The theatre, Forster tells me, is doing well. Everybody tells me it is doing well. You yourself don't say that it is doing ill. In the joint names of Hercules and the Waggoner, cheer up then! The work will not always be so hard. You won't always take it so much to heart.—My mind misgives me that you have been living too long on chops—and that you don't take enough "rosy"[†1] to drink—and that you are altogether in what Beau Tibbs,[†2] with another meaning in his mind, would call "a horrid low way".—But if Elliotson be the man I take him to be (and if he be not, the whole human race wear masks and dominoes) he will already have administered, the necessary restoratives. He will have said that you must, and shall, have regular dinner times. He will have spoken emphatically of nourishing meats; generous drinks; and healths five fathoms deep, to the distant Dickens. He will have created a new office in the Theatre, and appointed to it a strictly virtuous female, whose function is, to come upon the stage at 12 at noon, bearing in her hand a tumbler-glass, containing the yolk of a new laid egg, discreetly mixed with Golden Sherry,[†3] concerning which, the stage direction shall be "Macready drinks, smacks his lips, and becomes refreshed."

Seriously, my dear Macready, no man can work in mind and body, long, unless he uses a dining table as christians should. I have always thoroughly abominated and abjured those chops — those nasty Hemming chops.[†4] Old Parr[†5] never dined off chops, or in his dressing room. Chops and Cheerfulness are impossible of connection, but Joints and joy are clearly related; and Port and peace go hand in hand. Do[†6] say in your next that you have left off eating with your fingers on week days, and have taken to knives and forks again. Do say that you are better, and healthfully disposed—but not unless you really are so. And never acknowledge to yourself (so shall your affectionate confidence have no occasion to acknowledge to me) that in the smallest angle of your heart, you ever framed that wish or thought twice—that thought, which seriously entertained for but one moment's space—would give pain, in Heaven, to the Spirit of your own child.[†7]

We received your letter, and that of your dear wife and sister,[†1] with all our other epistolary treasures this morning—most fortunately and opportunely just before we left Pittsburgh. We have been looking for them painfully, these many days; and if they had arrived but four and twenty hours later, would have gone on our way with heavy hearts. The steamer that brought them had a terrible passage.[†2] Her engine was disabled, and she came on with her sails (they carry but two; and neither is larger than a T.R.D.L. flat[†3]—I mean one of a pair). She staggered into Halifax, and the stationary steamer[†4] brought on her Mails and passengers.

I will not tell you of our route; for I have written at some length to Forster, and he will, no doubt, read my letter to you. Nor will I tell you (for the same reason) of my extraordinary success in magnetizing Kate. I hope you will be a witness of that, many, many, many happy times.

I have not changed—I cannot change, my dear Macready—my secret opinion of this country; its follies, vices, grievous disappointments. I have said to Forster that I believe the heaviest blow ever dealt at Liberty's Head, will be dealt by this nation in the ultimate failure of its example to the Earth.[†5] See what is passing now—Look at the exhausted Treasury;[†6] the paralyzed government; the unworthy representatives of a free people; the desperate contests between the North and the South; the iron curb and brazen muzzle[†7] fastened upon every man who speaks his mind, even in that Republican Hall, to which Republican men are sent by a Republican people to speak Republican Truths[†8]—the stabbings, and shootings,[†9] and coarse and brutal threatenings exchanged between Senators under the very Senate's roof[†1]—the intrusion of the most pitiful, mean, malicious, creeping, crawling, sneaking party spirit, into all transactions of life[†2]—even into the appointments of physicians to pauper madhouses[†3]—the silly, drivelling, slanderous, wicked, monstrous Party Press.[†4] I say nothing of the egotism which makes of Lord Ashburton's appointment, the conciliatory act of a frightened Government; nothing of the boastful, vain-glorious spirit which dictates a million of such absurdities; and which is not English. I love and honor very many of the people here—but "the Mass" (to use our monarchical term) are miserably dependent in great things, and miserably independent in small ones. That's a Truth, and you will find it so. The Nation is a body without a head; and the arms and legs, are occupied in quarrelling with the trunk and each other, and exchanging bruises at random.

