The inclosed Sketch[†4] arrived yesterday afternoon. Will Mr. Chapman take the pipe under his especial care?

I should like to see the said Mr. Chapman tomorrow morning or to-day, if he can conveniently call upon me. I have it in contemplation to alter the contents of the third Number, and to throw the witch story over to 4, 5, or 6 — putting the story which Mr. Chapman calls "I was a lieutenant" into No. 3, and lengthening Master Humphrey so as to finish if possible the Sketch of the Society in the same No. I feel that this will be a great improvement. I am also trying by some slight alteration in No. 1 to connect the stories more immediately with the clock,[†1] and to give the work a less discursive appearance.[†2] — In short I am beginning to be stimulated by finding myself in March, and am rising with the occasion.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 9 MARCH 1840

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Monday March 9th. 1840.

My Dear Cattermole.

I have been induced on looking over the works of the Clock, to make a slight alteration in their disposal, by virtue of which the story about John Podgers[†3] will stand over for some little time, and that short tale will occupy its place which you have already by you, and which treats of the assassination of a young gentleman under circumstances of peculiar aggravation.[†4] I shall be greatly obliged to you if you will turn your attention to this last morsel as the feature of No. 3, and still more so if you can stretch a point with regard to time (which is of the last importance just now) and make a subject out of it, rather than find one in it.[†5] I would neither have made this alteration nor have troubled you about it, but for weighty and cogent reasons which I feel very strongly, and into the composition of which caprice or fastidiousness has no part.[†1]

I should tell you perhaps with reference to Chapman and Hall that they will never trouble you (as they never trouble me) but when there is real and pressing occasion, and that their representations in this respect, unlike those of most men of business, are to be relied upon.

I cannot tell you how admirably I think Master Humphrey's room[†2] comes out, or what glowing accounts I hear of the second design[†3] you have done. I had not the faintest anticipation of anything so good, — taking into account the material and the dispatch.

With best regards at home, believe me dear Cattermole

Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The new No. 3 tale begins "I held a Lieutenant's commission in His Majesty's Army, and served abroad in the Campaigns of 1677 and 1678." It has at present no title.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 MARCH 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 145-6. Date: This came "hard upon" letter of ?8 Mar according to Forster.

What do you think of the following double title for the beginning of that little tale? "PERSONAL ADVENTURES OF MASTER HUMPHREY: The Old Curiosity Shop." I have thought of Master Humphrey's Tale, Master Humphrey's Narrative, A Passage in Master Humphrey's Life — but I don't think any does as well as this. I have also thought of The Old Curiosity Dealer and the Child instead of The Old Curiosity Shop. Perpend. Topping[†4] waits.[†5]

To J. A. DIEZMANN,[†1] 10 MARCH 1840

MS Berg Collection. Address: Dr. A. Diezman | Leipzig.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate,
Regents Park London, 10th. March 1840.

My Dear Sir.

I will not attempt to tell you how much gratified I have been by the receipt of your first English letter; nor can I describe to you with what delight and gratification I learn that I am held in such high esteem by your great countrymen, whose favorable appreciation is flattering indeed.[†2]

To you who have undertaken the laborious (and often, I fear, very irksome) task of clothing me in the German garb, I owe a long arrear of thanks. I wish you would come to England, and afford me an opportunity of slightly reducing the account.

It is with great regret that I have to inform you in reply to the request contained in your pleasant communication, that my publishers have already made such arrangements[†3] and are in possession of such stipulations relative to the proof sheets of my new works, that I have no power to send them out of England. If I had, I need not tell you what pleasure it would afford me to promote your views.

I am too sensible of the trouble you must have already had with my writings, to impose upon you a long letter. I will only add, therefore, that I am my Dear Sir

With great sincerity | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. A. Diezman.[†4]

To W. H. HARRISON,[†1] 14 MARCH 1840*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | 14th. March 1840.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your note. I was already aware of the circumstance, as I presided at the club[†2] last Wednesday.

The long-talked of book proceeds, and only awaits the Illustrations, and a few sheets from the Printer.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Harrison Esquire

To JOHN MILLER,[†4] 15 MARCH [1840]*

MS Mr Harry Secombe. Date: 15 Mar was Sunday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate.
Sunday Morning March 15th.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Miller, and begs to inform him that he has sent to Messrs. Chapman and Hall a note which he received last night from Messrs. Lea and Blanchard; and that if Mr. Miller will have the goodness to treat with those gentlemen on the subject to which it refers, he will find them prepared to treat with him.[†5]

To J. P. HARLEY,[†6] 16 MARCH [1840]

Photograph, John Rylands Library. Address: Prepaid | J. P. Harley Esquire | 14 Upper Gower Street. Date: PM 16 Mar 40.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Monday 16th. March.

My Dear Harley.

If you know no reason
Why good wine in season

Should ever be forgot

— dine with me, not on the fifth of November, as this commencement would seem to imply, but next Sunday at Six o'Clock sharp, when we will renew that former acquaintance which we used to have together.

It is so long since I have seen you, that I expect to find you greatly changed, and am filled with sad anticipations.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To EBENEZER LANDELLS,[†1] [?20 MARCH 1840]*

MS Mrs S. S. Clephan. Date: Presumably refers to the first drawing of Nell to appear in Master Humphrey — Cattermole's headpiece ("The Shop") to No. 4, which Landells engraved. Since on Mon 9 Mar CD gave Cattermole instructions, with some urgency, for his illustration to No. 3, this was probably written on the Friday of the following week (20th). On 25 Mar CD gave Chapman instructions for the second illustration to No. 4.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I sent the drawing back to Mr. Chapman, for I was more than doubtful of the child's face, and the subject is one of the last importance to the work.

I presume he has taken it back to Mr. Cattermole this morning (that was my wish) — and I have no doubt you will hear from him in the course of the day.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Landells Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD,[†2] 22 MARCH [1840]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: endorsed, in contemporary hand, "March — 1841"; but subject and signature could fit only 1840, in which year 22 Mar was Sunday. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning March 22nd.

My Dear Beard

I have been very anxious to see you for some time, for I have been ill at ease about Master Humphrey, in the one respect of connecting you with that labour, which, as you know I anxiously desire, I will say very little about.

It has been for weeks quite clear to us that I must write it all,[†1] if we are to hope for that great success which we expect. Now if I do this, the office which I had assigned to you of managing the correspondence, correcting proofs and so forth, vanishes into air,[†2] because there will be no proofs but my own and nobody to write to or transact business with, but me.

Although I have seen this for a pretty long time, I have refrained from telling you, in the hope that I should yet see some way of being useful to you and establishing a new link between us. Do not for a moment believe that I have lost this hope even in connection with the Clock — on the contrary I have a great many possibilities and probabilities in my brain which a little time and experience may arrange into something tangible — but I am anxious that you should know that this alteration has in the outset disarranged my plans and scattered them completely.

I wish you would call upon me one morning in the week — on Tuesday if you can — about one [o'] Clock[†3] or so, when we can talk a little upon this matter — and also about the when to ask your friend Mr. Blackburn[†4] to dinner (who has been kind enough to send me a very interesting Calcutta newspaper) and also about a certain misty notion I have begun to form of some queer old farm house distant about 20 miles from town,[†5] and of goings down and comings up all through the Summer! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! !

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN,[†6] 25 MARCH [1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 25 March was Wednesday in 1840; signature supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday 25th. March

My Dear Sir

The best plan will be for Mr. Browne to read the number, and take or make any subject that he fancies. It should have the girl in it, that's all.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To T. P. GRINSTED,[†1] 25 MARCH 1840

MS Berg Collection. Address: Prepaid | Mr. T. P. Grinsted | &c &c | 3 Glos'ter Terrace | Brighton.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Regents Park London | 25th. March 1840.

Dear Sir.

I have to thank you — which I do with great heartiness — for your letter, and through you to thank those gentlemen who remembered me in their flowing cups last Thursday.[†2]

Do me the favor to convey to the Nickleby Club,[†3] the warmest expression of my gratitude and interest in their proceedings. I trust they may continue to hold me, and I them, in pleasant and cheerful recollection for very many years, and long connect their recreations with a name which is naturally associated in my mind with favorite and familiar thoughts.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. T. P. Grinsted
&c &c

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?27 MARCH 1840]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Presumably refers to progress with the Agreement for Master Humphrey, signed 31 Mar (see fn); and to the Wellers' first appearance in the later part of No. 6, which CD would have been writing towards the end of March.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Friday

Dr. Sirs

I should like to have a line reporting progress,[†4] either to-day or tomorrow. I am very busy upon the Wellers, father and Son.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

To JAMES HOGGINS,[†1] 27 MARCH 1840*

MS Berg Collection. Address: James Hoggins Esquire | Literary and Philosophical Society | Newcastle.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park London

27th. March 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hoggins, and begs to inform him, in reply to his enquiry, that his Works comprise three volumes of Sketches, the Pickwick Papers, Oliver Twist, and Nicholas Nickleby.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?MARCH 1840]*

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Date: Signature suggests Mar 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

Dear Tom

I'll come down[†2] by the Rail as you recommend.

In haste | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To SAMUEL WILLIAMS,[†3] [31 MARCH 1840]*

MS Mrs Elaine Waley. Date: presumably the Tuesday after 25 Mar when CD gave Chapman instructions for the second illustration to No. 4. Accompanying wrapper (see To Chapman & Hall, ?3 Apr) supports 31 Mar.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evg.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compts. to Mr. Williams, and greatly regrets having been obliged to be from home this morning at the time he called.

The object being to shew the child in the midst of a crowd of uncongenial and ancient things, Mr. Dickens scarcely feels the very pretty drawing inclosed, as carrying out his idea: the room being to all appearance an exceedingly comfortable one pair,[†1] and the sleeper being in a very enviable condition. If the composition would admit of a few grim, ugly articles seen through a doorway beyond, for instance, and giving a notion of great gloom outside the little room and surrounding the chamber, it would be much better. The figure on the bed is not sufficiently childish, and would perhaps look better without a cap, and with the hair floating over the pillow. The last paragraph of the paper (which perhaps Mr. Williams has) expresses Mr. Dickens's idea better than he can convey it in any other words.[†2]

As Mr. Dickens hopes to communicate with Mr. Williams on very many future occasions, he will not weary him with any apology for these remarks just now.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [MARCH 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 156. Date: Mar 40 according to Forster.

I find it will be positively necessary to go, for five days in the week at least, on a perfect regimen of diet and exercise,[†4] and am anxious therefore not to delay treating for a horse.

April

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?3 APRIL 1840]*

MS Mrs Elaine Waley. Date: written on inside of wrapper which almost certainly enclosed Williams's drawing "Nell in bed" (see To Williams, 31 Mar, fn); "off" therefore meant off to Birmingham 3 Apr. Address: Messrs. Chapman & Hall | 186 Strand; signed CHARLES DICKENS.

All right
In great speed
Off![†1]

To [WILLIAM HALL, ?7 APRIL 1840]*

MS Private. Date: CD dined with Chapman and Hall on 21 Apr 40 ("Easter Tuesday"): see To Forster, that day. He was probably writing on 7 Apr (the Tuesday after publication of Master Humphrey No. 1 when its prospects seemed at their brightest),[†2] having returned from Birmingham earlier that day.[†3] Address: presumably to Hall, since letter mentions Chapman.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Afternoon.

My Dear Sir

Easter Tuesday is a very good day for dining out. I don't think that if I went through the almanack, I could find a better.

The Clock goes gloriously indeed. What will the wiseacres say to weekly issues now? And what will they say to any of those ten thousand things we shall do together to make 'em wink, and stagger in their shoes? Thank God for this great hit. I always had a quiet confidence in it, but I never expected this, at first.

I hope to put Mr. Chapman at rest (pro tem at least, for he will be an unquiet spirit always, and a thorn in my side, I know) tomorrow.[†1] The result I hope to send him on Thursday Morning.

Commend me to him though he does wear me to a shadow, and believe me always

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To AUGUSTUS DE MORGAN[†2] and MRS DE MORGAN,[†3] 12 APRIL 1840

Text from S. E. De Morgan, Memoir of Augustus De Morgan, 1882, p. 266*n.*

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, April 12, 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments both to the gentleman and the lady who do him the honour to differ upon an illustrated point in Nicholas Nickleby, and begs to inform them that the lady sitting down is intended for Mrs. Kenwigs, and the lady standing up for the designing Miss Petowker. But Mr. Dickens begs the gentleman and lady unknown to take especial notice that neither of their portraitures is quite correct, Mrs. Kenwigs being constitutionally slim and delicate and of a slight figure (quite unimpaired by her frequent confinements), and Miss Petowker a young female of some personal attractions, set off by various stage effects and professional captivations.[†4]

To WILLIAM H. SOTHAM,[†1] 12 APRIL 1840

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London
12th. April 1840.

Sir.

Let me thank you for your letter, and the obliging terms in which it is couched. I fear I am rather behind-hand in my reply, but constant occupation makes me too often an indifferent correspondent. It shall never make me unmindful of your hospitable offer if I visit America, or of that English Farmer's-home[†2] to which you welcome me (in anticipation) with so much kindness.

Pray assure the proprietors of the Knickerbocker[†3] that I have not forgotten my promise, though appearances are certainly against me. I fear I shall find it more difficult to redeem than ever, engaged as I am just now, but as I do not despair myself, I would not have them do so, either. To Mr. Clark, I beg you to convey my best remembrances with the assurance that I will take an early opportunity of writing to him through the Knickerbocker Agents.[†1]

I cannot charge you with any commission for New York, but this is my residence and if you can call here before you sail, I shall be quite as happy to see you, as you are good enough to say you will be to see me.

Believe me | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Sotham.

To JOHN OVERS, 12 APRIL [1840]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 12 Apr was Sunday in 1840; signature supports that year.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Evening 12th. April

Dear Mr. Overs.

I am much obliged to you for your note, and all your good wishes. The probability of such a feeling as you mention[†2] occurred to me more than once while I had my plan under consideration; but as I have no reason to suppose it of extensive growth (but quite the contrary)[†3] and as I think it scarcely fair or reasonable, seeing that no man is compelled to trust one against his will, I shall leave it to its course.[†4]

I dare say you think me very unkind for not having given your paper[†5] an earlier perusal. I have, however, been so closely occupied that I have not had time to look at it until within these few days. I would certainly recommend you to offer it somewhere, though I don't think it tells so well as your other story, except in the one respect of being very compact and close, and in that essential quality a great improvement. The idea of the nightcap is a good one and capable of much, I think; but it is not very natural though it may be true. Neither do I think that the closing passage about the woman produces its effect, for this one reason. — You cannot interest your readers in any character unless you have first made them hate, or like him. This is an utterly insignificant fellow; so much so that one feels disposed to doubt whether the child is really his or some gentleman's unknown — indeed I incline to the latter opinion from all you say about him, and do not sympathize with the feeling of the scene as much as I ought, in consequence.

Offer it somewhere by all means, and God speed you. Its acceptance in any quarter would scarcely please you more than me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, [?12 APRIL 1840]*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Date: probably 12 Apr; CD was at Lord Northampton's on the 11th (Macready, Diaries, II, 57); handwriting supports.

Private

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning

My Dear Milnes.

Pray do not suppose that my difference with Bentley is a question of money. It is with me a matter of strong feeling, upon which I take my stand with the certainty of a great present loss. It involves besides (which is worse to me) the postponement of a story I had sketched out with great care, which I am very anxious to write, and upon which my thoughts have been actively employed for a long time.[†1]

I neither require nor expect any sympathy from the class (of which I am one) whose pens are their support. But I am resolved at whatever sacrifice of peace or pocket to shew this fellow that he cannot count on always doing as he pleases with them, and as I can certainly and surely defeat him, be his legal weapons what they may, I am determined to do so.

As there were bystanders last night when we spoke on this subject at Lord Northampton's,[†2] I did not pursue it. But as I should greatly regret your receiving or diffusing a false impression with reference to it, I am anxious to convey to you the assurance with which this note sets out.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard M Milnes Esquire

To [LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK],[†1] 14 APRIL 1840†

MS Berg Collection. Address: clearly to the Editor of the Knickerbocker; and since in answer to a letter from Clark, probably addressed to him by name.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate Regents Park London
14th. April 1840.

My Dear Sir

I am about to write you a very short letter, lest I should despair, in the multitude of my avocations, and write none at all.

Firstly — believe me, that I have not forgotten the promise to the Knickerbocker — that I cannot venture to say when I can redeem my pledge — but that I will redeem it, please Heaven, and strive for an early opportunity.[†2] You may suppose that I am very much engaged with Master Humphrey's Clock.

[†a]Secondly — commend me heartily to Mr. Washington Irving,[†3] who I am rejoiced to hear from you has lent his powerful aid to the international copyright question.[†1] It is one of immense importance to me, for at this moment I have received[†2] from the American Editions of my works — fifty pounds.[†3] It is of immense importance to the Americans likewise if they desire (and if they do not, what people on earth should) ever to have a Literature of their own.[†a†4]

Thirdly — accept my thanks for your kind communications, and a hasty but sincere assurance of the pleasure they afford me, and of the truth with which I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS AYRTON,[†5] 14 APRIL 1840

Text from N, I, 255.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 14th April 1840

My dear Miss Ayrton,

Kate tells me that you want a small specimen of my writing. Here it is, under my hand. There is a certain seal required of the receiver in such cases, which I shall not fail to demand of you when I see you next.

Believe me | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS C. B. WILSON,[†1] 14 APRIL 1840

MS John Rylands Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate. | 14th. April 1840.

Dear Mrs. Wilson

Accept my best thanks for your charming volume,[†2] — and trust me, that the Elegiac Stanzas in particular have lost none of their interest or beauty in my eyes, but that they are, and will always be, together with your kind feeling at that time, fresh in my recollection.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cornwell Baron-Wilson.

To THOMAS HILL,[†3] 14 APRIL 1840*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | April 14th. 1840.

My Dear Mr. Hill.

Thank you for your kind note, which has truly gratified me. The Clock thank God is going nobly, and I hope I may venture to predict that its future proceedings will not lessen it by any means in your good opinion.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esquire

To ANGUS FLETCHER,[†4] 14 APRIL 1840

Extract in Winifred A. Myers Ltd catalogue, Feb 1953; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 14 Apr 40.

I wish I could say certainly that I will come to Edinburgh ... but I can say that I mean to come.

Invites Fletcher to come South and to stop here — you observe that? — here.... Reform the poor-laws by all means, but if you wait until you have done that, I suspect you'll find me with bleared eyes and a white beard.... The clock is doing wonders. It is rather sharp work, but so long as it is a triumph I don't care for that a rush. I hope the Edinburgh people like it? Number 3 I rather take to myself. Kate and I [?wished we][†1] were at Edinburgh when the pictures were exhibiting[†2] ... she sends all manner of kind remembrances.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON,[†3] [16] APRIL 1840*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 15 Apr 40 was Wednesday; presumably CD was writing on 16 Apr (date of PM; year illegible); 1840 confirmed by signature. Address: The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Thursday 15th. April 1840.

Dear Lady Blessington.

Forster communicated to me the substance of your note,[†4] yesterday, and was proceeding to back it by various friendly influences, when I stopped him with the assurance that a request of yours needed no such assistance, and said that I would immediately write to you myself and explain to you my exact situation.

I have (as I think Forster told you) a kind of tacit understanding with my publishers at present, which binds me not to write except for my Clock. It is one which I could, at a word, induce them very cheerfully to relinquish, but the truth is that my thoughts are so constantly and continually occupied with the very difficult game I am playing now, (which I would never have undertaken but with very high stakes before me) that I have not leisure to turn them to any other occupation, however slight. I have been for a long time past engaged at times in getting together a little book of voluntary contributions for the benefit of Macrone's (the publisher's) widow, and I assure you that I am so much occupied at this moment that I cannot even write a short story to complete it, and am keeping it back, to my own unspeakable annoyance and the poor lady's great anxiety.

I have always had an objection to write, and therefore have never yet written, in an Annual. But I assure you most unaffectedly that I could not have resisted your appeal,[†1] and would have cheerfully responded to it, had I been less firmly bound and less constantly beset than I am at this moment. Let me hope that next year I shall be able to devote a few mornings to proving to you how very sincere I am in what I say.[†2]

I intended to ride over to Kensington this morning and tell you this and a great deal more to the same purpose, by word of mouth. But not knowing when I should be likely to find you at home, and fearing that any delay on my part might induce you to suppose that I was unmindful of or indifferent to your wish, I have written this note instead.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?16 APRIL 1840]*

MS Private. Date: Presumably refers to the same dinner party as next. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday.

My Dear Maclise

What is Bankes's[†3] address? I promised to let him know what time we dine next Sunday — and don't know where he lives.[†4]

Do you feel vagabondishly disposed for this evening? — I have a confused idea of Astley's[†1] or some such place, and in case you were in the same plight would call upon you, or be glad to see you here, about 7 o'Clock or so.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.[†2]

Or, I am now going out Willesden-wards to ride and walk. How do you say about that? We might be public house-ish.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?18 APRIL 1840]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting points to first half of 1840. Possibly Banks was to have dined with CD on 19 Apr, the only Sunday in this period for which Macready records a dinner invitation from CD (Diaries, II, 58).

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night

My Dear Maclise.

I found a note from Bankes to-night, pleading another engagement for tomorrow, the sd. engagement having reference to some avocations in behalf of a friend. As you know the why and wherefore, of this note coming now, better than anybody, I have no hesitation in saying that I hope you have nothing better to do than to join our party, which is a pleasant one — Talfourd, Lord Nugent,[†3] Macready, Dr. Elliotson, and the rest all friends. Do come, and give me a new reason for enjoying it. We were saying this morning that a dinner here without you, seemed an absurdity.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Send me round a line.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20 APRIL 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Mr Weller appears in Nos 6, 7 and 9 — of which No. 6 seems ruled out by To Hall, ?7 Apr, and No. 9 by To Forster, ?early May ("We are to be heard of at the Eel Pie House"). CD would probably have been correcting proofs of No. 7 on Mon 20 Apr; weather supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

My Dear Forster

I inclose the proofs, with no further alteration than one or two letters illustrative of Mr. Weller's pronunciation.

Kate and I have been saying this morning, what a pleasant trip it wod. be in this fine weather,[†1] to go down per steamer to Gravesend, dine there, and return in the Evening — Do you feel this at all?

Faithfully Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 21 APRIL [1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 21 Apr was Tuesday in 1840; signature supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Morning April 21st.

My Dear Forster

I did not know that Kate had promised Fanny[†2] we would call for her to day. As our places are all taken, get you to C & H's per cab.[†3]

I must send my letter to Alphington tonight, for an imperative epistle[†4] has arrived, demanding (as though the writer were majestic in his virtue) my opinion upon the "vital questions" already propounded.

! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! !

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, [24 APRIL 1840]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly the day before next; handwriting supports. Watermark 1839. Address: Wait | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Morning.

My Dear Beard.

Will you dine with us on Sunday — alone? I have made a purchase of port which I should like you to taste. It is *raythe*r uncommon.

I am riding, at present, a poney which is something too slight for me. A friend of Topping's has a cob (warranted sound) rising six year old, and price £20 — described as a good trotter and everything about him "in a concatenation accordingly".[†1] He is in an awfully rough state at this minute, but curry-combable of course. I should like to know what you say about him. If Topping brought him up to you at about 10 or 11 tomorrow morning, would you give me your opinion — inspect and try?[†2]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

I don't care about his being "demnition fast"[†3] as long as he can keep on.

To THOMAS BEARD, 25 APRIL [1840]

MS Dickens House. Date: 25 Apr was Saturday in 1840; handwriting supports that year. Address: (With a quadruped) | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 25th. April

My Dear Beard

Behold the little horse. As I have only taken one observation of him from a staircase window, while Topping industriously trotted him out of sight, pray don't spare him on my account.

We dine at 6 tomorrow, as I have to write and to take exercise, first. If I call for you at 4 will you come Willesden-wards in the phaeton?

The beer is in a high state of perfection. The port is — but we will not anticipate.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 APRIL 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Probably the note from Lady Holland contained the invitation refused in next; handwriting supports.

[ ][†4] | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

Your letter found me — my pen blushes to the feather, and my ink turns red as I write it — in bed.

I have said 'yes' to Bulwer, and must therefore say 'no' to Lady Holland from whom I found a note last night with a bidding for to-day.[†1] The Monday affair had best, I think, stand over.

[ ][†2]

Heres[†3] a day!

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To LADY HOLLAND,[†4] 28 APRIL [1840]*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter. Date: 28 Apr was Tuesday in 1840; reference to Pickwick and the Wellers confirms that year.

1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Tuesday 28th. April

Dear Lady Holland,

Your kind note (dated the 25th.) only reached me last night, and as I was at Rochester yesterday[†5] I did not see it until this morning.

I am exceedingly sorry to say that to-day I am engaged, and that the engagement is not one which I can postpone upon so short a notice.

Pray do not suppose that in sending you the Clock, I intended to impose upon you the penalty of acknowledging its receipt. It never occurred to me that any answer was required.

I am almost vain enough to believe that you will be glad to hear of Mr. Pickwick, who, with Mr. Weller and his father, are about to return to public life under Master Humphrey's auspices.[†6]

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?30 APRIL 1840]*

MS Private. Date: before Nov 40 on salutation "Maclise" (not "Mac" as later). Catherine was present at the RA private view Fri 1 May[†1] (Macready, Diaries, II, 59), but CD was not. Possibly "the inclosed" was the ticket he could not make use of.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning

My Dear Maclise

Kate is very much obliged to you, but will not interfere with the chance of your bestowing the inclosed elsewhere.

Faithfully always
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

May

To EDWARD MOXON,[†2] 5 MAY 1840*

MS the Executors of the late Miss E. H. Gray.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
5th. May 1840.

My Dear Sir.

Let me thank you cordially, for your beautiful and interesting present,[†3] for which, believe me, I am truly obliged to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Moxon Esquire

To JOHN OVERS, 5 MAY 1840

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | May 5th. 1840.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I don't think you could have done better than you have done. You do not tell me whether the odd fellow carries his eccentricity so far, as to pay.

I should like to know that. If he does, he sustains his character to perfection.

Mr. Adams's letter I return herewith. He appears to be a very nice man indeed.†1

If you can spare time to let me know the result of your proceedings, when any result comes of them, I shall be interested to know how you get on.

And I am always very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Overs.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY MAY 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: clearly 1840 on handwriting. No. 9 of Master Humphrey was published 30 May. Possibly this letter and To Hunt, 12 May, refer to the same visit to Eel Pie House. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

My Dear Forster

We are †a to be heard of at the Eel Pie House, Twickenham,†a †2 where we shall dine at half after five or thereabouts, and where we will take care of you if you come.

Faithfully Always
CD.

†b I remain dissatisfied until you have seen (and read) No. 9†b †3.

To EDWIN LANDSEER,†4 11 MAY 1840*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | May 11th. 1840.

My Dear Sir.

Allan†5 is going to dine with us on Friday at 6, which is the only day he has to spare before going north'ards; and therefore this short notice. If you have no better engagement, will you make one of our little party?

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Landseer Esquire.

To LEIGH HUNT,[†1] 12 MAY 1840

MS British Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday May 12th. 1840.

My Dear Hunt.

A crowd of thanks, treading on each others' heels and tripping one another up most pleasantly — a crowd of thanks, I say, for that Rustic Walk which I have just taken with you, and for the dinner,[†2] and for the no-mention of the bill, or of the little squat doll-looking tumbler which you knocked over with your elbow when you were talking so merrily, and broke.[†3] As to the apostrophe[†4] I wouldn't lay a hand upon it for the world; and shew me the printer who dares to mar it!

I should have been exceedingly glad to shake hands with your son;[†5] but when he called, I was on a rustic walk with Maclise, and was doing all that you did — only not so well — and eating lamb chops, and drinking beer, and laughing like a coal-heaver, — and all this at the Eel Pie House on Twickenham Island, which teaches one geography on the practical method, and illustrates that problem about the tract of country "entirely surrounded by water", rendering it intelligible and pleasant to the meanest capacity.

Good God how well I know that room! Don't you remember a queer, cool, odd kind of smell it has, suggestive of porter and even pipes at an enormous distance? Don't you remember the tea-board, and the sand, and the press on the landing outside full of clean linen intensely white? Don't you recollect the little pile of clean spittoons in one nook near the fireplace, looking like a collection of petrified three-cornered hats once worn by the dead-and-gone old codgers who used to sit and smoke there? The very sound of the bell — flat like a sheep-bell as if it had caught its tones from listening to it in its idle, shady, drowsy time of rest — the jingling wire more noisy than the bell — I have it in my ears. And closing my eyes, I'm down stairs in the bar where the soda water comes out of the window seat on which the landlady sits o' fine evenings, where the lemons hang in a grove each in its own particular net, where "the cheese" is kept, with great store of biscuits hard by in a wicker basket — where those wonderful bottles are, that hold cordials. You know 'em? great masses of grapes painted on 'em in green, blue, and yellow, and the semblance of an extraordinary knot of ribbon supporting the emblem of a label, whereon is the name of the compound? On one of these is "Lovitch". Great Heaven what is Lovitch? Has it any connection with peppermint, or is it another name for nectar? Tell me my heart, can this be Love-itch.[†1]

Oh Hunt I'm so lazy, and all along o' you! The sun is in my eyes, the hum of the fields in my ears, the dust upon my feet — and a boy, redolent of the steam engine and sweltering in warm ink is slumbering in the passage, waiting for "Copy".

Tell your son I can shake hands with him though he comes without a letter in his palm. And believe me always Heartily Yours, in the faith,

CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD,[†2] [15 MAY 1840]*

MS Mr C. W. Bliss. Date: Handwriting points to first half of 1840; the invitation was doubtless for Fri 15 May (see To Landseer, 11 May).

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Stanfield

This is an invitation to-dinner, for to-day. If the shortness of the notice hasn't taken your breath away, respire 'till you have sent a word of answer.

It is a little party I have made up for old Allan Scotchman and painter, before he goes home'ards. I still want a twelfth. Be that twelfth, and count upon the "tarnal" gratitude of

Yours always Faithfully
BOZ

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To W. HERING,[†1] 16 MAY [1840]

Text from N, I, 257. Date: 16 May was Saturday in 1840.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 16th May

My dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot oblige you in the matter of the enclosed, for I have no interest at the "Chronicle",[†2] and have deemed it best under all circumstances (situated as I am) not to make any.

I hope I need not say how readily I would have complied with your request had it been in my power, or how much I regret the not being able to do so.

Believe me | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 16 MAY 1840*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday May 16th. 1840.

My Dear Macready.

Is the Glencoe day fixed?[†3] I trouble you with the enquiry, because I am anxious to take our Box without delay. It is odd enough that I have dreamt of that Tragedy for the last two nights — two first nights I have had in my sleep; and very indifferently it was done too.

It has occurred to me, whether, as that book was sent about by Moxon, it would not be a good thing to keep the name of the play out of the bill, until the actual night, in order that it might not be identified with Collinson too soon.[†4] Very possibly this has occurred to you; very possibly it is impracticable, but I don't mind troubling you with the idea, as it has occurred to me very often and seems on better acquaintance to be the more prudent and advisable.

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?16 MAY 1840]

Mention in next.

Accepting a dinner invitation.

To W. C. MACREADY, [?16 MAY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature points unmistakably to 1840, in which year the only "Thursday the 28th" was in May. CD could scarcely have been writing on Sat 23 May, day of the first production of Glencoe; nor on Sat 9 May, when he spent the evening with Macready at Babbage's (Diaries, II, 59). Probable date therefore 16 May — Macready's invitation having crossed letter written earlier in the day.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Afternoon.

My Dear Macready.

I am very sorry to say that having a cousin from France[†1] staying with us, we have a small family circle here tomorrow, and cannot get quit of it — which I assure you we would gladly do, to dine in Clarence Terrace.[†2]

I wrote and despatched, two minutes before your note arrived, an acceptance of a dinner invitation for Thursday the 28th. I am now going to write another note to put it off.

Always faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 17 MAY [1840]

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, 19 July 1907; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace 17 May — clearly 1840 (see To Talfourd, 22 May and fns).

Saying that Macready is about to bring out "Collinson's" tragedy; mentioning the bubble and speculation in the Sunday papers;[†1] adding that he is anxious about Talfourd, has dreamt of the production twice already, but is confident.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MAY 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 146-7. Date: "after the first half dozen chapters", according to Forster (F, II, vii, 146); probably refers to Dick Swiveller's and Fred Trent's conversation over "the rosy" in No. 10 (Ch. 7), published 6 June. Forster had no doubt seen it in proof — probably in the third week of May.

I am very glad indeed that you think so well of the Curiosity Shop, and especially that what may be got out of Dick strikes you. I mean to make much of him. I feel the story extremely myself, which I take to be a good sign; and am already warmly interested in it. I shall run it on now for four whole numbers together, to give it a fair chance.[†2]

To T. N. TALFOURD, [22 MAY 1840]

Text in N, I, 258 checked from MS Sotheby's, 8 Dec 1964. Date: clearly Fri 22 May, "the day before" the first night of Glencoe. Address: Mr Serjeant Talfourd | &c &c.

At your chambers
Friday Morning (the day before)

My Dear Talfourd.

Macready called on me this morning and begged me to come straightway to you, and urge upon you the propriety of abusing Moxon to the utmost extent of your powers, and impressing upon him a due sense of the gross and unwarrantable violation of your confidence, of which he has been guilty.

Not content with telling Tom Hill, Wordsworth, Browning,[†1] and Heaven knows who besides, this traitorous publisher told (yesterday) Knowles,[†2] who straightway repairs to the Box office of the Theatre and takes a place for Saturday "to see his friend Talfourd's play". "Mr. Talfourd's play!" cries the box-keeper[†3] "You don't say it's Mr. Talfourd's! Why, it has been kept the closest secret here, and nobody had the least idea of the Author's name!" Knowles replies "oh yes, he knows it from the publisher who is his publisher too", and in case the man should keep the secret, dashes round to Webster,[†4] and there blurts it out again. It ran of course like wildfire through the Theatre, and by last night was generally known to the company.

I really cannot tell you how disgusted I am with the envy and ill-nature of Knowles, who must have known of course that you would not have concealed your name but for some sufficient reason. I am equally disgusted with the coarse and vulgar babbling of Moxon, who I think has behaved most culpably and improperly. This last-named person you can take to account for his conduct — and I hope you will.[†5]

Macready is still very anxious (as no doubt you will be also) that every effort should be made to prevent the spreading of this disclosure and keep it quiet; the chances in our favor being strengthened by the shortness of the time that will yet intervene before the play is presented. He is also exceedingly anxious for you to state in your preface the exact circumstances under which the play was put into his hands,[†1] as he naturally feels himself in a very awkward position with reference to Webster, who is, of course, not over-flattered to find that a matter kept so scrupulously from him has been confided to Knowles (with whom nobody trusts anything) and by him belched out to his own boxkeeper.[†2] I promised, to put him at his ease on these points, that I would see you immediately, and so went to Guildhall. Finding the court shut up, and you absent from here, I have scribbled down the substance of what I had to say to you. — I need only add that so far as my share in the presentation of the play goes, [you][†3] cannot state anything which will not be pleasant to [me; so][†4] freely use my name if you think proper.

I am more confident than ever. I[?was at the][†5] Rehearsal yesterday, and cannot keep away to day [ ][†5] possibly be done tomorrow, and what will become [of Master][†5] Humphrey's Clock, I don't know — it's your fault, that's [my ?view].[†6]

Always My Dear Talfourd | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM BRYDEN,[†7] 23 MAY [1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 23 May was Saturday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning May 23rd.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your note. I greatly regret having been compelled to trouble you in the matter; but you will see that my doing so was unavoidable.

I think with you — not only that the conduct of these Cuffs[†1] is most unjustifiable, but that it is paltry and mean in the extreme. It is as bad as the dinner they gave us, and no known language could express anything worse than that.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Bryden Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 24 MAY [1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: obviously the morning after the first night of Glencoe.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning May 24th.

My Dear Macready.

Talfourd, armed with his proposed preface,[†2] will call with his carriage — first for me to-day, and then for you.[†3] I arranged on our joint behalf that we would be ready for him at half past Six.

I inclose you the letters he received from Knowles and Moxon.[†4] Will you put them in your pocket, so that he may have them back?

The Messenger waits to know how Mrs. Macready[†5] is after the anxieties and delights of last night. I should think you must be rather the worse today. I have seen you play ever since I was | that high, but I never saw you make such a gallant stand as you did last night, or carry anything through so triumphantly and manfully by the force of your own great gifts.[†1] If I felt the agitation of an anxious author yesterday, I assure you that I feel the gratitude and admiration of a successful one this morning.[†2]

Always Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To MRS CHARLES SMITHSON,[†3] 27 MAY 1840†

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Immediate | Mrs Smithson | Southampton Buildings.

Wedy. | 27th. May/40

My Dear Mrs. Smithson

In the hope and belief that an extra knife and fork will not pierce your heart, and in the assurance that you will be glad to see him, I am going to bring Maclise with me today, [†a]with whom I have been walking this afternoon and was in a manner pledged to dine.[†a]

Forgive the penitent and weeping
BOZ.

To GEORGE BRIGHTWEN,[†4] 28 MAY 1840

Facsimile in American Art Association catalogue, Apr 1929.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London
May 28th. 1840.

Sir.

In reply to your letter, I beg to inform you that the portrait originally published in Nicholas Nickleby, and since published separately by Messrs. Chapman and Hall is considered the best likeness that has been engraved of its author.[†1] You can order it of any bookseller. There is another published with the signature of "Boz",[†2] which I am told is not so good.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

George Brightwen Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE MAY 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 147. Date: Ch. 8, describing Dick's behaviour at the Wackles's party (No. 11, published 13 June), was probably in proof before 1 June, when CD left London (on 5 June he had finished writing No. 12).

Dick's behaviour in the matter of Miss Wackles will, I hope, give you satisfaction. I cannot yet discover that his aunt has any belief in him, or is in the least degree likely to send him a remittance, so that he will probably continue to be the sport of destiny.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE MAY 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 158. Date: May 40 according to Forster; during the week before CD and family left for Broadstairs.

I don't know of a word of news in all London,[†5] but there will be plenty next week, for I am going away, and I hope you'll send me an account of it. I am doubtful whether it will be a murder, a fire, a vast robbery, or the escape of Gould,[†6] but it will be something remarkable no doubt.[†7]

To W. C. MACREADY, [?MAY 1840]*

MS Tenri University Library, Japan. Date: Signature suggests May 1840.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Macready.

The orders I want, are for tonight.[†1] The ravenous demand is four in two two's. Forgive me this time, and I'll never do so any more.

Kate sends her love, and enquiries after Miss Macready.[†2]

Always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To HENRY GILPIN,[†3] 30 MAY 1840

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
May 30th. 1840.

Dear Sir

I seize a moment before leaving town for a few weeks, to acknowledge the receipt of your note, dated the day before yesterday. I should be most happy to promote your object, but I fear it is not in my power to do so. The worthiness of your work, no one, I imagine, can question for a moment.

Dear Sir | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Gilpin Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?31 MAY 1840]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: shortly before CD's June visit to Broadstairs on evidence of signature.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday.

My Dear Mitton

I have taken Topping on again. As you said you would look at the advertisements for "grass", I have told him to call upon you on Tuesday morning, and see whether you know of any place to which he can take the noble animal. If you have not seen anything that will suit, will you appoint a time with him when he may call again?

I shall write you very soon from Broadstairs. Any letter addressed to me there, will find me. Our house is next to Barnes's[†1] Library and everybody in the place will know all about us.

Think well about coming to the sea breeze.

Always your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

June

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 JUNE 1840

MS Comtesse de Susannet. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

37 Albion Street Broadstairs.
Monday Night June 1st. 1840

My Dear Beard.

With that tremendous energy which characterizes the proceedings of this establishment, we thought of coming here one day last week, and accordingly came this very morning. We have been in the house two hours, and the dining-parlor closet already displays a good array of bottles, duly arranged by the writer hereof — the Spirits labelled "Gin", "Brandy", "Hollands" in autograph character — and the wine tasted and approved. The castors already boast mushroom ketchup, harvey,[†2] cayenne, and such like condiments; the writing table is set forth with a neatness peculiar to your estimable friend; and the furniture in all the rooms has been entirely re-arranged by the same extraordinary character. The sea is rolling away, like nothing but the sea, in front of the house, and there are two pretty little spare bedrooms waiting to be occupied.

We mean to stay here a Month, and to return, please God, for another Month in the beginning of September. For occasional manly sports in July and August, I shall endeavour to find some queer cabin at Cobham in Kent.

Meantime verbum sap. Every Saturday Morning at 9 o'Clock[†3] there is a Ramsgate steamer leaving London Bridge Wharf, which, being boarded off this place by a boat belonging to it, will deposit you in the family's arms. On Monday Mornings you can leave here either at 8 or 9, and be in town, as you please, at about ½ past 3 or ½ past 4.

Therefore, as I am very tired and just now going to bed preparatory to close work tomorrow, I merely forward you these instructions, expecting by return of post a becoming assurance of your duty and submission.

My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 2 JUNE 1840*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Broadstairs | Tuesday June 2nd. 1840.

My Dear Mitton

We arrived here in famous time yesterday, and with no miseries of any kind. The house is beautifully situated, very clean, and very commodious. The place quiet, fresh, and beautiful. I hope you will reconsider the visit I proposed to you, and determine to make it before we leave.

I shall expect to hear from you before long. I shall be anxious to know what Forster and Jerdan[†1] do, and I hope and trust they may be able to arrange that matter and set it at rest for ever. You have heard from Forster, I dare say, of Jerdan's admission that it was intended to include a settlement of the Barnaby question? That's a great point, I know you will think, as I do.[†2]

We had a heavy shower here this morning, though a very short one. For the rest, as I look for news to those whom I have left behind me in "old england",[†3] I can only commend myself as being now and ever

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

Nothing yet from Alphington.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 JUNE 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 159. Date: Tues 2 June according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

Before I tasted bit or drop yesterday, I set out my writing-table with extreme taste and neatness, and improved the disposition of the furniture generally.[†5]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 2 JUNE 1840

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs | Tuesday June 2nd. 1840.

My Dear Maclise.

My foot is in the house,
My bath is on the sea,
And before I take a souse
Here's a single note to thee.[†1]

It merely says that the sea is in a state of extraordinary sublimity, that this place is, as the Guide Book most justly observes, "unsurpassed for the salubrity and purity of the refreshing breezes which are wafted on the ocean's pinions from far distant climes" — that we are all right after the perils and voyages of yesterday — that the sea is a rowling away in front of the window at which I indite this epistle — and that everything is as fresh and glorious as fine weather and a splendid coast can make it. Bear these recommendations in mind, and shunning Talfourdian pledges and Elyian blandishments,[†2] come to the bower which is shaded for you[†3] in the one pair front, where no chair or table has four legs of the same length, and where no drawers will open till you have pulled the pegs off, and then they keep open and won't shut again.

COME![†4]

I can no more.[†5]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY DENMAN,[†1] 4 JUNE 1840*

MS Mr John Schroder.

Broadstairs | Thursday June 4th. 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens would have had the utmost pleasure in waiting on Lady Denman on Saturday evening but he is unfortunately absent from town for a month, and cannot avail himself of her kind invitation.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 5 JUNE 1840†

MS Berg Collection. Address: Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

Broadstairs. | Friday June 5th. 1840.

Dr. Sirs.

Behold No. XII[†2] which I think will be found a good 'un. No. XIII will finish the part[†3] at rather a good point, I expect.[†4] I will write you more at large when I send the subjects for it,[†5] which I hope will be by the Post from here, on Sunday Night.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

[†a]I shall expect to hear from you on Sunday. (Sunday)[†a]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY JUNE 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 147. Date: placed by Forster after extract of ?late May about Master Humphrey No. 11; probably refers to No. 13 (see fn) — the first chapter of which CD would have finished a few days after 5 June (see To Chapman & Hall, that day).

I was obliged to cramp most dreadfully what I thought a pretty idea in the last chapter. I hadn't room to turn.†6

To H. G. ADAMS, 9 JUNE 1840*

MS Dr A. N. L. Munby.

Broadstairs | 9th. June 1840.

Dear Sir

Let me thank you in few words for your letter, and express (with the very soul of wit whose name is brevity)†1 my hope that the Kentish Coronal will not wither yet.

I am so constantly and closely occupied, that I am obliged to reduce even my letters to this standard. Can I give you a more emphatic answer to your request?

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To ROBERT KNOX,†2 9 JUNE 1840*

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs. | June 9th. 1840.

Dear Sir

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter (which has been forwarded to me), and should have had very great pleasure in attending the dinner on the 20th.†3 but that I am staying here at present for a few weeks, and cannot spare the time which would be occupied in travelling to and fro.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Knox Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 JUNE 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 158. Date: The "heroic speeches" of Edward Oxford (see fn) were reported in the papers on 12 June. From Broadstairs.

It's a great pity they couldn't suffocate that boy, Master Oxford,[†4] and say no more about it. To have put him quietly between two feather-beds would have stopped his heroic speeches,[†1] and dulled the sound of his glory very much. As it is, she will have to run the gauntlet of many a fool and madman, some of whom may perchance be better shots and use other than Brummagem firearms.[†2]

To JOHN DICKENS, [14 JUNE 1840]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 14 JUNE [1840]

MS Huntington Library. Date: 14 June was Sunday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Broadstairs | Sunday 14th. June

My Dear Mitton

When I came home last evening from an afternoon's excursion, I found the inclosed from my father, which had arrived by the Day Mail. This morning I wrote and despatched the reply of which I send you the Rough Draught. Keep them both safe, please, till I return.

You can shew them, of course, to Forster. If you can spare time, I should like to see a line or so of your handwriting by return.

[Sm]ithson[†3] is at Ramsgate, and [?comes he]re[†3] today.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

Brilliant Weather!

To THOMAS MITTON, 16 JUNE 1840

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS Comtesse de Suzannet): Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London. PM 17 June [1840].[†1]

Broadstairs | June 16th. 1840.

Dear Tom.

I am sorry to hear about that eye of yours, and think sea water would be the thing to cure it. We are flourishing exceedingly, and as brown as berries. I am up every morning at 7, and usually finish work for the day, before 2. I hope on Friday Night next, to have gained a number.[†2] It takes a long time doing, I can tell you.

With regard to your difference with Smithson[†3] (respecting which you do me a great injustice if you suppose I am not the person most interested, next after yourself) we must have a long talk upon the subject when I come back. Meanwhile there are two or three points which perhaps I don't clearly understand. They are these: —

As you have drawn the £600 quarterly, and may therefore be presumed to elect at the beginning of the year, would it not have been better to have urged this matter prospectively rather than fall back upon the second year, which had expired? And when he talked about dissolving the partnership, would it not have been better to have expressed the utmost astonishment at such a reply to your just demand, than for one moment to have entertained or hinted at the subject of terms? You seem to me to have made a mistake here, for a man like him would immediately think that a dissolution was your real object, and run his head against that one idea for evermore. Was there any intemperance or heat in the discussion, on either side or on both; and when he made this apparently monstrous tirade about an apology, had he any excuse in the manner and not the matter of your demand?

These latter questions only relate to the particular conversation. What I want to know upon the main point, is this:

Does your receiving these quarterly sums, affect your right to claim for the third of the profits during the time over which those receipts extend? Or, did you want to know the state of the accounts, in order that you might, upon seeing them, decide whether you would continue to take your share, or the guaranteed amount? If this were your object, did you state it to him plainly, and did he merely evade it by saying it was not convenient, and so forth?

In any case, it seems to me that you — making the demand in a straightforward and gentlemanly manner — have an undoubted right to know at the close of every year, the exact state of the accounts down to the uttermost farthing, or it is no partnership at all, and you might as well (or better) be managing the business. And I think that this is a claim so clear and plain that, if you referred it to a friend, I for one would readily prefer it on your behalf and insist upon it besides.[†1]

I wish you would decide me on these doubts, and tell me how you met and what you said. I have made a great many erasures and mistakes in this short space,[†2] but I have nearly written my head off this morning and am dismally stupid. Don't leave this about, as there are ladies in the neighbourhood, and always believe me

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 JUNE 1840]

Extracts in F, II, vii, 147 and F, II, viii, 159*n*. Date: 17 June according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

It's now four o'clock and I have been at work since half-past eight. I have really dried myself up into a condition which would almost justify me in pitching off the cliff, head first — but I must get richer before I indulge in a crowning luxury. Number 15,[†3] which I began to-day, I anticipate great things from. There is a description of getting gradually out of town, and passing through neighbourhoods of distinct and various characters, with which, if I had read it as anybody else's writing, I think I should have been very much struck. The child and the old man are on their journey of course, and the subject is a very pretty one.

Pondering on what might be done to help off the unsold stock of Oliver[†4] when he had regained the copyright from Bentley, CD suggests:

Would it not be best to print new title-pages to the copies in sheets and publish them as a new edition, with an interesting Preface?[†5] I am talking about all this as though the treaty were concluded, but I hope and trust that in effect it is, for negotiation and delay are worse to me than drawn daggers.

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 JUNE 1840

Text from N, I, 263. Address (envelope, MS Dickens House): Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildgs. | Chancery Lane | London. PM Ramsgate 18 June 40.

Broadstairs | 18th June 1840

My dear Mitton,

Nothing can be plainer than your case,[†1] I am delighted to find that it is so — almost as much pleased to find that there is more than a chance of seeing you here.

Let the Miscellany papers go.[†2] They are of no great worth, and when one has the Devil on one's shoulders, it is best to shake him off, though he has one's cloak on.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN BLACK,[†1] 21 JUNE 1840*

MS Mr H. J. O. Harris.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday June 21st. 1840.

My Dear Sir

If you have no objection to the insertion of the accompanying letter in Tuesday's Chronicle, I should very much like to see it there.[†2]

I have marked this letter "immediate" as I am staying at this place until the beginning of next week, and fear it might otherwise come to you a day after the fair.[†3]

Believe me My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Black Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE, [?21 JUNE 1840]

Text from Morning Chronicle, 23 June 40; signed "Manlius". Date: Presumably this was the letter enclosed in To Black, 21 June.[†4]

Sir

At the risk of giving some offence to the members of a profession which is accounted (and justly so, when its duties are becomingly exercised) a highly honourable one, I beg to propose to you, and through you to the public mind, a few questions which have been suggested to me in the reports of the late trial of Courvoisier for the murder of Lord William Russell.[†1]

Firstly, Was Mr. Phillips,[†2] the counsel for the prisoner, justified, knowing as he did his client's guilt from his own confession to himself,[†3] in seeking to cast the guilt of a foreknowledge of the murder, if not of the murder itself, upon the prisoner's female fellow servant,[†4] a witness on the trial?

Secondly, Was Mr. Phillips justified in distinctly and solemnly stating his conviction that the stolen articles found in the prisoner's box had been placed there by the police for purposes best known to themselves, when he well knew at the time he made this statement that the prisoner had stolen and secreted them with his own hands?[†1]

Thirdly, Was Mr. Phillips justified in stigmatising the men who, in the discharge of their duty, had been actively and vigilantly employed in tracing the guilty man through all the mazes of his crime, as "inquisitorial ruffians" and "miscreant blood-hounds",[†2] and in applying to them other wild-flowers of speech of the like nature, which are easily grown, but have a very rank and foul smell in the nostrils of honest men?

Fourthly, Was Mr. Phillips justified when he found he could not weaken the force of that most important and remarkable circumstance deposed to by the landlady of the hotel in Leicester-place,[†3] so critically and providentially made known — was he justified, unable to shake this woman's evidence in any degree, in casting disgraceful aspersions on her character; thus seeking to render the discharge of that sacred duty to society which she had come there to perform, not matter of consolatory reflection to her, but a most painful and degrading circumstance?

Whether Mr. Phillips was justified in appealing so frequently and solemnly to his God[†4] in behalf of a man whose hands he knew were reeking with venerable blood, most savagely, barbarously, and inhumanly shed — whether he was justified in doing this, and in plainly stating that the jury, in finding him guilty, endangered their eternal salvation,[†5] is a question in which I have no right or wish to interfere, but which I leave between that gentleman and his own conscience.

For myself, sir, I am a plain man, and perhaps unable to balance the advantages of continuing that license which is extended to counsel, against the disadvantage of restricting and confining it within more limited bounds. But the impression made upon me (and if it be made upon me, I have a right to assume it is made on many other practical men also), by the perusal of these proceedings, is — firstly, that I never would stretch out my hand to arrest a murderer, with these pains and penalties before me; and, secondly, that no earthly consideration should induce me to permit my wife or daughter to give evidence at the Old Bailey, if any effort of mine could shield her from such a trial.

I am, sir, your faithful servant,
MANLIUS.[†1]

To W. SCROPE,[†2] 22 JUNE 1840*

MS Private.

Broadstairs, Kent | Monday June 22nd. 1840.

My Dear Sir.

Your note and inclosure have been forwarded to me here, where I am staying until the end of the month. If you should see Lady Shelley,[†3] may I trust to your kindness to spare her the trouble of any formal communication from me, and to say that I hope to have the pleasure of availing myself of her kind Invitation on my return to town?

My Dear Sir | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Scrope Esqre.

To GEORGE CHAPMAN,[†4] 25 JUNE 1840

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, March 1923; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Broadstairs, 25 June 40.

Every day since I have been here (except on Mondays when in common with other vagabonds I usually make holiday) I have been at my desk for many hours ... my country escapes must be limited for the present to quiet places near at hand, where I can take root and put out my leaves without interruption,

To THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE, 26 JUNE 1840

Text from Morning Chronicle, 29 June 1840; signed "Manlius".[†1]

Friday, 26th June.

Sir,

As I addressed my last letter to you from Kent, at a distance of nearly eighty miles from London, where I still am, and as I did not see your paper of Thursday until noon to-day, I need offer no apology to you for not returning an earlier reply to the "Templar".[†2]

It strongly occurs to me, sir, as I have no doubt it has occurred to many of your readers, that this "Templar" is a very young one of that order of Knights Templars who first make their giants and then kill them. For the "Templar", assuming that I mean to do what I do not, girds up his loins to attack his own assumption (whose weak points none, of course, know better than he), and having pierced it with several small wounds, concludes that he has vanquished me. I regret to awaken the Templar from his agreeable delusion, but I beg to say that his assumption and my questions are identified in no one respect.

The plain state of the case, and the plain drift and purport of my letter which you printed in your Tuesday's paper, was this: — Mr. Phillips being counsel for a murderer, and having received from that murderer's lips a confession of his guilt,[†3] does not confine himself to defending that man, and endeavouring to show by argument or inference that he may not have been guilty of the crime, but attacks with violent language the witnesses for the prosecution, whose evidence he knows is true, and plainly imputes his crime to them. I ask, was this necessarily part and parcel of Mr. Phillips's duty to his wretched client? I know it was his bounden duty to defend one side, but did the discharge of that duty of necessity include a most foul attack upon the other? Could he not argue that his client was guiltless of the murder without attempting to show that the witnesses against his client were guilty of it, and of other crimes almost as bad, themselves? Is there any man of common sense and reason (not a logician as the "Templar" is),[†4] who can fail to see this broad and manifest distinction? And have Lord ERSKINE'S remarks on PAINE'S trial[†5] — which I cannot but think that the "Templar" quotes rather as a proof of his legal reading than for any useful purpose — the remotest influence upon or application to it?

The "Templar" speaks of the "startling equivocation" of the landlady of the hotel in Leicester-place. I could wish with you[†1] that he had pointed out in what it consisted. Will he say that it related to a point of fact respecting which the truth was likely to be elicited by such questions as

"who slept with her when her husband was away?" or that it gave Mr. Phillips the faintest glimmering of a right to raise the insinuation that she was an adulteress and a strumpet?

Upon this last point, sir, I shall take leave to make a remark which will kindle the ire of a great many Templars, I have no doubt; but as I appeal from Templars to those who employ them, and to those by whose opinion, strongly and properly expressed, their too free flights may be at last restrained, I shall venture upon it notwithstanding. It is, that in cross-examination of all kinds, but especially in the cross-examination of women, counsel do most abominably and shamefully abuse the licence they enjoy. Every man — not being a Templar or other party concerned — who has watched a criminal trial, or who has sat upon a jury at the Old Bailey, knows that a counsel cross-examining a female in a desperate case invariably begins with a reckless assault upon her character; and that when he has bullied her into a state of extreme confusion, and shamed her modesty into tears, he triumphantly calls upon the jury to observe her "equivocation" and embarrassment.

All the questions which I propounded in my former letter I repeat; and I beg, emphatically and earnestly, to call the calm attention of your readers to them once again. I recognise the right of any counsel to take a brief from any man, however great his crime, and, keeping within due bounds, to do his best to save him; but I deny his right to defeat the ends of truth and justice by wantonly scattering aspersions upon innocent people, which may fasten a serious imputation upon them for the remainder of their lives — as those so profusely showered by Mr. Phillips would have done in this instance, in the not impossible case of Courvoisier having been acquitted. In so doing, I maintain that he far oversteps his duty, and renders his office, not a public protection, but a public nuisance.

I am, sir, your faithful servant,
MANLIUS.

To MRS MARJORIBANKS,[†2] 26 JUNE [1840]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 26 June was Friday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday 26th. June.

Dear Mrs. Marjoribanks.

I should have had real pleasure in availing myself of your kind invitation for last Thursday, but that I have been staying here since the beginning of the month, and do not return to town until its close. Your note was only forwarded to me this morning, or I need scarcely say I should have answered it immediately.

I beg to be remembered to Mr. Marjoribanks and your daughters,[†1] and am
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Marjoribanks.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?LATE JUNE 1840]

Extract in unidentified catalogue; from Broadstairs; signed initials. Date: perhaps referring to the smoking chimney (see 4 July) and written shortly before CD's return to London at the end of June.

Will you see after the subject matter enclosed, and if any alteration must be made, direct Topping accordingly; I should like the neighbourly scamp in question (who is of course a Jew) to know that I appreciate the neighbourly manner in which he has made his communication.[†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, [?30 JUNE 1840]

Mention in Macready, Diaries, II, 67. Date: Macready recorded its receipt on 30 June.

A very humorous card of inquiry[†3] from Dickens, Maclise and Forster.[†4]

July

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 JULY [1840]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 1 July 40. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday 1st. July

My Dear Beard.

If you have nothing better to do, will you come and dine with us next Sunday? The hour is Six, but if you are for a walk beforehand, I am your man.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?EARLY JULY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature suggests late May to early July 40; probably July since at end of May Forster was away from London and in June CD was at Broadstairs. Address: Wait | Thomas Mitton Esquire | Southampton Buildings.

At Forster's | Wednesday Morng.

My Dear Mitton

You will[†1] receive a note from me appointing one oClock tomorrow for me to call on you. But having come out unexpectedly, I am now here, if you have time to come over.

Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 2 JULY 1840†

MS (copy in clerk's hand)[†2] Mr C. C. Dickens.

1, Devonshire Terrace, | Thursday July 2nd. 1840.

My dear Sirs,

The terms upon which you advance the Money to day for the purchase of the Copyright and Stock of Oliver on my behalf,[†3] are understood between us to be these: —

That this £2,250 is to be deducted from the purchase Money of a Work by me, entitled "Barnaby Rudge", of which two Chapters are now in your hands,[†4] and of which the whole is to be written within some convenient time to be agreed upon between us. But if it should not be written (which God forbid) within five years,[†5] you are to have a lien to this amount on the property belonging to me that is now and will be then in your hands, namely, my Shares in the Stock and Copyright of "Sketches by Boz", "The Pickwick Papers", "Nicholas Nickleby", "Oliver Twist", and "Master Humphrey's Clock", in which we do not include my Share of the Current profits of the last named Work, which I still remain at liberty to draw at the times stated in our Agreement.[†6]

Your purchase of Barnaby Rudge is made upon the following terms. It is to consist of matter sufficient for ten monthly numbers of the size of "Pickwick" and "Nickleby" which you are, however, at liberty to divide and publish in fifteen smaller numbers if you think fit. — The terms for the purchase of this edition in numbers, and for the Copyright of the whole book, for six months after the publication of the last number, are £3,000. At the expiration of the six Months, the whole Copyright reverts to me.[†1]

[†a]I had nearly omitted to mention, that as a security to you, my life is to be insured in the sum of Fifteen hundred Pounds. The remainder of the money you advance, being for the purchase of the Stock which you will have on hand, need not (as I take it) be included in the Policy.[†2] —

Dear Sirs | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?2 JULY 1840]

Text from City Book Auctions catalogue No. 551; MS 1 p.; n.d. Date: probably 2 July 40, enclosing last.

My Dear Talfourd.

Enclosed with this are two letters — one which I received from Chapman and Hall last night, and one which I propose to send as an answer thereto this evening. I consulted with Forster this morning about the letter, and he quite acquiesced in its propriety, but I cannot prevail upon myself to send it without first asking your advice. I went to your chambers an hour or two ago but you were not there. May I tax your friendship by asking you to return the enclosed to me when you have [read] them, with one line telling me whether you think I have done right or not? I shall be guided entirely by your opinion.

Always Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [?2 JULY 1840]

Mention in To Chapman & Hall, ?3 Aug 41.

A private letter of thanks for the ready and kind way in which the firm had advanced the £2250.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†1] 4 JULY 1840*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 4th. July 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens has great pleasure in accepting Miss Coutts's kind Invitation for Wednesday the Fifteenth.

To THOMAS MITTON, 4 JULY [1840]

MS Huntington Library. Date: paper watermarked 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace | 4th. July

My Dear Mitton

I sent over to the District Surveyor this morning, who said "he had nothing to do with my chimneys"[†2] and declined the honor of coming over, intimating that I might go and see him. To this I returned (per Topping) a reply that I should find it inconvenient to Carry the chimney and that I wanted him to survey it and say if it was right or wrong — whereunto he rejoined that "he had nothing to do with my chimnies"[†2] once more, and there the matter ended.

Blast the chimney, what's to be done?

Faithfully always

CD.

To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, 6 JULY 1840†

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | 6th. July 1840.

[†a]My Dear Sir.

A kind of impossible possibility occurred to me this morning, and filled me with a shadowy dread. I have determined to apply to you to solve my doubts.[†a] Miss Coutts's card for the fifteenth has solemn mention of a Royal Duke and Duchess[†3] — are gentlemen expected to wear court-dresses in consequence?

Forgiving my troubling you. I have already appeared in that very extraordinary costume and am prepared for the worst; [†b]but I have no confidence in my legs, and should be glad to hear that the etiquette went in favor of trowsers.

My Dear Sir Believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†b]

Edward Marjoribanks Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 JULY 1840*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | July 7th. 1840.

My Dear Macready.

I want a couple of orders for Glencoe for a man with a letter of introduction — a mutual admirer of yours and mine — from Liverpool[†1] — any early night except to-night. If you are at home can you return them to me by bearer? If not will you send them down to me?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. S. DALTON,[†2] 8 JULY 1840*

MS Mr Roger W. Barrett.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday 8th. July 1840.

Dear Sir.

I send you a couple of orders for Saturday to the new Tragedy at the Haymarket. If you have leisure and inclination to go, I think I can answer for your being much pleased.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Dalton Esquire.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 8 JULY 1840*

MS Mr James H. Heineman.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | 8th. July 1840.

My Dear Sirs

There are no alterations to make in No. 16.[†3] Mr. Chapman must have misunderstood me. Go on with it as soon as you please.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 JULY 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 160*n*. Date: 8 July 40 according to Forster.

Accept from me, as a slight memorial of your attached companion, the poor keepsake which accompanies this. My heart is not an eloquent one on matters which touch it most, but suppose this claret jug[†1] the urn in which it lies, and believe that its warmest and truest blood is yours. This was the object of my fruitless search, and your curiosity, on Friday. At first I scarcely knew what trifle (you will deem it valuable, I know, for the giver's sake) to send you; but I thought it would be pleasant to connect it with our jovial moments, and to let it add, to the wine we shall drink from it together, a flavor which the choicest vintage could never impart. Take it from my hand — filled to the brim and running over with truth and earnestness. I have just taken one parting look at it, and it seems the most elegant thing in the world to me, for I lose sight of the vase in the crowd of welcome associations that are clustering and wreathing themselves about it.

To EDWARD GOULBURN,[†2] 8 JULY 1840

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1919; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 8 July 40.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?8 JULY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: watermark 1840; handwriting supports. Last paragraph almost certainly refers to the smoking chimney mentioned in To Mitton, 4 July; the party at "little Hall's" is more likely to have taken place on 7 July, celebrating the signing of the Agreement of 2 July, than on 1 July, the day before it.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Mitton.

By the time I was up this morning (having been kept abed by some very doubtful wine of little Hall's) Macready had gone out, and was busily rehearsing at the Theatre. Name another night.

I think as the Smithsons will be here, I won't come out tonight. I'll write or see you tomorrow morning, which will be more to the purpose.

Topping waits to know what news you have — you must have some, I think.

Always Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 or 10 JULY 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 157. Date: Since this records the end of the chimney dispute, clearly later than Sat 4 July. The visit to Hall "the other night" was on a Tuesday (see To Mitton, ?8 July), and CD clearly writing soon after.

I shall give you my latest report of the chimney in the form of an address from Topping, made to me on our way from little Hall's at Norwood the other night, where he and Chapman and I had been walking all day, while Topping drove Kate, Mrs. Hall, and her sisters, to Dulwich. Topping had been regaled upon the premises, and was just drunk enough to be confidential. "Beggin' your pardon, sir, but the genelman next door sir, seems to be gettin' quite comfortable and pleasant about the chim'ley." — "I don't think he is, Topping." — "Yes he is sir I think. He comes out in the yard this morning and says, Coachman he says" (observe the vision of a great large fat man called up by the word) "is that your raven he says, Coachman? or is it Mr. Dickens's raven? he says. My master's sir, I says. Well, he says, It's a fine bird. I think the chimley 'ill do now Coachman, — now the jint's taken off the pipe he says. I hope it will sir, I says; my master's a genelman as wouldn't annoy no genelman if he could help it, I'm sure; and my missis is so afraid of havin' a bit o' fire that o' Sundays our little bit o' weal or wot not, goes to the baker's a purpose. — Damn the chimley, Coachman, he says, it's a smokin' now. — It a'nt a smokin your way sir, I says; Well he says no more it is, Coachman, and as long as it smokes anybody else's way, it's all right and I'm agreeable." Of course I shall now have the man from the other side upon me, and very likely with an action of nuisance for smoking into his conservatory.[†1]

To THE COMMITTEE OF THE WESTERN LITERARY INSTITUTION,[†2] 10 JULY 1840

MS Berg Collection. Address: To | The Committee of | The Western Literary Institution.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.

July 10th. 1840.

Gentlemen.

I beg to recommend to you, Mr. Thornton Hunt, who is a candidate for the situation of librarian to your valuable Institution.

I venture to commend this gentleman to your notice most warmly and earnestly; not because I have a great esteem and regard for his father, but because of his own personal character and qualifications. Besides possessing abilities which would qualify him for a much higher station than that which he seeks to fill, he is a person of the highest honor and integrity: most punctual and exact in the discharge of any duties he undertakes, and a truly zealous and conscientious man.

I am happy to bear this testimony to the character of Mr. Thornton Hunt; and I offer no apology, gentlemen, for obtruding it on you, being quite certain that if you elect him, you will never require any.[†1]

I am Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To | The Committee of | The Western Literary Institution.

To LEIGH HUNT, 10 JULY 1840

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 10th. July 1840.

My Dear Hunt.

I send you the testimonial.[†2] If it's too long, or too short, or too little, or too much, send it back again, and I'll write another.

I send herewith an imaginary old shoe which please to throw after your son — instantly if he is at home, and if not, directly on his return.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire.

P.S. I fancied there was the slightest possible peculiarity in your speech last night — just an elaborate show of distinctness — a remarkably correct delivery — an exquisite appreciation of the beauty of the language, with the faintest smack of wine running through it — This was mere fancy, I suppose?[†3]

To JOHN OVERS, 13 JULY 1840

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mr. J. A. Overs | Messrs. Springweiler & Co. | 2 Duke Street | West Smithfield.[†4]

Devonshire Terrace | 13th. July 1840.

Dear Mr. Overs.

Frazer's[†5] flourish about payment was meant for my eye, I think; and it strongly occurs to me that you will have to write to him again.[†6]

I have been greatly interested by your account of the Moral World,[†1] though I cannot make up my mind whether I shall pursue the subject or leave it alone. Several grave questions have arisen in my mind respecting the very doubtful propriety of noticing it at all, when the great object of its Citizens is plainly notoriety.[†2]

I will send you your paper very soon. Meantime, thank you for your letter.[†3]

Yours very truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Overs.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 15 JULY [1840]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 15 July was Wednesday in 1840; handwriting and "Maclise" in salutation support that year. Address: Wait | Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Wedy. 15th. July

My Dear Maclise.

My better half is going out to dinner to day, and I am going out at night,[†4] but I shall not want to come home to dress, before Nine or half past. Shall you and I, taking advantage of the beautiful day, walk somewhere, and dine? If so, I'll call for you — or rather you call here, for it's in the way to all foreign parts — at any hour you please. Name it, that's all, and I'll be ready.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To MISS ROGERS,[†1] 16 JULY [1840]*

MS Professor E. S. Pearson. Date: 16 July was Thursday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday 16th. July.

Dear Miss Rogers.

I sat in a draught at a party last night, — before an open window and door all the evening — and have such a raging pain to day in every tooth in my head, that I am enduring a perfect martyrdom. I really believe nobody ever had such a complication and concentration of this most abominable torture as I am suffering at this moment.

Will you pity me for not being able to come to you to-day, and pity the cause also? If anything will do me good, I think that will. And pray believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES EDWARDS LESTER,[†2] 19 JULY 1840

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sunday July 19th. 1840.

Dear Sir.

As I have not the complete MS of Oliver[†3] (I wish I had, as it would one day have an interest for my children) I am enabled to send you a scrap,[†1] in compliance with your request; and have much pleasure in doing so.

Pray make my regards to your lady,[†2] and give her from me the other little packet inclosed. It is the first specimen of the kind I have parted with — except to a hair-dresser — and will most likely be the last,[†3] for if I were to be liberal in this respect, my next portrait would certainly be that of a perfectly bald gentleman.

Believe me Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To Charles Edwards[†4] Lester.

P.S. I should tell you perhaps as a kind of certificate of the Oliver scrap, that it is a portion of the original and only draught. — I never copy.[†5]

To THOMAS CAMPBELL,[†6] 19 JULY 1840*

MS University of Texas. Address: Thomas Campbell Esquire | 61 Lincolns Inn Fields.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
19th. July 1840.

My Dear Sir.

I cannot lay your letter[†7] aside, without telling you how much pleasure it gave me to hear from you, and how it came upon me — not as from a slight acquaintance, but from a very old and valued one; for if I have not known you intimately in the flesh, I have been upon most friendly terms with you in the spirit for a long, long, time.

I hope we shall improve this opportunity and become better known to each other. Believe me that you do not rank among the admirers of your genius one more sincere and earnest person than

Yours very faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Campbell Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 22 JULY [1840]

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954). Date: 22 July was Wednesday in 1840; clearly refers to the "dreadful girl" mentioned in next.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday July 22nd.

My Dear Maclise

Kate has a girl stopping here, for whom I have conceived a horrible aversion, and whom I must fly. Shall we dine together today in some sequestered pothouse, and go to some theatre afterwards? (My Examiner promise[†1] in the latter respect, lies heavy on my mind.) If yea, will you be here at 4, or as soon as you like. If nay, whither can I turn from this fearful female! She is the Ancient Mariner of young ladies. She "holds me with her glittering eye", and I cannot turn away. The basilisk is now in the dining room and I am in the study, but I feel her through the wall. She is of a prim and icy aspect, her breast tight and smooth like a sugar loaf, — she converseth with fluency, and hath deep mental lore — her name is Martha Ball[†1] — she breakfasted in the dining room this morning, and I took my solitary food, tight locked-up in the study. I went out last night and in my desolation, had my hair cut — merely to avoid her. Evins, this is dreadful!

Your wretched friend
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Is Davis[†2] of an excitable and ardent nature — I mean the enthusiastic sculptor? Do you think if I asked him here, he might be got to run away with this tremendous being? She is remarkable for a lack of development everywhere, and might be useful as a model of a griffin or other fabulous monster.

P.P.S Or would he make her bust, and "aggrawate" it. That would be some revenge.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?23 JULY 1840]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting points to 1840, in which year the only Thursday performances for which both The Lady of Lyons and Power were billed were on 9, 16, 23 and 30 July. Among these four dates, CD was free to go only on the 23rd. Reference to the "dreadful girl" (see last) supports.

Your Office | Thursday

Will you come up and dine with us at 5?[†3] We have a box at the Haymarket for Kate to take that dreadful girl, and perhaps you would like to go with us, though it's only the Lady of Lyons[†4] and Power.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, [?23 JULY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: probably same day as last, mentioning the "dreadful girl"; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday.

My Dear Macready.

We will come with the greatest pleasure and delight. We must bring the guest, and I'm sorry to say I can't recommend her. But as different people have different opinions, some preferring onions to apples, perhaps you'll like her.

That exquisite pun of yours about the fawning,[†1] was almost lost through hieroglyphical penmanship. I had put your note away when suddenly it dawned upon my mind and a re-perusal convulsed me.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

What time do you dine? — 6?

To THOMAS MITTON, 24 JULY 1840

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | 24th. July 1840.

My Dear Mitton.

Inclosed is a cheque (dated 6th. next month) for[†2] the life Insurance.[†3]

Don't fail to bear in mind [? you come ou]t[†4] of town with us at the [beginning][†5] of September, which I am sure would do you good. A Month at that time of year would not be too long a holiday, and you might come up to town for a day, mid way in that period, if necessary. I shall quite conclude that you go with us; and set it down as a solemn bargain.

I think Broadstairs will surely be the place.

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JULY 1840*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 25th. July 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Coutts, and exceedingly regrets that having made an engagement to go into Devonshire[†1] on Monday, whence he does not return for ten days, he is prevented from accepting her welcome invitation.

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, 26 JULY 1840†

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 26th. July 1840.

My Dear Landor.

Mr. Shandy's Clock[†2] was nothing to mine — wind, wind, wind, always winding am I; and day and night the alarum is in my ears, warning me that it must not run down. When I received that Swing-like[†3] letter of yours, such visions of Bath sprung up and floated about me that I rung the bell for my portmanteau and putting it on a chair, looked hard at it for three quarters of an hour. Suddenly a solemn sound from the Clock, jarred upon my ears; and sending it upstairs again, I sat down with a sigh, to write.

Gravely and seriously — for it is a serious matter — I have been looking forward to a glimpse of you were it only for one day, and am still looking forward, and shall be looking forward for Heaven knows how long. I am more bound down by this Humphrey than I have ever been yet — Nickleby was nothing to it, nor Pickwick, nor Oliver — it demands my constant attention and obliges me to exert all the self-denial I possess. But I hope before long to be so far ahead as to have actually turned the corner and left the Printer at the bottom of the next sheet[†4] — and then — !

In the meanwhile, when you have the grace to write a long letter I will have the grace to answer it with one of corresponding dimensions, so take care what you do, and what inflictions you call down upon that poetical sconce,[†5] on which be all peace and happiness and sunny light for evermore!

BOZ.

I was going to put in this place such an effusion (impromptu of course) about her,[†6] but as I've only got the first line and the last, and it wants a dozen or so to express the vast idea, I shall defer it until my next, when I shall certainly dispatch it to you. Until then, give her my love, or if you won't — and upon my word I mistrust you — add it to that little private store of your own, and say nothing about it.

Regards to Mrs. Painter[†1] and the rest of the family of course. Also to that blighted reed[†2] who whispers softly according to the custom of his family and was grown in the softest soil conceivable.

Forster is out of town, but comes home next Wednesday.[†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, [26 JULY 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly 1840 on signature. Basingstoke was on the way to Devonshire, where CD stayed 27 July to 4 Aug. Mrs Macready took her children to Broadstairs on 7 Aug (Diaries, II, 72).

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday

My Dear Macready.

I send you Bryant[†1] — not with any idea, however, of your finding time to read the same. Indeed this would have prevented my sending it to you at all, but that the man who forwarded it to me from America, has marked the best pieces in the Index, which saves trouble. I think they are all famous, but perhaps these are the best.

I forgot to tell Mrs. Macready to bear especially in mind at Broadstairs in connection with bottled stout, ale, punch, wines and spirituous liquors, Mr. Ballard[†2] of the Albion Hotel — one of the best and most respectable tradesmen in England. He has a kind of reverence for me (you will admire his simplicity) and on the mention of my name will send his very best.

If it clears up, we think of going by the Railroad as far as Basingstoke tonight.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 31 JULY [1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 31 July was Friday in 1840; paper is watermarked 1840; signature supports that year.

Alphington | Friday Night July 31st.

My Dear Forster.

Bradburys told me you were going to write, but as I have not heard from you, I scrawl a very short note (having just finished my number)[†3] to say that we shall be home, please God, on Tuesday Evening. I have taken our places by the Telegraph, albeit it is a monstrously dangerous coach. Coming down, we were twice as nearly over as you can conceive. The hills are very steep, and the pace tremendous.[†4]

I don't believe there is anywhere such a perfect little doll's house as this.[†1] It is in the best possible order — beautifully kept — the garden flourishing, the road lively, the rooms free from creeping things or any such annoyance, and the prospect beautiful. I wish you could see it, and but that you have been so roving of late should have asked you to come down and return with us. It is quite a queer thing, and if it were not for recent demonstrations (I speak of those you know of)[†2] would give me unmingled satisfaction. I wonder more than ever how he had the heart to write as he did. I hope that's all over.

They seem perfectly contented and happy. That's the only intelligence I shall convey to you except by word of mouth.

Kate joins in kindest remembrances.

Always believe me Dear Forster
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [31 JULY 1840]

Mention in To Cattermole, ?7 Aug 40. Date: CD had finished the No. on 31 July (see last). From Alphington.

Sending the MS of No. 21 and mentioning "an old Gateway"[†4] as a subject for illustration.

August

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON,[†5] [5 AUGUST 1840]

MS Wisbech Museum & Literary Institute. Date: Signature points to Summer 1840; CD had clearly returned to London on Tues 4 Aug as planned (To Forster, 31 July).

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Doctor Elliotson.

I only returned to town from Devonshire, late last night. I shall be truly glad to dine with you on Saturday, and also to meet Mr. Townshend[†1] from whom I have found two kind notes on my table.

Mr. Forster's address is No. 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Elliotson.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?7 AUGUST 1840]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: The "old Gateway" was a subject for Ch. 27 (No. 21, published 22 Aug); reference to his visit to Devonshire strongly suggests first Friday after CD's return to London.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning.

My Dear Cattermole.

I sent the MS of the inclosed proof marked Z up to Chapman and Hall from Devonshire, mentioning a subject of an old Gateway which I had put in expressly with a view to your illustrious pencil.[†2] By a mistake, however, it went to Browne instead.[†3] Chapman is out of town, and such things have gone wrong in consequence.

The subject to which I wish to call your attention is in an *un*written No. to follow this one, but is a mere echo of what you will find at the conclusion of this proof marked Z.[†1] I want the cart — gaily decorated — going through the street of the old town with the Wax Brigand displayed to fierce advantage, and the child seated in it also, dispensing bills — as many flags and inscriptions about Jarley's wax-work fluttering from the cart, as you please. You know the Wax Brigands, and how they contemplate small oval miniatures? That's the figure I want. I send you the scrap of MS which contains the subject.[†2]

— II - 111 —

Will you, when you have done this, send it with all speed to Chapman and Hall as we are mortally pressed for time, and I must go hard to work to make up what I have lost by being dutiful and going to see my father.

I want to see you about a frontispiece to our first Clock Volume[†3] which will come out (I think) at the end of September[†4] — and about other matters. When shall we meet, and where?

I say nothing about our cousin[†5] or the baby, for Kate bears this, and will make me a full report and convey all loves and congratulations.

Could you dine with us on Sunday at 6 o'Clock sharp? I'd come and fetch you in the morning and we could take a ride and walk. We shall be quite alone unless Macready comes. What say you?

Don't forget dispatch, there's a dear fellow and ever believe me.

Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To THOMAS HILL, 8 AUGUST 1840

Composite text from facsimile in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 486 (aa) and N, I, 267 (bb).

[a]Devonshire Terrace | 8th. August 1840.

My Dear Mr. Hill. — I call you "Mr." because you are such a veteran,[†6] though my inclination is to drop any word that seems to imply any formality between us, and assume the most irreverential familiarity of address.

I cannot tell you how much pleasure I have derived from your kind note, and how cheering it is to me to be assured of the friendly interest of one whom I so warmly and truly esteem. I receive your congratulations with true gratification, for I know they are sincere and am proud of a place in your kind recollection and warm heart.

Carry with you to Paris and bring back again, my earnest and hearty friendship. Be a reader as long as I am a writer, and let us hope that we may regard each other with the[a] [b]same feelings as those which animate us now, in some other world where if there will be very few books, there will be (if my faith be at all near the right one) marvellously few Booksellers. Mrs. Dickens's "love".

Faithfully Yours[b]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS MITTON, [?10 AUGUST 1840]

MS Huntington Library. Date: paper watermarked 1840. Clearly refers to the Broadstairs visit beginning 31 Aug 40; cannot have been written the day before To Mitton, 18 Aug; presumably, therefore, a week earlier.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Morning

My Dear Mitton

Will you dine with us on Wednesday at 5 instead of to-day? I owe a visit to a gentleman who leaves England tomorrow for a long time; and as the said gentleman addressed a Sonnet to me, have been obliged to engage myself.[†1]

As Macready's house will not be vacant soon enough for our purpose[†2] we have written to Broadstairs today about our old one. We purpose going on Monday the 31st. Prepare accordingly.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, [10 AUGUST 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting points to 1840. Mrs Macready took her children to Broadstairs on Fri 7 Aug: hence the invitation to Macready who was alone until Sat 29th. Since CD was at Alphington on the Monday before Mrs Macready's departure, this letter was presumably written the Monday after. Macready dined with him on 16 and 23 Aug (Diaries, II, 74-5).

Monday.

My Dear Macready

We hope that until we go to Broadstairs you will dine with us every Sunday when you are not better engaged. Is it a bargain?

As you were asking after that little boy who wrote the copies,[†1] I send you the last accounts of him. They have just reached me.

I've got a word. — It's a mineral, and isn't to be found in England.[†2] You have guessed it already, I have no doubt!

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To ALFRED DICKENS,[†3] 12 AUGUST 1840

Text from N, I, 267.

Devonshire Terrace | 12th August 1840

My dear Alfred,

I am very glad to learn that you have so good a prospect of continued employment in your old quarters.[†4]

By a kind of fatality the servants, among them, lost that unfortunate dog on the day your letter arrived. He had grown very much, looked handsome, and was in high favor. He has not returned, nor can we get any news of him. I have determined never to keep another, be he who or what he may.

We are going to Broadstairs again, on the 31st and have been to Alphington where we found them very well, and looking exceedingly comfortable. The children are "charming" and desire their loves. On our return from Devonshire, we found the baby[†1] extremely unwell, and Pickthorn considered it advisable to call in Doctor Davis.[†2] We were very much distressed at first, but on consultation they thought there was nothing to be alarmed at, and since then she has improved greatly. She is still very thin, however, and paler than she should be.

I send you on the other side three signatures which I suppose will serve your purpose. There is no news in London — everybody is hurrying out of town — the two great theatres are shut up — and all the watering places are crammed with hot people.

Kate sends her best love. And I am always

You affectionate brother
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SAMUEL ROGERS,[†3] 13 AUGUST 1840

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday 13th. August 1840.

My Dear Sir.

I have decided to publish Master Humphrey's Clock in half yearly volumes — [†a]each volume, containing, of course, the collected Numbers for that period. As the first of these will be out at the end of September,[†4] and I want to settle a point I have in my mind, let me ask a favor of you at once.[†a]

Have you any objection to my dedicating the book to you, and so having one page in it which will afford me earnest and lasting gratification? [†b]I will not tell you how many strong and cordial feelings move me to this enquiry; for I am unwilling to parade, even before you, the sincere and affectionate regard which I seek to gratify.[†5]

If I wrote a quire of notes I could say no more than this. I must leave a great deal understood, and only say with a most hearty adaptation of what has passed into a very heartless form, that I am always

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†b]

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 13 AUGUST [1840]†

MS University of Texas. Date: 13 Aug was Thursday in 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday August 13th.

My Dear Cattermole.

Will you turn your attention to a frontispiece for our first Volume, to come upon the left hand side of the book as you open it, and to face a plain, printed title? My idea is, some scene from the Curiosity Shop, in a pretty border or scroll work or architectural device; it matters not what, so that it be pretty. The scene even might be a fanciful thing partaking of the character of the story but not representing any particular passage in it, if you thought that better for the effect.[†1]

I ask you to think of this, because, although the volume is not published until the end of September, there is no time to lose. We wish to have it engraved with great care, and worked very skilfully; and this cannot be done unless we get it on the stocks soon.

They will give you every opportunity of correction, alteration, revision, and all other ations and isions connected with the Fine Arts.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

†aLoves to Cousin and — by the bye what relationship is there between us and the last of the Cattermoles — We†2 must look into this — I have no doubt the nurse can tell — baby meanwhile.†a

To W. C. MACREADY, 17 AUGUST [1840]†

MS Morgan Library. Date: 17 Aug was Monday in 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday August 17th.

My Dear Macready.

†bMany thanks for the book. I think so well of it as to have it bound, and when that's done, you must put your name in it for me.†3

Tuesday the Twenty Fifth shall (God willing) be the day.†1 We have arranged accordingly. Time and so forth we will settle next Sunday.†b †2

What can I say to you, about last night?†3 Frankly, nothing. Nothing can enhance the estimation in which I hold you, or the affectionate and sincere attachment I bear towards you, my dear friend, — and not even your manly and generous interposition can make me eloquent upon a subject on which I feel so deeply and singly.

I am very much grieved, and yet I am not penitent and cannot be, reason with myself as I will. With all the regard I have for Forster, and with all the close friendship between us, I cannot close my eyes to the fact that we do not quarrel with other men; and the more I think of it, the more I feel confident in the belief that there is no man, alive or dead, who tries his friends as he does. I declare to you solemnly, that when I think of his manner (far worse than his matter) I turn burning hot, and am ashamed and in a manner degraded to have been the subject of it.

I have found the soul of goodness in this evil†1 thing at all events, and when I think of all you said and did, I would not recal†2 (if I had the power) one atom of my passion and intemperance, which carried with it a breath of yours.

Ever believe me | My Dear Macready
Yours affectionately and heartily
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. P. HARLEY, 17 AUGUST 1840

MS Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Monday August 17th./40

Deserter of your friends.

A babby is to be christened and a fatted calf killed on these premises on Tuesday the 25th. Instant. It (the calf; not the babby) is to be taken off the spit at 6. Can you come, and gladden the heart of the indignant

BOZ

J. P. Harley Esquire

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 17 AUGUST [1840]*

MS The Earl of Harrowby. Date: 17 Aug was Monday in 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday 17th. August.

My Dear Sir.

A Hundred thanks for your kind note which I found, on returning from a walk, within two or three minutes after you had called.

We go to Broadstairs at the end of this month, and remain there for five weeks. We are in great hopes of having you for a neighbour again.[†3]

Believe me My Dear Sir
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?17 AUGUST 1840]

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 133 (1882); MS (signed initials) 2 pp.; from Devonshire Terrace. Date: probably the day before To Mitton, 18 Aug — which seems to have been written the day CD had intended to go to Broadstairs (since he had not gone, he could ask Mitton to dinner).

I find that if I would have a House at Broadstairs, I must go there and get one. With this view I shall start tomorrow morning, will you run down with me? Say "yes", and come and sleep here tonight.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?17 AUGUST 1840]

Mention in next. Date: probably same day as last.

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 AUGUST [1840]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: Letter is endorsed, in an unknown hand: "Given me by Mr. Mitton, at Broadstairs Sepr. 1840".