God bless you my dearest friend. A hundred times God bless you. I will not thank you (how can I thank you!) for your care of our dear children: but I will ever be, heart and soul, your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I need not say that I have many pleasant things to say of America. God forbid that it should be otherwise. I speak to you, as I would to myself. I am a Lover of Freedom, disappointed—That's all. I am carrying this letter on to Cincinnati, to send to Boston from there.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, 1, 2, 3 and 4 APRIL 1842

Extracts in F, III, v, 251-6 (continuation and conclusion of letter begun 28 Mar).

On board the steam boat from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, April the first, 1842. A very tremulous steam boat, which makes my hand shake.[†6] This morning, my dear friend, this very morning, which, passing by without bringing news from England, would have seen us on our way to St. Louis (viâ Cincinnati and Louisville) with sad hearts and dejected countenances, and the prospect of remaining for at least three weeks longer without any intelligence of those so inexpressibly dear to us—this very morning, bright and lucky morning that it was, a great packet was brought to our bed-room door, from HOME. How I have read and re-read your affectionate, hearty, interesting, funny, serious, delightful, and thoroughly Forsterian Columbia letter, I will not attempt to tell you; or how glad I am that you liked my first; or how afraid I am that my second was not written in such good spirits as it should have been; or how glad I am again to think that my third was; or how I hope you will find some amusement from my fourth: this present missive.[†1] All this, and more affectionate and earnest words than the post office would convey at any price, though they have no sharp edges to hurt the stamping-clerk—you will understand, I know, without expression, or attempt at expression. So having got over the first agitation of so much pleasure; and having walked the deck; and being now in the cabin, where one party are playing at chess, and another party are asleep, and another are talking round the stove, and all are spitting; and a persevering bore of a horrible New Englander[†2] with a droning voice like a gigantic bee will sit down beside me, though I am writing, and talk incessantly, in my very ear, to Kate;—here goes again.

Let me see. I should tell you, first, that we got to Pittsburgh between eight and nine o'clock of the evening of the day on which I left off at the top of this sheet; and were there received by a little man (a very little man) whom I knew years ago in London. He rejoiceth in the name of [George D'Almaine];[†3] and, when I knew him, was in partnership with his father on the stock-exchange, and lived handsomely at Dalston. They failed in business soon afterwards, and then this little man began to turn to account what had previously been his amusement and accomplishment, by painting little subjects for the fancy shops. So I lost sight of him, nearly ten years ago; and here he turned up 'tother day, as a portrait painter in Pittsburgh! He had previously written me a letter which moved me a good deal, by a kind of quiet independence and contentment it breathed, and still a painful sense of being alone, so very far from home. I received it in Philadelphia, and answered it. He dined with us every day of our stay in Pittsburgh (they were only three), and was truly gratified and delighted to find me unchanged— more so than I can tell you. I am very glad to-night to think how much happiness we have fortunately been able to give him.

Pittsburgh is like Birmingham—at least its townsfolks say so; and I didn't contradict them. It is, in one respect. There is a great deal of smoke in it.[†1] I quite offended a man at our yesterday's levee, who supposed I was "now quite at home," by telling him that the notion of London being so dark a place was a popular mistake. We had very queer customers at our receptions,[†2] I do assure you. Not least among them, a gentleman with his inexpressibles[†3] imperfectly buttoned and his waistband resting on his thighs, who stood behind the half-opened door, and could by no temptation or inducement be prevailed upon to come out. There was also another gentleman, with one eye and one fixed gooseberry, who stood in a corner, motionless like an eight-day clock, and glared upon me, as I courteously received the Pittsburgians. There were also two red-headed brothers—boys—young dragons rather—who hovered about Kate, and wouldn't go. A great crowd they were, for three days; and a very queer one.

Still in the same Boat. April the Second, 1842.

Many, many, happy returns of the day.[†4] It's only eight o'clock in the morning now, but we mean to drink your health after dinner, in a bumper; and scores of Richmond dinners to us![†5] We have some wine (a present sent on board by our Pittsburgh landlord) in our own cabin; and we shall tap it to good purpose, I assure you; wishing you all manner and kinds of happiness, and a long life to ourselves that we may be partakers of it. We have wondered a hundred times already, whether you and Mac will dine anywhere together, in honour of the day. I say yes, but Kate says no. She predicts that you'll ask Mac, and he won't go. I have not yet heard from him.[†6]

We have a better cabin here, than we had on board the Britannia; the berths being much wider, and the den having two doors: one opening on the ladies' cabin, and one upon a little gallery in the stern of the boat.[†1] We expect to be at Cincinnati some time on Monday morning, and we carry about fifty passengers. The cabin for meals goes right through the boat, from the prow to the stern, and is very long; only a small portion of it being divided off, by a partition of wood and ground-glass, for the ladies. We breakfast at half after seven, dine at one, and sup at six. Nobody will sit down to any one of these meals, though the dishes are smoking on the board, until the ladies have appeared, and taken their chairs. It was the same in the canal boat.

The washing department is a little more civilized than it was on the canal, but bad is the best. Indeed the Americans when they are travelling, as Miss Martineau seems disposed to admit, are exceedingly negligent: not to say dirty. To the best of my making out, the ladies, under most circumstances, are content with smearing their hands and faces in a very small quantity of water.[†2] So are the men; who superadd to that mode of ablution, a hasty use of the common brush and comb.[†3] It is quite a practice, too, to wear but one cotton shirt a week, and three or four fine linen fronts. Anne reports that this is Mr. Q's course of proceeding: and my portrait-painting friend[†4] told me that it was the case with pretty nearly all his sitters; so that when he bought a piece of cloth not long ago, and instructed the sempstress to make it all into shirts, not fronts, she thought him deranged.

My friend the New Englander, of whom I wrote last night, is perhaps the most intolerable bore on this vast continent. He drones, and snuffles, and writes poems, and talks small philosophy and metaphysics, and never will be quiet, under any circumstances. He is going to a great temperance convention at Cincinnati;[†5] along with a doctor of whom I saw something at Pittsburgh.[†6] The doctor, in addition to being everything that the New Englander is, is a phrenologist besides. I dodge them about the boat. Whenever I appear on deck, I see them bearing down upon me—and fly. The New Englander was very anxious last night that he and I should "form a magnetic chain," and magnetize the doctor, for the benefit of all incredulous passengers; but I declined, on the plea of tremendous occupation in the way of letter-writing.

And speaking of magnetism, let me tell you that the other night at Pittsburgh, there being present only Mr. Q and the portrait-painter, Kate sat down, laughing, for me to try my hand upon her. I had been holding forth upon the subject rather luminously, and asserting that I thought I could exercise the influence, but had never tried. In six minutes, I magnetized her into hysterics, and then into the magnetic sleep. I tried again next night, and she fell into the slumber in little more than two minutes.... I can wake her with perfect ease; but I confess (not being prepared for anything so sudden and complete), I was on the first occasion rather alarmed.... The Western parts being sometimes hazardous,[†1] I have fitted out the whole of my little company with LIFE PRESERVERS, which I inflate with great solemnity when we get aboard any boat, and keep, as Mrs. Cluppins did her umbrella in the court of common pleas, ready for use upon a moment's notice.[†2] ...