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday 18th. August.

My Dear Mitton

This comes to say that I didn't go to Broadstairs (thinking better of it) but wrote. Wherefore if you will dine with us to day at half past 5, we shall be glad to see you.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 AUGUST 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 147. Date: probably the day before he began Ch. 33 (the first chapter in No. 24, published 12 Sep), which opens with a description of Sampson Brass's house. Since CD finished No. 25 on 2 Sep (To Forster, that day), and was writing on an average one No. a week, the likely date for his beginning No. 24 seems about 20 Aug.

I intended calling on you this morning on my way back from Bevismarks,[†1] whither I went to look at a house for Sampson Brass. But I got mingled up in a kind of social paste with the jews of Houndsditch,[†2] and roamed about among them till I came out in Moorfields, quite unexpectedly. So I got into a cab, and came home again, very tired, by way of the city-road.

To HENRY COLBURN,[†3] 19 AUGUST [1840]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: 19 Aug was Wednesday in 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday August 19th.

My Dear Sir.

Mrs. Dickens and I, very much regret that we have an old engagement for tomorrow evening, and cannot have the pleasure of accepting your kind Invitation; which we should otherwise have done with exceeding pleasure.

I send this *in*formal reply to your card, in order that I may take the opportunity of dashing[†1] even this small piece of friendly intercourse, with business. I had this morning a most urgent note from poor Mrs. Macrone enquiring after her book and imploring me not to delay getting the money for her fatherless children. I assure you that I have been greatly pained and grieved by the contents of her letter, and am deeply and earnestly anxious to bring the matter to an issue.

When do you propose to publish it and in what state is it? For God's sake do not delay it beyond November.[†2] And let us have a final meeting upon the subject one day between this and the 31st. when I leave town for six weeks.

Don't forget this, but be a worthy and considerate bookseller,[†3] and I'll preserve your image in spirits in my mental Museum as a good agreeable phaenomonon.[†4]

My Dear Sir Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Colburn Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?20] AUGUST [1840]

Text from Eleanor E. Christian, "Recollections of CD", Temple Bar, LXXXII (1888), 482-3.[†5] Date: clearly misdated. 19 Aug was Thursday in 1841; but Mrs Christian's references to the rumour that CD was mad ("Reminiscences", p. 338: cf. To Forster, 6 and 13 Sep 40) and to Angus Fletcher's eccentricities (ibid: cf. To Maclise, 2 Sep, To Forster, 20 Sep) show that the holiday she shared with the Smithsons at Broadstairs took place in 1840.[†6]

Devonshire Terrace, | Thursday, 19th August.

My dear Mitton.

The only intelligence we can get about the houses on the Terrace at Broadstairs is, that there are two to let, or nearly to let, one (certainly empty at this moment) a little to the left of our old house, supposing you were looking out of the window upon the blue, the fresh, and ever free;[†7] the other a little more to the left still, and commonly called or known by the name of Barfield's Cottage.

This Barfield's Cottage will be vacant (we are told) upon the twenty-first. But the devil of it is that at this season of the year they won't keep the houses even a week for you, and consequently Barfield's Cottage is meat for our masters.[†1] The other house must be either the one which Smithson looked at, or one close to and exactly like it.

If he wants to get up a picture of this last-named tenement in his mind, ask him if he don't remember going with Kate and me and the man from the library to look at a house, and stealing in at the kitchen-door past the water-butt and coal-cellar.[†2] That house was next the library on the side nearest London — the library being between it and ours. I am not sure that this particular house is the same, but it must be either the next door to it, or the next door but one. The terms I don't know, but they are certainly not more than five guineas per week, I should say....

In short, nothing can be done without going down in person, for the place is very full indeed, and the people wildly rapacious and rearing up on their hind legs for money. The day to go down upon is a

Monday, for there is a chance of some family having gone out upon that morning, it being a great departure day. If you put all this into your partner's pipe, tell him that I wish, for his sake and my own too, I could fill it with more substantial matter.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?24 AUGUST 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD probably went down to Broadstairs on Wed 26 Aug and stayed the night; for he had in person "engaged a house" there by the morning of Thurs 27th (To Mitton from Broadstairs, that day). No other visit to Broadstairs on a Wednesday is known during the period in which he was writing to Miss Coutts in the third person. If written on 24 Aug, the note is disingenuous; but CD (engaged all Tuesday with Katey's christening celebrations) did not dare postpone his house-hunting in Broadstairs beyond Wednesday, and the beginning of the family holiday seemed the best excuse. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Evening

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Coutts and greatly regrets that he cannot have the pleasure of dining with her on Wednesday, as he leaves town on that morning for a few weeks on the Coast.

Mr. Dickens deferred answering Miss Coutts's kind note until tonight in the hope that he might have been enabled to postpone his departure for one day. He finds, however, that he could not do so without great inconvenience to others, and is reluctantly obliged to abide by his previous arrangements.

To THOMAS MITTON, [27 AUGUST 1840]

MS Huntington Library. Date: PM 27 Aug 40. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Broadstairs. Thursday Morning.

My Dear Mitton

In case I should not see you in Devonshire Terrace when I arrive at home this evening (which, however, I have my doubts about) I write you the glad tidings that I have engaged a house — a very good one[†1] — and purpose taking possession of it, next Sunday. Let me see you to know if we take steam together, and so forth.

In haste | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To WILLIAM HALL, [?28 AUGUST 1840]

Text from N, I, 285. Date: probably 1840 or 41 since not fully dated by CD; an envelope in Eastgate House, Rochester, addressed "William Hall Esquire | 186 Strand" with PM 28 Aug 40 (Friday), may possibly belong with it.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening

My dear Sir,

My feelings will not admit of my doing more than acknowledging the receipt of your note and enclosures, and begging you to transmit to Mrs. Hall (without delay) the enclosed outpouring of a grateful heart.[†1]

Faithfully yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

September

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 SEPTEMBER 1840]

Extract in F. II, vii, 147-8. Date: 2 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I have been at work of course and have just finished a number. I have effected a reform by virtue of which we breakfast at a quarter before eight, so that I get to work at half-past, and am commonly free by one o'clock or so, which is a great happiness. Dick is now Sampson's clerk, and I have touched Miss Brass in Number 25, lightly, but effectively I hope.[†2]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 2 SEPTEMBER 1840†

MS Berg Collection.

The Lawn House Broadstairs. | September 2nd. 1840.

My Dear Maclise.

[†a]Since that melancholy night when we parted in Covent Garden I have been hard at work; you must therefore consider this in the light of "a trifle from Broadstairs" which is of no intrinsic worth and is only valuable for the sender's sake.[†a]

You know that we know Fletcher didn't go into the Sea that day at Ramsgate?[†3] Well — I had good corroborative evidence yesterday. Seeing me going into one of the Machines he plucked up and said he'd have another. He had the next one. I undressed, went in, waited, still no Fletcher. Determined that he should not escape, I waded under the hood of his bath and seeing him standing with only his coat off, urged him to make haste. In about five minutes more he fell heavily into the water, and feeling the cold, set up a scream which pierced the air! You never heard anything so horrible! And then he splashed like a fleet of Porpoises, roaring most horribly all the time, and dancing a maniac dance which defies description. Such a devil — such a bald, howling, fearful devil in buff, I never beheld.[†1]

He distinctly said afterwards that being the first time &c &c.

He sketches here, gets beggars and idiots to sit to him on the sands and pier, dresses them in fragments of his own attire (all this, in public) and rewards them with shillings for their pains. He makes acquaintance with old Prout[†2] as he sketches the Pier, endeavours to reconcile Miss Collins[†3] to [Strivens][†4] (the rival bather) goes up into lofts where sails are made, and asks if they can find him half a dozen old apostles to come and sit in the same — and, in short, commits all manner of absurdities. He is decidedly calmer though, than he was in town, but he is as greedy as ever, and he is here, and don't say when he'll be anywhere else — there's the Rub.

Come down for a week, come down for a fortnight, come down for three weeks, come down for a month. Arrange to come — arrange to come. It's charming, and the house a most brilliant success — far more comfortable than any we have had.

[†a]Alas! There is no intelligence of The Modest Quencher.[†5] I have explored Ramsgate, lingered in Margate, flitted like a ghost through Saint Peters, and refused to be comforted in Broadstairs — Still no Quencher. The Moozler[†1] I have seen in that quarter of Margate where Moozlers most do congregate — but the Modest Quenchers — ah! where do they preserve their shrinking purity!

The theme grows painful. Kate (forgive me for mentioning her) is quite well and desires her best regards. So are the children, and so do they. So am I, and so do I. And I am always

My Dear Maclise | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire[†a]

To JOHN FORSTER, 6 SEPTEMBER 1840

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).

Broadstairs | Sunday 6th. Septr. | 1840.

My Dear Forster.

Just look at this dedication[†2] and preface, and let me have a line from you by return.

First of the Preface — Would you say anything more? Would you allude to the mad report?[†3] Would you touch on anything else or treat anything differently? If so, say so, and I'll consider it.[†4]

Secondly, the Dedication. The reason of it, is there. Would you state it? I think I should.[†5]

Your note I got this morning with great pleasure. I have been blundering over the Preface so long that I'm deadly stupid and can't answer it.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To SAMUEL ROGERS, [?8 or 9 SEPTEMBER 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: probably two days or three after last, Forster having no doubt replied by return as CD requested.

TO SAMUEL ROGERS ESQUIRE

My Dear Sir.

Let me have my Pleasures of Memory[†1] in connection with this book by dedicating it to a Poet whose writings (as all the World knows) are replete with generous and earnest feeling; and to a man whose daily life (as all the world does not know) is one of active sympathy with the poorest and humblest of his kind.

Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 SEPTEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 148. Date: This and next letter are both dated 9 Sep by Forster, but surely mistakenly; for the two mornings referred to are obviously different. Impossible to be sure which was the earlier of the two; but 9 Sep seems a probable date for his beginning No. 27 (Chs 38 and 39) with which Vol. II opened (on Sun 13 Sep he had a corrected proof of No. 26 to send Forster). From Broadstairs.

I have opened the second volume with Kit;[†3] and I saw this morning looking out at the sea, as if a veil had been lifted up, an affecting thing that I can do with him bye and bye.[†4] Nous verrons.

To JOHN FORSTER, [SEPTEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 160. Date: not the same day as last, as given by Forster, but in the same week. CD had corrected the proof of the Preface by 13 Sep (see To Forster, that day, fn). From Broadstairs.

I was just going to work when I got this letter, and the story of the man who went to Chapman and Hall's knocked me down flat.[†1] I wrote until now (a quarter to one) against the grain, and have at last given it up for one day. Upon my word it is intolerable. I have been grinding my teeth all the morning. I think I could say in two lines something about the general report with propriety. I'll add them to the proof, giving you full power to cut them out if you should think differently from me, and from C and H, who in such a matter must be admitted judges.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, 13 SEPTEMBER 1840

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).

Broadstairs | Sunday Morning 13th. Septr./40.

My Dear Forster.

I send you the proofs of 26[†3] — cut here and there, but not otherwise corrected.[†4] I am decidedly for the mention in the Preface, leaving out the word "raving" which you will see I have struck out.[†1] Kate is for it too — Mitton against.[†2]

What do you think of the quotation in the title page?[†3] To be, or not to be? I'm not particular.

Mitton sublimely absurd[†4] — Fletcher horribly mad[†5] — further particulars in future bills.

Always Faithfully

CD.

Will you let Henry in his spare time look out the Clock MS, that I may "arrange" it when I come home?[†1] Anxiously expecting yours.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 SEPTEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 160-1. Date: 15 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I have been rather surprised of late to have applications from roman-catholic clergymen, demanding (rather pastorally, and with a kind of grave authority) assistance, literary employment, and so forth. At length it struck me, that, through some channel or other, I must have been represented as belonging to that religion. Would you believe, that in a letter from Lamert[†2] at Cork, to my mother, which I saw last night, he says "What do the papers mean by saying that Charles is demented, and further, that he has turned roman-catholic?" — ![†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 SEPTEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, xi, 182*n*. Date: 20 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

Mrs. M.[†1] being in the next machine the other day heard him[†2] howl like a wolf (as he does) when he first touched the cold water. I am glad to have my former story in that respect confirmed. There is no sound on earth like it. In the infernal regions there may be, but elsewhere there is no compound addition of wild beasts that could produce its like for their total. The description of the wolves in Robinson Crusoe is the nearest thing; but it's feeble — very feeble — in comparison.

An alarming report being brought to me the other day that he was preaching, I betook myself to the spot and found he was reading Wordsworth[†3] to a family on the terrace, outside the house, in the open air and public way. The whole town were out. When he had given them a taste of Wordsworth, he sent home for Mrs. Norton's book,[†4] and entertained them with selections from that. He concluded with an imitation of Mrs. Hemans[†5] reading her own poetry, which he performed with a pocket-handkerchief over his head to imitate her veil[†6] — all this in public, before everybody.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 SEPTEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 148. Date: "twelve days later" than letter of 9 Sep according to Forster: i.e. twelve days had passed between CD's beginning No. 27 and receiving a letter written by Forster after reading it in proof. This interval seems likely. From Broadstairs.

I am glad you like that Kit number[.][†7] I thought you would. I have altered that about the opera-going. Of course I had no intention to delude the many-headed into a false belief concerning opera nights, but merely to specify a class of senators.[†8] I needn't have done it, however, for God knows they're pretty well all alike.

To [JOHN] EDMONDS,[†1] [?27 SEPTEMBER] 1840

Extract in Goodspeed's Book Shop catalogue, Nov 1914; MS 3rd person; dated Lawn House, Broadstairs, 1840. Date: N, I, 274 mentions a letter to Mr Edmonds dated 27 Sep 40 — very probably the same letter.

Saying that when he wants anything more in either way [jewellery or plate] he will have pleasure in ordering it of Mr. Edmonds.

To HENRY COLBURN, 28 SEPTEMBER 1840

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Broadstairs | September 28th. 1840.

Dear Sir.

Having occasion to send some other papers to our friend Mr. Forster, I have forwarded him the introduction[†2] and title to Mrs. Macrone's book, which he will give you on your application.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Colburn Esquire

October

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 2 OCTOBER 1840

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Broadstairs. | Friday October 2nd. 1840.

Dear Sirs.

I send you eleven slips of MS herewith.[†3] I am suffering, — and have suffered all night, and during the greater part of yesterday — insupportable torture from some complaint in the face — whether rheumatism, tic doloreux,[†4] or what not, Heaven knows. I have had fomentations of various kinds, but with little or no relief, and am desperately beaten in consequence. I am as bad as Miss Squeers — screaming out loud all the time I write.[†1]

Yours inflammatorily and despondingly

CHARLES DICKENS

I haven't the heart to flourish.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 OCTOBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 148. Date: 4 Oct according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

You will receive the proof herewith. I have altered it. You must let it stand now.[†3] I really think the dead mankind a million fathoms deep, the best thing in the sentence.[†4] I have a notion of the dreadful silence down there, and of the stars shining down upon their drowned eyes — the fruit, let me tell you, of a solitary walk by starlight on the cliffs. As to the child-image I have made a note of it for alteration.[†5] In number thirty there will be some cutting needed, I think. I have, however, something in my eye near the beginning which I can easily take out.[†6] You will recognize a description of the road we travelled between Birmingham and Wolverhampton:[†1] but I had conceived it so well in my mind that the execution doesn't please me quite as well as I expected.[†2] I shall be curious to know whether you think there's anything in the notion of the man and his furnace-fire.[†3] It would have been a good thing to have opened a new story with, I have been thinking since.

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 4 OCTOBER 1840*

MS University of Kentucky.

Broadstairs | Sunday Night Octr. 4th./40.

My Dear Sir

I send you my paper,[†4] in case you should not have seen one. I should have sent you at the same time yesterday's Clock, but not knowing where you may have left off, forbear to bore you with it on the chance.

Further of these 'shoulds'. I should have come to see you to day, but I have been troubled with a raging face, and being out for a few minutes was visited by certain admonitory symptoms which sent me home again, faster than I came out.

I am always My Dear Sir
Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire.

Compts. to Mr. Maltby.[†5]

To THOMAS MITTON, 6 OCTOBER [1840]*

MS University of Texas. Date: presumably 6 Oct 40, since on 7 Oct Mitton paid £20 into CD's bank (Account-book, MS Messrs Coutts); handwriting supports. Address: Private | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Broadstairs | 6th. October

My Dear Mitton

If you succeeded in drawing the needful, I wish you would pay that £20 into Coutts's for me, directly,[†1] if possible. I had overlooked a payment of £60,[†2] which, with the expences of leaving here, will run me for a few weeks very near indeed.[†3]

Should you want it again in a month or so, of course you can have it.

Faithfully Always
CD.

All well.

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 7 OCTOBER [1840]

Mention in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue, Jan 1910; dated Broadstairs, Wed 7 Oct — presumably 1840, the only year in which CD was at Broadstairs on that date.

To JOHN FORSTER, 12 OCTOBER [1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 12 Oct was Monday in 1840; handwriting supports that year. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday 12th. October.

My Dear Forster.

I have a few letters to write, which will take me an hour or so to finish. I will be with you between One and Two.

Faithfully Always

CD.

I didn't hear your ring last night. Did you pull the bell?

To THOMAS SIBSON, [12 OCTOBER 1840]

Mention in next.

To WILLIAM SMITH WILLIAMS,[†1] 12 OCTOBER 1840

Text from N, I, 275.

Devonshire Terrace | 12th Octr. 1840

My dear Sir,

I have just returned to town after six weeks' absence, and hasten to thank you for your friendly congratulations and good wishes, which I do, most cordially.

I have written to Mr. Sibson[†2] by this Post.

Believe me | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 13 OCTOBER 1840

Photograph, Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | 13th. October 1840

My Dear Cattermole

All the Clock Corps dine here on Tuesday next, at Six for half past exactly, to celebrate the completion of the first Volume. You have shewn your interest in the matter too well to leave me in any doubt of your joining us, and joining us heartily. Therefore I count upon you.

My missis's love to your'n, — and mine.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To CHARLES GRAY,[†1] 13 OCTOBER 1840

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park
13th. October 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Gray, and if he has no better engagement for next Tuesday, begs the favor of his company to dinner (at Six o'Clock for half past punctually) to meet their fellow-labourers in the Clock, and celebrate the completion of the first Volume.

To [R. S. HORRELL],[†2] 14 OCTOBER 1840

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London
14th. October 1840.

Sir.

I should have answered your letter immediately after you sent it to me, had it reached my hands. But as I have been out of town for nearly two months, and as letters addressed to my publishers' are not forwarded to me at those times (being seldom important, and being usually of that kind from which I am anxious to escape) I did not receive your communication until this morning.

The great pressure and extent of my correspondence, added to my other occupations, oblige me to be a man of very few words in my epistolary conversation. First, let me say that I am sincerely and truly interested in the labours and aspirations of all young men. And secondly, that if you wish me to read your poems or any of them, I will cheerfully do so.

But, to this I must add that such a task is to me a very painful one, for I know, before I enter upon it, that I can do you no service. The influence I have with publishers is solely and entirely personal. While they care for me, they care nothing for my recommendation, as it does not carry profit with it; and I cannot call to mind any one instance in which it has been productive of any good result.

You will therefore place me in the distressing situation, either of telling you that I do not think your productions more likely to succeed than a thousand others which have been languishing in mothy manuscript and vainly trying to burst into butterfly type, for years; or that I consider them very good, and can do no more. But if either of these dicta would give you the smallest satisfaction, believe me that I shall be very happy to be the means towards such an end.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Harford Esquire

To THOMAS HILL, 14 OCTOBER [1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 14 Oct was Wednesday in 1840.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday 14th. October

My Dear Sir.

Designers, printers, publishers, wood-cutters — in short, the whole of the works of Master Humphrey's Clock dine here next Tuesday at Six for half past exactly, to celebrate the completion of the first Volume. I look upon you as an essential part of the publication; and count surely on your joining us.

I regretted to hear from my brother Fred,[†1] that you had not been very well — though I look upon your being anything but well and cheerful, as a sort of practical joke; not an agreeable thing, but still a thing too preposterous to be considered seriously.[†2]

Always Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esquire

To W. G. TAUNTON,[†3] 14 OCTOBER 1840*

MS New York Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace, York Gate. | Regents Park London
14th. October 1840.

My Dear Sir.

My father tells me you want an autograph of Mr. Macready's. I have looked among his notes, and have turned up the inclosed, which has nothing in its contents to make its presentation to you, treasonable. I shall be extremely happy to see you if you ever come to town; and begging my compliments to your sister, am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. G. Taunton Esquire

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, [?MID-OCTOBER 1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 1840 on handwriting; Forster's letter on the back[†1] seems likely to have been an invitation for a few days in London after a visit Landor paid to Cheltenham in mid-Oct.

My Dear Landor.

Here is a small sign-manual which includes a great deal — all manner of hearty recollections and cordial wishes, and all the friendly things you can think of. Come up to London forthwith, and go back when the Railroad's finished[†2] — not an hour sooner.

Faithfully Yours always
BOZ.

(the short signature for convenience)

To J. P. HARLEY, 16 OCTOBER [1840]*

MS Johns Hopkins University. Date: 16 Oct was Friday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday October 16th.

My Dear Harley.

The works of the Clock-printers, publishers, designers, engravers, and wood-cutters, dine here on the completion of the accompanying Volume, next Tuesday at 6 for half past exactly. Don't tell me that they have put up anything at 'the Garden' which will prevent your joining us — don't, there's a worthy fellow.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 20 OCTOBER 1840*

MS Morgan Library.

Tuesday Morning Octr. 20th. 1840

My Dear Macready.

Many thanks for the offer. If he[†1] attends you here, and lends a hand in waiting at dinner, he will be of great service[†2] I have no doubt.

I have thought of nothing but that Tragedy[†3] — until last night; and since then, I have thought of nothing but Werner.[†4]

Faithfully Yours ever

CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 25 OCTOBER 1840*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire | 14 Russell Place.

Sunday Morning | 25th. Octr. 1840.

My Dear Maclise

I promised to call on the modern Michael Angelo — Patric Park[†5] — to arrange about Sittings, at Two to-day. If you are not painting, will you call there with me? After that, the day being very fine, I should propose a walk 'till dinner.

Any way, I'll call upon you at a quarter before Two. If you're at work, reject me.

Forster being here last night, I sent to you, but you were otherwise and better engaged.

Faithfully Always

C.D.

To EDWARD MOXON, 27 OCTOBER 1840

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue No. 262; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 27 Oct 40.

Will you have the goodness to send me at your convenience, a copy of each of your famous reprints[†1] (except the Shakespeare) and two copies of Beaumont and Fletcher,[†2] as I want to make a present of one of them.[†3]

[†a]I include the Campbell in one volume, of course; Charles Lamb too by the bye, except the letters,[†4] which I have.[†a]

To JOHN OVERS, 27 OCTOBER [1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 27 Oct was Tuesday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday 27th. October

Dear Mr. Overs.

First, with regard to the beautiful little model you have sent me, and which I return herewith. The Lion holds in his right paw, a maltese cross, which is made after this manner — that is to say, so that all the four parts are broad at the base, and go tapering up to the point whence they diverge.[†1] Of the present itself, let me assure you that in feeling I have it — complete and perfect in all its parts — and that come when it will, it will be nothing new, or strange, or long in coming, to me.

✠

Now, with reference to your letter. It was sent on to me at Broadstairs in Kent where I have been for nearly two months; and, as you may suppose, occasioned me a great deal of pain and surprise. I sat down to answer it a great many times, but I really could not bring myself to discuss the question in writing, and postponed it until I should see you. For I thought you would have that confidence in me, and that assurance within yourself that I could not be offended with what was honest and true in intention, that I never once dreamed of your imputing my silence to any feeling of coldness towards you, or any umbrage I had taken on the score of your communication.

But though I should have contemplated this possibility, I cannot, even now, answer your letter, as I would in speaking to you. I do not know and have never known a man on whom riches and honors have had less corrupting influence than the venerable old gentleman[†2] who is the subject of our discussion. I do not know and have never known a more amiable, charitable, or just man in all he says and does. A kinder-hearted or more gentle creature I have never seen. And that he does, every day, a thousand worthy and generous acts, I know.

Now, what have I to put against these results of my own reason, observation, and experience, and the evidence of senses which I will not pretend are peculiarly acute, but which I have been accustomed to train to the pursuit of the Truth, and which I believe are as little to be dazzled by the false glitter of the world or its applause as those of most men? This story which is told you by somebody else, and which must have relation to some time long ago, or it is a monstrous farce. What do I find in it? That this old man, being then a younger one, had connection with some girl who prostituted herself for money, and had it. I have no reason to believe that he used force, strategem, or any other arts to attain his object. She must have been a willing and consenting party. Supposing the story to be true,

I find nothing in it but this. And good God if such sins were to be visited upon all of us[†1] and to hunt us down through life, what man would escape! You speak of your own daughters. Do you know — can you know — that this girl had not gone through the same ordeal a hundred times, and sold her virginity — cheap or dear, according to the buyer's circumstances — over and over again? Consider whether you are not pressing very hard on vices which have been your own no less than his, and whether it would not be honest and right to let virtues which are not everybody's have their fair weight in the other scale.

I cannot write a hundredth part of what I should say, or of what I think, upon this matter. But doing full justice to your honest and upright impulses, I must add that my faith is not shaken in the least, and that I very strongly doubt the motives of your authority.

I received, and read, your notes on the Chartist book,[†2] some of which I will shew to Mr. Carlyle[†3] as I am sure he would be glad to see them. I wish you would bring me one of these Sundays two or three of your songs to choose from.[†4] I shall have an opportunity, I hope, at the turn of the year to publish one with your name.[†5]

I have a Beaumont and Fletcher for you too — a book in which you will find many great things that will please you highly.

Dear Mr. Overs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 28 OCTOBER [1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 28 Oct was Wednesday in 1840; watermark 1840 and handwriting support that year. Address: Wait | John Forster Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning Oct 28

Dear Forster

How are you this morning? And what about the Pills?

Faithfully Always
CD.

To T. W. WHITE,[†1] 29 OCTOBER 1840*

MS Mrs R. H. Dabney.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park London.
Thursday 29th. October 1840.

Dear Sir.

I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your Southern Literary Messenger[†2] which has been obligingly forwarded to me, by your friend Mr. Lyman[†3] of New York.

In the short interval which has elapsed between the receipt of your kind favor and its acknowledgment, I have barely had time to do more than glance at the table of its contents. But I promise myself an early perusal of the work, and am sure (from the glance I have had already) that it will afford me great pleasure and interest.[†4]

I know not how to thank you for your flattering remembrance of me. Such gifts, — and I have had many such from your great country — come upon me like the voices of friends, assuring me of awakened interest and cordiality in the land where most men would desire to be known and approved; and where, it is one of the chief pleasures of my life to learn that my writings have been received with favor.[†5]

Before many years are over, I shall hope, with God's leave, to shake hands with you and many other brothers in the New World. Meantime in heart and spirit believe me theirs and yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. W. White Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 31 OCTOBER [1840]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: 31 Oct was Saturday in 1840; handwriting and "Maclise" in salutation support that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Octr. 31st.

My Dear Maclise.

I don't sit to-day, but do tomorrow, from 12 till 2, between which hours I shall hope to see you in the studio of Patric Park.

Forster dines with us. And I told him that after we had done with sculpture, we would give him a call, in case he should be disposed to take a walk.

He (the Author of the Lives of the Statesmen of the Commonwealth) made divers enquiries of me yesterday touching the Feast of Lanthorns,[†1] which, you may remember, we told him we were going to see. I described the same, but stopped at the street corner, and said no more.

Another visit must be paid to that world of enchantment; between which and all beside ourselves, there is a deep gulf fixed — shadowy, mysterious, and profound.

Yours my friend | In darkness

CHARLES DICKENS

Such a days[†2] work as I have before me! And yet I can jest — but with a breaking heart.[†3]

November

To MISS MARION ELY, 1 NOVEMBER 1840

Mention in Hodgson & Co. catalogue, 20 July 1916; dated 1 Nov 40.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 3 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | 3rd. November/40

My Dear Maclise.

I am dead (in spirit) with yesterday's work. I'll call on you — alone in the carriage — at 2. For Heaven's sake let us range the fields and get some freshness if its[†1] only fresh rain. I want to read you what I did yesterday,[†2] as it shadows out one or two ideas which, if you exert your pencil in my behalf at all, perhaps would suit you as well as any other.[†3] For this purpose I have kept back the MS from the Printer, and will come with it in my pocket.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 NOVEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 149. Date: Subject and similar wording point to same day as last.

Maclise and myself (alone in the carriage) will be with you at two exactly. We propose driving out to Hampstead and walking there, if it don't rain in buckets'-full. I shan't send Bradburys' the MS. of next number till tomorrow, for it contains the shadow of the number after that, and I want to read it to Mac,[†4] as, if he likes the subject, it will furnish him with one, I think. You can't imagine (gravely I write and speak) how exhausted I am to-day with yesterday's labours. I went to bed last night utterly dispirited and done up. All night I have been pursued by the child;[†5] and this morning I am unrefreshed and miserable. I don't know what to do with myself.... I think the close of the story will be great.

To JOHN MAJOR,[†1] 3 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS Mr L. T. Edwards.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday 3rd. November 1840.

Sir.

I assure you that I shall be exceedingly sorry if this reply to your note occasions you any feeling of disappointment; for then I shall have a solitary reason for regretting that we have corresponded.

I cannot give you a letter of recommendation to Messrs. Chapman and Hall — not because I deem your pieces unworthy of it; for, on the contrary, I think them very good — but because I have resolved never again to trouble those gentlemen with any such communications. I need not tell you that the influence I have with them is strictly personal, and that I have no right to dictate to or advise them in the conduct of their business. Now, if I had not prescribed this rule to myself, I should be its manager, and not they, for I believe there is not one man out of a dozen who has a proposal to make to them, who does not first write to me (as you have done) and urge me to back it.

Let me tell you frankly, for your consolation, that in submitting your proposals to them, you will stand on precisely as good a footing of your own, as if you had the strongest and most favorable introduction from me. In either case they would publish your book if they thought it would repay them, and reject it if they thought it would not. It will be a comfort to you to know that before I determined on my present system of non-interference, I did recommend several books to them, and (acting on this principle) they rejected them every one. And the last case, I perfectly remember, was one which I urged on behalf of one of our first authoresses, who would have appeared as "editing" the work.†2

If you give me credit for a sincere desire to assist you if I had the power, you will only do justice to

Sir | Yours very truly
CHARLES DICKENS

John Major Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, [6 NOVEMBER 1840]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: clearly the Friday between 3 Nov and the 12th, when Maclise saw the MS of the No. he was to illustrate (see To Forster, 12 Nov).

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Morning

My Dear Maclise

Will you mind doing me a little design, embodying the bells above and the well below, and the old sexton and the child?†1 If you will do so, I'll tell them to send you a block forthwith.

I am obliged to ask you 'yes' or 'no' today, because time gets precious and if you don't, somebody else must. Topping (the gentle bearer) is going on to the Adelphi, and will call for an answer as he returns.

Ever Yours
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?6 NOVEMBER 1840]*

MS Private. Date: probably same day as last — Maclise having sent an answer by hand immediately. CD was at the Adelphi all day on Sat 7 Nov (To Mitton, 9 Nov).

Dear Mac.

A Million thanks. I have sent directions to C and H. Remember that your illustration will come into the No. after the one of which you'll have the proof. Therefore if you like to put any more people in, young or old, do so at your own discretion, and I'll take care to account for 'em.[†2] When you have done it, will you let me have it, that I may take care the text and it agree?[†3]

Will you put on some shelf or nook, an old broken hour glass?[†4]

Always Faithfully

CD

I am obliged to go down to the Adelphi tomorrow morning, and will call on you between 2 & 4.

To [PATRIC PARK], 6 NOVEMBER 1840*

Photograph, Mr Leigh B. Block. Address: almost certainly to Patric Park, to whom CD was at this time sitting (see To Maclise, 25 and 31 Oct).

Devonshire Terrace | Friday 6th. November 1840

Dear Sir

Don't think me a false, inconstant, perjured sitter — pray. I was detained yesterday on my way to you by urgent business, and have now to tug at the oar and work my little galley, double tides. I am afraid I shall not be able to sit before next Tuesday; but I will write to you again.

Have faith in me, — and believe me always

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, [6 NOVEMBER 1840]

Mention in next.

To W. C. MACREADY, [6 NOVEMBER 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the Friday before Mon 9 Nov, first night of Old Curiosity Shop at the Adelphi.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Evening

My Dear Macready.

I have been detained this week by some new arrangements with Chapman and Hall,[†1] and shall have to[†2] break tomorrow (which I had set aside for ten hours work) by going down to Yates and preventing his making a greater atrocity than can be helped of my poor Curiosity Shop, which is "done" there[†3] on Monday Night.[†4]

At the last minute — I had not the resolution to breathe it to myself before — I am obliged to decide not to go tonight. You know how hard this is upon me as we were to have gone together — and I have a high regard for Elliotson[†1] — but it is really no go in every sense of the word.

I send the carriage to take you there, and Topping is charged with a letter to convey instead of my portly person. I also send you herein a cheque[†2] for the amount I am in your debt, with a thousand thanks.

The wine exhausts the language in its approving adjectives.

Ever Yours

CD.

I have crossed the cheque.

To THOMAS MITTON, 9 NOVEMBER [1840]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: 9 Nov was Monday in 1840. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday 9th. Novr.

My Dear Mitton

So far — all right.

I am not going to the Adelphi tonight[†3] — I haven't the heart. Kate goes, and Fred takes her. I was at the Theatre all day on Saturday and made a great many improvements — especially in furnishing Bedford[†4] with divers pieces of bye-play, in the invention of which, he seemed most woefully at sea. Yates will be good. The thing may be better than I expect, but I have no faith in it at all.[†5]

Forster's appointment, if I remember right, stands for 11. I shall not see him, I think, today.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 NOVEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 149. Date: 12 Nov according to Forster.

I will bring the MS and, for Mac's information if needful, the number before it.[†1] I have only this moment put the finishing touch to it. The difficulty has been tremendous — the anguish unspeakable. I didn't say six. Therefore dine at half-past five like a Christian. I shall bring Mac at that hour.

To MRS MACREADY,[†2] [13 NOVEMBER 1840]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Handwriting suggests late 1840. It seems probable that Macready regularly received Master Humphrey on the day before publication: see four instances recorded in Diaries (II, 58, 89, 90, 94) and CD's words "regular course" in letter of 22 Jan 41. On Fri 13 Nov Macready read not only No. 33, published 14 Nov, but No. 34 as well (II, 94) — probably having received it through this letter to his wife. For CD's heavy cold, see next.

My Dear Mrs. Macready.

That madman — the Broadstairs bather whose grampus sounds you may remember[†3] — turned up yesterday to the astonishment and horror of this peaceful household, and invited himself to dine here next Sunday. Him I would put off, to enjoy such pleasure as your note offers me, but my sister[†4]

(being alone just now) usually dines with us on that day, and moreover my brother[†1] whom I encourage so to do, as he is at an age when he might do worse. Now is there not one other day, early in next week, when we could meet for this delightful purpose? Do cast about in your mind for a snug, happy, undisposed-of evening, and say it shall be then. I am going out on no day but Thursday, and shall have no peace of mind until you write again. Therefore, pray relieve me soon from a despondency which is already stealing over my spirits, and unfitting me for Clock work.

Apropos of that — I send you next week's Number to look at, thinking that it may read none the worse for being exclusive. When the family have done with it, perhaps you'll let me have it back.

Our best loves at home. I don't know what word to use when I send remembrances to Macready, and have thoughts of coining one which shall be strong enough.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have got such a cold! I have been crying all day, and upon my word I believe that my nose is an inch shorter than it was last Tuesday, from constant friction.

To [PATRIC PARK], 14 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS Miss Elena Klasky. Address: see To [Patric Park], 6 Nov, hn.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Novr. 14th. 1840

My Dear Sir

I am afraid I cannot manage to sit to you before Tuesday at 12. But on that day, and on Wednesday, I will do so, with pleasure. It happens most unfortunately that I have been engaged in some extensive business arrangements[†2] during the last fortnight, which have taken up so much of these short days that after a couple of hours writing in the morning, and then attending to them, it has been night again. In addition to these drawbacks I have had, and have still, a deplorable cold which almost prevents me from working.

I owe you an apology for this delay but I will make none, because I am sure you are sure that if I could have found the time to continue our pleasant sittings, I would most gladly have done so.

I am always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 17 NOVEMBER [1840]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: 17 Nov was Tuesday in 1840; reference to The Pic Nic Papers supports that year.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Seventeenth November

My Dear George.

As I know you are sometimes (!) engaged,[†1] and fear your servant may check me at your street door, unless previously admonished from Head Quarters, I send this threatening letter to let you know that I mean to call on you tomorrow at 3 o'Clock about Mrs. Macrone's book,[†2] which is ripe and ready. Poor thing, she needs its help, sadly.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To T. J. SERLE,[†3] 17 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Tuesday 17th. November 1840.

My Dear Sir.

I am so heartily favorable to all such Institutions as that to which your note refers,[†4] that I should have cheerfully complied with your request, had it been urged by one with whom it afforded me no pleasure to communicate. As it is, if I had a dozen names you should be welcome to them all.

Moreover, I shall hold myself in a manner bound to attend the dinner,[†5] and have made a memorandum of the day — when I hope nothing will occur to prevent me from joining the party.

The gentleman you mention, is not one of the Cheerybles I am happy to say — happy, because it is pleasant to think that there are more than two in the family, and that duplicates are wandering about the world in divers places.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas James Serle Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 NOVEMBER 1840

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighteenth Novr. 1840.

My Dear Mitton

I shall be at home — tomorrow till six — Friday till 2 or 3, and in the evening; and Saturday all day.

Let me give you a hint. Make the first article of your Treaty, the period Smithson's name is to remain in the business. If you don't carry that point well, it would be madness to purchase it.[†1] And upon that point — by far the most important of all — I see some reason to expect a little trimming on the other side.

Don't forget this. You will find sooner or later that it is important.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 20 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954; fragment (aa)
MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Friday November twentieth Eighteen forty

My Dear Mac

I have been writing all day, and mean to take a great, London, backslums kind of walk tonight, seeking adventures in knight errant style. Will you come with me? And [a]as a preparation, will you dine with us at a quarter before 5? — Leg of mutton stuffed with oysters.

Reply 'Yes'.

Always & Ever
CD[a]

To JOHN CLOSE,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1840

MS Abbot Hall Art Gallery, Kendal.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty third November 1840.

Sir.

I hasten to say that the former communication to which you refer in your letter dated the twentieth and received today, has not reached me. — I have been out of town, and have little doubt that it is lying at my publisher's.

I cannot sufficiently thank you for the obliging and courteous terms in which you have addressed me, but I can assure you that it will give me great pleasure and satisfaction to receive a copy of your book,[†2] and that I shall esteem it highly.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 24 NOVEMBER 1840

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | November twenty four | 1840.

Dear Sirs

I think the inclosed[†3] is the sort of thing. — I have not shewn it to anybody. — If you have anything to suggest, let me know straightway.

I am inundated with imploring letters recommending poor little Nell to mercy. — Six yesterday, and four today (it's not 12 o'Clock yet) already!

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman & Hall

To JOHN FORSTER, [?NOVEMBER 1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting, supported by white paper, suggests Nov 40 to Feb 41; perhaps Nov 40 since later Catherine might have been too near child-birth for such an expedition. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

Thompson, his two sisters,[†4] Mrs. Burnett, and we, are away to Windsor this morning, purposing to take a Dinner there, which we shall call a lunch, and to return by the Train at 5 o'Clock or thereabouts. Mac has suddenly taken it into his head to join the party, though I didn't ask either of you, lest you should think it a bore.

I wish to God you'd come down after us by the first train after you [have][†1] this (they start every hour) and go straight to the White Hart, where, if we should not be at the moment, I'll leave full word of our whereabout.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To [R. S. HORRELL],[†2] 25 NOVEMBER 1840

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty fifth November 1840.

Sir.

I have read the little poems you sent me (and which I now return), and in compliance with your request, have to give you my opinion of them. I am by no means satisfied, nor do I wish you to be, that my conclusions are infallible; and I scarcely expect, and certainly do not desire, that you should attach any weight to them, whatever.

First, as the more grateful task, let me say what I have to say of praise. You are a very young man you tell me, with other occupations to employ your time; and you can only cultivate these thoughts and aspirations by stealth. A love of the good and beautiful, and a desire to illustrate it in one so circumstanced is always a thing to be commended — to be very highly commended. It should increase your own happiness whether it adds to the happiness and entertainment of mankind or no, and from pursuits so worthy and humanizing, I would not turn you aside by one discouraging word. The pursuit of excellence in any path which has the light of Truth upon it, is, in the abstract, a noble employment, and like the search for the Philosopher's Stone will reward you with a hundred incidental discoveries though you fall short of the one great object of your desire.

Beyond this, I think that you have many good thoughts — occasionally a power of expressing them, very simply and well — a love of nature and all creation — and, of course, (for these are its necessary companions) deep feeling and strong sympathy.

On the other hand, you have very much to learn. Your versification is often harsh and irregular, your conceits strained and unnatural, your images fraught with more sound than sense. The first fault is one which only time and reading can remove; a few instances of the other two, I have marked as they have struck me in the perusal. To spell a tiger from all thoughts of harm — to clasp blood springs with tendril fingers (which appears difficult, to say the least) — to make the sun unfurl his bannered robe — to engrave words with fire — to describe the birds as couching with gasping pants of bliss — to tear a man to pieces with links — to fold love's banner o'er a lady's brow — are so near being absurdities that I hardly know what else to call them. You may find, I know, startling and monstrous conceits in the writings of our greatest Poets; but you must remember that they were great, not because of these blots, but in despite of them, having for every one a crowd of beautiful and grand thoughts which bore down all before them. Never imitate the eccentricities of genius, but toil after it in its truer flights. They are not so easy to follow, but they lead to higher regions.

You have too much about faëry land, and faëry things — by far too much mention of nerves and heart strings — more agonies of despondency than suit my taste — mysterious promptings too in your own breast which are much better there, than anywhere else. It is not the province of a Poet to harp upon his own discontents, or to teach other people that they ought to be discontented. Leave Byron to his gloomy greatness, and do you

> Find tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
> Sermons in stones, and good in everything.[†1]

The young painter's last dream pleased me very much in its opening; the change of time and coming on of morning are very beautifully described, and the aspect of his room and the familiar things about it I really think highly of. But surely in the close of this piece you have quite perverted its proper object and intention. To make that face his comfort and trust — to fill him with the assurance of meeting it one day in Heaven — to make him dying, attended, as it were, by an angel of his own creation — to inspire him with gentle visions of the reality sitting by his bedside and shedding a light even on the dark path of Death — and so to let him gently pass away, whispering of it and seeking the hand to clasp in his — would be to complete a very affecting and moving picture. But, to have him struggling with Death in all its horrors, yelling about foul fiends and bats' wings, with starting eyes and rattles in his throat, is a ghastly, sickening, hideous end, with no beauty, no moral, nothing in it but a repulsive and most painful idea. If he had been the hero of an epic in seventy books, and had out-Lucifered Lucifer in every line of them, you could scarcely have punished him at last in a more revolting manner. I do hope that you will write this piece again with some such alteration. If you ever do so, I shall be glad to see it.

"Withered Leaves" opens, I think, very prettily. But it is not so well sustained, and treads rather closely at last (in the idea; not in the manner of expressing it) upon a song of Mr. Lover's, founded on an Irish Superstition. It is called, if I remember right, the Four Leaved Shamrock.[†1] The Ode to the Moon, very good. These are the only data I have, by which to form an opinion of your powers.

The advice I have to give you, is given in a very few words. I don't think you would ever find a publisher for a volume of such compositions unless at your own expence; and if you could, and have anything in you, the time would very soon come, when you would most heartily regret the having rushed into print. There are a great many people who write as well — many who write better. If you are to pass them, or are to take any place in the procession of Fame, you will do so none the later for keeping these effusions in your desk. At the same time, I see no objection to your sending some piece of moderate length — the painter for instance, but not in its present form — to such a Magazine as Blackwood's; and no improbability — no unusual improbability I mean — in the way of its acceptance and insertion. If you do this, give yourself the advantage of plain penmanship and a sheet of paper large enough to hold the lines, or it will never be read. And don't write to the Editor to tell him who you are or what you are, for he will care very little about that, and the public will care less.

It is impossible for me to say on such means as you have given me, whether I think you ever will be a great man, or whether you have God's gifts to become one. Some men would consider it their bounden duty to warn you off the dangerous ground of Poetry, but that I will not do, — firstly because I know you would still trespass there as boldly as ever, and secondly because for aught I know the land may be yours by right. Therefore, I make such remarks upon your writings as occur to me in reading them, and point out to you the course you would do best to take — the course I took myself when I was about one and twenty — and the course most writers have adopted when unknown and untried.

It is impossible that being unknown and untried, I could introduce you to a publisher with any beneficial result. I could not say that I thought your book would pay (that would be his first question); I could not even tell him that it was likely to attract public attention. I know but a dozen leaves of it, and if I said of those leaves to him, what I have said to you, he would be perfectly satisfied; and with the utmost deference and respect, and with the sincerest possible thanks, would decline the honor I proposed to confer upon him, and express the deepest gratitude for the preference.

You wish to know whether you do right in sacrificing so much time to what may fail at last. If you do so at the cost of any bitterness of heart, or any disgust with the employment in which you are engaged, you certainly do wrong. If you have strength of mind to do your duty cheerfully, and to make these toils a relaxation and solace of which nobody can deprive you, you do right. This is a question which none but yourself can determine. It is settled easily. When you have finished something carefully and to please yourself, make the trial I have suggested. If it fail in one quarter, try it again in another. If it fail in half a dozen, and each failure bring with it vexation and disappointment, lock up your papers, burn your pen, and thank Heaven you are not obliged to live by it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

M[r. S.] Har[ford][†1]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 25 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954).

Devonshire Terrace.
Wednesday Night | November Twenty five 1840.

My Dear Maclise

It seems like an impertinence to put such a question to such a man as you, but have you thought in the various sleeping faces, of dreaming expressions — guards dreaming of fighting & roystering — ladies of love — and chamber women of flirting? It occurred to me last night, thinking of you, that there was a great field in this for such an imagination as yours, especially as the idea could be impressed upon the most leaden-headed of visitors by the catalogue description. Such a thing as a sleeping child among 'em, in the happiest repose, would point the notion — shewing how even sleep in after life becomes "grown up" and of the world. — Beautiful! Very beautiful![†2]

So charming indeed, that I blush to sully such poetry with the prose announcement that we dine at half past four on Saturday, before the comedy,[†3] but as we can't live on poetry alone (as the deaths of several spare authors have unhappily demonstrated) perhaps you'll forgive me.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To JOHN OVERS, 26 NOVEMBER 1840

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | 26th. November 1840.

Dear Mr. Overs.

Any time on Sunday week the Sixth of December, between eleven and half past one, I shall be glad to see you.

I have gone through your two profiles, and marked them in pencil here and there. The Postilion[†1] is much the better of the Two. I am sorry to say that I have not had time to go again through that weightier story, and fear I must reserve myself for the piece you will bring with you — which I am curious to see.

I am glad you are hearty with Beaumont and Fletcher — They are very good company. It will take you a long time to get through the two volumes, which are of a huge thickness and closely printed. Don't write about them, for I fancy it rather spoils the pleasure.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To W. C. MACREADY, [26 NOVEMBER 1840]

Mention in Macready, Diaries, II, 100. Date: On 26 Nov 40 Macready recorded: "Received a dear and affectionate note from Dickens, which comforted me as much as I can be comforted" (on the death of his daughter Joan).[†2]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 27 NOVEMBER [1840]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: two days after the death of Macready's daughter Joan.

Devonshire Terrace
Friday Morning Twenty Seventh Novr.

My Dear Mac

Perhaps you haven't heard that poor Macreadys have suddenly lost little Joan — the night before last, it was — and that little Henry is almost despaired of, also.

It is impossible, I am sure, that any people can more truly sympathize with the affliction of others, than we do for the sorrows of those to whom we are so strongly and ardently attached — and so I know you will say and feel. But I vow to God that if you had seen Forster last night, you would have supposed our Dear Friend was dead himself — in such an amazing display of grief did he indulge, and into such a very gloomy gulf was he sunk up to the chin.[†1]

I wrote to Macready yesterday, but have not seen him of course. Poor fellow. He is a man of very strong affections, and I fear feels this misfortune keenly. If the second Child die, it will be a heavy blow indeed.[†2]

We dine today at 5 or a quarter before, and I think Forster will take a little sustenance at that time. Will you come in, if you are not going anywhere? Burn this letter, for I generally see my autographs for six months past, lying about your room.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 28 NOVEMBER [1840]

Seen in Sotheby's, Oct 1967; dated 28 Nov — unmistakably 1840 on handwriting.

Saying that he is bound to work that night,[†3] and suggesting a meeting on the following Monday.

To CHARLES MOLLOY, 28 NOVEMBER [1840]

Extract in P. J. Dobell & Son catalogue No. 4 (1912); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, November Twenty-eighth — clearly 1840, the year of the failure of Wright's Bank (see fn).

I hope you have not been, or will not be, a great sufferer by Wright's failure.[†4] Remembering you banked there, I feared you might be a loser, when I heard they had stopped payment.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 30 NOVEMBER 1840

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night Thirtieth Novr. | 1840.

Dear Sirs

I have spoken to two or three friends — judges in such matters — about the Barnaby Notice; and they are all of opinion that in the height and stir of the present story, Saturday week would be too soon.

Therefore, please let it stand over, until we have had time to discuss and consider it further.[†1]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE NOVEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 148. Date: given by Forster as written "just before" CD's return from Broadstairs in second week of Oct. But since on 12 Nov No. 35 was only in MS, Nos 36 and 37 could not both have been written before the last week in Nov; and proofs of No. 37 would have been received a few days later.

Tell me what you think of 36 and 37?[†2] The way is clear for Kit now, and for a great effort at the last with the Marchioness.[†3]

December

To JOHN FORSTER, 3 DECEMBER [1840]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: the day after CD's speech of 2 Dec (see fn); handwriting supports 1840. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Thursday | Third Decr.

My Dear Forster.

I believe you[†4] — as to my own brilliancy.[†5] Serle, subdued.[†6] Speeches, excellent. I wish you had been there,[†1] for you can form no idea of what these bodies are. I never saw such a good meeting, or a thing so well and handsomely done.

If you come up today, either come before half past 2 and go with me to Willesden and thereabouts — or at half past 4 to dinner. But not in the evening because I am only just up, and must be then, at work.

Faithfully Always

CD.

[†a]A brilliant morning for a country walk.[†a]

To T. P. GRINSTED, 7 DECEMBER 1840*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: T. P. Grinsted Esquire | 3 Glo'ster Terrace | Brighton.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London
Seventh December 1840.

Sir.

I am cordially obliged to you for the interesting intelligence you have been kind enough to send me. A day or two after I received your letter, I had, from some other hand, a Port Nicholas Mens paper[†2] containing an advertisement of the Club Meetings.[†3] It was very curious to see the old familiar name in its unusual-looking columns.

I hope when you write to your friend, you will convey to him (and through him, to his friends) an assurance of the great gratification I have derived from the circumstance of their meeting together for social purposes, under this name. To be associated with their pleasant recollections of home in their hours of relaxation, is to me a most proud and happy distinction. I really cannot tell you how very much it has interested and pleased me.

I hope the Brighton club still flourishes nobly. And again thanking you for your communication and good wishes, which I fully reciprocate, I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. P. Grinsted Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 7 DECEMBER 1840

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Seventh December 1840.

My Dear Cruikshank.

I'll call upon you next Wednesday about 2.[†1]

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To "JAMES FLEMING",[†2] 8 DECEMBER 1840*

MS Clark Memorial Library, University of California.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Eighth December 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens cannot afford any assistance to the writer of the Letter signed "James Fleming", which reached him last night. The case stated is not one, in which he would feel justified in giving pecuniary assistance; to the exclusion of some living, and unhappy object.[†3]

To SIR EDWARD LYTTON BULWER, 12 DECEMBER 1840

MS Lytton Papers.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Twelfth December 1840.

Dear Sir Edward.

Let me thank you for the copy of your comedy[†1] received this morning.

I told Macready when he read it to me a few weeks since, that I could not call to mind any play since the Good Natured Man,[†2] so full of real, distinct, genuine character; and now that I am better acquainted with it, I am only the more strongly confirmed in this honest opinion.[†3]

You may suppose that "I was there to see",[†4] last Tuesday; — I most heartily and cordially congratulate you on its brilliant reception and success, which I hope will encourage you to other efforts in the same Path.[†5] I feel assured that you will tread it alone.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 13 DECEMBER 1840

Extracts in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1914 (aa), and Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Feb 1941 (bb); MS 2 pp.; dated [b]"Devonshire Terrace, Twelfth December, 1840 (I mean the Thirteenth)"[b]; salutation "My dear George".

[a]Here is that dinner of ours still to come off, and I gasping with anxiety to speak to you about divers closing subjects for poor Nell.[a]

[b]I am going out Monday Evening but at no early hour — what do you say to dining with me at the Parthenon on that day at half 5?[b] †1 [a]I cannot make Mac or Forster of the party, because the laws of the Medes and Parthenons†2 forbid a member to indulge in more than one friend.[a]

To LORD ASHLEY,†3 [13 or 14 DECEMBER 1840]

Mention in next.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH,†4 15 DECEMBER 1840

MS Mrs Robert Nuttall.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Fifteenth December 1840.

My Dear Sir.

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind note and inclosure of to day. I had never seen the Sanatorium pamphlet,†5 and have been greatly pleased with it. The reasons for such an Institution,†1 and the advantages likely to result from it, could not have been more forcibly or eloquently put. I have read it twice with extreme satisfaction.

You have given me hardly less pleasure by sending me the Instructions of the Childrens'†2 Employment Commission,†3 which seem to me to have been devised in a most worthy spirit, and to comprehend every point on which humanity and forethought could have desired to lay stress. The little book reaches me very opportunely; for Lord Ashley sent me his speech†4 on moving the Commission, only the day before yesterday, and I could not forbear, in writing to him in acknowledgement of its receipt, cursing the present system and its fatal effects in keeping down thousands upon thousands of God's images, with all my heart and soul.†5

It must be a great comfort and happiness to you to be instrumental in bringing about so much good.†6 I am proud to be remembered by one who is pursuing such ends, and heartily hope that we shall know each other better.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 15 DECEMBER 1840

Text in MDGH, III, 16, checked from MS Sotheby's, 15 Dec 1964. Address: T. J. Thompson Esquire | Pall Mall.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Fifteenth December | 1840.

My Dear Thompson.

I have received a most flattering message from the Head Turnkey of the Jail this morning, intimating that "there warn't a genelman in all London as he'd be gladder to shew his babies to, than Muster Dickens. And let him come wenever he would to that shop, he wos welcome". But as the Governor[†1] (who is a very nice fellow, and a gentleman) is not at home this morning, and furthermore as the morning itself has rather gone out of town in respect of its poetical allurements, I think we had best postpone our visit for a day or two. I will write to you again on this head, as soon as I have finished my No.[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 DECEMBER 1840*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Free | Miss Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth December 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Coutts, and has great pleasure in accepting her kind Invitation for Thursday the Seventeenth.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16 or 18 DECEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, vii, 149-50. Date: 16 Dec according to Forster. But see hn to next.

"If you make believe very much it's quite nice; but if you don't, you know, it seems as if it would bear a little more seasoning, certainly."[†3] I think that's better. Flavour is a common word in cookery, and among cooks, and so I used it. The part you cut out in the other number, which was sent me this morning, I had put in with a view to Quilp's last appearance on any stage, which is casting its shadow upon my mind;[†1] but it will come well enough without such a preparation, so I made no change. I mean to shirk Sir Robert Inglis,[†2] and work to-night. I have been solemnly revolving the general story all this morning.[†3] The forty-fifth number will certainly [be the] close.[†4] Perhaps this forty-first[†5] which I am now at work on, had better contain the announcement of Barnaby?[†6] I am glad you like Dick and the Marchioness in that sixty-fourth chapter — I thought you would.

To SIR ROBERT INGLIS, [?16 or 18] DECEMBER 1840

Mention in N, I, 283. Date: given in N as 18 Dec, but possibly incorrectly: if a note of excuse for shirking the engagement with Inglis mentioned in last, presumably written the same day. Either Forster's or N's dating is to be doubted.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?17 DECEMBER 1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting suggests 1840; possibly refers to the invitation for 17 Dec which CD had accepted on the 15th.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday 5 O'Clock.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Coutts, and exceedingly regrets that a sudden necessity for his going a few miles from town on business, prevents his having the honor of dining with her to-day. But Mr. Dickens hopes to have the pleasure of paying his respects to Miss Coutts in the course of the Evening, if he can by any means return to town in time.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 DECEMBER [1840]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 18 Dec was Friday in 1840; handwriting supports that year. Address: Miss Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Eighteenth December

Dear Miss Coutts.

I cannot thank you sufficiently for your great kindness, and am most happy to avail myself of it.

I have kept the order for this Evening,[†1] and beg to return you the other.

I beg my compliments to Miss Meredith,[†2] and assure you that I am always with great sincerity

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To J. P. HARLEY, 18 DECEMBER [1840]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 18 Dec was Friday in 1840; handwriting supports that year. Address: J. P. Harley Esquire | Upper Gower Street.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening Decr. 18th.

My Dear Harley.

Come and dine here on the last day of this good old year, at 6 sharp. Make them put up something you don't play in, or if they won't mind you, come when you have played.[†1] We have no serious party — only George Cruikshank, Quin, and one or two more who are friends of all of us — and want to see the year out with some charades and other frolics. I won't tell you simply that you could come in dirty boots, but that stockings alone would be considered court dress.

Faithfully Always

BOZ.

J. P. Harley Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?18 DECEMBER 1840]

Extract in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 8 (1902); MS 1 p. Date: probably, like letters to Ainsworth and Harley, an invitation for 31 Dec 40.

Will you dine with us on the last day of the old year — just to see it jollily out.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 18 DECEMBER 1840

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 2 June 1932; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Dec 40. Address (envelope, MS Private): William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire | Kensal Lodge | Harrow Road. PM 19 Dec 40.

Behold your Sketch.[†2] I want to make you promise to dine here on the last day of the old year at 6 exactly — quite at home and unceremoniously to see it out with forfeits and such like exercises. So make the promise — kiss the children, and remember me to the ladies (heartily).[†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 DECEMBER 1840

Text from John Waller catalogue No. 135 (1883); dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Dec 40.

Dear Sir,

I shall certainly do myself the pleasure of seeing you next Wednesday, and am always, faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 21 DECEMBER [1840]

Text from MDGH, I, 33. Date: 1840, since CD's instructions for Old Curiosity Shop, Ch. 70 (No. 43).

Devonshire Terrace, December 21st.

My dear George,

Kit, the single gentleman, and Mr. Garland go down to the place where the child is, and arrive there at night. There has been a fall of snow. Kit, leaving them behind, runs to the old house,[†1] and, with a lanthorn in one hand and the bird in its cage in the other, stops for a moment at a little distance with a natural hesitation before he goes up to make his presence known. In a window — supposed to be that of the child's little room — a light is burning, and in that room the child (unknown, of course, to her visitors, who are full of hope) lies dead.[†2]

If you have any difficulty about Kit, never mind about putting him in.

†[a]The two others to-morrow.†[a]

Faithfully always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?21 DECEMBER 1840]

Extracts in F, II, viii, 162. Date: According to Forster, CD was here describing the "motive, as well as the principle that guided him" in his "last successful labour of the year ... the reconciliation of two friends". The friends were no doubt Forster himself and Ainsworth;†3 and this letter probably told Forster of Ainsworth's acceptance of the invitation of 18 Dec. The letter's opening words must refer to CD's thoughts about Nell's coming death, while writing instructions to Cattermole: see last.

In the midst of this child's death, I, over whom something of the bitterness of death has passed, not lightly perhaps, was reminded of many old kindnesses, and was sorry in my heart that men who really liked each other should waste life at arm's length.

I have laid it down as a rule in my judgment of men, to observe narrowly whether some (of whom one is disposed to think badly) don't carry all their faults upon the surface, and others (of whom one is disposed to think well) don't carry many more beneath it. I have long ago made sure that our friend is in the first class; and when I know all the foibles a man has, with little trouble in the discovery, I begin to think he is worth liking.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 DECEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, viii, 162. Date: the day following last according to Forster, who also calls it CD's "latest letter of the year" — which it was almost certainly not.†1 CD was probably writing about plans for Christmas Day.†2

The letter closed with the hope that he and Forster might enjoy together fifty more Christmases, at least, in this world, and eternal summers in another.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?22 DECEMBER 1840]

MS Mr Roger W. Barrett. Date: not dated by CD; but he probably sent Cattermole the two subjects on 22 Dec (the date supplied by MDGH and copied in N), as promised on 21 Dec.

Dr. George

The child lying dead in the little sleeping room which is behind the oaken screen. It is winter time, so there are no flowers; but upon her breast, and pillow, and about her bed, there may be slips of holly, and berries, and such free green things. — Window overgrown with ivy — . The little boy who had that talk with her about angels, may be by the bedside, if you like it so, but I think it will be quieter and more peaceful if she is quite alone. I want it to express the most beautiful repose and tranquillity, and to have something of a happy look, if death can.[†1]

2nd.

The child has been buried inside the church, and the old man who cannot be made to understand that she is dead, repairs to the grave every day, and sits there all day long, waiting for her arrival, to begin another journey. His staff and knapsack, her little bonnet and basket, &c lie beside him.[†2] "She'll come tomorrow" he says when it gets dark, and goes sorrowfully home. I think an hour-glass running out, would help the notion.[†3] — Perhaps her little things upon his knee, or in his hands —

———————

I am breaking my heart over this story, and cannot bear to finish it.

Love to Missis
Ever & always heartily
CD

To MRS CHARLES SMITHSON, 23 DECEMBER 1840

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1901.

To THOMAS MITTON, 24 DECEMBER 1840*

MS University of Texas.

Christmas Eve 1840.

My Dear Mitton

Father[†4] tells me he saw you today — I thought you told me you were going out of town. — The Smithsons are coming to play at charades tonight.[†1] If you are really not gone, for God's sake come. I can't tell you how surprised and vexed I am to think I mistook you — as I suppose I must have done.

I have sent a copy of this to New Inn.[†2]

Always faithfully
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 26 DECEMBER 1840*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Henry Austin Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | December Twenty Sixth 1840.

Dear Henry.

John Forster Esqre. 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Daniel Maclise Esqre. 14 Russell Place Fitzroy Square.

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS][†3]

Henry Austin Esquire

To BASIL HALL,[†4] 28 DECEMBER 1840

Extracts in Retz & Storm catalogue No. 8 (aa) and N, I, 284 (bb); dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, Twenty-Eighth December 1840.

[a]Thanking Hall for a copy of Patchwork.[†5] I have been pursuing the fortunes of the child in whom you take so much interest, ever since its receipt, and have only had time to cut it, to read the preface, and to devour (very gluttonously) the paper called the Gallows and the Guillotine,[†1] which struck me very much indeed. It is a great piece of description.[†2] He then gives his views on public executions.[a]

[b]What can I say to you in acknowledgement of your high commendation of the tale I am drawing to a close — with no common regret and pain I do assure you — for I am loath to finish it — and of the cheering encouragement you give me. It would be idle to tell you that such expressions[†3] of interest from thinking and gifted men are a source of the purest happiness and delight. You know that, I am sure, and I cannot thank you enough for your generous applause.[b]

[a]CD closes with the hope that Hall will accept, with his compliments, copies of Master Humphrey as the parts are issued.[a]

To JOHN FORSTER, 28 DECEMBER [1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: clearly 1840. CD's Account-book (MS Messrs Coutts) shows £200 credited on 29 Dec 40, £300 on 11 Jan 41, and the monthly £200 reduced to £150 from Jan onwards. Address: John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Parthenon. | Tuesday twenty eighth December

My Dear Forster.

Knowing that you are out by this time, I write to you instead of calling again.

After I saw you to day and had been into the city, I called at Chapman and Hall's. I saw the latter, who told me that he had paid into Coutts's £200. Now, the two should be a five — that is, £200 for the month,[†1] and £300 which was (you recollect?) to be advanced at this time, and deducted in monthly fifties.

As you were kind enough to negociate this matter with them,[†2] and as I have never interchanged a syllable with them about it, I wish you would be so good as to send for Mr. Hall tomorrow morning, and get this mistake corrected. I need not say that it is rather a serious one at this time of year,[†3] and that the sooner it is set right, the better.

I would have spared you this trouble, but as I am not in a condition to remind them of what passed, (not having heard it) I think it but right and necessary to leave the matter with you.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 30 DECEMBER [1840]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: undoubtedly 1840, on handwriting.

Devonshire Terrace | December Thirtieth

My Dear Forster.

I think there is plenty inserted to fill the inclosed. I question, however, whether it will be necessary now to strike anything out. I hope you may think it the better for the alterations.[†4]

It will be necessary to have a revise.[†5]

What about dining today?

Faithfully Ever
CD

To JOHN OVERS, 30 DECEMBER 1840

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday 30th. December | 1840.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I could not find time to read your paper before to-day. Having done so, I think it is a good magazine piece — I am speaking, mind, as if I knew nothing of the author, or the circumstances under which it was written — and quite equal to the general run of such things. If you will make the little corrections I have marked, and keep it by you until you have finished the other, I will think in the mean time where you will do best to try it.

I object on principle to making Wat such a thorough-paced villain, because a rebel on such grounds has a certain claim to one's sympathy, and I feel that if I had lived in his time, I should have been very likely to have knocked out the Collector's brains myself, — or at all events to have looked upon the man who did so, as a demi-God. Fathers may naturally object to having gross indecencies practised upon their daughters even by government servants; and bystanders can scarcely shew their manhood better than by resenting such things when they are done before their eyes.†1

Therefore, if Wat Tyler and his followers when their passions were once let loose, had burnt down the City and got drunk with blood, I should still entertain some respect for their memory.

Apart from this, I have been greatly pleased with the performance, and I speak most seriously when I say that in the way of improvement, you have done wonders.†1

Beware of writing things for the eyes of everybody, which you would feel the smallest delicacy in saying anywhere. Mrs. Scutfidge†2 may have stripped in public — I have no doubt she did — but I should be sorry to have to tell young ladies so in the nineteenth Century, for all that.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS F[?ILLONNEAU], [WINTER 1840-1]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [WINTER 1840-1]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Signature (on outside) and handwriting suggest Winter 1840-1. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

Yes — I wrote to that effect to the beautiful Mrs. F,†3 whose eyelashes are in my memory.

Would you know this hand? Oh Evins how misty I am!

Always Faithfully
CD

Come tonight†4

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [1840]

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, VI (1921-2); MS 1 p.; from Devonshire Terrace, 1840.

Referring to the purchase of some port.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [1840]*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | Sunday Morning, 1840.

Dear Sir,

I had retained your tale with the view of reading it next week, when I should have had sufficient leisure for the purpose — inferring from the tone of the letter which did not miscarry, that you still wished me to peruse it.

In the propriety and truth of all that you state in that letter with equal manliness and modesty, I entirely concur. I wish you saw your way to the attainment of your moderate wishes, and assure you sincerely that if I can at any time help you towards that end, you may command such aid as I can render you.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

I did not quite understand whether you wished to see me this morning, and have therefore left your parcel out, deeming it very probable that you might not have any such desire. If you have, I shall be very happy to afford you an interview at half past one o'clock on any Sunday you may name.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?1840]

Mention in American Art Association and Anderson Galleries catalogue, Jan 1935; MS (signed initials) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Monday morning [1840].

Requesting Mitton to change the hour of their appointment and mentioning Miss Coutts.

1841

January

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1841

Text from MDGH, I, 37.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning, Jan. 2nd, 1841

My dear Harness,

I should have been very glad to join your pleasant party, but all next week I shall be laid up with a broken heart, for I must occupy myself in finishing the "Curiosity Shop", and it is such a painful task to me that I must concentrate myself upon it tooth and nail, and go out nowhere until it is done.

I have delayed answering your kind note in a vague hope of being heart-whole again by the seventh. The present state of my work, however (Christmas not being a very favourable season for making progress in such doings), assures me that this cannot be, and that I must heroically deny myself the pleasure you offer.[†1]

Always believe me, | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T.N. TALFOURD, 2 JANUARY 1841

Mention in To Harness, 10 Jan.

To JOHN FORSTER, 5 JANUARY [1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 5 Jan was Tuesday in 1841; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Morning | Fifth January.

My Dear Forster.

On the whole we were tremendous last night,[†2] though rather slack at first. We had two very long Sir Roger de Coverleys, and after supper about eight very good Charades. Among them was conspicuous "Morning Herald" invented by your humble.

I shall certainly not stir out today, for we were not home until half-past five, and not up until half-past twelve. Unless I look very sharp, I shall not have done the No. by tomorrow night[†3] — for I drank punch last evening in considerable quantities.

Always Faithfully

CD.

As you don't say how the face is, I suppose it was a false alarm.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 6 JANUARY [1841]

Text in N, I, 292 checked from MS Sotheby's, 15 Dec 64. Date: Charley was four in 1841.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Morning Sixth January

My Dear Maclise.

To day is Charley's birth-day. He attains the tremendous age of four. If you have nothing better to do, perhaps you'll look in this evening. Forster will be here, but nobody else.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, [?6 JANUARY 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: almost certainly 6 Jan, referring to Ch. 70 (finished that day), which ends with Kit's arrival at the house in which — although no one yet knew it[†1] — Nell lies dead. By Wed 13 Jan the final "murdering" had already been done; CD spent that day and the next on Ch. 72, and read Chs 71 and 72 to Forster on the night of Thurs 14th (F, II, vii, 150).

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Morning.

My Dear Macready.

Why do you always leave the name which is most pleasant and welcome to me, — when I am not at home?

Are you going to Elliotson's on Friday? If so, I'll take you there, and call for you.

I am slowly murdering that poor child, and grow wretched over it. It wrings my heart. Yet it must be.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?7 JANUARY 1841]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: from Nov 40 onwards on "Mac" in salutation; before July 41 on handwriting. If referring to Talfourd's dinner of 7 Jan (see To Harness, 10 Jan), CD's promise would have been made while inflamed by punch and Sir Roger de Coverley on the 4th (To Forster, 5 Jan). Address: Wait | Daniel Maclise Esquire.

My Dear Mac

Kate and Fanny have Raised the Standard of Rebellion this morning, and placed me in what the Americans would call "a slantindicular[†2] fix" — swearing that I promised to bring them to see your picture[†3] to day; being at the moment inflamed with wine and "the Mazy".[†4]

What's to be done? May they come about 3 or so? After that, as I want to call at Brompton,[†5] let you and I go and ride in the Parks until Talfourd's dinner is ready, and Elyian[†1] blandishments convert our present sweet seeming into bitter gall.[†2]

Faithfully Always

CD

To MISS HANNAH MEREDITH, 7 JANUARY [1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 7 Jan was Thursday in 1841; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Jany. 7th.

My Dear Miss Meredith.

On Wednesday next,[†3] I shall most gladly enjoy the pleasure your note offers.

Begging my compliments to Miss Coutts, I am always

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Meredith.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 JANUARY 1841]

Extract in F, II, vii, 150. Date: Fri 7 Jan according to Forster; but 7 Jan was Thursday. CD had probably finished No. 43 on 6 Jan (see To Forster, 5 Jan), begun No. 44 on 7 Jan, and was now, on 8 Jan, still writing Ch. 71 — at the end of which Kit, Mr Garland, the single gentleman, the school-master and the bachelor follow the old man into Nell's room and find her dead.

Done! Done!!! Why bless you, I shall not be done till Wednesday night. I only began yesterday, and this part of the story is not to be galloped over, I can tell you. I think it will come famously — but I am the wretchedest of the wretched. It casts the most horrible shadow upon me, and it is as much as I can do to keep moving at all. I tremble to approach the place a great deal more than Kit; a great deal more than Mr. Garland; a great deal more than the Single Gentleman. I shan't recover it for a long time. Nobody will miss her like I shall. It is such a very painful thing to me, that I really cannot express my sorrow. Old wounds[†4] bleed afresh when I only think of the way of doing it: what the actual doing it will be, God knows. I can't preach to myself the schoolmaster's consolation,[†5] though I try. Dear Mary died yesterday, when I think of this sad story. I don't know what to say about dining to-morrow — perhaps you'll send up to-morrow morning for news? That'll be the best way.[†1] I have refused several invitations for this week and next, determining to go nowhere till I had done. I am afraid of disturbing the state I have been trying to get into, and having to fetch it all back again.[†2]

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 10 JANUARY [1841]*

MS Mr Richard C. Hatchwell. Date: 10 Jan was Sunday in 1841; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace.

Tentl
there unbu

My Dear Harness.

See what a false, and yet what a true fellow I am!

On the day I answered your kind Invitation,[†3] I had one from Talfourd (for that same Thursday) to which I returned exactly the same reply. But on the night following this answer, I had another letter from Russell Square, urging me for various weighty reasons therein set forth to break my resolution rather than the Serjeant's party. The man waited — I am not as firm as I ought to be — I yielded — and went. Now, curse, or forgive me.

Apart from duty, I would have better liked to dine with you, because of those few words we said together at Miss Coutts's.[†4] I really feel as though I had committed some grave offence against you, and am impelled to this full and free confession. If it be any consolation to you to know that going out in the midst of the work I had resolved nothing should interfere with, has, up to this time, broken it off and protracted the heartbreaking, you have it in full force I do assure you.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Reverend William Harness.

To JOHN FORSTER, 11 JANUARY [1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 11 Jan was Monday in 1841; handwriting supports that year; paper watermarked 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning | January Eleven

Dear Forster

Behold George's note.[†1] I shall meet you there at 5 sharp. 23 Amwell Street Pentonville — name on door — brass plate.

Faithfully
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 11 JANUARY [1841]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: same day as last; handwriting supports.

Monday | January Eleven

My Dear Mac

Cruikshank tells me we are fully expected today, to discuss the promised edgebone.[†2] The time 5 sharp. The place 23 Amwell Street Pentonville. Name on door.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 14 JANUARY [1841]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 14 Jan was Thursday in 1841.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday January Fourteen

My Dear Cattermole.

I cannot tell you how much obliged I am to you for altering the child,[†3] or how much I hope that my wish in that respect didn't go greatly[†4] against the grain.

I saw the old Inn[†5] this morning. Words cannot say how good it is. I can't bear the thought of its being cut, and should like to frame and glaze it in statu quo for ever and ever.

Will you do a little tail piece for the Curiosity story — only one figure if you like — giving some notion of the etherealised spirit of the child — something like those little figures in the Frontispiece. If you will, and can dispatch it at once, you will make me happy.[†1]

I am, for the time being, nearly dead with work — and grief for the loss of my child.

Always | My Dear George | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JANUARY [1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 14 Jan was Thursday in 1841; handwriting supports that year. Address: Miss Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday January Fourteen.

Dear Miss Coutts.

On Monday I am disengaged, and shall be but too happy to enjoy a Library Dinner.[†2]

Many thanks to you for the book. I am quite ashamed to have given you the trouble of sending it, — and was about to send for it when your messenger arrived.

Always believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 14 JANUARY 1841

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1950; MS 1 p. (signed initials); dated 14 Jan 41; salutation "My Dear Mac".

To BASIL HALL, 15 JANUARY 1841

Extracts from Autograph Prices Current, VI, 50 (aa), and Anderson Galleries catalogue, 1924 (bb); MS 2 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, January Fifteenth, 1841.

[a]I have been breaking my heart with such constancy over the Curiosity Shop, that I have not been able to write one note since I received your welcome letter,...[a†3]

[b]The clock does not stop, and was never intended to.[†1] It goes on — but with a new story.[b]

To [R. S. HORRELL], 15 JANUARY 1841

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth January 1841.

Sir.

I cannot forbear saying a very few words in reply to your letter of the Ninth. As my time is short, I must say them briefly.

I did not expect you to defer to my opinion now. I should say that in three years time you will be more disposed to entertain it, and that in five — at the longest — we shall have come to think alike.

Are you quite sure that you do not confound my means of estimating your genius, with your own? Pray consider that I am ignorant of the feelings which you admit, yourself, you express inadequately — that I have not been the companion of your thoughts — that I have seen but a very few lines of your writing — and that you would be a very extraordinary man, indeed, if on so short an acquaintance I could pronounce you in my own mind — a Poet.

You seem to desire that I should expressly say whether you would do best to pursue this bent, or to abandon it for ever. I am not in a condition to do so. I have not sufficient knowledge of your abilities. It is impossible for me to acquire it from the data you have given me. And I am confident that if you laid those same pieces before any man who considered the responsibility you imposed upon him, he would say in so many words what I now tell you.

In answer to some of the objections I ventured to suggest to you, you plead the absence of needful revision and correction. Now, I must say you are foolish and wrong in this. The question you wish me to decide, has reference, not only to what you think, but to your power of expressing what you think. How can I judge of that, upon you[r] mere assurance that you have the power of writing regular verse, but have not taken the trouble to exert it? For aught I know, a great many men may think poetry — I dare say they do — but the matter between us, is, whether you can write it or no.

Do not suppose that the entertaining a distaste for such extremely light labour as reading and revising your own writings, is a part of the true poetical temperament. Whatever Genius does, it does well; and the man who is constantly beginning things and never finishing them is no true Genius, take my word for it.

I do not remember to have ever had, within the last four or five years, any composition sent me by a young man (and I have had a great number) who did not give me to understand that it was the worst he had ever written, and that he had much better ones at home.

I tell you candidly that I am interested in you — that I should be glad if you would do justice both to yourself and me, and give me the means of knowing what you really can do — and that I should be delighted to cheer and encourage you if I found I could. I should like to see the Young Painter's Dream with its altered (that is, with its original) conclusion; and if I should not receive them from you by any other mode, I shall certainly if I visit Exeter next summer — as I think I shall — hope to take the two poetical tales from your own hand.

I hope you will not misunderstand me in anything I have said to you, either in this, or in my former letter. If I seem cruel, it is only to be kind,[†1] believe me. You do not know, and can form no conception of the misery (often untold to any other ears) which I see every day of my life in young men who mistook their vocation when they were younger, and have become the very beggars of Literature. It is because I know the bitterness and anguish of such mistakes, and looking along the path you wish to tread, see these dismal scarecrows in it, that I must know well what your qualification is, before I encourage you in your perilous desire.

If my last letter to you were unsatisfactory, it was so because the specimens you sent me were unsatisfactory too, and insufficient. What I have seen of yours, I should have read with pleasure if it had caught my eye by chance. I cannot say more, unless I repeat that I see every day, writing which is to my mind quite as good. You say you can write better. I wish to be enabled to say so too.

I regret very much to hear that you have been unwell, and sincerely hope your health is now improving. Assuring you that your confidence needs no apology or excuse, I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Harford[†1] Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17] JANUARY 1841†

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).[†2] Date: 17 Jan was Sunday in 1841; curiously, CD seems to have been mistaken in the day of the week, not the date in the month.[†3]

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Seventeenth January | 1841.

My Dear Forster.

I can't help letting you know how much your yesterday's letter pleased me.[†4] I felt sure you liked the Chapters when we read them on Thursday night, but it was a great delight to have my impression so strongly and heartily confirmed.

You know how little value I should set on what I had done, if all the world cried out that it was good, and those whose good opinion and approval[†1] I value most, were silent. The assurance that this little closing of the scene, touches and is felt by you so strongly, is better to me than a thousand most sweet voices[†2] out of doors.[†3]

When I first began [†a](on your valued suggestion)[†a] to keep my thoughts upon this ending of the tale,[†4] I resolved to try and do something which might be read by people about whom Death had been, — with a softened feeling, and with consolation. [†b]I was moved, therefore, to have poor Bradbury's note yesterday,[†5] and was glad to think he felt as I would have had him.[†b]

After you left last night I took my desk up stairs, and writing until four o'Clock this morning, finished the old story. It makes me very melancholy to think that all these people are lost to me for ever,[†6] and I feel as if I never could become attached to any new set of characters.

[†c]I wish you would give my love to Macready (I suppose you dine there today) and tell him that on Friday night, I will send him the next week's number, in order that he may read the two together, which I should like him very much to do. Tomorrow morning, please God, I shall be with you — about twelve.

Always My Dear Forster | Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†c]

John Forster Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [18 JANUARY 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly 18 Jan, the day fixed for the "Library Dinner" (To Miss Coutts, 14 Jan); signature supports. Address: Miss Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Afternoon.

Dear Miss Coutts.

It is with no slight disappointment, I assure you, that I have been obliged to make up my mind — on the doctor's orders — to stay at home this evening. I should not mind a bad cold, but I have the additional pleasure of a swelled face, which is too large even to be amusing — to look at — otherwise I should certainly have presented it in its deformity, despite all injunctions to the reverse.

I hope this is not the last "Library Dinner"; and with that hope, console myself.[†1]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To W. C. MACREADY, 19 JANUARY 1841

Text from N, I, 295.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth January 1841

My Dear Macready,

I don't know whether you have seen the inclosed. I only send it to you because I promised Basil Hall that I would distribute a few copies for him.[†2]

There is a separate subscription for the widows of the other officers, and the men.[†3] I mean to divide what I did intend to give to the Lord Holland testimonial[†4] between the two lists.[†5]

Always, my Dear Macready, | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN OVERS, 21 JANUARY 1841

Text from Walter T. Spencer catalogue, n.d., in Eastgate House, Rochester.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-first January, 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs,

They have sent me from Chatham a copy of that immortal work, which I beg you to accept, as it contains a very good song of yours.[†6] It is in company which will by no means discourage you.

I also send a little hand-bill, by which you will see that due honour has been done to your name.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 JANUARY 1841

MS Dickens House. Address: Wait. | Thomas Beard Esquire | or | Miss Beard | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First January 1841.

My Dear Beard

Will's[†1] haunch is scientifically carved by your humble, next Sabbath Day at 5. Come and try it. And Kate desires me to say (with all manner of loves and remembrances, wherein I join) that if your sister will join you, we shall be delighted to see her.

Always My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 21 JANUARY 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday Evening January 21st. | 1841.

Dear Sirs.

Instead of the usual two of No. 44,[†2] let me have half a dozen tomorrow night, if you please, as I wish to send them confidentially to one or two friends who would consider it a mighty recollection of them, and a great anticipation of the many-headed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 JANUARY 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 164. Date: 22 Jan 41 according to Forster.

I am at present in what Leigh Hunt would call a kind of impossible state — thinking what on earth Master Humphrey can think of through four mortal pages.[†3] I added, here and there, to the last chapter of the Curiosity

Shop yesterday,[†1] and it leaves me only four pages to write. I also made up, and wrote the needful insertions for, the second number of Barnaby[†2] — so that I came back to the mill a little.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 22 JANUARY 1841*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace.
Friday Twenty Second January 1841.

My Dear Stanfield

On Wednesday the 27th. at the hour you don't name, I shall be delighted to join you, and to know Marryat.[†3] Until then, and then, and always afterwards,

believe me | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 JANUARY [1841]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD was clearly sending Miss Coutts one of the six copies of Master Humphrey No. 44 requested from Chapman & Hall on 21 Jan 41.

Devonshire Terrace.
Friday Evening | January Twenty Second.

Dear Miss Coutts.

It has occurred to me — this is a kind of vanity to which the meekest of authors are occasionally liable — that when you came to read this week's number of the Clock, you might possibly desire to know what the next one contained, without waiting seven days. I therefore make bold to send you, inclosed, the two numbers together, begging you not to be at the trouble of returning them, as I have always plenty by me.[†1]

Beseeching you to with-hold this mighty revelation from all the world — except Miss Meredith, who is free to share it to the utmost, I am always

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 [JANUARY 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Must refer to Master Humphrey, the only work of CD's originally published in weekly Nos (Apr 40 to Nov 41). But 22 Dec 40 was Tuesday not Friday. Clearly CD meant Fri 22 Jan [41], the day on which Macready received the "next week's" No. (one of the six advance copies of No. 44): see fn.

Friday Evening | Twenty Second Decr.

My Dear Macready.

I believe Forster mentioned to you that I wished you to read this week's Number, and next week's together.[†2] As you will no doubt have received the first in regular course tonight, I send you the second herewith.[†3] Do not be at the trouble of returning it, for I have plenty more.

I have read the Tragedy,[†1] and will report thereupon in a separate note.[†2]

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 23 JANUARY 1841

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace.
Saturday Night | January Twenty Third | 1841.

My Dear Beard.

I am sorry to say that the Haunch must be presented before a solitary carver tomorrow, and not to a jovial half dozen as I had hoped.

Kate was taken very unwell at Four o'Clock this morning,[†3] and has remained so ever since. Nothing has come of it so far, and all appearances indicate another night of watching and suspence.[†4] I expected some such state of things about this time, and am resignedly putting the best face possible (a very sleepy one though) upon it.

My regards to your sister — and always believe me

Dear Beard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JANUARY 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty fifth January 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I have contrived to get rid of my cold, and shall be happy to reconcile myself to my late disappointment, by dining with you on Saturday.[†1]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 25 JANUARY 1841

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty fifth January 1841.

My Dear Ainsworth.

I shall be truly happy to dine with you on the Fourth, and remember the day well.[†2] Forster and I dining together on the last Fourth of February, drank your health most heartily, and wished that would come about which has since been accomplished.[†3]

I have not had an opportunity of telling you how generous and manly I felt your conduct to be on that first occasion of your dining here.[†4] It gave me throughout the most unfeigned and cordial pleasure, and if I stop here and say no more, it is only because I cannot express to you my approval and admiration.[†5]

My wife has been (and is) exceedingly unwell, and I have not been to bed for eight and forty hours. I hoped the event we are expecting would have taken place before now — but patience, in this matter and in all others, is the sovereign virtue.

With best regards to the Ladies
Believe me My Dear Ainsworth
Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Forster and I, called upon you yesterday, but you were out.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 JANUARY 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 164. Date: according to Forster, four days after letter to him of 22 Jan (during which CD had "done nothing").

I have been looking (three o'clock) with an appearance of extraordinary interest and study at one leaf of the Curiosities of Literature[†1] ever since half-past ten this morning — I haven't the heart to turn over.[†2]

To BASIL HALL, [27 JANUARY 1841][†3]

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Jan 1941; MS 1 p. Date: clearly written between Hall's two letters to CD of 27 Jan; see fns to this and To Hall, 28 Jan. Address (from Sotheby's catalogue, June 1913): Captain Basil Hall, R.N.

I am sorry to say that I dare not go out in the morning (being very busy) until next Tuesday, sorely tempted as I am to be undutiful for the sake of Miss Edgeworth[†4] ... As you never read Oliver,[†5] I promise myself the pleasure of sending you a copy this morning ... C.D.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [28 JANUARY 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Clearly CD was replying to Miss Coutts's letter of 27 Jan (see To Miss Coutts, 25 Jan, fn). Address: Miss Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

Dear Miss Coutts.

Next Monday — I have written the word, but I mean Tuesday — will suit me exceedingly well. I shall therefore hold myself engaged for that day instead of Saturday. And if I can do myself the pleasure of joining your party on Friday the 27th.[†1] I shall be most happy to do so.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To BASIL HALL, 28 JANUARY 1841

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth January 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I am not, I confess, a good hand at roaring,[†2] and do indeed shrink from it with most invincible repugnance. But you really do me injustice in the matter of Miss Edgeworth, whom I should have been glad to see.[†3] The plain Truth is that in the beginning of a new story — with all my thoughts and interest hanging about the old one — and the difficulty of settling down into the track I must pursue, when I have sickness and anxiety at home[†4] — to say nothing of engagements which I cannot avoid, and which seldom leave me a quiet evening — I cannot break in upon my mornings[†5] work. Just at this time I have but one holiday in the week, and that is Tuesday. — Tuesday therefore, I named to you.

If I were not resolute in shutting myself up now and then, either to write or think as the case may be, there would soon be no Clock. If the Queen were to send for me at such times, I wouldn't go to her.

I should be sorry if you left town under a wrong impression, and therefore dispatch this missive.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Basil Hall

To THOMAS MITTON, [?28 JANUARY 1841]

MS Huntington Library. Date: CD's difficulty in concentrating on Barnaby points to the Thursday between letters to Forster of 26 and 29 Jan.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning.

My Dear Mitton.

I have been so terribly delayed by Kate's illness, goings out to dinner, and the extreme difficulty of fixing my thoughts on Barnaby after so recently shutting up the "Shop", that I am afraid I must shut up myself now, and go to work tonight.

If you will let our pleasanter engagement for tonight stand over, I will come down to you as soon as I have finished my Number — which will be (if no new obstacles interpose) either on Monday, or Tuesday.

Kate continues much the same. She will be no better until this little business is finally disposed of.

Now and always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 28 JANUARY 1841†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Night January 28. | 1841.

My dear George.

I sent to Chapman and Hall yesterday morning, about the second subject for No. 2 of Barnaby[†1] — but found they had sent it to Browne.

The first subject of No. 3,[†2] I will either send to you on Saturday, or at latest on Sunday morning. I have also directed C and H to send you proofs of what has gone before, for reference if you need it.

I want to know whether you feel Ravens in general, and would fancy Barnaby's raven in particular. Barnaby being an idiot my notion is to have him always in company with a pet raven who is immeasureably more knowing than himself. To this end, I have been studying my bird, and think I could make a very queer character of him. Should you like the subject where this raven makes his first appearance?[†1]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]Loves to Cousin — We are in statu quo at home.[†2] — Did you ever write on greasy paper? This is like butter. The pen won't mark.[†a]

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JANUARY 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 164. Date: 29 Jan according to Forster.

I didn't stir out yesterday, but sat and thought all day; not writing a line; not so much as the cross of a t or dot of an i. I imaged forth a good deal of Barnaby by keeping my mind steadily upon him; and am happy to say I have gone to work this morning in good twig,[†3] strong hope, and cheerful spirits.[†4] Last night I was unutterably and impossible-to-form-an-idea-of-ably miserable.... By the bye don't engage yourself otherwise than to me, for Sunday week, because it's my birthday. I have no doubt we shall have got over our troubles here by that time, and I purpose having a snug dinner in the study.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 30 JANUARY 1841†

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Saturday Evening | January Thirtieth | 1841.

My Dear George.

I send you the first four Slips of No. 48,[†5] containing the description of the Locksmith's house, which I think will make a good subject, and one you will like. If you put the 'Prentice in it, shew nothing more than his paper cap, because he will be an important character in the story, and you will need to know more about him as he is minutely described.[†6] [†b]I may as well say that he is very short.[†b] Should you wish to put the locksmith in,[†7]

you will find him described in No. 2 of Barnaby (which I told C and H to send you) — Browne has done him in one little thing,[†1] but so very slightly that you will not require to see his sketch, I think.

Now, I must know what you think about the Raven,[†2] my buck, otherwise I am in this fix. — I have given Browne no subject for this No., and time is flying. If you would like to have the Raven's first appearance, and don't object to having both subjects, so be it. I shall be delighted. If otherwise, I must feed that hero forthwith.[†3]

I cannot close this hasty note, my dear fellow, without saying that I have deeply felt your hearty and most invaluable co-operation in the beautiful illustrations you have made for the last story — that I look at them with a pleasure I cannot describe to you in words — and that it is impossible for me to say how sensible I am of your earnest and friendly aid. Believe me that this is the very first time any designs for what I have written have touched and moved me, and caused me to feel that they expressed the idea I had in my mind. I am most sincerely and affectionately grateful to you, and am full of pleasure and delight.

Believe me,

My Dear Cattermole | Always Heartily Yours
C.D
Over

†a We are just the same at home. But next week, I should say, must put us all to rights.†a

To W. C. MACREADY, [31 JANUARY 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD's Diary entry for 31 Jan 41 reads "Rogers at" but names no time; and Macready's for the same day: "Dickens called for me and I accompanied him to Rogers's, where we dined" (Diaries, II, 118). Since CD expected to see Macready that same night and then reclaim from him the end of Old Curiosity Shop, he was clearly writing on the day of Rogers's dinner.

My Dear Macready

What time does Rogers dine? I forget. I'll call for you, if you'll let me know. We will not be too soon, for there is usually what you call "a long wait" there.

I inclose you the end of the Curiosity Shop, which I must ask you for again tonight. Don't be afraid of it. It's very cheerful, or intended to be so.†4

You are not disposed for a walk this delicious morning, are you? I am going to ride out at 2, and get down on Hampstead Heath or some high and dry road to walk.

Best regards at home. We are here in statu quo.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To MRS GORE,†1 31 JANUARY 1841

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace

Sunday Thirty First January | 1841.

Dear Mrs. Gore.

Let me thank you cordially for the two Magazines,[†2] and for that delicate and most touching attention which I recognize in the maiming of the cover. If the name be never whispered in Heaven (as I should think it never was) it is no doubt muttered very often in the other place,[†3] and it is a great relief to be free of it.[†4]

I have been greatly pleased with both papers, but especially with the children of the Mobility.[†1] Those books[†2] are the gall and bitterness of my life. I vow to God they make me wretched, and taint the freshness of every new year. Your satire is most admirable, and to pluck the peacock's feathers from such daws is worthy of you.

What do you think of a book in serious earnest — a true, strong, sledge-hammer book — about the children of the people; as much beaten out of Nature by iron necessity as the children of the nobility are, by luxury and pride? It would be a good thing to have the two extremes — Fairlie[†3] and Fielding — Hogarth and Chalon[†4] — the Princess Royal[†5] whom the nurse daren't kiss — and the baby on the step of a door whose mother tried to strangle it.

I have seen in different towns in England, and do see in London whenever I walk alone into its byeways at night, as I often do, such miseries and horrors among these little creatures — such an impossibility of their ever growing up to be good or happy — that these aristocratic dolls do turn me sick. I only know one good those books are likely to achieve. If I were a poor labouring man and saw them in the shop windows as I went slouching home, I should think of my own children and the no-regard they had from anybody, and be a greater Radical than ever. I hope they may be productive of some advantage that way.

You see what I am. I can't help it. It's more genteel to be on the other side, but Truth doesn't always keep its carriage, and is sometimes content to go in hob-nailed shoes and wheelbarrows.

I heartily reciprocate the pleasure you so kindly express at our having met the other night; and hope we shall be better acquainted. As a means to this end, I shall not fail to call upon you — if not next Tuesday, at all events on the Tuesday following. I was very sorry to leave Harness's so soon t'other night,[†6] but I was anxious to get away as early as I could, and refrained from going up stairs again, lest I should be tempted to stay.

Believe me | Dear Mrs. Gore | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Raven sends his duty. He has just [w]aylaid[†1] and attacked a butcher, whose pantaloons [ha]ve suffered considerably. He (the butcher) [th]reatens to throw poison over the garden wall, [bu]t my groom is of opinion that I needn't be [u]neasy, for the Raven wouldn't have it at no [pr]ice. He knows better than that, he says, bless you.

Mrs. Gore.

February

To NATHANIEL ELLISON,[†2] 3 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Messrs Clark & Smith, Solicitors.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third February 1841.

Sir.

Mr. Harness in a note to me this morning, mentioned the object with which you called upon me on Sunday last.[†3] If I could have anticipated it, I should have been happy to have seen you, but, as you may suppose, I am obliged to deny myself to those visitors (for their name is Legion) whom I have not the pleasure of knowing.

I have a distinct recollection of having at pretty long intervals received three or four letters from the young gentleman in whom you are interested. Taking it for granted that they had their origin in some unfortunate delusion, I have not noticed them in any way. If I should have any further communication on the same topic, I will forward it to you immediately.[†4]

Yours very obedtly.
CHARLES DICKENS

Nathaniel Ellison Esquire

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [4 FEBRUARY 1841]

Mention in next.

Apologizing for not being able to dine with him that day as arranged.

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 FEBRUARY 1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: clearly 4 Feb 41 (Ainsworth's birthday), when Forster and CD were to have dined with him; CD's Diary entry for 3 Feb reads "Dr. Smith at 6 o'Clock". Handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Forster.

[ ][†1]

There will not be time to write Ainsworth by post. Please, therefore, to hand him the inclosed — which is an excuse on the score of Kate.[†2]

I didn't go to Southwood Smith's yesterday, and last night went out roaming. I tapped at your Window with my stick soon after Ten (to carry you to the Parthenon, and broiled bones) but you were not at home. At the club I stumbled upon Thompson when I had had my supper, and with him sat drinking Gin and Water until 3 this morning.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Mac is laid up with a cold, he says, in a note just this moment received, and don't go either.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 FEBRUARY 1841]*

Forster's summary of letter and his copy of extract from it, MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).[†4] Date: headed "Devonshire Terrace Thursday" by Forster; clearly later in the same day as last, referring again to the visit to Ainsworth cancelled on the score of Kate, and to CD's spree of the night before.[†5]

About going to Ainsworth's.[†6] Remorseful about his bachelor's doings. I finished the number yesterday and then broke loose.[†1] Upon my word and honour I have serious thoughts of retiring, as soon as K is confined, to the seaside, & getting out of harm's way.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [4 FEBRUARY 1841]

MS Dickens House. Date: presumably the Thursday before Walter's birth; for CD's engagement to dine with Cattermole on 13 Feb ("Saturday week"), see To Cattermole, that day.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Afternoon

My Dear George.

As this business of Kate's is not yet over, and don't seem to advance at all (my mind begins to run very much on Joanna Southcote)[†2] I should like, if it will not inconvenience you, to postpone our Athenæum dinner until Saturday week. Will this suit you?

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 5 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifth February 1841.

My Dear Ainsworth.

Will you tell me where that Punch is to be bought, what one is to ask for, and what the cost is. It has made me very uneasy in my mind.

Mind — I deny the beer. It is very excellent; but that it surpasses that meeker, and gentler, and brighter ale of mine (oh how bright it is!) I never will admit.[†3]

My gauntlet lies upon the cask. Yours in defiance.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 FEBRUARY 1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on white paper watermarked 1840 and used by CD up to Mar 41; depressed tone suggests shortly after his return to Barnaby (cf. To Forster, 26 Jan). However, not Sat 23 Jan, since Catherine was taken ill that morning, and probably not Sat 30 Jan when he wrote cheerfully to Cattermole; perhaps 6 Feb, CD having relapsed into his mood of 28 Jan (see To Forster, 29 Jan). Address: Wait | John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields.

Saturday Morning.

My Dear Forster.

I am deadly stupid this morning — perfectly swinish and brutal in an intellectual point of view, and of no use whatsomdever excepting out of doors.

Can you come to Hampstead — while the day is bright, not when it has dwindled away to nothing — or to Greenwich — or to Windsor — or anywhere ? ? ? ? ? ?[†1]

Faithfully

CD.

To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, ?7 FEBRUARY 1841

Mention in To Marjoribanks, 9 Feb 41.

To THOMAS MITTON, [8 FEBRUARY 1841]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting shows that the birth this refers to was Walter's (8 Feb 41). Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday 1 O'Clock

My Dear Mitton.

You will be glad to hear that Kate was safely confined at 12 oClock today — a jolly boy.[†2] She had a very hard trial indeed, but thank God is thriving now, amazingly.

Ever Yours

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 9 FEBRUARY [1841]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: 9 Feb was Tuesday in 1841; signature supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Ninth February.

My Dear George.

My notes tread upon each others' heels. In my last,[†1] I quite forgot business.

Will you for No. 49 do the locksmith's house, which was described in No. 48[†2] — I mean the outside. If you can, without hurting the effect, shut up the shop as though it were night, so much the better. Should you want a figure, an ancient watchman in or out of his box, very sleepy, will be just the thing for me.[†3]

I have written to Chapman, and requested him to send you a block of a long shape, so that the house may come upright as it were.[†4]

Faithfully ever

CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

George Cattermole Esquire

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 9 FEBRUARY 1841

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, v (1919-21); MS 2 ½ pp.; dated 9 Feb 41.

I have written to Mr. Cattermole and told him that I want for the end of No. 49 the outside of the locksmiths[†6] House (at night) as described in the beginning of No. 48. I have also told him that Mr. Chapman will let him have a block of an upright shape — the size is not material; it needn't be very large — the house may come as it were thus [here CD outlines the shape] — in the shape of a house. Do you understand? ... Mrs. Dickens and the child are not merely as well as can be expected, but a great deal better.

To HABLOT K. BROWNE, [9 FEBRUARY 1841]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 FEBRUARY 1841]

Extracts in F, II, ix, 164 (aa), and F, II, x, 173 (bb). Date: 9 Feb according to Forster, the day after Walter's birth.

[a] Thank God, quite well. I am thinking hard, and have just written to Browne enquiring when he will come and confer about the raven.[a] †1

[b] I mean to call the boy Edgar, a good honest Saxon name, I think.[b]†2

To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, 9 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Free | Edward Marjoribanks Esquire | Messrs. Coutts and Compy. | Strand.

Devonshire Terrace. | Ninth February 1841

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks for your kind note.

I see now how it was that you came to talk of "finance", and I could not for my life understand you. You were obscure, like some streams and rivers, by reason of your excessive depth. Miss Meredith interposes and asks what you say. "Nothing" you reply; "only a little matter of finance." And then I — this is a humiliating confession — instead of thinking "Good God how ready he is!", exclaim within myself "Finance! What can he mean!"

Seriously, I had been vexed not many days before by the practices of my unknown representative who lords it fearfully in my name at watering places and country inns, and sometimes doesn't pay his bills.†3 Not understanding you, and being on the alert for some new discovery, I tortured myself with the possibilty of some monstrous or impertinent application having been made to you in my name.†4 The chances were ninety nine to one that there was nothing in it, but while that one remained I was not quite at ease, and so occasioned you the trouble of writing one note and reading two — for which I know you will forgive me.

My Dear Sir Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I am delighted to find that rascal Dunn,†5 so well trounced. But if

Miss Coutts had electrified her knocker in the first instance, or had procured "the Pet of the Fancy", or "the Slashing Sailor Boy", or "Young Sawdust"[†1] or some such gentleman to accomodate[†2] him with a customer[†3] as the sporting phrase is, I should have been still better pleased.

To C. L. EASTLAKE,[†4] 10 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I deferred answering your note, in the hope that I should be enabled to tell you that I had attended the ballot at the Athenæum and voted for your friend.[†5] I regret to say, however, that some family circumstances obliged me to dine at Hampstead on Monday[†6] and that I did not return to town in time.

Let me assure you of the pleasure it would have given me to comply with this, or any request of yours, and believe me My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. L. Eastlake Esquire

To E. HENDERSON,[†7] [EARLY FEBRUARY 1841]

Mention in Henderson to CD, 11 Feb 41.[†8]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 10 FEBRUARY [1841]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: See To Forster, 9 Feb; 10 Feb was Wednesday in 1841.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Tenth February

My Dear Maclise.

Browne (who is coming to sketch the Raven) dines with me in the study to-day en garçon at five. The gay and festive Thompson also joins us. Will you make a fourth? Say yes.

Ever Yours
CD.[†1]All going on famously.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 11 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Mrs Percy W. Valentine.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh February 1841.

My Dear Maclise.

We were speaking of Ethelstan.[†2] Le voici.

I am sorry the water bottle[†3] held you so long last night. We adjourned from the Private Box to the Parthenon, and were rather jolly.

Hot joints here on Sunday at Five o'Clock.[†4]

Faithfully Always

BOZ.

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, [?11 FEBRUARY 1841]

Summary from F, II, x, 173.[†5] Date: a few days after letter of 9 Feb according to Forster; probably 11 Feb — the day Elliotson answered a similar request.

Asking Landor to be godfather to his newly-born son and telling him that it would give the child something to boast of, to be called Walter Landor, and that to call him so would do his own heart good. For, as to himself, whatever realities had gone out of the ceremony of christening,[†6] the meaning still remained in it of enabling him to form a relationship with friends he most loved: and as to the boy, he held that to give him a name to be proud of was to give him also another reason for doing nothing unworthy or untrue when he came to be a man.[†1]

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 13 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Mr Edward S. Moore III.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth February 1841.

My Dear George.

I am very sorry to hear you are an Invalid.[†2] I, too, am under the doctor's hands for a violent fit of indigestion; and as I may only eat with great discretion, and may not drink at all, am truly rejoiced that our dinner does not come off.

Thank God, we are brilliant up stairs. Fish yesterday — boiled fowl to day — up to dinner tomorrow — drawing room by the middle of next week. Kate is asleep at[†1] this moment, and I defer giving her your inclosure (which will afford her great pleasure I know) until she wakes.

With best regards | Always Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 15 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fifteenth February | 1841.

My Dear Mitton

If you have nothing else to do, will you come and play a game at cribbage with me this evening? I shall be alone and at home any way.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To NATHANIEL ELLISON, 15 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Messrs Clark & Smith, Solicitors.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth February 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Ellison, and begs, in compliance with his request, to forward him the inclosed, — received this morning.[†2]

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?15 FEBRUARY 1841]

Mention in Ainsworth to CD, 15 Feb 41.[†1]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 16 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday February Sixteen | 1841.

My Dear Talfourd.

A friend of mine — a man you will say of most extraordinary tastes — wants to go into the Gallery of the House of Commons next Friday. Can you give me an Order for that day, and will you send it me by post?

Tell Mrs. Talfourd your Nickleby and Clock are in course of binding — by the slowest man in England.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MR LLOYD,[†3] [16] FEBRUARY [1841]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Someone (apparently not CD) has written "1840" beneath CD's "February" — perhaps because 18 Feb 40 was Tuesday. A third hand, in different ink, has changed the "0" to "1". Handwriting and reference to Master Humphrey confirm 1841; but in that year 18 Feb was Thursday. Probably CD was wrong in the date of the month, not the day of the week, and was writing on Tues 16 Feb.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Tuesday 18th. February

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Lloyd, and begs to assure him that Master Humphrey's Clock is really, decidedly, and unquestionably of his manufacture.

Mr. Dickens owes an apology to Mr. Lloyd for not returning an earlier reply to his note.

To MISS LLOYD,[†1] 17 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Berg Collection.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London.

Wednesday Seventeenth Feby. 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Miss Lloyd, and complies with her request with pleasure.[†2] And he begs to assure Miss Lloyd at the same time, in reference to one part of her note, that she is entirely and thoroughly mistaken in supposing him to be the author of Sketches of Young Ladies.[†3]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 17 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth February 1841.

My Dear Cruikshank.

Will you let me know whether you are willing or able to go into that matter of the Annual?[†4] If you are, I will write you my views upon it and put you in possession of the means of determining whether you shall join it or no.[†5]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, 18 FEBRUARY [1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 18 Feb was Thursday in 1841; handwriting supports that year. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Eighteenth Feby.

My Dear Forster.

I think it probable I shall be out to day, and in your neighbourhood at about 2 or 3 o'Clock. If so, I will call, of course.

I am walking round and round the garden this exquisite morning, trying to think of the subjects for next No.,[†1] and indulging in visions of the country. What a day for a Greenwich Steamer!

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THOMAS LATIMER,[†2] 18 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Most Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Thursday Eighteenth Feby. | 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Your letter has occasioned me great grief and distress. It opens a very painful subject — one that has been a source of constant anxiety, uneasiness, and expence to me for some years; and which I fondly hoped, when I settled my father in Exeter, would haunt me no more.

I need scarcely tell you (for I am sure you will have anticipated it already) that he [†a]should have[†a] had no need to borrow money of you, or of any man; and that his making your note of hand payable at my publishers' was a moral outrage which words can scarcely censure enough. They felt it so, as they knew I should, and refrained from informing me of the circumstance, knowing how much it would hurt me.

Will you let me know how I shall remit you the amount — whether I shall send you a cheque on my own Bankers in town — whether I shall desire them to pay it to Saunders's in Exeter[†3] — or whether I can pay it, to your credit, with anyone in London?[†1] I shall desire to write you more at length, and to beg a favor of you, when I have heard from you on this head. Meantime believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Latimer Esquire

To BASIL HALL, 19 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Nineteenth February 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks to you for the MS.[†2] I have not had time to read it yet, and intend to reserve it until after dinner on Sunday.[†3] Your wishes in relation to it, I shall religiously observe, of course.[†4]

I quite understand how you all laughed when the friend came in, and am glad you did so, because I know how truthful and hearty the crying must have been that went before. My love to the whole audience.[†5]

I am happy to say that Kate (that's my wife) is in a brilliant state, and is rather sitting in the drawing room up stairs as a matter of form, than for anything that prevents her coming down here. The three old children (they seem quite grown up, now there's another baby) are well and hearty, and the young one appears to be in the same condition. I can vouch for his lungs, which are dreadfully good.

As to his outward boy — about which you want to know something — all I know is that he has large dark eyes, and no nose at all as yet — that he seems to live in a state of perpetual sleepiness and intoxication (except when he cries) — is very fat — and looks when he is being washed, like a plucked turkey. His name, after one of his godfathers, is Walter Landor. And now you know as much of him as I do.

Have you ever had two babies in the house at once? — of your own I mean. Our third child can't walk yet, and here is a fourth upon her heels. I am expecting every day to be gray, and have very nearly persuaded myself that I am gouty.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Basil Hall

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 19 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth February 1841

My Dear Cruikshank.

The Bearer Lord Lindsey[†1] has just come to town from Lincolnshire and wants to see the live Lions, among whom he justly puts you foremost. Therefore show yourself if you will, shake your mane, and roar at me for giving you the trouble.

My Dear Cruikshank | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FOWLER,[†2] [?19 FEBRUARY 1841]

Envelope only, MS Private. Date: PM Sheffield 20 Feb 41 (clearly day of receipt). Address: John Fowler Esquire | Mechanics Institution | Sheffield.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?20 FEBRUARY 1841][†1]

MS Chas J. Sawyer Ltd. Date: Signature points to Feb 41; possibly not long after To Latimer, 18 Feb.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning

My Dear Mitton.

The inclosed, I had from my mother yesterday. If you have heard this morning, please let me know by Bearer. I shall be at home all day.

I have told John[†2] to wait, in case you have any news.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?22 FEBRUARY 1841]

Envelope listed in John Anderson Jr. catalogue No. 343; postmarked 22 Feb 41; addressed "Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, M.P. | &c &c."

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 22 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second February/41.

My Dear Cattermole.

I find I shall have so many little things to do tomorrow, that I must forego the morning part of our Engagement. Therefore I shall expect you to a snug dinner in the study at 6.

Punctival.

Best Regards. Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To JOHN TOMLIN,[†3] 23 FEBRUARY 1841

Text from MDGH, I, 40.

1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park,
London, Tuesday, Feb. 23rd, 1841.

Dear Sir,

You are quite right in feeling assured that I should answer the letter you have addressed to me. If you had entertained a presentiment that it would afford me sincere pleasure and delight to hear from a warm-hearted and admiring reader of my books in the backwoods of America, you would not have been far wrong.

I thank you cordially and heartily both for your letter and its kind and courteous terms. To think that I have awakened a fellow-feeling and sympathy with the creatures of many thoughtful hours among the vast solitudes in which you dwell, is a source of the purest delight and pride to me; and believe me that your expressions of affectionate remembrance and approval, sounding from the green forests on the banks of the Mississippi, sink deeper into my heart and gratify it more than all the honorary distinctions that all the courts in Europe could confer.

It is such things as these that make one hope one does not live in vain, and that are the highest reward of an author's life. To be numbered among the household gods of one's distant countrymen, and associated with their homes and quiet pleasures; to be told that in each nook and corner of the world's great mass there lives one well-wisher who holds communion with one in the spirit, is a worthy fame indeed, and one which I would not barter for a mine of wealth.

That I may be happy enough to cheer some of your leisure hours for a very long time to come, and to hold a place in your pleasant thoughts, is the earnest wish of "BOZ".

And, with all good wishes for yourself, and with a sincere reciprocation of all your kindly feeling,
I am, dear Sir, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 FEBRUARY 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 165. Date: 25 Feb 41, from Brighton,[†1] according to Forster.

I have (it's four o'clock) done a very fair morning's work,[†2] at which I have sat very close, and been blessed besides with a clear view of the end of the volume.[†3] As the contents of one number usually require a day's thought at the very least, and often more, this puts me in great spirits. I think — that is, I hope — the story takes a great stride at this point, and takes it WELL. Nous verrons. Grip will be strong, and I build greatly on the Varden household.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 26 FEBRUARY 1841

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Old Ship Hotel Brighton.
Twenty Sixth[†1] February 1841.

My Dear Kittenmoles.

I passed your house[†2] on Wednesday — being then atop of the Brighton Æra[†3] — but there was nobody at the door, saving a solitary poulterer, and all my warm-hearted aspirations lodged in the goods he was delivering. — No doubt you observed a peculiar relish in your dinner. That was the cause.

I send you the MS. I fear you will have to read all 5 slips, but the subject I think of, is at the top of the last, where the guest, with his back towards the spectator, is looking out of window.[†4] I think, in your hands, it will be a very pretty one.

Then, my boy, when you have done it, turn your thoughts (as soon as other engagements and prostrations will allow) first to the outside of the Warren — see No. 1[†5] — secondly, to the outside of the locksmith's house by night — see No. 3.[†1] Put a penny pistol to Chapman's head, and demand the blocks of him.[†2]

I have addled my head with writing all day, and have barely wit enough left to send my love to my cousin, and — here's a genealogical poser — what relation of mine may the dear little child be[†3] — at present, I desire to be commended to her clear blue eyes.

Always My Dear George | Faithfully Yours

BOZ.

George Cattermole Esquire

To THOMAS HOOD,[†4] [?LATE FEBRUARY 1841]

Mention in Hood to CD, ?Feb or Mar 41 (i.e. after the move to 2 Union Row which Hood reported to his doctor on 1 Feb, and probably before the improvement in his health that spring). Date: not on first reading in Nov 40 Hood's review of Master Humphrey, but shortly before Hood's reply, below.[†5]

Saying how much he had been pleased by Hood's review of Master Humphrey in the Athenæum of 7 Nov 40,[†6] and by his earlier praise of other books.[†7]

To HENRY AUSTIN, ?28 FEBRUARY 1841*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 1 Mar 41 was Monday; probably CD was writing on Sun 28 Feb.

Old Ship Hotel Brighton | Sunday First March 1841.

My Dear Henry.

I shall be at home next Wednesday Evening. May I hope to find a note from you, telling me when you can come and have a little talk with me?[†1] I have my reasons for not coming to you, which you may perhaps guess; and which our conversation will explain, if you do not.[†2]

My love to Letitia

In haste | Always Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

March

To THE DIRECTORS OF THE NEW ZEALAND COMPANY,[†3] 4 MARCH 1841*

MS Public Record Office, London. Address: To | The Board of Directors | of | The New Zealand Company.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Thursday Fourth March 1841

My Lords and Gentlemen.

A younger brother of mine, Mr. Alfred Dickens, being desirous to try his fortune in your new Colony, and to procure an appointment as Assistant Surveyor and Civil Engineer, of the First Class, I take the liberty of recommending him to you as a young man who is in every respect qualified to serve you in that capacity.

He has been educated for his profession under the very best auspices, and has been practically employed for the last four years, without cessation, on Great Public Works.[†4] He is extremely intelligent, active, and enterprising; and I trust I need hardly say that unless I were well assured of his fitness for the office, I would, on no consideration whatever, countenance his application.

I have the honor to be

My Lords and Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

The Directors | of | The New Zealand Company.

To [?ALEXANDER] BLACKWOOD,[†2] [EARLY MARCH 1841]

Mention in To Overs, 5 Mar 41.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?4 or 5 MARCH 1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: on the pale blue watermarked paper that CD began using Mar 41, but before July 41 when he changed his initial "y" (see To Forster, 23 July, fn). "That monstrosity" may well have been the news of John Dickens which infuriated CD to the point of publicly repudiating his debts (see To Mitton, 6 Mar and fn).

My Dear Forster

I have already sent to Mac, who is to be here at a quarter before 5. Therefore I have told Henry not to take the note.

That monstrosity of yesterday has played the very devil with me. To complete my cheerfulness, I was seized last evening with a fearful tooth ache which is pulling my jaw to pieces this morning. I have sent to the Dentist, but am afraid he's out.

I have sent Topping to order dinner — Six, I said, that we might ride gently there, by the pleasantest road.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To JOHN OVERS, 5 MARCH 1841

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Paid | Mr. J. A. Overs | Messrs. Springweiler & Compy. | 2 Duke Street | West Smithfield.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Evening Fifth March | 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I have only time to write you half a dozen words.

Since you sent me your paper, I have had sickness at home[†1] — family affairs of a trying nature to arrange[†2] — and have been out of town. I have gone through it at last (the improvement is immense)[†3] and have sent it to Blackwood with an earnest private letter. What the upshot will be, I cannot tell of course, — for I fear they will not set much store by my recommendation of a paper when I don't write for them — but directly I hear anything, I shall not fail to communicate with you.

I have given it a second name. It stands now, Norris and Anne Boleyn. An English Chronicle.[†4]

The new introduction[†5] is — except the latter part[†6] — the best of the whole. When you do anything fresh, throttle your jesters, remorselessly.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To THOMAS MITTON, 6 MARCH 1841*

MS Hr Jacob Christensen.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Sixth March 1841.

My Dear Mitton.

I return you the form of advertisement,[†8] corrected; and have marked upon the back the papers in which it must be inserted, which, indeed, are all the morning and evening ones.[†1] The Sundays we may leave alone.

Let there be no misunderstanding, for this is a very serious matter, relative to what I said to you this morning. Mind. If he communicate with you, the following are the only conditions to which I will assent.

First. That he goes abroad — to Calais, Boulogne, or Antwerp. The last, I think, is the best place, but let him please himself.

Secondly. That he takes Augustus[†2] with him, whom, immediately on their arrival, I will send as a weekly boarder to the best school I can find in the place, and clothe, and find in pocket money.[†3] I say weekly boarder, because I should wish the boy, for more reasons than one, to be at home from Saturday night to Monday Morning.

Thirdly. That if my mother should object to go — I think it very likely she may, but I have had no communication whatever with her upon the subject — he allows her out of his pension,[†4] for her support, forty pounds a year.

On these conditions, I will allow him £20 a year, which will make his income a hundred[†5] — a very good one mind, abroad — put the amount of the last quarter's allowance to whatever the furniture at Alphington will fetch, and apply the amount to paying or compounding for the Devonshire debts — and I will give him besides £10 to leave England with.

If these concessions are accepted, you have full power from me to carry them out immediately. But I will consent to nothing short of, or beyond them; and I know after the solemn injunctions I have laid upon you to the contrary, that you will not hold yourself justified in entertaining any other proposition for a moment.[†1]

Always | Dear Mitton | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 7 MARCH 1841

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1950; MS 1 p.; dated 7 Mar 41; salutation "My Dear Mac", signed initials.

To JOHN FORSTER, 8 MARCH [1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 8 Mar was Monday in 1841; handwriting and blue watermarked paper support that year.

Monday 8th. March.

My Dear Forster.

I am writing the Oliver preface,[†3] and will give you a call — I hope — at about 4. Will you dine here at 5 any way?

I want to have some talk with you. Please Sir, did you ring the bell at half past Eleven last night?

Faithfully Always

CD

To DANIEL MACLISE, 8 MARCH 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Monday Eighth March 1841

My Dear Mac

I'll write you tomorrow, and fix either that, or Wednesday night, for our foregathering.[†1]

In the last haste | Faithfully

CD.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, [?8 MARCH 1841]*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Date: Signature points to Mar 41; light blue watermarked paper supports; perhaps connected with first paragraph of To Milnes, 10 Mar.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

My Dear Milnes.

Look at the inclosed, which came in an envelope directed to me. Have you anything for me in return?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard M. Milnes Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 9 MARCH 1841†

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Evening Ninth March 1841.

My Dear Mitton.

I have been thinking over what we spoke of this morning, and write to ask you to put to him[†2] — even more distantly and unpromisingly than you have already settled in your own mind — the matter of the debts. Independently of the worth of the money, [†a]I am more fearful than I can tell you, of encouraging his expectations.[†a]

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 10 MARCH 1841

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday March Tenth | 1841.

My Dear Milnes.

I thank you very much for the Nickleby correspondence, which I will keep for a day or two, and return when I see you. Poor fellow! The long letter is quite admirable, and most affecting.[†1]

I am not quite sure, either of Friday or Saturday; for independently of the Clock (which for ever wants winding) I am getting a young brother off to New Zealand[†2] just now, and have my mornings sadly cut up in consequence. But knowing your ways, I know, I may say that I will come if I can — and that if I can't, I won't.

That Nellicide was the Act of Heaven, as you may see any of these fine mornings when you look about you. If you knew the pain it gave me — but what am I talking of — if you don't know, nobody does.[†3]

I am glad to shake you by the hand again autographically, and am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard M. Milnes Esquire

To [?EDWARD CHAPMAN], 10 MARCH 1841*

MS Dickens House. Address: His correspondent's access to the proofs of Barnaby (see fn) and the words "kind care" suggest Chapman or Hall; probably Chapman, the more literary of the two.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Tenth March 1841.

My Dear Sir

I have looked back to the Annual Register, and find you are quite right about the one pound notes.[†4] Very many thanks to you for your kind care.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10 MARCH 1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Almost certainly refers to the first day of the sale of Thomas Hill's library 10-17 Mar by Messrs Evans of 93 Pall Mall: see fn; handwriting supports. Address: John Forster Esquire.

My Dear Forster

Of course I am going to the Sale; and was just dressing to repair to the Parthenon,[†1] when your note arrived.

It's a farce proposing to be later than a quarter past 2, for if I am to be in Southampton Buildings at 4, what in God's name would be the use of going to Evans's at 3? I shall wait at the Parthenon from 2 to a quarter past, and if you don't come, repair to the Auction.[†2]

Will you dine with me afterwards — at home at 5?

Faithfully Always
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 11 MARCH 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday March the Eleventh. | 1841.

My Dear Macready.

When your note arrived yesterday,[†3] I had left home and gone to Evans's where I bought some of poor Tom's books, and whither I have dispatched an agent today, to purchase more.[†4] There's a cup, made from the Bard's

Mulberry tree, and presented by somebody or other, to Garrick.[†1] It is quite clear to me that this relic must be yours; the more especially as you have very good stuff to put into it — no man better.

I have booked Monday the 22nd. at a quarter before seven, for a full inside.[†2] A sort of madness is upon me (occasioned by seeing the buds come out) which prevents me from doing anything but walk round and round the garden,[†3] haunted by a ghostly clock which I don't seem to care for.

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W.C. Macready Esquire

Fine weather for the hooping-cough. Since such things must be, it is a most fortunate time.

To MRS BENNETT,[†4] 11 MARCH 1841

Mention in N, I, 303.[†5]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 12 MARCH 1841

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Endorsed by Forster: "Enormous Black Seal on Envelope".

Devonshire Terrace.
Friday Evening | March The Twelfth 1841.

My Dear Maclise.

You will be greatly shocked and grieved to hear that the Raven[†6] is no more.

He expired to-day at a few minutes after Twelve o'Clock at noon. He had been ailing (as I told you t'other night) for a few days, but we anticipated no serious result, conjecturing that a portion of the white paint he swallowed last summer might be lingering about his vitals without having any serious effect upon his constitution. Yesterday afternoon he was taken so much worse that I sent an express for the medical gentleman (Mr. Herring)[†1] who promptly attended, and administered a powerful dose of castor oil. Under the influence of this medicine, he recovered so far as to be able at 8 o'Clock p.m. to bite Topping. His night was peaceful. This morning at daybreak he appeared better; received (agreeably to the doctor's directions) another dose of castor oil; and partook plentifully of some warm gruel, the flavor of which he appeared to relish. Towards eleven o'Clock he was so much worse that it was found necessary to muffle the stable knocker. At half past, or thereabouts, he was heard talking to himself about the horse and Topping's family, and to add some incoherent expressions which are supposed to have been either a foreboding of his approaching dissolution, or some wishes relative to the disposal of his little property — consisting chiefly of halfpence which he had buried in different parts of the garden. On the clock striking twelve he appeared slightly agitated, but he soon recovered, walked twice or thrice along the coach-house, stopped to bark, staggered, exclaimed "Halloa old girl!" (his favorite expression) and died.

He behaved throughout with a decent fortitude, equanimity, and selfpossession, which cannot be too much admired. I deeply regret that being in ignorance of his danger I did not attend to receive his last instructions. Something remarkable about his eyes occasioned Topping to run for the doctor at Twelve. When they returned together our friend was gone. It was the medical gentleman who informed me of his decease. He did it with great caution and delicacy, preparing me by the remark that "a jolly queer start had taken place", but the shock was very great notwithstanding.

I am not wholly free from suspicions of poison — a malicious butcher has been heard to say that he would "do" for him — his plea was, that he would not be molested in taking orders down the Mews, by any bird that wore a tail — other persons have also been heard to threaten — among others, Charles Knight[†2] who has just started a weekly publication, price fourpence;[†3] Barnaby being, as you know, Threepence. I have directed a post mortem examination, and the body has been removed to Mr. Herring's school of Anatomy for that purpose.

I could wish, if you can take the trouble, that you would inclose this to Forster when you have read it. I cannot discharge the painful task of communication more than once.[†1] Were they Ravens who took Manna to somebody in the wilderness? At times I hope they were, and at others I fear they were not, or they would certainly have stolen it by the way. In profound sorrow, I am ever Your bereaved friend. CD.

Kate is as well as can be expected, but terribly low as you may suppose. The children seem rather glad of it. He bit their ancles. But that was play ——[†2]

To THOMAS LATIMER, 13 MARCH 1841†

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Thirteenth March | 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I thank you heartily for your kind letter, and shall hope to hear from you again at your convenience.

I don't think any object would be gained by concealing the fact of my having paid the bill.[†1] So long as he is left to suppose that I traced it from Chapman and Hall's and took it up, all the end we need have in view is gained.

I received a paper from you[†2] after I had written the first paragraph of this note. [†a]It is curious that I have always fancied the Old Curiosity Shop to be my XXX,[†3] and that I never had the design and purpose of a story so distinctly marked in my mind, from its commencement. All its quietness arose out of a deliberate purpose; the notion being to stamp upon it from the first, the shadow of that early death.[†4] I think I shall always like it better than anything I have done or may do. So much for authorship.[†a]

Bulwer who read it through t'other day holds exactly my opinion,[†5] and Lord Jeffrey[†6] was — and is I believe but I have not seen him since its conclusion[†7] — of the same mind. I know a great many people are of yours,[†8] or I shouldn't say so much.

My raven died suddenly yesterday at noon. He is a great loss to me. He buried in his lifetime immense quantities of treasure (in halfpence) in various parts of the garden — so much, indeed, that if it were not spring time I should certainly have it dug up. His death was characteristic. He had had some castor oil, and a little warm gruel to assist its operation; and having swallowed the last-named medicine with infinite relish, walked the Stable twice or thrice — very slowly — from end to end. Suddenly he stopped, staggered, called my man by his name, walked on again, stopped, cried "Halloa old girl!" — which I take to be an apostrophe to death, which is feminine in Latin — and expired. The medical gentleman (one Herring, a bird fancier) arrived immediately afterwards and broke the intelligence to me. He did it with great delicacy, preparing me with the remark that "a jolly queer start as ever he know'd had took place back'ards there" (the stable is in the rear of the premises) but the shock was very great of course.

I am not without suspicions of Poison — a butcher having been heard to threaten — and have directed a Post Mortem examination.

Excuse this rambling note, for my commission is always opening and never shutting up again.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Latimer Esquire

To BASIL HALL, 16 MARCH 1841

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Evening Sixteenth March | 1841.

My Dear Hall — for I see it must be juniores priores,[†2] and that I must demolish the ice at a blow.

I have not had courage until last night to read Lady De Lancey's narrative,[†3] and but for your letter[†4] I should not have mustered it even then. One glance at it when (through your kindness) it first arrived here, impressed me with a foreboding of its terrible truth; and I really have shrunk from it, in pure lack of heart.

After working at Barnaby all day, and wandering about the most wretched and distressful streets for a couple of hours in the evening — searching for some pictures I wanted to build upon[†5] — I went at it, at about ten oClock.[†1] To say that the reading that most astonishing and tremendous account has constituted an epoch in my life — that I never shall forget the lightest word of it — that I cannot throw the impression aside and never saw anything so real, so touching, and so actually present before my eyes, is nothing. I am husband and wife, dead man and living woman, Emma[†2] and General Dundas,[†3] doctor and bedstead, — everything and everybody (but the Prussian officer[†4] — damn him) all in one. What I have always looked upon as masterpieces of powerful and affecting description, seem as nothing in my eyes. If I live for fifty years, I shall dream of it every now and then from this hour to the day of my death with the most frightful reality. The slightest mention of a battle will bring the whole thing before me. I shall never think of the Duke any more, but as he stood in his shirt with the officer in full dress uniform,[†5] or as he dismounted from his horse when the gallant man was struck down.

It is a striking proof of the power of that most extraordinary man Defoe, that I seem to recognize in every line of the narrative, something of him. Has this occurred to you? The going to Waterloo with that unconsciousness of everything in the road, but the obstacles to getting on — the shutting herself up in her room and determining not to hear — the not going to the door when the knocking came — the finding out by her wild spirits when she heard he was safe, how much she had feared when in doubt and anxiety — the desperate desire to move towards him — the whole description of the cottage; and his condition; and their daily shifts and contrivances; and the lying down beside him in the bed and both falling asleep; and his resolving not to serve any more but to live quietly thenceforth; and her sorrow when she saw him eating with an appetite, so soon before his death; and his death itself — all these are matters of truth which only that astonishing creature, as I think, could have told in fiction.

Of all the beautiful and tender passages — the thinking every day how happy and blest she was — the decorating him for the dinner — the standing in the balcony at night, and seeing the troops melt away through the gate — and the rejoining him on his sick bed — I say not a word. They are God's own and should be sacred. But let me say again with an earnestness which pen and ink can no more convey than toast and water, in thanking you heartily for the perusal of this paper, that its impression on me never can be told; that the ground she travelled (which I know well)[†1] is holy ground to me from this day; and that please Heaven I will tread it every foot, this very next Summer,[†2] to have the softened recollection of this sad story on the very earth where it was acted. You won't smile at this, I know. When my enthusiasms are awakened by such things, they don't wear out.[†3]

Have you ever thought within yourself of that part where having suffered so much by the news of his death, she will not believe he is alive? I should have supposed that unnatural if I had seen it in fiction.

I shall never dismiss the subject from my mind, but with these hasty and very imperfect words I shall dismiss it from my paper with two additional remarks — firstly that Kate has been grievously putting me out by sobbing over it while I have been writing this, and has just retired in an agony of grief — and secondly that if a time should ever come when you would not object to letting a friend copy it for himself, I hope you will bear me in your thoughts.[†4]

———————

It seems the poorest nonsense in the world to turn to anything else — that is, seems to me being fresher in respect of Lady De Lancey than you — but my Raven's dead. He had been ailing for a few days but not seriously, as we thought, and was apparently recovering, when symptoms of relapse occasioned me to send for an eminent medical gentleman (one Herring; a bird fancier in the New Road) who promptly attended, and administered a powerful dose of castor oil. This was on Tuesday last. On Wednesday Morning he had another dose of castor oil; and a teacup-full of warm gruel, which he took with great relish, and under the influence of which he so far recovered his spirits as to be enabled to bite the groom severely. At 12 o'Clock at noon he took several turns up and down the stable with a grave, sedate air — and suddenly reeled. This made him thoughtful. He stopped directly, shook his head, moved on again, stopped once more, cried in a tone of remonstrance and considerable surprise "Halloa old girl!" — and immediately died.

He has left a rather large property (in cheese and halfpence) buried, for security's sake, in various parts of the garden. I am not without suspicions of poison. — A butcher was heard to threaten him some weeks since — and he stole a clasp knife belonging to a vindictive carpenter, which was never found. For these reasons I directed a post mortem examination, preparatory to the body being stuffed; the result of it has not yet reached me. The medical gentleman broke out the fact of his decease to me with great delicacy, observing that "the jolliest queer start had taken place with that 'ere knowing card of a bird, as ever he see'd — " but the shock was naturally very great. With reference to the jollity of the start, it appears that a raven dying at two hundred and fifty or thereabouts, is looked upon as an infant. This one would hardly, as I may say, have been born for a century or so to come, being only two or three years old.

I want to know more about the promised "tickler"[†1] — when it's to come — what it's to be — and in short all about it, that I may give it the better welcome. I don't know how it is, but I am celebrated, either for writing no letters at all, or for the briefest specimens of epistolary correspondence in existence. And here I am — in writing to you — on the Sixth side! I won't make it a seventh any way: so with love to all your home circle, and from all mine, I am now and always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am very glad you like Barnaby.[†1] I have great designs in store, but am sadly cramped at first for room.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 MARCH 1841]

Extract in F, II, x, 174. Date: given by Forster as 18 Mar — the day after the Hill sale had ended.

I have done nothing today but cut the Swift,[†2] looking into it with a delicious laziness in all manner of delightful places, and put poor Tom's books away. I had a letter from Edinburgh this morning,[†3] announcing that Jeffrey's visit to London will be the week after next; telling me that he drives about Edinburgh declaring there has been "nothing so good as Nell since Cordelia,"[†4] which he writes also to all manner of people; and informing me of a desire in that romantic town to give me greeting and welcome.[†5] For this and other reasons I am disposed to make Scotland my destination in June rather than Ireland.[†6] Think, do think, meantime (here are ten good weeks), whether you couldn't, by some effort worthy of the owner of the gigantic helmet,[†1] go with us. Think of such a fortnight — York, Carlisle, Berwick, your own Borders,[†2] Edinburgh, Rob Roy's country, railroads, cathedrals, country inns, Arthur's-seat, lochs, glens, and home by sea. DO think of this, seriously, at leisure.

To THOMAS MITTON, 19 MARCH 1841*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth March 1841.

Dear Tom.

I'll come down to you at a quarter to four. I am hard at work (having been fearfully lazy since Monday) but will take a couple of hours before dinner, and resume at night.

I am, as you are, much surprised that Alfred has not heard from the New Zealand folks. I dictated a letter to him yesterday, which he wrote and sent to the chief clerk.[†3] It cannot fail, I think, to bring something decisive soon.

Faithfully Always

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

I thought this a good opportunity of sending you the C & H accounts.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 22 MARCH 1841

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

Devonshire Terrace.
Monday March Twenty Second | 1841.

My Dear Talfourd

That immortally sluggish binder has at length completed your Nickleby, which I pray you accept herewith. The two Clock Volumes are in progress.

The mention of them brings me to asking a favor of you. I must have the works to dinner again. Will Saturday April the Tenth at a quarter past six, suit you? — And if so, will you on that day again kindly do for me what no man can do so well, or with so much pleasure to all his hearers?[†4]

The celebration of the Second Volume[†1] entails these pains and penalties upon you.[†2]

With best regards to Mrs. Talfourd and to Miss Ely.

Believe me ever
My Dear Talfourd | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd

To W. C. MACREADY, [22 MARCH 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly Mon 22 Mar 41, the day the Siddons Committee met at Exeter Hall and Macready recorded in his diary: "Then Bulwer came; an excuse from Dickens and Tom Moore" (Diaries, II, 129).

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Morning.

My Dear Macready.

I have had this morning a grievous letter from the Printer which obliges me — either to dine at home this evening, or stay at home this morning. I choose the lesser evil of the two, and send you this, to beg that in the Siddons matter you will at this first Meeting do all for me that you do for yourself.[†4]

In haste | Always My Dear Macready
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

W. C. Macready Esquire

To JOHN SCOTT,[†1] 22 MARCH 1841

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
March The Twenty Second 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I really cannot tell you how much pleasure I have derived from the receipt of your warm-hearted and welcome note; nor can I thank you for it sufficiently.

Although I know in my heart and conscience that every action of my life and every impulse by which I am guided give the lie to the assertion, I am still greatly pained to learn that you have ever heard me charged with forgetting old friends or associates. Those who know me best, best know how such a charge would wound me, and how very undeserved it is. There is no character I so detest and abhor as a man who presumes on his prosperity. I feel its baseness so strongly that if I supposed my children could at any future time believe me to have been a creature of that kind, I should be wretched.

Happily, although I have made many friends, I have never since my schooltime lost one. The pleasantest and proudest part of my correspondence is that in which I have stored the congratulations of some from whom I had been separated by distance or accident for several years; and believe me that from a little pale schoolmaster[†2] who taught me my letters (and who turned up miraculously the other day in a high state of preservation) to those who have more recent and more fleeting claims on my regard, I have never in my life — and especially in my later life — no, not once, treated any single human being with coldness or hauteur. I have a capacity, and a strong inclination, for feeling warmly towards all those whom I have known in less successful times; and any man who reports me unjustly in this respect, either does me wilfully an envious and grudging wrong, or acquiesces too easily in a falsehood, of which he may convince himself at the smallest possible expence of trouble and justice.

Let me thank you again, very faintly and imperfectly, for your honest letter. I shall put it among the grateful records to which I have referred; and I do not despair of increasing their bulk before I die, by communications not very dissimilar, even from those who now mistake me most.

Pray, if you should have reason to think when you read the Clock that I have written anything about this time in extremely good spirits, believe that you have had a large share in awakening them — and believe besides that I am with sincerity

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Scott Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 MARCH 1841]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Macready recorded in his diary for 22 Mar 41: "Mrs. Jameson, Mrs. Pierce Butler, Kenney, Dickens, Travers, Harness and Rogers dined with us" (Diaries, II, 129). Presumably CD's note was in answer to a letter from Forster asking who had been present at the dinner, and was written next day or soon after.

My Dear Forster

I shall be out between 2 and 4, and will call on you.

Faithfully Always
CD.

An anonymous man with grey whiskers[†1]
Rogers
Kenney[†2]
Mrs. Butler[†3]
Mr.[†4] Jameson[†5]
Harness

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 MARCH 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 166. Date: 25 Mar according to Forster.

I see there is yet room for a few lines, and you are quite right in wishing what I cut out to be restored. I did not want Joe to be so short about Dolly, and really wrote his references to that young lady carefully[†1] — as natural things with a meaning in them. Chigwell, my dear fellow, is the greatest place in the world.[†2] Name your day for going. Such a delicious old inn[†3] opposite the churchyard — such a lovely ride — such beautiful forest scenery — such an out of the way, rural, place — such a sexton! I say again, name your day.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 MARCH 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 167. Date: 26 Mar according to Forster.

I have shut myself up by myself to-day, and mean to try and "go it" at the Clock;[†4] Kate being out, and the house peacefully dismal. I don't remember altering the exact part you object to, but if there be anything here you object to, knock it out ruthlessly.[†5]

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 27 MARCH 1841

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh March 1841.

My Dear Cattermole.

Will you book Saturday the Tenth of April at a quarter past 6 (that's this day fortnight) to dine here with our Clock Works, in honor of the new Wolume?[†1] And will you furthermore get the steam up to an extent which will enable you to toast the Ali Babas or wood cutters,[†2] to the concern?

Always Faithfully | And at present hastily
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To CHARLES GRAY, 27 MARCH 1841*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty Seventh March 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Will you do me the favor to dine with me on Saturday the Tenth of April, at a quarter past six, to welcome our new volume?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

— Gray Esquire

To WILLIAM SHOBERL,[†4] 29 MARCH 1841

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 98 (1873); MS 2 pp.; dated 29 Mar 41.

I want to know when I shall revise the proofs of the end of the second volume,[†5] comprising the latter portion of Mr. Landor's paper, which I wish that Gentleman to correct.[†6]

To BASIL HALL, [?31 MARCH 1841]

Mention in Hall to CD, 1 Apr (see fn). Date: written between Hall's letters of 29 Mar and 1 Apr.

Acquiescing in Hall's wish to possess a bust of him and have it done by Mr Joseph[†1] and to give him a bust of himself by Joseph; approving of his notion of writing "Seaport sketches";[†2] and saying that Hall's humility about his own writing made him uneasy.[†3]

To J. C. PRINCE,[†4] 31 MARCH 1841*

MS Winifred A. Myers Ltd.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thirty First March 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Prince, and begs to assure him that he will have great pleasure in subscribing to his book.[†5]

April

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 1 APRIL 1841

Extract in J. F. Drake catalogue No. 191; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1 Apr 41.

With all my heart — at half past six next Saturday, in the Athenaeum dining room.[†1] I shall want to walk into Lord Northampton's and out again in the course of the Evening as it is the last "swarry" and I have not been yet; but that will not interfere.[†2]

To FRANCIS SMEDLEY,[†3] 1 APRIL 1841*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | April The First, 1841.

Dear Sir,

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note. I am not "free" of Tothill Fields Bridewell (I am of most other jails), and do entertain a curiosity to see the Palace Victim;[†4] strongly doubting the popular belief in his sharpness of intellect.[†5]

Therefore, I will call on you next Tuesday, as you are good enough to leave the day to me, at a quarter after twelve.[†6]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Smedley Esquire.

To R. S. HORRELL, 1 APRIL 1841

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace. | April The First 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I think the improvement you have made in the inclosed MS, very great. My objection is entirely removed, and I have read it with the greatest pleasure.

You will not consider me hypercritical if I suggest to you that in lieu of the "shriek" at page 5, a groan or sigh or murmur would be more in consonance with the spirit of the piece. At page 7 marréd is awkward I think. Sullied would be better. And going back to page 5 again, I would rather see "good creature" or something to that effect than "Ha! woman" when he is apostrophising the nurse. This, however, is altogether a matter of taste.

I don't think it needs any other alteration whatever; and I shall be very happy to receive the copy from you, whenever it suits your leisure and convenience.

If I were you, I would send it to Blackwood's — you are not to be discouraged, mind, if it be rejected[†1] — with some such note as this: "S.H presents his compliments to the Editor of Blackwood's Magazine, and earnestly begs that he will do him the favor to read the accompanying paper which is very short, and which he forwards with much diffidence and self-distrust." The shorter such a communication is, the better; and I always found when I edited a Magazine, that a modest note arrested me when I had been wading through seas of nonsense and was growing almost too dull to see the words upon the paper.

With best wishes for your success, believe me

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

[S]. H[arford][†2] Esquire

To HENRY COLBURN, 1 APRIL 1841

Facsimile[†3] in CD's Original Autograph Copy of his Letter to Henry Colburn ... Together with a Note to Forster, privately printed for Cumberland Clark, 1918.

(Copy)

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.

April The First 1841.

Sir

As I address you upon a matter of business, and not a mere question of gentlemanly and courteous treatment, I count upon receiving an answer.

Last June, you objected to the quality of some essays by Mr. Walter Savage Landor[†1] which I had forwarded to you for insertion in the Pic Nic Papers, in my capacity as Editor of that work. Mr. Forster, himself an intimate friend of Mr. Landor's, saw you upon the subject (I being then out of town) and pointed out to you your mistake — You withdrew — to reconsider it.

Since then, I have several times requested to see a complete proof of these articles, in which you had — without any communication with me — stopped the Printer some weeks previously. Of these applications you have taken no notice whatever. In the mean time I have with-held my paper, in the hope of bringing you by that means to do your duty.

It is apart from my object to characterize this proceeding of yours in reference to myself, or to discuss your competency to sit in judgment on the productions of Mr. Landor. I content myself with asserting my right as Editor of the book to choose the matter for its pages, and denying any authority on your part to interfere with my selection.

If the book were publishing as my own property or for my own profit, I would not forego this right though I retarded its publication a dozen years and wanted bread the while. But as the case is one of "charity", and as I cannot resist, and do not hold myself justified in resisting, the urgent appeals of the lady for whose benefit our price is to be paid, I will no longer delay it by with-holding my contribution. I have therefore to request that you will, in reply to this, send me back that Manuscript of Mr. Landor's which you refuse to print, and in reference to which, you have taken my office on yourself; — in order that I may return it to that gentleman with a statement of the circumstances leading to his receiving it.[†2] This done, the Printer will receive my tale, and the book will be completed.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 1 APRIL 1841

Facsimile in CD's Original Autograph Copy of his Letter to Henry Colburn ... Together with a Note to Forster, privately printed for Cumberland Clark, 1918.

April The First 1841

My Dear Forster[†3]

Here is a copy of the letter to Colburn — sent along with an imaginary gauntlet, to day. Preserve it,[†1] for I have no other. The letter to Landor I will write when I have received an answer from this sneaking vagabond.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To EDWARD DUBOIS,[†2] 2 APRIL 1841

MS Harvard College Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | April The Second 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Thank you for your note of yesterday.

I was a leetle startled when I first went to Evans's, by the autographic department of the Catalogue,[†3] but a moment's reflection assured me that the Executors had no choice in the matter; for those who have a gratification in preserving such things during their lives, usually contemplate their sale at some distant time, and have a pleasure in anticipating the little bustle it will make.

You are quite right in your philosophy. The pooh-poohers[†4] and Lord Burleighs[†5] have it hollow, all the world through — but we won't allow Hill to have been one of that kind.

He used to tell me often that he had kept a Diary for — I am afraid to say how many years, but I know it was a great number. I am looking forward with great expectation to your publishing it.[†6] I have in my mind's eye at this minute the expression of face, with which he told me he intended it to see the light — an unfathomable face — with something of John Murray, hinted, and perhaps a dim suggestion of three Volumes — but all the rest a deep, inscrutable mystery. It was behind a door he whispered it — He gave me to understand that between ourselves it would throw a light on certain autobiographies — that somebody hadn't represented something quite correctly somewhere — that he knew all about that, bless you (God knows what) before she (God knows who) was trusted with it. And so, with one nudge of his elbow and three nods, he dismissed the subject and fell upon another no less weighty and secret.[†1]

I really did love him. He seems to have carried away with him half the pleasant, good-humoured little eccentricities of the world — of my world at least, as Charles Lamb says.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Du Bois Esquire

To J. P. HARLEY, 3 APRIL 1841

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace. | April The Third 1841.

My Dear Harley.

The "works" of the Clock dine with me next Saturday at a quarter past 6, in honor of our new volume. It is Passion week, and I devoutly hope you have no engagement to prevent you from joining the little party[†3] which you have gladdened so often on the like occasions.[†4]

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire.

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, [4] APRIL 1841*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: 5 Apr 41 was a Monday; presumably CD was writing on the 4th.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night | April The Fifth 1841.

My Dear Landor.

I shall look for the end of the month right earnestly, and shall be heartily glad and pleased to see you.

I am in fearfully low spirits tonight — bilious, behind-hand in my work in consequence, blue devil haunted and miserable. Thank God there are no real causes for this (saving, I suppose, some slight disorder in the system) and it's no great matter to me and less to you, except as an explanation of this poor note — for which reason I mention it.

Four months! I don't believe a word of it. If you're away from Bath four whole months consecutively, I'll write four novels for fourpence. Four months![†1] In the very high time and season of roses![†2] Your note bears date on the First of April, or it would have no such wild and monstrous statement in it, I'll be sworn.

Don't talk of such rash acts. Don't think of them. Come to London. Go to Paris. But return to Bath at short intervals wherever you go. How can a man live without sun, light, heat — How are you to be inspired — How are you to go on writing (as I know you do) — how are you to go on at all? It cannot[†3] be done. Or if it can, it must be by some frozen-hearted, slowblooded, torpid wretch; and you are not the man to do it.

If you do, I renounce you. I hold the Landor faith no more, and publicly recant.

Always Faithfully — but at present | conditionally | Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

All well and blooming — your dutiful Godson included.

To H. P. SMITH,[†4] 5 APRIL 1841*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Morning April Fifth | 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I am so very much indisposed by a bilious attack, that we are reluctantly compelled to deny ourselves the pleasure of being with you to day. I assure you it grieves me very much to lose so good an opportunity of improving your acquaintance though I hope to have very many more — but indisposition is a serious matter to me who am so constantly engaged, and I am obliged[†1] to drive it away by vigorous and rigid measures, whereof the first is keeping at home and living abstemiously.

— II - 252 —

Mrs. Dickens begs me to present her compliments to Mrs. Smith. I doubt whether my bilious and most uncomfortable regards are worth acceptance, but I venture to add them notwithstanding.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To FRANCIS SMEDLEY, 5 APRIL 1841

Extract in N, I, 312, from catalogue source; dated Devonshire Terrace, 5 Apr 41.

I am extremely unwell with a vile bilious disorder which must be promptly subdued and has been taken in hand by the doctor[†1] with a most unpleasant alacrity[†2].

— II - 253 —

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 APRIL 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 167. Date: 5 Apr according to Forster.

Don't fail to erase anything that seems to you too strong. It is difficult for me to judge what tells too much, and what does not.[†3] I am trying a very quiet number[†4] to set against this necessary one. I hope it will be good, but I am in very sad condition for work. Glad you think this powerful. What I have put in is more relief, from the raven.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 APRIL 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 167. Date: two days after 5 Apr according to Forster.

I have done that number[†6] and am now going to work on another. I am bent (please Heaven) on finishing the first chapter[†7] by Friday night.

I hope to look in upon you to-night, when we'll dispose of the toasts for Saturday.[†1] Still bilious — but a good number, I hope, notwithstanding. Jeffrey has come to town and was here yesterday.

To ANDREW BELL,[†2] 7 APRIL [1841]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: 7 Apr was Wednesday in 1841; handwriting supports that year.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Wednesday April The Seventh.

Dear Sir.

It gave me very great pleasure, I assure you, to receive your letter last night. I read the paper[†3] you did me the favor to send with it, before I went to bed, and was much amused and interested with it. Charles Lamb would have been charmed with it, I am sure.

I beg you to use my name among your other credentials, as freely and fully as you please.

And in thanking you for the many services I have received at your hands in the exercise of your painful calling[†4] (which I have often observed, and often commended) let me couple with my very sincere acknowledgments, my cordial wishes for your prosperity and success. It will afford me real gratification to hear that you are doing well; and if any commendation[†5] of mine can serve you at any time, it will be heartily at your service.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Andrew Bell.

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 8 APRIL 1841

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday April The Eighth | 1841.

My Dear Fletcher.

On the Twenty First of June, God willing, and no accident or misfortune interposing, I shall leave this for Edinburgh; staying one night, or possibly two, upon the road.

The choice of the Hotel I will leave to you; and some week or ten days beforehand, I will write to entreat you to take the trouble to bespeak the needful accommodation for us — a trouble I know you will take.

In the matter of the dinner or rumours of dinner, I feel bound to say — stop nothing. You know my "quiet ways", but coming Northward really as an acknowledgment of the kind opinion of the Northern people,[†1] and with a cordial desire to shake hands with them one and all, I would not for the world reject any compliment they, or any of them, sought to offer me. Therefore I say, stop nothing; and be assured that I should accept any testimonial of that, or any other kind, in the full height of the spirit in which it would be bestowed — and very gladly and proudly.

Jeffrey called on me two or three days ago, and I went to him this morning.[†2] He was in great force and charmed me exceedingly. His enthusiasm relative to the Old Curiosity Shop, exceeded even what you had prepared me for,[†3] and upon my word I c[a]me[†4] out of the house more delighted than if I had been ten thousand pounds the richer than when I went in — as I was in the true wealth undoubtedly.

The Bust[†5] arrived safe, and is considered by everybody (by Maclise at the head of them) much more like in the Marble than in the Cast. Kate wrote to thank you for it, but was guilty of the small omission (a very slight one) of forgetting to put it in the post. She is[†6] going to write again, and I have no doubt you will get her note, either with this, or immediately afterwards.

Somebody has been talking to me all the time I have been writing this. I am afraid it's illegible. But you would rather have it than wait, I know, and I would rather you had — so here (it) goes.

Always Dear Fletcher | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

You shall be our "Dougal"[†1] to the Highlands, and I your bailie. It was Forster who noticed Susan Hopley.[†2] He has sent me the book to read.

Note

There was, as you will see by the erasures, a redundancy of L's in the above paragraph.[†3] The talking man was the occasion of it.

To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, 8 APRIL 1841†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Edward Marjoribanks Esquire | &c &c.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday April the Eighth 1841.

My Dear Sir

[†a]Twice a year — that is, at the end of each volume — I hold, not a solemn supper,[†4] but a solemn dinner, whereat all the Clock "Works", publishers, printers, artists, engravers, &c &c assemble together in high festival.[†a] And we make wonderful speeches I assure you, and strange things happen — such as men in black who were never seen to smile before, cutting jokes — and songs breaking out in unexpected places — and many other moral Vesuviuses of that nature.

Unhappily next Saturday is the great day. Three white waistcoats have been seen on lines in suburban districts under suspicious circumstances, and I have reason to suppose are preparing for the occasion; a studious-looking man has been observed in Saint John's Wood muttering such scraps as "Gentlemen I rise" — " — on the present occasion" — "more than I can express" and so forth — and the description tallies exactly with a renowned engraver.[†5] Under any[†6] other circumstances (I am serious now) I would have a cold immediately, but in this predicament I have nothing for it but to regret most heartily you didn't say Monday or any other day, indeed, but this.

Dear Sir Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Marjoribanks Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 8 APRIL 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday April the Eighth | 1841.

My Dear Henry

Remember that the time for the Clock Works is a quarter past 6 on Saturday next.

Love to Letitia.

Affectionately Always
[CHARLES DICKENS][†1]

Henry Austin Esquire

To THE REV. THOMAS ROBINSON,[†2] 8 APRIL 1841

Tracing of MS by Mr R. L. McCulloch.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thursday April The Eighth/41.

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your interesting letter. Nor am I the less pleased to receive it, by reason that I cannot find it in my conscience to agree in many important respects with the body to which you belong.

In the love of virtue and hatred of vice, in the detestation of cruelty and encouragement of gentleness and mercy — all Men who endeavour to be acceptable to their Creator in any way, may freely agree. There are more roads to Heaven, I am inclined to think, than any Sect believes; but there can be none which have not these Flowers garnishing the way.

I feel it a great tribute, therefore, to receive your letter. It is most welcome and acceptable to me. I thank you for it heartily, and am proud of the approval of one who suffered in his youth, even more than my poor child.[†3]

While you teach in your walk of life the lessons of tenderness you have learnt in sorrow, trust me that in mine, I will pursue cruelty and oppression, the Enemies of all God's creatures of all codes and creeds, so long as I have the energy of thought and the power of giving it utterance.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend | Thomas Robinson

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 APRIL 1841*

MS Miss Christina Macready.

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday April The Eighth. | 1841.

My Dear Macready.

If Mrs. Macready isn't going to have an evening party next Saturday, may I ask you to bring Meyrick[†1] with you, as you were kind enough to do on the last Clock work occasion?[†2]

Faithfully always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 9 APRIL 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Friday April The Ninth 1841.

My Dear Macready.

I think No. 1[†3] will suffice. Thank you no less for the offer of No. 2.

I am afraid I shall not be able to go out today. Perhaps if you are not anxious to call at Lord Northampton's now, you will let it stand over until one day next week. Then, I shall be happy to go with you.[†4]

My courage rises higher and higher now that you have settled for Drur[y] Lane.[†5] I feel more strongly than [ever][†6] that it is the position you alone should occupy — the position you alone can maintain — [an]d the venture tha[t] is as sure as a[ny] man's can be [to][†7] be crowned in the end, with a m[ ][†8] and success.

Always Faithfully Yours | My Dear Macready
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 APRIL 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 167. Date: given by Forster as "five days later" than To Forster, 7 Apr (itself "two days later" than letter dated by him 5 Apr).

I finished the number[†1] yesterday, and, although I dined with Jeffrey, and was obliged to go to Lord Denman's[†2] afterwards (which made me late), have done eight slips of the Lamplighter[†3] for Mrs. Macrone, this morning. When I have got that off my mind, I shall try to go on steadily, fetching up[†4] the Clock lee-way.

To MESSRS COX & SONS,[†5] 13 APRIL 1841*

MS Clark Memorial Library, University of California.

Devonshire Terrace | April The Thirteenth 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Cox and Sons, and begs to say that he will leave out his contribution to the Pic Nic Papers, under cover to them, if they will have the goodness to send a boy for it on Monday Morning.

To MISS CATHERINE HUTTON,[†6] 13 APRIL 1841

Text from N, I, 314.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park, London
April the Thirteenth, 1841

Dear Madam,

Mr. Charles Knight punctually executed your commission and sent me your father's biography.[†1] I should have acknowledged its receipt immediately, but I had forgotten your address, and hoped to have my memory refreshed by hearing from you again.

I have not yet had time to do more than dip into the volume just before going to bed, but what I have read has interested me greatly. The part on which I chanced to light on cutting the leaves was that which described Mr. Hutton's "running away", and first entry into Birmingham.[†2] I was much struck with the whole description of his journey — very much — and felt as if I were reading some new story by DeFoe.

Let me thank you very cordially for your kind recollection of me in sending me the book which I am sure I shall read with strong interest throughout, and with hearty good wishes for your health and happiness, believe me, Dear Madam,

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD JEFFREY, [?14 or 15 APRIL 1841]

Mention in Jeffrey to CD, "Thursday 15th" [Apr 41]: see fn.

Confirming an invitation for 26 Apr.[†3]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?15 APRIL 1841]*

MS Private. Date: Initials (not wholly reliable) suggest Mar-Apr 41, in which period 15 Apr seems the only possible Thursday. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Devonshire T. | Thursday

Dear Mac.

Forster dines here today at ½ past 5. Will you dine with us? I mean to leave off, and go out for a ride — now. Will you come with us? Kate waits, and will bring you to me.

In haste | Always
CD

To [?SIR FRANCIS AND LADY BURDETT], [?15] APRIL [1841]*

MS Bodleian Library. Date: endorsed 1841 in contemporary hand; style of date ("April The Sixteenth") supports. But since 16 Apr 41 was a Friday, CD was probably writing on Thurs 15th. Address: see fn.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday, April The Sixteenth.

Mr. Charles Dickens has very great pleasure in accepting [?Sir Francis and Lady Burdett's][†1] kind Invitation for tomorrow.

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE,[†2] 16 APRIL 1841*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | April The Sixteenth, 1841.

My Dear Sir,

Have you anything better to do on Monday Week the Twenty Sixth, than to dine here at 7 o'clock — only to meet Jeffrey, and one or two others whom you know?[†3]

If you have not, I shall be truly glad to see you.[†4]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 APRIL 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace.
Saturday April The Seventeenth | 1841.

My Dear Henry.

The pamphlet[†1] is extremely well got up, and looks capital. The following names occur to me — should I think of any others, I will send them to you.

Affy. always
CD.

Sir Martin Archer Shee,[†2] P.R.A. 32 Cavendish Sqe.
The Right Hon The Marquis of Lansdowne[†3]
54 Berkeley Square
The Right Hon The Marquis of Northampton
145 Piccadilly.
The Right Hon The Lord Monteagle[†4]
8 Mansfield Street.

Sir Francis Chantrey[†1] R.A. 30 Lower Belgrave Place
Pimlico

His Majesty The King of the Cannibal Islands[†2]
Cannibal Islands.
World.

And all the R.As and architects you can think of. I should say Ewart M.P[†3] certainly. I don't know his address, but you'll find it in any list of Members.[†4]

I sent one copy to Forster, and begged him to notice it.[†5]

To MRS [?HURNALL],[†6] 17 APRIL 1841*

MS University of Texas. Address: see fn.

Devonshire Terrace.
Saturday April The Seventeenth | 1841.

Dear Madam.

I should have written to you the first thing this morning, had I not been anticipated by your messenger (whom I fear I have detained some time, for I was not up when he arrived) to appoint tomorrow for calling on you, and to tell you that I was unexpectedly summoned out of town yesterday morning, and did not return 'till Evening.

I regret to say that this is always with me the busiest day in the week, and that this morning I could not on any account leave home. I must therefore defer the pleasure of seeing you — very unwillingly — until your next visit to town. Wishing you health and happiness in the mean time, and trusting that I may have the good fortune to increase your stock of cheerfulness in time to come, as you make me happy by telling me I have, in time past, I am Dear Madam

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Harnace

To MRS SMITHSON, 18 APRIL 1841

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1901; dated 18 Apr 41.

To SIR EDWARD LYTTON BULWER, 19 APRIL 1841

MS Lytton Papers.

1 Devonshire Terrace. York Gate
Monday April The Nineteenth 1841.

My Dear Sir Edward.

If you have no better engagement — as you easily may have — for next Monday the Twenty Sixth, will you dine with me at Seven o'Clock?[†1] I shall be heartily glad to see you, if you will.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer.

To FRANCIS SMEDLEY, 19 APRIL 1841

Text from D, X (1914), 214.

Devonshire Terrace, | April the Nineteenth, 1841.

My dear Sir,

Unless you forbid me, I mean to call upon you next Monday between 12 and 1, and avail myself of your good offices in the matter of "The Boy Jones",[†1] as the Sunday newspapers denominate him in very fat capitals.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]
Francis Smedley Esquire.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 19 APRIL 1841*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | April The Nineteenth 1841

My Dear Sir.

I shall be happy to act as one of the Stewards at the next Anniversary Dinner, and beg you to assure the Committee of my ready and cordial co-operation on the occasion.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 APRIL 1841

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace.
Tuesday April The Twentieth 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I thank you very much for the order (which I intended calling for today, to save you trouble); and as you are so good as to offer your box at the German Opera, I will avail myself of your kindness, if you please, on Thursday Night.[†3]

I have at length been enabled to discover the benevolent Porkman. His name is Edward Hurcomb; his address, 19 William Street Lisson Grove. The poor distracted creature who stole the pork (I think it was pork) lives, or did live then, at No. 1 Carlisle Mews Paddington. Her name is Maria Robinson. The circumstance occurred on Monday December the Twenty Eighth, and was reported in the Newspaper Police Accounts of the following day.[†1]

I have given my binder instructions to put up an Old Curiosity Shop in one Volume, and when it is becomingly dressed, to send it to you.[†2] I hope I may venture to beg your acceptance of it, in this more pleasant shape, as a slight but very sincere tribute of my respect and esteem, and as conveying the author's most cordial and hearty regard.

I should add two more sentences in reference to this Copy of the Tale which I am proud to believe has added something to your stock of pleasant associations. The first is, that the binder to whom I have sent it, is the slowest man in England.[†3] The second, that as I have told him to weed out all the foreign matter that was mixed up with its earlier pages, in the Clock,[†4] it will have some blank sides here and there, and will be regularly irregular in the numbers at the top of the leaves.[†5] But it will be all together, and free from interruptions, and will serve you, I hope, until it comes to be printed in a more convenient form, some years hence.

The Raven's body was removed with every regard for my feelings, in a covered basket. It was taken off to be stuffed, but has not come home yet.

He has left a considerable property (chiefly in cheese and halfpence) buried in different parts of the garden; and the new Raven — for I have a successor[†1] — administers to the effects. He had buried in one place, a brush[†2] (which I have made two efforts to write plainly) a very large hammer, and several raw potatoes, which were discovered yesterday. He was very uneasy just before death, and wandering in his mind, talked amazing nonsense. — My servant thinks the hammer troubled him. It is supposed to have been stolen from a carpenter of vindictive disposition. — He was heard to threaten, — and I am not without suspicions of Poison.

Believe me at all times | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I beg my compliments to Miss Meredith whose cold, I hope, is better.

To WASHINGTON IRVING, 21 APRIL 1841

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate | Regents Park London
April The Twenty First 1841.

My Dear Sir.

There is no man in the World who could have given me the heartfelt pleasure you have, by your kind note of the Thirteenth of last Month.[†3] There is no living writer, and there are very few among the dead, whose approbation I should feel so proud to earn. And with everything you have written, upon my shelves, and in my thoughts, and in my heart of hearts, I may honestly and truly say so. If you could know how earnestly I write this, you would be glad to read it — as I hope you will be, faintly guessing at the warmth of the hand I autographically hold out to you, over the broad Atlantic.

I wish I could find in your welcome letter, some hint of an intention to visit England. I can't. I have held it at arm's length, and taken a bird's-eye view of it after reading it a great many times, but there is no greater encouragement in it this way than on a microscopic inspection. I should love to go with you — as I have gone, God knows how often — into Little Britain, and Eastcheap, and Green Arbour Court, and Westminster Abbey.[†4] I should like to travel with you, outside the last of the coaches, down to Bracebridge Hall.[†5] It would make my heart glad to compare notes with you about that shabby gentleman in the oilcloth hat and red-nose who sat in the nine-cornered back parlor at the Masons' Arms[†1] — and about Robert Preston[†2] — and the tallow chandler's widow[†3] whose sitting room is second nature to me — and about all those delightful places and people that I used to walk about and dream of in the daytime when a very small and not over-particularly-taken-care-of boy. I have a good deal to say too about that dashing Alonzo De Ojeda[†4] that you can't help being fonder of than you ought to be — and much to hear concerning Moorish Legend, and poor unhappy Boabdil.[†5] Diedrich Knickerbocker[†6] I have worn to death in my pocket — and yet I should shew you his mutilated[†7] carcass — with a joy past all expression.[†8]

I have been so accustomed to associate you with my pleasantest and happiest thoughts, and with my leisure hours, that I rush at once into full confidence with you, and fall — as it were naturally, and by the very laws of gravity — into your open arms. Questions come thronging to my pen as to the lips of people who meet after long hoping to do so. I don't know what to say first, or what to leave unsaid, and am constantly disposed to break off and tell you again how glad I am this moment has arrived.

My Dear Washington Irving I cannot thank you enough for your cordial and generous praise, or tell you what deep and lasting gratification it has [given me].[†9] I hope to have many letters from you, and to exchange a frequent correspondence. I send this to say so. After the first two or three, I shall settle down into a connected style, and become gradually rational.

You know what the feeling is after having written a letter, sealed it, and sent it off. I shall picture you reading this and answering it, before it has lain one night in the Post Office. Ten to one that before the fastest packet could reach New York, I shall be writing again.

Do you suppose the Post office clerks care to receive letters? I have my doubts. They get into a dreadful habit of indifference. A Postman, I imagine, is quite callous. Conceive his delivering one to himself, without being startled by a preliminary double knock — !

Always your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY,[†1] 26 APRIL [1841]*

MS University of Texas. Date: 26 Apr was Monday in 1841.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Monday Evg. April The Twenty Sixth.

My Dear Sir.

Since I left you to-day, I have been greatly distressed in my mind, concerning our wretched friend the (supposed) tailor.[†2] May I ask you to apply the inclosed trifle in any way that you think will do him the most good, and to exercise your own discretion — for none can have so good a one as you in such a case — either to pay his fine and give him the rest, or keep him his five days,[†3] and then let him have the whole to start with. In either case, I would like to send him, besides, a suit of cast-off clothes, which (if you give me your permission to forward them to the jail; I don't like to venture on sending them without it) my man shall bring directly.

I cannot express to you how much moved I have been by witnessing the results of your humanity and goodness.[†4] Men who have so much in their power and acquit themselves so well, deserve the gratitude of mankind. Accept the thanks and assurances of esteem of one among them who loves, and truly loves the rest. It is the only qualification I have for offering them to you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieut. Tracey | &c &c &c

To BASIL HALL, 27 APRIL 1841

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | April The Twenty Seventh 1841.

My Dear Hall.

Post just going — compression of sentiments required — Bust received[†1] — likeness amazing — recognizable instantly if encountered on the summit of the Great Pyramid — Scotch anecdote most striking and most distressing[†2] — dreamed of it — babbies well — wife ditto — yours the same, I hope? — Seaport sketches,[†3] one of those ideas that improves in promise as they are pondered on — Good, I am certain — Ever faithfully, and at present hastily — [†4]

BOZ.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 27 APRIL [1841]

Text from R. S. Mackenzie, Life of CD, Philadelphia, 1870, p. 214. Date: misdated 1840 by Mackenzie and N; 27 Apr was Tuesday in 1841; references to the sonnet and Ewart (see To Forster, 3 May) support that year.

Devonshire Terrace,
Tuesday, April the Twenty-seventh.

My Dear Talfourd,

Many thanks for the Sonnet.[†1] Do you know Ewart? I want, on behalf of an oppressed lady,[†2] to remind him of a promise he made her relative to the presentation of a petition to the House. I don't like to approach a man of his kidney, without an introduction. Can you give me one in a couple of lines?[†3]

Faithfully Always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To LEITCH RITCHIE,[†4] 27 APRIL [1841]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: clearly 1841 on handwriting.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
April The Twenty Seventh.

My Dear Sir.

Believe me that pecuniary considerations would have no influence with me, if I could possibly comply with your request, in the matter of the Friendship's Offering.[†5] But I cannot. While the Clock is going, my hands are tied. I have not turned aside from it to write one line for anything else, although I have been very strongly and earnestly solicited; nor can I. If I could, I would most cheerfully assist you.

You will be glad to hear that the book for Mrs. Macrone's benefit to which you kindly sent a very interesting contribution,[†6] is coming out at last.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leitch Ritchie Esquire.

To WILLIAM SHOBERL, 27 APRIL 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | April The Twenty Seventh 1841.

My Dear Sir

I couldn't write to you yesterday, for I had not heard from Mr. Browne.

He says that certainly he will finish his plates by the middle of next week — and I have no doubt he will.[†1] Please to send him two steel plates directly, and to tell the Printer to be quick in sending me a set of the proof sheets, — with a view to the subjects of the designs.[†2]

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd's Sonnet I inclose. I have a little song I should wish to find room for.[†3] It will not occupy more than a page. You shall have it tomorrow.

Mr. Forster, it seems, is writing a short paper.[†4] If you will instruct the printer to send a boy to 58 Lincolns Inn Fields for it on Friday Morning, it will be ready.

Have you sent to Mr. Cruikshank?[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Shoberl Esquire.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 28 APRIL 1841*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace
Wednesday The Twenty Eighth April | 1841.

Dear Sir.

I was in the very act of acknowledging the receipt of your first note, and assuring you that I heartily reciprocated all its friendly contents, when your second arrived.

It is impossible to doubt the wisdom and propriety of your intention, in reference to our love-lorn friend, — respecting whose ricketty intellects by the way, I would rather take his face's evidence than his sister's. If you will bestow the fifteen shillings[†1] in any portions you please on any objects who may seem deserving of such poor aid when they travel into the world again, from your seclusion, you will gratify me very much.

As you say nothing about the clothes, and as I take it for granted that his master will not like him the worse for a slight improvement in his appearance, I send them herewith. They will do the poor creature no harm at any rate, and may do him service.

I am truly indebted to you on every score for the kind interest you have shewn in this matter, and the very great pains you have taken. But the being regardless of trouble when good is to be done, must be so common with you, that it would be impertinence to thank you for it.

Believe me with sincerity | My Dear Sir
[CHARLES DICKENS][†2]

Lieutenant Tracey
&c &c &c

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 29 APRIL 1841

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | April The Twenty Ninth/41,

My Dear Ainsworth.

With all imaginable pleasure. I quite look forward to the day.[†3] It is an age since we met, and it ought not to be.

The artist has just sent home your Nickleby. He suggested variety, pleading his fancy and genius. As a wilful binder must have his way, I put the best face on the matter and gave him, his. I will bring it, together with the Pickwick, to your house-warming with me.

The old Royal George went down in consequence of having too much weight on one side.[†4] I trust the New First Rate of that name,[†5] won't be heavy anywhere. There seems to me to be too much whisker for a shilling,[†1] but that's a matter of taste —

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 APRIL 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 167 (aa), dated 29 Apr by Forster; extract in F, II, x, 173 (bb), dated simply "April" by Forster, but clearly also 29th since both extracts answer a letter from Forster dated "Thursday" [29 Apr].[†3]

[a]I am getting on very slowly. I want to stick to the story; and the fear of committing myself, because of the impossibility of trying back or altering a syllable, makes it much harder than it looks.[†4] It was too bad of me to give you the trouble of cutting the number,[†5] but I knew so well you would do it in the right places. For what Harley would call the "onward work" I really think I have some famous thoughts.[a]

[b]How often used Black[†6] and I to quarrel about the effect of the poor-law bill![†7] Walter comes in upon the cry.[†8] See whether the whigs go out upon it.[b†9]

May

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 2 MAY 1841

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday May The Second 1841.

My Dear George.

Many thanks for, and all good wishes to, the "Buss".[†1] It is wery light, wery easy on the springs, well horsed, driv in a slap up style, and altogether an uncommon spicy con-sarn. "Mind Coachman" as the old ladies say "you take me as fur as ever you go, and don't you put me down till you come to the very end of the journey."

I object, Sir, to one thing — and that is, your treatment of that 'ere windgalled, wall-eyed, spavined, knock-knee'd, gallows-bred leader, Grant[†2] — known down our yard as the Blunderer. You an't half nor a quarter sharp enough with him Sir;[†3] you should have established a raw on him as 'ud ha' made him wince till sich time as he wos made into dog's meat for halfbred mongrels — the only animals as 'ud condescend to eat him — and them only on account of his amazing sarce. I should ha' liked to have had the punishing of him Sir. I wouldn't ha' let him off so easy.[†4]

Seriously. A man has no right to live upon lies, and to trade in reputations as that scoundrel does. With an air of truth, he deliberately sits down, to tell at so much a line, what he knows to be lies about you (because he invented them) and which are calculated to give people a most unfavourable impression of your habits and character.[†5] Vermin, when caught, are never tickled, but killed outright; and having got my foot upon that louse of literature, I'd have squashed him ruthlessly.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To J. BLACKBURN, 3 MAY 1841

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday May The Third 1841

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks to you for the Magazine, which is a great curiosity. As you may suppose that I haven't read my second self "right through", you will not give me any credit for returning them within the specified time.†2

Good God how hot these Oriental Magazines look! You're so used to them, that I dare say you don't see it, but the pages are parched — burnt up — suggestive of drought and scorching heat. Some Indian birds we have, began to sing directly the parcel was brought in. I began to drink claret out of a tumbler before I had turned over the leaves of the Second Number. And all last night, I dreamed about Vishnu, and Hindoo Temples, and Indian Jugglers sitting upon nothing, and Tigers coming unexpectedly to dinner parties and bounding away into remote Jungles with English Butlers — Elephants too were so common as to be quite ridiculous; and I ate rice by hundred weights.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Blackburn Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 3 MAY [1841]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 3 May was Monday in 1841; handwriting and pale blue watermarked paper support that year.

Monday Morning the Third of May.

My Dear Forster.

I should have been very glad to go to that hallowed spot on which the eyes of Europe and the beating hearts of the civilized world are unalterably fixed†1 — but I had previously made an engagement to be with Ewart at 4 o'Clock, about "the Cry from the Oppressed" &c.†2

From the eloquent and illustrious Member for Wigan, I shall come straight to you. Wherefore, between half past four and five, expect the writer hereof. — Perhaps at half price†3 — there is†4 one Bullock†5 to be seen — I say no more —

Dinner at the Grays Inn, I suppose?

Faithfully
CD.

This rain will do good.

To MRS BOOTH, 4 MAY 1841†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Private

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday May The Fourth 1841.

Dear Mrs. Booth.

[†a]I was not home until very late last night, and did not see your letter until this morning. I have an appointment, I am sorry to say, which will take me out at the hour you name; but I shall be visible on Sunday at one, or[†6] tomorrow afternoon at half past four.[†a]

I could not bring Mr. Booth[†7] to Lord Jeffrey's recollection, neither was he acquainted with his writings. I would advise you not to urge the matter in that quarter, as I think he does not wish to interfere. I know something of Macauley,[†1] and if you like will inclose him Mr. Booth's memorial, myself; but it must have added to it the facts of his apoplexy and illness, strongly stated. As it stands, I am quite certain the case is not strong enough to attract attention among a hundred others.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Booth

To JOHN HUDSON,[†3] 5 MAY 1841

MS University of Texas.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park, London.
Wednesday May The Fifth./41.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his Compliments to Mr. Hudson, and begs to inclose him a cheque for the amount of his account.[†4] Mr. Dickens does so, by reason of its easy transmission; but if it should be inconvenient, he begs Mr. Hudson to return it, and mention any other mode of payment that may suit him better.