Sunday, April the third

Besides the doctor and the dread New Englander, we have on board that valiant general[†3] who wrote to me about the "two LL's."[†4] He is an old, old man with a weazen face, and the remains of a pigeon-breast in his military surtout. He is acutely gentlemanly and officer-like. The breast has so subsided, and the face has become so strongly marked, that he seems, like a pigeon-pie, to show only the feet of the bird outside, and to keep the rest to himself. He is perhaps the most horrible bore in this country. And I am quite serious when I say that I do not believe there are, on the whole earth besides, so many intensified bores as in these United States. No man can form an adequate idea of the real meaning of the word, without coming here.[†5] There are no particular characters on board, with these three exceptions. Indeed I seldom see the passengers but at meal-times, as I read and write in our own little state room.... I have smuggled two chairs into our crib; and write this on a book upon my knee. Everything is in the neatest order, of course; and my shaving tackle, dressing case, brushes, books, and papers, are arranged with as much precision as if we were going to remain here a month. Thank God we are not.

The average width of the river rather exceeds that of the Thames at Greenwich. In parts it is much broader; and then there is usually a green island, covered with trees, dividing it into two streams. Occasionally we stop for a few minutes at a small town, or village (I ought to say city, everything is a city here); but the banks are for the most part deep solitudes, overgrown with trees, which, in these western latitudes, are already in leaf, and very green ...

All this I see, as I write, from the little door into the stern-gallery which I mentioned just now. It don't happen six times in a day that any other passenger comes near it; and, as the weather is amply warm enough to admit of our sitting with it open, here we remain from morning until night: reading, writing, talking. What our theme of conversation is, I need not tell you. No beauty or variety makes us weary less for home. We count the days, and say, "When May comes, and we can say—next month—the time will seem almost gone." We are never tired of imagining what you are all about. I allow of no calculation for the difference of clocks, but insist on a corresponding minute in London. It is much the shortest way, and best.... Yesterday, we drank your health and many happy returns—in wine, after dinner; in a small milk-pot jug of gin-punch, at night. And when I made a temporary table, to hold the little candlestick, of one of my dressing-case trays; cunningly inserted under the mattress of my berth with a weight a-top of it to keep it in its place, so that it made a perfectly exquisite bracket; we agreed, that, please God, this should be a joke at the Star-and-garter on the second of April eighteen hundred and forty-three.[†1] If your blank can be surpassed ... believe me ours transcends it. My heart gets, sometimes, SORE for home.

At Pittsburgh I saw another solitary confinement prison:[†2] Pittsburgh being also in Pennsylvania. A horrible thought occurred to me when I was recalling all I had seen, that night. What if ghosts be one of the terrors of these jails? I have pondered on it often, since then. The utter solitude by day and night; the many hours of darkness; the silence of death; the mind for ever brooding on melancholy themes, and having no relief; sometimes an evil conscience very busy; imagine a prisoner covering up his head in the bedclothes and looking out from time to time, with a ghastly dread of some inexplicable silent figure that always sits upon his bed, or stands (if a thing can be said to stand, that never walks as men do) in the same corner of his cell. The more I think of it, the more certain I feel that not a few of these men (during a portion of their imprisonment at least) are nightly visited by spectres. I did ask one man in this last jail, if he dreamed much. He gave me a most extraordinary look, and said—under his breath—in a whisper—"No." ...

Cincinnati. Fourth April, 1842.

We arrived here this morning: about three o'clock, I believe, but I was fast asleep in my berth. I turned out soon after six, dressed, and breakfasted on board. About half after eight,[†1] we came ashore and drove to the hotel,[†2] to which we had written on from Pittsburgh ordering rooms; and which is within a stone's throw of the boat wharf. Before I had issued an official notification that we were "not at home," two Judges called, on the part of the inhabitants, to know when we would receive the townspeople. We appointed to-morrow morning, from half-past eleven to one,[†3] arranged to go out, with these two gentlemen, to see the town, at one; and were fixed for an evening party to-morrow night at the house of one of them.[†4] On Wednesday morning we go on by the mail-boat to Louisville, a trip of fourteen hours; and from that place proceed in the next good boat to St. Louis, which is a voyage of four days. Finding from my judicial friends (well-informed and most agreeable gentlemen) this morning, that the prairie travel to Chicago is a very fatiguing one, and that the lakes are stormy, sea-sicky, and not over-safe at this season, I wrote by our captain to St. Louis (for the boat that brought us here goes on there) to the effect that I should not take the lake route, but should come back here; and should visit the prairies, which are within thirty miles of St. Louis, immediately on my arrival there....

I have walked to the window, since I turned this page, to see what aspect the town wears. We are in a wide street: paved in the carriage way with small white stones, and in the footway with small red tiles. The houses are for the most part one story high; some are of wood; others of a clean white brick. Nearly all have green blinds outside every window. The principal shops over the way, are, according to the inscriptions over them, a Large Bread Bakery; a Book Bindery; a Dry Goods Store; and a Carriage Repository; the last named establishment looking very like an exceedingly small retail coal-shed. On the pavement under our window, a black man is chopping wood; and another black man is talking (confidentially) to a pig.[†5] The public table, at this hotel and at the hotel opposite, has just now finished dinner. The diners are collected on the pavement, on both sides of the way, picking their teeth, and talking.

The day being warm, some of them have brought chairs into the street. Some are on three chairs; some on two; and some, in defiance of all known laws of gravity, are sitting quite comfortably on one: with three of the chair's legs, and their own two, high up in the air. The loungers, underneath our window, are talking of a great Temperance convention which comes off here to-morrow.[†1] Others, about me. Others, about England. Sir Robert Peel is popular here, with everybody.[†2] ...

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 4 APRIL 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Paid. | David. C. Colden Esquire | 28 Laight Street | Hudson Square | New York City.

Cincinnati. Ohio. | Monday Fourth April 1842.

My Dear Friend.

We arrived here this morning, safe and sound, and not materially the worse for wear; although the Pittsburgh Levees were rather hard work, & although certain gaunt and grim Pittsburghians did stand behind the door and in remote corners of the reception chamber by the hour together; and resist all temptations to come forth, or to be seduced into conversation.[†3] Mrs. Colden (the beloved Mrs. Colden, if I may make so bold as to trust that expression to your keeping) complimented me, before I left New York, on my feats of sleight of hand. I am improving very much; and expect to be able in a short time to swallow a black-handled dinner knife, and reproduce it at pleasure. I have not yet passed the ferrule, but I am getting on by degrees. Necessity and two-pronged forks[†4] are the mothers of invention.

Our letters, thank God, brought none but the best and most cheerful and cheering news. We are entrusted with more kind remembrances and messages to you, than the Post Office at this place will undertake to forward on any terms. The Theatre flourishes nobly, but Macready has been very hard-worked and is not quite well, wherefore he writes in low Spirits. I have returned his shuttlecock more lightly than it came, and hope the match will be played out, merrily, on both sides.

Did you ever pass a night on board a canal boat? Did you ever pass a morning on board a canal boat? Did you ever find yourself on board a canal boat under any circumstances when washing and dressing were necessary? If not, I exult in the consciousness of my immeasurable superiority. When I think of the cold mornings whereon I scooped the dirty water out of the canal with a tin ladle chained to the boat, and having so filled a tin basin also chained to the boat, plunged my face into the same, and wiped it into a kind of damp and slimy dryness on the jack towel, I feel something between Robinson Crusoe and Philip Quarll,[†1] with a dash of Sinbad the Sailor—and think of leaving off ordinary clothes, and going clad, for the future, in skins and furs; with a gun on each shoulder, and two axes in a belt round my middle.

We are not quite clear whether we shall cross to Chicago from St. Louis, and so get to Buffaloe[†2] by the Lakes; or whether we shall return to Pittsburgh by steamboat, and go from that place to Erie, and so to Buffaloe. Some wise men of the West have told me that the Grand Prairie will be too wet for comfortable travelling until May; and other wise men report that its present state is nothing less than perfection. In like manner, some authorities are of opinion that it takes four days and nights to cross the Prairies; and others know for a certainty that the journey can be accomplished in four and twenty hours.[†3] Upon the whole— though I shall not finally decide until I have consulted the St. Louis people—I think it most likely that we shall eschew the Lakes, and avoid sea-sickness.[†4] Sich (as Miggs[†5] would say) is Mrs. D desires; and as my wishes is to please her inclinations, it will be my endeavours to make myself conformable to her dispositions, though I am but a husband.