Mr. Dickens has to thank Mr. Hudson for the ingenious legend concerning the Punch, which he has read with breathless interest. With regard to the Punch itself, it is impossible to praise it too highly, as all who taste it at Mr. Dickens' table agree in saying.

To W. C. MACREADY, [?6 MAY 1841]*

MS Private. Date: Handwriting points to Mar-May 41. Clearly after Macready's decision of 6 Apr to take over Drury Lane, but not in Apr when the Haymarket was closed; almost certainly refers to the only tragedy Macready performed in during May — Byron's Werner, on the 5th.

My Dear Macready.

Kate will be delighted.[†5] — Maclise knows all about it.

I meant to have written you a long letter this morning about last night. But if I followed the dictates of my own heart, I should write to you every time I see you play. There is nothing I know, or can imagine, so exquisitely beautiful, so manly, noble, dignified, true, and brave, as that most exquisite and touching performance.[†1] It's Nature refined to the very highest pitch of refinement — its[†2] everything it ought to be, or can be: and to talk about it, is presumption and arrogance.

I yearn for the Drury days. — I want King Lear — I want everything — I want 'em all at once.

Always Your faithful friend
and admirer from the heart
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD JEFFREY, 11 MAY 1841

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh May 1841.

My Dear Lord Jeffrey.

I told you I was going to beg the favor of your acceptance of a Copy of the Old Curiosity Shop. Here it is.[†3] The binder, agreeably to my directions has cut out and pasted out all foreign matter, and it has the unique advantage, consequently, of being regularly irregular in the paging.[†4]

It is in a more durable form than its ordinary dress,[†5] and as it is not likely to appear in any other fashion for some years to come,[†6] I hope you will receive it and keep it for my sake. If you knew how much I mean in sending it to you,[†7] you would not wonder at my only saying that the praise you have bestowed upon the tale[†8] has afforded me more real and enduring pleasure than any other man living could give me.

Believe me with sincere regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Jeffrey

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 11 MAY 1841

Text from N, I, 319.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday, Eleventh May 1841

My Dear Sir,

I was afraid our poor friend was damaged in his intellects. Any man who goes to a Police Office without absolute necessity, must be raving mad.

I shall look out for the suit of clothes with some curiosity. I saw a hat going down Oxford Street yesterday, which looked remarkably like mine, and I am pretty sure was the tile of this ill-fated House.

Good God! When I think of him standing in the sun after he got out of the van, with his face to the wall like a scriptural mourner — and call up his desolate figure — with things upon his legs which were a kind of compromise between jack-boots and gaiters — and remember how he burst into tears when you questioned him kindly, and rubbing his dim eyes with his sooty hands wept tears of milk — when I picture him after his real fashion, and think of a clean and very flesh-coloured cupid with blue wings and scarf and bow and arrow complete, looking over his shoulder, I don't know whether to laugh or cry, or to be sad or merry. Heaven knows he is no less an object of pity for his imbecility of mind; and if he could have walked off in as many suits of clothes as there are of cards, he should have been welcome to them.

How right you were about the Sovereign! If he had had it, he would not have been a bit the better for the money, and would have come back the sooner, I dare say.[†1]

I suppose you couldn't, in your ingenuity and knowledge of dealing with these unfortunate creatures, bring about a match between him and the fair unknown, formerly in man's attire? If he could be brought to love her instead of the deceitful charmer, and she could be brought to love him instead of the aspiring Footman, and they could go off arm in arm to a Westminster Chapel with a Turnkey to give the girl away, and some light offender who was good company — say Jones — to act as Bridegroom's man, what a happy thing it would be. But I am afraid neither of them can ever forget. There are no waters of oblivion in the silent Gruel.[†2]

I am going to ask you one day next week, to let me introduce you to my friend Doctor Elliotson (who is a good, as well as clever man) whose utmost interest I have awakened by a very imperfect description of your humane and wise government. I will write you a line the day before, that I may be sure of not putting you to inconvenience.

My dear Sir | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS MITTON, 12 MAY 1841

MS Huntington Library.

Twelfth May 1841.

My Dear Mitton

Can't you manage — for once — to be here by 5 tomorrow? I tell you why I ask you. I have been out every day this week, and have scarcely seen the children. If we dine so late as 6, it is their bedtime when the cloth is removed[†1] — and I don't like to deprive them of the opportunity of coming down —

Faithfully Always

CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 13 MAY 1841*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales.

Devonshire Terrace. | May The Thirteenth 1841.

My Dear George

I am sorry to trouble you — but obliged — for the Press is stopping. When can you let us have the plates for Mrs. Macrone?[†2]

One word in answer.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 13 MAY 1841

Facsimile in George R. Sims, Among my Autographs, 1904, p. 31.

Devonshire Terrace | May The Thirteenth 1841.

My Dear Thompson.

Your sisters[†3] are going to dine with us — and no strangers, or indeed anybody else that I know of — on Sunday at five. Will you give me the pleasure of seeing you? Take your blister off,[†4] and come.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 18 MAY 1841*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday May The Eighteenth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

If I don't hear from you that it will be any inconvenience, I shall trespass on your kindness so far as to bring the friend I spoke of[†1] and two others[†2] to view your charge at a quarter past one Tomorrow.[†3]

To JOHN OVERS, [?22] MAY [1841]*

MS Mr Robert K. Black. Date: The only Sat 21 May during CD's acquaintance with Overs was in 1842 — when CD was in America. Handwriting points clearly to 1841. CD was probably writing on Sat 22 May, that year.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday May The Twenty First.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I have been so very much engaged since I saw you, that I have not had time to read your papers; neither have I seen Mr. Cruikshank[†4] who has been very busy too. Therefore, instead of coming tomorrow, wait a few days, and I will write to you.

In haste | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 MAY 1841

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Evening
May The Twenty Third 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I return you the Curiosity Shop with the something inserted. I meant so much in asking you to accept the book, that I forgot to say anything. Pray forgive me.[†5]

I have not seen Rachel[†1] yet, being unwilling to be forced to believe that anybody or anything could impart an interest to Racine.[†2] I mean to wait for Mary Stuart;[†3] — I am told she is a wonder, and am prepared to think so.

If anybody should entreat you to go to the Polytechnic Institution[†4] and have a Photographic likeness done[†5] — don't be prevailed upon, on any terms. The Sun is a great fellow in his way, but portrait painting is not his line. I speak from experience, having suffered dreadfully.

Always believe me, with sincerity,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS E. J. STANLEY,[†6] 23 MAY [1841]*

MS (copy) Mr George Howard. Date: 23 May was Sunday in 1841; the copied signature supports that year. Address: clearly Mrs E. J. Stanley since copy is among the Carlisle papers (see fn).

Devonshire Terrace. | Sunday Twenty Third May.

Dear Mrs. Stanley.

I am exceedingly sorry to say that I have an engagement for Tuesday which binds me to dine elsewhere, far less pleasantly; but if I should be so fortunate as to be able to release myself early in the evening, I shall make bold to look in, and pay my compliments to you.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PATRIC PARK, 26 MAY [1841]*

MS Miss Madge Pemberton. Date: 26 May was Wednesday in 1841.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Twenty Sixth May.

My Dear Park.

I find that I am obliged — sorely against my will, and by a confounded engagement which I can't avoid — to postpone my sitting until six tomorrow; when I shall hope to see you.[†1]

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Patric Park Esquire.

To BASIL HALL, 26 MAY [1841]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: The death of Hall's youngest son, Frederick Richard, aged 4, was announced in The Times of 25 May.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday May The Twenty Sixth.

My Dear Hall.

I saw the paper yesterday, and had sorrowful thoughts of you.

The traveller from this World to the next, found the Infant Child he had lost many years before, wreathing him a bower in Heaven.[†2] It must be something to you, even in your grief, to know, that one of the Angels called you father upon Earth.[†3]

God bless you, and send you in the comforting presence of your other children and the impression of this calamity upon their minds, a lasting source of consolation.[†4]

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR G[EORGE] CAYLEY,[†1] 26 MAY [1841]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1923; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 May. Date: 31 May was Monday in 1841 and 1847. Since in May 47 CD was in Brighton or at 1 Chester Place, 1841 seems certain.

If the Fates will keep themselves to themselves, until and on Monday the thirty-First, I'll dine with you on that day.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [26 MAY 1841]

Mention in next.

To [HENRY COLBURN], 27 MAY 1841

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | May The Twenty Seventh 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Not seeing Mr. Cruikshank yesterday, I wrote to him last night. His answer is "My dear Dickens — the plates will be at Mr. Colburn's, either tomorrow (to day, that is) or Friday."

I will look over the Lamplighter and send him back to you tonight. I hope we may be out next week[†1] — I suppose we can, if Mr. C redeems his pledge?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, 27 MAY 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Twenty Seventh May 1841.

My Dear Maclise

Are you going out tonight? If not, and you should be disposed for a stroll through some of the queer places and bye ways, come here at half past 7. My other half is going (oh!) to Samivel Carter Hall's — the Rosory[†2] — Old Brompton.

A word in answer.

Always Faithfully

CD

To GEORGE LOVEJOY,[†1] 31 MAY 1841

Text from MDGH, I, 44.[†2]

1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park,
Monday Evening, May 31st, 1841.

Sir,

I am much obliged and flattered by the receipt of your letter,[†3] which I should have answered immediately on its arrival but for my absence from home at the moment.[†4]

My principles and inclinations would lead me to aspire to the distinction you invite me to seek, if there were any reasonable chance of success,[†5] and I hope I should do no discredit to such an honour if I won[†6] and wore it.[†7] But I am bound to add, and I have no hesitation in saying plainly, that I cannot afford the expense of a contested election. If I could, I would act on your suggestion instantly. I am not the less indebted to you and the friends to whom the thought occurred, for your good opinion and approval. I beg you to understand that I am restrained solely (and much against my will) by the consideration I have mentioned, and thank both you and them most warmly.[†8]

Yours faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS][†9]

To JOHN FORSTER, [MAY 1841]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 551. Date: May 41 according to Forster.

I have a letter from my father lamenting the fine weather, invoking congenial tempests, and informing me that it will not be possible for him to stay more than another year in Devonshire, as he must then proceed to Paris to consolidate Augustus's French.[†1]

To H. G. ADAMS, [?MAY 1841]

MS (fragment) Francis Edwards Ltd. Date: Signature suggests c. May 41.

I hasten to answer your note, and am obliged to do so thus briefly or I should lose another Post.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H.G. Adams Esquire

June

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 JUNE 1841

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | June The Second 1841.

My Dear Beard.

If you have not yet stirred in the matter of the Newspaper Dinner[†2] — don't. I feel that I ought to be at work on Saturday Evening, for I have much to do before going to Edinburgh and but a little time to do it in.

Kate tells me to say that we shall expect your sister Marion[†3] to dinner also on Sunday. So none of your nonsense, but bring her.

5 [†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

If you go to the Whacking[†5] dinner, or have pledged yrself in any way — I will.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 2 JUNE 1841

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | New Broad Street | City.

Devonshire Terrace.
Wednesday June The Second 1841.

My Dear Dr. Smith.

I find it can't be done.[†1] The artists, engravers, printers, and every one engaged, have so depended on my promises and so fashioned their Engagements by them, that I cannot, with any regard to their comfort or convenience, leave town before the Nineteenth. At any other time, I would have gone with you to John o' Groats for such a purpose; and I don't thank you the less heartily, for not being able to go now.

If you should see one place which you would like me to behold of all others, and should find that I could get easy access to it, tell me when you come back, and I'll see it on my way to Scotland, please God.

I will send your papers[†2] home by hand tomorrow.

In haste | Believe me with true regard

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To THOMAS MITTON, 2 JUNE 1841

Mention in N, I, 322; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 2 June 41.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 2 JUNE 1841

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday June The Second/41.

Dear Lady Blessington.

The year goes round so fast, that when anything occurs to remind me of its whirling, I lose my breath and am bewildered. So your handwriting last night had as startling an effect upon me as though you had sealed your note with one of your own eyes.[†3]

I remember my promise,[†1] as in cheerful duty bound, and with Heaven's grace will redeem it. At this moment I have not the faintest idea how, but I am going into Scotland on the nineteenth to see Jeffrey, and while I am away (I shall return, please God, in about three weeks) will look out for some accident, incident, or subject for small description, to send you when I come home. You will take the will for the deed, I know; and remembering that I have a Clock which always wants winding up, will not quarrel with me for being brief.[†2]

Have you seen the Magnetic boy?[†3] You heard of him no doubt from Count D'Orsay.[†4] If you get him to Gore House,[†5] don't, I entreat you, have more than eight people — four is a better number — to see him. He fails in a crowd, and is marvellous before a few.[†6]

I am told that down in Devonshire there are young ladies innumerable, who read crabbed Manuscript with the palms of their hands — newspapers with their ankles[†1] — and so forth, and who are, so to speak, literary all over. I begin to understand what a blue-stocking means, and have not the smallest doubt that Lady Stepney[†2] (for instance) could write quite as entertaining[†3] a book with the sole of her foot, as ever she did with her head.

I am a believer, in earnest, and I am sure you would be, if you saw this boy under moderately favorable circumstances — as I hope you will, before he leaves England.

Believe me Dear Lady Blessington
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, [?3] JUNE 1841*

MS New York Public Library. Date: 3 June 41 was Thursday; but since Macready — and Talfourd, to a similar request (see next, fn) — replied on the 4th, CD was probably mistaken in the day of the week, not date of the month.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday June The Third 1841.

My Dear Macready.

Will you (like a good man) empower me to add your name to the Sanatorium committee? It is a most excellent Institution, and they are exceedingly desirous to have you.

Such weather as it is here, for warmth and sunshine, was never seen. You are so languid, I suppose, with playing in [h]ot Theatres every night, that if I were to write you a long letter you would swoon at the sight of it. — Don't be alarmed at my going over leaf, [?I'll just write][†4] four lines and no more.

Mrs. Macready is amazing at the charades. The way she wouldn't go into a Station House the other night, was masterly in the extreme. You couldn't have done it better in a Domestic Tragedy. Comparisons are odious, but I shall have my eye on you at Drury Lane — My faith is shaken.

Always believe me | My Dear Macready | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

I am [?verging] on the [ ].[†2]

To SIR MARTIN ARCHER SHEE, 3 JUNE 1841

MS Harvard College Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
June The Third 1841.

Dear Sir Martin Shee.

I don't know whether you happen to have seen anything of the inclosed project — a most excellent and worthy one — which is now about to be carried into immediate operation. The Committee (among whom are Drs. Southwood Smith and Arnott,[†3] Macready, Talfourd,[†4] the leading merchants and bankers in the City, and many whom you know) are extremely desirous to have your name, as representing a class which includes a great number of young Students whose friends are resident at a distance, and to some of whom, at one time or other, the Sanatorium might prove of inestimable service. As I look upon your sanction and influence as being of very great importance and value, I volunteered at the last Meeting to write to you upon the subject. Therefore I trouble you with this Note.

I will not take up your time by urging the point. It is enough that I convey to you the respectful and earnest desire of the Committee, and beg you to forgive me this intrusion, for the object's sake.

If you should desire any further information on the subject, they will be most happy to give it you.

I beg to remain | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

Sir Martin Archer Shee

&c &c &c

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 3 JUNE 1841

Mention in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Sep 1909; dated Devonshire Terrace, "June the Third, 1841"; salutation "My Dear Dr. Smith".

Apologizing for his absence from a Sanatorium Committee meeting and mentioning Talfourd and Macready.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 JUNE 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 168. Date: 3 June according to Forster.

Solomon's expression I meant to be one of those strong ones to which strong circumstances give birth in the commonest minds. Deal with it as you like.[†3] ... Say what you please of Gordon,[†4] he must have been at heart a kind man,[†1] and a lover of the despised and rejected, after his own fashion. He lived upon a small income, and always within it; was known to relieve the necessities of many people; exposed in his place the corrupt attempt of a minister to buy him out of Parliament;[†2] and did great charities in Newgate.[†3] He always spoke on the people's side, and tried against his muddled brains to expose the profligacy of both parties.[†4] He never got anything by his madness, and never sought it. The wildest and most raging attacks of the time, allow him these merits: and not to let him have 'em in their full extent, remembering in what a (politically) wicked time he lived, would lie upon my conscience heavily. The libel he was imprisoned for when he died, was on the queen of France;[†5] and the French government interested themselves warmly to procure his release[†6] — which I think they might have done, but for Lord Grenville.[†7]

To CHARLES OLLIER,[†1] 3 JUNE 1841

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday June The Third 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks to you for your kind offer, but I don't need the trials.[†2] What I wanted from Upcott was a portrait of Lord George, which I got from him.[†3] As to the Riot, I am going to try if I can't make a better one than he did.[†4]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Ollier Esquire.

To HENRY COOK,[†5] 4 JUNE 1841

Extract (in part from facsimile) from Charles Hamilton catalogue, 16 May 1963; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 June 41.

... cordial thanks for the present of your Poem,[†6] and for the very kind and welcome expressions with which you have accompanied it. As the earliest opportunity I shall have of reading it, will be, most likely, in a fortnight's time in Scotland, I cannot refrain from acknowledging its receipt before perusal ...

My warm assurance of the gratification I have derived from your letter.

Believe me | Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Cook Esquire

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 7 JUNE 1841

MS New York Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Seventh June 1841.

Dear Sirs

Mr. Browne has the MS of another Number.[†1] If you will send up to him, No. 33 Howland Street Fitzroy Square, any time this evening, he will leave it out for your Messenger.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DAVID BARNES, 7 JUNE 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Monday Seventh June 1841.

Dear Mr. Barnes.

We purpose coming to Broadstairs this year, please God, on Saturday the Thirty First of July, and remaining until Saturday the Ninth of October; and as we are going into Scotland on the nineteenth of this month, we wish, if we can, to arrange about a house before leaving town.

Mrs. Dickens and I, think (though we don't quite remember its accomodations)[†2] that your small Library House[†3] would suit us very well. If you are disposed to let it for this term, we shall be glad to hear from you on the subject. If you are otherwise engaged, perhaps you will look about for us and give us the benefit of your advice. We wish to be on the Terrace if possible.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Barnes

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, [?EARLY JUNE 1841]

Mention in Townshend to CD, "Wednesday" [?9 June 41].[†4]

To SIR MARTIN ARCHER SHEE, [9 JUNE 1841]

Extract in 11th Cooperative Catalogue of Members of the Middle Atlantic Chapter of the Antiquarian Booksellers' Association of America; MS 1 p.; dated London, 9 June 41.

I thank you very much for your kind ... acquiescence in the matter of the Sanatorium. I should have mentioned when I sent you Dr. Smith's pamphlet ... that the design — honestly — was not upon your pocket, but upon the sanction of your name and station.

To ANGUS FLETCHER, [9 JUNE 1841]

Mention in next.

A formal acceptance of the invitation to the Edinburgh dinner in his honour.

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 9 JUNE 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | June The Ninth 1841.

My Dear Fletcher.

You are the other Dromio,[†1] an't you? You convene, I think?[†2] I am lost between you and the unknown Angus.[†3] — The formal reply comes along with this, and will be right in any case.

I needn't tell you what I think of this testimony. It knocked me over this morning just as I was going to work, and threw me into such a flurry of pleasure that I think I spoiled a Number.[†4] I never was so gratified in my life, nor ever had such reason to be.

Now, about our operations. We leave here, please God, next Saturday Morning, — [†a]I mean the 19th. which is Saturday week[†a] — Per Rail. Sunday we spend with some friends within 20 miles of York.[†1] Monday Morning we shall start forward again in a posting carriage which I have ordered at that City — taking the Railway as far as Darlington, and sleeping that night upon the road — Tuesday we shall push on again — early enough, I hope, to be in Edinburgh by 6 o'Clock.

Now, will you order dinner for Kate and you and me, at that hour? — A good, Scotch, comfortable, perfectly cosy dinner? And will you order us comfortable rooms at whatever hotel you please (if they could include a little antichamber of any kind, in which I could write o'mornings,[†2] it would be a great relief) — and will you, furthermore, write again when you have done all this, tell me where we are to come to, and any news you have, besides? I have a horror of Kate's boxes. If I should find she contemplates a very big one, I shall despatch it Pr. Steam beforehand.

I have been thinking that the best plan will be, to make an indomitable, savage, unalterable resolve to leave Edinburgh on the Saturday week, in the morning, — and to stick to it. Our route in the Highlands we will plan together. I suppose a week would be a liberal allowance? — I should like to have a three days halt at some intensely romantic tavern, to refresh from the excitements and hospitalities of Auld Reekie.[†3] — All this, and much more, we will talk about, over that unparalleled repast I have just spoken of.

As Kate will be mad to see the house she was born in,[†4] and all the rest of it, let us be alone that evening, we three — and with the sun next morning, let you and I cut up to the top of Arthur's Seat,[†5] and stand upon its highest crag. I am on the highest crag of expectation now, and shan't come down again 'till I have been there.

———————

It has just been told to me that Wilkie[†6] is dead. I can hardly believe it.[†7] 'Tis in the papers, they say. You will know the truth or falsehood of the tale, as soon as I.

Always Dear Fletcher | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 JUNE 1841]

Extract in F, II, x, 174. Date: presumably same day as last; written, says Forster, on hearing of Wilkie's sudden death, in which CD "refused to believe" at first.

My heart assures me Wilkie liveth. He is the sort of man who will be VERY old when he dies.

To CHARLES SMITHSON, [?9 JUNE] 1841

Composite text from Sotheby's catalogue, Nov 1903, and George D. Smith catalogues, 1901 and 1907; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1841 — possibly 9 June, the date of a letter of 2 pp. to Smithson mentioned (without Text) in N, I, 325.

My dear Smithson,

I have but a minute before post time, and must therefore be as short as the twenty-first of December. The carriage, I think, is decidedly cheap. I hope it is a good 'un to look at, as well as a good 'un to go.... †[a]but I am a galley slave, as you know. Why wasn't I born with a golden ladle in my mouth as well as a pen†[a]

†[b]Mentions the visit to Edinburgh and gives details of the journey.†[b] Kate will write to Mrs. Smithson the day before. As we shall be desolate at the station, I shall look out for one of Wallace's†[1] whiskers.

†[c]Love to the Ladies†[c] †[2]

To GEORGE LOVEJOY, 10 JUNE 1841

Text from MDGH, I, 44.†[3]

Devonshire Terrace, June 10th, 1841.

Dear Sir,

I am favoured with your note of yesterday's date,†[4] and lose no time in replying to it.†[5]

The sum you mention, though small I am aware in the abstract, is greater than I could afford for such a purpose; as the mere sitting in the House and attending to my duties, if I were a member, would oblige me to make many pecuniary sacrifices, consequent upon the very nature of my pursuits.

The course you suggest did occur to me when I received your first letter, and I have very little doubt indeed that the Government would support me — perhaps to the whole extent. But I cannot satisfy myself that to enter Parliament under such circumstances would enable me to pursue that honourable independence without which I could neither preserve my own respect nor that of my constituents. I confess therefore (it may be from not having considered the points sufficiently, or in the right light) that I cannot bring myself to propound the subject to any member of the administration whom I know. I am truly obliged to you nevertheless, and am

Dear Sir, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LADY HOLLAND, 10 JUNE 1841*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Devonshire Terrace. | June The Tenth 1841.

Dear Lady Holland.

I am truly obliged to you for your kindness in the matter of Lord Lauderdale,[†1] and thank you sincerely.[†2] I hope I shall be able to call upon him while in Scotland, and shall make a point of doing so if I possibly can.[†3] — I fear I shall be very much at other peoples'[†4] disposal, however, all the time.

I should have had great pleasure in dining with you on Saturday the Nineteenth, had I not arranged to leave town that very morning. Nor can I postpone my departure for a day (as I would gladly have done), for I am obliged to turn out of my road in Yorkshire to visit some friends, and am obliged to be in Edinburgh punctual to my appointed time, — as I yesterday received formal announcement of a public Dinner in my honor.

I should be much delighted if I could execute any commission for you in the North; and am always Dear Lady Holland,

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES SMITHSON, 13 JUNE 1841*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sunday Thirteenth June 1841.

My Dear Smithson.

It has occurred to me that if Malton is not horribly out of the way to Edinburgh, it will be best not to take the Darlington Rail Road at all, but to go straight on from your door. If you consider this a wise and Dickenslike idea, perhaps you will kindly arrange for me accordingly. In that case it would be best for us to take the carriage from the station to Easthorpe (the hired one from York I mean) and order Post horses again at 7[†1] on Monday Morning. Considering the ghastly absurdity one becomes when one is hoisted bodily, carriage and all, on a Railway Truck, I think this will be what Mitton would call "a tidy move".

I don't know how you may be in the North just now, but here we have come to the conclusion that there's a mistake in the almanacks. The blankets are put on again, the fires lighted, great coats and mackintoshes taken out of lavender; and a Policeman, it is reported, was frozen to death on Ludgate Hill last Friday Night.

Love to the ladies — from theirs and your [ ]

Charles Sm[ithson Esquire][†2]

To MISS ROGERS, 14 JUNE 1841*

MS Mr John Greaves.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourteenth June 1841.

Dear Miss Rogers.

I should have been extremely happy to dine with you next Monday, but that I leave town for Scotland on Saturday Morning.

I wish I could execute any commission for you across the border. On that side and on this, I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Rogers.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 15 JUNE 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tuesday Fifteenth June 1841.

My Dear Mac

Forster and Stanfield are on the vagabond tack tonight, being now at the Grays Inn,[†1] where they want us to meet them and then repair to some place of amusement. Shall we go? If so, I will call on you between 7 and ½ past.

Faithfully
CD.

To CHARLES SMITHSON, 15 JUNE 1841*

MS University of Oregon.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth June 1841.

My Dear Smithson.

Our letters crossed upon the road.

I quite understood the terms. — To take a carriage from London would be a great expense,[†2] as you say; and I should not like to incur it. Therefore, please to do the best for me you can, and be sure that what you do, will please me.

Love to the Ladies | Always Faithfully

CD.

[†a]In great haste — having been working all day, and the Post just going.[†a]

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 15 JUNE 1841†

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth June 1841.

My Dear Fletcher.

Many thanks for your welcome letter.

Ten days let us say — good ten days in the Highlands. But to secure this liberty we must be immoveable[†3] in the matter of leaving Edinburgh — stone — steel — adamant. Therefore on the morning of the Saturday week after the dinner, we bolt summarily.[†4]

Grip is no more. He was only ill a day. I sent for the medical gentleman (a bird-fancier in the New Road) on the first appearance of his indisposition. He promptly attended, and administered castor oil and warm gruel. Next day, the patient walked in a thoughtful manner up and down the stable till the clock struck Twelve at Noon; then staggered twice; exclaimed "Hal-loa old girl" — either as a remonstrance with his weakness, or an apostrophe to Death: I am not sure which — and expired.

Suspectful of a butcher who had been heard to threaten, I had the body opened. There were no traces of poison, and it appeared he had died of influenza. He has left a considerable property, chiefly in cheese and halfpence, buried in different parts of the Garden. The new raven (I have a new one, but he is comparatively of weak intellects) administers to his effects, and turns up something every day. The last piece of bijoutrie[†1] was a hammer of considerable size — supposed to have been stolen from a vindictive carpenter who had been heard to speak darkly of vengeance, "down the Mews".

The medical gentleman, himself — habituated to Ravens — assured me that he "never see sich a thorough going, long-headed, deep, outdacious file" in the whole course of his practice. And he wound up by saying, in reference to Topping "Why, wot was he agin that bird? That 'ere little man could no more stand agin him in pint of sense and reason, than I could agin the ghost of Cobbett".[†2]

Good Christians say in such cases "it was all for the best perhaps!" I try to think so, — he had ripped the lining off the carriage and eat the paint off the wheels. In the course of the summer while we were at Broadstairs, I think he would have eat it all, bodily.

I have been fearfully hard at work, morning, noon, and night. I have done now, for the present, and am all impatience to start. — I shall not be quite myself (now that having done I can venture to think of it) until we have taken our first glass of wine at the Royal.[†3]

Until when — and always —

Believe me Dear Fletcher
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

[†a]I have been greatly importuned by the people of Reading, to stand for the next Parliament, but I can't afford it myself, and don't choose to be bound hand and foot to the Reform Club. Therefore I don't. Your friend Hall, the Jotter, stands for Taunton.[†4] — There is a Heaven above us![†a] [†b]I think it much better that Jeffrey shod. not be in the Chair at the dinner.[†5] I dare say he has a delicacy in connection with that. — Wilson[†6] is on every ground a better man for the purpose.[†b]

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 JUNE 1841]

Extract in F, II, x, 174. Date: 15 June according to Forster.

I heard from Edinburgh this morning.[†1] Jeffrey is not well enough to take the chair,[†2] so Wilson does. I think under all circumstances of politics, acquaintance, and Edinburgh Review, that it's much better as it is — Don't you?

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 JUNE 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Tuesday Evening June Fifteenth 1841.

My Dear Henry.

Let us dine on Thursday, at the Parthenon, and take a stroll afterwards. I shall be at your end of the Town,[†1] in the afternoon, and will call for you between 4 and 5.

Always Affectionately Yours
C.D.

Love to Lætitia

To HENRY JACKSON,[†2] 16 JUNE 1841†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Free | Henry Jackson Esquire | Birkendike's Hotel | York.[†3]

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth June 1841.

[†a]Dear Sir.

I don't know whether this letter will find you; but I write to acknowledge the receipt of yours, and to thank you for the trouble you have taken in the matter of the carriage.[†a]

I have been endeavouring to picture to myself what a Mail Phaeton may be[†4] — whether it has one, two, three, four, or six wheels — whether it has a head, a front, a back, a pole, a drag, a box, a boot — and can't settle the question at all. [†b]It runs very fast in my mind, but has no bodily existence that I know of.

I have no doubt it will suit us well. And am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†b]

Henry Jackson Esquire.

To CHARLES BABBAGE,[†1] 17 JUNE 1841

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace. | June The Seventeenth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks to you for the pamphlets on the Corn Laws,[†2] which I have read with great interest.

I am very sorry I was not able to have the pleasure of seeing you on either of the two last Saturdays. I am going to Scotland the day after tomorrow, and have had to work so hard before going away, that for the last three weeks I have been nowhere.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Babbage Esquire.

&c &c &c

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 JUNE 1841]

Extracts in F, II, x, 175-6. Date: 23 June, the day after their arrival in Edinburgh, according to Forster.

I have been this morning to the Parliament-house, and am now introduced (I hope) to everybody in Edinburgh. The hotel is perfectly besieged, and I have been forced to take refuge in a sequestered apartment at the end of a long passage, wherein I write this letter. They talk of 300 at the dinner. We are very well off in point of rooms, having a handsome sitting-room, another next to it for Clock purposes, a spacious bed-room, and large dressing-room adjoining. The castle is in front of the windows, and the view noble. There was a supper ready last night which would have been a dinner anywhere.

He describes some of the eminent people he had met.

The renowned Peter Robertson[†1] is a large, portly, full-faced man with a merry eye, and a queer way of looking under his spectacles[†2] which is characteristic and pleasant. He seems a very warm-hearted earnest man too, and I felt quite at home with him forthwith. Walking up and down the hall of the courts of law (which was full of advocates, writers to the signet, clerks, and idlers) was a tall, burly, handsome man of eight and fifty, with a gait like O'Connell's, the bluest eye you can imagine, and long hair — longer than mine — falling down in a wild way under the broad brim of his hat. He had on a surtout coat, a blue checked shirt; the collar standing up, and kept in its place with a wisp of black neckerchief; no waistcoat; and a large pocket-handkerchief thrust into his breast, which was all broad and open. At his heels followed a wiry, sharp-eyed, shaggy devil of a terrier, dogging his steps as he went slashing up and down, now with one man beside him, now with another, and now quite alone, but always at a fast, rolling pace, with his head in the air, and his eyes as wide open as he could get them. I guessed it was Wilson, and it was. A bright, clear-complexioned, mountain-looking fellow, he looks as though he had just come down from the Highlands, and had never in his life taken pen in hand. But he has had an attack of paralysis in his right arm, within this month. He winced when I shook hands with him; and once or twice when we were walking up and down, slipped as if he had stumbled on a piece of orangepeel. He is a great fellow to look at, and to talk to; and, if you could divest your mind of the actual Scott, is just the figure you would put in his place.[†3] ...

Allan[†4] has been squiring me about, all the morning. He and Fletcher have gone to a meeting of the dinner-stewards, and I take the opportunity of writing to you. They dine with us to-day, and we are going to-night to the theatre. M'Ian[†1] is playing there. I mean to leave a card for him before evening. We are engaged for every day of our stay, already; but the people I have seen are so very hearty and warm in their manner that much of the horrors of lionization gives way before it. I am glad to find that they propose giving me for a toast on Friday the Memory of Wilkie.[†2] I should have liked it better than anything, if I could have made my choice. Communicate all particulars to Mac. I would to God you were both here. Do dine together at the Gray's-inn on Friday, and think of me. If I don't drink my first glass of wine to you, may my pistols miss fire, and my mare slip her shoulder.[†3] All sorts of regard from Kate. She has gone with Miss Allan[†4] to see the house she was born in, &c.[†5] Write me soon, and long, &c.

To SIR CHARLES BELL,[†6] 24 JUNE 1841*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Royal Hotel, Princes Street
Thursday Morning. | June 24. 1841

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Sir Charles Bell, and begs to hand him the inclosed letter and accompanying little parcel, with which he was entrusted, previous to leaving town, by Mr. Thomas Landseer.[†7]

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 JUNE 1841]

Extracts in F, II, x, 176-7. Date: Sat 26 June according to Forster.

The great event[†1] is over; and being gone, I am a man again.[†2] It was the most brilliant affair you can conceive; the completest success possible, from first to last. The room was crammed, and more than seventy applicants for tickets were of necessity refused yesterday. Wilson was ill, but plucked up like a lion, and spoke famously.[†3] I send you a paper herewith,[†4] but the report is dismal in the extreme.[†5] They say there will be a better one — I don't know where or when. Should there be, I will send it to you.
I think (ahem!) that I spoke rather well.[†6] It was an excellent room, and both the subjects (Wilson and Scottish Literature, and the Memory of Wilkie)[†1] were good to go upon. There were nearly two hundred ladies present.[†2] The place is so contrived that the cross table is raised enormously: much above the heads of people sitting below: and the effect on first coming in (on me, I mean) was rather tremendous. I was quite self-possessed however, and, notwithstanding the enthoosemoosy, which was very startling, as cool as a cucumber. I wish to God you had been there, as it is impossible for the "distinguished guest" to describe the scene. It beat all natur'....

I have been expecting every day to hear from you, and not hearing mean to make this the briefest epistle possible. We start next Sunday (that's tomorrow week). We are going out to Jeffrey's to-day (he is very unwell), and return here to-morrow evening. If I don't find a letter from you when I come back, expect no Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life[†3] from your indignant correspondent. Murray the manager[†4] made very excellent, tasteful, and gentlemanly mention of Macready,[†5] about whom Wilson had been asking me divers questions during dinner.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 26 JUNE 1841

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Royal Hotel Edinburgh. | Saturday Twenty Sixth June 1841.

Dear Sirs.

The great event is over. It was the most brilliant affair you can possibly imagine. The room was crammed to the throat, and more than seventy people were turned away yesterday who had come from different parts of Scotland, — in consequence of the room being full. Besides the diners there were nearly two hundred ladies, and the whole place rings to-day with the noise of the affair.

I send you a couple of newspapers, but the report is very dismal indeed. Blackwoods have been here this morning and intend to publish a corrected account in a pamphlet,[†1] which of course you shall have.

I shall be glad if you will send me, so that I may receive it in the course of the week, a fifty pound note, and deduct it with the other extras from the monthly payment into Coutts's. The Highland arrangements seem to be more extensive than I had supposed, and I have no cheque book here, nor did I make any arrangement for a credit at the bank in this place before I came away; not thinking I should require it.[†2]

I shall be very glad to hear from you. We are going to Lord Jeffrey's tonight, and shall stop there a day or two, but I shall be sure to be in Edinburgh again by the time the Post returns.

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 26 JUNE 1841

MS Dickens House.

Royal Hotel Edinburgh | Saturday 26th. June 1841.

My Dear George.

I have barely time to write six words, having some sixty letters to dispatch. The dinner was the most brilliant success ever known here. They turned away more than 70 people yesterday for whom there was no room, and besides the 250 or 270 who dined, there were nearly 200 ladies. It was a most magnificent show, and the shouting perfectly awful.

I send you a newspaper, but the report is intensely dismal. Blackwoods have been here this morning to tell me that they mean to publish a corrected account in a pamphlet, of which I promise myself the pleasure of sending you a copy.

With best regards from Kate in which I heartily join,

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To WILLIAM JERDAN, 28 JUNE 1841

Extracts in N, I, 329 and Anderson Galleries catalogue, Feb 1922 (aa); MS 2 pp.; dated Royal Hotel, Edinburgh, 28 June 41.

The dinner was a very brilliant affair indeed — they say here the best on record. [a]It included all parties and persuasions.[a] They were obliged for lack of room to turn away nearly a hundred applicants for tickets, and besides the diners we had more than a hundred and fifty ladies. Blackwoods are going to publish a good account of the speechifying. When they do so, I'll send you one. Meanwhile I forward you two papers wherein the reporting is dismal.

It's November here. I hope it may be June in London.

To THE LORD PROVOST OF EDINBURGH,[†1] [30 JUNE 1841]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 JUNE 1841]

Extracts in F, II, x, 177-80, dated by Forster four days after letter of 26 June; and extract in F, II, ix, 168, dated 30 June.

A hundred thanks for your letter. I read it this morning with the greatest pleasure and delight, and answer it with ditto, ditto. Where shall I begin — about my darlings? I am delighted with Charley's precocity. He takes arter his father, he does. God bless them, you can't imagine (you ! how can you!) how much I long to see them. It makes me quite sorrowful to think of them.... Yesterday, sir, the lord provost, council, and magistrates voted me by acclamation the freedom of the city, in testimony (I quote the letter just received from "James Forrest, lord provost") "of the sense entertained by them of your distinguished abilities as an author." I acknowledged this morning in appropriate terms the honour they had done me, and through me the pursuit to which I was devoted. It is handsome, is it not?[†1]

The men who spoke at the dinner were all the most rising men here, and chiefly at the Bar. They were all, alternately, whigs and tories; with some few radicals, such as Gordon,[†2] who gave the memory of Burns. He is Wilson's son-in-law and the lord advocate's nephew — a very masterly speaker indeed, who ought to become a distinguished man. Neaves,[†3] who gave the other poets, a little too lawyer-like for my taste, is a great gun in the courts. Mr. Primrose[†4] is Lord Rosebery's[†5] son. Adam Black,[†6] the publisher as you know. Dr. Alison, a very popular friend of the poor.[†7] Robertson you know. Allan you know. Colquhoun[†8] is an advocate. All these men were selected for the toasts as being crack speakers, known men, and opposed to each other very strongly in politics. For this reason, the professors and so forth who sat upon the platform about me[†1] made no speeches and had none assigned them. I felt it was very remarkable to see such a number of grey-headed men gathered about my brown flowing locks; and it struck most of those who were present very forcibly.[†2] The judges, solicitor-general,[†3] lord-advocate,[†4] and so forth, were all here to call, the day after our arrival. The judges never go to public dinners in Scotland. Lord Meadowbank[†5] alone broke through the custom, and none of his successors have imitated him. It will give you a good notion of party to hear that the solicitor-general and lord-advocate refused to go, though they had previously engaged, unless the croupier[†6] or the chairman were a whig. Both (Wilson and Robertson) were tories, simply because, Jeffrey excepted, no whig could be found who was adapted to the office. The solicitor laid strict injunctions on Napier[†7] not to go if a whig were not in office. No whig was, and he stayed away. I think this is good? — bearing in mind that all the old whigs of Edinburgh were cracking their throats in the room. They give out that they were ill, and the lord-advocate did actually lie in bed all the afternoon; but this is the real truth, and one of the judges told it me with great glee. It seems they couldn't quite trust Wilson or Robertson, as they thought; and feared some tory demonstration. Nothing of the kind took place; and ever since, these men have been the loudest in their praises of the whole affair.[†8]

A threat reached me last night (they have been hammering at it in their papers, it seems, for some time) of a dinner at Glasgow.[†1] But I hope, having circulated false rumours of my movements, to get away before they send to me; and only to stop there on my way home, to change horses and send to the post-office.... You will like to know how we have been living. Here's a list of engagements, past and present. Wednesday, we dined at home, and went incog. to the theatre at night, to Murray's box:[†2] the pieces admirably done, and M'Ian in the Two Drovers quite wonderful, and most affecting. Thursday, to Lord Murray's;[†3] dinner and evening party. Friday, the dinner. Saturday, to Jeffrey's, a beautiful place about three miles off,[†4] stop there all night, dine on Sunday, and home at eleven. Monday, dine at Dr. Alison's, four miles off. Tuesday dinner and evening party at Allan's. Wednesday, breakfast with Napier, dine with Blackwoods[†1] seven miles off, evening party at the treasurer's of the town-council,[†2] supper with all the artists (!!).[†3] Thursday, lunch at the solicitor-general's, dine at Lord Gillies's,[†4] evening party at Joseph Gordon's,[†5] one of Brougham's earliest supporters. Friday, dinner and evening party at Robertson's. Saturday, dine again at Jeffrey's; back to the theatre,[†6] at half-past nine to the moment, for public appearance; places all let, &c. &c. &c. Sunday, off at seven o'clock in the morning to Stirling, and then to Callender, a stage further. Next day, to Loch-earn, and pull up there for three days, to rest and work. The moral of all this is, that there is no place like home; and that I thank God most heartily for having given me a quiet spirit, and a heart that won't hold many people. I sigh for Devonshire-terrace and Broadstairs, for battledore and shuttlecock; I want to dine in a blouse with you and Mac; and I feel Topping's merits more acutely than I have ever done in my life. On Sunday evening the 17th of July I shall revisit my household gods, please heaven. I wish the day were here. For God's sake be in waiting. I wish you and Mac would dine in Devonshire-terrace that day with Fred. He has the key of the cellar. Do. We shall be at Inverary in the Highlands on Tuesday week, getting to it through the pass of Glencoe, of which you may have heard! On Thursday following we shall be at Glasgow, where I shall hope to receive your last letter before we meet. At Inverary, too, I shall make sure of finding at least one, at the post-office.... Little Allan is trying hard for the post of queen's limner[†7] for Scotland, vacant by poor Wilkie's death. Every one is in his favor but ——[†8] who is jobbing for some one else. Appoint him, will you, and I'll give up the premier-ship. — How I breakfasted to-day in the house where Scott lived seven and twenty years;[†9] how I have made solemn pledges to write about [mining][†10] children in the Edinburgh Review, and will do my best to keep them; how I have declined to be brought in, free gratis for nothing and qualified to boot, for a Scotch county that's going a-begging, lest I should be thought to have dined on Friday under false pretences; these, with other marvels, shall be yours anon.

[†a]You may suppose, I have not done much work — but by Friday night's post from here I hope to send the first long chapter of a number and both the illustrations;[†1] from Loch-earn on Tuesday night, the closing chapter of that number; from the same place on Thursday night, the first long chapter of another, with both the illustrations; and, from some place which no man ever spelt but which sounds like Ballyhoolish,[†2] on Saturday, the closing chapter of that number,[†3] which will leave us all safe till I return to town.[†a]

I must leave off sharp, to get dressed and off upon the seven miles dinner trip. Kate's affectionate regards. My hearty loves to Mac and Grim.[†4]

July

To A. S. LOGAN,[†5] 1 JULY 1841*

MS National Library of Scotland.

Royal Hotel Edinburgh | First July 1841.

Dear Sir.

I find to-day that I must receive some gentlemen here, on Saturday morning, and that after I have done with them I must fulfil so many engagements (all of which I have postponed to that last day of my stay) that I shall not have time to see Mr. Harvey's[†6] pictures, to which you so kindly offered to introduce me. Having two engagements for the evening besides, I shall really not have a moment to spare between morning and night.

With reference to Stirling too, I am obliged, having regard to my letters from London this morning, to get on; and I grieve to say that I must not stop there except to change horses. So the castle and the battle fields must be visited when I come again; — I hope it will not be very long before I do.

†bI beg my compliments to Mrs. Logan, and am Dear Sir,

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS†b

A. S. Logan Esquire

To LORD JEFFREY, 1 JULY 1841

MS Mr A. G. Schaw Miller.

Royal Hotel. | Thursday First July 1841.

My Dear Lord Jeffrey.

Do not fear that either my spouse or I had forgotten, or were in danger of forgetting, our engagement for next Saturday. It is much too pleasant and happy.

I wish most earnestly that it were in my power to remain with you over Sunday and enjoy a quiet day, but I am sorry to say that our arrangements are made for leaving Edinburgh at Seven on Sunday morning, and that I am bound to be virtuous, and constant to my plans. I am a poor Slave of the Lamp, and tomorrow it will have been rubbed thrice, with no response from me.†1 It is impossible to work or think here, and I must fly for my life — or for my living, which is the same thing.

I shall be obliged, moreover, to leave Craigcrook at a quarter before nine. I have been terribly beset by Murray to go to his theatre, and having made a vague promise that I would, am anxious to redeem it, lest I should seem to set too high a store by my gracious presence. Therefore I have settled to be there at half past nine. — It's martyrdom to me, but there is no help for it.

You see how defenceless I am, and knowing how much rather I would be with you, will be sorry for me, I am sure.

I beg my compliments to Miss Browne.†2 She told me she would like to see the inclosed pamphlet, which I happened to have in my desk, and which I send for her perusal.

Kate desires her best regards. And I am always

Dear Lord Jeffrey
With truth and heartiness
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I hope, and have no doubt, that your coming holidays will set you up completely.

To LORD JEFFREY, 3 JULY 1841*

MS Mills College, Oakland, California.

Royal Hotel. | Saturday July The Third 1841.

My Dear Lord Jeffrey.

I need not say that we are truly sorry for the cause of our disappointment to day, and that we are extremely anxious to hear how you are, when we reach town tomorrow fortnight. If you could find time to write me one line, you would gratify me very much. If not, I hope Miss Brown will do us that favor.

We took solemn council together just now, whether we should come round and see you, and shake hands before parting. We have come to the conclusion that we had better not; firstly, because you have been enjoined repose, and secondly — to tell the truth — because parting even for a few months from one whom I hold in such esteem and regard, is a thing I cannot bear. — I have been contriving all the morning, a hundred ways of getting off from your dinner table without saying good bye. Writing it, is nearly as bad, but not quite.

God bless you. We shall always remember with delight the few most pleasant hours we have spent at Craigcrook,[†1] and shall look forward to your next visit to London with as much real pleasure as any of your thousand friends.[†2]

Believe me Dear Lord Jeffrey | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Our united best regards to Miss Browne[†3] — with whom I am very much in love.[†4]

To MISS ALLAN, 3 JULY 1841*

MS Albion Hotel, Broadstairs.

Royal Hotel. | July The Third 1841.

My Dear Miss Allan.

When you come up to London, to assist at Miss Liston's sacrifice,[†1] don't forget to remind your iron uncle of our Broadstairs engagement, to which I hold you bound. A good sea — fresh breezes — fine sands — and pleasant walks — with all manner of fishing boats, light houses, piers, bathing machines and so forth are its only attractions, but it's one of the freshest and free-est little places in the world. Consequently the proper place for you.

Always believe me with sincere regard

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. MURRAY, 3 JULY 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Royal Hotel. | Third July 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Will you take some supper with us tonight after the play?[†2] I have ordered it at 11, and sincerely hope to see you. And will you let me know in one word, by bearer (if one word will hold it) what time your half price goes in?

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Murray Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 JULY 1841]

Extracts in F, II, xi, 182-3. Date: Mon 5 July according to Forster. From Loch-earn-head.[†1]

Having had a great deal to do in a crowded house on Saturday night at the theatre, we left Edinburgh yesterday morning at half past seven, and travelled, with Fletcher for our guide, to a place called Stewart's-hotel, nine miles further than Callender. We had neglected to order rooms, and were obliged to make a sitting-room of our own bed-chamber; in which my genius for stowing furniture away was of the very greatest service. Fletcher slept in a kennel with three panes of glass in it, which formed part and parcel of a window; the other three panes whereof belonged to a man who slept on the other side of the partition. He told me this morning that he had had a nightmare all night, and had screamed horribly,[†2] he knew. The stranger, as you may suppose, hired a gig and went off at full gallop with the first glimpse of daylight. Being very tired (for we had not had more than three hours' sleep on the previous night) we lay till ten this morning; and at half past eleven went through the Trossachs to Lochkatrine, where I walked from the hotel after tea last night. It is impossible to say what a glorious scene it was. It rained as it never does rain anywhere but here. We conveyed Kate up a rocky pass to go and see the island of the Lady of the Lake, but she gave in after the first five minutes, and we left her, very picturesque and uncomfortable, with Tom[†3] holding an umbrella over her head, while we climbed on. When we came back, she had gone into the carriage. We were wet through to the skin, and came on in that state four and twenty miles. Fletcher is very good natured, and of extraordinary use in these outlandish parts. His habit of going into kitchens and bars, disconcerting at Broadstairs, is here of great service. Not expecting us till six, they hadn't lighted our fires when we arrived here; and if you had seen him (with whom the responsibility of the omission rested) running in and out of the sitting-room and the two bed-rooms with a great pair of bellows, with which he distractedly blew each of the fires out in turn, you would have died of laughing. He had on his head a great highland cap, on his back a white coat, and cut such a figure as even the inimitable can't depicter ...

The Inns, inside and out, are the queerest places imaginable. From the road, this one looks like a white wall, with windows in it by mistake. We have a good sitting-room though, on the first floor: as large (but not as lofty) as my study. The bedrooms are of that size which renders it impossible for you to move, after you have taken your boots off, without chipping pieces out of your legs. There isn't a basin in the Highlands which will hold my face; not a drawer which will open after you have put your clothes in it; not a water-bottle capacious enough to wet your toothbrush. The huts are wretched and miserable beyond all description. The food (for those who can pay for it) "not bad", as M[†1] would say: oatcake, mutton, hotch potch, trout from the loch, small beer bottled, marmalade, and whiskey. Of the last named article I have taken about a pint to-day. The weather is what they call "soft" — which means that the sky is a vast waterspout that never leaves off emptying itself; and the liquor has no more effect than water.... I am going to work to-morrow, and hope before leaving here to write you again. The elections have been sad work indeed. That they should return Sibthorp[†2] and reject Bulwer,[†3] is, by Heaven, a national disgrace.... I don't wonder the devil flew over Lincoln.[†4] The people were far too addle-headed, even for him.... I don't bore you with accounts of Ben this and that, and Lochs of all sorts of names, but this is a wonderful region. The way the mists were stalking about to-day, and the clouds lying down upon the hills; the deep glens, the high rocks, the rushing waterfalls, and the roaring rivers down in deep gulfs below; were all stupendous. This house is wedged round by great heights that are lost in the clouds; and the loch, twelve miles long, stretches out its dreary length before the windows. In my next, I shall soar to the sublime, perhaps; in this here present writing I confine myself to the ridiculous. But I am always,

Map showing Dickens's route on his tour of the Highlands, July 1841

To JOHN FORSTER, 9 JULY 1841

Extracts in F, II, xi, 183-6 and F, II, ix, 168-9. Date: "Ballechelish,[†5] Friday evening, ninth July, 1841, half past nine, P.M." (F, II, xi, 183-4).

I can't go to bed without writing to you from here, though the post will not leave this place until we have left it, and arrived at another. On looking over the route which Lord Murray made out for me, I found he had put down Thursday next for Abbotsford and Dryburgh-abbey, and a journey of seventy miles besides! Therefore, and as I was happily able to steal a march upon myself at Loch-earn-head, and to finish in two days what I thought would take me three, we shall leave here to-morrow morning; and, by being a day earlier than we intended at all the places between this and Melrose (which we propose to reach by Wednesday night), we shall have a whole day for Scott's house and tomb, and still be at York on Saturday evening, and home, God willing, on Sunday.... We left Loch-earn-head last night, and went to a place called Killin, eight miles from it, where we slept. I walked some six miles with Fletcher after we got there, to see a waterfall: and truly it was a magnificent sight, foaming and crashing down three great steeps of riven rock; leaping over the first as far off as you could carry your eye, and rumbling and foaming down into a dizzy pool below you, with a deafening roar. To-day we have had a journey of between 50 and 60 miles, through the bleakest and most desolate part of Scotland, where the hill-tops are still covered with great patches of snow, and the road winds over steep mountain passes, and on the brink of deep brooks and precipices. The cold all day has been intense, and the rain sometimes most violent. It has been impossible to keep warm, by any means; even whiskey failed; the wind was too piercing even for that. One stage of ten miles, over a place called the Black-mount, took us two hours and a half to do; and when we came to a lone public called the King's-house, at the entrance to Glencoe — this was about three o'clock — we were well nigh frozen. We got a fire directly, and in twenty minutes they served us up some famous kippered salmon, broiled; a broiled fowl; hot mutton ham and poached eggs; pancakes; oatcake; wheaten bread; butter; bottled porter; hot water, lump sugar, and whiskey; of which we made a very hearty meal. All the way, the road had been among moors and mountains with huge masses of rock, which fell down God knows where, sprinkling the ground in every direction, and giving it the aspect of the burial place of a race of giants. Now and then we passed a hut or two, with neither window nor chimney, and the smoke of the peat fire rolling out at the door. But there were not six of these dwellings in a dozen miles; and anything so bleak and wild, and mighty in its loneliness, as the whole country, it is impossible to conceive. Glencoe itself is perfectly terrible. The pass is an awful place. It is shut in on each side by enormous rocks from which great torrents come rushing down in all directions. In amongst these rocks on one side of the pass (the left as we came) there are scores of glens, high up, which form such haunts as you might imagine yourself wandering in, in the very height and madness of a fever. They will live in my dreams for years — I was going to say as long as I live, and I seriously think so. The very recollection of them makes me shudder.... Well, I will not bore you with my impressions of these tremendous wilds, but they really are fearful in their grandeur and amazing solitude. Wales[†1] is a mere toy compared with them.

We are now in a bare white house on the banks of Loch-leven, but in a comfortably furnished room on the top of the house — that is, on the first floor — with the rain pattering against the window as though it were December, the wind howling dismally, a cold damp mist on everything without, a blazing fire within halfway up the chimney, and a most infernal Piper practising under the window for a competition of pipers which is to come off shortly.

†aI have done all I can or need do in the way of Barnaby until I come home, and the story is progressing (I hope you will think) to good strong interest. I have left it, I think, at an exciting point, with a good dawning of the riots.†1 In the first of the two numbers I have written since I have been away, I forget whether the blind man, in speaking to Barnaby about riches, tells him they are to be found in crowds. If I have not actually used that word, will you introduce it?†2 A perusal of the proof of the following number (70) will show you how, and why.†a †3

The store of anecdotes of Fletcher with which we shall return, will last a long time. It seems that the F's are an extensive clan, and that his father†4 was a highlander. Accordingly, wherever he goes, he finds out some cotter or small farmer who is his cousin. I wish you could see him walking into his cousins' curds and cream, and into their dairies generally! Yesterday morning between eight and nine, I was sitting writing at the open window, when the postman came to the inn (which at Loch-earn-head is the post office) for the letters. He is going away, when Fletcher, who has been writing somewhere below stairs, rushes out, and cries "Halloa there! Is that the Post?" "Yes!" somebody answers. "Call him back!" says Fletcher: "Just sit down till I've done, and don't go away till I tell you." — Fancy! The General Post, with the letters of forty villages in a leathern bag! ... To-morrow at Oban. Sunday at Inverary. Monday at Tarbet. Tuesday at Glasgow (and that night at Hamilton). Wednesday at Melrose. Thursday at Ditto. Friday I don't know where. Saturday at York. Sunday — how glad I shall be to shake hands with you. My love to Mac. I thought he'd have written once. Ditto to Macready. I had a very nice and welcome letter from him, and a most hearty one from Elliotson.... P.S. Half asleep. So, excuse drowsiness of matter and composition. I shall be full of joy to meet another letter from you! ... P.P.S. They speak Gaelic here, of course, and many of the common people understand very little English.

Since I wrote this letter, I rang the girl upstairs, and gave elaborate directions (you know my way) for a pint of sherry to be made into boiling negus; mentioning all the ingredients one by one, and particularly nutmeg. When I had quite finished, seeing her obviously bewildered, I said, with great gravity, "Now you know what you're going to order?" "Oh yes. Sure." "What?" — a pause — "Just" — another pause — "Just plenty of nutbergs!"

To THE POSTMASTER, OBAN, [10 JULY 1841]

Mention in next (penultimate sentence).

To JOHN FORSTER, 11 JULY 1841

Extracts in F, II, xi, 186-9. Date: "Dalmally, Sunday, July the eleventh, 1841" (F, II, xi, 186).

As there was no place of this name in our route, you will be surprised to see it at the head of this present writing. But our being here is a part of such moving accidents by flood and field[†1] as will astonish you. If you should happen to have your hat on, take it off, that your hair may stand on end without any interruption. To get from Ballyhoolish (as I am obliged to spell it when Fletcher is not in the way; and he is out at this moment) to Oban, it is necessary to cross two ferries, one of which is an arm of the sea, eight or ten miles broad. Into this ferry-boat, passengers, carriages, horses, and all, get bodily, and are got across by hook or by crook if the weather be reasonably fine. Yesterday morning, however, it blew such a strong gale that the landlord of the inn, where we had paid for horses all the way to Oban (thirty miles), honestly came upstairs just as we were starting, with the money in his hand, and told us it would be impossible to cross. There was nothing to be done but to come back five and thirty miles, through Glencoe and Inverouran, to a place called Tyndrum, whence a road twelve miles long crosses to Dalmally, which is sixteen miles from Inverary. Accordingly we turned back, and in a great storm of wind and rain began to retrace the dreary road we had come the day before.... I was not at all ill pleased to have to come again through that awful Glencoe. If it had been tremendous on the previous day, yesterday it was perfectly horrific. It had rained all night, and was raining then, as it only does in these parts. Through the whole glen, which is ten miles long, torrents were boiling and foaming, and sending up in every direction spray like the smoke of great fires. They were rushing down every hill and mountain side, and tearing like devils across the path, and down into the depths of the rocks. Some of the hills looked as if they were full of silver, and had cracked in a hundred places. Others as if they were frightened, and had broken out into a deadly sweat. In others there was no compromise or division of streams, but one great torrent came roaring down with a deafening noise, and a rushing of water that was quite appalling. Such a spaet, in short (that's the country word), has not been known for many years, and the sights and sounds were beyond description. The post-boy was not at all at his ease, and the horses were very much frightened (as well they might be) by the perpetual raging and roaring; one of them started as we came down a steep place, and we were within that much (——) of tumbling over a precipice; just then, too, the drag broke, and we were obliged to go on as we best could, without it: getting out every now and then, and hanging on at the back of the carriage to prevent its rolling down too fast, and going Heaven knows where. Well, in this pleasant state of things we came to King's-house again, having been four hours doing the sixteen miles. The rumble[†1] where Tom sat was by this time so full of water, that he was obliged to borrow a gimlet, and bore holes in the bottom to let it run out. The horses that were to take us on, were out upon the hills, somewhere within ten miles round; and three or four bare-legged fellows went out to look for 'em, while we sat by the fire and tried to dry ourselves. At last we got off again (without the drag and with a broken spring, no smith living within ten miles), and went limping on to Inverouran. In the first three miles we were in a ditch and out again, and lost a horse's shoe. All this time it never once left off raining; and was very windy, very cold, very misty, and most intensely dismal. So we crossed the Black-mount, and came to a place we had passed the day before, where a rapid river runs over a bed of broken rock. Now, this river, sir, had a bridge last winter, but the bridge broke down when the thaw came, and has never since been mended; so travellers cross upon a little platform, made of rough deal planks stretching from rock to rock; and carriages and horses ford the water, at a certain point. As the platform is the reverse of steady (we had proved this the day before), is very slippery, and affords anything but a pleasant footing, having only a trembling little rail on one side, and on the other nothing between it and the foaming stream, Kate decided to remain in the carriage, and trust herself to the wheels rather than to her feet. Fletcher and I had got out, and it was going away, when I advised her, as I had done several times before, to come with us; for I saw that the water was very high, the current being greatly swollen by the rain, and that the post-boy had been eyeing it in a very disconcerted manner for the last half hour. This decided her to come out; and Fletcher, she, Tom, and I, began to cross, while the carriage went about a quarter of a mile down the bank, in search of a shallow place. The platform shook so much that we could only come across two at a time, and then it felt as if it were hung on springs. As to the wind and rain! ... well, put into one gust all the wind and rain you ever saw and heard, and you'll have some faint notion of it! When we got safely to the opposite bank, there came riding up a wild highlander, in a great plaid, whom we recognized as the landlord of the inn, and who without taking the least notice of us, went dashing on, — with the plaid he was wrapped in, streaming in the wind, — screeching in Gaelic to the post-boy on the opposite bank, and making the most frantic gestures you ever saw, in which he was joined by some other wild man on foot, who had come across by a short cut, knee-deep in mire and water. As we began to see what this meant, we (that is, Fletcher and I) scrambled on after them, while the boy, horses, and carriage were plunging in the water, which left only the horses' heads and the boy's body visible. By the time we got up to them, the man on horseback and the [man][†1] on foot were perfectly mad with pantomime; for as to any of their shouts being heard by the boy, the water made such a great noise that they might as well have been dumb. It made me quite sick to think how I should have felt if Kate had been inside. The carriage went round and round like a great stone, the boy was as pale as death, the horses were struggling and plashing and snorting like sea-animals, and we were all roaring to the driver to throw himself off and let them and the coach go to the devil, when suddenly it came all right (having got into shallow water), and, all tumbling and dripping and jogging from side to side, climbed up to the dry land. I assure you we looked rather queer, as we wiped our faces and stared at each other in a little cluster round about it. It seemed that the man on horseback had been looking at us through a telescope as we came to the track, and knowing that the place was very dangerous, and seeing that we meant to bring the carriage, had come on at a great gallop to show the driver the only place where he could cross. By the time he came up, the man had taken the water at a wrong place, and in a word was as nearly drowned (with carriage, horses, luggage, and all) as ever man was. Was this a good adventure?

We all went on to the inn — the wild man galloping on first, to get a fire lighted — and there we dined on eggs and bacon, oat-cake, and whiskey; and changed and dried ourselves. The place was a mere knot of little outhouses, and in one of these there were fifty highlanders all drunk.... Some were drovers, some pipers, and some workmen engaged to build a hunting-lodge for Lord Breadalbane[†2] hard by, who had been driven in by stress of weather. One was a paper-hanger. He had come out three days before to paper the inn's best room, a chamber almost large enough to keep a Newfoundland dog in; and, from the first half hour after his arrival to that moment, had been hopelessly and irreclaimably drunk. They were lying about in all directions: on forms, on the ground, about a loft overhead, round the turf-fire wrapped in plaids, on the tables, and under them. We paid our bill, thanked our host very heartily, gave some money to his children, and after an hour's rest came on again. At ten o'clock at night, we reached this place, and were overjoyed to find quite an English inn, with good beds (those we have slept on, yet, have always been of straw), and every possible comfort. We breakfasted this morning at half past ten, and at three go on to Inverary to dinner. I believe the very rough part of the journey is over, and I am really glad of it. Kate sends all kind of regards.

I shall hope to find a letter from you at Inverary when the post reaches there, to-morrow. I wrote to Oban yesterday, desiring the post-office keeper to send any he might have for us, over to that place. Love to Mac.

To [JAMES BOGLE[†1] AND OTHERS, 12 JULY 1841]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 JULY 1841]

Extracts in F, II, xi, 189. Date: "from Inverary the day following his exciting adventure [of 10 July]", says Forster (F, ibid). But reference to the invitation from Glasgow (see fn), which CD received on 12 July (To Maclise, that day), shows that he must have been writing not the day after the adventure but the day after his letter about it: i.e. on the 12th.

Promising another letter from Melrose (lost, or possibly never written) and enclosing the invitation to a public dinner at Glasgow.[†2]

I have returned for answer that I am on my way home, on pressing business connected with my weekly publication, and can't stop. But I have offered to come down any day in September or October, and accept the honour then. Now, I shall come and return per mail; and if this suits them, enter into a solemn league and covenant to come with me. Do. You must. I am sure you will[†3] ... Till my next, and always afterwards, God bless you. I got your welcome letter this morning, and have read it a hundred times. What a pleasure it is. Kate's best regards. I am dying for Sunday, and wouldn't stop now for twenty dinners of twenty thousand each.

Always your affectionate friend

BOZ.

Will Lord John meet the parliament, or resign first?[†4]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 12 JULY 1841*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Inverary. | July The Twelfth 1841.

My Dear Mac.

You're a nice man. Why in the name of Heaven, have you never written to me — why didn't you say a word in acknowledgment of the receipt of those newspapers — why do you fix your thoughts exclusively on green cloths and water bottles,[†1] and leave your bosom friends uncongratulated, when Grims and Elliotsons[†2] write him long letters brim full of friendly enthusiasm — does R. A. stand for coldness, forgetfulness, insensibility, or what?[†3]

And who has scraped out the beautiful eyes of those sweet summer-evening girls?[†4] Who has reduced the Modest Quencher to a state of darkness,[†5] and quenched the lustre of the gentle Sophy?[†6] If you had no interest in my affairs, do you think it was mutual, and I had none in yours? But Shee shall answer for this, if he lives 'till my return. It's his doing, I know.

The mountain passes we have traversed, the rushing streams in which we have been nearly drowned, the torrents that have roared and raged in our ears, the heather we have plucked, the rocks we have climbed, the lochs whereon we have glided, shall all be yours anon. Do ask Forster for my last letter, and see what perils we encountered. I wrote it for your edification no less than his.[†1] Unkindly villain!

— Or stay — was it love for Fortescue[†2] that kept your thoughts from me? If so, I am satisfied. We always agree on those points, you know. — When I last saw her, I think her nose turned up at the end. Is it so? Let me know the worst, and I will bear it.[†3]

Tomorrow night, we sleep at Hamilton — on Wednesday at Melrose — on Thursday at Melrose too — on Friday, somewhere on the road, but I don't know where — on Saturday at York. Let me hear from you though it be only to the amount of six words. To see your handwriting will be summ'at.

And do be in Devonshire Terrace on Sunday evening. And do[†4] bear this in mind — that I have had to-day an invitation to a great dinner, from the Glasgow people — that I have declined it for the present, being on my way home for Clock purposes — that I have offered to come back in September or October[†1] — and that if this suits them, I shall come down by Mail and go back by ditto. You'll join me in that? Now say you will, once and for all. The only thing I felt at the Edinburgh Dinner (and I felt it very strongly) was, that except Kate there was nobody I cared for, there to see.

She sends her best regards. She thinks with me that you are a villain, but like me is meek and forbearing. Fletcher desires to be remembered. I think I have some good stories of him. — You shall judge.

Let us dine together every day next week. I look forward to Sunday, with a delight past all expression.[†2]

Always Dear Mac
Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To CHARLES SELBY,[†3] 20 JULY 1841

Text from N, I, 339.

Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | July the Twentieth 1841

My Dear Sir,

Your letter of I don't know what date, but not a very recent one, has been following me over Scotland. It was forwarded with others from town, and did not reach me until I was coming home within these few days.

It would be ridiculous for me to deny that I am always most intensely mortified and very much aggravated by having my stories anticipated in their course;[†4] and that I think the state of the law which permits such things, is disgraceful to England.[†1] At the same time, I am so far from blaming you in the matter, that if I could give you a patent for dramatizing my productions I would gladly do so; inasmuch as if they must be done at all, I would rather have them done by gentlemanly hands, and by those who really desire to act fairly and honorably as I am sure you do.

Mrs. Dickens will be glad if you can let her have a private box tonight; and I hear so much of Miss Fortescue,[†2] that I shall endeavor to accompany her. If this should not find you at the Theatre, will you do me the favor to leave such instructions with the doorkeeper as will insure us a quiet and quick reception?

Believe me always | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM SHOBERL, 20 JULY 1841*

MS Mr J. W. Nyberg.

Devonshire Terrace. | July The Twentieth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I have been in Scotland for more than a month, and on my return home yesterday,[†3] found your note of Saturday's date.

I shall be happy to see you tomorrow at Ten, and am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Shoberl Esquire

To WILLIAM SHOBERL, 21 JULY 1841

Text from N, I, 341.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-First July 1841

Dear Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter in answer to mine of this morning,[†4] which is quite satisfactory. I need not, I am sure, point out the necessity of being very particular in respect of the form of advertisement in the Weekly papers [.A]s[†1] there has been ample time for correction, I am sure you will have attended to it.[†2]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 21 JULY 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First July 1841.

Dear Mac

I can't go tonight — at all events until late; for a man[†3] is coming here at 8, to settle (mirabile dictu) the matter of Mrs. Macrone's book, for ever.

All you have to do, is, to go to the Strand Theatre,[†4] and ask for Forster's box.

I shall see you I hope, at least a dozen times, between this and Sunday. But don't forget that you dine with us on that day at 6. — Will you lounge first?

Faithfully
CD.

I think it very likely I may come in tonight about 9.

To JOHN FORSTER, 21 JULY 1841

Forster's summary of letter, made before destruction, MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC); dated Devonshire Terrace, 21 July 41.

As to the Pic Nic book. He and Shoberl.

To LORD MURRAY, 21 JULY 1841*

MS Public Archives of Canada.

1 Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park London
Twenty First July 1841.

Dear Lord Murray.

I know that when you see the inclosed letters,[†5] you will think me a villain — dead to a sense of Highland grandeur and Highland hospitality — unworthy of that memorable chart[†1] which I have worn into a perfect fringe by frequent reference — and in short a worthless character, utterly undeserving your interest and kindness.

But believe me that notwithstanding your judicial habits, all this is a mistake. I have — if I may say so, who shouldn't — a particular capacity for feeling and remembering such genial treatment as yours; a vivid recollection of anything that is true and earnest; and, by consequence, a most distinct remembrance of everything you said and did, advised and recommended — and a strong desire to stand well with you.

I plead guilty to never having intended to deliver these fatal missives, simply for this one reason — that I was bound by a great many considerations, to be in London last Sunday night — that I mistrusted my power of resisting the Lady of the Lake[†2] (for which you will please attack the Laird of Dunans,[†3] who gave me a heart rending account of her and filled my soul with a vague idea that Mr. Callandar[†4] had done something personal in marrying so fair a creature) — and that I wanted to see as many places as I could, in so short a space of time. These are several reasons in one, but they all go to the same point, and therefore I use the singular number. For this reason then, I put the letters away, when you gave them to me, in the very bottom of my Portmanteau, and said within myself that they would give me an excuse for writing to you when I got home. You see that I am not slow to avail myself of it; this is their real use, and a very good one too — as I think.

That I was delighted and astonished beyond all measure by what I saw; and that I never could have seen what I did, without your aid; I need not say. As I have you associated in my mind with Glencoe, Loch Katrine, and everything that was wild wonderful or beautiful in the expedition, I hope my friends on this side of the Tweed will not charge upon you a new failing of which I am sensible. I am strongly apprehensive that I have come back, a bore. Strange desires to talk about Scotland come upon me at improper seasons. I prose fearfully after supper. The mind of my most intimate friend wandered last night as I related some moving adventures at Inverouran, and described the dreariness of Tyndrum. I see that visitors begin to avoid the subject; and when I put my hand into my desk, and drawing out a greasy paper, say — "this was the little route which Lord Murray — " they recollect engagements, and think they left their hats outside.

I am on the subject now, and will be warned in time. Not another word shall pass my pen's lips, except that I beg my compliments to Lady Murray;[†1] that Mrs. Dickens desires to be remembered cordially, both to you and her; and that I am, with a most unaffected sense of your great kindness,

Dear Lord Murray
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorable | Lord Murray

To MRS MARY HURNALL, 21 JULY 1841

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Free | Mrs. Mary Hurnall | Clipston | Market Harborough.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
July The Twenty First 1841.

Dear Madam.

I have been in Scotland for some weeks past, and find so many letters to answer on my return, that I am obliged to send a more brief reply to yours than I desire.

Accept my sincere thanks, both for your note, and the Invitation it contains. I fear it is not likely that it will ever be in my power to accept it in deed, but in spirit I do, and so do Mrs. Dickens and my children — you are right; I have four.

Be assured that I am not unmindful of my promise, and that if you should come back to London at any time, I shall, please God, make a point of seeing you.[†2]

Your remark — a very natural and proper one — on the blind man in Barnaby, is only another proof to me, among many others which present themselves in various forms every day, of the great disadvantages which attend a detached and desultory form of publication. My intention in the management of this inferior and subordinate character, was to remind the World who have eyes, that they have no right to expect in sightless men a degree of virtue and goodness to which they, in full possession of all their senses, can lay no claim — that it is a very easy thing for those who misuse every gift of Heaven to consider resignation and cheerfulness the duty of those whom it has deprived of some great blessing — that whereas we look upon a blind man who does wrong, as a kind of monster, we ought in Truth and Justice to remember that a man who has eyes and is a vicious wretch, is by his very abuse of the glorious faculty of sight, an immeasurably greater offender than his afflicted fellow. In a word, I wished to show that the hand of God is at least as manifest in making eyes as in unmaking them, and that we do not sufficiently consider the sorrows of those who walk in darkness on this earth, when we set it up as a rule that they ought to be better than ourselves, and that they are required to be by their calamity. Calamity with us, is made an excuse for doing wrong. With them, it is erected into a reason for their doing right. This is really the justice of rich to poor, and I protest against it because it is so.[†1]

All this you would have seen if you could have had the whole book before your mental vision.[†2] As it is, I can only hope to bring my meaning before you by very slow and gradual degrees, and after you have formed a first impression on the subject.

That it is a real pleasure and delight to me to know that I afford you any consolation or amusement, you may believe with your whole heart. And believe also that I am, Dear Madam with an unaffected interest in your happiness

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Hurnall.

To JOHN CAY,[†3] 21 JULY 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
July The Twenty First 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks for your letter, and for the Index to the same.[†4] They both reached me, safely.

My Barnaby plans are so laid, that I am not sure (especially as I think I can make a better riot than Lord George Gordon did) whether I could make any use of any new discoveries. But being interested in the subject I should very much like to see the two books of which you so kindly proffer me the loan. And if you will have the kindness to address them to me to the care of the Clock agent — Mr. Menzies, Bookseller of Prince's Street — I have no doubt he will have the means of forwarding them.

I am delighted to hear that the Orsons are at peace, and that you, Valentine, got home again undamaged.[†1] I was half afraid to look into the print shop windows at Glasgow as I rode through the town, lest I should see a lithographic representation (on the model of the picture of Captain Cook's death)[†2] of certain Irish excavators beating you to death with clubs. I bless my stars — and the Military — for your preservation.[†3]

Mrs. Dickens desires to be kindly remembered to you, and I am, with many thanks,
My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I should state that I have the remarkable property of taking care of borrowed books, and of returning them.

To R. S. HORRELL, 21 JULY 1841

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

Devonshire Terrace. | July The Twenty First 1841.

Dear Sir.

You must not be down-hearted about Blackwood. You may write a civil note, I think — enquire after the Young Painter's fate — and beg to have the MS returned, if rejected. I should like to know what they say to you.

I see no objection to your trying Mr. Heraud[†1] certainly, though I believe (but this is between ourselves) that he and some other gentlemen inclose themselves in a magic circle formed of their own Manuscripts, and perform wondrous incantations which seldom reach beyond it. However, a fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind,[†2] and perhaps the Young Painter may see the light, even amidst their brightness. Try the Monthly by all means.[†2]

I [hope][†3] you have received some benefit from your Voyage. I should have written to you sooner, but I have been in Scotland for some weeks, and only returned home last Monday.
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I fear I shall not be able to get to Exeter this year.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 21 JULY 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | July The Twenty First 1841.

My Dear George.

Come and dine with me on Sunday at 6 exactly[†4] — nobody here but the two Macs and Forster. I am at home again, you see. Traitor! Why didn't you write to me after I sent you that paper ? ? ?[†5]
Loves at home nevertheless

Yours indignantly
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 21 JULY 1841*

MS Dunedin Public Library, New Zealand.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First July 1841.

Dear Sir.

I have been in Scotland for some weeks, and have only just returned to get your note. Nothing less should have prevented my answering it immediately.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS PERRY,[†1] 21 JULY 1841

Mention in American Book Prices Current, IV, 1918-9; MS 2 pp.; dated 21 July 41.

Answering an inquiry about a gentleman.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 21 JULY 1841

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First July 1841.

My Dear George

I am just home from Scotland.

What about the Postilion. Is he "all right", or "all wrong" — Vich?[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To JOHN OVERS, 21 JULY 1841*

Transcript by Dr J. B. Solley, owner of MS in 1939.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First July 1841

Dear Mr. Overs.

I write hastily to you, because I have been in Scotland for some weeks, and have only just returned to find your letter lying upon my table.

I have not seen Mr. Cruikshank, of course. But as I think it cannot prejudice you now, to spur his memory, I have done so by letter. The result you shall hear, directly I hear it.

I am concerned to hear that you are ill, and trust you have sound advice.

If you have any doubt upon that subject, let me know, and I will take care that the best authority shall set your mind at ease on that score. You need have no hesitation in doing this, for most of our skilful doctors are my friends, and any one of them would be glad, I know, to wait upon you without charge.

This brings me to something else. — I hope you don't want money; but if you do, I hope you know whom to ask for it. Lest you should have any doubt upon the subject, here is the man's name at full length.

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs

To JOHN OVERS, 23 JULY 1841*

MS Carl and Lily Pforzheimer Foundation.

†[a]In haste to save the Post.[†a]

———

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third July 1841.

My Dear Mr. Overs.

I am truly pleased to hear you are so much better. You must have suffered very much. One of your complaints I am, and have been from a child, subject to myself. I can feel for you.

Will you — if you can comfortably — acknowledge the safe receipt of the inclosed, in one line? I hope it is enough for your present purpose.[†1]

I shall be in town until Saturday week; and after that, at Broadstairs in Kent, where all letters will find me. Whenever I hear from Mr. Cruikshank, depend upon my writing. In case I should be addressing you at a wrong place, you had better let me know when you return to town.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To JOHN FORSTER, 23 JULY 1841

Forster's summary of letter, made before destruction, MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC); dated Devonshire Terrace, 23 July 41.

As to Shoberl matters.[†2] And some misprinted words in proof.[†3]

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, 23 JULY [1841]

MS Wisbech Museum & Literary Institute. Date: clearly the year of CD's visit to Scotland; signature supports.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third July.

My Dear Townshend.

On Wednesday I will dine with you please God. At what hour?

I am horribly hard at work,[†1] after my Scotch honors, and dare not be mesmerized, lest it should damage me at all. Even a day's head ache would be a serious thing just now.[†2]

— But a time will come — as they say in melo dramas[†3] — no more —

Except that I am always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend | Chauncey Hare Townshend.

To THOMAS BEARD, 25 JULY 1841

MS Dickens House. Address: Free | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday July Twenty Fifth 1841.

My Dear Beard.

This is to give you notice that I am safe at home — that the children and other valuables repair to Broadstairs next Saturday — and that self and Partner follow them, this day week.

You have not changed your mind, I hope, in respect of your weekly visits, dips, and airings? If not, come and dine with me (alone) at 5 on Thursday, and we'll enjoy everything in anticipation. It'll freshen you up and make a man of you till next Autumn, so break it out to Easthope forthwith.

Always Faithfully

BOZ.

Loves and regards

To JOHN FORSTER, 26 JULY 1841

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Morning | July Twenty Sixth 1841.

My Dear Forster.

The broad light of day, shews me that I ought not to go to Greenwich tomorrow; for unless I keep my mind upon my work, I shan't do it; and if I don't do it, I'm done. Wherefore I declare off virtuously.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Over

I had written this when your note came. I must stick to it, like wax, pitch, glue, cement. Pity and protect

The Slave.

I have told the boy to bring Stanfield's note back to you for reconsideration.

What about Friday?†[1] I shall see you between this and then. We might — I say we might — breakfast at the Parthenon perhaps.

! ! ! ! ! ! ! !

To DANIEL MACLISE, 28 JULY [1841]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: 28 July was Wednesday in 1841; handwriting, and references to the "fete" (see last, fn) and to Broadstairs support.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday July The Twenty Eighth.

My Dear Mac.

Will you let me know when I see you on Friday at that dazzling fete, whether you purpose going to Broadstairs with us on Sunday.

Recollect that all the time we are there, there is a bedroom most heartily at your service. I only ask in order that the servants (who go on Saturday morning) may know for whom they are to prepare.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 28 JULY 1841

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace.
Wednesday Evening | July The Twenty Eighth 1841.

My Dear George.

Can you do for me by Saturday Evening — I know the time is short, but I think the subject will suit you, and I am greatly pressed[†1] — a party of rioters (with Hugh and Simon Tappertit conspicuous among them) in old John Willet's bar — turning the liquor taps to their own advantage — smashing bottles — cutting down the grove of lemons — sitting astride on casks — drinking out of the best punchbowls — eating the great cheese — smoking sacred pipes &c &c — John Willet, fallen backward in his chair, regarding them with a stupid horror, and quite alone among them, with none of the Maypole customers at his back.

It's in your way, and you'll do it a hundred times better than I can suggest it to you, I know.[†2]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 28 JULY [1841]*

MS Dr William A. Whittaker. Date: clearly same day as last; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Twenty Eighth July.

My Dear Sir.

I forgot to tell you — I have given Mr. Cattermole a subject for No. 73[†3] — a full one — and asked him to get it done by Saturday Evening. Look him up ac-cor-din-ly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JULY 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 169. Date: 29 July according to Forster.

Have you seen no. 71? I thought there was a good glimpse of a crowd, from a window — eh?[†4]

To JOHN HUDSON, 29 JULY 1841*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | July Twenty Ninth 1841.

Dr. Sir.

The bottle has been a great success, and has provoked a great many enquiries — as I hope you will find.

I want to make a present of some of the Illustrious Punch, to my friend Doctor Elliotson. Will you be good enough to have two dozen nicely packed, and to send it to that gentleman (Carriage Paid) 37 Conduit Street, Bond Street, London?[†1] — The account, of course, to me. We are going to the seaside for a couple of months, but when we return I shall want some more for myself.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Hudson.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 31 JULY 1841

MS[†2] Widener Collection, Harvard.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 31st. July 1841

My Dear Sirs

The terms upon which you advanced to me on the 2nd. July 1840 the sum of £2250 for the purchase of the Copyright and Stock of Oliver [on][†3] my behalf and also upon which you have since advanced to me the su[m][†3] of £769..9..5 making together the sum of £3019.9.5 are underst[ood][†3] between us to be these.

That this sum is not to be called in by you before the 2nd. day of July 1845 and to be without interest in the mean time — That you are to have a lien to this amount on the property belonging to me that is now and will be then in your hands namely my shares in the Stock and Copyright of "Sketches by Boz" "The Pickwick Papers" "Nicholas Nickleby" "Oliver Twist" and "Master Humphrey's Clock" in which we do not include my share of the current profits of the last named Work which I still remain at liberty to draw at the times stated in our Agreement except as to one half of the profits arising to me over and above the Weekly sum of £50 which one half is to be applied towards the reduction of the said sum of £3019.9.5 — That you are also to appropriate [to] gradual liquidation of the said sum of £3019.9.5 whatever sum you may receive from the Sale of the Stock of Oliver Twist deducting the sum of £5 pr. cent for Commission on the Sale thereof and all charges of Advertizing and of foreign Commission.

I have also caused my Life to be insured with the Britannia Life Asse. Company for £2000 the policy for which (Numbered 2251)[†1] I am willing that you should hold as a further Security and the same will this day be handed over to you by my solicitors.

Dear Sirs | faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

Messrs. Chapman & Hall

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [31 JULY 1841]

Mention in To Chapman & Hall, ?3 Aug 41. Date: written immediately after signing the Bond of 31 July, and sent with Mitton's letter to Chapman & Hall closing the business.

Peremptorily demanding the return of the private letter to Edward Chapman, 2 July 40, in which he had thanked him for the firm's loan of £2250.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [31 JULY 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 193. Date: 31 July according to Forster.

I subscribed for a couple of copies of this little book.[†4] I knew nothing of the man, but he wrote me a very modest letter of two lines, some weeks ago. I have been much affected by the little biography at the beginning,[†5] and I thought you would like to share the emotion it had raised in me. I wish we were all in Eden again — for the sake of these toiling creatures.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?31 JULY 1841]*

MS Private. Date: later than CD's Broadstairs visit of Sep-Oct 40 on reference to "the Maniac" (i.e. Fletcher: see To Forster, 13 Sep); clearly some Saturday when CD had "packed up" before leaving home; probably 31 July 41 (he left for Broadstairs on 1 Aug). Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday

My Dear Maclise

Let me make you lazy today, for I have packed up all my tools and can't do anything. The Maniac joins us at "Mister Ryan's"[†1] at half past 6. Meanwhile let us lunch and walk. I'll be with you in a quarter of an hour after the receipt of this.

Faithfully Yours Always

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?JULY] 1841

Extract in Charles De F. Burns catalogue, Feb 1896; MS (signed initials) 1 p.; dated 1841 — possibly July when he was hard at work making up for time spent in Scotland.

I am hard at work, but will take a couple of hours before dinner and resume at night.

August

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 AUGUST 1841

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Broadstairs | Monday. August The Second | 1841.

My Dear Beard.

You cannot (as you know) come too soon, or too often, or stay too long. I am alone, and anxiously expecting you.

The Ramsgate boat starts from the Wharf at London Bridge, every morning at 9 to the moment. All you have to do, is to go aboard of her, and when you come off Margate or thereabouts, tell the captain you want to go ashore at Broadstairs.

When you know, write and tell me the day, that I may be on the look out for you. And may I ask you to stop your cab at No. 1 Devonshire Terrace, and bring down a small basket Topping shall have ready packed and waiting for you — together with any letters he may have on hand?

The Sea, with long creation,[†1] seems to me to get fresher every year.

Always My Dear Beard | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Best regards from Kate, and from Fred, who is here — in tight boots[†2] of course. Love from children.

To JOHN FOWLER, 2 AUGUST 1841

Mention in N, I, 343. Address (envelope, MS Private): John Fowler Esquire | Occupation Road | Sheffield; PM Sheffield 3 Aug 41.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?3 AUGUST 1841]†

MS[†3] Huntington Library. Date: Handwriting points unmistakably to Aug 41 at earliest. Presumably To Chapman & Hall, 31 July (like CD's insurance policy), was delivered by hand that same day; Chapman & Hall would probably have replied on Mon 2 Aug, and CD written the answer below on the 3rd. An apparently post-reconciliation letter from William Chapman to Mitton, about CD's insurance premium, is dated 4 Aug (MS Mr C. C. Dickens). From Broadstairs (see below).

Dear Sirs.

I desire, no less earnestly than yourselves, that the spirit of confidence which has always — until lately — prevailed between us, and which of late has doubtless undergone a[†4] suspension, should be restored. But I owe it to myself, and to the[†5] reliance I have always felt[†6] in you, [†a]and always endeavoured earnestly to [ ],[†a] to say that its suspension is in no wise attributable to me, or to any act or expression on the part of any person who has mediated, on my behalf, between us.

When [†b]I applied to you to advance[†b] me the money for the purchase of Oliver Twist and for my extrication from the hands of the nefarious[†7] Mr. Bentley, I did so because you knew me well — because you had profited largely by such abilities and powers of perseverance and application as are my only Bank — because [†c]you had my copyrights — because[†c] you knew me to be a man of truth and honor in my dealings — because we were closely and intimately connected in business transactions of present and prospective profit, both to you and to me. For all these reasons I considered that I had a claim upon you; and having it, that it was better to get the money from you than from any of the dozen strangers who would have thrust it into my pockets, and hampered me with hard conditions.