In either case, will you in your kindness, send any letters, you may have for us,—addressed to the care of the Postmaster at Buffaloe, up to the twenty fourth of this month. I calculate that on the night of the twenty fourth we shall sleep in that town;[†6] and you may be sure that on our arrival, I shall not be slow to send to the Post Office. Whatever you receive for us in the meanwhile, please to keep in your counting house until the time arrives for sending them to Buffaloe with a view to their receipt by us on that date. From that town, we shall go straight to the hotel at Niagara, on the English side, where we purpose remaining a week, at least, and where you may safely address any later despatches. But directly we arrive there, I will write to you again.

In the matter of the George Washington, we trust ourselves entirely in your hands for the choice of our State Room. If there should be any larger or family one, which possesses decided advantages, I should be very glad to pay extra for it;[†7] our object being to be comfortable—if I may use a word so wildly and preposterously impossible of connection with all Christian peoples' experience of a Ship. In a word, and to copy the phraseology of the advertisements in our English Newspapers "Wages is not so much an object as a comfortable situation". But whatever you do, will be right; and will be certain to please us.

If paper could blush; this, for the trouble it gives you, would be rose-colored by the time of its arrival in New York. You see what you have brought upon yourself by making us regard you and yours in the light of dear old friends! Take warning from this sad experience, and make that house in Laight Street a disagreeable and repulsive one from this time.

But as you never can make it so to us, who are in the secret, give our joint loves and affectionate regards to all who are in it. And believe me My Dear friend

Always Faithfully | And cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

David. C. Colden. Esquire.

P.S. I wrote to Lord Jeffrey by the Steamer from Boston on the Second.

To CHARLES A. DAVIS, 4 APRIL 1842*

MS Mr John J. Emery. Address: Charles Augustus Davis Esquire | Broadway | New York City.

Cincinnati. Ohio. | Monday, Fourth April 1842.

My Dear Davis.

Please to turn back to your daily memorandum book, and to erase that leaf whereon you have written down my name as a thoughtless and unmindful Vagabond. And substitute in its place another entry, doing full justice to my virtues and captiwations—inadwertent, or otherwise.

It is so long since I saw a fork with three prongs, that I shall be greatly disconcerted by their use, when I get back to New York. I don't often wash myself in these parts; and as to shaving—but that's a weakness; not the more defensible because of its being commonly entertained.

Perhaps you never made your toilette on board a canal boat? If you never did—don't. Perhaps you never slept on a perch, like a Canary Bird? I have. It's not so hard to hold on as you would suppose, after the first two or three nights. Travel from Baltimore to Pittsburgh (by way of the Canal) and try.

We are on our way now—or shall be, the day after tomorrow—to Saint Louis, whence I make a day's journey into the Prairies. Then we purpose returning here, and going by two places (one is Columbus, and the other sounds like Sandisky[†1]—it ought to be in Poland) to Buffaloe. So to Niagara.

I have put that cotton of yours in my pipe, and smoked it carefully. The idea is an exceedingly good one, and might be made very striking. I am not so sure that it falls in my path. I have not made up my mind yet, even, to write anything about America, and my wanderings in it.[†2] Nous verrons.

John Quincey Adams is as like your sketch of him[†3] as he is like the John Quincey Adams in his bedroom Mirror. What a fine fellow he is! I saw him several times. We dined there one day; and another day I met him at a Club of gentlemen who invited me to dinner.[†4] There he ate, and drunk, and made a speech, and talked, and perfectly astonished me by his memory, freshness, vigour, and intellect. I delivered the greater part of your letters, and had abundant reason to thank you for your friendly precaution, in giving them to me. We enjoyed Washington very much. As to Mr. Clay—he is perfectly enchanting.

We went from Washington to Richmond. But finding the time melting away, I acted on Mr. Clay's advice, and went no further South—returned to Baltimore for two days—and here we are.

This is an intolerably stupid letter, I know. But I am fain to send it, and to wait no longer for time to write anything of interest to you—otherwise the chances are, that I should arrive in New York before my autograph.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best regards to Mrs. Davis[†1] (concerning whom I grieve to say I have dreamed no dreams lately)—and to your daughter—and I am always

My Dear Davis | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Augustus Davis Esquire

To DR F. H. DEANE,[†2] 4 APRIL 1842

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Dr. F. H. Deane | Richmond | Virginia.

Cincinnati. Ohio. Fourth April 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I have not been unmindful of your request, for a moment; but have not been able to think of it until now. I hope my good friends (for whose Christian names I have left blanks in the Epitaph)[†3] may like what I have written; and that they will take comfort, and be happy again.[†4] I sail on the Seventh of June, [a]nd purpose being at the Carlton House New York, about the first. It will make me easy to know that this [let]ter[†5] has reached you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor F. H. Deane

[†1]This is the Grave
of
A Little Child,
Whom God in his goodness
Called to a Bright Eternity,
When he was very young.
Hard as it is
For Human Affection
To reconcile itself
To Death,
In any shape;
(And most of all, perhaps,
At First,
In This)
His parents
Can even now believe
That it will be a consolation to them,
Throughout Their Lives,
And when they shall have grown old
And grey, always to think of him

As a Child,

In Heaven.[†2]

========

"And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them."

========

He was the son of A and M Thornton.

Christened[†3] CHARLES IRVING[†4]

He was born on the 20th. day of January 1841,

And he died on the 12th. day of March 1842.

Having lived only Thirteen Months, and nine[†3] days.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 4 APRIL 1842*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | London | England.

Cincinnati. Ohio. Monday Fourth April 1842.

My Dear Fred. After a long delay (for the steamer had, again, a terrible voyage) we received our welcome and most ardently looked-for packet of letters, at Pittsburgh last Friday Morning, the First,—just before embarking in the Steamboat for this place, which is more than Five Hundred Miles from it. You may conceive how delighted we were to get the long-expected news from Home; and with what heartfelt pleasure we read your account of our dear darlings, whom we so long to see, that twenty times a day we count the days between this, and our return.

The steamer in which we came here, is called the Messenger; and has far better accommodations than the Britannia. There is one enormous Cabin, running all through the boat; and opening from it, little state rooms with two berths in each. Those which are set apart for married folks have each another little door opening on a light gallery at the stern; and here we sat very comfortably: looking at the prospect on the banks of the river, where there are great solitudes for many long miles together—only broken by log-houses where the new settlers live in the roughest and most desolate fashion you can well imagine.[†1] Think what rivers are, in this country! The Ohio is 900 miles long;[†2] and usually as broad as the Thames at Greenwich—very often much wider. We are going down to its mouth, and then 200 miles up the Mississippi, as you will see if you look for St. Louis on the map. We leave here on Wednesday; and intend halting at Louisville for a day.—I have been told that the Prairies are too wet to be easily crossed at this season of the year. If this should prove to be so,[†3] we shall return to Pittsburgh from St. Louis (very likely by the same boat that brought us here)— and get to Buffaloe from there, by the way of Erie. This will still bring us to Niagara by the twenty fourth or twenty fifth.

I have only had time to write one letter on board;[†4] and that I have sent to Forster, who will make you acquainted with its contents. I would not therefore tell you anything about the Canal boat or other modes of conveyance, even if I had the time; as I have described them to him.

We have not heard from Alfred,[†5] nor have we written to him, for we have both forgotten his address. I wish you would do so. I need not say what delight it gives me to hear that Fanny is doing so well,[†6] nor how sure I feel that she will yet do much better. I suppose Burnett has become quite an aristocrat[†1]—and that he rides to give lessons[†2] on a thorough-bred Hunter?