You advanced it. I wrote you an acknowledgement[†1] which I considered, and do consider, was between truthful men a sufficient security. I also wrote you a private letter in which I expressed, as I always do, what I felt, [†d]and always endeavoured [ ].[†d] I had a strong sense of the ready and kind way in which you had come forward with the money, and of the personal interest you had shewn in the matter — this made it in my eyes something of a more pleasant nature than a mere matter of business, and[†2] I was glad to be affected by it, and to think it a gratifying circumstance.

The [†e]acknowledgement I wrote you[†e] was "to be put into law".[†3] Well, I thought, perhaps, on reflection, you would not consider this necessary. But as I had had the money, and had parted with it, I made no objection.

The next I heard of the business was this: — I was taken aside one day by Mr. Smithson (no very great private friend of mine — not in my confidence, and not having much reason that I know of to be partially interested in my proceedings)[†4] who told me that a few nights previous, he had opened a parcel addressed to the firm, containing a draught of a deed from Mr. Chapman of Richmond[†5] — that he had read it, and during the perusal could not refrain from expressing to those who were about him, at the moment, his unbounded surprise at the conditions it recited — that he held them to be most degrading in reference to myself, quite unwarrantable in reference to you; [†f]of a most hard,[†f] stringent, and overbearing kind — and that it was a deed such as no client of his, apart from any delicate[†6] consideration arising out of previous dealings between the parties, should ever sign with his consent.[†7] He expressed himself with the greatest warmth, and said that if you had instructed Mr. Chapman to prepare such an Instrument, it was his duty to have remonstrated with you, and to have endeavoured to dissuade you from attempting to carry such an intention into effect. He said that he felt great hesitation in interfering with the business, as this was the first he had heard of it, and it was managed by Mr. Mitton. But that he had told Mr. Mitton what he thought, and found that that gentleman entirely concurred with him, and was as much surprised as himself.[†1] He wound up by telling me in so many words that he thought it would be much better if I empowered Mr. Mitton to negociate an advance of two thousand pounds in some other quarter & repay the money to you — and rid me of a burden †a you sought to render †a so insupportable and oppressive.

On this I communicated with Mr. Mitton directly — †b After reading the deed I †b told him flatly that I would not sign any such document, that I believed Mr. Chapman of Richmond was more to blame than you — and that it might go back to him as so much waste paper, as soon as he pleased.

The upshot of all the subsequent legal conferences and discussions †c (from which I was quite unable to separate your [ ]) †c is simply this. The letter I wrote you was a security in equity, but not in law. Mr. Chapman of Richmond — acting with no very strong family likeness to Mr. Chapman of the Strand, and not always expressing himself, as I am told, in the most courteous or becoming terms — demanded to have both. As the least offensive way of putting me into double irons, Mr. Mitton recommended the bond; and wearied to death with opposition and delay, disgusted with the whole course of proceeding and thoroughly sick at heart, I signed the bond.

But when I did so, I told Mr. Mitton that as you had trusted nothing to me, and had treated me like a stranger, I would not leave on record between us a private letter (he had never seen or heard of it) which I had sent to Mr.

Chapman immediately after the money was put down; and †1 which, left unrecalled, would be a lie. I therefore took up the pen with which I had signed the bond, and with my own hand wrote those words which you say occasioned you so much pain; and peremptorily required that he should add them to the letter in which he closed the business.

This done, I left town, as you know, and coming down here, tried to dismiss the subject from my thoughts. Your letter of yesterday (received this morning) has re-opened it, and rendered it necessary that I should tell you exactly what I have thought, and felt, and known about it. †a I have done so without the least reserve. †a †2 That my sentiments have undergone a complete change since the receipt of that letter; and that it has done more to awaken the feelings which have so long subsisted and should always subsist between us, than whole years of uninterrupted good understanding without any allusion to this theme, could have effected, it would be ungenerous in me to conceal for a moment. I make the avowal with great delight and pleasure; and rest assured that in the negociation of our new undertaking, †3 you will find me †4 as ready to respond to you in a frank and cordial spirit, and as earnestly desirous to meet you on all points with a liberal construction, and a confidence, founded on mutual [knowledge] †5 and esteem as I ever have been at any period of our intercourse.

As you think you can trust me without the bond, I would rather you threw it into the fire with your own hands — for I can trust you to do it.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 AUGUST 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 169. Date: 5 Aug according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I am warming up very much about Barnaby.[†6] Oh! If I only had him, from this time to the end, in monthly numbers. N'importe! I hope the interest will be pretty strong — and, in every number, stronger.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?6 AUGUST 1841]

Mention in next.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 6 AUGUST 1841

Text from MDGH, I, 46-7.

Broadstairs, Friday, August 6th, 1841.

My dear George,

Here is a subject for the next number;[†1] the next to that I hope to send you the MS. of very early in the week,[†2] as the best opportunities of illustration are all coming off now, and we are in the thick of the story.[†3]

The rioters went, sir, from John Willet's bar (where you saw them to such good purpose)[†4] straight to The Warren, which house they plundered, sacked, burned, pulled down as much of as they could, and greatly damaged and destroyed. They are supposed to have left it about half an hour. It is night, and the ruins are here and there flaming and smoking. I want — if you understand — to show one of the turrets laid open — the turret where the alarm-bell is, mentioned in No. 1; and among the ruins (at some height if possible) Mr. Haredale just clutching our friend, the mysterious file, who is passing over them like a spirit; Solomon Daisy, if you can introduce him, looking on from the ground below.[†5]

Please to observe that the M. F. wears a large cloak and a slouched hat. This is important, because Browne will have him in the same number,[†6] and he has not changed his dress meanwhile. Mr. Haredale is supposed to have come down here on horseback, pell-mell; to be excited to the last degree. I think it will make a queer picturesque thing in your hands.[†7] I have told Chapman and Hall that you may like to have a block of a peculiar shape for it.[†8] One of them will be with you almost as soon as you receive this.

[†a]We are very anxious to know that our cousin is out of her trouble, and you free from your anxiety.[†1] Mind you write when it comes off. And when she is quite comfortable come down here for a day or two, like a bachelor, as you will be. It will do you a world of good. Think of that.[†a]

Always, dear Cattermole, | Heartily yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

[†b]P.S. — When you have done the subject, I wish you'd write me one line and tell me how, that I may be sure we agree. Loves from Kate.[†b]

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, [?EARLY AUGUST 1841]

Mention in next.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 8 AUGUST 1841

MS British Museum.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sunday August The Eighth 1841

My Dear Sir.

I write to you in great haste, — to save at once the Post, and my character.

I wrote to Southwood Smith, the chief commissioner in the Infant Labour Commission,[†2] as we agreed; and have an answer from him[†3] in which he says:

"I hope both report and evidence will be presented to Parliament during its next Sitting, that is, if it should not be prorogued earlier than 6 weeks or 2 months after its first meeting. As soon as these Documents are laid on the table of the House of Commons, they become public property, and may be treated accordingly; until that is the case, any communication of the matter contained in them must be strictly private and confidential. That you may be the better prepared to handle it, I will put you in possession of this matter as soon as I have put it in order, only it must be entirely for your own private study."

Therefore, I suppose the best plan will be, for me to write the paper[†4] at my leisure, and for you to throw it over, until the Review after next — will it not? Southwood Smith, in other passages of this letter, lays extraordinary stress upon the facts they have got together — and from what I know of them already, I am sure the subject is a most striking and remarkable one.[†1]

Meanwhile, if any other should occur to me, I will communicate with you upon it.

I shall be glad to have one line from you.[†2] And am always

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Dickens desires her compliments — and joins me in remembrances to Miss Napier.

To JOHN OVERS, 8 AUGUST 1841*

MS Dr Hugh Raven.

Broadstairs. | Sunday August The Eighth 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs.

You never found home so pleasant, as when you went back to it, — did you? I know the feeling well, and am glad sometimes (not often though) to go away by myself, for the purpose of enjoying it.

I was very glad to receive your note to day — not only because I am pleased to know you are so much better, but because I was very much fretted to have the inclosed good news from Mr. Cruikshank[†3] lying idly here, and not being able to send it to you, until I should go to town; for want of your address — which I had forgotten.

I shall be glad to hear from you again soon, and to know how you are getting on. I don't think I shall be in town (unless for a day) until the eleventh or twelfth of October.

But here, or there, or anywhere, I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Your father, like many I know, takes after the birds, and forgets his children as soon as they can fly. But that's not the worst that can happen. I know some men who would be heartily glad, with reason, if their fathers would forget them altogether, instead of having dim glimpses of recollection as yours has.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 10 AUGUST 1841*

MS Mr Cregoe D. P. Nicholson.

Broadstairs | August The Tenth 1841.

My Dear Sirs.

Since I have been here, I have not received a proof, of any kind or sort. Will you, by return of Post, send me proofs of the two Nos. 72 and 73[†1] — and forward slips to me in future as soon as read.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To THE EDITOR OF THE GATESHEAD OBSERVER,[†2] 10 AUGUST 1841

MS Society of Antiquaries, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Broadstairs, Kent | August The Tenth, 1841

Sir.

Your paper of the Thirty First of last Month has been forwarded to me here, from London. It has made me desirous to depart from the rule I have found it necessary to establish in reference to any unfounded statements concerning myself that find their way into Print, — and to address these half dozen words to you with a twofold object.

Firstly, I beg to thank you with great cordiality for expressing your conviction that the charcoal sketch in Blackwood, of Cannie Newcastle,

(which I have not seen) is not from my hand.[†1] Secondly, to assure you that you are perfectly correct in your judgment, and that I know as much about it as I do of the heart of China.[†2]

I am Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To the Editor of | The Gateshead Observer.

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 AUGUST 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 169. Date: six days after letter of 5 Aug, according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I was always sure I could make a good thing of Barnaby, and I think you'll find that it comes out strong to the last word. I have another number ready, all but two slips.[†3] Don't fear for young Chester. The time hasn't come[†4] — there we go again, you see, with the weekly delays. I am in great heart and spirits with the story, and with the prospect of having time to think before I go on again.

To THOMAS MITTON, 11 AUGUST 1841*

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | August The Eleventh 1841.

My Dear Mitton

Take the will for the deed, and you will make a very long letter of this very short note. Until yesterday, I have been constantly at work. This is only my second holiday.

I don't know what time the Saturday boats leave town, but that you can find out. On Sunday there is a boat from Margate at One; and on Monday at 8 — that boat gets to town about one or half past.

Now write and tell me when you are coming, and how. I'll meet you whenever and wherever it is, please God. The weather here has been showery, but very fine and pleasant — crops decidedly good — today very squally.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Forster writes me that he has had two letters from Father, which he don't mean to answer. This is not encouraging.

To [WILLIAM] SHOBERL, 12 AUGUST 1841

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue No. 60 (1930); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 12 Aug 41. Address: mistakenly given in catalogue as To Frederic Shoberl; but clearly to William, Colburn's assistant. From Broadstairs.

I am greatly obliged to you for your note of the ninth (which has been forwarded to me here) and beg to assure you that I am quite convinced the omission was accidental, and that I entirely rely on your honorable and correct intentions.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 AUGUST 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 190. Date: 13 Aug according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

By Jove how radical I am getting![†1] I wax stronger and stronger in the true principles every day. I don't know whether it's the sea, or no, but so it is.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-AUGUST 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 191. Date: at a moment of sudden indignation at the political outlook; placed by Forster after letter of 13 Aug. From Broadstairs.

[†a]CD thinks of carrying off himself and his household gods, like Coriolanus, to a world elsewhere![†a] [†1] Thank God there is a Van Diemen's-land.[†2] That's my comfort. Now, I wonder if I should make a good settler! I wonder, if I went to a new colony with my head, hands, legs, and health, I should force myself to the top of the social milk-pot and live upon the cream! What do you think? Upon my word I believe I should.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 AUGUST 1841

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts | Stratton Street.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday August The Sixteenth | 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

A kind of daymare comes upon me sometimes, under the influence of which I have dismal visions of your supposing me careless of your kind Invitations — regardless of your notes — insensible to your friendship — and a species of moral monster with the usual number of legs and arms, a head, and so forth, but no heart at all.

This disorder, instead of diminishing within the cheerful influence of the Sea, is so much aggravated by distance from Stratton Street and the obstacles in the way of telling you about it by word of mouth, that I am fairly driven to the desperate step of writing to you, to tell you how notes and cards of Invitation from you have reached me in Scotland, in Yorkshire, in Kent — in every place but London — and how I have reason to suppose that some others are still taking sportive flights among the Post offices, and getting very brown from change of air in various parts of the United Kingdom.

I have too much pleasure and gratification in the sympathy you have expressed, with my visionary friends, to let you forget me if I can help it. In duty to myself therefore — this is a description of moral obligation which most men discharge with the utmost punctuality — I raise my still small voice from the ocean's brink, and humbly desire to live in your recollection as an innocent, and not erring Individual, until next October.

If Miss Meredith should remember a fair young man with whom she had a community of feeling in reference to the impossibility of getting up in the morning during the Great Frost of eighteen hundred and forty one, — I beg to say that I am the person, and that I send my compliments.

Let me add that I am always with high regard and esteem,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

Miss Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 AUGUST 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 193. Date: Mon 16 Aug according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I sit down to write to you without an atom of news to communicate. Yes I have — something that will surprise you, who are pent up in dark and dismal Lincoln's-inn-fields. It is the brightest day you ever saw. The sun is sparkling on the water so that I can hardly bear to look at it. The tide is in, and the fishing boats are dancing like mad. Upon the green-topped cliffs the corn is cut and piled in shocks; and thousands of butterflies are fluttering about, taking the bright little red flags at the mast-heads for flowers, and panting with delight accordingly. [Here the Inimitable, unable to resist the brilliancy out of doors, breaketh off, rusheth to the machines, and plungeth into the sea. Returning, he proceedeth:] Jeffrey is just as he was when he wrote the letter I sent you. No better, and no worse. I had a letter from Napier on Saturday, urging the children's-labour subject upon me. But, as I hear from Southwood Smith that the report cannot be printed until the new parliament has sat at the least six weeks, it will be impossible to produce it before the January number.[†1] I shall be in town on Saturday morning and go straight to you. A letter has come from little Hall begging that when I do come to town I will dine there, as they wish to talk about the new story.[†2] I have written to say that I will do so on Saturday, and we will go together; but I shall be by no means good company.... I have more than half a mind to start a bookseller of my own. I could; with good capital too, as you know; and ready to spend it. G. Varden beware![†3]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?16 AUGUST 1841]

Mention in Maclise to CD, [17] Aug (see fn). Date: Macready played in William Tell on 16 and 23 Aug; Maclise's letter almost certainly referred to the performance of the 16th and to CD's first visit to London (announced in To Forster, 16 Aug).

Saying that he is coming up to London on the following Saturday, and suggesting a meeting at Forster's.[†4]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 16 AUGUST 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | August The Sixteenth 1841.

My Dear Henry.

You would like this place, I think. Arrange to come down here with Letitia — say on the 1st. of September, and stop as long as you can.

The passage at the longest is 6 hours — the fare as many shillings — and you come ashore under the window — consequently, you can go backwards and forwards as often as you like.

My letters are of the briefest, because my relief is, not to write. But I mean a quirefull.

Kate joins me in love to Letitia and sends the same to yourself. Always believe her husband

[ ]

[CHARLES DICKENS][†1]

Henry Austin Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 19 AUGUST 1841

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs. | Nineteenth August 1841.

My Dear George.

When Hugh and a small body of the rioters cut off from the Warren unbeknown[†2] to their pals, they forced into a ramshackle[†2] post-chaise Dolly Varden and Emma Haredale, and bore them away with all possible rapidity; one of their company driving, and the rest running beside the chaise, climbing up behind, sitting on the top, lighting the way with their torches &c &c. If you can express the women inside without shewing them — as by a fluttering veil, a delicate arm or so forth, appearing at the half closed window — so much the better. Mr. Tappertit stands on the steps, which are partly down, and hanging on to the window with one hand, and extending the other with great majesty, addresses a few words of encouragement to the driver and attendants. Hugh sits upon the bar in front — the driver sitting postilion wise — and turns round to look through the window behind him at the little doves within. The gentlemen behind are also curious to catch a glimpse of the ladies — one of those who are running at the side, may be gently rebuked for his curiosity by the cudgel of Hugh. So they cut away, Sir, as fast as they can.†1

Always Faithfully

CD.

John Willet's bar is noble.†2

We take it for granted that cousin and baby are hearty. — Our loves to them.

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 20 AUGUST 1841

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1949; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 20 Aug 41.

Introducing John Overs, a cabinet maker who has literary aspirations and really writes, in the intervals of his daily labour, very well.†3

To JOHN OVERS, 20 AUGUST 1841*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace,
Friday, August Twentieth, 1841.

My Dear Mr Overs,

Go to Doctor Elliotson (No 37 Conduit Street Bond Street) tomorrow morning between 10 and 12, and send in this card. I have written to him. I never knew him fail in any case where cure was possible, or care, humanity, and strong interest in his patient, coupled (I do believe) with greater skill than any other man possesses, could be of any avail. I am in town till Sunday morning. If you can come round here after you leave him, I shall be glad to hear your report of what he said to you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 21 AUGUST 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace.
Saturday Morning | August Twenty First 1841.

My Dear Macready.

Among the men I have an interest in, and help a little in their struggles through this workaday world, is one — Mr. Overs hight — a poor cabinet maker, who in the intervals of his work has taught himself for many years to think and feel like a man, and has written some[†1] pretty ballads and good little prose sketches — of which latter commodity I am happy to say I have just got Cruikshank to take a sample for his Omnibus.

Now this cabinet maker (he is foreman to a manufacturer of medicine-chests, at some Thirty Shillings a week, wages) has a chronic affection of the pleura — but now discovered — which the doctors tell him will prevent his making cabinets any more, inasmuch as in doing that work he is obliged to stand for twelve hours a day at least — which they say won't do. I have sent him to Elliotson this morning, and no doubt he will confirm the opinion.

He is none of your maudlin gentry who think themselves neglected geniuses, but a straight forward, hard working, earnest man — above his station in nothing but having read and remembered a great many good books. It has occurred to me as just possible that you might at some time or other find you wanted such a person in some capacity about the Theatre — as a kind of upper messenger, or doorkeeper, or in any capacity where a diligent, respectable, sober fellow, of very creditable appearance and manners would be a desideratum. I can vouch for him most thoroughly in every respect. He has been in the habit of coming backwards and forwards to me for three years, and I know him to be a man of that kind that only this country and this time give birth to.

I think these few words will interest you in the poor fellow, and I am sure if you knew as much of him as I do, you would be greatly affected with his little history. Will you bear him in mind?

I meant to have spoken to you last night,[†2] and in the coach had the words, once, upon my lips. But something arose to put it out of my head, and I forgot it.

My Dear Macready | Always Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN OVERS, [22 AUGUST 1841]

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly the day after Overs's visit to Elliotson and the call on CD suggested in To Overs, 20 Aug.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning | Half past 7.[†1]

Dear Mr. Overs.

I was very much vexed to be obliged to go away without seeing you yesterday — but very glad to infer from the confused account of my servant (who for his good intentions and most imperfect execution might be the Devil's head pavior) that you had seen the doctor. I wish you would write and tell me what he said to you.

Thinking about you yesterday, and casting about for some light employment that would suit you, it occurred to me that Mr. Macready might be able to give you some employment, which would not tax your strength at all, at Drury Lane Theatre which — as you may have seen in the papers — he has taken. I wrote to him immediately telling him all about you, and I have very little doubt indeed — hardly any — from the answer he sent last night, that he will find a Post for you. In the hurry of starting for Broadstairs again, this morning, and the anguish of packing up, I cannot — for the life of me — lay my hand upon his note but you shall see it, for it will please you very much, — being of a scarce kind in these times.

I am obliged to come up to town next Saturday, to attend a meeting about a Monument to Sir David Wilkie.[†2] Could you call upon me at the Parthenon Club, Regent Street, between 6 and 8 in the evening? Or would the morning suit you better? If so, I will make another appointment.

Write to Broadstairs.

In great haste | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Keep up your spirits. There's more philosophy in "never say[†3] die", than most people suppose.

To THOMAS MITTON, 23 AUGUST 1841*

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs
Monday Morning August Twenty Third | 1841.

My Dear Mitton

After I left you on Saturday, I think an inspiration came upon me, which you will think highly of.

Being a little too early, I walked about Lincolns Inn, pondering all the Chapman and Hall matters in my mind, and reflecting on the proposed change from the weekly to monthly parts.[†4] The impression it might have on the public mind,[†1] the probable sale of the new work, the short pause, and so forth, I turned over again and again; and the more I thought of it, the more hazardous it seemed. I remembered that Scott failed in the sale of his very best works, and never recovered his old circulation (though he wrote fifty times better than at first) because he never left off.[†2] I thought how I had spoilt the novel sale — in the cases of Bulwer, Marryatt,[†3] and the best people — by my great success, and how my great success was, in a manner, spoiling itself, by being run to death and deluging the town with every description of trash and rot.[†4] Then I thought if I could but have forseen[†5] what would come to pass, and could but have made better bargains, now was the time — the very moment, with a view to my future fame and station — to stop — to write no more, not one word, for a whole year — and then to come out with a complete story in three volumes[†6] — with no cuts or any expense but that of printing — and put the town in a blaze again.

When I had got into my head the enormous advantages of such a step, I came to this: — If my position is a strong one, and my reputation is as good as money, why not use it now, for this great object? I walked off to Forster, and said "Now will you in my presence say to Chapman and Hall for me after dinner to day (as I am not a very great demonstrator when my own affairs are at issue) what I am going to tell you" — "What is it?"

Then I told him. I see, I said, as in a clear bright glass that if I go to the monthly parts next March, I do so at a great hazard. Scott's life warns me that let me write never so well, if I keep on writing, without cessation, it is in the very nature of things that the sale will be unsteady, and the circulation will fall. The Clock shews us this, every week, for it started at 70,000, and is now 30,000 — and this, notwithstanding that the Curiosity Shop made, without doubt, a greater impression than any of my other writings. I am doing what every other successful man has done. I am making myself too cheap. And although I still command a sale wholly unprecedented and unknown, even in Scott's case,[†7] that sale is shaky, and trembles every day.

Propose this to Chapman and Hall. That the notice I have written[†1] be cancelled directly[†2] — that we contemplate no monthly parts at all — that we finish the Clock on the 27th. of November,[†3] and advertize for that day twelve months a new book in three volumes.[†4] And say to them this: — if Mr. Dickens is willing to let you have one half of the Copyright of that book, what can you afford, and what do you propose to give him for it, over and above Two Thousand Pounds which is to be paid to him in quarterly payments, for his subsistence through the year during which he retires from public notice?[†5]

Little Hall with his pocketfull[†6] of figures and estimates, gave, as soon as we were left alone after dinner, "Success to our new undertaking" whereupon Forster, who was a little piqued to do his best by something that had passed between us,[†7] said that he was going to startle them by something I had mentioned to him half an hour before, but that he was sure it was the[†8] thing, and certain all my friends would say so. He then stated (extremely well) what, in effect, I have just told you; throwing in a great many new considerations, and among others, the effect which a year's silence would have upon the sale of the back Nos. of the Clock, the sale of the Oliver — the Pickwick — and the Nickleby.

If you can imagine little Hall and big Chapman knocked down by a thunderbolt, you can form an imperfect idea of the minute's silence that ensued. Chapman was the first to break it; and he said in a very manly straight-forward way, that he did believe — looking forward for 20 years, and not for 2 — that the effect of the year's silence would be tremendous. Then little Hall struck in, and said "Yes — he thought so too", but his doubt was, whether we should break it with three volumes or new monthly parts. To this, Forster and I rejoined, — the volumes certainly.[†9] First, because it would be a great thing for me to try a new form. Secondly, because it was a cheap form. Thirdly because after we had done that, the question of any more publishing in numbers would be as open to us, as it was now. Then they both said that they had never desired to press Mr. Dickens — that they wished to consult Mr. Dickens's reputation[†1] and[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 AUGUST 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 194. Date: Mon 23 Aug, the day after his return to Broadstairs, according to Forster.

An enthusiastic letter about the share Forster had taken in the development on Saturday afternoon; when I thought Chapman very manly and sensible, Hall morally and physically feeble though perfectly well intentioned, and both the statement and reception of the project quite triumphant. Didn't you think so too?

To R. SHELTON MACKENZIE, 23 AUGUST 1841

Text from R. Shelton Mackenzie, Life of CD, Philadelphia, 1870, pp. 218-19.

Broadstairs, Kent, | Monday, Twenty-third August, 1841.

Dear Sir,

I am much obliged to you for your letter, and the scrap of paper enclosed in it. I was aware of the imposition soon after it was attempted, but had never seen the article.[†3] I can bear, like a good Christian, the not having any more of it.

Let me thank you also for the newspaper I received from you. I found some lines in its columns which afforded me very great pleasure in the perusal.[†4]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Mackenzie.

To W. C. MACREADY, 24 AUGUST 1841†

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs
Tuesday August The Twenty Fourth | 1841.

My Dear Macready

I must thank you — most heartily and cordially — for your kind note relative to poor Overs. I can't tell you how much it pleased me, or how glad I am to know that he thoroughly deserves such kindness.

What a good fellow Elliotson is! He kept him in his room a whole hour, and has gone into his case as if he were Prince Albert; laying down all manner of elaborate projects, and determining to leave his friend Wood[†1] in town when he himself goes away, on purpose to attend to him. Then he writes me four sides of paper about the man, and says he can't go back to his old work for that requires muscular exertion, and muscular exertion he mustn't make — What are we to do with him? he says — Here's five pounds for the present —

I declare before God that I could almost bear the Tories[†2] for five years, out of the pleasure I feel in knowing such things. And when I think that every dirty speck upon the fair face of the Almighty's creation, who writes in a filthy, bawdy[†3] newspaper — every rotten-hearted pander who has been beaten, kicked, and rolled in the kennel, yet struts it in the Editorial We once a week — every vagabond that an honest man's gorge must rise at — every live emetic in that nauseous drug-shop, the Press — can have his fling at such men and call them knaves and fools and thieves,[†4] I grow so vicious that with bearing hard upon my pen, I break the nib down, and with keeping my teeth set, make my jaws ache.[†5]

[†a]How Abraham must be smoothing his etherial robes, to make a warm place in his bosom for the Protestant champions of this time![†6] What joy in Holy Heaven when the angels look down on Sunday mornings, and read in bright blue letters that Mr. Westmacott[†1] takes their part! Fancy the Standard, and the Morning Post — the Age — the Argus — and the Times — all on the side of Christ.[†2] Celestial host![†a]

I have put myself out of sorts for the day, and shall go and walk, unless the direction of this, sets me up again. On second thoughts, I think it will.

Always My Dear Macready | Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN OVERS, 24 AUGUST 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs
Tuesday August The Twenty Fourth | 1841.

My Dear Mr. Overs.

Doctor Elliotson has written me a full and particular account of your case. It arrived last night, and your letter reached my hands in due course this morning. He tells me, in effect, exactly what he told you — at greater length, perhaps, but without the least addition in the main point. He says emphatically, that he has cured several such cases. I know that, under God, there does not live a man in whose hands you would have so much reason to hope for a perfect restoration to health. If I were to tell you what I know of his skill, patience, and humanity, you would love and honor him as much as I do. If my own life, or my wife's, or that of either of my children were in peril tomorrow, I would trust it to him, implicitly.

He tells me in his letter that you cannot work; and he sends me, as a means towards keeping you from the present necessity of doing so, a five pound note. Tell me whether I shall send you the whole sum at once, or a part — and consider that I have put another five to it, and am your banker to the amount of Ten Pounds.

As I send you Mr. Macready's note, I should tell you what I said in writing to him. I told him, in a few simple words, what you had been by trade — what your weekly earnings were — and how I had come to know you — and I said that you were not one of the maudlin persons (of whom he and I know many) who consider themselves great geniuses neglected, but that you had always worked hard until you were taken ill, and had worked none the worse for having improved yourself by reading and writing in your few leisure hours. He is a most generous and high-minded man, having as great a sympathy with all struggling persons as anyone I know — and instantly sent back the note I inclose. His word is his oath, and you may rest assured he will not forget you.

You see that it is unnecessary to write to him. When I am in town, I see him almost every day; and when I am away, we are in very frequent correspondence. Leave the matter where it stands. He will not require any hint from either of us.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

P.S. I ought to tell you (I don't think he desires this to be known) that Drury Lane will not open 'till Christmas. It is possible, however, that he might be enabled to employ you sooner. I don't know how that may be just now. As soon as I can find out, I will.

To THOMAS MITTON, 26 AUGUST [1841]

MS Huntington Library. Date: 26 Aug was Thursday in 1841; Broadstairs address and proposed visit to Chapman and Hall support that year.

Broadstairs | Thursday August Twenty Sixth

My Dear Mitton.

I think it possible that I may have to see Chapman and Hall tomorrow evening. As I shall do well to hold myself disengaged, in case, I will alter our appointment, if you please, and come to you directly I arrive in town tomorrow,[†1] which will be, I have no doubt, between 3 and 4. That will leave me the evening free.

In haste | Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To LORD NUGENT, 26 AUGUST 1841*

MS Private.

Broadstairs, Kent
Thursday Evening | Twenty Sixth August 1841

My Dear Lord Nugent.

I write to you from the place where I am staying for the Autumn; for a most extraordinary and unheard-of purpose. I am an author — yet I want to recommend a Publishing firm to your favorable notice, and to give them a high character!

You are one of the Committee of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.[†1] I understand the Society are in want of a Publisher; and further that my publishers, Messrs. Chapman and Hall of the Strand, aspire to that office.[†2] If you take any interest in the matter, I think my recommendation will have its weight with you when I tell you, after long dealings of very considerable magnitude with these gentlemen, that I respect them highly — that I have unbounded confidence in their honor, integrity, and first-rate business qualities — and that I am certain there is not a House in London that would better answer the Society's purpose.

Mrs. Dickens begs her compliments to Lady Nugent.[†3] I take leave to add mine — and am, Dear Lord Nugent,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Nugent.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [28 AUGUST 1841]*

MS Private. Date: Clearly refers to the Wilkie meeting on 28 Aug at which CD was in fact present (see fn), perhaps as a result of persuasion by Maclise.

In haste — Saturday Morning.

My Dear Mac

Occupations[†4] too tremendous to admit of my going to the Wilkie Meeting[†5] — Come here as soon as it is over — The carriage shall be ready at 2; and I will wait for you — Forster will be at the Parthenon, of course, as we agreed.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To WILLIAM SHOBERL, 29 AUGUST 1841

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1912; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Broadstairs, 29 Aug 41.

My experience of Magazine editing, however, has been by no means a pleasant one, and I have resolved not to connect myself, even in name, with such duties any more,[†1]

To THOMAS MITTON, 30 AUGUST [1841]

MS Mr Alfred C. Berol. Date: The negotiations with Chapman & Hall and death of Hook show year to have been 1841. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Broadstairs | Monday Thirtieth August.

My Dear Mitton

I was up and down — here and there — torn to pieces — until dinner time on Saturday, which was after you left town. The result was, that I made them a proposition (to which I feel pretty sure they will accede) which I am certain is the best I could make, and which I think you will look upon in that light, also. It involves[†2] the pause for a year — the breaking[†2] ground then, with a new work in monthly parts instead of a Novel[†3] (which gives me, of course, a much longer rest) — the payment of £150 a month all through the year — the doing anything else, if I choose[†4] — and secures such a share of the profits to me,[†5] as promises to enable me to repay the money advanced, with great expedition. As soon as I have the figures and calculations

(which I left with them, while they considered) I will send them to you, and you will then have the whole proceeding at your fingers' ends.[†1]

In haste | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Colburn sent people to me on Saturday night, and before 7 on Sunday Morning to negociate for my taking the New Monthly, now Hook is dead.[†2] I declined, of course.

September

To THOMAS MITTON, 1 SEPTEMBER 1841

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

Broadstairs | First September 1841.

My Dear Mitton

I am sorry to say that this week, we are full — and I am afraid you would not get a comfortable bed out of the house, by reason that we have two already — one for Fred, and one for Fanny's servant. She and Burnett are still here; and Maclise came down yesterday.

Now, I am coming up next Tuesday, and intend to return on Wednesday. Why can't you come back with me on that day?[†3] We shall then have plenty of room, and surely you are not so very strong and special in your engagements, but that you can spare a few days next week, as well as this.

Write and say Yes.[†4]

Chapman and Hall have agreed to my terms; and for a year I am a free man. They are, I think, as fair as could be expected, and very promising indeed. More of this, when I come to town.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

Write me by return.

To LORD BROUGHAM,[†5] 2 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Second September 1841.

My Lord.

I should apologize with becoming humility for the extraordinary liberty I take in writing to you; but that I hope the uncommon purpose of my communication may in itself be some excuse. I am an author; and I wish to recommend a publishing firm to your favorable consideration.

I learn that the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge are in want of a Publisher, and that my publishers, Messrs. Chapman and Hall of the Strand, aspire to that distinction.[†1] I do assure you, My Lord, that there are not in London two persons so well calculated by their high respectability, their perfect integrity, and thorough knowledge of their business, for such a situation. I bear testimony to their fitness for it, after a connexion of some years and of great extent; and I do so, most earnestly, and with the strongest possible impression of their being the very people the Society need.

If I were less convinced of this, My Lord, I would not venture to trouble you. But as I know how truly you are interested in the cause of Education from which your name will always be inseparable; and how important even the humblest means are, in furthering its ends; I take the liberty of addressing this recommendation to you, and even of hoping that you will not be displeased by my intrusion.

I beg you to ascribe it, in any case, to my interest in all that concerns an Association which has such noble ends in view, and has done so much — and to the sincere respect and esteem with which I am

My Lord | Your faithful Servant.
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Honorable | The Lord Brougham.

To ALFRED DICKENS, [3 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Mention in next two letters.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 3 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Friday Third September 1841.

My Dear Henry.

We are coming to town on Tuesday, and return on Wednesday morning. Hadn't you and Letitia better come back with us? If so, let us meet on board the boat. All you have to do, is to go down to London Bridge Wharf, and go on board the Ramsgate[†1] boat. You can make no mistake concerning it, as there is but one. She starts at 9, but the better plan is to be on board by a quarter before. I believe Mitton the Brilliant, returns with us also. I shall conclude that this is a bargain, unless I hear from you to[†2]

P.S. The matter of Alfred, is a difficult one.[†3] I have written, and told him exactly how the matter stands; and said that if he likes to renew his application, I don't object. But I have laid great stress on his saying nothing about it, and not leaving his present occupation for so much as a day.

To THOMAS MITTON, 3 SEPTEMBER 1841

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Third September 1841.

My Dear Mitton.

Either I made a mistake in my last, or you have read it wrong. I don't [come][†4] to town 'till Tuesday — and return [next mo]rning[†5] — Wednesday.

I made a stipulation — to prevent [any][†6] interference from Rufus;[†7] which I expressly prohibited — that our agreement should be copied, in its phraseology and provisions, by Forster, from your Clock one.[†8] As I shall have to look it over carefully, I shall be occupied, I think, every minute of the Tuesday afternoon, and until pretty late in the evening.[†9] Will you engage to meet us on board the Ramsgate[†1] boat at London Bridge Wharf on Wednesday morning? I believe the Austins are going back with us, too; — when I say "us", I mean Kate and myself.

I had a letter from Henry this morning saying that Beadnell[†2] had called to tell him that the New Zealand people[†3] want more assistants, and that Alfred might apply [to him].[†4] I have written Alfred that he [?may do][†5] so, if he likes; but have cautioned [hi]m[†6] against coming to town for the purpose.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To LORD BROUGHAM, 5 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Broadstairs | Fifth September 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Lord Brougham, and is exceedingly obliged to him for his very kind letter and for the gratifying terms in which it is couched. Mr. Dickens need scarcely add, that immediately on his return to town (which will be early next month) he will gladly do himself the pleasure of calling on Lord Brougham; and that he feels much honored by Lord Brougham's request.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 194*n*. Date: 9 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

M.[†7] was quite aghast last night at the brilliancy of the C. & H. arrangement:[†8] which is worth noting[†9] perhaps.

To THE SWEDENBORG SOCIETY,[†1] 9 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS The Swedenborg Society.

Broadstairs, Kent. | September The Ninth 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to the Society for printing and publishing the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg; and begs to thank them cordially for their obliging communication, and for the copy of the work on Heaven and Hell,[†2] accompanying it. He begs to assure the Society that he will not "reject the book unexamined", (he is at present quite unacquainted with it, save from their description) — and that it shall have his most careful and attentive consideration.

To JOHN PAUL,[†3] 9 SEPTEMBER 1841

Extract in N, I, 349, from catalogue source; MS 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 9 Sep 41.

I do not know at what precise time I shall be in Glasgow.... I received a letter, begging to know which would be the most convenient time for me to visit the city.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 169. Date: 11 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I have just burnt into Newgate,[†5] and am going in the next number to tear the prisoners out by the hair of their heads. The number which gets into the jail[†6] you'll have in proof by Tuesday.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 12 SEPTEMBER 1841

MS Doheny Memorial Library, Camarillo, California.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twelfth September 1841.

My Dear George.

Here is a business letter, written in a scramble just before post time. Whereby, I dispose of loves to Cousin, in a line.

Firstly. Will you design upon a block of wood, Lord George Gordon, alone and very solitary, in his prison in the tower? — The chamber as ancient as you please, and after your own fancy.[†1] [†a]The time evening. The season, Summer.[†a]

Secondly. Will you ditto upon a ditto, a sword duel between Mr. Haredale and Mr. Chester, in a grove of trees? No one else by. Mr. Haredale has just pinked his adversary who has fallen, dying, on the grass. He (that is, Chester) tries to staunch the wound in his breast, with his handkerchief — has his snuffbox on the earth beside him — and looks at Mr. Haredale (who stands with his sword in his hand, looking down on him) with most supercilious hatred — but polite to the last. Mr. Haredale is more sorry, than triumphant.[†2] Thirdly. Will you conceive and execute after your own fashion, a frontispiece for Barnaby.[†3]

Fourthly. Will you devise a subject representing Master Humphrey's clock as stopped — his chair by the fireside empty — his crutch against the wall — his slippers on the cold hearth — his hat upon the chair back — the MSS of Barnaby and the Curiosity Shop, heaped upon the table — and the flowers you introduced in the first subject of all, withered and dead?[†4] [†b]Master Humphrey being supposed to be no more.[†b]

I have a fifthly, sixthly, seventhly, and eighthly — for I sorely want you, as I approach the close of the Tale — but I won't frighten you, so will take breath.

Always My Dear Cattermole

Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire.

P.S. I have been waiting until I got to subjects of this nature; thinking you would like them best.[†1]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 12 SEPTEMBER 1841

MS University of Texas. Address: Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | Whitehall.

Broadstairs | Sunday September Twelfth 1841.

My Dear Fred.

The wording of the Minute[†2] is certainly discouraging. If I saw any way of helping you by coming up to town, I would do so, immediately. But I cannot possibly apply to the Tories for anything.[†3] I dare say they would be glad enough if I would; but I cannot with any regard to honor, consistency or Truth, ask any favor of people whom, politically, I despise and abhor. It would tie my hands, seal my lips, rob my pen of its honesty, and bind me neck and heels in most discreditable fetters.

Is Archer[†4] in town? If so, have you spoken to him? If not, when is he coming? You should speak to him, certainly. I have told you before, that I am very much afraid you have not treated him with that show of respect, which he has a right to claim. Why in the name of God should he have a personal dislike to you, but for some such reason as this?

If you think — and I see no objection to your asking Mr. Archer the question, that without doing anything improper, you might memorialize the Lords of the Treasury, I will draw a memorial for you.[†5] If you have reason to think this would be unofficial and ill-advised, I know of nothing better than waiting and hoping.

I should be as sorry as you, if you were to lose this step. Let me hear from you by Return.

Affectionately Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, II, xii, 194. Date: 13 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

There's no news since my last. We are going to dine with Rogers[†1] to-day and with Lady Essex,[†2] who is also here. Rogers is much pleased with Lord Ashley,[†3] who was offered by Peel a post in the government, but resolutely refused to take office unless Peel pledged himself to factory improvement.[†4] Peel "hadn't made up his mind"; and Lord Ashley was deaf to all other inducements, though they must have been very tempting.[†5] Much do I honour him for it.[†6] I am in an exquisitely lazy state, bathing, walking, reading, lying in the sun, doing everything but working. This frame of mind is superinduced by the prospect of rest, and the promising arrangements which I owe to you. I am still haunted by visions of America,[†7] night and day. To miss this opportunity would be a sad thing.

Kate cries dismally if I mention the subject. But, God willing, I think it must be managed somehow!

To J. H. KUENZEL,[†1] 13 SEPTEMBER 1841

MS Milwaukee Public Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Thirteenth September 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I should have answered your letter immediately after its date; but I generally come to this part of England to pass the Autumn, and did not receive it until yesterday.

Accept my best thanks, I beg you, for your welcome letter; and assure the gentleman who so kindly and flatteringly remembers me in the present I received, at the same time through your hands, that I am warmly obliged to him, and feel honored by his approval.

In regard to the Britannia,[†2] what can I say? That my best wishes are yours, that my most cordial sympathy and interest are with you? You know it already.

Believe me, my dear Sir — and I say it most unaffectedly — that next to the favor and good opinion of my own countrymen, I value, above all price, the esteem of the German people. I honor and admire them past all expression. I know them to be, in their great mental endowments and cultivation, the chosen people of the Earth; and I never was more proud or more happy than when I first began to know that my writings found favor in their eyes.

I can be indifferent to nothing which connects English Literature with Germany. The object of your new paper is my object, and that of every Englishman who has an interest or delight in the progress of human thought. God prosper it, and you! I wish to Heaven I could speak German, though never so badly. If I could, I would be among you in six months.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To JOHN SCOTT, 13 SEPTEMBER 1841

Photograph New York Public Library. Address (wrapper, MS Auckland Public Library): Carriage Paid | John Scott Esquire | 120 Camden Road Villas | Camden New Town | London. | By Coach | Monday Sept. 13 | 1841.

Private

Broadstairs. | Monday Thirteenth September | 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I have been much struck by some passages in the latter portion of the Tragedy,[†1] which are very good indeed, and eminently dramatic.

But it is very unequal; and I fear would never, on the stage, get through the first two acts. Besides that the verse halts woefully, and is often made up of expressions so curiously inverted that it is difficult on first reading them to understand their meaning, it has many most serious objections. The author dead, they strike at the root of the whole composition, I fear. If he were alive, I do think he could amend them, and make the play one of great merit and promise.

I fear the characters of the two brothers, which afford a fine opportunity for contrast, are not sufficiently played off: the one against the other. Fadilla, appearing in that one love scene and never coming on the scene again, would astonish an audience, unfavorably. Macrinus and Martialis conducting their share of the plot in constant conversations with each other, would — place yourself in imagination, in the pit, and you will feel it — become insufferably tedious after their first entrance. And I very much mistrust the mention of that African, who is exceedingly well introduced at first, and whom one naturally expects to be of greater importance. Further, I doubt whether Macrinus says or does anything good enough to qualify him for killing the hero of the piece; and I doubt whether the hero could ever raise himself in the estimation of the people, after his scene with Fadilla. The mother, on the other hand, is a tragic conception; and in the latter part of the play, would have a great effect.

I do not feel justified, under these circumstances, in exposing Mr. Macready to the pain and vexation which I know he would feel, if he felt it necessary to decline a play which I recommended to him. But I still think he ought to see the Tragedy; for while I know that he has many better plays upon his desk at this moment, I know equally well that he has many which will bear no comparison with it.

If I may suggest to you the course you would do best to pursue, I would advise you to send it to his house (No 5 Clarence Terrace, Regents Park) with a short note to the effect that the author is no more; and that you, who are doing your best for his widow and family, beg him to peruse it.[†2] I think I would add a special allusion to its rising greatly in the last three acts, in case he should feel disposed to stop at the end of the second.

As I am not coming to town very soon, and have no one with me who is bound for London, I send you the MS by coach. Will you acknowledge, in one line, its safe receipt?

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Scott Esquire.

To WILLIAM HALL, 14 SEPTEMBER 1841†

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs. | Tuesday Fourteenth Septr. 1841.

My Dear Sir.

†1. — Gate of Newgate in 78; not in 79. I don't want Barnaby in the subject,†2 but feared he might be there.

I plainly see that it's all up with the mechanical genius.†3 — Don't trust him with anything; keep an eye on the till; restrain him from making any entries in the books; and un-confuse Mr. Cattermole whom I clearly perceive he will distract with wrong instructions.

†aI am hideously lazy — always bathing, lying in the sun, or walking about. I write a No. when the time comes, and dream about it beforehand on cliffs and sands — but as to getting in advance — ! where's the use, too, as we so soon leave off!—†a

It would be a good thing, wouldn't it, if I ran over to America about the end of February, and came back, after four or five months, with a One Volume book — such as a ten and sixpenny touch? †bI can't persuade Mrs. Dickens to go, and leave the children at home; or to let me go alone. I wish you'd take an opportunity one of these days, of asking all about the Fares — what a single fare is — what a double fare — what a cabin with childstowage. I can depend on you, and am afraid to make any enquiries myself, lest it should get blabbed about, before I had quite resolved.†b

Washington Irving writes me that if I went, it would be such a triumph from one end of the States to the other, as was never known in any Nation.†4 †cDon't you conceive that it would be, on every account, an excellent employment of a part of the interval? I should like to hear.†c

When you g[e]t†5 the riot-block,†6 will you sen[d]†7 me a proof of it?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Hall Esquire

To [EDWARD CHAPMAN], 16 SEPTEMBER 1841

MS Berg Collection. Address: clearly written not to Hall but to Chapman who was shortly to be married (see fn).

Broadstairs. | Thursday Sixteenth September 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Know for your utter confusion, and to your lasting shame and ignominy, that the initial letter has been†1 purwided — that it was furnished to the artist at the same time as the subject†2 — and that it is a

D†3

— which stands for Double — Demnible — Doubtful — Dangerous — Doleful — Disastrous — Dreadful — Deuced — Dark — Divorce — and Drop — all applicable to the Precipice on which you stand.†4

Farewell! If you did but know — and would pause, even at this late period — better an action for breach than — but we buy experience. Excuse my agitation. I scarcely know what I write. — To see a fellow creature — and one who has so long withstood[†5] — still if — Will nothing warn you —

P.S.

[†a]In extreme excitement
C D
My hand fails me
Pause
Put it off
P.P.S.
Emigrate
P.P.P.S.
And leave me
The business——
I mean the Strand
one.one.[†a]

To HENRY ROBERTSON,[†6] 17 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Broadstairs, Kent.
Saturday Seventeenth September | 1841.

My Dear Sir.

As I am staying here for the Autumn, I have only just received your circular note, acquainting me that my name (and that of Mrs. Dickens) is continued on the Free List of Covent Garden Theatre.

May I beg you to present my compliments and thanks to Mr.[†1] and Mrs. Mathews?[†2] I have no doubt they intend to pay me a compliment and do me an act of courtesy; although upon the first — and I need scarcely add, the only — occasion of my seeking to use this Privilege last season, I was refused admittance at the door.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Robertson Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 169. Date: "a week later" than letter of 11 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I have let all the prisoners out of Newgate, burnt down Lord Mansfield's,[†3] and played the very devil.[†4] Another number will finish the fires, and help us on towards the end. I feel quite smoky when I am at work. I want elbow-room terribly.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 19 SEPTEMBER 1841

Text from N, I, 353.

Broadstairs | Sunday Nineteenth September 1841

My dear Fred,

As a matter of composition, or in respect of brevity or plainness, you have not improved my draft[†1] by altering it. I shall be very anxious to hear your further news.

I knew the German Doctor[†2] had left town, but I thought he might have left his address also.

Will you take the enclosed[†3] (but don't delay) to Mr Schloss,[†4] bookseller, Dover Street — the publisher of the [Tiny][†5] Almanac and Quizzing Glass.[†6] If he can forward it, ask him to do so. If not, ask him to put the address upon it — and then put it in the post for me, will you? You must pay the postage; or the letter, being foreign, won't go.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Will you send me the amount of the inclosed cheque by return?

To JOHN FORSTER, [19 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extracts and summaries in F, III, i, 196-7. Date: 19 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

A letter about many unimportant things; then, near the end, announcing:

Now to astonish you. After balancing, considering, and weighing the matter in every point of view, [†a]I HAVE MADE UP MY MIND (WITH GOD'S LEAVE) TO GO TO AMERICA — AND TO START AS SOON AFTER CHRISTMAS AS IT WILL BE SAFE TO GO.[†a] [†7]

He promises further information immediately, and a request follows:

On the ninth of October we leave here. It's a Saturday. If it should be fine dry weather, or anything like it, will you meet us at Rochester, and stop there two or three days to see all the lions[†8] in the surrounding country?

Think of this.[†1] ... If you'll arrange to come, I'll have the carriage down, and Topping; and, supposing news from Glasgow[†2] don't interfere with us, which I fervently hope it will not, I will ensure that we have much enjoyment.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 21 SEPTEMBER 1841

Text from MDGH, I, 51.

Broadstairs, September 21st, 1841.

My dear George,

Will you, before you go on with the other subjects I gave you,[†3] do one of Hugh, bareheaded, bound, tied on a horse, and escorted by horsesoldiers to jail?[†4] If you can add an indication of old Fleet Market, and bodies of foot soldiers firing at people who have taken refuge on the tops of stalls, bulkheads, etc., it will be all the better.[†5]

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 21 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Tuesday Twenty First September 1841.

My Dear Macready.

Forster tells me you are at Drury Lane at all unseasonable hours — are finding out all manner of small delinquencies — making all kinds of dim and distant preparations — and, in a word, justifying that stir and bustle of anticipation which is constantly fermenting within me.

I want to ask your advice — I would, as you know, take no man's so readily as yours, on any subject. On that which I have in mind, you have, from your experience and affections the best right to tutor me.

I am going to America — I think next February. If I go without our dear children, I shall stay Three Months. If I took them with me, I should stay six. What would you do, if you were me?

Kate is averse to taking them — fearing sickness might make them ill. At the same time she naturally finds it difficult to contemplate a subject which is so new to her and so startling, in any very reasonable light. I could take them all, and one servant, for a hundred and fifty pounds each way. I do not — and I almost think one should not, in such a case — make expence a consideration, on either side the question.

Now, here's the question. My dear Macready if you were I, what would you do.[†1]

When I have once made up my mind to anything, I can keep it as much at ease as though the thing were done. But I can't make it up in this case, and am sorely tossed and tumbled on a moral ocean in this early stage of my design.

Our best loves to all.
Ever Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, III, i, 197. Date: "three days later" than letter of 19 Sep according to Forster, and clearly written before CD received (23 Sep) Macready's advice not to take the children to America (see 21 Sep, fn). But if written on the 22nd letter possibly did not leave Broadstairs until the 23rd; for Forster was reading it on the 24th when a note from Devonshire Terrace (clearly written that day and delivered by hand) announced to him that CD was on his way to share his breakfast (F, III, i, 196).

I wrote to Chapman and Hall[†2] asking them what they thought of it, and saying I meant to keep a note-book, and publish it for half a guinea or thereabouts, on my return. They instantly sent the warmest possible reply, and said they had taken it for granted I would go, and had been speaking of it only the day before. I have begged them to make every enquiry about the fares, cabins, berths, and times of sailing; and I shall make a great effort to take Kate and the children. In that case I shall try to let the house furnished, for six months (for I shall remain that time in America); and if I succeed, the rent will nearly pay the expenses out, and home. I have heard of family cabins at £100; and I think one of these is large enough to hold us all. A single fare, I think, is forty guineas. I fear I could not be happy if we had the Atlantic between us; but leaving them in New York while I ran off a thousand miles or so, would be quite another thing. If I can arrange all my plans before publishing the Clock address, I shall state therein that I am going: which will be no unimportant consideration, as affording the best possible reason for a long delay.[†1] How I am to get on without you for seven or eight months, I cannot, upon my soul, conceive. I dread to think of breaking up all our old happy habits, for so long a time. The advantages of going, however, appear by steady looking-at so great, that I have come to persuade myself it is a matter of imperative necessity. Kate weeps whenever it is spoken of. Washington Irving has got a nasty low fever. I heard from him a day or two ago.

To THOMAS MITTON, 22 SEPTEMBER 1841

Photograph New York Public Library. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Broadstairs | September The Twenty Second | 1841.

My Dear Mitton.

The fruit arrived safely, and in great perfection. I should have acknowledged its receipt, but I knew you were cruising about, and thought a note might run after you for a week or two, and follow you home at last — which, very possibly, will be the fate of this.

I am not getting on with my work at all; being deliciously lazy, and walking about, all day long. Indeed I don't much care to get on; being so near my resting place.[†1]

Fred will have his Promotion this week.[†2] I am as glad of it, as though anyone had given me five hundred pounds.

Are you surprised to learn that I have made up my mind to go to America — that I have got all the information needful, about the Packets — that I shall sail, please God, in February, if the latter part of the Winter be not too immoderately severe — and that I am going to announce my intention in the Clock? — There.

I have sent the Alphingtonian notice to day.[†3] I address this to the office, as your people will most likely know where to forward it.

A pleasant trip to you — I shall see you, of course, as soon as I return to town.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [23 SEPTEMBER 1841]

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly Thurs 23 Sep, under which date Macready recorded in his diary: "As I was going to bed Dickens called in, having sent a note first" (Diaries, II, 143). Address: W. C. Macready Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night.

My Dear Macready

If you are at home and up, I should like to have five minutes talk with you,[†4] as I have just come to town, and want to go away by the Morning Boat.

Send me a word — In bed — or out?

Affecy. always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, III, i, 197. Date: written from Devonshire Terrace on the morning after seeing Macready (see last).

This is to give you notice that I am coming to breakfast with you this morning on my way to Broadstairs. I repeat it, sir, — on my way to Broadstairs. For, directly I got Macready's note yesterday I went to Canterbury, and came on by day-coach for the express purpose of talking with him; which I did between 11 and 12 last night in Clarence-terrace. The American preliminaries are necessarily startling, and, to a gentleman of my temperament, destroy rest, sleep, appetite, and work, unless definitely arranged. Macready has quite decided me in respect of time and so forth. The instant I have wrung a reluctant consent from Kate,[†1] I shall take our joint passage in the mail-packet for next January. I never loved my friends so well as now.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty Sixth September | 1841.

My Dear Fred.

Unless you have strong reason for changing your mind, write and tell Mr. Percy,[†2] when you hear from him, that I entertained strong doubts whether his case was one which called for such relief as I could afford; and that you cannot make any report to me which will alter that impression. I think he's a damned rascal, but that you needn't tell him.

You have got your promotion on very handsome terms, and I am heartily rejoiced. — In the matter of Collinson,[†1] Beard told me of Easthope's intention when he was here. Therefore I am not surprised.

Kate and I are going to America for five or six months (but I don't tell her how long) — and we sail on the Fourth of January. We must, I grieve to say (for everyone advises me to do so) leave the darlings behind us, which will be a very severe trial.

If I don't let the house, — and I don't think, at present, I shall try to do so, — I shall ask you to take up your residence there, and to board, and lodge, and keep the Cellar key 'till we return.[†2] It will be a great comfort to us to know that you see them every day; and I hope you will dine there, for our peace and happiness, every Sunday, and have them down after dinner. Of course you can always have whom you like, to dine with you. This is our earnest desire, and I trust you will think of us, and be very careful of our dear children.

I announce my intention in the Clock,[†3] next Saturday Week. Until then, it will be best not to talk of it. All our arrangements are made, and we go to Boston by the British and North American Mail Packet,[†4] from Liverpool.

It makes me very down-hearted when I think of the parting. But the conviction that it will be a great thing to do, and the knowledge that I do it for their advantage, brings me up again.

Always Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire.

Over

Anne[†5] goes with us. — Will you get the inclosed cheque in one note, and let me have it, half by the next post, and half by the next after.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 SEPTEMBER 1841]

Extract in F, III, i, 198. Date: two days after letter of 24 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

Only a word. Kate is quite reconciled. Anne goes, and is amazingly cheerful and light of heart upon it. And I think, at present, that it's a greater trial to me than anybody. The 4th of January is the day. Macready's note to Kate was received and acted upon with a perfect response.[†1] She talks about it quite gaily, and is satisfied to have nobody in the house but Fred, of whom, as you know, they are all fond. He has got his promotion, and they give him the increased salary from the day on which the minute was made by Baring.[†2] I feel so amiable, so meek, so fond of people, so full of gratitudes and reliances, that I am like a sick man. And I am already counting the days between this and coming home again.

To JOHN OVERS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Sunday Twenty Sixth September 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I inclose you a cheque for Five Pounds. Please let me know that it has reached you safely.

I am delighted, truly delighted, to hear that you are getting so much better, and are enjoying such good and worthy relaxation. I hope you will have no need of Mr. Wood;[†3] but if you should have any, you will like him very much.

The eleventh or twelfth of next month will find me, I hope, in town. I shall be glad to see you then, for many reasons — and not least among them, for one you will see stated in the Clock next Saturday week.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK, 28 SEPTEMBER 1841

Text from Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post, 13 Nov 41, quoting the New York Courier; date and salutation from MDGH, III, 19. From Broadstairs (see fn to next).

September 28th, 1841.

My dear Sir,

I condole with you, from my heart, on the loss you have sustained;[†4] and

I feel proud of your permitting me to sympathise with your affliction. It is a great satisfaction to me to have been addressed under similar circumstances by many of your countrymen, since the "Curiosity Shop" came to a close. Some simple and honest hearts in the remote wilds of America, have written me letters on the loss of their children; so numbering my little book, or rather heroine, with their household gods, and so pouring out their trials and sources of comfort in them, before me as a friend, that I have been inexpressibly moved — and am, whenever I think of them — I do assure you.[†1] ... You have already all the comfort that I could lay before you — all, I hope, that the affectionate spirit of your brother, now in happiness, can shed into your soul. The peaceful memory of the dead be with you!

I am going to bring you an article for good old Diedrick.[†2] For on the fourth of next January, if it pleases God, I am coming, with my wife, on a three or four months' visit to America. The British and North American Steam Packet will bring me, I hope, to Boston, and enable me in the third week of the New Year to set my foot upon the soil I have trodden in my day-dreams many times, and whose sons (and daughters) I yearn to know and be among.

I hope you are surprised — and I hope not unpleasantly.

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To WASHINGTON IRVING, 28 SEPTEMBER 1841

Text from W. L. Andrews, A Stray Leaf from the Correspondence of Washington Irving and CD, privately printed, New York, 1894, p. 32.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park, London[†3]
Twenty-eighth September, 1841

My dear Washington Irving

I was very sorry to hear t'other day from Mr Clark, of the Knickerbocker and New York, that you were unwell. I hope you are better; and furthermore that in proof of your being so, you will write me one line by the next Packet, to certify the fact.

— II - 395 —

I told Leslie[†1] what you had written about him,[†2] and he was much pleased. I know him, but have not known him long or intimately — I needn't tell you that London keeps a great many people apart, who incline strongly towards each other. His great abilities and uncommon gift of humour, with his pencil (a kind of Charles Lamb-like humour of the best quality) I have always doted on. We agreed that in your honor we would dine together instantly, and that we would be constant associates for evermore.

It has been a toss up for some weeks, whether I should write you a long letter, or a short one. I am happy to say the latter carries it. For why should I inflict four sides of paper on you, when I am coming to see you? And are there not at this moment in the books of the British and North American Mail Packet Company, the words — "fourth of January eighteen hundred and forty two, Mr and Mrs Charles Dickens — for Boston"?

I look forward to shaking hands with you, with an interest I cannot (and would not, if I could) describe. You can imagine, I dare say, something of the feelings with which I look forward to being in America. I can hardly believe I am coming.

[Rogers][†3] had been in great distress and desolation at having missed your niece.[†1] He was with us last night, and bewailed his affliction in very moving terms. He begged me to say as much to you, and to remember him heartily — though I am not clear whether it is a recent occurrence, or whether my projected voyage reminded him of it.

— II - 396 —

[†a]Did you know poor [Hook]?[†2] He has left a widow (poor creature, she was not married to him, but there is mourning out of matrimony, and it is no disparagement to the word) with four illegitimate daughters — I am not sure whether I should not have written, five.[†3] I heard yesterday at the Athenæum, that the King of [Hanover][†4] has sent them five hundred pounds. It is a good thing to find gratitude in Kings, and better when the King is a bad one, so I hope it's true. J ...[†5] declined to join in a subscription for rescuing these girls from poverty — it may be, from the very streets — because they were not born in wedlock. I hardly know what your politics are; remembering the Squire in Bracebridge Hall and the radical.[†6] — But I am sure this is not your creed.[†a]

Murray has just re-published in a new form, Lockhart's translation of the Spanish and Moorish ballads, with all manner of gold and silver borders, and variegated colours. He is said to be making rather a desperate stake with it,[†1] having suffered from recent failures in the trade. It looks tawdry and poor; and I fear will not do.

You knew Wilkie, I think, in Spain.[†2] A very handsome subscription has been already made for raising a monument to him in London. They are going to raise another, in Edinburgh.[†3] Poor fellow! He gave me a little picture of his painting, shortly before he went away,[†4] and I little thought I had seen him for the last time. His sister is so sadly changed by grief for his loss, that she is hardly to be recognized for the person she used to be.[†5] She had dressed herself as gaily as a bride, and was waiting for his coming home, when they had to tell her that he lay under the blue waters of the Mediterranean.

Believe me, always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Washington Irving Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 29 SEPTEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Twenty Ninth September 1841.

My Dear Macready.

I take it very ill of you that you didn't say "Come up to the Council, Dickens"; and furthermore that you didn't tell me at what time the Cardinals meet.[†1] I am in a whirl of doubt whether, coming by the Steam boat, I could arrive in time. If Forster don't write and tell me tomorrow morning, I'll disinherit him.

I think the address is in a manly honest tone, and of the right kind, and like you.[†2] I have made a few slight suggestions, which occur to me.[†3] About the prices, I am so thoroughly, entirely, and unalterably convinced, that if the Cardinals go to the Vote, I beg Dickens may be recorded as 12,[†4] in consequence of the supernatural obstinacy of his convictions.

I should have written to thank you, My Dear Macready, for that letter,[†5]

but I had hardly the heart to do it. And even now, I can only say to you — not that I am more your friend than ever, for that I could not be — but that my warmest affection and love are yours always.

I wonder, can you imagine how often I shall think of Drury Lane when I am away; and how strange it seems to me, and how full of regrets I am, to be going away from such a source of interest and delight. No, I am sure you can't, in the full extent.

Kate sends her love to you, and all. We are in great force, and talk about it often, in the liveliest way possible. It has been blowing a smart gale here for two days and nights. — I have seen her looking (very hard) at the Sea, but she has said nothing.

She has been much comforted by a stout note from Fred, who is to live with the children. The girl who is going with us, is a moral cork jacket, too, and gives great confidence.

Always My Dear Macready
Your faithful friend
CD.

W. C. Macready Esquire

October

To CHARLES LEVER,[†1] [?EARLY OCTOBER 1841]

Mention in Lever to CD, 11 Oct 41 (see fn). Address (envelope, MS Walter T. Spencer): Favored by Hablot Browne Esquire | Dr. Lever. Signed by CD, in full.[†2]

Refusing an invitation, and protesting angrily at Lever's publisher's use of a comparison of his work with Lever's in advertisements.[†3]

To HUGH TILSLEY,[†1] 1 OCTOBER 1841

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: Hugh Tilsley Esquire | Stamp Office | Somerset House | London.

Broadstairs, Kent. | October The First 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Tilsley, and begs to thank him for his obliging letter, relative to the real name of the Keeper of Newgate, at the time of Lord George Gordon's riots — though Mr. Dickens is not aware that he will have any further occasion to mention it, or any opportunity, therefore, of correcting his mistake.[†2]

It is singular that the various accounts of the trial (which agree in nothing else) unite in calling this gentleman Akerman.[†3] Perhaps, however, the circumstance is most satisfactorily accounted for, by the fact that that is not his proper name.[†4]

To THOMAS BEARD, [12 OCTOBER 1841]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 12 Oct 41. Address: Free | Thomas Beard Esq | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My dear Beard.

You will hardly believe it I dare say, for I cant,[†1] but I have been very ill for a week,[†2] and last Friday Morning was obliged to submit to a cruel operation, and the cutting out root and branch of a disease caused by working over much which has been gathering it seems for years.[†3] Thank God it's all over and I am on the Sofa again — rather lean but filling the Doctor with boundless astonishment notwithstanding.[†4]

Kate to whom I dictate this sends all kinds of loves. When you have time come and see me.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To ANDREW BELL, 12 OCTOBER 1841*

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Free | Mr. Andrew Bell | Bradbury and Evans | Printers Whitefriars | Fleet Street.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 12th. October 1841.

My dear Sir

I am obliged to dictate this letter to you for I have been very unwell, having indeed undergone an extremely painful operation, which leaves me weak though I am recovering fast.

I thank you very much for your book[†1] which I have read with great amusement and pleasure.

I think you are rather hard on the Americans and that your dedication[†2] like Mrs Trollope's[†3] preface[†4] seems to denote a foregone conclusion.[†5] It is much better however to be hard in such a case, than soft which you certainly are not[†6] — for your descriptions are all exceedingly life like and bring their subjects before my eyes distinctly.[†7] My notion is that in going to a New World one must for the time utterly forget, and put out of sight the Old one and bring none of its customs or observances into the comparison — Or if you do compare remember how much brutality you may see (if you choose) in the common streets and public places of London. I have often seen a boy, and more than once a Woman, quite as roughly used as your Negro in the Oyster room and either you or I rising from our desk and walking out, could find in the next street (always supposing that we were bent on looking for him) the counterpart of your Yankee swaggerer.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS†2

Mr Andrew Bell

To JOHN OVERS, 12 OCTOBER 1841

MS Dickens House.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 12th. October 1841

Dear Mr. Overs.

I dictate this letter to you because I have not been well and am yet lying on the Sofa, after being some days in bed. I have had to undergo a painful operation, and am only just recovering.

Thank you for the verses, which are very good.

I shall be very glad to hear what has passed between you and Mr. Macready and how you like the situation. That gentleman comes to me every day, but I think it better not to ask him.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS†2

To R. S. HORRELL, 12 OCTOBER 1841

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 12th. October 1841

Dear Sir

I am obliged to dictate this brief letter to you, in consequence of having had to undergo a painful operation which leaves me weak, though recovering with great rapidity. As soon as I get about again and have disposed of such arrears as my compulsory retirement will have engendered, I will not fail to read your poem and write to you myself.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS†2

To GEORGE REYNOLDS,†3 13 OCTOBER 1841

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1910; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 Oct 41.

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 OCTOBER 1841

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 17th. October 1841

My dear Mitton

Kate writes this note at my dictation because I find that the act of writing on the Sofa [is][†1] very irksome indeed.

I asked the advice of a great City man,[†2] whose name I must not repeat, but who is perfectly acquainted with the whole monied concerns, and monied people of London, relative to my life Insurances. He tells me that both the Argus and the Brittania are such very doubtful offices,[†3] that if I can effect an insurance in any good one, of long standing, I had better get rid of those policies for any little money they may fetch, and put up with the loss.[†4]

This is pleasant.

I must not go out till Tuesday. When I have been to Salmon[†5] I will see this gentleman and come on to you. It will be nearly twelve before I reach your Office.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To MACVEY NAPIER, 21 OCTOBER 1841

MS British Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 21st October 1841.

My dear Sir. If you had asked me three weeks ago, whether you might have reckoned upon me, for January,[†1] I should have written you back, an emphatic "Yes", but within that short space, I have found out, that I laboured under the complaint called Fistula the consequence of too much sitting at my desk, and have undergone a painful operation. Now although I am Thank God, recovering so rapidly, that I am in possession of my usual appetite and spirits, and can already go out for a daily drive, I am so thrown back, in respect of my "Clock" and my American preparations, for I am going, that it will be as much as I can do, within any reasonable regard to my health, to come out punctually every week until the end of November, and then lay down my pen, for eight months at least. We sail (Mrs Dickens goes with me) on the 4th of January, and purpose to return in June. I don't go with any idea of pressing the Americans into my service. In my next fiction, and in all others I hope, I shall stand staunchly by John.[†2] I may write an account of my trip — but that is another matter.

I had laid myself out, to redeem my promise to you — had considered the subject in various ways — and looked forward to its fullfillment[†3] with great pleasure. I hope you will consider its redemption only postponed — I need not say, by a circumstance over which I had no control, and which I would most gladly have avoided.

In common with every body else, I have been perfectly charmed with the last number of the Review.[†4] Believe me that I do anxiously look forward, to being among its contributors. If wars or rumours of wars,[†5] should keep me at home, I will not fail to give you timely notice.

I find it so irksome, lying on the Sofa to write my weekly matter, that I dictate my correspondence,[†1] but I hope you will be able, to make this letter out, and to recognize my whole heart in it, though my pen is wanting.

A gentleman of your name[†2] called here two days ago. I hoped it was you, and was about writing to you in Cecil Street, where the unknown gave his address, when your letter undeceived me.[†3]

My dear Sir | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 OCTOBER 1841]

Extract in F, II, ix, 169. Date: written in his sickroom on 22 Oct according to Forster.

I hope I shan't leave off any more, now, until I have finished Barnaby.

To JOHN OVERS, 22 OCTOBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second October 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs.

I find it such a very slow process to be obliged to write, lying on the sofa, that I have not been able to read your papers yet. Defer your visit, therefore, until you hear from me again.

I am recovering with the greatest possible rapidity, thank God; and already go out for a drive every day.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Overs.

To JOHN OVERS, 22 OCTOBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace

Friday Night Twenty Second October | 1841

Dear Mr. Overs.

I have had your letter read to me,[†1] and I have read it myself; and I strongly disapprove of it, for three reasons.

In the first place, I think it rather inconsiderate to address three sides of foolscap, on such a subject, to a gentleman who receives three or four score letters every day, and has every moment of his time occupied by important business.

In the second place, I think you seem to vaunt your independence too much, and to flourish it rather unnecessarily in the eyes of a stranger; who might be apt to think (being a stranger to you) that a stream so very noisy is not very deep.

In the third place, I consider — even I — that the whole of that paragraph about the wives and children, and the wet and cold, is presumptuous and impertinent. You have no right to constitute yourself a judge of the regulations which Mr. Macready — for the security of his property, and the comfort of those about him when the Theatre is open — sees fit to establish.[†2] That they are contrary to the custom of a place, bankrupt for many years — the lounge of vagabonds — and chosen resort of the worst hangerson to the very worst haunts — is extremely possible. I hope they are, or Mr. Macready would not be the friend of mine he is.

I write to you directly, because it seems to me that tomorrow being Saturday, you have a very plain course to take. Nothing is easier than to tell Mr. Bryden[†3] the post does not suit you — and that you wish to leave the Theatre, as soon as your services can be dispensed with.

I distinctly recognize, and always do in the case of every person about me, the right of every man to do his best for himself. I do not therefore quarrel with you at all for leaving this situation, but I do not hesitate to tell you that your letter is in execrable taste, and not at all becoming. This is so obvious to my sense of what is right and proper, that I look upon it as a fact, and not a matter of opinion.

It is so much a custom with me to try to understand what people think when they are talking to me, that I saw in five minutes the other night (and said when you had left me) that you would not stay at the Theatre a month. I am therefore not at all surprised at your decision. But I am a little surprised at your working your ideas of Mr. Macready's character out of the wretched materials presented to your view, which would be well enough in a man who could neither read nor write, but is quite beneath you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS GEORGE HOGARTH, 24 OCTOBER 1841

Photograph New York Public Library. Address: Mrs. Hogarth.

Devonshire Terrace
Sunday October Twenty Fourth 1841.

My Dear Mrs. Hogarth.

For God's sake be comforted, and bear this well, for the love of your remaining children.[†1]

I had always intended to keep poor Mary's grave for us and our dear children, and for you. But if it will be any comfort to you to have poor George buried there, I will cheerfully arrange to place the ground at your entire disposal. Do not consider me in any way. Consult only your own heart. Mine seems to tell me that as they both died so young and so suddenly, they ought both to be buried together.[†2]

Try — do try — to think that they have but preceded you to happiness, and will meet you with joy in Heaven. There is[†3] consolation in the knowledge that you have treasure there, and that while you live on earth, there are creatures among the Angels, who owed their being to you.

Always Yours with true affection
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK SALMON, 25 OCTOBER 1841

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, 17 Nov 1953; dated 25 Oct 41.

I don't wait[†4] to beg your acceptance of the enclosed, until you [finally][†5] dismiss me, because I don't want to give any appearance of ceremony[†4] to what is a spontaneous and most heartfelt emotion — though a very poor token — of gratitude. Put these books[†1] upon some spare shelf for my sake — and let it be upon some shelf which has room for all I may write hereafter ... You once told me that Mrs. Salmon laughed too much at my books. I hope she will find some passages in the Old Curiosity Shop to make her cry, — without making her less happy or less charitable than they found her.

To JOHN OVERS, [?25 OCTOBER 1841]

Mention in To Mrs Macready, ?25 Oct.

To WILLIAM [BRYDONE],[†2] [?25 OCTOBER 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: presumably the Monday after CD had advised Overs to call on Brydone (see 22 Oct).

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday

My Dear Sir

I have told Mr. Overs — that is,[†3] the person's name — to call on you at the Theatre tomorrow, at one. I am not sure whether I ought to have said the Theatre, or your house.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Bryden Esquire

To MRS MACREADY [?25 OCTOBER 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly same day as last.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Evening | ½ past 9.

My Dear Mrs. Macready

I have only this moment come home; having been out, all day. I wrote to Mr. Overs this morning — in consequence of what Mr. Bryden sd. to me last night — appointing him to be at the Theatre tomorrow at One. I also wrote to Mr. Bryden, telling him that I had done so. He lives in the remotest fastnesses of Islington, and I fear (as he will be long 'ere this in bed) it is too late to alter this state of things for the better.

My heartiest regards to all
Faithfully Yours ever
C.D.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 OCTOBER 1841]

Extract in F, III, i, 198. Date: 25 Oct according to Forster.

As no steps had been taken towards the funeral, I thought it best at once to bestir myself; and not even you could have saved my going to the cemetery. It is a great trial to me to give up Mary's grave; greater than I can possibly express. I thought of moving her to the catacombs, and saying nothing about it; but then I remembered that the poor old lady[†1] is buried next her at her own desire, and could not find it in my heart, directly she is laid in the earth, to take her grandchild away. The desire to be buried next her is as strong upon me now, as it was five years ago; and I know (for I don't think there ever was love like that I bear her) that it will never diminish. I fear I can do nothing. Do you think I can? They would move her on Wednesday, if I resolved to have it done. I cannot bear the thought of being excluded from her dust; and yet I feel that her brothers and sisters, and her mother, have a better right than I to be placed beside her. It is but an idea. I neither think nor hope (God forbid) that our spirits would ever mingle there. I ought to get the better of it, but it is very hard. I never contemplated this — and coming so suddenly, and after being ill, it disturbs me more than it ought. It seems like losing her a second time.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 OCTOBER 1841]

Extract in F, III, i, 199. Date: the morning after last, according to Forster.

No, I tried that. No,[†2] there is no ground on either side to be had. I must give it up. I shall drive over there, please God, on Thursday morning, before they get there; and look at her coffin.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER 1841]

Extract in F, IX, i, 720. Date: written, says Forster, when CD "was under the greatest trial of his life, and illness and sorrow were contending for the mastery over him". The only time in CD's life when illness, sorrow, and the writing of a novel coincided seems to have been Oct 41.[†3]

Of my distress I will say no more than that it has borne a terrible, frightful, horrible proportion to the quickness of the gifts you remind me of. But may I not be forgiven for thinking it a wonderful testimony to my being made for my art, that when, in the midst of this trouble and pain, I sit down to my book, some beneficent power shows it all to me, and tempts me to be interested, and I don't invent it — really do not — but see it, and write it down.[†1] ... It is only when it all fades away and is gone, that I begin to suspect that its momentary relief has cost me something.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 OCTOBER 1841

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Seventh October 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

Let me thank you for your kind recollection of me, yesterday. I was greatly pleased to hear from you once more, I assure you.[†2]

I should have called in Stratton Street immediately on my return to town, but I have been exceedingly unwell. It is scarcely three weeks, since I was obliged to submit to a painful surgical operation (for which agreeable change I left the seaside) and although I have recovered with a rapidity whereat the Doctors are astounded, I have only just begun to feel my legs at all steady under my diminished weight. I almost thought, at first, that I was about to go through life on Two pillars of jelly, or tremulous Italian cream, — but I am happy to say that I am again conscious of floors and pavements.

They tell me that in two or three days I may go to Windsor, and set up for myself as one who has no need of the Faculty. I shall not be there, I hope, more than a fortnight at the utmost, and on my return I shall be only too well pleased to present myself at Roehampton, or, if you should have left there, at your house in town. I defer all particulars about America, until then.

Some friends in Yorkshire[†1] have sent me a raven, before whom the Raven (the dead one) sinks into insignificance. He can say anything — and he has a power of swallowing door-keys and reproducing them at pleasure, which fills all beholders with mingled sensations of horror and satisfaction — if I may [say] so;[†2] with a kind of awful delight. His infancy and youth have been passed at a country public house, and I am told that the sight of a drunken man calls forth his utmost powers. My groom is unfortunately sober, and I have had no opportunity of testing this effect, — but I have told him to "provide himself" elsewhere, and am looking out for another who can have a dissolute character from his last master.

With best regards to Miss Meredith, I am always Dear Miss Coutts

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN OVERS, 27 OCTOBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Seventh October 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs.

There can be no doubt that you should send all the songs to Mr. Tait.[†3] I shall do nothing with February.[†4]

Mr. Cruikshank called here on Sunday to say that your paper[†5] could not appear next month (on account of press of matter) but that it would certainly be published in the No. following, and that he would send the money for it here, as though it appeared now. When he does so, it shall be forwarded to you. It is open to you, of course, to send any other papers there, you may think likely to suit the Omnibus.[†6]

I cannot read the inclosed, being ordered out of town in a few days, and having my attention engaged by a severe affliction in Mrs. Dickens's family. You had better, in future, consult your own judgment.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To C. HUNTON,[†1] 27 OCTOBER 1841*

MS Chicago Historical Society.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Seventh October 1841.

My Dear Sir

The basket of game (No. 2)[†2] arrived safely. I assure you I enjoyed it heartily; and that I am very much obliged to you.

I am happy to say that I am greatly better, and have the appetite of a mountaineer, with the spirits that usually belong to me.

With many thanks to you, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Hunton Esquire.

To MRS HURNALL, 27 OCTOBER 1841

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1903; MS[†3] 2 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 27 Oct 41.

Containing an amusing reference to the numerous applications he receives for a lock of hair.[†4]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 28 OCTOBER 1841

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1950; dated 28 Oct 41.

To THOMAS MITTON, 29 OCTOBER [1841]*

MS University of Texas. Date: clearly 1841 since concerned with the visit to America; handwriting supports. Address: Wait. | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday October Twenty Nine

My Dear Mitton

The Britannia southern charge is very preposterous in its proportion to the Northern; and comes, I suppose, of their scrambling way of doing business. There is no help for it, of course.[†1] I should like the Board to know that I shall not be away more than six months altogether — and not South of New York for more than eight weeks. With regard to the Medical officers it will be best to say that I am going out of town — that I shall be back in the course of November — and that I will wait on them when I return.

I have been thinking about the Argus Policy. It will certainly be necessary for my[†2] protection (not Smithson's; I am not particular about that;) that you shod. pay the extra rates. I am sorry to put you to the expence, — but you must look upon it as a consequence of purchasing the business,[†3] — and make the best of it.

Going into the city every morning plays the Deuce with my work. I hope to be ordered off to Windsor, about next Monday week. Before then I will call upon you; and I will write to you the day before I do so.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOHN HUDSON, 30 OCTOBER 1841

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
October The Thirtieth 1841.

Sir.

In answer to your obliging enquiries, I beg to tell you that I have, for the last three weeks, been confined to a sofa and a carriage; having undergone a surgical operation, which rendered those restrictions necessary in its after-treatment.

If no wars or rumours of wars,[†1] occur to prevent me, I am going, in January, to America for Six Months. I need scarcely add that I am going for any other reason than on account of illness, as Doctors do not commonly recommend sick people to make a voyage across the Atlantic, in the severest season of the year.

I shall be happy to receive the Pheasants you speak of — and to eat them with the appetite of a Hunter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Hudson.

November

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 NOVEMBER 1841]

Summary in F, III, i, 199. Date: 2 Nov according to Forster.

Reporting himself as progressing and ordered to Richmond.[†2]

To JOSEPH LUNN,[†3] 2 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Second November 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Three weeks ago last Friday, I was obliged to submit to a painful operation, and I have been confined to a sofa and a carriage ever since.

I am now, thank God, going out of town for a little change of air; having made a very quick and famous recovery. In Three Weeks I shall be at home again. Directly I return, I will not fail to write to you, and appoint an hour for seeing you.

If, in the meanwhile, you should desire to write me, I shall be very happy to hear from you, and to pay immediate attention to your letter. Address to me here, and it will be forwarded without loss of time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Lunn Esquire.

To GEORGE FLETCHER,[†1] 2 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS University of Texas.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Second November, 1841.

Sir.

It is no less painful to me to refuse, than it is to you to ask. Let me do so, briefly.

Nearly every day of my life, I receive letters akin to that which you have sent me. My inclination is, God knows, never to send an applicant away, empty-handed. But if I were the richest man in England, I should have to disappoint, almost as often as I helped. Judge then, being what I am, how frequently I am forced to hold my hand.

Fame's Trumpet should blow a little more of the wealth arising from the circulation of my works, into the Booksellers' pockets, and less into my own.[†2] With a hundred claims upon my superfluity, I cannot render more than sympathy to such a case as yours. If I could, I would.

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. George Fletcher.

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third November 1841

My Dear Macready

Salmon don't agree with me — by which I mean that the Surgeon of that name, orders me to Windsor next Saturday, and won't let me dine with you on Sunday; objecting to chairs for another week; and laying stress on sofas. What can I do but say with the good Mussulmen — "to hear is to obey? Upon my (not exactly, eyes, but you can supply the term) be it."

You know that there are not many things I have a greater delight in than your society. So I will not add another word.

I was at Nina Sforza the other night — in spirit.[†3]

Affectionately Yours Ever

CD.

To JOHN LANDSEER,[†1] 5 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Fifth November 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Let me thank you, both for your call and your note — and let me add that it affords me real pleasure to communicate with you in any way.

You are quite right in considering it very remarkable and worthy of notice, that Wilkes should have been the active magistrate in the suppression of the Gordon Riots.[†2] I determined however, after some consideration, not to notice it in Barnaby, for this reason. — It is almost indispensable in a work of fiction that the characters who bring the catastrophes about, and play important parts, should belong to the Machinery of the Tale, — and the introduction towards the end of a story where there is always a great deal to do, of new actors until then unheard of, is a thing to be avoided, if possible, in every case. Now, if I had talked about Wilkes, it would have been necessary for me to glance at his career and previous position[†3] (for in that lies the singularity you speak of)[†4] — and if I had stopped to do that, I should have stopped the riots which must go on to the end headlong, pell mell, or they lose their effect. I therefore resolved to defer that point, with some others of equal curiosity and interest, until the appearance of another Edition would afford me an opportunity of relating them in Notes, where they would not stem the current of the Tale, or embarrass the action.

I need not tell you who are so well acquainted with "Art" in all its forms, that in the description of such scenes, a broad, bold, hurried effect must be produced, or the reader instead of being forced and driven along by imaginary crowds will find himself dawdling very uncomfortably through the town, and greatly wondering what may be the matter. In this kind of work the object is, — not to tell everything, but to select the striking points and beat them into the page with a sledge-hammer. And herein lies the difficulty. No man in the crowd who was pressed and trodden here and there, saw Wilkes. No looker-on from a window at the struggle in the street, beheld an Individual, or anything but a great mass of magistrates, rioters, and soldiery, all mixed up together. Being always in one or other of these positions, my object has been to convey an idea of multitudes, violence, and fury; and even to lose my own dramatis personae in the throng, or only see them dimly, through the fire and smoke.

Until I received your second note last evening, I did not observe the slip of the pen to which it alluded. Even if I had done so, I should have understood, of course, what you had intended to write.

Believe me | My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Landseer Esquire

To MR LOFT,[†1] 6 NOVEMBER 1841

Mention in N, I, 361.

To LORD JEFFREY, [?EARLY NOVEMBER 1841]

Mention in Jeffrey to CD, 26 [Nov 41]. Date: presumably shortly after receiving Jeffrey's letter of 4 Nov.[†2]

To FREDERICK SALMON, 7 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

White Hart Hotel Windsor.
Sunday Seventh November 1841.

My Dear Salmon.

I don't know whether it was because I had caught my wife's cold; or because of my being weak, and having stood too long, finishing Barnaby;[†1] but yesterday and the evening before, all manner of queer pains were floating about my illustrious person: now twitching at the calves of my legs — now sticking shadowy pins into the soles of my feet — now entertaining themselves with my knees — now (but not often) shooting through that region which you have made as tender as my heart — and now settling in the small of my back; but particularly favoring the back; and the calves before mentioned. I had an odd sort of nervousness about me besides, and if it had not fortunately been the day for coming down here, should have felt quite ill.[†2] The change, however, did me a world of good in the first half hour. And this morning, this uneasiness has greatly abated, and I have taken a breakfast to which no pen can do justice. In a word, I feel immeasurably better.

I think it best, however, remembering your injunctions, to send my servant up with this, to know whether I shall come to you tomorrow, instead of Tuesday; or whether there is anything you wish me to do in the meanwhile. I parboiled my feet last night in hot water with plenty of salt in it, and rubbed my back with camphor liniment.

Don't mind how brief your answer is — and forgive my troubling you on your day of rest.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Salmon Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 NOVEMBER 1841]

Forster's summary of letter, made before destruction, with two words quoted, MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Nov 41 since "from Windsor" according to Forster; possibly "tomorrow" was Sun 14 Nov, when Forster and CD met (see Forster's answers to the Eagle Life Assurance Co.'s questions of 13 Nov, Appx, p. 494); "saner" probably referred to the Company's enquiry about the "mad story" — possibly made in a confidential letter of the same date (see To Mitton, 18 Nov).

As to Insurance for America. Will be sapient saner tomorrow.

To JOSEPH LUNN, 15 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Huntington Library.

Private.[†1]

Windsor | November Fifteenth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Your note has but just now reached me. I hasten to answer it.

I long ago found it necessary and just, to lay down with reference to Chapman and Hall, this position: — "I am every day asked to recommend works to you, and sometimes I am, in a manner, forced to do so. Understand that whenever I introduce any writer to you (which I never will, save when I cannot help it) I leave you to your own unfettered discretion in the acceptance or rejection of his work. You will never displease me by consulting your own inclinations; and I never require you to follow mine".

They thanked me, and said they would act upon this understanding — which they have always done. Last summer I was very anxious that they should publish a novel by a young lady of considerable ability,[†2] to whose book Mrs. Norton,[†3] from a strong interest in her, would have put her name as Editress. They declined it, notwithstanding, and I was not offended.

I cannot therefore introduce the author of Jest and Earnest[†4] to them, "in a manner which will induce them to purchase and publish his second work".[†5] But I will introduce him and his desire, gladly.

And I will add (which is perfectly true) that I think very highly of his little book.[†6] Beyond this, I cannot go. I shall be in town on Saturday. If you will let me know by that time that your son has no objection to this mode of introduction, I will say all I can to them, — which is better than writing it.

Let me assure you, and your son, most unfeignedly that I write this with a real interest in the author of Jest and Earnest, and a real desire for his success. These publishers, however, are not speculative or inclined to launch out upon ventures; and I have very little confidence in the weight of my recommendation. I have always found, as yet, that however much "the Trade" may care for my writings, they are by no means deferential to my opinion of other mens'[†1] — indeed that they rather doubt, and look with distrust upon it; possibly having in their minds' eye, the example of Scott and his publishers.[†2]

The Editor of the Albion,[†3] is as cool a gentleman as I ever encountered. I owe to him and such as him[†4] the having used my best endeavours to advance the passing of an International Copyright Bill on this side of the water — the being staved off, now that it is passed, with promises deferred, from day to day — and the exquisite justice of never deriving sixpence from an enormous American sale of all my books.[†5]

Do not suppose that I am ignorant of your claims as a brother. I am well acquainted with them, and happy, I assure you, to respond to them with all my heart.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

J. Lunn[†1] Esquire.

To [ANGUS FLETCHER], 16 NOVEMBER 1841

Text from unidentified bookseller's catalogue, Dickens House. Address: clearly to Angus Fletcher; in To Fred Dickens, 3 Jan 42, from Liverpool, CD reports Fletcher "here".

Windsor, 16 Nov., 1841

My dear F —

Here's a short note, but to the purpose. I thank God I am getting stout and hearty, and can walk about the Parks here like a giant with his seven-leaguers on, and eat like the same with his knife and fork in hand, and sleep like the same with a hogshead of old crusted under his waistcoat.

We shall be delighted to shake hands with you at Liverpool. We shall be there at the latest the morning before the packet sails, unless some change is made in the arrangements. She will sail on the 4th of January. I think it will be the Britannia, but whatever her name may be she will be the British and North American Mail Steamer.[†2] Mind — at the Adelphi Hotel.

Kate's best regards — all well.

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MURRAY,[†3] 17 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Carl and Lily Pforzheimer Foundation.

Windsor | Seventeenth November 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Your kind note only reached me here, last night. If I had been in town I am not quite sure that I should have had philosophy enough to deny myself the pleasure of dining with you — though I am advised to dine at home for another week or so. Therefore I console myself under this tardy receipt of your invitation with the reflection that "it's all for the best".

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To GEORGE SHURY, 17 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Free | G. Shury Esquire | George Street | Euston Square | London.[†1]

Windsor | Seventeenth November 1841.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter. I am staying here for a few days, and it has been forwarded to me.

You will no doubt perceive that by this time I am past all further information on the subject of the Gordon Riots; and you will readily understand that in using them for purposes of fiction, it has been necessary — quite indispensable to the Progress of the Story — to reject many circumstances growing out of them, though in themselves sufficiently amusing and characteristic. Your anecdotes are of this kind; but I am not the less obliged to you for doing me the favor to communicate them, or less entertained by the story of the chimney-sweeper, which is very quaint and whimsical.

Pray accept my thanks; both on this score, and for the obliging tenor of your expressions.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Shury Esquire.

To [?JOHN] DE GEX,[†2] 18 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Eastgate House, Rochester. Address: probably John De Gex, of whom CD saw more than of his brother Edward;[†3] but he was friendly with both.

White Hart Windsor. | Eighteenth November 1841.

My Dear De Gex.

Where on earth were[†4] you and Frank[†5] today. — I had a dinner ready, the particulars of which would madden you both. We return to Town on Saturday.[†1]

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Huntington Library.

White Hart — Windsor | Eighteenth November 1841.

My Dear Mitton

You will be very glad, I am certain, to hear that they have insured me at the Eagle for £5,000 at the ordinary Rate.[†2] They were very particular in requiring an emphatic contradiction of the mad story,[†3] but they stuck at nothing else — having Salmon's report, of course.

You cannot think what a comfort this is to my mind, or, if I should get into any danger in my Travels, how pleasant it will be to reflect that my darlings are well provided for.

I shall see you on Monday.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [18] NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Mr Horace G. Commin. Date: 19 Nov 41 was Friday; presumably CD was writing on Thurs 18th, or he would have said "We come home tomorrow".

White Hart, Windsor
Thursday Nineteenth November 1841.

My Dear Mac.

We come home on Saturday. Dine with us on Sunday at five, and behold the once more vigorous, hearty, blooming, grateful,

BOZ.

Daniel Maclise Esquire

R. A.[†4]

To JOSEPH LUNN, 22 NOVEMBER 1841

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 399 (1920); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 22 Nov 41.

I shall see Chapman & Hall tomorrow, and will write to you in the evening.

To MESSRS LEA & BLANCHARD, 23 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Messrs Lea & Febiger.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Tuesday November Twenty Third | 1841.

Dear Sirs.

I have had the pleasure of receiving your welcome letter of the Thirtieth of last month — and thank you cordially for its obliging tenor.

I shall only be six months in America, altogether; and my present purpose is to land at Boston: go from thence to New York; and thence into the South. Of course I shall visit Philadelphia at some time or other in the half year; and when I do, I shall not fail to see you immediately. It is scarcely possible until one is on your side of the Atlantic, to be at all certain as to dates and seasons; but as soon as I arrive, and have shaped my course minutely, I will write to you again.

In the meanwhile, accept my thanks for your polite attention; and the assurance that I am
Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 23 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace.
Twenty Third November 1841.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

If a very distressing illness from which I am but just now recovering, and the preparations for my half year's expedition to America, leave me but two mornings to devote to your service, believe me that

I will redeem my pledge.[†1] Indeed I should have done so by this time, but the Surgeon's knife is a bad sharpener of the pen; and I have been acutely nibbed, I do assure you.

Whether I appear before you with a contrite heart and a sorrowful face, or in the modest triumph of having been as good as my word, I shall see you, please God, between this and Christmas.[†1] At the worst, I hope I shall not come quite empty-handed.

I should have answered your note before, but I have been at Windsor for change of air, and have but just returned.[†2]

Believe me | Dear Lady Blessington
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington

To JOHN BRADFORD,[†3] 23 NOVEMBER 1841

Extracts from American Art Association and Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 3976, Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 36 (aa) and N, I, 363; MS 2 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 23 Nov 41.

I have read your little book.[†4] ... It has pleased me very much [a] — very much — and does you infinite credit.[a] ... I entertain a very strong objection to seeing my opinion of any Book in print, as it does seem a kind of presumption and a dictating to people's taste. It is my invariable custom to request that any communication of this nature may be considered private.[†5]

But I am not proof against your solicitation and the tone of your last note and cannot find it in my heart to lay upon you the injunction which my inclination leads me to impose. If you must, however, include my opinion ... do me the favor to say generally that I have expressed myself much pleased with your production, and do not quote me.[†1]

To JOHN OVERS, 23 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third November 1841

Dear Mr. Overs.

I will tell you why the interest I had in you, has undergone a change. I need scarcely look for a better text than your last note, which informs me that you can much more easily imagine my having been unjust, irascible, and everything which you ought to know I am not, than you can entertain the idea of your having committed a fault.

I think in this, and in all you have written and done since I first mentioned you to Mr. Macready, you have shewn a deficiency of that moral sense which I believed you to possess; and that you have lost sight of your true position in regard to that gentleman, and all other gentlemen with whom you have come in contact.

I spoke of you to Mr. Macready (as you know) as one who was incapacitated by illness from pursuing his usual occupation, or devoting himself to any labour. Mr. Macready accordingly engaged you, in the only capacity about the Theatre, then unfilled, in which such a man could be employed. If I could have recommended you as a stage carpenter, you would have been engaged as one, and paid as one. If I could have recommended you as a scene painter, you would have entered the Theatre on the footing of a scene painter, and at a scene painter's pay. But you went there, emphatically a disabled man. Nobody supposed that you were to remain so all your life, but you went there invalided, and unfit for work. The first thing you do, before you have been there a fortnight, is to write a letter to Mr. Macready, measuring your salary, by that of the different artizans employed in the house, every man working at his own craft, and in the full possession of its cunning, such as it may be, and of his bodily powers!

Further than this, you ask me how I think Mr. Macready would like your situation. You take the case of a man who by long study, liberal education, incessant application and constant self denial, combined with divers physical and mental gifts, has raised himself, slowly and in the course of years, to the summit of an art in which very few attain to excellence. You set him beside yourself — measure, head to head, and heel to heel — and seem to recognize no difference between the two.

This not being enough, you go on to lecture this gentleman — with certain flourishes of which I will say no more than that they were very preposterous — upon his government of his own establishment (of which you know nothing at all) — tell him plainly, that your feelings are much finer than his — and that he must get a less sensitive man to carry into effect his ogre-like commands. And in the very first instance you go to him with a kind of malice prepense; for not having seen Mr. Bryden in one or two calls, you write me like an ill-used, suffering person, in a tone which hurts and surprises me beyond expression. For I can remember the time, without any violent effort, when I, wanting employment in my path of life, had to call a dozen times upon a busy man,[†1] and yet bore it with a Christian fortitude — though conscious of my own deserts, as most men are.

I have already told you (although you suppressed this Truth from Doctor Elliotson) that I distinctly recognize your right to leave the situation when you found it did not suit you. Your manner of leaving it, and your whole course of reflection upon the subject, is what I quarrel with; and it is this which leads me to the conclusion that Mr. Macready and Mr. Bryden treated you with a delicacy and a consideration which you did not deserve at their hands; and renders me very sorry that I ever recommended you.

Surely this same deficiency of which I have spoken, is apparent in your believing that my "zeal" for my friend, led me to write you a reproof which you had not merited.[†2] You ought to know that zeal for my friend would have induced me to laugh at the whole business. It is not because I am anxious to defend Mr. Macready from your censures, that I am warm with you; but because your conduct has disappointed me, and has shewn me that you were not the sort of man I took you for. In anybody else the supposition that I was unjust because I was ill, or because I had a strong attachment to an intimate friend, would have been extremely insulting. Coming from you, it only confirms me in the impression that there is something wanting in you, which I believed you to possess.

As between you and me, it is no matter whether Mr. Macready had or had not the letter which you wrote. I had it, and you wrote it. That is enough.

I repeat, that in this matter I am disappointed in you. I am changed in no other respect. Disappointment, of course, slackens my zeal to serve you; but I still entertain the desire; and I would do so, if I had the opportunity.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To W. C. MACREADY, 23 NOVEMBER [1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 23 Nov was Tuesday in 1841 and 1847; handwriting points unmistakably to 1841. Address: W. C. Macready Esquire | Clarence Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday. November Twenty Third.

My Dear Macready.

Please to be an out and out villain, to night.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To HENRY VINCENT,[†2] 23 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Third November 1841.

Henry Vincent Esquire
With Mr. Charles Dickens' Compts.[†3]

To JOSEPH LUNN, 24 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth November 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I have spoken to Chapman and Hall; and left them Jest and Earnest to look at. All I can do, I have done.

If your son will call upon them in the course of the week — say on Saturday — they will tell him, I have no doubt, at what conclusion they have arrived.

Pray make my compliments to him. And believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Lunn Esquire.

To [EDWARD] JESSE,[†1] 24 NOVEMBER 1841

Text from N, I, 364. Address: N gives christian name as "Edmund", clearly a mistake for Edward (see fn).

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
November Twenty-Fourth 1841

My Dear Sir,

I have been very anxious to write you before, but my engagements have been rendered so very uncertain by a variety of avocations, that I have been disabled from communicating with you until now.

If to-morrow week will suit you, and the weather should be at all fine, we should be delighted to avail ourselves of your kind offer,[†2] and to meet you at Hampton Court.

Believe me, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 NOVEMBER 1841

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts | Roehampton | Surrey.

1 Devonshire Terrace. York Gate.
Thursday Twenty Fourth November 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I beg to report myself quite well, and contemplating a descent upon

Roehampton, where — I learn on enquiry at your house in town — you still are.

My domestic peace is so disturbed by rumours of Adelaide Kemble,[†1] and my hearth is rendered so very desolate by the incursions of those who have heard her, that I can never hope for peace of mind until I have carried Mrs. Dickens to Covent Garden Theatre. If, to this end, you can let me have your box any night next week,[†2] you will eternally oblige me, and do much to smooth my passage from my Native Shores.

I heartily wish I had been to America and had come home again. I am told that getting up in the morning there in the winter time, is beyond Miss Meredith's conception.[†3]

I beg my compliments to her, and am with sincerity

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, [LATE NOVEMBER 1841]

Mention in Landor to CD, [Nov 41].[†4] Date: clearly after CD's return on 20 Nov from his convalescence at Windsor. The invitation for "Saturday week" must have been to the christening of Landor's godson Walter Landor Dickens on Sat 4 Dec;[†5] Landor was therefore replying not later than Fri 26 Nov to a letter written shortly before.

To GEORGE THOMSON,[†1] 26 NOVEMBER 1841

Facsimile in D, X (1914), 235.

Devonshire Terrace.
Friday November Twenty Sixth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I hope you may like the inclosed,[†2] but if you do not, pray have no hesitation in saying so. It is very difficult to write such a piece properly, unless in the first freshness and fulness of grief.

Believe that I would not have delayed doing this, if I had not been ill.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Thomson Esquire.

To JOHN PAYNE COLLIER,[†3] 27 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Seventh November 1841.

My Dear Collier.

Many thanks for your pleasant and welcome recollection of me.

Oddly enough, I was talking about your pamphlet,[†4] at the very moment when a very small boy, in a very large coat and a very glazed hat, was heard to proclaim at the Street Door in a very shrill voice, that he belonged to the Parcels Delivery Company. As I happened to be holding forth with great effect on your side of the question (although I am the proprietor of a Boswell's Malone),[†1] and as I happened to be doing so without knowing much about it, I went to work and read you straightway.

I think you make out a very good case; and that Whittakers[†2] will make out another very good case in their way, if they allow a reasonable time for doing so. I heartily and cordially wish you "well through it" — as the monthly nurses say — and shall have my eye on you, please God.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Payne Collier Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 29 NOVEMBER [1841]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 29 Nov was Monday in 1841; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire T. | Monday Twenty Ninth November.

My Dear Mac

dine[†3] with us tomorrow at half past four, as a preparation for the classic Addle Head.[†4]

My soul is filled with Grattan.[†5]

Yours Miserably.
Her[†6] Maddened adorer.[†7]

Who is he[†8] — her husband[†9] — that he should possess that Being — Tell me — What has he done, to be so blest — Would nothing less satisfy his craving lust — Are there no legs but these — Is the world so narrow that he could find no other Wife! —

To MISS HANNAH MEREDITH, [30 NOVEMBER 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the day of his visit to Covent Garden to see Adelaide Kemble; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Miss Meredith.

Pray make my compliments to Miss Coutts, and say that I shall be most happy to dine at Roehampton on Thursday, when I will duly and conscientiously report, concerning Adelaide Kemble.[†1] I will return home at night — I should say, must — having a bore of German extraction,[†2] to breakfast with me in the morning. The way is very short, and the road very pleasant, though not so pleasant as remaining; which my inclination would lead me to prefer.

Always Believe me
(with much to say, about your note)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Meredith

To JOHN OVERS, 30 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth November 1841.

Dear Mr. Overs.

Before I answer your last, I have something to say which may be disposed of in a very few words.

Doctor Elliotson renders it quite clear to me that when you spoke to him about your having left the Theatre, you felt doubtful of having done quite right in your way of proceeding, and wanted the moral courage to tell him the whole Truth. What you did tell him was the Truth, I have no doubt, but you did not tell him all. Another time tell all, and you will find it best in the end.

I have no desire or intention to speak harshly upon this point, for I do not look upon it as a very serious or unnatural proceeding, and found upon it no accusation against you. Having noticed it, I have done with it.

I don't know where you discovered in my last note that I looked upon you as the subject of a moral deficiency which rendered you unfit to associate with gentlemen. Do you not think it probable that if I entertained any such opinion, I should have abstained from writing to you?

I have no quarrel with you, and want no submission from you. I hate it; have no right to exact it; and am, in my nature, repugnant to it. All I want is that for your own welfare and happiness, you should submit yourself, if I may use the expression, to yourself, and feel that you have acted foolishly. It is because I wish you to maintain a worthy independence, and because I respect the quality, that I am vexed when you mistake a wrong-headed, loud-tongued, vaunting demonstration, for a virtue which shrinks from such display, and lives in a man's heart; not upon his lips or the nib of his pen. There is a farce[†1] in which a stage-stricken footman breaks a plate or two at dinner time, and throwing himself into an attitude cries "I acknowledge it — I will pay the forfeit of my crime — lead me to the Scaffold!" That man might have written your letter to Mr. Macready, and no doubt would have assassinated Mr. Bryden for not being at home when he called upon him.

If you wish to see me before I go away, you can do so any Sunday but next Sunday, between Twelve and One. Let this matter rest where it is. It has been quite enough discussed, and had better be left alone for the future.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. A. Overs.

To MISS MYERS,[†3] 30 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thirtieth November 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Myers, and begs to inform her that Mr. Mantalini's companion in the cellar is certainly not his wife. The exact position she holds in relation to that gentleman, Mr. Dickens can only suspect.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE NOVEMBER 1841]

Summary and extract in F, III, i, 199. Date: near the close of November according to Forster.

Describing himself as thoroughly on his legs again, in the ordinary state on which he was wont to pride himself, bolt upright, staunch at the knees, a deep sleeper, a hearty eater, a good laugher; and nowhere a bit the worse, 'bating a little weakness now and then, and a slight nervousness at times.

December

To FRANCIS ROSS,[†1] 1 DECEMBER 1841

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1628 (1922); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1 Dec 41.

Postponing a trip for a week on account of the particularly national weather.[†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday Second December | 1841.

My Dear Macready.

I have not answered your kind note of last Sunday, really because I have not known how. I have so much pleasure and delight in your sympathy and approval, that I can't be warm enough on paper, and that's the Truth.[†3]

I should not write to you now, but to congratulate you most heartily upon your release from the fangs of Webster;[†4] not because I shall be able to see you in your proper sphere again before I go, or for any selfish reason, but because the only point that anxious friendship could have twisted into a doubt of your triumph from the first, is now removed. I fully and entirely believe that you will take the people up exactly where you left them when you closed Covent Garden, and that you will have no check or obstacle from the outset.

I tell you what I soberly believe — not what I wish. There is no sobriety in my wishes for you and yours, which are as boundless as my interest and affection.

Ever My Dear Macready
Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To JAMES ANDERSON,[†1] 2 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Library of Congress.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Second December 1841.

My Dear Anderson

Will you give me the pleasure of your company at Dinner on Sunday Week, the Twelfth, at a quarter past Six o'Clock? Pray do not imagine from this length of notice that we have a formal party; for I hold such things in unspeakable abhorrence.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J— Anderson Esquire.

To MRS S. C. HALL,[†2] 2 DECEMBER 1841

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday Second December 1841.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

I am exceedingly sorry to hear of your good husband's illness, and almost as sorry that you should think it necessary to apologize to me for any delay in sending Catlin,[†3] under such anxious circumstances.

I am greatly taken with him, and strongly interested in his descriptions. He is an honest, hearty, famous fellow; and I shake hands with him in every page.

Pray make my best remembrances to your spouse, and give him my earnest wishes for his speedy recovery.

Be careful in your choice of a Raven. Have an undeniable character with him from his last place. I have one, now, whose intelligence is scarcely beyond a fowl's. I have another, whose infancy and early youth were passed at a village alehouse in Yorkshire, who is a wonder — a paragon.[†1] I could tell you such things of him, as would make your hair stand on end. Nothing delights him so much as a drunken man — he loves to see human Nature in a state of degradation, and to have the superiority[†2] of Ravens asserted. At such time he is fearful in his Mephistophelean humour.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Hall.

To FRANCIS ALEXANDER,[†3] [?3] DECEMBER 1841

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: 2 Dec 41 was Thursday; CD was probably writing on Fri 3rd.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park, London.
Friday Second December 1841.

Dear Sir.

I answer your letter immediately, that it may be conveyed to you by the next packet; and briefly, because I hope to see you very soon.

My stay in Boston will be but a short one, as I am going on into the South. I shall be most happy to sit to you, however, and hold myself engaged to do so, directly on my arrival.[†1] I leave Liverpool on the Fourth of next month by the Britannia Steam Packet.

Your welcome communication, and all the other letters I have received from America, fill me with glad and cheerful anticipation. Trust me, that my heart warms towards the land, and that for every hearty greeting, I have as hearty a response.

There is no such clock![†2] If there were, I should be its owner. You and I and Mrs. Alexander have the same silent sorrow in not being able to possess it.

I thank you cordially for your frank and genial favor; and am

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Alexander Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [5] DECEMBER 1841*

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954; MS fragment (aa) Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: 4 Dec 41 was Saturday; clearly CD was writing on the 5th (see fns).

Sunday | Fourth December 1841

My Dear Mac

You have her[†3] in your mind this morning? Is she lovely, or no? Do you dine there?[†4] If you don't will you dine here? Are you disposed to walk? Shall I call on you?

[a]Weren't you closely stowed (oh happy stowage!) in the Talfourdian car, last night?[†5]

Answer these interrogations.

Ever Yours
GRATTAN[a†6]

To D. M. MOIR,[†1] 6 DECEMBER 1841†

MS Doheny Memorial Library, Camarillo, California.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Monday Sixth December 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I have been greatly pleased to hear from you; and am very proud to be ranked among that class of your admirers who are your private friends.

Let me thank you for the copy you have sent me of your very interesting and elegant Memoir of poor Galt.[†2] I have read it through; and it has impressed me very much.[†3]

For your hearty and cordial wishes, I thank you no less. I reciprocate them, I assure you, with unaffected sincerity and warmth of heart; and shake the hand you autographically extend to me, with a most emphatic squeeze.

[†a]I am exceedingly sorry to leave home, for my household Gods, like Charles Lambs[†4], "take a terrible deep root".[†5] But I look forward with a pleasure it would be hard to express, to seeing Washington Irving — So would you if you were going, I am sure. As I write his name and Lamb's, a crowd of passages from your books come flocking upon me, very much akin to both;[†6] and I feel, directly, that you love them as well as I do.

I shall only be six months gone, please God.[†a] My other halfyear of rest I mean to pass in England. There may be some railroad then — Heaven knows — which will tempt you to London.[†1] If I hear of it, I will subscribe my mite, that I may see you here. A very pleasant recollection of a very unpleasant night when we rode from Blackwood's to Edinburgh[†2] inclines me to believe that we could be quite happy together for a whole day, — even though it were the Twenty First of June.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to send a great many Scottish remembrances to yourself and Mrs. Moir.[†3] Adding as many more of my own, I am

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

D. M. Moir Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh Decr. 1841.

My Dear Macready.

Now that you are a Manager again, I shall write you epigrammatic notes.

Firstly. Will you dine with me next Saturday week, at a quarter past 6?

Secondly. Will you allow my brother Fred, to represent me in my free admission, while I am away? He is a very good fellow, and I should be glad to give him that great pleasure, and keep him out of harm's way at the same time.

Thirdly. Will you call for me one morning, as you go down to the Theatre. I feel its[†4] time I saw the Pit.[†5]

Affectionately Yours Ever
CD.[†6]
W. C. Macready Esquire

To LORD JEFFREY, [?8 DECEMBER 1841]*

MS Mr D. Cleghorn Thomson. Date: clearly CD's reply to the letter from Jeffrey asking if he was "surfeited with idleness yet", dated "Wedy."[†1] (probably 8 Dec, the first Wednesday after publication of the final No. of Master Humphrey).

[†2] I am not at all tired with idleness. It is delicious — if I can call that idleness which is full of busy preparation.[†3] I have not written a line since I penned the words "Master Humphrey's Clock has stopped for ever".[†4] I have had a few visions of things to be done, and they have been very pleasant. Otherwise I have done nothing but walk, and lounge about, and read drowsily, all day long. — What do you think of my reading the Curiosity Shop, all through?[†5] It deserves a note of interrogation as large as a lamp-post.

Always My Dear Lord Jeffrey
Yours affectionately and attached
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, 11 DECEMBER [1841]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: clearly 11 Dec 41 (a Saturday).

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Eleventh December.

My Dear Sir

I am sincerely obliged to you for so kindly thinking of me; and will call on you at the Banking House on Tuesday, at Three o'Clock. As I have a most dove-like innocence on the subject of American roads; and as my course may depend in many material respects upon the severity of the season; I think the best and shortest plan will be for me to have a Letter of credit on your correspondent at New York for eight hundred pounds. That will be a good central point, and if I should want to have any sum or sums lodged elsewhere, I presume they can readily arrange for me.

This is all subject to your opinion and kind advice, of which I shall have the benefit on Tuesday.

Meanwhile and always — with best remembrances to your family — believe me My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Marjoribanks Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 DECEMBER 1841]*

MS Mr Frederick J. Macartney. Date: probably the day before the appointment made with Marjoribanks in last; handwriting supports. Address: John Forster Esquire.

Devonshire T. | Monday Night.

My Dear Forster.

I overlooked this morning an appointment with Marjoribanks tomorrow at 3. When I leave him, I will call on you. Perhaps you'll dine here?

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 DECEMBER 1841

MS Morgan Library. Address: Free | Miss Coutts | Roehampton | Surrey.

Devonshire Terrace | December Fourteenth 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I am sincerely obliged to you for your kind Invitation,[†1] but I am obliged, most reluctantly, to deny myself the pleasure of accepting it.

Every day this week I am engaged. As I shall have only a fortnight more when next Sunday comes, I have "registered a vow" (in imitation of Mr. O Connell)[†2] to pass those fourteen days at home, and not to be tempted forth. Having withstood your note and acted so manfully in this trying situation, which is a kind of reversal of Eve and the Serpent, I feel that I can be adamant to everybody else. This is the only comfort I have in the penmanship of these words.

You will allow me, notwithstanding, to call upon you one morning before I go, to say good by'e, and to take your orders for any article of a portable nature in my new line of business — such as a phial of Niagara water,[†1] a neat tomahawk, or a few scales of the celebrated Sea Serpent,[†2] which would perhaps be an improvement on writing paper, for Miss Meredith's pillows.[†3]

I beg my compliments to her, and am sincerely

And Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To [MURDO] YOUNG,[†4] 14 DECEMBER 1841

Extract in George D. Smith catalogue No. 165; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 14 Dec 41. Address: "Micado" Young in catalogue; obviously a misreading of Murdo.

Thanking him for the beautiful copy you have sent me of your Tragedy.[†5] ... I am living just now in a perpetual state of Weighing Anchor.

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK, [MID-DECEMBER 1841]

Extract in New York Evening Post, 4 Jan 42. Date: According to the New York Evening Post, Clark had received the letter "by the last steamer"; it therefore presumably went either on the Garrick, which left Liverpool for New York 14 Dec, or — more probably — on the Royal Sovereign, which left for New York 16 Dec.

Saying that after a few days in Boston he will be visiting New York. My design is to spend but little time in these two cities, but to proceed to the south, as far as Charleston. Our stay will be six months; during which time, I must see as much as can be seen in such a space, of the country and the people.

You make me very proud and happy by anticipation, in thinking of the number of friends I shall find; but I cannot describe to you the glow into which I rise, when I think of the wonders that await us, and all the interest I am sure I shall have in your mighty land.

To JOHN FORSTER, 15 DECEMBER 1841

Letter summarized by Forster before destruction, MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC); dated Devonshire Terrace, 15 Dec 41.

Mentioning a letter from Spencer Hall[†1] about The Glory and Shame of England[†2] not being by an American.

To SAMUEL JOSEPH, 15 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Fifteenth December 1841.

Dear Sir

I have not, as you may suppose, much time to spare just now; but rather than put you to any serious inconvenience, I will sit to you three times next week.[†3] And unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will come to you on Monday at Twelve o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Joseph Esquire.

To MARY TALFOURD,[†1] 16 DECEMBER 1841

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth December 1841.

My Dear Mary.

I should be delighted to come and dine with you on your birthday, and to be as merry as I wish you to be always; but as I am going, within a very few days afterwards, a very long distance from home, and shall not see any of my children for six long months, I have made up my mind to pass all that week at home for their sakes — just as you would like your Papa and Mamma to spend all the time they could possibly spare, with you, if they were about to make a dreary voyage to America; which is what I am going to do myself.

But although I cannot come to see you on that day, you may be sure I shall not forget that it is your birth day; and that I shall drink your health and many happy returns, in a glass of wine filled as full as it will hold. And I shall dine at half past five myself, so that we may both be drinking our wine at the same time, and I shall tell my Mary (for I have got a daughter of that name — but she is a very small one as yet) to drink your health too; and we shall try and make believe that you are here, or that we are in Russell Square, which is the best thing we can do, I think, under the circumstances.

You are growing up so fast, that by the time I come home again, I expect you will be almost a woman; and in a very few years we shall be saying to each other, "don't you remember what the birthdays used to be in Russell Square?" — and "how strange it seems" — and "how quickly Time passes" — and all that sort of thing, you know. But I shall always be very glad to be asked on your birthday, and to come if you'll let me, and to send my love to you and to wish that you may live to be very old and very happy, which I do now, with all my heart.

Being always | My Dear Mary
Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Talfourd.

To LORD BROUGHAM, 17 DECEMBER [1841]*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: endorsed "1841 Mr. C. Dickens".

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Friday Evening | Seventeenth December[†2]

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Lord Brougham, and begs to say that he is disengaged next Monday, or any day in the following week (that is, the week after Christmas Day) that may suit Lord Brougham's convenience.[†1]

To LADY HOLLAND, [?17 DECEMBER 1841]

Mention in Lady Holland to CD, 25 Dec 41 (see fn). Date: probably early in the same week.

Saying that he could not come to see her on the following Wednesday evening [22 Dec] but hoped he might call some other day, and asking for an introduction to Lord Morpeth.[†2]

To JOHN ROSS,[†3] 20 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth December 1841.

Dear John Ross.

I had an appointment of some duration, so early this morning, that I was obliged to go out and come home again, before I could answer your note. Will the inclosed do? If not, I shall be at home between half past ten and half past eleven tomorrow morning, and from four to half past four in the afternoon; and shall be delighted to amend it in any manner you may point out.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Ross Esquire.

To JOHN ROSS, 20 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park
Twentieth December 1841.

My Dear Ross.

I wish I had been at home when you called yesterday; and I wish you had mentioned in the note you sent afterwards, what country paper it is of which you desire to become the Editor,[†1] and who are the proprietors; as I should have then been enabled to address them personally on your behalf. Believe me that any recommendation I can possibly make to them, is as heartily at your service as it is thoroughly deserved by you.

It is needless for me to tell you that I know you to be a man, of all others qualified for such an office, by your long newspaper experience, your education, conduct, abilities, and position in society. Only let me know how I can best convey this information, and much more, to the gentlemen whom you seek to propitiate, and I will do so in the most earnest words I can possibly employ. I cannot do more than justice to my earnest feeling in the matter, and my strong conviction that you are the person they want.

Point out any way in which I can serve you in your endeavour to attain your object; and I will promptly exert myself. And believe me that I am warmly interested in your success, and ready to promote it, heart and hand; not merely for the love of you, but for the love of the right cause[†2] which I know you will serve well (no man better) if you get this opportunity.

Always My Dear Ross | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Ross Esquire

To CHARLES SMITHSON, 20 DECEMBER 1841

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth December 1841.

My Dear Smithson.

The Pie was no sooner brought into my room yesterday evening, than I fainted away.

Topping put his shoulder out, in carrying it from the waggon to the hall-door; and John is in the hospital with a damaged spine — having rashly attempted to lift it.

There never was such a Pie! We are mad to know what it's made of, but haven't the courage to cut it. Indeed we haven't a knife large enough for the purpose. We think of hiring Fletcher to eat it. We sit and stare at it in a dull astonishment, and grow dizzy in the contemplation of its enormous magnitude.

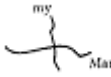
It prevents my writing at any length, as my faculties are absorbed in crust. I have a shadowy recollection that I owe Mrs. Smithson a large sum of money,[†1] and that it preys upon my mind. Fred was to have told me the amount, but he forgot it on his way home. I seem to remember, too, that you paid for THE Raven[†2] — Good God! — if you could only hear him talk, and see him break the windows!

You will be glad to hear — I can only hint at his perfections — that he disturbs the church service, and that his life is threatened by the Beadle. Maclise says he knows he can read and write. I quite believe it; and I go so far as to place implicit reliance on his powers of cyphering.

Ease my mind, or ask Mrs. Smithson to ease it, on the subject of my liabilities. I am going to send her two books,[†3] and will remit (if you or she will put me in a condition to do so) at the same time.

Kate joins me in hearty wishes that you and yours (including "beauteous Bill")[†4] may enjoy very many happy Christmases, and New Years.

†aSince writing the above, I have looked at the Pie, ~~and~~†5 — I am very weak



†a

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [22] DECEMBER 1841

Envelope only, MS Berg Collection. Address: The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington. PM 22 Dec 41.

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 23 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third December 1841.

Do you remember that you promised me a letter to Sir Charles Bagot?†1 And will you let me have it, before the end of next week? And will you let me know your movements; and whether I am to shake hands with you before I leave England on the second day of the New Year, in the Flesh, or in the Spirit?

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Free | Miss Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Twenty Third December | 1841.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I am truly indebted to you for your kind note.†2 I had intended coming to Roehampton on Sunday; but having this timely information of your movements, I will call in Stratton Street on that day, shortly after Two o'Clock, to say good by'e.†3

As you make no mention of your cold, I hope and conclude it is better.

With much pleasure in the sight of your hand writing, I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 23 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third December 1841.

My Dear Hogarth

I don't know how I came to make the mistake; but in my last to you, I proceeded on the notion that tomorrow would be Christmas Day. Now as it is not, and I shall see Chapman and Hall tonight,[†1] I think it will be best for you to come here (if you can) very soon after the receipt of this tomorrow morning.

Affecy. always

CD.

To MISS CATHERINE HUTTON, 23 DECEMBER 1841

MS Mr Robert K. Black.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Third December 1841

My Dear Miss Hutton.

I don't know why your last letter to me should have caused you any uneasiness, but I do know that it gave me much pleasure; and I am very glad to have this opportunity of telling you so.

Thank you, heartily, for the Purse.[†2] I had been debating within myself whether I should carry one in America (I never do in England) when the opportune arrival of your pretty present, carried the question by an enormous majority.

The merriest of Christmases and the happiest of New Years to you! I hope to carry you easily through a dozen New stories, at least.[†3]

Always Believe me
With true regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Catherine Hutton.

To ROBERT OWEN,[†4] 27 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh December 1841.

My Dear Sir.

Some time ago, you sent me an interesting book of which you are the Author.[†1] I forgot to thank you for it; and I take shame to myself for having done so. Accept this tardy ackowledgement, and believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Owen Esquire.

To SAMUEL JOSEPH, 27 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Messrs Young & Sossen Inc.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh December 1841

My Dear Sir.

I regret to say — and I would not say it unless I were forced — that I cannot sit to you any more before I leave England. I have made a list of my indispensable engagements, this morning; and I find that every hour of my time, this week, is fully occupied.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Joseph Esquire

To FRANCIS ROSS, 27 DECEMBER 1841

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Feb 1922; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 27 Dec 41.

Making an appointment.

To LORD BROUGHAM, 27 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Seventh December | 1841.

Dear Lord Brougham.

I shall be at home on Friday Morning, from twelve o'Clock until Two. If it should be inconvenient to you to leave home at that time, I shall be happy to come to you. Pray have no delicacy in requesting me to do so, as it would not put me out of the way at all.

Always | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Honorable | The Lord Brougham.

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 DECEMBER [1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 27 Dec was Monday in 1841; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace.
Monday Twenty Seventh December

My Dear Macready.

God bless you and yours, and all you do. Health and happiness for many years, and all the merriment and peace I wish you.

You are at the head of my audience, as you know. Here are my latest pieces.[†1]

Ever Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire
I am so excited about tonight, that I can do nothing.[†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 DECEMBER 1841

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Twenty Eighth December | 1841.

My Dear Macready.

This note is about the saloon. I make it as brief as possible. Read it when you have time. As we were the first experimentalists last night, you will be glad to know what it wants.[†1]

1st. The refreshments are preposterously dear. A glass of wine is a shilling, and it ought to be sixpence.

2ndly. They are served out by the wrong sort of people — two most uncomfortable drabs of women, and a dirty man with his hat on.

3rdly. There ought to be a boxkeeper to ring a bell or give some other notice of the commencement of the overture to the afterpiece. The promenaders were in a perpetual fret and worry to get back again.

And fourthly and most important of all: — if the plan is ever to succeed, you must have some notice up to the effect that as it is now a place of resort for ladies, gentlemen are requested not to lounge there in their hats and great coats. No ladies will go there, though the conveniences should be ten thousand times greater, while the sort of swells who have been used to kick their heels there, do so in the old sort of way. I saw this expressed last night, more strongly than I can tell you.

Hearty congratulations on the brilliant triumph. — I have always expected one, as you know, but nobody could have imagined the reality.

Always My Dear Macready
Affectionately Yours
CD.

W. C. Macready Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [28 DECEMBER 1841]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly same day as last — CD having in the meantime received Macready's note of 28 Dec (see To Macready, 27 Dec, fn).

Devonshire Terrace

My Dear Macready.

Hurrah — ah — ah — ah — ah!!!

I will come round after the comedy.[†1] — I have already despatched a letter to you at Drury Lane, per post, concerning the Saloon. The suggestions, such as they are (they are very few) are all important to its success.

Ever Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 28 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Twenty Eighth[†2] Decr. 1841.

My Dear Mac

Call at the Parthenon for me, not later than five and twenty Minutes afore 7.

Faithfully Yours always
CD

To ROBERT KEELEY, [?29 DECEMBER 1841]

Mention in Keeley to CD, Dec 41 (see fn). Date: shortly before CD's departure for America; possibly the day after Keeley's and his wife's appearance together in Every One Has his Fault, Drury Lane, 28 Dec.

Praising the Keeleys' talents;[†3] mentioning that he had been ill, and was shortly leaving for America.[†4]

To FREDERICK SALMON, 30 DECEMBER 1841*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Night December Thirtieth 1841

My Dear Salmon.

Here are two books which complete your set, so far.[†1] I was sorry to miss you to-day, and will come down to-morrow morning at half-past ten.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Salmon Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [? DECEMBER 1841]*

MS (fragment only) Private. Date: probably shortly before leaving for America.

Let me thank you for your note, and your kind wishes. Be assured that I shall endeavour to deserve them, by doing all in my power to come home in safety.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 1841

Extract in George D. Smith catalogue, 1901; MS 1 p.; dated London, 1841.

Concerning Yorkshire dialect.

If you could send me the dirty scrap of print[†1] back tonight you would oblige me heartily.

To JOSEPH [HAYDN],[†2] [?1841]

Text from N, I, 363. Date: CD's imprecise "Monday Night" (written to a stranger) suggests not later than 1841. Address: N's "Haydon" is almost certainly a mistake.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My dear Sir,

Will you allow me to appoint next Wednesday Morning at the hour you name? I shall not be disengaged in the morning until then.†3

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Addenda

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 1 APRIL 1840*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | April 1st. 1840.

Dear Count D'Orsay

I have a dim idea of lighting my small torch at the nightly fires of Wolverhampton†1 — and I cannot tell you how sorry I am that I have arranged to go to Birmingham with this view on Friday next, and to remain there or in the neighbourhood until the Monday following.

I am afraid you will be responsible if I look upon furnaces and coal pits with a jaundiced eye, for you put me out of humour with the expedition. Indeed if I had had your note one day earlier, I would have deferred it to another opportunity.

I beg my compliments to Lady Blessington, and am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE BEADNELL, 26 JULY [1840]*

MS Douglas Library, Queen's University, Ontario. Date: 26 July was Sunday in 1840; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday 26th. July.

Dear Sir.

I go so very seldom to the Parthenon, and have so neglected my duties as a Member of the Committee (which I have never yet been able to attend) that I feel a great delicacy in proposing any candidates, and cannot therefore comply with your request.

Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Beadnell Esquire

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 8 JULY 1841*

MS Bodleian Library.

Loch. Earn Head. | Thursday Eighth July 1841.

Dear Sirs.

With the view of having a whole day at Abbotsford and Dryburgh Abbey, I have altered my plan slightly, and arranged to be at Glasgow on Tuesday. I write a hasty note to tell you this — that you may write to me accordingly. Copy and subjects by tomorrow's post.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 13 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Thirteenth December | 1841.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I am sincerely obliged to you, both for your beautiful present†1 and your kind note; the latter has a most welcome and acceptable quality of heartiness which delights and does me good.

I need hardly say that I shall be more than pleased to give you any opportunity you require for the completion of that likeness. I am sorry to say, though, that every day this week I am engaged to dinner; and as I shall only have a fortnight left when this week is over, I have "registered a vow"†2 to spend those fourteen days at home, both because I want to hold on tight by my household Gods to the last, and on account of my health which I am afraid may suffer from too much dining. Now, any morning this week, at any hour you name, I am wholly at your service, and on receiving due notice from you, will repair to Gore House and sit there as long as you like.†3

To save you further trouble in the matter of my head, I have directed my servant to wait for an answer to this. It shall be forwarded to you with care, and with the proper side upwards, whenever you may appoint.

With a most sincere and unaffected pleasure in your cordiality and friendship, always believe me Dear Count D'Orsay.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY BURNETT, [?DECEMBER 1841]

Extract quoted in Henry Burnett to F. G. Kitton, 19 Dec 88 (MS Huntington Library).[†4] Date: probably between 30 Nov 41, when CD saw Adelaide Kemble in Norma (To Maclise, 29 Nov), and 4 Jan 42 when he sailed for America.

Adelaide Kemble is much talked about — I think her desperately unpleasant — almost repulsive.

Volume III

1842 – 1843

1842

January

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1842†

MS Benoliel Collection.

186 Strand[†2] | First January 1842.

My Dear Sirs.

In order that we may have on paper, a clear understanding of our position in reference to your advances and my receipts, on account of the American book[†3] and the Monthly Work we are to commence in November,[†4] I state the matter here, in regular array.

On account of the American book, I have received in all £885,[†5] which is to be deducted from the first proceeds consequent on its publication.[†6]

On account of the Monthly Payments agreed upon between us, in reference to the New Work, you have paid into Coutts's, the sum of £800.[†7] Over and above this amount, I wish you, if you please, to make, while I am away, such payments as I have mentioned on the other side; and when I return, the balance can be struck between us.[†8]

In reference to these last mentioned payments I should add that you will receive, through the hands of my brother Frederick,[†1] one hundred and five guineas at the end of March, and one hundred and five guineas at the end of June;[†2] which you will set off against them, and duly give me credit for.

As a security for these advances, you hold three policies effected by me on my life, with the Britannia Life Assurance Company.[†3]

[†a]Having disposed of the business part of this letter, I should not feel at ease on leaving England, if I did not tell you once more with my whole heart, that your conduct to me, on this and on all other occasions, has ever been honorable, manly, and generous; and that I have felt it a solemn duty, in the event of any accident happening to me while I am away, to place this testimony upon record. It forms part of a Will I have made for the security of my children;— for I wish them to know it, when they are capable of understanding your worth and my appreciation of it.

Always believe me | Faithfully and truly Yours[†a]

CHARLES DICKENS

(Over)

The payments referred to, to be made while I am away, are the weekly bills of my children and servants, certified as correct by my brother Frederick; ten pounds a month for the rent of their lodgings; the servants' wages; and the rent and taxes of my own house. Other payments may be rendered necessary by some omission of mine or by unlooked-for circumstances, but for whatever you pay, and for everything you pay, I request that you will take my brother Frederick's acknowledgement as mine, and that my executors and legal representatives will in every case consider it a sufficient receipt and discharge, and a proof of the correctness of your claims in these respects.

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS MITTON,[†4] 1 JANUARY 1842

MS Huntington Library. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire (on flap of wrapper).

New Year's Day | 1842

My Dear Mitton

You will be with me at 5 of course? I merely brought these papers,[†5] that you might have not[†6] the inconvenience of stuffed pockets.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | First January 1842

My Dear Maclise.

Your gloom throws a shade upon our journey in the very outset. I will say nothing of sympathy: for between such friends as we are, it is needless.[†2]

I cannot go away, my dear fellow, without shaking hands with you. Between 2 and 3 to day, I must come and do so.

Always Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To EDWARD EVERETT,[†3] 1 JANUARY 1842*

MS Massachusetts Historica lSociety. [[sic]]

Devonshire Terrace | New Year's Night | 1842.

My Dear Sir.

If I can thank you for your kindness and attention,[†4] let me do so.

Always Yours faithfully & obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Everett Esquire

To LORD JEFFREY,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1842

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | New Year's Night 1842

My Dear Lord Jeffrey

Write you from Boston! I think so.[†2]—I can say anything but good bye; and that, not because I have anything about me but hope and trust, but because I love my friends dearly.[†3]

God bless you! | The earnest prayer of yours ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS M'IAN,[†4] [1 JANUARY 1842]

Text from Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 56 (1907).

My Dear Mrs. McIan

The enclosed book[†5] belongs of right to you for you have beautifully perpetuated it.[†1] You who have done so much for the love of the fiction will accept this volume I hope, for the sake of its author.

Ever believe me | Faithfully and Truly Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. McIan

To MRS CHARLES SMITHSON,[†2] 1 JANUARY 1842*

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor.

Devonshire Terrace | New Year's night 1842.
Just going.

My Dear Mrs. Smithson

God bless you—best regards to Smithson,[†3] and love to the Beauteous.[†4] Think of us sometimes, and accept the inclosed[†5] for my poor sake.

Always Faithfully & truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Smithson

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH,[†6] 1 JANUARY [1842]

Extract in unidentified catalogue cutting, Dickens House; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, New Year's Night—1842 on reference to the Sanatorium.

Make me a Vice President[†7] and make Talfourd[†8] and Macready[†9] the same on my responsibility.[†10] All good attend you! ... Think of me sometimes and wish me back again.

To LORD BROUGHAM,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1842*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool.
Monday Third January 1842.

My Dear Lord Brougham.

I quite forgot to say to you the other day, thus much.—If any proposition for a book to be published by the Society,[†2] should be made through Chapman and Hall by Mr. Hogarth (my father in law)[†3] at any time during my absence, will you kindly bear in mind my having observed to you that he has written very admirable Works of Instruction in Music and History; and is a gentleman of varied and extensive information?[†4] You will remember his name by the great painter's.

The Ship weighs anchor tomorrow, at Two o'Clock. That is the best excuse I have for troubling you; and I plead it in extenuation.

Dear Lord Brougham I am always
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Brougham.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 3 JANUARY 1842*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Free | Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | London.

Adelphi Hotel. Liverpool. | Monday Third January 1842.

My Dear Fred.

We came down here in great comfort and in good spirits. We reached this house before 7. Alfred[†5] we left at Birmingham.[†6] He talked of coming here to dinner, but has not arrived yet. Fanny[†7] came early this morning,[†8] stops all night, and sees us sail tomorrow.

Tomorrow the Britannia lies a mile or so off, to be out of the way of the shipping, and in the stream. We go out to her in a small steamer, at One. She sails directly we get aboard. The passengers[†9] friends accompany them in the small steamer aforesaid, and return when the anchor is weighed. They talk of seventy, but I don't believe it.[†1] They expect, too, a very fine passage. God send they may be right.

Our cabin is something immensely smaller than you can possibly picture to yourself. Neither of the portmanteaus could by any mechanical contrivance be got into it. When the door is open, you can't turn round. When it's shut you can't put on a clean shirt, or take off a dirty one. When its[†2] day, it's dark. When it's night, it's cold. The Saloon is incredibly less than that of "The Fame. Capt. Corbyn".[†3] Anyone of the beds, with pillows, sheet, and blankets complete, might be sent from one place to another through the Post Office, with only a double stamp. I believe it's the best, notwithstanding, both in respect of the motion, and its contiguity to the lady's cabin, where Anne[†4] will be. That is really a comfortable room, larger than the breakfast room in Devonshire Terrace; well-lighted, sofa'd, mirrored, and so forth. From it's[†2] door to our door, is literally but a step; and not a wide one either.

Captain Hewitt[†5] was not on board; and all hands were very busy, stowing away meat and greens, and an enormous cow, for milk. The stewardess[†6] is a Scotch woman, and has crossed the Atlantic seventeen times. She is quite young withal, and buxom enough.

Did I give you the two receipts for Sir John Wilson, with blank dates, one in March and one in June? If not, write receipts yourself at the proper time.[†7]

Forster will be home early on Wednesday morning, and will give you full particulars of our departure. Kiss the dear, beloved darlings many times for Kate and me. (I needn't ask you to take care of them)—and always believe me

My Dear Fred
Your truly affectionate brother
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire.

Kate's face is better. She is in glorious spirits.[†8]

Fletcher[†9] is here.

Thompson[†10] has not been telegraphed, as yet.

Fanny stays all night, and sees us off tomorrow.

I forgot to say that I have seen Elliotson,[†1] who is prepared for any summons from you, at any time of the night or day.[†2] Don't trust Morgan[†3] too far. You know my love for Macready. Stick to him. Mind nobody else.[†4]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [3] JANUARY 1842*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Free | Daniel Maclise Esquire. R.A.| &c &c | 14 Russell Place | Fitzroy Square | London. Date: Monday was 3 Jan; letter postmarked 4 Jan.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool. | Monday Second January 1842.

My Dear Mac.

You know I try to believe that the main usefulness and purpose of Death, is to make us fonder of each other, and to bind us together the more closely during the brief term of our existence here. I never felt the Truth of this, more, than when we parted t'other day.

I shall be delighted to hear—when I do hear from you in those foreign latitudes—that your Home is restored to its former peace: that your father[†5] has become resigned and happy: and that this shadow in a world of shadows has passed away. Omit nothing. Tell me everything you can think of.[†6] Every word will be a new link to those great chain cables which moor me to the friends I love.

I wish, Mac—I wish, and I must say it, though you be never so gloomy when you get this—that you could conceive, and from personal inspection were in a condition to understand, the wild absurdity of our "cabin". I don't know what to compare it with. A small box at a coffee room is much too big. So is a hackney coach. So is a chariot cab. It is more like one of those cabs where you get in at the back;[†7] but I think you could put on a shirt in one of those: and you certainly couldn't in this chamber. There are two horse-hair seats in it, fixed to the wall— one opposite the other. Either would serve for a kettle holder. The beds (one above the other of course) might both be sent to you per post, with one additional stamp. The pillows are no thicker than crumpets; and the sheets and blankets are too ridiculous to write of.

Our luggage is all aboard. They were "taking in the Milk" when we [were] there—an enormous cow! Bread, boxes, greens, and bullocks-heads for soup, were strewn about the deck. The grand impression was the smallness of the vessel. The Saloon is nothing like that of a Ramsgate boat—there!!

How often have we wished that you were here! How often shall we wish the same thing, when we all go out together tomorrow in a small steamer, to board the 'Merrikin'[†1] which[†2] will be then (but was not to day) lying out, a mile or so off, in the middle of the stream! When we come home again—when we do—if you and Forster are only at Liverpool, and only come alongside in the Pilot's boat, I shall never know greater happiness.

God bless you a hundred times. At two tomorrow, the Atlantic will be before us. Think of us then, and many times afterwards. And always believe me, My Dear Mac

Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?3 JANUARY 1842]

Mention in postscript to next. Date: probably 3 Jan, since not part of To Chapman & Hall, 1 Jan, and on 2 Jan CD was travelling to Liverpool.

To THOMAS MITTON, 3 JANUARY 1842†

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool, | Monday Third January 1842

My Dear Mitton

This is a short note, but I will fulfil the adage, and make it a merry one.

We came down in great comfort. Our luggage is now well aboard. Anything so utterly and monstrously absurd as the size of our cabin, no gentleman of England who lives at home at ease,[†1] can for a moment imagine. A water closet of that size would be something too ridiculous to think of. Neither of the Portmanteaus would go into it.—There!

These Cunard packets are not very large, you know, actually, but the quantity of sleeping berths makes them much smaller, so that the Saloon is not nearly as large as in one of the Ramsgate boats. The lady's cabin is so close to ours that I could knock the door open without getting off something they call my bed, but which I believe to be a muffin, beaten flat. This is a great comfort, for it is an excellent room (the only good one in the Ship); and if there be only one other lady besides Kate, as the Stewardess thinks, I hope I shall be able to sit there, very often.

They talk of seventy passengers, but I can't think there will be so many. They talk besides (which is even more to the purpose) of a very fine passage; having had a noble one, this time last year. God send it so! We are in the best spirits, and full of hope. I was dashed for a moment when I saw our "Cabin"; but I got over that, directly, and laughed so much at its ludicrous proportions, that you might have heard me all over the ship.

God bless you! Write to me by the first opportunity. I will do the like by you. And always believe me, your old and faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]I have written Chapman and Hall to give you £10 for Augustus's[†2] schooling,[†3] on your application to them. Good bye again.[†a]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 3 JANUARY 1842*

MS Private.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool. | Monday Third January 1842.

My Dear Mr. [ ]

Many thanks to you for your letters. My children live at No. 25 Osnaburgh Street.

Mrs. Dickens joins me in kindest regards and farewells.

Always believe me
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John [ ][†1] Esquire

To MR WEBB,[†2] 3 JANUARY 1842*

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mr. Webb.

Adelphi Hotel | January Third, 1842

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Webb; and is greatly obliged to him for his attention, and the trouble he has taken.

To JOHN FORSTER,[†3] [17 JANUARY 1842]

Extract in F, III, ii, 201-3. Date: 17 Jan according to Forster. From the Britannia, off Newfoundland.

CD describes their stormy passage, the hurricane which blew throughout the night of Mon 10 Jan, and the steamer's behaviour in it. [†4]

For two or three hours we gave it up as a lost thing; and with many thoughts of you, and the children, and those others who are dearest to us, waited quietly for the worst. I never expected to see the day again, and resigned myself to God as well as I could.[†5] It was a great comfort to think of the earnest and devoted friends we had left behind, and to know that the darlings would not want.

We have 86 passengers; and such a strange collection of beasts never was got together upon the sea, since the days of the Ark. I have never been in the saloon since the first day; the noise, the smell, and the closeness being quite intolerable. I have only been on deck once!—and then I was surprised and disappointed at the smallness of the panorama. The sea, running as it does and has done, is very stupendous, and viewed from the air or some great height would be grand no doubt. But seen from the wet and rolling decks, in this weather and these circumstances, it only impresses one giddily and painfully. I was very glad to turn away, and come below again.[†6]

I have established myself, from the first, in the ladies' cabin[†1]—you remember it? I'll describe its other occupants, and our way of passing the time, to you.

First, for the occupants. Kate, and I, and Anne—when she is out of bed, which is not often. A queer little Scotch body, a Mrs. P—,[†2] whose husband is a silversmith in New York. He married her at Glasgow three years ago, and bolted the day after the wedding; being (which he had not told her) heavily in debt. Since then she has been living with her mother; and she is now going out under the protection of a male cousin, to give him a year's trial. If she is not comfortable at the expiration of that time, she means to go back to Scotland again. A Mrs. B—, about 20 years old, whose husband is on board with her. He is a young Englishman domiciled in New York, and by trade (as well as I can make out) a woollen-draper. They have been married a fortnight. A Mr. and Mrs. C—, marvellously fond of each other, complete the catalogue. Mrs. C— I have settled, is a publican's daughter, and Mr. C— is running away with her, the till, the time-piece off the bar mantel-shelf, the mother's gold watch from the pocket at the head of the bed; and other miscellaneous property. The women are all pretty; unusually pretty. I never saw such good faces together, anywhere.

Apropos of rolling, I have forgotten to mention that in playing whist[†3] we are obliged to put the tricks in our pockets, to keep them from disappearing altogether; and that five or six times in the course of every rubber we are all flung from our seats, roll out at different doors, and keep on rolling until we are picked up by stewards. This has become such a matter of course, that we go through it with perfect gravity; and when we are bolstered up on our sofas again, resume our conversation or our game at the point where it was interrupted.

As for news, we have more of that than you would think for. One man lost fourteen pounds at vingt-un in the saloon[†4] yesterday, or another got drunk before dinner was over, or another was blinded with lobster sauce spilt over him by the steward, or another had a fall on deck and fainted. The ship's cook was drunk yesterday morning (having got at some salt-water-damaged whiskey), and the captain ordered the boatswain to play upon him with the hose of the fire engine until he roared for mercy—which he didn't get; for he was sentenced to look out, for four hours at a stretch for four nights running, without a great coat, and to have his grog stopped. Four dozen plates were broken at dinner. One steward fell down the cabin-stairs with a round of beef, and injured his foot severely. Another steward fell down after him, and cut his eye open. The baker's taken ill: so is the pastry-cook. A new man, sick to death, has been required to fill the place of the latter officer, and has been dragged out of bed and propped up in a little house upon deck, between two casks, and ordered (the captain standing over him) to make and roll out pie-crust; which he protests, with tears in his eyes, it is death to him in his bilious state to look at. Twelve dozen of bottled porter has got loose upon deck, and the bottles are rolling about distractedly, over-head. Lord Mulgrave[†1] (a handsome fellow, by the bye, to look at, and nothing but a good 'un to go) laid a wager with twenty-five other men last night, whose berths, like his, are in the fore-cabin, which can only be got at by crossing the deck, that he would reach his cabin first. Watches were set by the captain's, and they sallied forth, wrapped up in coats and storm caps. The sea broke over the ship so violently, that they were five and twenty minutes holding on by the handrail at the starboard paddle-box, drenched to the skin by every wave, and not daring to go on or come back, lest they should be washed overboard. News! A dozen murders in town wouldn't interest us half as much.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 JANUARY 1842]

Extract in F, III, ii, 203-5. Date: 21 Jan according to Forster (continuation of letter begun 17 Jan). From the Britannia, in the Bay of Fundy.

We were running into Halifax-harbour on Wednesday night, with little wind and a bright moon; had made the light at its outer entrance, and given the ship in charge to the pilot; were playing our rubber, all in good spirits (for it had been comparatively smooth for some days, with tolerably dry decks and other unusual comforts), when suddenly the ship STRUCK! A rush upon deck followed of course. The men (I mean the crew! think of this) were kicking off their shoes and throwing off their jackets preparatory to swimming ashore; the pilot was beside himself; the passengers dismayed; and everything in the most intolerable confusion and hurry. Breakers were roaring ahead; the land within a couple of hundred yards; and the vessel driving upon the surf, although her paddles were worked backwards, and everything done to stay her course. It is not the custom of steamers, it seems, to have an anchor ready. An accident occurred in getting ours over the side; and for half an hour we were throwing up rockets, burning blue lights, and firing signals of distress, all of which remained unanswered, though we were so close to the shore that we could see the waving branches of the trees. All this time, as we veered about, a man was heaving the lead every two minutes; the depths of water constantly decreasing; and nobody self-possessed but Hewitt. They let go the anchor at last, got out a boat, and sent her ashore with the fourth officer, the pilot, and four men aboard, to try and find out where we were. The pilot had no idea; but Hewitt put his little finger upon a certain part of the chart, and was as confident of the exact spot (though he had never been there in his life) as if he had lived there from infancy. The boat's return about an hour afterwards proved him to be quite right.[†1] We had got into a place called the Eastern-passage, in a sudden fog and through the pilot's folly. We had struck upon a mud-bank, and driven into a perfect little pond, surrounded by banks and rocks and shoals of all kinds: the only safe speck in the place. Eased by this report, and the assurance that the tide was past the ebb, we turned in at three o'clock in the morning, to lie there all night.

CD describes their landing at Halifax on 20 Jan.

Then, sir, comes a breathless man who has been already into the ship and out again, shouting my name as he tears along. I stop, arm in arm with the little doctor[†2] whom I have taken ashore for oysters. The breathless man introduces himself as The Speaker of the house of assembly;[†1] will drag me away to his house; and will have a carriage and his wife sent down for Kate, who is laid up with a hideously swoln face.[†2] Then he drags me up to the Governor's house (Lord Falkland[†3] is the governor), and then Heaven knows where; concluding with both houses of parliament, which happen to meet for the session that very day, and are opened by a mock speech from the throne delivered by the governor, with one of Lord Grey's sons[†4] for his aide-de-camp, and a great host of officers about him. I wish you could have seen the crowds cheering the inimitable[†5] in the streets. I wish you could have seen judges, law-officers, bishops, and law-makers welcoming the inimitable. I wish you could have seen the inimitable shown to a great elbow-chair by the Speaker's throne, and sitting alone in the middle of the floor of the house of commons, the observed of all observers,[†6] listening with exemplary gravity to the queerest speaking possible, and breaking in spite of himself into a smile as he thought of this commencement to the Thousand and One stories in reserve for home and Lincoln's-inn fields and Jack Straw's-castle.—Ah, Forster! when I do come back again!——

To T. C. GRATTAN,[†7] 22 JANUARY 1842†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: T. C. Grattan Esquire | 11 Franklin Street.

Tremont House.[†8] | Saturday Night January 22nd. 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I have received your kind note with great pleasure, and shall be delighted to shake hands with you. I regret that we cannot dine with you tomorrow, for Lord

Mulgrave (who goes on to Montreal on Monday Morning to rejoin his regiment) is with us, and we have entered into a solemn league and covenant to dine alone together, after the [†a]fatigues and perils of a most tempestuous passage.[†a] But I hope you will give us another opportunity of enjoying your hospitality.

Mrs. Dickens begs to be commended to Mrs. Grattan. So do I. I look forward to seeing you sometime tomorrow, and am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. C. Grattan Esquire.

To FREDERICK A. WHITWELL,[†1] 22 JANUARY [1842]*

MS Maine Historical Society. Address: Fredk. A. Whitwell Esquire | 48 Chesnut[†2] Street. Date: CD's "1841" clearly written absent-mindedly.

Tremont House | Saturday Night | January Twenty Second 1841.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your polite offer[†3]—the more so, because I have the greatest possible respect for Dr. Channing,[†4] and hold him in the very highest estimation.

I fear, however, that after the fatigues of the Voyage we shall not be in church-going order tomorrow morning—not to mention our having no change of dress:[†1] our luggage being still on board.

We are not the less indebted to you. Mrs. Dickens begs her compliments to yourself, and to your sister,[†2]—in which I cordially join. I am always Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. A Whitwell Esquire.

To G. W. MINNS,[†3] 23 JANUARY 1842

Extract from letter formerly in possession of the Philadelphia Library Company; dated Tremont House, Boston, 23 Jan 42.

I beg you to thank the Committee.[†4] Continues that he will receive them at half-past ten.[†5]

To [HENRY DEXTER],[†1] [25 JANUARY 1842]

MS Yale University Library. Address: Clearly to Henry Dexter since he and Alexander were the only people in America to whom CD consented to sit, and he sat to Alexander on Tues 25th. Date: No doubt CD had originally arranged to give first sittings to both Alexander and Dexter on the Tuesday, but to Dexter earlier in the day—at Tremont House, while he ate his breakfast.

Tremont House. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I very much regret that I am obliged[†2] by the pressure of correspondence, and by my late rising this morning (consequent on the fatigues of yesterday)[†3] to postpone our sitting until tomorrow at the same hour.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MR AND MRS GEORGE BANCROFT,[†1] 25 JANUARY 1842

Extract in Samuel T. Freeman & Co. catalogue, April 1937; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tremont House, 25 Jan 42.

Mr. & Mrs. Dickens have great pleasure in accepting Mr. & Mrs. Bancroft's[†2] kind invitation for Thursday evening next.[†3]

To JOSEPH M. FIELD,[†4] 25 JANUARY 1842

MS Boston Public Library.

Tremont House | January Twenty Fifth | 1842.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Field, and is extremely obliged to him for the MS he had the goodness to send last night.[†5] Though

Mr. Dickens had not received any such mark of Mr. Field's courtesy and attention, he would still have felt it a pleasure and a duty to thank him for his most ingenious compliment, which afforded him very high gratification and entertainment.[†1]

To CHARLES SUMNER,[†2] 25 JANUARY 1842*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Tremont House | January Twenty Fifth 1842.

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks to you for your note. I hoped to have seen you this morning, but I have been beset and torn to pieces all day long.[†3] I shall trust myself in your den[†1] tomorrow, or if not tomorrow, next day. My will leads me there. My visitors keep me here. Cannot we plot to have one quiet day together, before I go away?[†2]

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Sumner Esquire.

To W. W. GREENOUGH,[†3] 26 JANUARY 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tremont House | Twenty Sixth January 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am truly sorry that I cannot accept the welcome Invitation you have given me on behalf of your club.[†4] Pray assure the gentlemen[†5] who compose it, when you thank them cordially and warmly in my name, that if I had had but one disengaged day (which I have not) I should have been proud and happy to pass it in their society.

Faithfully Yours—and theirs—
CHARLES DICKENS

W. W. Greenough Esquire

To CHESTER HARDING,[†6] 26 JANUARY 1842*

Photograph, Longfellow House.

Tremont House | January Twenty Sixth 1842.

Dear Sir

I am much flattered and obliged by your request,[†7] and would willingly accede to it, if I had the time—if I could, with the slightest regard to my personal comfort, health, or exercise. But I really cannot. Believe me that I regret it very much.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Chester Harding Esquire.

To GENERAL TWIGGS,[†1] 26 JANUARY 1842

MS[†2] Private. Address: General Twigg[†3] | Tremont House.

Tremont House | January 26th. 1842.

My dear Sir.

I shall be happy to see you, and your friend at four o'clock this afternoon, if that hour will suit your convenience.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To DR R. H. COLLYER,[†5] 27 JANUARY 1842

Text from Boston Morning Post, 1 Feb 42.

Tremont House | 27 January 1842

Dear Sir,

If we can possibly arrange it, I shall be much interested in seeing your cases, when you come to Boston.[†1] With regard to my opinion on the subject of Mesmerism, I have no hesitation in saying that I have closely watched Dr. Elliotson's[†2] experiments from the first[†3]—that he is one of my most intimate and valued friends—that I have the utmost reliance on his honor, character, and ability, and would trust my life in his hands at any time—and that after what I have seen with my own eyes and observed with my own senses, I should be untrue both to him and myself, if I should shrink[†4] for a moment from saying that I am a believer,[†5] and that I became so against all my preconceived opinions.[†4]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

To Dr. Collyer[†4]

To EDMUND B. GREEN,[†7] 27 JANUARY 1842

Text from New England Weekly Review, 5 Feb 42.

Tremont House, Boston, | Twenty Seventh January, 1842[†8]

My Dear Sir,

Pray assure my friends in Hartford, that I joyfully and gladly accept their most welcome invitation—that I shall arrange to meet you at Springfield, on Monday week;[†9] and that I shall have the pleasure of dining with them on Wednesday following.[†1] Add that I shall ever remember my Thirtieth Birthday, (the intervening Tuesday) as the season of their kindness and congratulation, above all my other birthdays, past, present, or to come.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund B. Green, Esquire.

To JARED SPARKS,[†2] 27 JANUARY [1842]

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1926; MS 1 p.; dated Tremont House, 27 Jan.

Saying that he and Catherine intended to call on him before they left Boston. †3

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 27 JANUARY 1842*

MS City Library Association, Springfield, Massachusetts.

Tremont House. | January Twenty Seventh 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am truly sorry to be obliged to refuse you, but I am so much fatigued, and have been so totally deprived of any opportunity of walking or riding, that I have resolved (among other wise resolutions) to sit no more to anyone during my stay in America.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To N. P. WILLIS,†1 27 JANUARY [1842]

Extract in Madigan's Autograph Bulletin, n.d. [?1931-2]; dated Tremont House, Boston, 27 Jan.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your cordial welcome and shall be very glad indeed to renew our acquaintance.†2 I can scarcely hope, our movements being very rapid and uncertain, to enjoy the hospitality of your cottage,†3 but I shall look forward to seeing you at least; and to making Mrs. Dickens known to your lady.†4

To THE NEW YORK DINNER COMMITTEE,†5 ?27 JANUARY 1842

Text from the New York Tribune, 9 Feb 42. Date: probably correct, since date in printed source is clearly based on CD's usual style. (For doubts about other 27 Jan letters, see next, To Alexander, hn and fns.)

Tremont House, Boston | 27th January 1842

My Dear Sirs,

I need not tell you that I accept with inexpressible pride and pleasure the invitation with which you have honored me, and I cannot tell you how much moved and gratified I have been by the terms in which it is conveyed. Your kind and earnest words have done my heart good—you have made me feel indeed that I am no stranger among you, and I have looked at your names a hundred times, as if they were the faces of old friends.

As nearly as I can guess I shall be in New-York on Saturday the 12th of February, or it may be a day earlier. Any day toward the latter end of the following week that will suit you will suit me.[†1]

Be assured that you cannot name any time which will not be a bright day in the calendar of my life; and that all hours and seasons will be alike welcome to me.

Believe me, dear Sirs, with cordial and affectionate regard,

Your faithful friend,
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To the Committee, &c. &c. &c., New-York.

To FRANCIS ALEXANDER,[†3] [?27 JANUARY 1842]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: 26 Jan if CD's "Wednesday" correct; but according to Putnam ("Four Months with CD ... By his Secretary", Atlantic Monthly, XXVI [1870], 477), himself elsewhere accurate over dates, it was in the "forenoon" of the Thursday (27 Jan) that CD mentioned to Alexander his need of a secretary,[†1] which he followed up later that day with a note, almost certainly the note below—probably written (if Thursday night 27 Jan is accepted) in the interval between his return from F. C. Gray's dinner and his departure with Catherine for two evening parties (see To Bancroft, 25 Jan, fn): see fn.

Tremont House. | Wednesday Night

My Dear Sir.

Will you (I forgot to ask you just now) speak to Mr. Putnam[†2] for me, and bespeak his assistance[†3] during the time I am in Boston? If I find him very useful,— then I can propose to him to travel with me, in such a manner as will not displease him.[†4]

I need hardly say that if he can call upon me early tomorrow morning, he will relieve me very much.

Yours and Mrs. Alexander's[†1] | Affectionately
(and pro. tem.[†2] knocked up)
BOZ

To C. C. FELTON,[†3] 27 JANUARY [1842]*

MS[†4] Mr Noel C. Peyrouton.

Tremont House Jan 27

My dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens and myself will have great pleasure in dining with you on Tuesday next[†5] at 5 o clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Felton

To G. W. ROBERTS,[†6] 27 JANUARY [1842]

MS[†7] Mr Noel C. Peyrouton.

Tremont House Jan 27

Dear Sir,

I thank you for your consideration. I shall be at leisure, and glad to see you, at 3 o clock tomorrow.[†1] In the matter of business I should add, perhaps, at once that I have no intention of writing while I remain in America, except once for the Knickerbocker;[†2] and that I leave all publishing arrangements to my publishers in London.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Roberts Esq

To ROBERT H. MORRIS,[†3] 28 JANUARY 1842

Text from New York Tribune, 3 Feb 42.

Tremont House, Boston | Jan. 28, 1842

My Dear Sir,

I beg to convey to the Committee of Gentlemen,[†4] whose organ you are, my hearty and cordial thanks for their most kind congratulations; and my glad acceptance of the honor they propose to confer upon me.[†5]

I have had the pleasure of seeing your agent,[†1] and of explaining my movements and arrangements to that gentleman.

Rest assured, that I shall only be too proud and happy to meet you at any time you may appoint, after receiving his explanation of my engagements.[†2]

With many thanks to you and the Committee, generally, I am, my dear Sir, yours, faithfully and obliged,

CHARLES DICKENS

Robert H. Morris, Esq.

To DAVID C. COLDEN,[†3] 28 JANUARY 1842

Mention in Colden to CD, 29 Jan 42.

Referring to the Ball Committee's invitation, and evidently telling Colden that he would not be arriving in New York until the 12th. [†4]

To THE REV. H. F. [HARRINGTON],[†1] 28 JANUARY [1842]*

MS[†2] Longfellow House. Address: Subscription reads "Hannington"; presumably CD had misread Harrington's signature.

Tremont House Jan 28

Dear Sir,

I very much regret not having seen you when you did me the favor to call here. I am much gratified by the communication you have made to me from the young men of Providence, and I assure you I am unaffectedly sorry that I cannot meet them and personally reciprocate their kind feelings at present. Although the distance from Boston is so short[†3] it is an almost insurmountable journey to me; every moment of my time being fully occupied and every morning and evening engaged during the whole term of my stay here.

I beg you to return my hearty thanks to those on whose behalf you have communicated with me and to say that I still look forward to meeting them when I return this way next June.[†4]

I scarcely know what to say in relation to that part of your earnest letter in which you speak of the effect my books have had upon your life, but I can honestly tell you that I have never received from any quarter, public or private, any testimony of their usefulness which has impressed me more—or any encouragement to proceed in the same course which I shall longer remember.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Rev Henry F Hannington | Providence. | R.I.

To THE REV. W. E. CHANNING, 29 JANUARY 1842*

MS[†5] Rhode Island Historical Society.

Tremont House | Jan 29 | 1842.

My Dear Dr. Channing,

I shall indeed be glad to shake hands with you in the free and friendly way you speak of, and if you and Mrs. Channing[†6] will let us come and Breakfast with you on Wednesday morning,[†7] and will let me know in one word at what hour, we shall be delighted to meet you.

About the other engagement I am very much afraid that our time is wholly occupied, but we will settle that point, when we see each other.[†1]

In the mean while I am always, believe me, with high esteem and regard,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Rev. Dr. Channing.

To RICHARD HENRY DANA, [?SR],[†2] 29 JANUARY 1842

Text transcribed by Prof. Edgar Johnson from MS then in possession of H. W. L. Dana. Address: Since neither call nor invitation to call is mentioned in the Journal of R. H. Dana, Jr., ed. R. F. Lucid, probably letter, like that of 4 Feb with similar subscription, was written to R. H. Dana, Sr.

Tremont House | Twenty Ninth January 1842

My Dear Sir,

I shall be very happy to see you at Eleven o'clock Monday Morning, if that hour will suit your convenience.

Believe me | With true regard
Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Dana Esquire

To MRS GEORGE HILLARD,[†3] 29 JANUARY 1842

Mention, without addressee's name, in To Forster, 29 Jan; identified in Felton to Sumner, 8 Feb[†4] (MS Houghton Library, Harvard).

Crying off a party at Mrs Hillard's that evening on the grounds of exhaustion. †5

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JANUARY 1842]

Extract in F, III, ii, 205-7 (resumption of letter begun 17 Jan, continued 21 Jan). Date: "Saturday the 28th of January" according to F, III, ii, 205; but 28 Jan was Friday. Since CD refers to leaving Boston "next Saturday" he was presumably writing not on Friday 28th but on Saturday 29th—a date clinched by Forster's statement (F, III, ii, 206) that "there were but two days more before the post left for England". The Britannia sailed from Boston on 1 Feb. From Tremont House.

As the Cunard boats have a wharf of their own at the custom-house, and that a narrow one, we were a long time (an hour at least) working in. I was standing in full fig on the paddle-box beside the captain, staring about me, when suddenly, long before we were moored to the wharf, a dozen men came leaping on board at the peril of their lives, with great bundles of newspapers under their arms; worsted comforters (very much the worse for wear) round their necks; and so forth. "Aha!" says I, "this is like our London-bridge": believing of course that these visitors were news-boys. But what do you think of their being EDITORS? And what do you think of their tearing violently up to me and beginning to shake hands like madmen? Oh! If you could have seen how I wrung their wrists! And if you could but know how I hated one man in very dirty gaiters, and with very protruding upper teeth, who said to all comers after him, "So you've been introduced to our friend Dickens—eh?"†1 There was one among them, though, who really was of use; a Doctor S, editor of the ——.†2 He ran off here (two miles at least), and ordered rooms and dinner. And in course of time Kate, and I, and Lord Mulgrave (who was going back to his regiment at Montreal on Monday, and had agreed to live with us in the meanwhile) sat down in a spacious and handsome room to a very handsome dinner, 'bating peculiarities of putting on table, and had forgotten the ship entirely. A Mr. Alexander, to whom I had written from England promising to sit for a portrait, was on board directly we touched the land, and brought us here in his carriage. Then, after sending a present of most beautiful flowers, he left us to ourselves, and we thanked him for it.

How can I tell you what has happened since that first day? How can I give you the faintest notion of my reception here;†1 of the crowds that pour in and out the whole day; of the people that line the streets when I go out; of the cheering when I went to the theatre;†2 of the copies of verses, letters of congratulation, welcomes of all kinds, balls, dinners, assemblies without end? There is to be a public dinner to me here in Boston, next Tuesday, and great dissatisfaction has been given to the many by the high price (three pounds sterling each) of the tickets.†3 There is to be a ball next Monday week at New York, and 150 names appear on the list of the committee. There is to be a dinner in the same place, in the same week, to which I have had an invitation with every known name in America appended to it. But what can I tell you about any of these things which will give you the slightest notion of the enthusiastic greeting they give me, or the cry that runs through the whole country! I have had deputations from the Far West, who have come from more than two thousand miles distance:[†4] from the lakes, the rivers, the back-woods, the log-houses,[†5] the cities, factories, villages, and towns. Authorities from nearly all the States have written to me. I have heard from the universities, congress, senate, and bodies, public and private, of every sort and kind. "It is no nonsense, and no common feeling," wrote Dr. Channing to me yesterday. "It is all heart. There never was, and never will be, such a triumph." And it is a good thing, is it not, ... to find those fancies it has given me and you the greatest satisfaction to think of, at the core of it all? It makes my heart quieter, and me a more retiring, sober, tranquil man to watch the effect of those thoughts in all this noise and hurry, even than if I sat, pen in hand, to put them down for the first time. I feel, in the best aspects of this welcome, something of the presence and influence of that spirit which directs my life, and through a heavy sorrow has pointed upwards with unchanging finger for more than four years past. And if I know my heart, not twenty times this praise would move me to an act of folly....

We leave here next Saturday. We go to a place called Worcester, about 75 miles off, to the house of the governor of this place;[†1] and stay with him all Sunday.[†2] On Monday we go on by railroad about 50 miles further to a town called Springfield, where I am met by a "reception committee" from Hartford 20 miles further, and carried on by the multitude: I am sure I don't know how, but I shouldn't wonder if they appear with a triumphal car.[†3] On Wednesday[†4] I have a public dinner there. On Friday I shall be obliged to present myself in public again, at a place called Newhaven,[†5] about 30 miles further. On Saturday evening I hope to be at New York; and there I shall stay ten days or a fortnight. You will suppose that I have enough to do. I am sitting for a portrait and for a bust. I have the correspondence of a secretary of state, and the engagements of a fashionable physician. I have a secretary whom I take on with me. He is a young man of the name of Q;[†6] was strongly recommended to me; is most modest, obliging, silent, and willing; and does his work well. He boards and lodges at my expense when we travel; and his salary is ten dollars per month—about two pounds five of our English money. There will be dinners and balls at Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and I believe everywhere. In Canada, I have promised to play at the theatre with the officers, for the benefit of a charity.[†7] We are already weary, at times, past all expression; and I finish this by means of a pious fraud. We were engaged to a party, and have written to say we are both desperately ill.[†8] ... "Well," I can fancy you saying, "but about his impressions of Boston and the Americans?"—Of the latter, I will not say a word until I have seen more of them, and have gone into the interior. I will only say, now, that we have never yet been required to dine at a table d'hôte;[†9] that, thus far, our rooms are as much our own here, as they would be at the Clarendon;[†1] that but for an odd phrase now and then—such as Snap of cold weather; a tongue-y man[†2] for a talkative fellow; Possible? as a solitary interrogation; and Yes? for indeed—I should have marked, so far, no difference whatever between the parties here and those I have left behind. The woman are very beautiful, but they soon fade;[†3] the general breeding is neither stiff nor forward; the good nature, universal. If you ask the way to a place—of some common waterside man, who don't know you from Adam—he turns and goes with you. Universal deference is paid to ladies;[†4] and they walk about at all seasons, wholly unprotected.... This hotel is a trifle smaller than Finsbury-square; and is made so infernally hot (I use the expression advisedly) by means of a furnace with pipes running through the passages, that we can hardly bear it. There are no curtains to the beds, or to the bedroom windows. I am told there never are, hardly, all through America. The bedrooms are indeed very bare of furniture. Ours is nearly as large as your great room, and has a wardrobe in it of painted wood not larger (I appeal to K) than an English watch box. I slept in this room for two nights, quite satisfied with the belief that it was a shower bath.

To [?THE SECRETARY, BROTHERS IN UNITY], [?LATE JANUARY 1842]

Extract in the Collector, Dec 1894, VIII, 35; dated Tremont House, 1842—clearly before To Frederick Dickens, 30 Jan, which mentions his New Haven engagement.

Pray assure the "Brothers in Unity"[†5] that I accept with great pride and satisfaction the distinction they offer me.[†6]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 30 JANUARY 1842[†7*]

MS Berg Collection. Address: By "The Britannia" Steamer. | Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | London | England.

My dear Fred. You were quite right, and may retire from public life upon an honorable independence, as soon as you please. Hewett did stand upon the paddle box—with a brazen speaking trumpet in his hand—wherewith he gave his orders to the men, which were passed by sundry officers in handsome naval uniforms, from one to another, until they reached the required point. You should see the engines of one of these large vessels. There are thirty men, who attend to them alone. The sea ran so high all the way, that when we came into Boston, the funnel which was properly red, was white to the top, with the ocean's Salt. Such a battered looking ship as it was, you can hardly imagine. When we put into Halifax, the fragments of our broken life boat still hung upon the deck. The rumour ran from mouth to mouth, that we had picked up the wreck of one of the poor President's[†1] boats at sea; and the crowd came down for splinters of it, as valuable curiosities!

I was ill for 5 days—Kate for 6. After that time we managed our knives and forks with great credit to ourselves and expense to the Cunard Company. In winter time, and with such heavy weather, it is a most miserable voyage— wretched and uncomfortable beyond all description.

I can't tell you what they do here to welcome me, or how they cheer and shout on all occasions—in the streets—in the Theatres[†2]—within doors—and wherever I go. But Forster holds the papers I have sent him, in trust to communicate their news to everybody. I have only time to write one letter, which is anything like a letter. He has it, and will tell you all.

We leave here on Saturday, and go with the Governor to a place called Worcester where we stay all Sunday. On Monday we go to a place called Springfield, and there we are publicly met by the citizens of Hartford, and carried on to that place; where—on Wednesday[†3]—I have a public dinner. On Thursday, I have another public reception at Newhaven. On Saturday, we reach New York. On Monday they give me a great ball there, the Committee for which, alone, is 150 strong. In the same week a great public dinner, and a[nother][†4] dinner with a club.[†5] I believe this is to go on all through the States. You may sup[pose][†4] I have not much time to spare.

I have engaged a very good and modest secretary, who lives with us w[hen][†4] we travel, and has ten dollars a month. He does his work very well, and I like him much.

God bless you and the darling children.[†1] I long to be at home.

Always Your affectionate brother.

C.D.

I inclose the Giniril's receipts.[†2] As Park[†3] saw us on board, will you call upon him—remember me to him—say I had no time to write before the packet left— and tell him all the News? Will you do the same by Stanfield,[†4] without loss of time?

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 JANUARY 1842]

Extracts in F, III, ii, 207-8, and F, III, i, 200 (final addition to letter begun 17 Jan, continued 21st and 29th). Date: According to F, III, ii, 207, the addition "bore date the 29th of January"—i.e. was written on day after portion misdated by CD 28 Jan but clearly 29 Jan (see To Forster, 29 Jan, hn).

I hardly know what to add to all this long and unconnected history. Dana,[†5] the author of that Two Years before the Mast,[†6] is a very nice fellow indeed;[†7] and in appearance not at all the man you would expect. He is short, mild-looking, and has a care-worn face. His father is exactly like George Cruikshank after a night's jollity—only shorter. The professors at the Cambridge university,[†1] Longfellow,[†2] Felton, Jared Sparks, are noble fellows. So is Kenyon's[†3] friend, Ticknor.[†1] Bancroft is a famous man; a straightforward, manly, earnest heart; and talks much of you, which is a great comfort.[†2] Doctor Channing I will tell you more of, after I have breakfasted alone with him next Wednesday.... Sumner is of great service to me.[†3] ... The president of the Senate here[†4] presides at my dinner on Tuesday. Lord Mulgrave lingered with us till last Tuesday (we had our little captain to dinner on the Monday), and then went on to Canada. Kate is quite well, and so is Anne, whose smartness surpasses belief. They yearn for home, and so do I.

Of course you will not see in the papers any true account of our voyage, for they keep the dangers of the passage, when there are any, very quiet. I observed so many perils peculiar to steamers that I am still undecided whether we shall not return by one of the New York liners.[†5] On the night of the storm, I was wondering within myself where we should be, if the chimney were blown overboard: in which case, it needs no great observation to discover that the vessel must be instantly on fire from stem to stern.[†6] When I went on deck next day,

I saw that it was held up by a perfect forest of chains and ropes, which had been rigged in the night. Hewitt told me (when we were on shore, not before) that they had men lashed, hoisted up, and swinging there, all through the gale, getting these stays about it. This is not agreeable—is it?

... [†a]How little I thought the first time you mounted the shapeless coat, that I should have such a sad association with its back as when I saw it by the paddle-box of that small steamer.[†a]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?30 or 31 JANUARY 1842]

Mention in Maclise to Forster, n.d., and in To Maclise, 22 Mar. Date: On 22 Mar CD mentions having already written Maclise two letters—one of them on 27 Feb. Almost certainly the other (untraced) was written at the end of Jan, when CD dispatched letters to Macready, Mitton, Fred Dickens and Forster, ready for mail leaving 1 Feb.[†1]

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 31 JANUARY 1842*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. Address: David Colden Esquire | New York.

Tremont House, Boston. | January Thirty First 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I thank the Committee very much; and have booked Monday the Fourteenth for the Ball.[†2] Be assured that there is no likelihood of my forming any other engagement for that Evening.[†3]

In the matter of my first appearance before my friends in New York, I shall be so proud to avail myself of that first opportunity of meeting them, that I shall put myself wholly into the hands of the Committee, and lead quite a secluded life until they "bring me out".[†1]

We shall be delighted to dine with you on the Sunday, and also to go to church with you[†2]—if we are not too tired out by the business of the previous week, to get up early enough.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial Regards.

Always believe me | My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Colden Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 31 JANUARY 1842

MS Huntington Library. Address: By the "Britannia" Steamer | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London | England.

Tremont House, Boston, | Thirty First January 1842.

My Dear Mitton.

I am so exhausted with the life I am obliged to lead here, that I have had time to write but one letter, which is at all deserving of the name, as giving any account of our movements. Forster has it, in trust to tell you all its news; and he has also some newspapers which I had an opportunity of sending him,[†3] in which you will find further particulars of our progress.

We had a dreadful passage—the worst (the officers all concur in saying) that they have ever known. We were 18 days coming; experienced a dreadful storm which swept away our paddle boxes and stove our life boats; and ran aground besides, near Halifax, among rocks and breakers, where we lay at anchor all night. After we left the English Channel,[†1] we had only one fine day. And we had the additional discomfort of being 86 passengers. I was ill five days—Kate six—though indeed she had a swelled face,[†2] and suffered the utmost terror all the way.[†3]

I can give you no conception of my welcome here. There never was a King or Emperor upon the Earth, so cheered, and followed by crowds, and entertained in Public at splendid balls and dinners, and waited on by public bodies and deputations of all kinds. I have had one from the Far West:[†4] a journey of 2,000 miles! If I go out in a carriage, the crowd surround it and escort me home. If I go to the Theatre, the whole house (crowded to the roof) rises as one man, and the timbers ring again. You cannot imagine what it is. I have 5 Great Public Dinners on hand at this moment,[†5] and Invitations from every town, and village, and city, in the States.

There is a great deal afloat here, in the way of subjects for description. I keep my eyes open, pretty wide; and hope to have done so to some purpose, by the time I come home.

When you write to me again—I say again; hoping that your first letter will be soon upon its way here—direct to me to the care of David Colden Esquire, New York. He will forward all communications by the quickest conveyance, and will be perfectly acquainted with all my movements.

Always Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 31 JANUARY 1842*

MS Morgan Library. Address: By The "Britannia" Steamer. | W. C. Macready Esquire | Clarence Terrace | Regents Park | London | England.

Tremont House, Boston. | Thirty First January 1842.

My Dear Macready.

I have hardly time, here, to dress—undress—and go to bed. As yet, I have had no time whatever for exercise. You may suppose I have very little for writing. This last consideration is the greatest annoyance I have.

I have, however, written one pretty long letter, and sent it to Forster—In trust to read it to you. I have penned it from time to time, and it contains some news. I have sent him at the same time a little box of letters which will interest you, I think—among them, some from David Colden[†1] who is a hearty[†2] fellow. There are Newspapers too in the same Dispatch.[†3]

It is impossible to tell you what a reception I have had here. They cheer me in the Theatres;[†4] in the streets; within doors; and without. I have a public dinner here tomorrow—another at Hartford on Wednesday[†5]—another at Newhaven on Thursday[†6]—a great Ball in New York on Monday the Fourteenth—a Great Public dinner at the same place in the same week—another dinner in the same place, with a club—and entertainments of all kinds, in perspective, all through the States. Deputations and Committees wait upon me every day—some have come 2000 miles—it is nothing to say that they carry me through the country on their shoulders, or that they flock about me as if I were an Idol. Nothing will express their affectionate greeting—I only wish to God that you could see it.

I won't say a word about the Americans until I have gone further. It is enough to say, now, that they are as delicate, as considerate, as careful of giving the least offence, as the best Englishmen I ever saw.—I like their behaviour to Ladies infinitely better than that of my own countrymen; and their Institutions I reverence, love, and honor.[†7]

We had a terrible passage—as you will learn from Kate's letter to Mrs. Macready. I hope to write you at greater length from New York.

How I am longing for a letter from you! How often we think of Drury Lane, and wonder what you're doing, and say 'Now the curtain's going up—now the halfprice is coming in—now they're calling for Macready'. We have agreed not to believe that there is any difference between the clocks here and those at home;[†8] and we find it a marvellous satisfaction.

My Dear Macready I won't thank you for the peace of mind you have given us, and the perfect confidence we have through you in our dear children being well cared-for, and thoroughly happy.—If I could but shake hands with you, on the penalty of not saying one word—as they shewed the figures of the absent, in the Magic Mirror of the Fairy Tale[†1]—I could express more in one squeeze than in a score of letters.

I thirst for news of Drury Lane. I don't know how we shall restrain ourselves when the time approaches for the arrival of the packet.

God bless you My Dear Macready!

Ever Your attached and most affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To LORD JEFFREY, [LATE JANUARY 1842]

Mention in To Colden, 4 Apr, as posted from Boston 2 Feb.

February

To W. W. GREENOUGH, 1 FEBRUARY 1842*

Text from copy formerly owned by Edward F. Payne.

Tremont House Feb. 1. 1842

My Dear Sir,

I shall expect the Committee[†2] at the hour you mention, and have no alteration to suggest in so pleasant an arrangement. Believe me always,

Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

W. W. Greenough, Esq.

To DR FRANCIS DANA,[†3] 2 FEBRUARY [1842]*

MS[†4] Longfellow House.

Tremont House Feb 2nd.

My dear Sir

In answer to your inquiry I beg to say that I know Mr. Townshend[†5] well. He is a gentleman of Independent fortune and station in Society, and of very high and varied attainments. I need scarcely add that whatever he says is perfectly true; and that I have no doubt relative to any one of the statements contained in his Book.[†1]

Dear Sir I am | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Dana

To A. R. DUNTON,[†2] 2 FEBRUARY 1842

Text from the Boston Daily Mail, 3 Mar 42.

Tremont House | Feb. 2, 1842

Dear Sir,

Mrs. Dickens and myself are exceedingly obliged for those beautiful and elegant specimens of Penmanship and Card Marking which you have done us the favor to present us with. Our friends who have seen them pronounce them equal to copper plate. We shall have pleasure in showing them in our country as a specimen of Yankee ingenuity. Hoping you will ever prosper, you will please accept our thanks, and believe me

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. A. R. Dunton

To MISS THEODA DAVIS FOSTER,[†3] 2 FEBRUARY 1842

Text from Memorial Sketch of Theoda Davis Foster Bush By her Husband, Boston, 1890, p. 27.

Tremont House, Boston | 2nd February, 1842

Dear Madam,

What can I say to your very interesting letter?[†4] That it has afforded me the utmost satisfaction of heart and the truest delight? You know that, I am sure, already.

I can but thank you, but I do so with a sincerity which may attach some value to my words; and in the same spirit I assure you, my unknown friend, that I am ever

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. D. F.[†1]

To UNKNOWN LADIES OF PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS,[†2] 2 FEBRUARY [1842]

Text from the New York Herald, 27 Feb 42.

Tremont House, February 2d.

My Dear Ladies,

I wish I could bring my whole head among you, but being prevented, (by reason of the arrangements I have made for going elsewhere) I confess that I am afraid to send you a lock of my hair, as the precedent would be one of a most dangerous and alarming kind, and likely to terminate before long in my total baldness.[†3]

You see how very candidly I deal with you. If I had been of a deceitful nature, nothing would have been easier for me to do, than to have got a lock of hair from one of the waiters, and forwarded it to you by post.

But, as I have had much pleasure in the receipt of your letter, and feel that I may treat you with perfect confidence, I prefer even to refuse your request, and to throw myself upon your merciful consideration.

Dear Ladies, I am ever | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. MOSES STUART,[†4] 2 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS[†5] Northwestern Mutual Insurance Company, Seattle.

Tremont House Feb 2 1842

My dear Sir

I thank you very much for your pleasant letter. I wish I could come to see you. I wish I had half an hour, or had had half an hour, during my short stay in this City.

I hope to return this way. If I do, I shall look forward to meeting you. In the mean time commend me and Mrs. Dickens to your family and believe me

dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev Moses Stuart.

To GEORGE TICKNOR, 2 FEBRUARY 1842†

MS Berg Collection.

Tremont House, Boston | Second February 1842.

My Dear Sir.

Thank you for your kind note.

†aI fear (oh if you only knew the full extent of my "engagements"!)†1 that I shall not be able to accompany you until I return this way,—which I hope to do.†a But I am not the less obliged to you, or the less desirous to avail myself of your thoughtful proffer.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Ticknor Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE BUNKER-HILL AURORA,†2 [EARLY FEBRUARY 1842]

Summary from Bunker-Hill Aurora, 5 Feb 42.

Protesting that the sketch of his life, †3 as published in the last issue of that paper, contained statements about his birth and parentage, and that of Mrs Dickens, which were entirely new to him. †4

To RICHARD HENRY DANA,†1 4 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Richard Dana Esquire | Boston.

Tremont House, Boston. | Fourth February 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I thank you most heartily, for your kind note of this morning,†2 and for the copy of Bryants†3 Poems†4 you have given me. I assure you that I shall prize it very highly for your sake; and that I attach no common value to your kind and affectionate expressions.

I shall hope to see you again, before I leave this country. But in England or America, I shall never fail to look back with pleasure to our brief intercourse, or to be with sincere regard, My Dear Sir,

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Dana Esquire

To JAMES T. FIELDS,†5 4 FEBRUARY [1842]*

MS†6 Mr Philo Calhoun. Address: To James T. Fields according to cutting from Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue, n.d.

Tremont House Feb 4.

Dear Sir.

Not having the Book with me I really forget the date of the Publication of the Pickwick Papers.[†1] But I think the first number appeared six years ago, come the last day of next March. Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?4 FEBRUARY 1842]

Extract in F, III, ii, 208-9. Date: Though quoted by Forster as the conclusion of letter begun 17 Jan, ended 30 Jan, dispatched by the Britannia 1 Feb, must clearly have been written later. Muddled though he was about dates himself, CD could scarcely refer to his birthday as "next Tuesday" until Tues 1 Feb; and the only factories he is known to have visited from Boston were those at Lowell, on 3 Feb. Probably this (and more) was written shortly before he left Boston on the 5th, but instead of being posted the following Tuesday (in Hartford) it formed part of the letter posted in New York on 14 Feb—the one Forster so firmly calls CD's "second".

I wonder whether you will remember that next Tuesday is my birthday![†2] This letter will leave here that morning.

On looking back through these sheets,[†3] I am astonished to find how little I have told you, and how much I have, even now, in store which shall be yours by word of mouth. The American poor, the American factories,[†4] the institutions of all kinds[†5]—I have a book, already. There is no man in this town, or in this State of New England, who has not a blazing fire and a meat dinner every day of his life. A flaming sword in the air would not attract so much attention as a beggar in the streets. There are no charity uniforms, no wearisome repetition of the same dull ugly dress, in that blind school.[†1] All are attired after their own tastes, and every boy and girl has his or her invididuality as distinct and unimpaired as you would find it in their own homes. At the theatres, all the ladies sit in the fronts of the boxes. The gallery are as quiet as the dress circle at dear Drury-lane. A man with seven heads would be no sight at all, compared with one who couldn't read and write.

I won't speak (I say "speak"! I wish I could) about the dear precious children, because I know how much we shall hear about them when we receive those letters from home for which we long so ardently.

To WILLIAM WETMORE STORY,[†2] 4 FEBRUARY [1842]

Extract in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 174; dated Tremont House, 4 Feb, in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2201.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note, and for your letter of introduction, which, you may readily suppose, I shall not fail to deliver. I have already a letter and Pamphlet for your Father,[†3] from Lord Brougham[†4] and I shall be very happy indeed, when the opportunity presents itself to deliver them.

To MISS TUTHILL,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Huntington Library.

City Hotel, Hertford[†2] | Seventh February 1842.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Tuthill, and begs to thank her, both for her book,[†3] and her most acceptable and welcome note. Mr. Dickens has not the heart to say "Dear Madam", which has even a more formal appearance than this mode of address.—He is cordially obliged to her; and earnestly assures her that she was not mistaken in supposing that her gift would be received and acknowledged with pleasure.

To THE REV. R. C. WATERSTON,[†4] 7 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Private.

City Hotel. Hertford | Seventh February 1842.

My Dear Sir.

You have not mistaken me. I have a deep and strong interest in children, and in all creatures who appeal through their helplessness to our gentleness and mercy— in children most especially. They need more friends in England than they have.

It was not a sister of my own, I lost.[†5] She was my wife's sister. God knows that no tie of blood could have bound her closer to me, or endeared her to me more. She was but seventeen when she died; and she died in one night. She lay down upon her bed in perfect health and beauty; and never rose again, but in the Spirit.

I will not tell you how sorely I was tried, four years ago last May, by this bereavement—nor how dearly I loved her; my constant affectionate, and chosen companion—nor in what respects I hope this sorrow has gradually made me a better man—nor how I have learnt to look beyond the Grave—and tried, in one of my stories, to divest it of some of its terrors. It is enough to say that I feel what you have written and sent to me; that it touches me very much; and that I thank you.

I hope yet[†1] to avail myself of your good company in visiting the poor of Boston.[†2] In the meanwhile and always—with best wishes for yourself and your lady,[†3] in which Mrs. Dickens unites—I am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend R. C. Waterston.

To ARTHUR LIVERMORE,[†4] 8 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS New Hampshire Historical Society.

City Hotel Hertford. | Eighth February 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am truly obliged to you for your frank and hospitable Invitation. I fear that the course I have marked out (which is not restricted to highways and cities) will keep us apart;[†5] but I feel equally indebted to you for your kindness.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to convey to you her best regards and thanks.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Livermore Esquire

To THE YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE, NEW HAVEN, [?8 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in the American Traveller, Boston, 15 Feb 42. Date: shortly after his arrival in Hartford, where he found their letter awaiting him.

Saying in reply to an invitation to deliver a lecture before the Young Men's Institute on Thurs 10 Feb that he had never delivered a lecture in his life, but would be happy to listen to one on the evening in question. [†6]

To [?GEORGE] GRIFFIN,[†1] [?8 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in next. Date: the day before that letter.

To MRS LYDIA SIGOURNEY,[†2] [?9] FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Connecticut Historical Society. Date: 10 Feb was Thursday, not Wednesday, in 1842. Since Mrs Sigourney had written verses to welcome CD[†3] which were recited at the Hartford Dinner on Tues 8 Feb, when no doubt she met him, it seems more likely that CD wrote to her on Wed 9th suggesting the 10th for her call than that it should be left till the 11th, his last day in Hartford, when he visited jails and asylums in the morning and left for New Haven at 5 p.m. (To Forster, 17 Feb).[†4]

City Hotel, Hertford
Wednesday February Tenth 1842.

Dear Mrs. Sigourney.

I am very sorry to say that owing to a mistake on the part of my Secretary, Mr. Griffin's letter[†5] went to New York last night by the Post.

I promise myself the pleasure of seeing you tomorrow, between twelve and two.—Mrs. Dickens is much better,[†6] and sends her best regards.

Always believe me | Your friend and warm admirer
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sigourney.

To [?THE SECRETARY, BROTHERS IN UNITY], [?9 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in To Forster, 17 Feb. Date: probably the day before he had originally intended to leave for New Haven.

Cancelling his engagement for Thurs 10 Feb because his wife was unwell and needed a further day's rest at Hartford. [†1]

To I. H. ADAMS,[†2] 10 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Goodspeeds Book Shop. Address: I. H. Adams Esquire. | City Hotel.

City Hotel, Hertford. | Tenth February 1842.

My Dear Sir.

We beg to thank you (to whom we understand we are indebted for the exquisite pleasure we received last night) for your most beautiful Serenade. If you knew how much delight it afforded us, and how many thoughts of home and those who make it dearest, your charming performance awakened; you would feel how inadequate this acknowledgement is—almost as strongly as we do.

With the sincere hope that you may long live to elevate and refine the hearts of your friends by the help of such sweet sounds; and that your feeling for the tender and mournful may never have a sadder origin than in your innate power of expression and perfect appreciation of the Poet's meaning, we are

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CATHERINE DICKENS
CHARLES DICKENS

I. H. Adams Esquire

I need scarcely add that we beg to include your friend Mr. Boedenhare,[†3] in our grateful recollections.

To JOSEPH S. SMITH,[†4] 12 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Pennsylvania Historical Society.

Private

Carlton House New York.[†5] | Twelfth February 1842.

My Dear Sir

Let me say, in answer to your letter, that the wanderings, history, and death of Nell, are quite imaginary, and wholly fictitious.

That many of the feelings which grow out of this little Story and are suggested by it, are familiar to me, I need scarcely say. The grave has closed over very deep affection and strong love of mine. So far, and no farther, there is Truth in it.

I do not usually answer questions having this reference, so freely. But yours is an honest letter, I believe. Therefore I give you an honest answer.

Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Jos. S. Smith.

To JONATHAN CHAPMAN,[†1] [?12 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in Chapman to CD, 14 Feb.[†2] Date: Chapman was clearly answering a note he had newly received from CD, probably written on 12 Feb, the day he reached New York.

Presumably thanking Chapman for his kindness in Boston and proposing that they should regard their friendship as an "alliance".

To CUTHBERT C. GORDON,[†3] 13 FEBRUARY [1842]

MS[†4] Princeton University Library.

Carlton House | Feby. 13th.

Dear Sir—

Your kind and welcome letter awaited me here yesterday. It did not reach Boston until after I had left.

I scarcely know how to thank you for the earnest manner in which you have conveyed to me the distinguished compliment of the directors of the Mercantile Library Association.[†5] I can only beg you to assure those gentlemen that I highly appreciate and esteem the honor they have done me, and that I shall not fail to take an early opportunity of visiting their Institution.

To you, personally, I can say no more than that you have given me unfeigned pleasure and satisfaction—that I thank you for it with all my heart—and that

I am | Dear Sir | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Cuthbert C. Gordon Esq.

To MESSRS LEA & BLANCHARD,[†1] 13 FEBRUARY 1842

Text from Dickensian, XI (1913), 260.

Carlton House, New York, | Thirteenth February, 1842.

My Dear Sirs,

I am cordially obliged to you for your thoughtful recollection, and for the box of books.[†2] Accept my very best thanks.

I shall be exceedingly glad to know you, and shake hands with you when I come to Philadelphia, where I shall be, I hope, (though for a very few days) in a fortnight at furthest.[†3]

I shall be glad to have, too—of course, between ourselves—some information on a business point which occurs to my mind just now.[†4]

The intelligence of the long faces[†5] had reached my ears before I received your letter. I am truly sorry for the cause of their elongation, and wish them short again with all my heart.

Dear Sirs, | Always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard.

To SAMUEL WARD,[†6] 13 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Sunday. Thirteenth February | 1842.

My Dear Sir.

We are—not seven,[†7] but fourteen.[†8] Our whole fortnight is engaged. Wherefore, let it remain—Wednesday.[†9]

— III - 58 —

I write this with my hands in a basin of water; being in the very act of trimming myself for going out. Mrs. D unites with me in best regards. And I am always

Faithfully Yours | (I take my shortest name)

BOZ

Samuel Ward Esquire

To WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT,[†1] 14 FEBRUARY 1842

Text from Parke Godwin, A Biography of William Cullen Bryant, New York, 1883, I, 395.

Carlton House. | February 14, 1842.

My Dear Sir,

With one exception (and that's Irving)[†2] you are the man I most wanted to see

— III - 59 —

in America.[†1] You have been here twice, and I have not seen you. The fault was not mine; for on the evening of my arrival committee-gentlemen were coming in and out until long after I had your card put into my hands. As I lost what I most eagerly longed for, I ask you for your sympathy, and not for your forgiveness. Now, I want to know when you will come and breakfast with me: and I don't call to leave a card at your door before asking you, because I love you too well to be ceremonious with you. I have a thumbed book at home, so well worn that it has nothing upon the back but one gilt "B," and the remotest possible traces of a "y."[†2] My credentials are in my earnest admiration of its beautiful contents. Any day but next Monday or next Sunday. Time, half-past ten. Just say in writing, "My dear Dickens, such a day. Yours ever." Will you?[†3]

Your faithful friend,

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 FEBRUARY 1842]

Extract and summary in F, III, iii, 214, and mention in To Forster, 17 Feb; probably the conclusion of the letter begun ?4 Feb. Date: 14 Feb according to Forster. From the Carlton Hotel, New York.

Saying that he had spoken about international copyright twice publicly,[†4] to the great indignation of some of the editors here, who are attacking me for so doing,

— III - 60 —

right and left;[†1] that all the best men[†2] had assured him that, if only at once followed up in England, the blow struck might bring about a change in the law; and—yielding to the agreeable delusion that the best men could be a match for the worst in such a matter— urging Forster to enlist what force was obtainable and in particular (since CD had made Scott's claim his war cry) to bring Lockhart into the field. He enclosed a newspaper and the Ball Committee's report on the Boz Ball.[†3]

— III - 61 —

To EDMUND B. GREEN, 14 FEBRUARY 1842

Text from the New World, 26 Feb 42.

Carlton House, New York, | February 14th, 1842.

My Dear Sir,

I see you have taken my life into your paper.[†1] It is so wildly imaginative, and so perfectly new to me, I could not help writing to the editor of the Bunker Hill Aurora, (in which I first saw it) to compliment him on the rich fancy of its author, whose imaginative biography, both of myself and my better half, is the most remarkable invention I ever met with.[†2]

If I enter my protest against its being received as a strictly veracious account of my existence down to the present time, it is only because I may one of these days be induced to lay violent hands upon myself—in other words attempt my own life[†3]—in which case, the gentleman unknown, would be quoted as authority against me.

Always faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To Edmund B. Green, Esq.

— III - 62 —

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK,[†1] 15 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Mr N. C. Peyrouton.

Carlton House | Fifteenth February 1842.

My Dear Sir

We must postpone our breakfast, I grieve to say, for a day or two. I have been in bed all day with a violent sore throat—and have been obliged to have a doctor—and am not myself by any means—though if resolutions to that effect will do it, I mean to be quite well tomorrow.

My best regards to Mrs. Clark[†2]—Mrs. Dickens unites with me in all good wishes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[L.][†3] Gaylord[†4] Clark Esquire

To CHARLES A. DAVIS,[†5] [15 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in The Diary of Philip Hone, 1828-1851, ed. A. Nevins, New York, 1936, p. 588. Date: Diary entry of 16 Feb refers to CD's apology of the day before.

Apologizing for being unable to come to a dinner party at Davis's house that evening, since he was confined to his room with a sore throat and was prohibited by the doctor from going out. [†6]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 FEBRUARY [1842]

Mention in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Apr 1904; MS 1 p.; dated 15 Feb, from New York.

A business letter.

To A COMMITTEE OF GENTLEMEN OF PHILADELPHIA,[†1] [?15 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in Philadelphia Gazette, Wednesday Afternoon, 16 Feb, quoting a report in the Chronicle of that morning. Date: more likely to have been written on the 15th when exhausted by the Boz Ball and ill with his sore throat (see To Forster, 17 Feb) than on the day of the Ball itself.

Declining a public dinner offered him by a Committee of Gentlemen of Philadelphia, and saying that his stay would be short and he wished to see the people. [†2]

To THE YOUNG MEN OF BALTIMORE,[†3] [?15 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in To Forster, 24 Feb. Date: On 10 Feb, after CD had left Boston, Dana recorded in his journal: "Letter to Dickens upon business confided to me from Baltimore. Wm. Watson to take it, as a letter of introduction" (The Journal of R. H. Dana, Jr., ed. R. F. Lucid, I, 61). Watson, a New York lawyer, presumably delivered the letter shortly after CD's arrival in New York, and CD's refusal was perhaps written on the day he declined the Philadelphia dinner.

Declining their invitation to a Public Dinner. [†4]

To CHARLES H. DELAVAN,[†5] 16 FEBRUARY [1842]

Text from New York Tribune, 23 Feb 42.

Carlton House, February 16

Dear Sir,

I very much regret, and so does Mrs. Dickens, that in consequence of the numerous engagements which we have made, it is not in our power to accept the welcome invitation of the New York Mechanics' Institute.[†1] And I assure you that I regret this the more because I have formed the very highest respect for the object which brings them together on the anniversary of Washington's birthday, and for its great influence upon the most valuable portions of society.[†2]

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully and obliged,
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles H. Delevan, Esq.

To [WILLIAM] MITCHELL,[†3] 16 FEBRUARY [1842]*

MS[†4] Benoliel Collection. Address: Undoubtedly to William Mitchell, but "J B" in subscription shows that CD had forgotten his first name (cf. subscription "R. Mitchell Esquire" in letter of 30 Apr).

Carlton House Feby. 16th.

My dear Sir.

I am really obliged to you for your frank and courteous letter. If, during our short and hurried stay, Mrs. Dickens and I can make but one escape to your pleasant Theatre,[†5] trust me that we shall only be too happy to do so,[†6] as[†7] the Drama is one of our most constant amusements in London and some of our dearest friends are intimately connected with it.

For myself I have perhaps a stronger interest in you than you suspect. I was a very staunch admirer of yours (and I paid in those days) at the Queens[†8]

Theatre in the remote times of the "wandering minstrel",[†1] and the "revolt of the Workhouse".[†2] I was constantly with you at the Strand Theatre, both before and after that time. I followed you to Covent Garden when you did very good things in a very bad part in "His first Campaign".[†3] Thence I tracked you to Brahams[†4] and lost you thereabouts to find you at the Ball the other night.

I am truly glad to hear on all sides that you are meeting with the success you deserve; and I hope it may be prolonged and increased until you see fit to come back to England again, a rich man.[†5]

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Mitchell Esq.

To EDMUND S. SIMPSON,[†6] 16 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Carlton House. | Sixteenth February 1842.

Dear Sir.

I write to you from my bed; and I am truly sorry to say that I do so for the purpose of informing you that I cannot attend the Ball tonight,[†7] owing to an inflammatory affection of the throat which confined me to the house during the whole of yesterday, and obliges me to keep my room to day.

I am sure I need not tell you how very much I regret this disappointment, or how great an effort I would make to come to the Theatre, if I could do so with any degree of prudence. But you will see by the inclosed[†8] that my doctor expressly forbids it; and if you could see me, you would be at no loss to discover the soundness of his reasons for doing so.[†1]

I am Dear Sir Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Simpson Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 17 FEBRUARY 1842

Extract in F, III, iii, 214-18.

Carlton-house, New York: Thursday, February Seventeenth, 1842

As there is a sailing-packet from here to England to-morrow which is warranted (by the owners) to be a marvellous fast sailer, and as it appears most probable that she will reach home (I write the word with a pang) before the Cunard steamer of next month, I indite this letter.[†2] And lest this letter should reach you before another letter which I dispatched from here last Monday, let me say in the first place that I did dispatch a brief epistle to you on that day, together with a newspaper,[†3] and a pamphlet touching the Boz ball;[†4] and that I put in the post-office at Boston another newspaper for you containing an account of the dinner,[†5] which was just about to come off, you remember, when I wrote to you from that city.

It was a most superb affair; and the speaking admirable.[†1] Indeed the general talent for public speaking here, is one of the most striking of the things that force themselves upon an Englishman's notice. As every man looks on to being a member of Congress, every man prepares himself for it; and the result is quite surprising. You will observe one odd custom—the drinking of sentiments. It is quite extinct with us, but here everybody is expected to be prepared with an epigram as a matter of course.[†2]

We left Boston on the fifth, and went away with the governor of the city to stay till Monday at his house at Worcester.[†3] He married a sister of Bancroft's,[†4] and another sister of Bancroft's[†1] went down with us. The village of Worcester is one of the prettiest in New England.[†2] ... On Monday morning at nine o'clock we started again by railroad and went on to Springfield, where a deputation of two were waiting, and everything was in readiness that the utmost attention could suggest. Owing to the mildness of the weather, the Connecticut river was "open," videlicet not frozen, and they had a steamboat[†3] ready to carry us on to Hartford; thus saving a land-journey of only twenty-five miles, but on such roads at this time of year that it takes nearly twelve hours to accomplish! The boat was very small, the river full of floating blocks of ice, and the depth where we went (to avoid the ice and the current) not more than a few inches. After two hours and a half of this queer travelling we got to Hartford. There, there was quite an English inn;[†4] except in respect of the bed-rooms, which are always uncomfortable; and the best committee of management that has yet presented itself. They kept us more quiet, and were more considerate and thoughtful, even to their own exclusion, than any I have yet had to deal with. Kate's face being horribly bad, I determined to give her a rest here; and accordingly wrote to get rid of my engagement at Newhaven,[†5] on that plea. We remained in this town until the eleventh: holding a formal levee every day for two hours, and receiving on each from two hundred to three hundred people. At five o'clock on the afternoon of the eleventh, we set off (still by railroad) for Newhaven, which we reached about eight o'clock. The moment we had had tea, we were forced to open another levee for the students and professors of the college[†6] (the largest in the States), and the townspeople. I suppose we shook hands, before going to bed, with considerably more than five hundred people; and I stood, as a matter of course, the whole time.[†7] ...

Now, the deputation of two had come on with us from Hartford; and at Newhaven there was another committee; and the immense fatigue and worry of all this, no words can exaggerate. We had been in the morning over jails and deaf and dumb asylums;[†1] had stopped on the journey at a place called Wallingford, where a whole town had turned out to see me, and to gratify whose curiosity the train stopped expressly; had had a day of great excitement and exertion on the Thursday (this being Friday); and were inexpressibly worn out. And when at last we got to bed and were "going" to fall asleep, the choristers of the college turned out in a body, under the window, and serenaded us! We had had, by the bye, another serenade at Hartford, from a Mr. Adams[†2] (a nephew of John Quincey Adams)[†3] and a German friend. They were most beautiful singers: and when they began, in the dead of the night, in a long, musical, echoing passage outside our chamber door; singing, in low voices to guitars, about home and absent friends and other topics that they knew would interest us; we were more moved than I can tell you.[†4] In the midst of my sentimentality though, a thought occurred to me which made me laugh so immoderately that I was obliged to cover my face with the bedclothes. "Good Heavens!" I said to Kate, "what a monstrously ridiculous and commonplace appearance my boots must have, outside the door!" I never was so impressed with a sense of the absurdity of boots, in all my life.

The Newhaven serenade was not so good; though there were a great many voices, and a "reg'lar" band. It hadn't the heart of the other. Before it was six hours old, we were dressing with might and main, and making ready for our departure: it being a drive of twenty minutes to the steamboat, and the hour of sailing nine o'clock. After a hasty breakfast we started off; and after another levee on the deck (actually on the deck), and "three times three for Dickens," moved towards New York.

I was delighted to find on board a Mr. Felton whom I had known at Boston. He is the Greek professor at Cambridge, and was going on to the ball and dinner. Like most men of his class whom I have seen, he is a most delightful fellow— unaffected, hearty, genial, jolly; quite an Englishman of the best sort. We drank all the porter on board, ate all the cold pork and cheese, and were very merry indeed.[†5] I should have told you, in its proper place, that both at Hartford and Newhaven a regular bank was subscribed, by these committees, for all my expenses. No bill was to be got at the bar, and everything was paid for. But as I would on no account suffer this to be done, I stoutly and positively refused to budge an inch until Mr. Q should have received the bills from the landlord's own hands, and paid them to the last farthing. Finding it impossible to move me, they suffered me, most unwillingly, to carry the point.

About half past 2, we arrived here. In half an hour more, we reached this hotel, where a very splendid suite of rooms was prepared for us;[†1] and where everything is very comfortable, and no doubt (as at Boston) enormously dear.[†2] Just as we sat down to dinner, David Colden made his appearance; and when he had gone, and we were taking our wine, Washington Irving[†3] came in alone, with open arms. And here he stopped, until ten o'clock at night.[†4] Having got so far,

I shall divide my discourse into four points. First, the ball. Secondly, some slight specimens of a certain phase of character in the Americans. Thirdly, international copyright. Fourthly, my life here, and projects to be carried out while I remain.

Firstly, the ball. It came off last Monday (vide pamphlet). "At a quarter past 9, exactly," (I quote the printed order of proceeding), we were waited upon by "David Colden, Esquire, and General George Morris;"[†1] habited, the former in full ball costume, the latter in the full dress uniform of Heaven knows what regiment of militia. The general took Kate, Colden gave his arm to me, and we proceeded downstairs to a carriage at the door, which took us to the stage door of the theatre: greatly to the disappointment of an enormous crowd who were besetting the main door, and making a most tremendous hullaballoo. The scene on our entrance was very striking. There were three thousand people present in full dress; from the roof to the floor, the theatre was decorated magnificently;[†2] and the light, glitter, glare, show, noise, and cheering, baffle my descriptive powers. We were walked in through the centre of the centre dress-box, the front whereof was taken out for the occasion; so to the back of the stage, where the mayor and other dignitaries received us; and we were then paraded all round the enormous ball-room, twice, for the gratification of the many-headed. That done, we began to dance—Heaven knows how we did it, for there was no room.[†3] And we continued dancing until, being no longer able even to stand, we slipped away quietly, and came back to the hotel. All the documents connected with this extraordinary festival (quite unparalleled here) we have preserved;[†4] so you may suppose that on this head alone we shall have enough to show you when we come home. The bill of fare for supper, is, in its amount and extent, quite a curiosity.[†1]

Now, the phase of character in the Americans which amuses me most, was put before me in its most amusing shape by the circumstances attending this affair. I had noticed it before, and have since, but I cannot better illustrate it than by reference to this theme. Of course I can do nothing but in some shape or other it gets into the newspapers. All manner of lies get there, and occasionally a truth so twisted and distorted that it has as much resemblance to the real fact as Quilp's leg to Taglioni's.[†2] But with this ball to come off, the newspapers were if possible unusually loquacious; and in their accounts of me, and my seeings, sayings, and doings on the Saturday night and Sunday before, they describe my manner, mode of speaking, dressing, and so forth.[†3] In doing this, they report that I am a very charming fellow (of course), and have a very free and easy way with me; "which," say they, "at first amused a few fashionables;" but soon pleased them exceedingly. Another paper, coming after the ball, dwells upon its splendour and brilliancy; hugs itself and its readers upon all that Dickens saw;[†4] and winds up by gravely expressing its conviction, that Dickens was never in such society in England as he has seen in New York,[†5] and that its high and striking tone cannot fail to make an indelible impression on his mind! For the same reason I am always represented, whenever I appear in public, as being "very pale;" "apparently thunderstruck;" and utterly confounded by all I see.[†1] ... You recognize the queer vanity which is at the root of all this? I have plenty of stories in connection with it to amuse you with when I return.

To FITZ-GREENE HALLECK,[†2] 17 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Professor Ronald Paulson.

Carlton House. | Seventeenth February 1842

My Dear Sir

Will you come and breakfast with me on Tuesday the Twenty Second, at half past ten? Say yes.[†1] I should have been truly delighted to have a talk with you tonight (being quite alone) but the Doctor says that if I talk to man, woman, or child this Evening, I shall be dumb tomorrow.

Believe me with true regard

Faithfully | Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Fitzgreene Halleck Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK HERALD,[†2] 19 FEBRUARY 1842

Summary in New York Herald, 20 Feb 42.

Returning the draft report of his speech at the New York Dinner, the evening before, and expressing "his highest encomiums at its remarkable accuracy". †3

To J. P. GEBLER,†4 J. M. DAVIS,†5 T. B. FLORENCE,†6 J. G. BRESLEY,†7 20 FEBRUARY [1842]

Text from Philadelphia Public Ledger, 23 Feb 42.

Carlton House, Feb 20th.

Dear Sirs,

I thank you for your letter.†8 No man subscribes more heartily to the sentiments you express in reference to the worth of that class of society which you represent,†9 than I do; and I unaffectedly assure you that I am proud of your good opinion.

I have already†10 declined various invitations to a public reception in Philadelphia, but I shall be exceedingly glad to shake hands with you when I arrive there, and shall hope that you will give me an opportunity of doing so.†1

I remain, gentlemen, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To John P. Gebler, James M. Davis, Thomas B. Florence, John G. Bresley, Esqrs.

To SAMUEL WARD, 21 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

To Samuel Ward Esquire

Carlton House. | Twenty First February 1842

God forgive me! I was already engaged for Sunday.†2 I thought it could scarcely be that I—I, the devoted one; the sacrifice—could have a morning to myself. Pity and pardon the miserable, but not impenitent
BOZ.

Ask me to breakfast when I return here—do.†3

To M. F. WHITTIER,†1 21 FEBRUARY [1842]

Mention in John Anderson Jr. catalogue No. 152 and George D. Smith catalogue, n.d. [?1907]; MS 1 p.; dated Carlton House, 21 Feb.

Acknowledging a letter. Faithfully yours, CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To JONATHAN CHAPMAN, 22 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Carlton House, New York. | Twenty Second February 1842.

My Dear Friend.

Here's my hand.—Our alliance is complete.[†3] Let the Sea rise never so high between us, we will rise higher. And when you come to England, we will have such walks and talks together, as shall indemnify us for years of separation.[†4]

I am sick to death of the life I have been leading here—worn out in mind and body—and quite weary and distressed. I have declined all future Invitations of a public nature; and mean to be resolute from this time forth. I am a splendid illustration of the wisdom of the fable concerning the old man and his ass. Half the population take it ill if I do go where I am asked; and the other half take it ill if I don't. So I mean, in future, to consult my own wishes,—and those of no other person in this Hemisphere.

I have never in my life been so shocked and disgusted, or made so sick and sore at heart, as I have been by the treatment I have received here (in America I mean), in reference to the International Copyright question. I,—the greatest loser by[†5] the existing Law, alive,—say in perfect good humour and disinterestedness (for God knows that I have little hope of its ever being changed in my time) that I hope the day will come when Writers will be justly treated; and straightway there fall upon me scores of your newspapers; imputing motives to me, the very suggestion of which turns my blood to gall; and attacking me in such terms of vagabond scurrility as they would denounce no murderer with.[†1] I vow to Heaven that the scorn and indignation I have felt under this unmanly and ungenerous treatment has been to me an amount of agony such as I never experienced since my birth. But it has had the one good effect of making me iron upon this theme; and iron I will be, here and at home, by word of mouth and in writing, as long as I can articulate a syllable, or hold a pen.

I open my whole heart to you, you see! I write in such a spirit of confidence that I pour out all I have felt upon this subject,—though I have said nothing in reference to it, even to my wife.[†2] This is a foretaste of what you have brought upon yourself.

I shall be in Washington, about the sixth or seventh of March.[†3] While I am there, I will write to you again; and I shall hope to see your handwriting before I go further South. How I wish that you were not Mayor of Boston, and would join us there, and travel with us until the end of May![†4]

Always Your faithful | And affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Jonathan Chapman Esquire

To CHARLES WILSON PEALE,[†5] 22 FEBRUARY [1842]

Extract in Dodd, Mead Company catalogue No. 90; MS 1 p.; dated Carlton House, 22 Feb.

I beg to acknowledge your invitation to visit your store. I am sorry to add, however, that as every "moment" of my time is engaged during the whole of the remainder of my short stay in the City, I cannot have an opportunity of doing so.[†6]

To MRS MARY GRIFFITH,[†7] 23 FEBRUARY [1842]*

MS[†8] Mr N. C. Peyrouton.

Carlton House Feby. 23rd.

My dear Madam.

Let me thank you heartily for your kind and interesting letter and for the books[†9] which accompanied it.

I wish it were in my power to come to see you, but I have no leisure for anything I wish to do; and can only thank you on that head also.

And lastly, let me thank you for the letter of introduction to your daughter.[†1] But I shall only be three days at Philda., and I greatly fear that I may never deliver it.

Rest assured that if I can, I will, and

Believe me | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Mary Griffith.

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 23 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Carlton House. | Twenty Third February 1842.

My Dear Longfellow.

You are coming to England, you know.—Now, listen to me. When you return to London, I shall be there, Please God. Write to me from the Continent, and tell me when to expect you. We live quietly—not uncomfortably— and among people whom I am sure you would like to know; as much as they would like to know you. Have no home but mine—see nothing in town on your way towards Germany—and let me be your London host and cicerone.[†2] Is this a bargain?

Always | Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Longfellow.

To UNKNOWN BOOKSELLER, [23 FEBRUARY 1842]

Mention in To Forster, 24 Feb 42.[†3]

Refusing him financial help.

To JOHN S. BARTLETT,[†1] 24 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Doheny Memorial Library, California.

Private and Confidential
Carlton House. | Twenty Fourth February 1842.

My Dear Sir.

Our friend Clark[†2] has shewn me your letter. It is so very generous and manly, and is couched in so true a spirit, that I cannot help inflicting this note upon you, in reply.

I do not expect that any alteration will take place in the Law of International Copyright, until I am past the sense of Justice or Injustice, and my children are fighting their own way in the World. Until the Law is altered nothing can be done through the General Honesty and Good Feeling. The absence of all Generosity, Honor, or Truth which distinguishes the gross assaults that have been made upon me, here, for alluding to the subject, sufficiently assures me of that.

I thank you, nevertheless, for your frank note; and hold the feeling which dictated it, in unaffected respect.[†3]

I have just received a communication, which is such an exquisite satire upon some of the loudest upholders of the existing system, that I cannot forbear sending it to you—with full permission to print it, if you like.[†4] The circumstances of its receipt are these.—A man came here the day before yesterday, and demanded—not besought—demanded pecuniary assistance from the gentleman who acts as my secretary: on the ground that he was an itinerant vendor of books, and had earned his living by selling mine. As his manner was extremely offensive and bullying, and as I really did not recognize the validity of his claim, I begged the gentleman aforesaid, to write him a note to the effect that I every day received a vast number of similar applications (which I need scarcely say is the Truth)—that if I were a man of large fortune, I could not assist all those who appealed to me—and that I regretted the not being able to assist him. Upon the receipt of this epistle, he sent me the inclosed. Will you return it to me by post in the course of tomorrow, as I wish to save it for England? It is much too good to be lost.[†1]

My Dear Sir, I am always,
Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

John. S. Bartlett Esquire

To WILLIAM C. BARTON,[†2] 24 FEBRUARY [1842]*

MS[†3] Dr Noël J. Cortés.

Carlton House February 24

Dear Sir

I have read your letter with much pleasure and cordially thank you for it.

I am a little surprised by the question you ask, as the whole meaning and purpose of the story pointed to that end or none. I am not aware that I can give you any better reason for Nell's death than you will find in the last paragraph of page 352 of Lea and Blanchards American Edition of the tale.[†4]

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Wm. C. Barton Esq.

To MRS DAVID C. COLDEN,[†5] 24 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: With a small parcel.[†6] | Mrs. Colden | 28 Laight Street | Hudson Square.

Carlton House. | Twenty Fourth February 1842.

My Dear Mrs. Colden.

Kate told me when I had my hair docked t'other day,[†7] that you wanted some of it to give away. I am so desirous to live in your recollection, and in that of your good husband and esteemed family, that I have been vain enough to have a very small specimen of my head, set in the accompanying little brooch; of which, with more good wishes than I can express, and a sincerer meaning than I can convey to you, I entreat your acceptance.[†1]

To THOMAS B. FLORENCE, 24 FEBRUARY [1842]

Text from American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1924; MS 2 pp.

Carlton House | February 24

I beg to refer you again to my former letter[†2] which you seem to have misunderstood. I wished and still wish to respectfully decline any Public reception or recognition of any kind; and I beg most earnestly to repeat this desire.

Faithfully | your friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To THE REV. W. B. SPRAGUE,[†4] 24 FEBRUARY [1842]

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2029 (1926); MS 2 pp.; dated Carlton House, 24 Feb.

Saying that he expects to be in Albany before June. [†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, 24 FEBRUARY [1842]

Extract in F, III, iii, 218-23 (continuation of letter begun 17 Feb).

Twenty-fourth February

It is unnecessary to say ... that this letter didn't come by the sailing packet, and will come by the Cunard boat.[†6] After the ball I was laid up with a very bad sore throat, which confined me to the house four whole days; and as I was unable to write, or indeed to do anything but doze and drink lemonade, I missed the ship.... I have still a horrible cold, and so has Kate, but in other respects we are all right. I proceed to my third head: the international copyright question.

I believe there is no country, on the face of the earth, where there is less freedom of opinion on any subject in reference to which there is a broad difference of opinion, than in this.[†7]—There!—I write the words with reluctance, disappointment, and sorrow; but I believe it from the bottom of my soul. I spoke, as you know, of international copyright, at Boston; and I spoke of it again at Hartford.[†1] My friends were paralysed with wonder at such audacious daring. The notion that I, a man alone by himself, in America, should venture to suggest to the Americans that there was one point on which they were neither just to their own countrymen nor to us, actually struck the boldest dumb! Washington Irving, Prescott, Hoffman,[†2] Bryant, Halleck, Dana, Washington Allston[†3]—every man who writes in this country is devoted to the question, and not one of them dares to raise his voice and complain of the atrocious state of the law.[†4] It is nothing that of all men living I am the greatest loser by it. It is nothing that I have a claim to speak and be heard. The wonder is that a breathing man can be found with temerity enough to suggest to the Americans the possibility of their having done wrong. I wish you could have seen the faces that I saw, down both sides of the table at Hartford, when I began to talk about Scott.[†1] I wish you could have heard how I gave it out. My blood so boiled as I thought of the monstrous injustice that I felt as if I were twelve feet high when I thrust it down their throats.

I had no sooner made that second speech than such an outcry began (for the purpose of deterring me from doing the like in this city) as an Englishman can form no notion of.[†2] Anonymous letters; verbal dissuasions; newspaper attacks making Colt (a murderer who is attracting great attention here)[†3] an angel by comparison with me; assertions that I was no gentleman, but a mere mercenary scoundrel; coupled with the most monstrous mis-representations relative to my design and purpose in visiting the United States;[†4] came pouring in upon me every day. The dinner committee here (composed of the first gentlemen in America, remember that) were so dismayed, that they besought me[†5] not to pursue the subject although they every one agreed with me. I answered that I would. That nothing should deter me.... That the shame was theirs, not mine; and that as I would not spare them when I got home, I would not be silenced here. Accordingly, when the night came, I asserted my right, with all the means I could command to give it dignity, in face, manner, or words;[†6] and

I believe that if you could have seen and heard me, you would have loved me better for it than ever you did in your life.[†1]

The New York Herald, which you will receive with this,[†2] is the Satirist[†3] of America;[†4] but having a great circulation (on account of its commercial intelligence and early news) it can afford to secure the best reporters.[†5] ... My speech is done, upon the whole, with remarkable accuracy. There are a great many typographical errors in it; and by the omission of one or two words, or the substitution of one word for another, it is often materially weakened. Thus I did not say that I "claimed" my right, but that I "asserted" it; and I did not say that I had "some claim," but that I had "a most righteous claim," to speak. But altogether it is very correct.[†1],[†2]

The effect of all this copyright agitation at least has been to awaken a great sensation on both sides of the subject; the respectable newspapers and reviews taking up the cudgels as strongly in my favour,[†3] as the others have done against me. Some of the vagabonds take great credit to themselves (grant us patience!) for having made me popular by publishing my books in newspapers:[†4] as if there were no England, no Scotland,[†5] no Germany,[†6] no place but America in the whole world. A splendid satire upon this kind of trash has just occurred. A man came here yesterday, and demanded, not besought but demanded, pecuniary assistance; and fairly bullied Mr. Q for money. When I came home, I dictated a letter to this effect—that such applications reached me in vast numbers every day; that if I were a man of fortune, I could not render assistance to all who sought it; and that, depending on my own exertion for all the help I could give, I regretted to say I could afford him none. Upon this, my gentleman sits down and writes me that he is an itinerant bookseller; that he is the first man who sold my books in New York; that he is distressed in the city where I am revelling in luxury; that he thinks it rather strange that the man who wrote Nickleby should be utterly destitute of feeling; and that he would have me "take care I don't repent it." What do you think of that?[†7]—as Mac would say. I thought it such a good commentary, that I dispatched the letter to the editor of the only English newspaper here,[†1] and told him he might print it if he liked.

I will tell you what I should like, my dear friend, always supposing that your judgment concurs with mine; and that you would take the trouble to get such a document. I should like to have a short letter addressed to me,[†2] by the principal English authors who signed the international copyright petition,[†3] expressive of their sense that I have done my duty to the cause. I am sure I deserve it, but I don't wish it on that ground. It is because its publication in the best journals here would unquestionably do great good. As the gauntlet is down, let us go on. Clay[†4] has already sent a gentleman to me express from Washington (where I shall be on the 6th or 7th of next month) to declare his strong interest in the matter, his cordial approval of the "manly" course I have held in reference to it, and his desire to stir in it if possible.[†5] I have lighted up such a blaze[†6] that a meeting of the foremost people on the other side (very respectfully and properly conducted in reference to me, personally, I am bound to say) was held in this town 'tother[†1] night.[†2] And it would be a thousand pities if we did not strike as hard as we can, now that the iron is so hot.

I have come at last, and it is time I did, to my life here, and intentions for the future. I can do nothing that I want to do, go nowhere where I want to go, and see nothing that I want to see. If I turn into the street, I am followed by a multitude. If I stay at home, the house becomes, with callers, like a fair. If I visit a public institution, with only one friend, the directors come down incontinently, waylay me in the yard, and address me in a long speech. I go to a party in the evening, and am so inclosed and hemmed about by people, stand where I will, that I am exhausted for want of air. I dine out, and have to talk about everything, to everybody. I go to church for quiet, and there is a violent rush to the neighbourhood of the pew I sit in, and the clergyman preaches at me. I take my seat in a railroad car, and the very conductor won't leave me alone. I get out at a station, and can't drink a glass of water, without having a hundred people looking down my throat when I open my mouth to swallow.[†3] Conceive what all this is! Then by every post, letters on letters arrive, all about nothing, and all demanding an immediate answer. This man is offended because I won't live in his house; and that man is thoroughly disgusted because I won't go out more than four times in one evening. I have no rest or peace, and am in a perpetual worry.

Under these febrile circumstances, which this climate especially favors, I have come to the resolution that I will not (so far as my will has anything to do with the matter) accept any more public entertainments or public recognitions of any kind, during my stay in the United States;[†4] and in pursuance of this determination I have refused invitations from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington,

Virginia, Albany, and Providence.[†1] Heaven knows whether this will be effectual, but I shall soon see, for on Monday morning the 28th we leave for Philadelphia.[†2] There, I shall only stay three days. Thence we go to Baltimore, and there I shall only stay three days. Thence to Washington, where we may stay perhaps ten days; perhaps not so long. Thence to Virginia, where we may halt for one day; and thence to Charleston[†3], where we may pass a week perhaps; and where we shall very likely remain until your March letters reach us, through David Colden. I had a design of going from Charleston to Columbia in South Carolina, and there engaging a carriage, a baggage-tender and negro boy to guard the same, and a saddle-horse for myself—with which caravan I intended going "right away," as they say here, into the west, through the wilds of Kentucky and Tennessee, across the Alleghany-mountains, and so on until we should strike the lakes and could get to Canada.[†4] But it has been represented to me that this is a track only known to travelling merchants; that the roads are bad[†5], the country a tremendous waste, the inns log-houses, and the journey one that would play the very devil with Kate. I am staggered, but not deterred. If I find it possible to be done in the time, I mean to do it; being quite satisfied that without some such dash, I can never be a free agent, or see anything worth the telling.

We mean to return home in a packet-ship—not a steamer. Her name is the George Washington, and she will sail from here, for Liverpool, on the seventh of June. At that season of the year, they are seldom more than three weeks making the voyage; and I never will trust myself upon the wide ocean, if it please Heaven, in a steamer again.[†6] When I tell you all that I observed on board that Britannia, I shall astonish you. Meanwhile, consider two of their dangers. First, that if the funnel were blown overboard, the vessel must instantly be on fire, from stem to stern:[†1] to comprehend which consequence, you have only to understand that the funnel is more than 40 feet high, and that at night you see the solid fire two or three feet above its top. Imagine this swept down by a strong wind, and picture to yourself the amount of flame on deck; and that a strong wind is likely to sweep it down you soon learn, from the precautions taken to keep it up in a storm, when it is the first thing thought of.[†2] Secondly, each of these boats consumes between London and Halifax 700 tons of coals;[†3] and it is pretty clear, from this enormous difference of weight in a ship of only 1200 tons burden in all, that she must either be too heavy when she comes out of port, or too light when she goes in. The daily difference in her rolling, as she burns the coals out, is something absolutely fearful.[†4] Add to all this, that by day and night she is full of fire and people, that she has no boats, and that the struggling of that enormous machinery in a heavy sea seems as though it would rend her into fragments—and you may have a pretty con-siderable damned good sort of a feeble notion that it don't fit nohow; and that it a'nt calculated[†5] to make you smart, overmuch; and that you don't feel 'special bright; and by no means first rate; and not at all tonguey (or disposed for conversation);[†6] and that however rowdy[†7] you may be by natur', it does use you up com-plete, and that's a fact; and makes you quake considerable, and disposed toe damn the engine!—All of which phrases, I beg to add, are pure Americanisms of the first water.[†1]

When we reach Baltimore, we are in the regions of slavery. It exists there, in its least shocking and most mitigated form; but there it is. They whisper, here (they dare only whisper, you know, and that below their breaths), that in that place, and all through the South, there is a dull gloomy cloud on which the very word seems written. I shall be able to say, one of these days, that I accepted no public mark of respect in any place where slavery was;—and that's something.

The ladies of America are decidedly and unquestionably beautiful. Their complexions are not so good as those of Englishwomen; their beauty does not last so long; and their figures are very inferior. But they are most beautiful.[†2] I still reserve my opinion of the national character—just whispering that I tremble for a radical coming here, unless he is a radical on principle, by reason and reflection, and from the sense of right.[†3] I fear that if he were anything else, he would return home a tory.... I say no more on that head for two months from this time, save that I do fear that the heaviest blow ever dealt at liberty will be dealt by this country, in the failure of its example to the earth. The scenes that are passing in Congress now, all tending to the separation of the States,[†4] fill one with such a deep disgust that I dislike the very name of Washington (meaning the place, not the man), and am repelled by the mere thought of approaching it.

To FRANCIS ALEXANDER, 25 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Mr Charles Hamilton.

Carlton House, New York. | Twenty Fifth February 1842.

My Dear Mr. Alexander.

Your beautiful and welcome present,[†5] arrived safely to day. I will hang it in my own room at home, please God—and you shall see it there.

Yes. I have kept the Total Abstinence Pledge.[†1] And I mean to keep it, unbroken, to the last.

Mr. P though no longer a new broom, sweeps clean still. He does what he has to do, well,—and always with a ready, cheerful will.[†2]

For him, and much more—thank you!

Always believe me | Faithfully, | Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Alexander Esquire

over[†3]

To MRS ALEXANDER, 25 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Mr Charles Hamilton.

Carlton House, New York. | Twenty Fifth February 1842.

My Dear Mrs. Alexander.

I have received your beautiful book[†4] with exceeding pleasure, and will always preserve it carefully, for your sake. I have scarcely the heart to rob you of such beautiful triumphs,—and yet I would not be without them for a great deal.[†5]

Mrs. Dickens has a very bad cold, but she sends a host of very warm messages and loves. She begs you to kiss "Fan"[†6] in her name. If you will ask Fan to kiss you in mine (when Mr. Alexander is looking another way) I shall be even more indebted to you than I am already.

Ever believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE C. BAKER,[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1842

Mention in Dodd, Mead & Co. catalogue, Nov 1901; MS 1 p.; dated Carlton House, New York, 27 Feb 42.

To JOHN FORSTER, 27 FEBRUARY [1842]

Extract in F, III, iii, 224 (end of letter begun 17 Feb, continued 24 Feb). From New York.

Twenty-seventh February. Sunday.

There begins to be great consternation here, in reference to the Cunard packet[†2] which (we suppose) left Liverpool on the fourth. She has not yet arrived. We scarcely know what to do with ourselves in our extreme anxiety to get letters from home. I have really had serious thoughts of going back to Boston, alone, to be nearer news. We have determined to remain here until Tuesday afternoon, if she should not arrive before, and to send Mr. Q and the luggage on to Philadelphia to-morrow morning. God grant she may not have gone down: but every ship that comes in brings intelligence of a terrible gale (which indeed was felt ashore here) on the night of the fourteenth; and the sea-captains swear (not without some prejudice of course) that no steamer could have lived through it, supposing her to have been in its full fury. As there is no steam packet to go to England, supposing the Caledonia not to arrive, we are obliged to send our letters by the Garrick ship, which sails early to-morrow morning. Consequently I must huddle this up, and dispatch it to the post-office with all speed. I have so much to say that I could fill quires of paper, which renders this sudden pull-up[†3] the more provoking.

I have in my portmanteau a petition for an international copyright law, signed by all the best American writers with Washington Irving at their head.[†4] They have requested me to hand it to Clay for presentation,[†5] and to back it with any remarks I may think proper to offer. So "Hoo-roar for the principle, as the money-lender said, ven he vouldn't renoo the bill."[†6]

God bless you.... You know what I would say about home and the darlings.

A hundred times God bless you.... Fears are entertained for Lord Ashburton[†1] also. Nothing has been heard of him.[†2]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 27 FEBRUARY 1842†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: By Packet Ship "Garrick" from N. York. | Daniel Maclise Esquire. R.A. | 14 Russell Place | Fitzroy Square | London | England.

Carlton House, New York. | February The Twenty Seventh 1842.

My Dear Mac. Don't blame me for writing a short letter.—I am obliged, most unexpectedly to despatch it by a Sailing Ship tomorrow, instead of having until Tuesday or Wednesday; for the Caledonia Steamer which left Liverpool on the Fourth, has not yet arrived, and terrible apprehensions are beginning to be entertained for her safety,[†3] as there was an awful gale on the night of the Fourteenth, and the coast hereabouts is strewn with wrecks. God knows, dear Mac, whether your hand-writing is not now at the bottom of the deep Sea. When I think of the passengers, and the fine fellows in command of the vessel, and how recently we have been exposed to the same dangers, my heart grows sick and faint within me.

I did intend leaving here for Philadelphia, tomorrow. But I have resolved to send my secretary and baggage on, and to linger behind until Tuesday afternoon, in the hope that the poor steamer may yet arrive in safety. It is worth remarking that I "registered a vow"[†4] soon after we came ashore, not to return in a steamer; having observed on our passage many dangers to which those demons are peculiarly liable. Indeed, the wonder with me, is, how they get across in heavy weather, as they have done. Instead of riding on the tops of the waves as ships do, they cleave their passage through them, and are under water the whole time. I wish you could once—only once—hear the noise of the sea upon her deck, and feel how she stops and quivers. Oh! It is a most damnable invention out upon the wide ocean; by the ghosts of all those who went down in the President it is.

[†a]We purpose returning in a Ship—the George Washington—which is advertized to sail from here, on the Seventh of June. We were going on, South, tomorrow, but have decided to remain here until Tuesday afternoon, in the hope of yet getting letters from dear, old, hearty home.

I send you with this, a newspaper (the Satirist of America,[†1] but the best paper here) containing an account of the Dinner. It is impossible to describe the Ball. I will only tell you that there were Three Thousand People present, and that it was the most splendid, gorgeous, brilliant affair you—yes, even you, Mac— and Good God my dear Dan, what an eye you have[†2]—can possibly conceive.

Oh for Jack Straw's! Oh for Jack![†3] oh for Topping![†4]—oh for Charley, Mamey, Katey[†5]—the study, the Sunday's dinner, the anything and everything connected with our life at Home! How cheerfully would I turn from this land of freedom and spittoons—of crowds, and noise, and endless rush of strangers—of everything public, and nothing private—of endless rounds of entertainments, and daily levees to receive 500 people—to the lightest, least-prized pleasure of "Den'ner Terrace"![†6] I turn my eyes towards the picture[†7] (which is always set out in great state, wherever we are) and yearn for Home, three thousand miles away. Oh Mac, Mac!

Exchange news with Forster—I say "exchange", for I send you herewith, a document of which he knows nothing.[†8] The Bill of Fare, at the Ball Supper.[†9] God bless you. Ever believe me, My Dear Mac,[†a]

Your affectionate and attached friend

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 27 FEBRUARY 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Carlton House, New York | Twenty Seventh February 1842.

My Dear Friend.

I have but a moment for writing to you; all my plans of correspondence this month, being sadly deranged by the non-arrival of the Caledonia, which, it is much feared has gone down at Sea.
She may arrive, yet; but if she left England to her time, she has been out 23 days.

You will receive a newspaper from me by a Sailing packet which sailed from here this morning. By the April steamer I will write you at length.[†1]

Always Yours faithfully

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 28 FEBRUARY 1842

Extract in F, III, iii, 224-6.[†2]

Carlton-house, New York, | February twenty-eighth, 1842.

The Caledonia, I grieve and regret to say, has not arrived. If she left England to her time, she has been four and twenty days at sea. There is no news of her; and on the nights of the fourteenth and eighteenth it blew a terrible gale, which almost justifies the worst suspicions. For myself, I have hardly any hope of her; having seen enough, in our passage out, to convince me that steaming across the ocean in heavy weather is as yet an experiment of the utmost hazard.

As it was supposed that there would be no steamer whatever for England this month (since in ordinary course the Caledonia would have returned with the mails on the 2nd of March), I hastily got the letters ready yesterday and sent them by the Garrick; which may perhaps be three weeks out, but is not very likely to be longer. But belonging to the Cunard company is a boat called the Unicorn,[†3] which in the summer time plies up the St. Lawrence, and brings passengers from Canada to join the British and North American steamers at Halifax. In the winter she lies at the last-mentioned place; from which news has come this morning that they have sent her on to Boston for the mails; and, rather than interrupt the communication, mean to dispatch her to England in lieu of the poor Caledonia. This in itself, by the way, is a daring deed; for she was originally built to run between Liverpool and Glasgow, and is no more designed for the Atlantic than a Calais packet-boat; though she once crossed it, in the summer season.

You may judge, therefore, what the owners think of the probability of the Caledonia's arrival. How slight an alteration in our plans would have made us passengers on board of her!

It would be difficult to tell you, my dear fellow, what an impression this has made upon our minds, or with what intense anxiety and suspense we have been waiting for your letters from home. We were to have gone South to-day, but linger here until to-morrow afternoon (having sent the secretary and luggage forward) for one more chance of news. Love to dear Macready, and to dear Mac, and every one we care for. It's useless to speak of the dear children. It seems now as though we should never hear of them....

P.S. Washington Irving is a great fellow. We have laughed most heartily together. He is just the man he ought to be. So is Doctor Channing, with whom I have had an interesting correspondence since I saw him last at Boston.[†1] Halleck is a merry little man. Bryant a sad one, and very reserved. Washington Allston the painter (who wrote Monaldi)[†2] is a fine specimen of a glorious old genius.[†3] Longfellow, whose volume of poems[†4] I have got for you, is a frank accomplished man as well as a fine writer, and will be in town "next fall." Tell Macready that I suspect prices here must have rather altered since his time. I paid our fortnight's bill here, last night. We have dined out every day (except when I was laid up with a sore throat), and only had in all four bottles of wine. The bill was 70*l.* English!!!

You will see, by my other letter, how we have been fêted and feasted; and how there is war to the knife about the international copyright; and how I will speak about it, and decline to be put down....

Oh for news from home! I think of your letters so full of heart and friendship, with perhaps a little scrawl of Charley's or Mamey's, lying at the bottom of the deep sea; and am as full of sorrow as if they had once been living creatures.— Well! they may come, yet.

To MISS SARAH MOORE,[†5] 28 FEBRUARY 1842*

MS[†6] Dunedin Public Library.

Carlton House Feby. 28th. 1842.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Sarah Moore, and in forwarding the enclosed letter of Introduction, begs to say, that he defered[†7] doing so until he left the City[†8] as every moment of his time was occupied during the whole period of his stay, and he did not wish to trouble Miss M. unnescessarily.[†7]

To THE REV. JOHN McVICKAR,[†1] 28 FEBRUARY 1842

Text from John Brett Longstaff, The Enterprising Life: John McVickar, 1787-1868, New York, 1961, p. 272.

Carlton House | 28 February 1842

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Reverend Professor McVickar, and in forwarding the enclosed letter of Introduction begs to say that he deferred doing so until he left the city as every moment of his time was fully occupied during the whole period of his stay, and he did not wish to trouble Mr. McVickar unnecessarily.

March

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, 1 MARCH 1842*

MS Columbia University Libraries.

Carlton House, New York | First of March 1842.

Dear Mr. Putnam

Mrs. Dickens is so very unwell with a bad sore throat, that I am constrained to remain here until tomorrow. I hope to come, either with or without her, by the train which leaves here at five o'Clock tomorrow afternoon.†2

If you see Mr. Ingersoll†3 in the meanwhile, make my best regards to him†4— I have only just found that there was some writing on this sheet of paper. This is the cause of the unseemly lining-out, which gives the foregoing handsome appearance to this note.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

G. W. Putnam Esquire

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, 2 MARCH 1842*

MS Berg Collection. Address: G. W. Putnam Esquire United States Hotel | Philadelphia.

Carlton House. | March The Second 1842

Dear Mr. Putnam.

As the doctor forbids Mrs. Dickens' getting up; and as I fear that if I left her here, alone in sickness at such a great distance from Home, she would feel distressed after I had gone; I have determined to remain here until she can come on with me. I hope she will be able to travel, by the day after tomorrow; but I will write to you again tomorrow, and tell you.†5

She has an ulcerated sore throat. It is not very bad. But she is subject to an attack of this kind every Spring; and on that account the doctor is more cautious than he would otherwise be.

There is no news of the Caledonia—except that the Unicorn has cruised out to look for her. A fisherman has reported at Boston that being out in his boat some mornings ago, he saw in a certain latitude not very far from Halifax, a large steam vessel quite disabled;[†1] being under no sail and having no smoke issuing from her funnel; and tossing about at the mercy of the sea. Whether this appearance had its sole existence in the fisherman's brain, or whether it was some other ship, or whether (as in the case of the poor President) men's fancies have begun to float about flying-Dutchman[†2]-wise, on the ocean, I can't say.

After this detention, I shall limit my stay at Philadelphia to two days—knock off Baltimore in one—and dispose of Washington in a week.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS S. GIBBS,[†3] 3 MARCH 1842

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Apr 1968; MS 1 p.; dated New York, 3 Mar 42.

Thanking him for his invitation, but regretting that he is engaged for the whole of the next day even if he remains in New York so long which I am by no means sure of doing.

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, 4 MARCH 1842*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

Carlton House, New York | Fourth of March 1842

Dear Mr. Putnam,

Mrs. Dickens is better; and we shall come on—without fail, I hope—by the 5 o'Clock train tomorrow (Saturday).

Pray do not on any account lead anyone to suppose that I shall remain in Philadelphia more than two days.[†4] We cannot mark time, and must go forward. I do not think now, that I shall make any halt in Baltimore; as I am assured by those who know the place, that if we do not proceed to Charleston with all possible despatch, we shall find the heat most oppressive and uncomfortable.[†5] Do not talk about our movements, except so far as Philadelphia is concerned, to anybody. I have so much enjoyed the quiet I have had here for the last two or three days (owing to its having been generally supposed that I left New York on Monday), that I am more anxious than ever, to travel peaceably.[†1]

I received your letter this morning.

They have moved us into a room looking upon Broadway, which is more cheerful and gay than our old one; to say nothing of its having a decent chimney, which the smoke goes up, instead of coming down.

You had better give our Philadelphia landlord notice of our movements—I mean of our intention to leave on Wednesday morning. Don't let our coming be buzzed about—so that there may be no more people at the depot than there usually are.[†2]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To ASBURY DICKENS,[†3] 6 MARCH 1842

Mention in John Anderson Jr. catalogue No. 297; MS 1 p.; dated Philadelphia, 6 Mar 42.

To JOHN FORSTER, 6 MARCH 1842

Extract in F, III, iv, 230-5.

United-states-hotel Philadelphia, | Sunday, sixth March, 1842

As this is likely to be the only quiet day I shall have for a long time, I devote it to writing to you. We have heard nothing from you*[†4] yet, and only have for our consolation the reflection that the Columbia[†5] is now on her way out. No news had been heard of the Caledonia yesterday afternoon, when we left New York. We were to have quitted that place last Tuesday, but have been detained there all the week by Kate having so bad a sore throat that she was obliged to keep her bed. We left yesterday afternoon at five o'clock, and arrived here at eleven last night. Let me say, by the way, that this is a very trying climate.

I have often asked Americans in London which were the better railroads—ours or theirs? They have taken time for reflection, and generally replied on mature consideration that they rather thought we excelled; in respect of the punctuality with which we arrived at our stations, and the smoothness of our travelling. I wish you could see what an American railroad is, in some parts where I now have seen them.[†1] I won't say I wish you could feel what it is, because that would be an unchristian and savage aspiration. It is never inclosed, or warded off. You walk down the main street of a large town: and, slap-dash, headlong, pell-mell, down the middle of the street; with pigs burrowing, and boys flying kites and playing marbles, and men smoking, and women talking, and children crawling, close to the very rails; there comes tearing along a mad locomotive with its train of cars, scattering a red-hot shower of sparks (from its wood fire) in all directions; screeching, hissing, yelling, and panting; and nobody one atom more concerned than if it were a hundred miles away. You cross a turnpike-road; and there is no gate, no policeman, no signal—nothing to keep the wayfarer or quiet traveller out of the way, but a wooden arch on which is written in great letters "Look out for the locomotive." And if any man, woman, or child, don't look out, why it's his or her fault, and there's an end of it.

The cars are like very shabby omnibuses—only larger; holding sixty or seventy people. The seats, instead of being placed long ways, are put cross-wise, back to front. Each holds two. There is a long row of these on each side of the caravan, and a narrow passage up the centre. The windows are usually all closed, and there is very often, in addition, a hot, close, most intolerable charcoal stove in a red-hot glow. The heat and closeness are quite insupportable. But this is the characteristic of all American houses, of all the public institutions, chapels, theatres, and prisons. From the constant use of the hard anthracite coal in these beastly furnaces, a perfectly new class of diseases is springing up in the country. Their effect upon an Englishman is briefly told. He is always very sick and very faint; and has an intolerable headache, morning, noon, and night.[†2]

In the ladies' car, there is no smoking of tobacco allowed. All gentlemen who have ladies with them, sit in this car; and it is usually very full. Before it, is the gentlemen's car; which is something narrower. As I had a window close to me yesterday which commanded this gentlemen's car, I looked at it pretty often, perforce. The flashes of saliva flew so perpetually and incessantly out of the windows all the way, that it looked as though they were ripping open feather-beds inside, and letting the wind dispose of the feathers.[†3] But this spitting is universal. In the courts of law, the judge has his spittoon on the bench, the counsel have theirs, the witness has his, the prisoner his, and the crier his. The jury are accommodated at the rate of three men to a spittoon (or spit-box as they call it here); and the spectators in the gallery are provided for, as so many men who in the course of nature expectorate without cessation. There are spit-boxes in every steamboat, bar-room, public dining-room, house of office, and place of general resort, no matter what it be. In the hospitals, the students are requested, by placard, to use the boxes provided for them, and not to spit upon the stairs. I have twice seen gentlemen, at evening parties in New York, turn aside when they were not engaged in conversation, and spit upon the drawing-room carpet. And in every bar-room and hotel passage the stone floor looks as if it were paved with open oysters—from the quantity of this kind of deposit which tesselates it all over.[†1] ...

The institutions at Boston,[†2] and at Hartford, are most admirable. It would be very difficult indeed to improve upon them. But this is not so at New York; where there is an ill-managed lunatic asylum,[†3] a bad jail,[†4] a dismal workhouse,[†5] and a perfectly intolerable place of police-imprisonment.[†6] A man is found drunk in the streets, and is thrown into a cell[†7] below the surface of the earth; profoundly dark; so full of noisome vapours that when you enter it with a candle you see a ring about the light, like that which surrounds the moon in wet and cloudy weather; and so offensive and disgusting in its filthy odours, that you cannot bear its stench. He is shut up within an iron door, in a series of vaulted passages where no one stays; has no drop of water, or ray of light, or visitor, or help of any kind; and there he remains until the magistrate's arrival. If he die (as one man did not long ago) he is half eaten by the rats in an hour's time (as this man was). I expressed, on seeing these places the other night, the disgust I felt, and which it would be impossible to repress. "Well; I don't know," said the night constable—that's a national answer by the bye—"Well; I don't know. I've had six and twenty young women locked up here together, and beautiful ones too, and that's a fact." The cell was certainly no larger than the wine-cellar in Devonshireterrace; at least three feet lower; and stunk like a common sewer. There was one woman in it, then. The magistrate begins his examinations at five o'clock in the morning; the watch is set at seven at night; if the prisoners have been given in charge by an officer, they are not taken out before nine or ten; and in the interval they remain in these places, where they could no more be heard to cry for help, in case of a fit or swoon among them, than a man's voice could be heard after he was coffined up in his grave.

There is a prison[†1] in the same city, and indeed in the same building, where prisoners for grave offences await their trial, and to which they are sent back when under remand. It sometimes happens that a man or woman will remain here for twelve months, waiting the result of motions for new trial, and in arrest of judgment, and what not. I went into it the other day: without any notice or preparation, otherwise I find it difficult to catch them in their work-a-day aspect. I stood in a long, high, narrow building, consisting of four galleries one above the other, with a bridge across each, on which sat a turnkey, sleeping or reading as the case might be. From the roof, a couple of windsails dangled and drooped, limp and useless; the skylight being fast closed, and they only designed for summer use. In the centre of the building was the eternal stove; and along both sides of every gallery was a long row of iron doors—looking like furnace doors, being very small, but black and cold as if the fires within had gone out.

A man with keys appears, to show us round. A good-looking fellow, and, in his way, civil and obliging.[†2]

"Suppose a man's here for twelve months. Do you mean to say he never comes out of that little iron door."

"He may walk some, perhaps—not much."

"Will you show me a few of them?"

"Ah! All, if you like."

He threw open a door, and I looked in. An old man was sitting on his bed, reading. The light came in through a small chink, very high up in the wall. Across the room ran a thick iron pipe to carry off filth; this was bored for the reception of something like a big funnel in shape; and over the funnel was a watercock. This was his washing apparatus and water-closet. It was not savoury, but not very offensive. He looked up at me; gave himself an odd, dogged kind of shake; and fixed his eyes on his book again. I came out, and the door was shut and locked. He had been there a month, and would have to wait another month for his trial. "Has he ever walked out now, for instance?" "No." ...

"In England, if a man is under sentence of death even, he has a yard to walk in at certain times."

"Possible?"

... Making me this answer with a coolness which is perfectly untranslateable and inexpressible, and which is quite peculiar to the soil, he took me to the women's side; telling me, upon the way, all about this man, who, it seems, murdered his wife, and will certainly be hanged. The women's doors have a small square aperture in them; I looked through one, and saw a pretty boy about ten or twelve years old, who seemed lonely and miserable enough—as well he might.[†1] "What's he been doing?" says I. "Nothing" says my friend. "Nothing!" says I. "No," says he. "He's here for safe keeping. He saw his father kill his mother, and is detained to give evidence against him—that was his father, you saw just now." "But that's rather hard treatment for a witness, isn't it?"—"Well! I don't know. It a'nt a very rowdy life, and that's a fact." So my friend, who was an excellent fellow in his way, and very obliging, and a handsome young man to boot, took me off to show me some more curiosities; and I was very much obliged to him,[†2] for the place was so hot, and I so giddy, that I could scarcely stand....

When a man is hanged in New York, he is walked out of one of these cells, without any condemned sermon or other religious formalities, straight into the narrow jail yard, which may be about the width of Cranbourn-alley. There, a gibbet is erected, which is of curious construction; for the culprit stands on the earth with the rope about his neck, which passes through a pulley in the top of the "Tree" (see Newgate Calendar passim),[†3] and is attached to a weight something heavier than the man. This weight being suddenly let go, drags the rope down with it, and sends the criminal flying up fourteen feet into the air; while the judge, and jury, and five and twenty citizens (whose presence is required by the law), stand by, that they may afterwards certify to the fact. This yard is a very dismal place; and when I looked at it, I thought the practice infinitely superior to ours: much more solemn, and far less degrading and indecent.

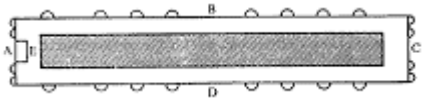
There is another prison[†1] near New York which is a house of correction. The convicts labour in stone-quarries near at hand, but the jail has no covered yards or shops, so that when the weather is wet (as it was when I was there) each man is shut up in his own little cell, all the live-long day. These cells, in all the correction-houses I have seen, are on one uniform plan—thus:



A, B, C, and D, are the walls of the building with windows in them, high up in the wall. The shaded place in the centre represents four tiers of cells, one above the other, with doors of grated iron, and a light grated gallery to each tier. Four tiers front to B, and four to D, so that by this means you may be said, in walking round, to see eight tiers in all. The intermediate blank space you walk in, looking up at these galleries; so that, coming in at the door E, and going either to the right or left till you come back to the door again, you see all the cells under one roof and in one high room.[†2] Imagine them in number 400,[†3] and in every one a man locked up; this one with his hands through the bars of his grate, this one in bed (in the middle of the day, remember), and this one flung down in a heap upon the ground with his head against the bars like a wild beast. Make the rain pour down in torrents outside. Put the everlasting stove in the midst; hot, suffocating, and vaporous, as a witch's cauldron. Add a smell like that of a thousand old mildewed umbrellas wet through, and a thousand dirty clothes-bags musty, moist, and fusty, and you will have some idea—a very feeble one, my dear friend, on my word—of this place yesterday week. You know of course that we adopted our improvements in prison-discipline from the American pattern;[†4] but I am confident that the writers who have the most lustily lauded the American prisons, have never seen Chesterton's[†5] domain or Tracey's.[†6] There is no more comparison between these two prisons of ours, and any I have seen here YET, than there is between the keepers here,[†1] and those two gentlemen. Putting out of sight the difficulty we have in England of finding useful labour for the prisoners (which of course arises from our being an older country, and having vast numbers of artizans unemployed),[†2] our system is more complete, more impressive, and more satisfactory in every respect. It is very possible that I have not come to the best, not having yet seen Mount Auburn.[†3] I will tell you when I have. And also when I have come to those inns, mentioned—vaguely rather—by Miss Martineau, where they undercharge literary people for the love the landlords bear them.[†4] My experience, so far, has been of establishments where (perhaps for the same reason) they very monstrously and violently overcharge a man whose position forbids remonstrance.[†5]

To HARRY INGERSOLL,[†1] 6 MARCH 1842*

MS Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, Boston. Address: Harry Ingersoll Esquire,

United States Hotel[†2] | Sunday Morning March Sixth 1842.

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens is with me;[†3] and we shall both be very happy to dine with you tomorrow, as you so kindly propose.

If you be disengaged, I should be glad to plan some lion-inspecting[†4] expedition for tomorrow morning, but of that we can speak, when I have the pleasure of seeing you.—I go on to Washington next Wednesday without fail.

Always Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

We are most comfortably bestowed here, and owe you many thanks for your good offices.

To EDGAR ALLAN POE,[†5] 6 MARCH 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Private

United States Hotel | Sixth March 1842.

My Dear Sir

I shall be very glad to see you, whenever you will do me the favor to call.[†6]

I think I am more likely to be in the way between half past eleven and twelve, than at any other time.

I have glanced over the books you have been so kind as to send me;[†1] and more particularly at the papers to which you called my attention.[†2] I have the greater pleasure in expressing my desire to see you, on their account.

Apropos of the "construction" of Caleb Williams.[†3] Do you know that Godwin wrote it backwards—the last Volume first—and that when he had produced the hunting-down of Caleb, and the Catastrophe, he waited for months, casting about for a means of accounting for what he had done?[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edgar. A. Poe Esquire.

To ISAAC LEA,[†1] 7 MARCH 1842*

MS Mr Henry Lea Hudson.

U.S. Hotel. | Seventh March 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am very much obliged to you for your note. I have no occasion to trouble you, for you have anticipated all my wants, but I shall be happy to see you—and as I leave on Wednesday morning, and am engaged nearly all day tomorrow, I would say ten o'clock tomorrow morning, if it will not be inconvenient to you to shake hands with me at that hour.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Isaac Lea Esquire

To JOHN M. PATTON AND OTHERS,[†2] 7 MARCH [1842]

Text from the Richmond Enquirer, 19 Mar 42.

United States Hotel, March 7

Gentlemen,

I am truly obliged to you for your most kind and friendly invitation to a public dinner in Richmond.[†3]

I regret to say, however, that I have found it necessary, (putting a strong restraint upon my inclination,) to form a resolution not to accept any more public entertainments, during my short stay in this country. Upon the faith of this decision, I have already, most unwillingly, declined the proffered hospitality of many generous friends in other places; and no alternative is left me but to do the like by you.[†4]

Believe me that I am not the less sensible of your kindness, and that I am always,

Faithfully, your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

To John M. Patton, Esq, &c., &c.

To PETER RICHINGS,[†1] 7 MARCH 1842

Extract in John Anderson Jr. catalogue No. 141 (1902); dated 7 Mar 42.

I must decline to make any public visits to the theatre.[†2]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOSEPH STORY, 9 MARCH 1842*

MS University of Texas.

Fuller's Hotel[†3] | Wednesday Ninth March 1842.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Justice Story, and begs to forward the accompanying letters; one of which (Lord Brougham's) was accidentally unsealed, when it was detached from an outer envelope. And Mr. Dickens is extremely sorry to add that a pamphlet[†4] which Lord Brougham begged him to deliver to Mr. Justice Story, has been most unfortunately left behind, with some other papers, at New York. He earnestly hopes that Mr. Justice Story will not be inconvenienced by a few weeks' delay.

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 10 MARCH 1842

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: David C. Colden Esquire | 28 Laight Street | Hudson Square | New York.

Fuller's Hotel Washington | March The Tenth 1842.

My Dear Colden.

We reached this place safely last night: having sustained no more damage by the way, than the presence of a miraculously fractious child in the railroad Car from Philadelphia to Baltimore; who, leaving us at the last-named place, was relieved by another child in the same frame of mind,—in whose cheerful company we arrived here. He (it was a boy) set in so very heavily at Baltimore that I thought it impossible he could last; especially as his friends tempted him from time to time with a tin mug of milk and water, and other refreshment, from a basket. But contrary to my expectations, he cried the whole forty miles through; and when he was taken out at the station, the crown of his head was covered with crimson pimples—the consequence of his supernatural exertion.[†1]

We were very comfortably lodged at Philadelphia—and indeed we deserved to be; for the landlord not only charged us half rent for the rooms during the time he had expected us (which was quite right) but charged us also—when I say us, I mean Kate, her maid, and I—for board during the whole of the same period. As I could not help regarding the statement that he had paid for our food while we were paying for it at New York, in the light of a pleasant fiction, or ingenious jest, I did suggest through my factotum the slightest possible insinuation to that effect. It appeared, however, that it was "the custom"; and as strangers in Rome do as they do in Rome, I bowed to the custom, and paid.

I passed a whole day in the Penitentiary[†2]—where, as you know, the principle of Solitary confinement is observed, in the strictest manner, in every case. It is inexpressibly painful to see so many of the prisoners as I did, and to converse with them;[†3] but I fear that to a certain extent the system is a good one. I use the expression "I fear", because it is dreadful to believe that it is ever necessary to impose such a torture of the mind upon our fellow creatures. But it seems, from all one can learn, to do good:[†4] and now and then to effect that reclamation which gives joy in heaven.[†5] In the case of a very long term of imprisonment, however, I cannot but think it cruel, though I know it is mercifully and well intended. One man had been shut up by himself in the same Cell, for nearly twelve years.[†6] His time is just expiring. I asked him how he felt at the prospect of release,— and he answered—plucking in a strange way at his fingers, and looking restlessly about the walls and floor—that he didn't care; that it was all the same to him now; that he had looked forward to it once, but that was so long ago, that he had come to have no regard for anything. And so, with a heavy sigh, he went about his work,[†1] and would say no more. We are accustomed to hear it said sometimes that such a person must have felt in a minute, a year of suffering. But if ever twelve years of the most intense mental anguish were written in the small compass of one face, I saw it in this prisoner's. Indeed the men, however unlike naturally, become alike, and strikingly alike, in this place. There is the same bright eye, and haggard look, in them all; and an indescribable something—distantly resembling the attentive and sorrowful expression you see in the blind—which is never to be forgotten. The women bear it better, and acquire a patient and subdued look, that makes you very sad, but not distressingly so. Each of them seems a better creature than one feels one's-self to be, and that's a comfort. The prison is beautifully—exquisitely—kept, and thoroughly well managed: but I never in my life was more affected by anything which was not strictly my own grief, than I was by this sight. It will live in my recollection always. When I come to tell you something of my brief experience there, you will often think of it too.

We have been to both Houses of the Legislature to-day,[†2] and have seen many of the Lions, both living and stuffed. I think of going every day while I remain here.

I went to the Presidents,[†3] too, this morning, in company with a namesake who is Secretary to the Senate.[†4] He has a good face, (I mean the President) and his manners are very mild and gentlemanly.[†5] He expressed great surprise at my being so young. I would have returned the compliment; but he looked so jaded, that it stuck in my throat like Macbeth's amen.

Some twenty gentlemen were waiting in a lower room, for audiences. There is no denying that they did expectorate considerably. They wrought a complete change in the pattern of the carpet, even while I was there.—Before I forget it, let me ask you at what annual salary in Dollars, you would hold that office? Would you do it cheap—or dear?

We start for Charleston on Wednesday next.[†1] In the meanwhile if any news should reach you of the poor Caledonia, or our letters, I need not say how glad we shall be to receive it; or how happy we shall be to hear from you at all times and seasons. Those very small darlings we have left behind, hold Giants' places in our hearts; and that's the reason I suppose, why they are always full when we think of home.

We mean to wait at Charleston for the other letters you will send us, and which are now upon their way to you in the March Steamer from Liverpool. As we shall make no halt to speak of, between this place and Charleston, will you write to us, after we move from here, at

PAGE'S HOTEL, CHARLESTON, S.C.

Our route after that—whether it shall be back to New York, and so into Canada, or back to Baltimore, or back to Philadelphia, and thence to Pittsburgh and thereabout—I have not decided. But from Charleston, I will write to you again when I have received your packet there; with full and particular details.

God bless you. Give our united loves to Mrs. Colden and to Mrs. Wilkes,[†2] and to "Mrs. S",[†3] and Doctor Wilkes, and all friends—not forgetting the dear children and Nela Gibbs,[†4] to whom I beg my especial regards. We often talk of you and yours, and devoutly wish you lived at Charleston as well as New York, and could be there when we are. But if our wishes could take effect, you would be very Jactars[†5] in roving, so it's well they are nothing but affectionate breath. Ever my dear Colden

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN T. MAULL,[†6] 10 MARCH 1842*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address:[†7] John T. Maull | 83 Pine St | Philadelphia.

Washington | Tenth March 1842.

Dear Sir.

I am much obliged to you for the note you wrote me at Philadelphia, which place I left so hastily that I could not send you an earlier acknowledgment.[†8] I had great pleasure, I assure you, in its Receipt.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John. T. Maull Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 10 MARCH 1842

Mention in John Heise catalogue, Dec 1943; dated Fuller's Hotel, 10 Mar 42.

Regretting that he cannot accept an invitation.

To JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,[†1] [10 or 11 MARCH 1842]

Mention in Robert C. Winthrop,[†2] Reminiscences of Foreign Travel, privately printed, [Boston], 1894, p. 62. Date: Adams had received the letter by Saturday 12th (see fn).

Refusing an invitation to dinner, but saying that he wished to have the privilege of coming, with his wife, to luncheon on Sunday. [†3]

To H. D. GILPIN,[†1] 11 MARCH 1842*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Fuller's Hotel, Washington | Eleventh March 1842.

My Dear Sir

I thank you heartily for the letters;[†2] and for your own kind epistle, which I have received with great pleasure.

I wish I could have remained longer in Philadelphia, but I am forced onward by my poverty of time—not by my will[†3]—and in some sort following the example of that renowned Sultan to whose despotism we are indebted for so much delight, must go on making friendships over-night, and cutting their heads off, every morning.[†4]

If the sharp and rapid severance of our pleasant intercourse should leave you any future opportunity of remembering me, I shall be glad to live in your recollection, and will honestly return the compliment.

Mrs. Dickens begs her kindest regards to yourself and Mrs. Gilpin[†5]—in which I join—and I am always My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS S. J. HALE,[†6] 11 MARCH 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Private.

Fuller's Hotel, Washington | Eleventh of March 1842.

My Dear Madam.

I left Philadelphia so hurriedly, that I had not time to reply to your earnest and gratifying letter.

Believe me, that I did not read your beautiful lines unmoved; and that you could not have devised a mode of pleasing me more, than by the production of such a tribute.[†1] I scarcely know how to thank you for it. As I am in that condition, however, wherein we are apt to feel that we cannot say enough, but in which a very little may be very expressive, I will only add that I thank you with my whole heart.

—On second thoughts though, I must couple with these latter words, one assurance, no less truthful and sincere. It is, that you will never find me departing from those sympathies which we cherish in common, and which have won me your esteem and approval.[†2]

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial regards and best wishes. And I am always

Dear Madam | Faithfully | Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. S. J. Hale.

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 12 MARCH 1842

Mention in unidentified catalogue, 4 Apr; MS 1 p.; dated Washington, 12 Mar 42.[†3]

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE,[†4] 12 [and ?21] MARCH 1842

MS Berg Collection. Date: for the finishing of letter on ?21 Mar, see fn p. 120. Like To Mitton, 22 Mar, it bears an English postmark of 21 Apr 42. Address: Albany Fonblanque Esquire | Connaught Square | Edgeware Road | London | England.

Washington (Fuller's Hotel) | Twelfth March 1842.

My Dear Fonblanque. I have reserved my fire upon you until I came to this place, thinking you would best like to know something about the political oddities of this land. No doubt you have heard the leading points in my adventures—as how we had a bad passage out, of 18 days—how I have been dined, and balled (there were 3000 people at the ball) and feted in all directions—and how I can't stir, without a great crowd at my heels—and am by no means in my element, in consequence. I shall therefore spare you these experiences, whereof Forster is a living chronicle; and carry you straightway to the President's house.[†5]

It's a good house to look at, but—to follow out the common saying—an uncommon bad 'un to go; at least I should think so. I arrived here on Wednesday night; and on Thursday morning was taken there by the Secretary to the Senate: a namesake of mine, whom "John Tyler" had despatched to carry me to him for a private interview which is considered a greater compliment than the public audience. [†a]We entered a large hall, and rang a large bell—if I may judge from the size of the handle. Nobody answering the bell,[†1] we walked about on our own account, as divers other gentlemen (mostly with their hats on, and their hands in their pockets) were doing, very leisurely. Some of them had ladies with them to whom they were shewing the premises; others were lounging on the chairs and sofas; others, yawning and picking their teeth. The greater part of this assemblage were rather asserting their supremacy than doing anything else; as they had no particular business there, that anybody knew of. A few were eyeing the moveables as if to make quite sure that the President (who is not popular)[†2] hadn't made away with any of the furniture, or sold the fixtures for his private benefit.

After glancing at these loungers who were scattered over a pretty drawing room, furnished with blue and silver, opening upon a terrace with a beautiful prospect of the Potomac River and adjacent country—and a larger state room, not unlike the dining room at the Athenæum—we went up stairs into another chamber, where were the more favored visitors who were waiting for audiences. At sight of my conductor, a black in plain clothes and yellow slippers, who was moving noiselessly about, and whispering messages in the ears of the more impatient, made a sign of recognition and glided off to announce us.

There were some twenty men in the room. One, a tall, wiry, muscular old man from the West, sunburnt and swarthy,—with a brown white hat and a giant umbrella, who sat bolt upright in his chair, frowning steadily at the carpet, as if he had made up his mind that he was going to "fix" the President in what he had to say, and wouldn't bate him a grain. Another, a Kentucky farmer nearly seven feet high, with his hat on, and his hands under his coat tails, who leaned against the wall, and kicked the floor with his heel, as though he had Time's head under his shoe, and were literally "killing" him. A third, a short, round-faced man with sleek black hair cropped close, and whiskers and beard shaved down into blue dots, who sucked the head of a big stick, and from time to time took it out of his mouth to see how it was getting on. A fourth did nothing but whistle.[†a] The rest balanced themselves, now on one leg, and now on the other, and chewed mighty quids of tobacco—such mighty quids, that they all looked as if their faces were swoln with erisypelas. They all constantly squirted forth upon the carpet, a yellow saliva which quite altered its pattern; and even the few who did not indulge in this recreation, expectorated abundantly.

In five minutes time, the black in yellow slippers came back, and led us into an upper room—a kind of office—where, by the side of a hot stove, though it was a very hot day, sat the President—all alone; and close to him a great spit box, which is an indispensable article of furniture here. In the private sitting room in which I am writing this, there are two; one on each side of the fire place. They are made of brass, to match the fender and fire irons; and are as bright as decanter stands.—But I am wandering from the President. Well! The President got up, and said, "Is this Mr. Dickens?"—"Sir", returned Mr. Dickens—"it is". "I am astonished to see so young a man Sir", said the President. Mr. Dickens smiled, and thought of returning the compliment—but he didn't; for the President looked too worn and tired, to justify it. "I am happy to join with my fellow citizens in welcoming you, warmly, to this country", said the President. Mr. Dickens thanked him, and shook hands. Then the other Mr. Dickens, the secretary, asked the President to come to his house that night, which the President said he should be glad to do, but for the pressure of business, and measles. Then the President And the two Mr. Dickenses sat and looked at each other, until Mr. Dickens of London observed that no doubt the President's time was fully occupied, and he and the other Mr. Dickens had better go. Upon that they all rose up; and the President invited Mr. Dickens (of London) to come again, which he said he would. And that was the end of the conference.

From the President's house, I went up to the Capitol, and visited both the Senate, and the House of Representatives, which, as I dare say you know are under one roof. Both are of the amphitheatre form, and very tastefully fitted up; with large galleries for ladies, and for the public generally. In the Senate, which is much the smaller of the two, I made the acquaintance of everybody in the first quarter of an hour—among the rest of Clay, who is one of the most agreeable and fascinating men I ever saw. He is tall and slim, with long, limp, gray hair—a good head[†1]—refined features—a bright eye—a good voice—and a manner more frank and captivating than I ever saw in any man, at all advanced in life. I was perfectly charmed with him.[†2] In the other house, John Quincey Adams interested me very much. He is something like Rogers,[†3] but not so infirm; is very accomplished; and perfectly "game".[†4] The rest were in appearance a good deal like our own members—some of them very bilious-looking, some very rough, some heartily good natured, and some very coarse. I asked which was Mr. Wyse,[†1] who lives in my mind, from the circumstance of his having made a very violent speech about England t'other day,[†2] which he emphasized (with great gentlemanly feeling and good taste) by pointing, as he spoke, at Lord Morpeth[†3] who happened to be present.[†4] They pointed out a wild looking, evil-visaged man, something like Roebuck,[†5] but much more savage, with a great ball of tobacco in his left cheek.[†6] I was quite satisfied.

I didn't see the honorable member who on being called to order by another honorable member some three weeks since, said "Damn your eyes Sir, if you presume to call me to order, I'll cut your damnation throat from ear to ear";— he wasn't there—but they shewed me the honorable member to whom he addressed this rather strong Parliamentary language; and I was obliged to content myself with him.[†7]

Yesterday, I went there again. A debate was in progress concerning the removal of a certain postmaster, charged with mal-practises, and with having interfered in elections.[†1] The speaking I heard, was partly what they call "Stump Oratory"—meaning that kind of eloquence which is delivered in the West, from that natural rostrum[†2]—and partly, a dry and prosy chopping of very small logic into very small mincemeat. It was no worse than ours, and no better. One gentleman being interrupted by a laugh from the opposition, mimicked the laugh, as a child would in quarrelling with another child, and said that "before he had done he'd make honorable members sing out, a little more on the other side of their mouths". This was the most remarkable sentiment I heard, in the course of a couple of hours.

I said something just now, about the prevalence of spit-boxes. They are everywhere. In hospitals, prisons, watch-houses, and courts of law—on the bench, in the witness box, in the jury box, and in the gallery; in the stage coach, the steam boat, the rail road car, the hotel, the hall of a private gentleman, and the chamber of Congress; where every two men have one of these conveniences between them—and very unnecessarily, for they flood the carpet, while they talk to you. Of all things in this country, this practice is to me the most insufferable. I can bear anything but filth. I would be content even to live in an atmosphere of spit, if they would but spit clean; but when every man ejects from his mouth that odious, most disgusting, compound of saliva and tobacco, I vow that my stomach revolts, and I cannot endure it. The marble stairs and passages of every handsome public building are polluted with these abominable stains; they are squirted about the base of every column that supports the roof; and they make the floors brown, despite the printed entreaty that visitors will not disfigure them with "tobacco spittle". It is the most sickening, beastly, and abominable custom that ever civilization saw.

When an American gentleman is polished, he is a perfect gentleman. Coupled with all the good qualities that such an Englishman possesses, he has a warmth of heart and an earnestness, to which I render up myself hand and heart. Indeed the whole people have most affectionate and generous impulses. I have not travelled anywhere, yet, without making upon the road a pleasant acquaintance who has gone out of his way to serve and assist me. I have never met with any common man who would not have been hurt and offended if I had offered him money, for any trifling service he has been able to render me. Gallantry and deference to females are universal. No man wod. retain his seat in a public conveyance to the exclusion of a lady, or hesitate for an instant in exchanging places with her, however much to his discomfort, if the wish were but remotely hinted. They are generous, hospitable, affectionate, and kind. I have been obliged to throw open my doors at a certain hour, in every place I have visited, and receive from 300 to 7 or 800 people; but I have never once been asked a rude or impertinent question, except by an Englishman—and when an Englishman has been settled here for ten or twelve years, he is worse than the Devil.[†1][†2]

For all this, I would not live here two years—no, not for any gift they could bestow upon me. Apart from my natural desire to be among my friends and to be at home again, I have a yearning after our English Customs and english[†3] manners, such as you cannot conceive. It would be impossible to say, in this compass, in what respects America differs from my preconceived opinion of it, but between you and me—privately and confidentially—I shall be truly glad to leave it, though I have formed a perfect attachment to many people here, and have a public progress through the Land, such as it never saw, except in the case of Lafayette.[†4] I am going away, now, into the Far West. A public entertainment has been arranged in every town I have visited; but I found it absolutely necessary to decline them—with one reservation.—I am going now, to meet a whole people of my readers in the Far West—two thousand miles from N. York—on the borders of the Indian Territory!

Since I wrote the inclosed sheet,[†5] I have had an Invitation from the President to dinner. I couldn't go: being obliged to leave Washington before the day he named.[†1] But Mrs. Dickens and I went to the public drawing room[†2] where pretty nearly all the natives go, who choose. It was most remarkable and most striking to see the perfect order observed—without one soldier, sailor, constable, or policeman in attendance, within the house or without; though the crowd was immense.

I have been as far South, as Richmond in Virginia.[†3]—I needn't say how odious the sight of Slavery is,[†4] or how frantic the holders are in their wrath against England, because of this Creole business.[†5]—If you see Forster soon, ask him how the Negroes drive in rough roads.[†6]

And if you should ever have time to scratch a few lines to a poor transported man, address them to the care of David Colden Esquire 28 Laight Street, Hudson Square, New York. He will forward them to me wherever I be. You must do on your side, what I can't do on this—pay the postage—or your letter will come back to you.

How long will the Tory Ministry last?[†7] Say six months, and receive my blessing.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best regards to Mrs. Fonblanque[†8] and her sister.[†9] And I am always, My Dear Fonblanque

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES MURRAY,[†1] JAMES HOBAN,[†2] AND PHILLIP ENNIS,[†3] 12 MARCH 1842

Text from the National Intelligencer, 23 Mar 42.

Washington, March 12, 1842

Gentlemen,

I am truly obliged to you for your kind and flattering invitation.[†4] It would have afforded me the greatest pleasure to accept it, but I regret to say that I leave this city on the 16th, and have made arrangements for doing so, which I cannot depart from.

Accept my cordial thanks, and believe me, gentlemen, yours, faithfully and obliged,
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. G. TOTTEN,[†5] 12 MARCH 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Washington | Twelfth March 1842.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compts. to Colonel Totten; and thanking him exceedingly for his kind note, very much regrets that both himself and Mrs. Dickens are engaged for every day during their short sojourn in Washington. Under more fortunate circumstances, it would have afforded them sincere pleasure to have accepted Colonel Totten's hospitable offer, and to have "named the day".

To GEORGE WATTERSTON,[†6] 12 MARCH 1842*

MS Huntington Library.

Fuller's Hotel, Washington | Twelfth March 1842.

My Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for the interesting book[†7] you have been good enough to send me; and for the kind and gratifying expressions with which you have accompanied it. Accept my sincere thanks; and believe me, dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Watterston Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 13 MARCH 1842

Extract in F, III, iv, 235-7 (continuation of letter of 6 Mar).

Washington, Sunday, March the Thirteenth 1842.

In allusion to the last sentence,[†1] my dear friend, I must tell you a slight experience I had in Philadelphia. My rooms had been ordered for a week, but, in consequence of Kate's illness, only Mr. Q and the luggage had gone on. Mr. Q always lives at the table d'hôte, so that while we were in New York our rooms were empty. The landlord not only charged me half the full rent for the time during which the rooms were reserved for us (which was quite right), but charged me also for board for myself and Kate and Anne, at the rate of nine dollars per day for the same period, when we were actually living, at the same expense, in New York!!! I did remonstrate upon this head; but was coolly told it was the custom (which I have since been assured is a lie), and had nothing for it but to pay the amount. What else could I do? I was going away by the steamboat at five o'clock in the morning; and the landlord knew perfectly well that my disputing an item of his bill would draw down upon me the sacred wrath of the newspapers, which would one and all demand in capitals if THIS was the gratitude of the man whom America had received as she had never received any other man but La Fayette?

I went last Tuesday to the Eastern Penitentiary near Philadelphia,[†2] which is the only prison in the States, or I believe in the world, on the principle of hopeless, strict, and unrelaxed solitary confinement, during the whole term of the sentence. It is wonderfully kept, but a most dreadful, fearful place. The inspectors, immediately on my arrival in Philadelphia, invited me to pass the day in the jail, and to dine with them when I had finished my inspection, that they might hear my opinion of the system. Accordingly

I passed the whole day in going from cell to cell, and conversing with the prisoners.[†3] Every facility was given me, and no constraint whatever imposed upon any man's free speech. If I were to write you a letter of twenty sheets, I could not tell you this one day's work; so I will reserve it until that happy time when we shall sit round the table at Jack Straw's—you, and I, and Mac—and go over my diary.[†4] I never shall be able to dismiss from my mind, the impressions of that day. Making notes of them, as I have done, is an absurdity, for they are written, beyond all power of erasure, in my brain. I saw men who had been there, five years, six years, eleven years, two years, two months, two days; some whose term was nearly over, and some whose term had only just begun. Women too, under the same variety of circumstances. Every prisoner who comes into the jail, comes at night; is put into a bath, and dressed in the prison garb; and then a black hood is drawn over his face and head, and he is led to the cell from which he never stirs again until his whole period of confinement has expired. I looked at some of them with the same awe as I should have looked at men who had been buried alive, and dug up again.

We dined in the jail: and I told them after dinner how much the sight had affected me, and what an awful punishment it was. I dwelt upon this; for, although the inspectors are extremely kind and benevolent men, I question whether they are sufficiently acquainted with the human mind to know what it is they are doing.[†1] Indeed, I am sure they do not know. I bore testimony, as every one who sees it must, to the admirable government of the institution (Stanfield[†2] is the keeper: grown a little younger, that's all); but added that nothing could justify such a punishment, but its working a reformation in the prisoners. That for short terms—say two years for the maximum[†3]—I conceived, especially after what they had told me of its good effects in certain cases, it might perhaps be highly beneficial,[†4] but that, carried to so great an extent, I thought it cruel and unjustifiable; and further, that their sentences for small offences were very rigorous, not to say savage. All this, they took like men who were really anxious to have one's free opinion, and to do right. And we were very much pleased with each other, and parted in the friendliest way.[†5]

They sent me back to Philadelphia in a carriage they had sent for me in the morning; and then I had to dress in a hurry, and follow Kate to Cary's[†1] the bookseller's, where there was a party. He married a sister[†2] of Leslie's.[†3] There are three Miss Leslies[†4] here, very accomplished; and one of them has copied all her brother's principal pictures.[†5] These copies hang about the room. We got away from this as soon as we could; and next morning had to turn out at five. In the morning I had received and shaken hands with five hundred people,[†6] so you may suppose that I was pretty well tired. Indeed I am obliged to be very careful of myself; to avoid smoking and drinking; to get to bed soon; and to be particular in respect of what I eat.... You cannot think how bilious and trying the climate is. One day it is hot summer, without a breath of air; the next, twenty degrees below freezing, with a wind blowing that cuts your skin like steel. These changes have occurred here several times since last Wednesday night.

I have altered my route, and don't mean to go to Charleston. The country, all the way from here, is nothing but a dismal swamp; there is a bad night of sea-coasting in the journey; the equinoctial gales are blowing hard; and Clay (a most charming fellow, by the bye), whom I have consulted, strongly dissuades me. The weather is intensely hot there; the spring fever is coming on; and there is very little to see, after all. We therefore go next Wednesday night to Richmond, which we shall reach on Thursday. There, we shall stop three days; my object being to see some tobacco plantations. Then we shall go by James river back to Baltimore,[†1] which we have already passed through,[†2] and where we shall stay two days. Then we shall go West at once, straight through the most gigantic part of this continent: across the Alleghany-mountains, and over a prairie.

To CHARLES SUMNER, 13 MARCH 1842

MS Harvard College Library.

Washington. | Thirteenth March 1842.—Sunday.

My Dear Sumner.

Hood says of a man in a quandary, in one of his books, that he could no more collect himself than the Irish Tithes.[†3] I was really in this plight, when I opened your hundred times welcome letter last night. I thought the hand writing looked reproachfully at me; reminding me of solemn promises to correspond, all violated—and of a hundred good intentions unfulfilled. But I know you will forgive me. I do a good deal of work as a Paviour in Hell, in common with most men; but I keep many pledges too. And I would have kept these, religiously (and interestedly, too, for the pleasure of hearing from you) if I had had but time—which is one of the few good things your countrymen don't give me.

You cannot think how glad we are to know that you have thought about us, and our letters, and that poor Caledonia which I have quite given over. Her non-arrival has been, of course, a sad disappointment, and has filled us with weary longings for news of home. It is a strange feeling to think of some odd little blotted scrawl which one of our small toddlers believed to be a letter, lying at the bottom of the deep sea, among drowned men, and fragments of fine Ships, and such serious, uncongenial company; but when I think how easily we might have been ourselves in that dread plight, and how strange, it seems that we, who have so many friends about us, should not have deferred our departure until February, that we might have had our Christmas Time at home, unbroken, I thank God we are here, and am ashamed that a thought of those pieces of paper—packages of love and affection though they be—should mingle with our anxiety for the poor passengers, and their friends and children in such desolate expectation.

As to the agent,[†1] he is paid for his faith; and I no more believe in it, than I do in that of a bishopric-aspiring parson.

I have seen no place, yet, that I like so well as Boston. I hope I may be able to return there, but I fear not. We are now in the regions of slavery, spittoons, and senators—all three are evils in all countries, but the spittoon is the worst. I don't see the use of it, either. If it be in deference to the opinion of society, I, for one, would rather not be obliged to imagine constantly what may be inside that circular orifice. I prefer the box of sand which is a candid piece of furniture and invites contemplation. But why one should be troubled with either, when everybody uses the carpet, is not satisfactorily proved to me by any means.

There are many men in both houses with whom I am greatly taken, but I confess a wild attachment to Clay. He is a fine fellow, and has won my heart.—Did John Quincey[†2] Adams ever remind you of Rogers? When the President speaks to you, he curls up his legs as I thought nobody but Talfourd could. Mr. Wyse[†2] is like Roebuck of the Westminster Review[†3]—or like what Roebuck would have been, if he had been suckled, Romulus-like, by a wolf and had been savage all his boyhood.

We have altered our route, and don't mean to go to Charleston. We leave here on Wednesday Night for Richmond, where we shall stop three days. On Monday, we shall go down James River to Baltimore, where we shall stay two days. Then we shall proceed along the line of internal improvement,[†4] over the Mountains, to Pittsburgh, which is a three days halting place; thence into Kentucky, to Lexington, Louisville, and so forth: then down the lakes to Buffalo where we shall arrive, please God, upon the Thirtieth of April or the first of May. And after some days at Niagara, we shall run into Canada. We embark in a packet ship from New York, on the Seventh of June.—There are our plans. All correspondence will be gratefully received, and thankfully acknowledged.

I miss Felton sadly.[†5] Half the pleasure of my world, as Charles Lamb says, has gone with him.[†1] I used to remonstrate with him on his eating so many oysters—at such a distance from home.[†2] He commonly took them fried. Perhaps that saved him. I would give—I hardly know what I would not give—to have him at No 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate Regents Park, London; for I have a sincere affection for him.

Don't you think you could come to Buffalo—stay at Niagara with us—and run into Canada to see some of the pleasant Englishmen there about?[†3] Think of it—Do—You know what became of that young man (he was a lawyer, I have no doubt) who was always at work, and never at play; he was a dull dog at last. Be wise in time. You ask me what you can do for me—this.

Always believe me, My Dear Sumner,
(with my wife's best regards)
Faithfully and cordially Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Sumner Esquire

Remember me to Mr. and Mrs. Hillard, and Bancroft, and Prescott,[†4] and all friends. I don't like Mrs. Governor Davis. She is too good a housekeeper, and has a hungry eye.[†5] The papers say that Govr. Seward[†6] and some other men are invited to pay a visit there. If you care for anybody that's asked, write him an anonymous letter & tell him Not to go on any Terms.[†7]

To JOHN BARNEY,[†8] 14 MARCH [1842]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, May 1913; dated Fuller's Hotel, 14 Mar.

I shall probably be in Baltimore on Monday Night. I shall remain there two days. I shall devote an hour each day to receiving any friends who may do me the favor of a call.†1

To C. C. FELTON, 14 MARCH 1842†

Text from James T. Fields, "Our Whispering Gallery, VI", Atlantic Monthly, XXVII (1871), 765.†2

Fuller's Hotel, Washington, Monday, March 14, 1842.

My dear Felton,

I was more delighted than I can possibly tell you to receive (last Saturday night) your welcome letter. We and the oysters missed you terribly in New York. You carried away with you more than half the delight and pleasure of my New World;†3 and I heartily wish you could bring it back again.

There are very interesting men in this place,—highly interesting, of course,—but it's not a comfortable place; is it? If spittle could wait at table we should be nobly attended, but as that property has not been imparted to it in the present state of mechanical science, we are rather lonely and orphan-like, in respect of "being looked arter." A blithe black was introduced on our arrival, as our peculiar and especial attendant. He is the only gentleman in the town who has a peculiar delicacy in intruding upon my valuable time. It usually takes seven rings and a threatening message from ——†4 to produce him; and when he comes he goes to fetch something, and, forgetting it by the way, comes back no more.

We have been in great distress, really in distress, at the non-arrival of the Caledonia. You may conceive what our joy was, when, while we were dining out yesterday, Putnam†5 arrived with the joyful intelligence of her safety. The very news of her having really arrived seemed to diminish the distance between ourselves and home, by one half at least.

And this morning (though we have not yet received our heap of despatches, for which we are looking eagerly forward to this night's mail),—this morning there reached us unexpectedly, through the government bag (Heaven knows how they came there), two of our many and long-looked-for letters, wherein was a circumstantial account of the whole conduct and behavior of our pets; with marvellous narrations of Charley's precocity at a Twelfth Night juvenile party at Macready's; and tremendous predictions of the governess, dimly suggesting his having got out of pot-hooks and hangers, and darkly insinuating the possibility of his writing us a letter before long; and many other workings of the same prophetic spirit, in reference to him and his sisters, very gladdening to their mother's heart, and not at all depressing to their father's. There was, also, the doctor's report, which was a clean bill; and the nurse's report, which was perfectly electrifying; showing as it did how Master Walter had been weaned, and had cut a double tooth, and done many other extraordinary things, quite worthy of his high descent. In short, we were made very happy and grateful; and felt as if the prodigal father and mother had got home again.

What do you think of this incendiary card being left at my door last night? "General G.[†1] sends compliments to Mr. Dickens, and called with two literary ladies.[†2] As the two L. L.'s are ambitious of the honor of a personal introduction to Mr. D., General G. requests the honor of an appointment for to-morrow." I draw a veil over my sufferings. They are sacred.

[†a]We have altered our route, and don't mean to go to Charleston, for I want to see the West, and have taken it into my head that as I am not obliged to go to Charleston, and don't exactly know why I should go there, I need do no violence to my own inclinations. My route is of Mr. Clay's designing, and I think it a very good one. We go on Wednesday night to Richmond in Virginia. On Monday we return to Baltimore for two days. On Thursday morning we start for Pittsburg, and so go by the Ohio to Cincinnati, Louisville, Kentucky, Lexington, St. Louis; and either down the Lakes to Buffalo, or back to Philadelphia, and by New York to that place, where we shall stay a week, and then make a hasty trip into Canada.[†a] We shall be in Buffalo, please Heaven, on the 30th of April. If I don't find a letter from you in the care of the postmaster at that place, I'll never write to you from England.

But if I do find one, my right hand shall forget its cunning,[†3] before I forget to be your truthful and constant correspondent; not, dear Felton, because I promised it, nor because I have a natural tendency to correspond (which is far from being the case), nor because I am truly grateful to you for, and have been made truly proud by, that affectionate and elegant tribute which ——[†4] sent me, but because you are a man after my own heart, and I love you well. And for the love I bear you, and the pleasure with which I shall always think of you, and the glow I shall feel when I see your handwriting in my own home, I hereby enter into a solemn league and covenant to write as many letters to you as you write to me, at least. Amen.

Come to England! Come to England! Our oysters are small I know; they are said by Americans to be coppery, but our hearts are of the largest size. We are thought to excel in shrimps, to be far from despicable in point of lobsters, and in periwinkles are considered to challenge the universe. Our oysters, small though they be, are not devoid of the refreshing influence which that species of fish is supposed to exercise in these latitudes.[†1] Try them and compare.[†2]

Affectionately yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 14 MARCH 1842

Mention in Chicago Book & Art Auction catalogue No. 2; MS[†3] 2 pp.; dated 14 Mar 42.

Declining further engagements in Baltimore.

Yours faithfully and obliged

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 MARCH 1842]

Extracts in F, III, iv, 230*n* and 237-9 (resumption of letter begun on 6 Mar, continued 13 Mar).

†a*Read on. We have your precious letters, but you'll think, at first, we have not. C.D.†a

Still at Washington, Fifteenth March, 1842.... It is impossible, my dear friend, to tell you what we felt, when Mr. Q (who is a fearfully sentimental genius, but heartily interested in all that concerns us) came to where we were dining last Sunday,†4 and sent in a note to the effect that the Caledonia had arrived!†5 Being really assured of her safety, we felt as if the distance between us and home were diminished by at least one half. There was great joy everywhere here, for she had been quite despaired of, but our joy was beyond all telling. This news came on by express. Last night your letters reached us. I was dining with a club†1 (for I can't avoid a dinner of that sort, now and then), and Kate sent me a note about nine o'clock to say they were here.†2 But she didn't open them—which I consider heroic—until I came home. That was about half past ten; and we read them until nearly two in the morning.

— III - 132 —

I won't say a word about your letters; except that Kate and I have come to a conclusion which makes me tremble in my shoes, for we decide that humourous narrative is your forte, and not statesmen of the commonwealth.†3 I won't say a word about your news; for how could I in that case, while you want to hear what we are doing, resist the temptation of expending pages on those darling children....

I have the privilege of appearing on the floor of both houses here, and go to them every day.†4 They are very handsome and commodious. There is a great deal of bad speaking, but there are a great many very remarkable men, in the legislature: such as John Quincey†5 Adams, Clay, Preston,†6 Calhoun,†7 and others:

— III - 133 —

with whom I need scarcely add I have been placed in the friendliest relations. Adams is a fine old fellow—seventy-six years old, but with most surprising vigour, memory, readiness, and pluck. Clay is perfectly enchanting; an irresistible man. There are some very noble specimens, too, out of the West. Splendid men to look at, hard to deceive, prompt to act, lions in energy, Crichtons in varied accomplishments, Indians in quickness of eye and gesture, Americans in affectionate and generous impulse. It would be difficult to exaggerate the nobility of some of these glorious fellows.

When Clay retires, as he does this month, Preston will become the leader of the whig party. He so solemnly assures me that the international copyright shall and will be passed, that I almost begin to hope;†1 and I shall be entitled to say, if it be, that I have brought it about.†2 You have no idea how universal the discussion of its merits and demerits has become; or how eager for the change I have made a portion of the people.

You remember what Webster[†3] was, in England.[†4] If you could but see him here! If you could only have seen him when he called on us the other day— feigning abstraction in the dreadful pressure of affairs of state;[†1] rubbing his forehead as one who was a-weary of the world;[†2] and exhibiting a sublime caricature of Lord Burleigh.[†3] He is the only thoroughly unreal man I have seen, on this side the ocean.[†4] Heaven help the President! All parties are against him, and he appears truly wretched.[†5] We go to a levee at his house to-night.[†6] He has invited me to dinner on Friday, but I am obliged to decline; for we leave, per steamboat, to-morrow night.

I said I wouldn't write anything more concerning the American people, for two months. Second thoughts are best. I shall not change, and may as well speak out—to you. They are friendly, earnest, hospitable, kind, frank, very often accomplished, far less prejudiced than you would suppose, warm-hearted, fervent, and enthusiastic. They are chivalrous in their universal politeness to women, courteous, obliging, disinterested; and, when they conceive a perfect affection for a man (as I may venture to say of myself), entirely devoted to him. I have received thousands of people of all ranks and grades, and have never once been asked an offensive or unpolite question—except by Englishmen, who, when they have been "located"[†1] here for some years, are worse than the devil in his blackest painting. The State is a parent to its people; has a parental care and watch over all poor children, women labouring of child, sick persons, and captives.[†2] The common men render you assistance in the streets, and would revolt from the offer of a piece of money. The desire to oblige is universal; and I have never once travelled in a public conveyance, without making some generous acquaintance whom I have been sorry to part from, and who has in many cases come on miles, to see us again. But I don't like the country. I would not live here, on any consideration. It goes against the grain with me. It would with you. I think it impossible, utterly impossible, for any Englishman to live here, and be happy. I have a confidence that I must be right, because I have everything, God knows, to lead me to the opposite conclusion: and yet I cannot resist coming to this one. As to the causes, they are too many to enter upon here....

One of two petitions for an international copyright which I brought here from American authors, with Irving at their head,[†3] has been presented to the house of representatives.[†4] Clay retains the other for presentation to the senate after I have left Washington.[†5] The presented one has been referred to a committee;[†6] the Speaker[†7] has nominated as its chairman Mr. Kennedy, member for Baltimore, who is himself an author[†8] and notoriously favourable to such a law; and I am going to assist him in his report.[†9]

To WASHINGTON IRVING, 15 MARCH 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Fuller's | Fifteenth March 1842.

My Dear Irving.

We leave here tomorrow night.—Say that you will come and dine with us tomorrow—inviolably alone—at 4. Don't refuse, if you love me. It may be a very long time before we dine together again.[†1]

I am glad to say that I have a[†2] brother to whose memory we can drink a glass of wine—he died in his infancy some nine and twenty years ago.[†3] He wasn't a twin, but we must make the best of him.[†4]

Heartily | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Washington Irving Esquire

To ROBERT GILMOR,[†5] 16 MARCH 1842

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Address: Paid | R. Gilmour[†6] Esquire | Messrs. R. Gilmour & Sons | Baltimore.

Washington. | Sixteenth March 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I hope to be in Baltimore on Monday night, and to remain there two days, before going West—in the course of which brief stay, I shall rob you of certain large sums in Gold and Silver to carry into those remote parts. Meanwhile let me advise you that as Coutts's house[†7] by some strange mistake directed my letter of credit to a gentleman, formerly of this place, who has been dead some six years,[†8] I have been obliged to draw Fifty Pounds from the Metropolis

Bank, and have given them a draft on you to that amount. I should have written to you for a supply, but it did not occur to me to enquire after the deceased Agent until last night (though I thought it odd not to have heard of him)— and tonight I leave this City, for Richmond.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. Gilmour Esquire

To FREDERICK SAUNDERS,[†1] 16 MARCH 1842*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Private

Washington | Sixteenth March 1842

Dear Sir

I have but a moment, before leaving here, to acknowledge the receipt of your communication. It is, I fear, too late to add the signatures you have sent me, for I confided both the petitions to Mr. Clay's charge some days since, and one— that to the house of Representatives—has been presented.

That petition, you will be glad to hear, has been referred to a Committee, of which Mr. Kennedy from Baltimore (himself an Author) is apppointed[[sic]]an. I augur good[†2] results from his report.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Saunders Esquire

To W. W. SEATON,[†4] 16 MARCH 1842

Text from [Josephine Seaton], William Winston Seaton of the "National Intelligencer." A Biographical Sketch. With Passing Notices of his Associates and Friends, [Boston], 1871, p. 272.

Washington | March 16, 1842

My dear Sir,

I am truly obliged to you for your kind note. I am so constantly engaged, however, that I think I must deny myself the pleasure of making an appointment with you, which I could scarcely keep without making a most uncomfortable scramble of it. I will report my knowledge of the lions to you, and you shall judge how I have been shown about.

In case I should forget it when we meet to-night,[†1] may I venture to ask two favors of you,—or rather one favor with two heads.

It is that you will kindly (if you see no objection) let my friends here know through that channel which is open to you, and over which you so ably preside, that whenever I make an appointment I keep it; and that it gives me great uneasiness and pain to be placarded all over the town as intending to make a visit to the theatre, when I have given no authority whatever to any person to publish such an announcement; and secondly, that travelling as we do, we can never return the calls of our friends, in consequence of their immense number, and our very limited stay in any one place.[†2]

Let me take this opportunity of thanking you, most heartily and earnestly, for the exceedingly kind attention I have received at your hands, and the pleasure I have enjoyed in your society and in that of your family.[†3] I need scarcely say that Mrs. Dickens desires me to say as much for her.

I am, my dear sir, with true regard, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

W. W. Seaton, Esq.

To JOHN FORSTER, 17 MARCH [1842]

Extracts in F, III, iv, 239 (resumption of letter begun 6 Mar, continued 13th and 15th).

Richmond, in Virginia. Thursday Night, March 17.

Irving was with me at Washington yesterday, and wept heartily at parting. He is a fine fellow, when you know him well; and you would relish him, my dear friend, of all things. We have laughed together at some absurdities we have encountered in company, quite in my vociferous Devonshire-terrace style. The "Merrikin" government have treated him, he says, most liberally and handsomely in every respect.[†1] He thinks of sailing for Liverpool on the 7th of April;[†2] passing a short time in London;[†3] and then going to Paris.[†4] Perhaps you may meet him.[†5] If you do, he will know that you are my dearest friend, and will open his whole heart to you at once. His secretary of legation, Mr. Coggleswell,[†6] is a man of very remarkable information, a great traveller, a good talker, and a scholar.[†7]

I am going to sketch you our trip here from Washington, as it involves nine miles of a "Virginny Road."[†8] That done, I must be brief, good brother....

To MISS EMMA MORDECAI,[†1] 19 MARCH 1842*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Richmond. Virginia | Nineteenth March 1842.

My Dear Dreamer.

I have received the southern flowers most joyfully—though I need nothing to remind me of you, believe me. I shall place them on my pillow tonight, and trust to their influence for some sweet visions in which you may be the chief actor.

Believe me

(Sleeping or waking)

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emma Mordecai

To JOHN FORSTER, 21 MARCH [1842]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 239-41 (continuation of letter begun 6 Mar).

At Washington again, Monday, March the twenty-first.

We had intended to go to Baltimore from Richmond, by a place called Norfolk: but one of the boats being under repair, I found we should probably be detained at this Norfolk two days. Therefore we came back here yesterday, by the road we had travelled before;[†2] lay here last night; and go on to Baltimore this afternoon, at four o'clock. It is a journey of only two hours and a half. Richmond is a prettily situated town;[†3] but, like other towns in slave districts (as the planters themselves admit), has an aspect of decay and gloom which to an unaccustomed eye is most distressing. In the black car (for they don't let them sit with the whites), on the railroad as we went there, were a mother and family, whom the [?owner][†4] was conveying away, to sell; retaining the man (the husband and father I mean) on his plantation. The children cried the whole way. Yesterday, on board the boat, a slave owner and two constables were our fellow-passengers. They were coming here in search of two negroes who had run away on the previous day. On the bridge at Richmond there is a notice against fast driving over it, as it is rotten and crazy: penalty—for whites, five dollars; for slaves, fifteen stripes. My heart is lightened as if a great load had been taken from it, when I think that we are turning our backs on this accursed and detested system. I really don't think I could have borne it any longer. It is all very well to say "be silent on the subject." They won't let you be silent. They will ask you what you think of it; and will expatiate on slavery as if it were one of the greatest blessings of mankind. "It's not," said a hard, bad-looking fellow to me the other day, "it's not the interest of a man to use his slaves ill. It's damned nonsense that you hear in England."—I told him quietly that it was not a man's interest to get drunk, or to steal, or to game, or to indulge in any other vice, but he did indulge in it for all that. That cruelty, and the abuse of irresponsible power, were two of the bad passions of human nature, with the gratification of which, considerations of interest or of ruin had nothing whatever to do; and that, while every candid man must admit that even a slave might be happy enough with a good master, all human beings knew that bad masters, cruel masters, and masters who disgraced the form they bore, were matters of experience and history, whose existence was as undisputed as that of slaves themselves.[†1] He was a little taken aback by this, and asked me if I believed in the bible. Yes, I said, but if any man could prove to me that it sanctioned slavery, I would place no further credence in it. "Well then," he said, "by God, sir, the niggers must be kept down, and the whites have put down the coloured people wherever they have found them." "That's the whole question" said I. "Yes, and by God," says he, "the British had better not stand out on that point when Lord Ashburton comes over, for I never felt so warlike as I do now,—and that's a fact." I was obliged to accept a public supper in this Richmond,[†2] and I saw plainly enough, there, that the hatred which these Southern States bear to us as a nation has been fanned up and revived again by this Creole business,[†1] and can scarcely be exaggerated.... We were desperately tired at Richmond, as we went to a great many places,[†2] and received a very great number of visitors. We appoint usually two hours in every day for this latter purpose, and have our room so full at that period that it is difficult to move or breathe. Before we left Richmond, a gentleman told me, when I really was so exhausted that I could hardly stand, that "three people of great fashion" were much offended by having been told, when they called last evening, that I was tired and not visible, then, but would be "at home" from twelve to two next day![†3] Another gentleman (no doubt of great fashion also) sent a letter to me two hours after I had gone to bed, preparatory to rising at four next morning, with instructions to the slave who brought it to knock me up and wait for an answer!

I am going to break my resolution of accepting no more public entertainments, in favour of the originators of the printed document overleaf.[†4] They live upon the confines of the Indian territory, some two thousand miles or more west of New York! Think of my dining there! And yet, please God, the festival will come off—I should say about the 12th or [13th][†5] of next month.[†6]

To ROBERT GILMOR, 21 MARCH [1842]

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Address: Robert Gilmor[†1] Esquire | Exchange Place.

Barnum's Hotel[†2] | Monday Evening Twenty First March.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind letter.—I should have come to you today, beyond all doubt if I had been here; but I have only just now (past 6 O'Clock) arrived.[†3] I will call on you tomorrow at eleven, and shall hope to find you as much better as in these sudden changes of temperature, may be reasonably expected.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Gilmour[†1] Esquire

To WASHINGTON IRVING, 21 MARCH 1842

MS Yale University Library. Address: Washington Irving Esquire | at Brown's.

Washington. | Monday afternoon. March Twenty First. | 1842

My Dear Irving.

We passed through—literally passed through—this place, again to day. I did not come to see you, for I really have not the heart to say "good bye" again, and felt more than I can tell you when we shook hands last Wednesday.

You will not be at Baltimore, I fear? I thought at the time[†4] that you only said you might be there, to make our parting the gayer.[†5]

Wherever you go, God bless you! What pleasure I have had in seeing and talking with you, I will not attempt to say. I shall never forget it as long as I live. What would I give, if we could have but a quiet week together!

Spain is a lazy place, and its climate an indolent one. But if you have ever leisure under its sunny skies to think of a man who loves you, and holds communion with your spirit, oftener perhaps than any other person alive—leisure from listlessness, I mean—and will write to me in London, you will give me an inexpressible amount of pleasure.†1

Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS†2

Washington Irving Esquire

To W. W. SEATON, 21 MARCH 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: W. W. Seaton Esquire.

Washington | Monday afternoon. March Twenty First | 1842.

My Dear Sir.

This will reach you when we have gone on to Baltimore; and will tell you that we came back here last night, and left this morning. It is such a hard thing, that saying good b'ye, when one has no time to say anything besides, that we resolved to write it. Here it is—and with it our best regards to Mrs. Seaton and your family, whom we shall not easily forget.

Your son shewed us every attention, in Richmond. You were a false prophet in respect of his requiring to be drawn out. We were friends directly.†3

With many thanks to you for your hospitality and kindness, believe me ever
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. W. Seaton Esquire

To LORD BROUGHAM, 22 MARCH 1842*

MS The Hon. Mrs John Mildmay-White. Address: The Right Honorable | The Lord Brougham | Grafton Street | London | England.

Baltimore. United States. | Twenty Second March 1842.

Dear Lord Brougham.

As you were so kind as to express some interest in my movements, I cannot resist the temptation I feel to write and tell you that I have seen Judge Story, and executed your commission;[†1] and that if there be anything I can possibly do for you before I return on the 7th. of June, I shall be truly proud and glad to do it. Is there nothing I can bring back for you—animate or inanimate? Have you no fancy for any American reprint of any book? Cannot you invent a desire which I may be the means of gratifying? If you can, and will write to me, to the care of David Colden Esquire, 28 Laight Street, Hudson Square, New York, your letter will be safely sent on to me, wherever I may be.

You may perhaps have heard that they do me great honor here, and that I can't help making a public progress through the land—sorely against my own habits and inclinations. As they purposed getting up a public entertainment in every town I passed through, I was obliged to diffuse public notice that I would not accept any festivals after leaving New York. But I have made an exception in favor of one body of readers in the Far West. They reside at St. Louis, which is two thousand miles from here, and on the confines of the Indian Territory. I am going there—to dinner—and start the day after tomorrow.

I have been South as far as Richmond in Virginia; but the weather becoming prematurely hot; and the sight of Slavery, and the mere fact of living in a town where it exists being positive misery to me; I turned back. The Southerners are perfectly frantic on the subject of your speech in reference to the Creole affair.[†2] I know you are not sorry, my Lord, to hear that.

I have done, and am doing, my best to shame the Americans into the passing of an International Copyright Law with England. Mr. Preston who will be the leader of the Whig party on Mr. Clay's retirement gives me such positive assurances, that I almost begin to hope it may be brought about. The system, as it stands, is most iniquitous and disgraceful. A writer not only gets nothing for his labours, though they are diffused all over this enormous Continent, but cannot even choose his company. Any wretched halfpenny newspaper can print him at its pleasure—place him side by side with productions which disgust his common sense—and by means of the companionship in which it constantly shews him, engenders a feeling of association in the minds of a large class of readers, from which he would revolt, and to avoid which he would pay almost any price.[†3]

I have some scruples of conscience whether a letter so brief and so devoid of interest be worth the sending; but I give myself the benefit of the doubt on the chance of being useful to you. And I am always My Lord

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Honorable | The Lord Brougham.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†1] 22 MARCH 1842

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London | England.

Baltimore. United States. | Twenty Second March 1842.

Dear Miss Coutts.

You have long ago discharged from your mind any favorable opinion you may ever have entertained of me—and have set me down, I know, as a neglectful, erratic, promise-breaking, and most unworthy person.

And yet I have not forgotten the book you asked me to bring home for you— nor the pebble I am to gather for Lady Burdett[†2] at Niagara—nor the something unstipulated[†3] which I am to put in my portmanteau for Miss Meredith.[†4] The truth is that they give me everything here, but Time. That they never will leave me alone. That I shake hands every day when I am not travelling, with five or six hundred people. That Mrs. Dickens and I hold a formal Levee in every town we come to, and usually faint away (from fatigue) every day while dressing for dinner.—In a word, that we devoutly long for Home, and look forward to the seventh of next June when we sail, please God, from New York—most ardently.

I have sent you some newspapers; and I hope they have reached you. They gave me a ball at New York, at which Three Thousand people were present—and a public dinner besides—and another in Boston—and another in a place called Hertford. Others were projected, literally all through the States, but I gave public notice, that I couldn't accept them: being of mere flesh and blood, and having only mortal powers of digestion. But I have made an exception in favor of one body of readers at St. Louis—a town in the Far West, on the confines of the Indian territory. I am going there to dinner—it's only two thousand miles from here—and start the day after tomorrow.

I look forward to making such an impression on you with the store of anecdote and description with which I shall return, that I can't find it in my Heart to open it—on paper. I don't see how I shall ever get rid of my gatherings. It seems to me, at present, that when I come home I must take a cottage on Putney Heath, or Richmond Green, or some other wild and desolate place, and talk to myself for a month or two, until I have sobered down a little, and am quiet again. A prophetic feeling comes upon me sometimes, and hints that I shall return, a bore—.[†5]

We had a terrible passage out, and mean to return in a sailing ship. Can you think of anything I can bring back for you? If you can possibly commission me to bring you any article whatever from the New Country, I need scarcely say how proud and glad you will make me. Any letter addressed to me to the care of David Colden Esquire 28 Laight Street Hudson Square New York, would be forwarded to me wheresoever I might chance to be at the time of its receipt.

May I ask you when you next see Mr. Marjoribanks[†1] to tell him, with my best regards, that I thank him very much for his letters,[†2] and have received the greatest attention from all his correspondents—except the poor gentleman at Washington—who has been dead six years. Not finding him readily (no wonder!) I went into a bank to ask for him. I happened to make the enquiry of a very old clerk, who staggered to a stool and fell into a cold perspiration, as if he had seen a spectre. Being feeble, and the shock being very great, he took to his bed—but he has since recovered: to the great joy of his wife and family.

With every good and cordial wish for your health and happiness—many messages of regard to Miss Meredith—and very many scruples of conscience in sending you so poor a letter from so long a distance—I am always, Dear Miss Coutts,

With true regard | Faithfully Your obliged friend

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I forgot to say that I have been at Washington (which is beyond here) and as far beyond that, again, as Richmond in Virginia. But the prematurely hot weather, and the sight of slaves, turned me back.

To GEORGE D'ALMAINE,[†3] [?22 MARCH 1842]

Mention in next. Date: CD received a letter from D'Almaine in Philadelphia, 5-9 Mar (To Forster, 1 Apr); by 13 Mar he had decided to break his journey West at Pittsburgh (To Sumner, that day); but he probably answered D'Almaine's letter only when he knew which day he could be expected.

Asking him to meet their canal boat at Pittsburgh and secure rooms for them at a hotel there.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 22 MARCH 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Baltimore. United States. | Twenty Second March 1842.

My Dear Fred.

You must take the will for the deed in my case, and not measure the length of your letters, by the length of mine. Although I have declined, and constantly decline, all public entertainments, our life is a very fatiguing one. In every place we come to, we hold regular Levees or drawing rooms, and receive immense crowds of people. This, and constant engagements morning, noon, and night (to say nothing of the fatigues of travelling by railroad, stage, & steam boat, and getting up at four or five o'Clock in the morning for that purpose) occasionally quite wear us out; and at the best leave very little leisure, as you may suppose, for writing.

The Secretary continues to do very well—Kate of course don't like him. He is sentimental certainly—has a languishing air—and is a cross between Burnett[†1] and Hartland.[†2] He sings too—and tells marvellous lies concerning his past life— in both of which aspects of his character, you will detect a resemblance to one of the gentlemen I have likened him to.[†3] But he is of great use. If it were for nothing else but paying the bills, and collecting the luggage, he would be, like the soothing Syrup, "A real blessing"—As to the baggage, its amount is fearful to behold. We are going into the Far West, the day after tomorrow; and as we shall have to cross Mountains, Forests, and Prairies, we are packing a quantity of it off to New York, and cutting ourselves down to the smallest amount of necessaries. Anne is a very good land traveller; but at sea she is the dismallest of the dismal.

We have struck Charleston out of our trip, as the weather South, is intensely and prematurely hot. We have been as far as Richmond, and, even under more favorable circumstances, would certainly not have been tempted by the sight of Slavery, to proceed. I have made one exception in my determination, and accepted a public entertainment at St. Louis, where they had a meeting and passed certain resolutions which I have sent to Forster. It is on the borders of the Indian Territory—only two thousand miles from here—and, as one may say, almost next door.

Do you remember little George D'Almaine? He is a portrait painter at a Western town on the Ohio, called Pittsburgh. We shall be there next Sunday;[†4] and as he wrote me a very good letter, I have written to beg him to secure rooms for us at the Hotel[†5] (whatever it may be) and to meet us at the Canal boat. Fancy us on board a canal boat—walking on the towing path whenever we feel disposed for a change—and having four days and nights of it! We go from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati—to Louisville—to St. Louis—back to Louisville—across the Great Prairie to Chicago[†6]—then down the lakes to Buffalo—by railroad to Niagara, where we stay a week. From thence we run into Canada, and so return to New York. We have arranged to embark from New York for England in the George Washington Packet Ship, on the 7th. of June. We shall count the days until that blessed time arrives.

We had your first letter—the Caledonia one—at Washington, & it is impossible to say with what joy we sat up half the night, and read that, and the whole packetfull.[†1] Your second letter awaited us here last night, together with Forster's Ontario[†2] epistle. I can't make out how that second letter of yours, came. You have marked it by the Acadia—not the steam packet surely?[†3]

Forrest[†4] breakfasted with us at Richmond (Richmond is in Virginia, among the tobacco manufactories) last Saturday. He appears to be a very amiable fellow—has a charming wife[†5]—and spoke most gratefully of Macready's kindness to him when he was in London.[†6] All manner of Theatricals are at the lowest possible ebb here. The Southern people are perfectly frantic about the Creole business. Lord Ashburton is looked for every day. We were at a drawing room at the Presidents, and were invited to dinner besides, but couldn't wait. Kate's face swells every other day. My hair is terribly long, & I am afraid, to have it cut, lest the barber (bribed by admirers) should clip it all off for presents.[†7] And I think that's all our personal news. I have told a very few of our adventures to Forster, who will tell them to you. But I reserve my great effects (including some brilliant stories, illustrations, imitations &c) until I come home.

[†a]I can't tell you, Fred, how very much pleased I have been with your letters, or truly gratified by your affectionate care of our dear darlings. But I shall never forget your brotherly regard, or cease to place the most implicit and unhesitating reliance in all you say and do in reference to what is dear to Kate and me.[†a]

Always Your loving brother
CHARLES DICKENS

Write long letters—long letters—full, true, and particular accounts—and always direct to the care of David Colden—who is as prompt and anxious as if they were his letters; not ours.[†8]

To LADY HOLLAND,[†1] 22 MARCH 1842†

MS The Earl of Ilchester. Address: The Right Honorable | The Lady Holland | South Street. Grosvenor Square | London | England.

Baltimore. United States. | Twenty Second March 1842.

Dear Lady Holland.

[†a]I know I am not mistaken in thinking that you would like to hear from my own lips that I am well; not at all spoiled (you remember that you thought I should be?); and longing, in common with my wife, to be again in our dear old home, and among our friends and children. You will have smiled, before getting so far, at my using the word "lips";—but my pen has so long supplied the place of a voice, that the expression comes quite naturally to me.[†a]

Perhaps you know something of the Public Progress I am obliged to make in this country—of the ball (attended by three thousand people) which they gave me at New York—and of the festivals of all kinds with which they have received me. Public entertainments were proposed in every town I intended to visit—but I gave public notice that I could not possibly bear it, and have refused all those in contemplation, except one. This originates with the people of St. Louis; a town in the Far West, near the Indian territory. It is only two thousand miles from here—quite next door, as one may say—and I am going there to dinner. We start the day after tomorrow.

It was a great delight to me to see Irving, for whom I have conceived a perfect affection. He talks of leaving here for Liverpool on the 7th. of next month— when I say, here, I mean New York. He goes on to London of course. We spoke very much of you—and with a grateful pleasure that had at least the merit of being perfectly sincere.[†2]

[†a]Mrs. Dickens remains well in this very trying climate, and begs me to thank your Ladyship for the kind message you sent her, when I came to take leave of you. We are obliged to hold a Levee for all comers, every day when we are not travelling—and labour very hard indeed, I do assure you. The Queen and Prince Albert can scarcely be more tired—for ours is a perpetual Drawing Room. Our crown, too, is not a Golden one, except in opinion.[†a]

We have been to Boston, Worcester, Hertford, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Richmond in Virginia. We originally intended to have gone as far South as Charleston, but the prematurely hot weather, and the sight of slavery, turned us back.[†1] We are now on our way to the Forests, Mountains, and Prairies of the West; and have taken our passage in a sailing ship which leaves New York for England on the 7th. of June.

I have made some observations, of course. They are not all favorable, for I love England better than I did when I left her. But I am bound to say that travellers have grossly exaggerated American rudeness and obtrusion.[†2] Among all the thousands whom I have seen, within doors and without (and they are so many that I have almost paralyzed my right arm by constantly shaking hands) I have never once encountered a man, woman, or child, who has asked me a rude question, or made a rude remark. The best and only passports needed in this country, are frankness and good humour. This is not the opinion of a man who has been conciliated by flattery or attention. I have much to say on the other side of the question. But the people are naturally courteous, good-tempered, generous, warmhearted, and obliging. That is a matter of fact, and not of opinion.

I have been a week or so behind Lord Morpeth everywhere. He is now in the South,[†3] but if the rumoured account of his movements be correct, I still hope to fall in with him, westward.[†4] Wherever he has been, he has won the hearts of all kinds of people. They quite love him; and as I truly respect his character, I am proud and glad to hear his praises.[†5]

[†a]This is a poor letter to send you, Lady Holland, from so great a distance; but if it were only because it is a gratification of heart to me to wish you peace of mind, health, and happiness—if I had not the selfish desire to live in your remembrance—I should be tempted to inflict it upon you. If you can charge me with any commission, great or small, I need scarcely say it would be a real pleasure to me to execute it. Any letter addressed to me, to the care of David Colden Esquire 28 Laight Street Hudson Square New York, would be sure to reach me.

I am always
Yours faithfully, and truly obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.
I beg to be kindly remembered to Mr. Allen.[†1]
We carry with us, a sketch of our darlings, by Maclise. It is a great [comfort.][†2] We unpack it every night, if we be on a journey; and make as [?much of t][†3]his little Household God, as though it were alive.[†a]

To LORD JEFFREY, [?22 MARCH 1842]

Mention in To Colden, 4 Apr. Date: sent by the steamer leaving Boston on 2 Apr; probably written on 22 Mar, the day CD wrote to other English friends.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 22 MARCH 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire. R.A. | 14 Russell Place | Fitzroy Square | London | England.

Baltimore. | Twenty Second March 1842.

My very dear Mac.

From the depths of the Far West, whither we are now going—from the heights of the Alleghanny[†1] Mountains which we are about to ascend—from the small cabin of the canal boat in which we embark—from the surface of the Lakes we have yet to traverse—and amidst the silence of the broad Prairies we shall shortly cross—nay from the gloom of the Great Mammoth Cave in Kentucky,[†2] and high above the roar and spray of dread Niagara—my voice shall be heard, cursing the Academy. I will call down imprecations on the head of Martin Archer Shee[†3] from the solitudes where the Indians used to roam, and from which the white man has driven everything but the red sun which lingers there every evening as it did of yore—(oh beautiful, beautiful!)[†4] I will Anathematize the Green table and un holy water bottles[†5] in the splendour of early morning, and the softened beauty of the night. I will spit upon Trafalgar Square,[†6] and set my heel upon the Council Chamber. The aged and staggering associates shall dwindle peak and pine,[†7] beneath my withering blight—and the ranks of R.A's shall be thinned by me.

And could you—could you, Mac— lose the recollection of us, in the crowned presence of the King of Prussia?[†8] Was Devonshire Terrace forgotten, in the Monarch's state? Was it a necessary consequence of being out of your sight (and good God my dear boy, what an eye you have)[†9] that we should be out of your mind, likewise? Oh Mac, Mac. The Caledonia, having no letter from you on board, was ashamed of her mission, and put back. The very ocean rebelled at the enormity. How it must have gone to your heart—what coals of fire were heaped upon your head—when you had those two letters from me; and especially that one with the ball bill of fare, and Kate's portrait![†10]—You were penitent then. I know you were.[†11]

We have been travelling a great deal. Forster has a few scraps of description— in trust, as usual. As to Scenery, we really have seen very little as yet. It is the same thing over and over again. The railroads go through the low grounds and swamps, and it is all one eternal forest, with fallen trees mouldering away in stagnant water and decayed vegetable matter—and heaps of timber in every aspect of decay and utter ruin. I dress up imaginary tribes of Indians, as we rattle on, and scatter them among the trees as they used to be—sleeping in their blankets, cleaning their arms, nursing brown children, and so forth. But saving an occasional log hut, with children at the door, or a slave house, or a white man with an axe and a great dog, long miles and miles are wholly destitute of life, or change of any kind.

You will be familiar, very likely on the day this reaches you, with all that I have written to Forster. I will let it have the freshness of novelty, and spare you its repetition. He tells me great things of your Hamlet.[†1] What would I give to see it! But we shall be home, please God, before the exhibition closes; and thats[†2] a comfort.[†3]

Do you feel as though you would like some summer rides, some summer walks, some dinners, strolls at night, and minor theatre visitations? Do you feel as if, when we come home, you would like us, even better than the Academy, for a few weeks? For myself, if Shee stood bodily upon the pier of Liverpool when I leaped ashore, I would forget the past, and shake hands with him.— Yes.—I would.

Imagine Kate and I—a kind of Queen and Albert—holding a Levee every day (proclaimed and placarded in newspapers) and receiving all who choose to come. Imagine—but you can't imagine, without seeing them—how now and then a republican boy, of surpassing and indescribable free and easiness comes in among the company, and keeping his cap upon his head, inspects me at his leisure. We had one the other day who remained two hours, and took no other refreshment during the whole time than an occasional pick at his nose, or survey of the street from the open window, whence he invited other boys to come up, and do the like. Imagine, when I landed from a steam boat in New York, in a dense crowd, some twenty or thirty people, screwing small dabs of fur out of the back of that costly great coat I bought in Regent Street![†4] Imagine these public receptions occurring every day, and how I feel towards the people who come in, fresh, and full of speech and questioning, when I am quite tired out! Every railroad car is like a great omnibus. Whenever we come to a town station, the crowd surround it, let down all the windows, thrust in their heads, stare at me, and compare notes respecting my appearance, with as much coolness as if I were a Marble image. What do you think of that—as you would say, yourself.

Ever My Dear Mac
Your Faithful (though unacademic) friend
CHARLES DICKENS

My best regards to all your house.[†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 MARCH 1842†

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. C. Macready Esquire | 5 Clarence Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London | England.

Baltimore. Twenty Second March 1842.

My Dear Friend.

I beg your pardon—but you were speaking of rash leaps at hasty conclusions. Are you quite sure you designed that remark for me? Have you not, in the hurry of correspondence, slipped a paragraph into my letter, which belongs of right to somebody else?[†2] When did you ever know me leap at a wrong conclusion? I pause for a reply.[†3] Pray Sir did you ever find me admiring Mr. Bryden?[†4] On the contrary, did you never hear of my protesting through good, better, and best report, that he was not an open or a candid man and would one day beyond all doubt displease you by not being so. I pause again for a reply.

Are you quite sure, Mr. Macready,—and I address myself to you with the sternness of a man in the pit—are you quite sure Sir, that you do not view America through the pleasant mirage which often surrounds a thing that has been, but not a thing that is. Are you quite sure that when you were here,[†5] you relished it as well as you do now, when you look back upon it. The early spring birds, Mr. Macready, do sing in the groves, that you were very often not over well pleased with many of the new Country's social aspects. Are the birds[†6] to be trusted? Again I pause for a reply.

My dear Macready, I desire to be so honest and just to those who have so enthusiastically and earnestly welcomed me, that I burned the last letter I wrote to you[†1]—even to you to whom I would speak as to myself—rather than let it come with anything that might seem like an ill-considered word of disappointment. I preferred that you should think me neglectful (if you could imagine anything so wild) rather than I should do wrong in this respect.—Still it is of no use. I am disappointed. This is not the Republic I came to see. This is not the Republic of my imagination. I infinitely prefer a liberal Monarchy—even with its sickening accompaniments of Court Circulars, and Kings of Prussia[†2]—to such a Government as this. [†a]In every respect but that of National Education,[†3] the Country disappoints me.[†a] The more I think of its youth and strength, the poorer and more trifling in a thousand respects, it appears in my eyes. In everything of which it has made a boast—excepting its education of the people, and its care for poor children[†4]—it sinks immeasurably below the level I had placed it upon. And England, even England, bad and faulty as the old land is, and miserable as millions of her people are, rises in the comparison. [†b]Strike down the established church,[†5] and I would take her to my heart for better or worse, and reject this new love without a pang or moment's hesitation.[†b]

— III - 156 —

You live here, Macready, as I have sometimes heard you imagining! You! Loving you with all my heart and soul, [†c]and knowing what your disposition really is,[†c] I would not condemn you to a year's residence on this side of the Atlantic, for any money.[†1] Freedom of opinion! Where is it? I see a press more mean and paltry and silly and disgraceful than any country ever knew,—if that be its standard, here it is. But I speak of Bancroft, and am advised to be silent on that subject, for he is "a black sheep—a democrat".[†2] I speak of Bryant, and am entreated to be more careful—for the same reason.[†3] I speak of International copyright, and am implored not to ruin myself outright. I speak of Miss Martineau, and all parties—slave upholders and abolitionists; Whigs, Tyler Whigs, and Democrats, shower down upon her[†4] a perfect cataract of abuse. "But what has she done? Surely she praised America enough!"[†5]—"Yes, but she told us of some of our faults,[†6] and Americans can't bear to be told of their faults. Don't split on that rock, Mr. Dickens, don't write about America—we are so very suspicious."[†1]— Freedom of opinion! Macready, if I had been born here, and had written my books in this country,—producing them with no stamp of approval from any other land—it is my solemn belief that I should have lived and died, poor, unnoticed, and "a black sheep"[†2]—to boot. I never was more convinced of anything than I am of that.

— III - 157 —

— III - 158 —

The people are affectionate, generous, open-hearted, hospitable, enthusiastic, good humoured, polite to women, frank and cordial to all strangers; anxious to oblige; far less prejudiced than they have been described to be; frequently polished and refined, very seldom rude or disagreeable. I have made a great many friends here, even in public conveyances, whom I have been truly sorry to part from. In the towns, I have formed perfect attachments. I have seen none of that greediness and indecorum on which travellers have laid so much emphasis. I have returned frankness with frankness—met questions not intended to be rude, with answers meant to be satisfactory—and have not spoken to one man, woman, or child of any degree, who has not grown positively affectionate before we parted. In the respects[†3] of not being left alone, and of being horribly disgusted by tobacco chewing and tobacco spittle, I have suffered considerably. The sight of Slavery in Virginia; the hatred of British feeling upon that subject; and the miserable hints of the impotent indignation of the South, have pained me very much—on the last head, of course, I have felt nothing but a mingled pity and amusement; on the others, sheer distress. But however much I like the ingredients of this great dish, I cannot but come back to the point from which I started, and say that the dish itself goes against the grain with me, and that I don't like it.

You know that I am, truly, a Liberal. I believe I have as little Pride as most men; and I am conscious of not the smallest annoyance from being hail fellow well met, with everybody. I have not had greater pleasure in the company of any set of men among the thousands whom I have received (I hold a regular Levee every day, you know, which is duly heralded and proclaimed in the Newspapers) than in that of the Carmen of Hertford,[†4] who presented themselves in a body in their blue frocks, among a crowd of well-dressed ladies and gentlemen, and bad me welcome through their spokesmen. They had all read my books, and all perfectly understood them. It is not these things I have in my mind when I say that the man who comes to this Country a Radical and goes home again with his old opinions unchanged, must be a Radical on reason, sympathy, and reflection, and one who has so well considered the subject, that he has no chance of wavering.[†1]

We have been to Boston, Worcester, Hertford, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Fredericksburgh, Richmond, and back to Washington again. The premature heat of the weather (it was 80 yesterday in the shade) and Clay's advice—how you would like Clay![†2]—made me determine not to go to Charleston; but having got to Richmond, I think I should have turned back, under any circumstances. We remain at Baltimore for two days, of which this is one. Then we go to Harrisburgh. Then by the Canal boat and the Railroad over the Alleghany Mountains, to Pittsburgh. Then down the Ohio to Cincinnati; then to Louisville, and then to St. Louis. I have been invited to a public entertainment in every town I have entered, and have refused them; but I have excepted St. Louis, as the farthest point of my travels. My friends there have passed some resolutions which Forster has, and will shew you. From St. Louis we cross to Chicago, traversing immense prairies. Thence by the lakes and Detroit to Buffalo, and so to Niagara. A run into Canada follows of course, and then—let me write the blessed word in capitals—we turn towards HOME.[†3]

Kate has written to Mrs. Macready,[†4] and it is useless for me to thank you my dearest friend, or her, for your care of our dear children, which is our constant theme of discourse. Forster has gladdened our hearts with his account of the triumph of Acis and Galatea,[†5]—and I am anxiously looking for news of the Tragedy.[†6]—Forrest breakfasted with us at Richmond last Saturday—he was acting there, and I invited him—and he spoke very gratefully and very like a man, of your kindness to him when he was in London.[†7]

David Colden is as good a fellow as ever lived; and I am deeply in love with his wife. Indeed we have received the greatest and most earnest and zealous kindness from the whole family, and quite love them all. Do you remember one Greenhow,[†1] whom you invited to pass some days with you at the hotel on the Kaatskill Mountains?[†2] He is translator to the State Office at Washington— has a very pretty wife[†3]— and a little girl of five years old. We dined with them, and had a very pleasant day. The President invited me to dinner, but I couldn't stay for it. I had a private audience, however, and we attended the Public drawing room besides.

Now don't you rush at the quick conclusion, that I have rushed at a quick conclusion. Pray be upon your guard. If you can by any process estimate the extent of my affectionate regard for you, and the rush I shall make when I reach London to take you by your true right hand, I don't object. But let me entreat you to be very careful how you come down upon the sharp-sighted Individual who pens these words, which you seem to me to have done in what Willmott wod. call "one of Mr. Macready's rushes"—As my pen is getting past its work I have taken a new one to say, that I am ever, My Dear Macready your faithful friend. CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 22 MARCH 1842

MS Huntington Library. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings. | Chancery Lane | London England.

Baltimore—United States | Twenty Second March 1842.

My Dear friend.

We have been as far South as Richmond in Virginia (where they grow and manufacture Tobacco; and where the labour is all performed by Slaves) but the Season in those latitudes is so intensely and prematurely hot, that it was considered a matter of doubtful expediency to go on to Charleston. [†a]For this unexpected reason; and because the country between Richmond and Charleston is but a desolate swamp the whole way; and because Slavery is anything but a cheerful thing to live amidst, I have altered my route by the advice of Mr. Clay (the great political leader in this country) and have returned here, previous to diving into the Far West.[†a] We start for that part of the country—which includes mountain travelling, and Lake travelling, and Prairie travelling—the day after tomorrow at 8 o'Clock in the Morning; and shall be in the west, and from there going Northward again, until the 30th. of April or 1st. of May, when we shall halt for a week at Niagara, before going further into Canada. We have taken our passage Home (God bless the word) in the George Washington Packet Ship from New York. She sails on the 7th. of June.

I have departed from my resolution not to accept any more public entertainments—they have been proposed in every town I have visited—in favor of the people of St. Louis—my utmost Western point. That town is on the borders of the Indian territory—a trifling distance from this place—only 2000[†1] miles!

At my second halting place I shall be able to write on to fix the day. I suppose it will be somewhere about the 12th. of April. Think of my going so far towards the setting Sun, to dinner!

In every town where we stay, though it be only for a day, we hold a regular levee or drawing room, where I shake hands, on an average with five or six hundred people, who pass on from me to Kate, and are shaken again by her. Maclise's picture of our darlings stands upon a table or sideboard the while; and my "travelling Secretary", assisted very often by a committee belonging to the place, presents the people in due form. Think of two hours of this, every day,— and the people coming in by hundreds—all fresh, and piping hot, and full of questions—when we are literally exhausted, and can hardly stand. I really do believe that if I had not had a lady with me, I should have been obliged to leave the country and go back to England. But for her, they never would leave me alone by day or night; and as it is, a Slave comes to me now and then in the middle of the night with a letter—and waits at the bedroom door for an answer!

It was so hot at Richmond that we could scarcely breathe,—and the Peach and other Fruit trees were in full blossom. It was so cold at Washington next day, that we were shivering! But even in the same town you might often wear nothing but a shirt and trousers in the morning, and two Great coats at night—the thermometer very frequently taking a little trip of 30 degrees between sunrise and sunset.

They do lay it on at the Hotels, in such style! They charge by the day; so that whether one dines out or dines at home, makes no manner of difference. T'other day, I wrote to order our rooms at Philadelphia to be ready on a certain day, and was detained a week longer than I expected in New York. The Philadelphia landlord not only charged me half rent for the rooms during the whole of that time, but board for myself, and Kate, and Anne during the whole time too, though we were actually boarding at the same expense during the same time, in New York!—What do you say to that? If I remonstrated, the whole virtue of the newspapers would be aroused directly.

[†b]We were at the President's drawing room while we were in Washington. I had a private audience besides, and was asked to dinner, but couldn't stay.[†b]

Parties—parties—parties—of course, every day and night. But it's not all parties. I go into the prisons, the police offices, the watch-houses, the hospitals, the workhouses. I was out half the night in New York with two of their most famous constables[†1]—started at midnight—and went into every brothel, thieves' house, murdering hovel, sailors dancing place, and abode of villainny,[†2] both black and white, in the town. I went incog behind the scenes to the little Theatre where Mitchell is making a fortune. He has been rearing a little dog for me, and has called him "Boz".[†3] I am going to bring him home.—In a word I go everywhere, and a hard life it is. [†c]But I am careful to drink hardly anything, and not to smoke at all. I have recourse to my medicine chest whenever I feel at all bilious; and am, thank God, thoroughly well.[†c]

When I next write to you, I shall have begun, I hope, to turn my face homeward. I have a great store of oddity and whimsicality, and am going now into the oddest and most characteristic part of this most queer country.[†4]

[†d]Always direct to the care of David Colden Esqre. 28 Laight Street Hudson Square New York. I received your Caledonia letter with the greatest joy.

Kate sends her best remembrances.[†d] And I am always,

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS][†5]

[†e]P.S. Richmond was my extreme southern point; and I turn from the South altogether, the day after tomorrow. Will you let the Britannia know of this change[†6]—if needful?[†e]

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 22 MARCH 1842

MS Professor E. S. Pearson. Address: Samuel Rogers Esquire | 22 Saint James's Place | London | England.

Baltimore. United States. | Twenty Second March 1842.

My Dear Mr. Rogers.

I know you will be glad to hear, under my own hand, that we are both well,—though very anxious to get back to dear old home, our friends, and darling children. I am obliged to make, as perhaps you have heard, a kind of Public Progress through this Country; and have been so oppressed with Festivals given in my honor, that I have found it necessary to notify my disinclination, to accept any more; or I should rather say my determination not to lead such a trying life. I have made one departure from this rule, and that is in the case of a body of readers in the Far West—at a town called St. Louis, on the confines of the Indian Territory. I am going there to dinner (it is only two thousand miles off)—and start the day after tomorrow.

If you ever have leisure to write a line, saying that you have received this, and are well, I shall be truly delighted to hear from you. Any letter addressed to me, to the care of David Colden Esquire, 28 Laight Street Hudson Square New York, will be forwarded to me without delay.

They give me everything here, but Time. If they had added that to the long catalogue of their hospitalities, I should certainly have inflicted a long letter upon you, which would have wandered into it's impossible to say how long a description of our[†1] travels and adventures. So you may consider yourself very fortunate.

I hope you are as well as ever, and as great a walker as ever, and as good a talker as ever—in short as perfect and complete a Samuel Rogers as ever— which I don't doubt in the least. I have made great exertions here in behalf of an International Copyright law,[†2] and almost begin to hope, from the assurance the leaders of the different parties at Washington have given me, that it may be brought about.

We have arranged to sail from New York for England, on the 7th. of June, in the George Washington Packet Ship. We had so bad a voyage out, that I have eschewed ocean steamers for ever.

The peace and quiet of Broadstairs never seemed so great as now. I could hug Miss Collins the Bather,[†3] as though she were a very Venus.

Believe me—here and everywhere—

Faithfully | Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 22 MARCH 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mr. Serjeant Talfourd | Serjeant's Inn Chancery Lane | London | England.

Baltimore, United States | Twenty Second March 1842.

My Dear Talfourd.

I am not going to inflict a long letter upon you. Nor am I going to weary you with any account of the Public Progress they oblige me to make through this country. I dare say you will have heard enough of that.

My purposes are threefold—first to tell you that we are safe and well— secondly to ask you to bear me in mind sometimes—thirdly, to add that if you can ever find time to write to me, it will give me true delight to recognize your familiar hand at this long—long—distance from dear old Home. Any letter addressed to me, to the care of David Colden Esquire 28 Laight Street Hudson Square New York, will be forwarded to me wherever I may be.

We have been as far South, as Richmond in Virginia; and are now going into the Far West. The first thing I saw in Richmond was a Play bill, whereon was ION[†1] in enormous capitals. One Mrs. Shaw[†2] from New York (a very handsome woman and a good actress) played Ion—very well she played it too, I assure you; and the piece was applauded to the echoe.[†3]

I have exerted myself very much in the way of remonstrance, private influence, and public speeches, to advance the International Copyright question. And I have received such strong assurances from the party leaders at Washington, that I almost begin to hope something will be done at last. I dare say Forster will have seen you on this subject, in compliance with my request, however.[†4]

The day after tomorrow, we start for the Mountains, Forests, and Prairies. Towards the end of April we shall go round by the lakes to Niagara—then run into Canada—and return, please God, on the 7th. of June by the George Washington Packet Ship from New York.

I need scarcely say that as you were one of the last friends I saw before leaving England, you will be one of the first whom I hope to see on my return. Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial remembrances to yourself, Mrs. Talfourd, Miss Ely, Frank, Mary,[†5] and all the children. And I am ever My Dear Talfourd

Faithfully | Your Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd.

To JOHN FORSTER, 22-23 MARCH [1842]

Extract in F, III, iv, 241-2 (final addition to letter begun 6 Mar, continued 13th, 17th and 21st).

Baltimore,[†1] | Tuesday, March 22nd.

I have a great diffidence in running counter to any impression formed by a man of Maclise's genius, on a subject he has fully considered. But I quite agree with you, about the King in Hamlet.[†2] Talking of Hamlet, I constantly carry in my great-coat pocket the Shakespeare you bought for me in Liverpool. What an unspeakable source of delight that book is to me!

Your Ontario letter, I found here to-night: sent on by the vigilant and faithful Colden, who makes every thing having reference to us, or our affairs, a labour of the heartiest love. We devoured its contents, greedily. Good Heaven, my dear fellow, how I miss you! and how I count the time 'twixt this and coming home again. Shall I ever forget the day of our parting at Liverpool! when even ——[†3] became jolly and radiant in his sympathy with our separation! Never, never shall I forget that time. Ah! how seriously I thought then, and how seriously I have thought many, many times since, of the terrible folly of ever quarrelling with a true friend, on good for nothing trifles! Every little hasty word that has ever passed between us, rose up before me like a reproachful ghost. At this great distance, I seem to look back upon any miserable small interruption of our affectionate intercourse, though only for the instant it has never outlived, with a sort of pity for myself as if I were another creature.[†4]

I have bought another accordion.[†5] The steward[†6] lent me one, on the passage

out, and I regaled the ladies' cabin with my performances. You can't think with what feeling I play Home Sweet Home[†1] every night, or how pleasantly sad it makes us.... And so God bless you.... I leave space for a short postscript before sealing this, but it will probably contain nothing. The dear, dear children! what a happiness it is to know that they are in such hands.[†2]

P.S. Twenty-third March, 1842. Nothing new. And all well. I have no heard that the Columbia is in, but she is hourly expected. Washington Irving has come on for another leave-taking, and dines with me to-day. We start for the West, at half after eight to-morrow morning. I send you a newspaper, the most respectable in the States, with a very just copyright article.[†3]

To WILLIAM [GUY],[†4] 23 MARCH 1842

MS Harvard University Library.

Barnum's Hotel. | Twenty Third March 1842

My Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for the beautiful and delicious mint julep you have so kindly sent me.[†5] It's quite a mercy that I knew what it was.[†6] I have tasted it, but reserve further proceedings until the arrival of Washington Irving whom I expect to dine with me, tete a tete;[†7] and who will help me to drink your health, with many thanks to you.[†8]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Gay[†9] Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 23 MARCH 1842

Text from Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 169; MS 1 p.; dated Baltimore, 23 Mar 42.

My dear young friend.

I have had great satisfaction in the receipt of your letter; and am truly glad to know that I have given you so much pleasure. It will be my endeavour when I go home to England, to enlarge your stock of amusement and happiness—and I shall always be,

Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 28 MARCH 1842

Extract in F, III, v, 246-51.

On board the canal boat.[†1] Going to Pittsburgh.
Monday, March twenty-eighth, 1842.

We left Baltimore last Thursday the twenty-fourth at half-past eight in the morning, by railroad; and got to a place called York,[†2] about twelve. There we dined, and took a stage-coach for Harrisburgh;[†3] twenty-five miles further. This stage-coach was like nothing so much as the body of one of the swings you see at a fair set upon four wheels and roofed and covered at the sides with painted canvas. There were twelve inside! I, thank my stars, was on the box. The luggage was on the roof; among it, a good-sized dining table, and a big rockingchair. We also took up an intoxicated gentleman, who sat for ten miles between me and the coachman; and another intoxicated gentleman who got up behind, but in the course of a mile or two fell off without hurting himself, and was seen in the distant perspective reeling back to the grog-shop where we had found him. There were four horses to this land-ark,[†4] of course; but we did not perform the journey until after half-past six o'clock that night.... The first half of the journey was tame enough, but the second lay through the valley of the Susquehanah[†5] (I think I spell it right, but I haven't that American Geography at hand)[†6] which is very beautiful....

I think I formerly made a casual remark to you touching the precocity of the youth of this country.[†1] When we changed horses on this journey I got down to stretch my legs, refresh myself with a glass of whiskey and water, and shake the wet off my great coat—for it was raining very heavily, and continued to do so, all night. Mounting to my seat again, I observed something lying on the roof of the coach, which I took to be a rather large fiddle in a brown bag. In the course of ten miles or so, however, I discovered that it had a pair of dirty shoes at one end, and a glazed cap at the other; and further observation demonstrated it to be a small boy, in a snuff-coloured coat, with his arms quite pinioned to his sides by deep forcing into his pockets. He was, I presume, a relative or friend of the coachman's, as he lay a-top of the luggage, with his face towards the rain; and, except when a change of position brought his shoes in contact with my hat, he appeared to be asleep. Sir, when we stopped to water the horses, about two miles from Harrisburgh, this thing slowly upreared itself to the height of three foot eight, and fixing its eyes on me with a mingled expression of complacency, patronage, national independence, and sympathy for all outer barbarians and foreigners, said, in shrill piping accents, "Well now, stranger, I guess you find this, a'most like an English a'ternoon,—hey?" It is unnecessary to add that I thirsted for his blood....

We had all next morning in Harrisburgh, as the canal-boat was not to start until three o'clock in the afternoon. The officials called upon me before I had finished breakfast; and as the town is the seat of the Pennsylvanian legislature, I went up to the capitol.[†2] I was very much interested in looking over a number of treaties made with the poor Indians,[†3] their signatures being rough drawings of the creatures or weapons they are called after; and the extraordinary drawing of these emblems, showing the queer, unused, shaky manner in which each man has held the pen, struck me very much.[†4]

You know my small respect for our house of commons. These local legislatures are too insufferably apish of mighty legislation, to be seen without bile; for which reason, and because a great crowd of senators and ladies had assembled in both houses to behold the inimitable, and had already begun to pour in upon him even in the secretary's private room, I went back to the hotel, with all speed.[†1] The members of both branches of the legislature followed me there, however, so we had to hold the usual levee before our half-past one o'clock dinner. We received a great number of them. Pretty nearly every man spat upon the carpet, as usual; and one blew his nose with his fingers—also on the carpet, which was a very neat one, the room given up to us being the private parlor of the landlord's wife. This has become so common since, however, that it scarcely seems worth mentioning. Please to observe that the gentleman in question was a member of the senate, which answers (as they very often tell me) to our house of lords.

The innkeeper was the most attentive, civil, and obliging person I ever saw in my life. On being asked for his bill, he said there was no bill: the honor and pleasure &c. being more than sufficient.[†2] I did not permit this, of course; and begged Mr. Q to explain to him, that, travelling four strong, I could not hear of it on any account.

And now I come to the Canal Boat. Bless your heart and soul, my dear fellow,—if you could only see us on board the canal boat! Let me think, for a moment, at what time of the day or night I should best like you to see us. In the morning? Between five and six in the morning, shall I say? Well! you would like to see me, standing on the deck, fishing the dirty water out of the canal with a tin ladle chained to the boat by a long chain; pouring the same into a tin-basin (also chained up in like manner); and scrubbing my face with the jack towel. At night, shall I say? I don't know that you would like to look into the cabin at night, only to see me lying on a temporary shelf exactly the width of this sheet of paper when it's open (I measured it this morning),[†3] with one man above me, and another below; and, in all, eight and twenty in a low cabin, which you can't stand upright in with your hat on. I don't think you would like to look in at breakfast time either, for then these shelves have only just been taken down and put away, and the atmosphere of the place is, as you may suppose, by no means fresh; though there are upon the table tea and coffee, and bread and butter, and salmon, and shad, and liver, and steak, and potatoes, and pickles, and ham, and pudding,[†1] and sausages; and three and thirty people sitting round it, eating and drinking; and savoury bottles of gin, and whiskey, and brandy, and rum, in the bar hard by; and seven and twenty out of the eight and twenty men, in foul linen, with yellow streams from half-chewed tobacco trickling down their chins. Perhaps the best time for you to take a peep would be the present: eleven o'clock in the forenoon: when the barber is at his shaving, and the gentlemen are lounging about the stove waiting for their turns, and not more than seventeen are spitting in concert, and two or three are walking overhead (lying down on the luggage every time the man at the helm calls "Bridge!"), and I am writing this in the ladies'-cabin, which is a part of the gentlemen's, and only screened off by a red curtain. Indeed it exactly resembles the dwarf's private apartment in a caravan at a fair; and the gentlemen, generally, represent the spectators at a penny-a-head. The place is just as clean and just as large as that caravan you and I were in at Greenwich-fair last past. Outside, it is exactly like any canal-boat you have seen near the Regent's-park, or elsewhere.

You never can conceive what the hawking and spitting is, the whole night through. Last night was the worst. Upon my honor and word I was obliged, this morning, to lay my fur-coat on the deck, and wipe the half dried flakes of spittle from it with my handkerchief: and the only surprise seemed to be, that I should consider it necessary to do so. When I turned in last night, I put it on a stool beside me, and there it lay, under a cross fire from five men—three opposite; one above; and one below. I make no complaints, and shew no disgust. I am looked upon as highly facetious at night, for I crack jokes with everybody near me until we fall asleep.[†2] I am considered very hardy in the morning, for I run up, bare-necked, and plunge my head into the half-frozen water, by half past five o'clock. I am respected for my activity, inasmuch as I jump from the boat to the towing-path, and walk five or six miles before breakfast; keeping up with the horses all the time. In a word, they are quite astonished to find a sedentary Englishman roughing it so well, and taking so much exercise; and question me very much on that head. The greater part of the men will sit and shiver round the stove all day, rather than put one foot before the other. As to having a window open, that's not to be thought of.

We expect to reach Pittsburgh to-night, between eight and nine o'clock; and there we ardently hope to find your March letters awaiting us. We have had, with the exception of Friday afternoon, exquisite weather, but cold. Clear starlight and moonlight nights. The canal has run, for the most part, by the side of the Susquehanah and Iwanata[†3] rivers; and has been carried through tremendous obstacles. Yesterday, we crossed the mountain.[†1] This is done by railroad. ...[†2] You dine at an inn upon the mountain; and, including the half hour allowed for the meal, are rather more than five hours performing this strange part of the journey. The people north and "down east" have terrible legends of its danger; but they appear to be exceedingly careful, and don't go to work at all wildly. There are some queer precipices close to the rails, certainly; but every precaution is taken, I am inclined to think, that such difficulties, and such a vast work, will admit of.

The scenery, before you reach the mountains, and when you are on them, and after you have left them, is very grand and fine; and the canal winds its way through some deep, sullen gorges, which, seen by moonlight, are very impressive:[†3] though immeasurably inferior to Glencoe, to whose terrors I have not seen the smallest approach. We have passed, both in the mountains and elsewhere, a great number of new settlements, and detached log-houses. Their utterly forlorn and miserable appearance baffles all description. I have not seen six cabins out of six hundred, where the windows have been whole. Old hats, old clothes, old boards, old fragments of blanket and paper, are stuffed into the broken glass; and their air is misery and desolation.[†4] It pains the eye to see the stumps of great trees thickly strewn in every field of wheat; and never to lose the eternal swamp and dull morass, with hundreds of rotten trunks, of elm and pine and sycamore and logwood, steeped in its unwholesome water; where the frogs so croak at night that after dark there is an incessant sound as if millions of phantom teams, with bells, were travelling through the upper air, at an enormous distance off. It is quite an oppressive circumstance, too, to come upon great tracks, where settlers have been burning down the trees; and where their wounded bodies lie about, like those of murdered creatures; while here and there some charred and blackened giant rears two bare arms aloft, and seems to curse his enemies.[†5] The prettiest sight I have seen was yesterday, when we— on the heights of the mountain, and in a keen wind—looked down into a valley full of light and softness: catching glimpses of scattered cabins; children running to the doors; dogs bursting out to bark; pigs scampering home, like so many prodigal sons; families sitting out in their gardens; cows gazing upward, with a stupid indifference; men in their shirt-sleeves, looking on at their unfinished houses, and planning work for to-morrow;—and the train riding on, high above them, like a storm. But I know this is beautiful—very—very beautiful![†6]

... I wonder whether you and Mac mean to go to Greenwich-fair! Perhaps you dine at the Crown-and-sceptre to-day, for it's Easter-Monday—who knows! I wish you drank punch, dear Forster. It's a shabby thing, not to be able to picture you with that cool green glass....

I told you of the many uses of the word "fix."[†1] I ask Mr. Q on board a steamboat if breakfast be nearly ready, and he tells me yes he should think so, for when he was last below the steward was "fixing the tables"—in other words, laying the cloth. When we have been writing, and I beg him (do you remember anything of my love of order, at this distance of time?) to collect our papers, he answers that he'll "fix 'em presently." So when a man's dressing he's "fixing" himself, and when you put yourself under a doctor he "fixes" you in no time. T'other night, before we came on board here, when I had ordered a bottle of mulled claret and waited some time for it, it was put on table with an apology from the landlord (a lieutenant-colonel)[†2] that "he feared it wasn't fixed properly." And here, on Saturday morning, a Western man, handing the potatoes to Mr. Q at breakfast, enquired if he wouldn't take some of "these fixings" with his meat. I remained as grave as a judge. I catch them looking at me sometimes, and feel that they think I don't take any notice. Politics are very high here; dreadfully strong; handbills, denunciations, invectives, threats, and quarrels. The question is, who shall be the next President.[†3] The election comes off in three years and a half from this time.

To JOHN PENDLETON KENNEDY, [LATE MARCH 1842]

Mention in To Kennedy, 30 Apr 42.[†4] Date: since according to CD written from Pittsburgh, one of the last three days in Mar.

Saying that, after many attempts to write a memorandum for Kennedy's Committee on international copyright, he had found he could not do so, and giving his reasons.

April

To W. C. MACREADY, 1 APRIL 1842

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. C. Macready Esquire | 5 Clarence Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London | England.

On Board the Steamboat | From Pittsburgh to Cincinnati
Friday Night April The First 1842.
(which will account for tremulous writing)

My Dear Macready. But that I know from constant experience that there are seasons, and many seasons, in a life of excitement and hard work, when a man needs all the manhood he has in him, not to give in—and to keep up—doing the labour he has to do in this doing world—and facing the weather, whatever it be, bravely—I should quarrel with you for your despondent letter in which I do fear certain rotten sins called Sunday Newspapers, and certain rotten creatures with mens'[†1] forms and devils' hearts (serving the demoniac ability) called writers, have greater part and share than they should.[†2] I have been thinking all day, as we have been skimming down this beautiful Ohio, its wooded heights all radiant in the sunlight,[†3] how can a man like Macready fret, and fume, and chafe himself for such lice of literature as these! You may say that they are like lice, for another reason besides their meanness—because they live in peoples'[†1] heads. I don't believe it. I have no faith in their influence, good or bad. I put no trust in them, for good or evil. Associating you with my recollections and meditations in this, and all other journeys, and becoming more and more mindful at such times, if that can be, of the images with which you have stored my brain, and the human energies and great passions you have set before me, and remembering the stamp and substance you have impressed on unsubstantial thoughts,—I have wondered a hundred times how things so mean and small—so wholly unconnected with your image, and utterly separated from the exercise of your genius, in its effects on all men—can, for an instant, disturb you. Fine talking, you will say,—and so it is. For I know the vague desire to take somebody by the throat, which is consequent upon the discharge of these pigmy arrows. But it is not the more rational because I have felt it also; and I vow to try and overcome it, and gain the victory by being indifferent, and feeling my own worth, and bidding them whistle on.