You will wonder to see this lined paper, but the Immortal Secretary being absent, looking after the luggage, I am obliged to use the writing-materials of the Hotel; and in this part of the Globe they are much given to this uncomfortable paper.—What do you think of my having magnetized Kate, with amazing success? She will rather astonish you, when we come home, I can tell you.

I should think Sir John Wilson, having had so little enjoyment out of the house,[†3] would consider it dear at any price. The very walls must wonder at its being so dull; and what the bitter beer can assign in its own mind as the reason of its not being tapped, I am at a loss to conceive. By the bye,—on the first of June will you get Sir John's permission to have two strong men in, to roll the casks out, and stand them on the horse in the old place? Otherwise, it will not be in drinking trim when we arrive. I think you have the key of the Wine cellar?

Remember me, kindly and heartily, to Chapman and Hall; from whom I have not yet heard once. And will you do so, too, to Beard? And will you tell him that I have only time, in the multiplicity of my engagements, to write more than one letter containing anything like an account of our proceedings—and that Forster will be pleased to shew these documents to him, if he has sufficient interest in them to give him a call.

Our hearts ache for home. It is impossible to say how we long to see the dear children. God bless you and them!

Always Your affectionate brother
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To THOMAS MITTON, 4 APRIL 1842

MS Huntington Library.

In Haste [†5]

Cincinnati. Ohio. | April The Fourth 1842.

My Dear friend.

I received yours with great delight and pleasure. It was very late, as the Columbia had a bad passage, and broke her engine by the way. We got our letters from England, most opportunely on the very morning we left Pittsburgh, and within a very few hours of the boat's starting. If they had missed us there, we should in all probability not have received them for weeks, through being constantly before the Mail.

Ever since, and including, the day of their receipt, we have been coming here by Steamboat; along the Ohio River. This River is 900 Miles in length (think of that!) and we have travelled about 550 miles upon it: stopping at a great many intermediate places. On Wednesday morning we start again; and changing boats, and perhaps stoppi[ng? two days][†1] at Louisville; go down to its mouth, and two hundred [miles up the] Mississippi river, to get to St. Louis. Since we left [Baltimore,[†2] we have] travelled upwards of a hundred miles by railroad and [stage-coach], and 250 miles by canal, besides.

Forster has the best journal I have had time to keep in these conveyances, of our adventures. He will be glad to shew, or read it to you. I think you will be amused by it.

I was greatly pained to find that you had misconstrued that passage in my first letter, in which I made allusion to our darlings.[†3] I put it there, because it naturally fell there; and my account of the gale brought me to it. But if you think that in saying it was a consolation to me to reflect upon the friends they would have, I for an instant lost sight of you, my old and familiar friend, in whom I repose so much and such implicit confidence, I can hardly say which you wrong most—yourself or me.[†4]

I am glad to hear that the business goes on bravely—You know that you yourself are not more interested in its success than I am.[†5] The anxious time, in everything, is the first part of the struggle. That over, the path is smooth and straight.

I shall have so much to tell and talk about when I come home, that I am half afraid I may return a Bore.[†6] But for the pleasure of being at home again, I will consent even to that.

We count the days; and long, and yearn, for Home. Kate is very well, and sends her best regards to you. Anne is a very good traveller; and the Secretary (whose wages I have "ris" to twenty dollars a month) takes such care of the luggage and all other matters, that I walk into and out of every coach, car, wagon, boat, and barge, as if I had nothing with me but one shirt, and that were [in] my pocket.

I am vexed to hear that that father of mine [is "in trou]ble"—again.[†1] How long he is, growing up to be a m[an!]

I am always My dear friend | Faithfully and truly Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Did you remember that last Saturday, the First, was our Wedding-Day?[†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?4-6 APRIL] 1842

Extract in Bangs & Co. catalogue No. 2341 (1886); MS 1 p.; dated 1842. Date: clearly after meeting Gilmor on 22 Mar; perhaps in Cincinnati where he stayed 4-6 Apr.

Mr. Gilmor, of Baltimore, gave me a letter to you, begging your advice in the matter of getting cashed any drafts I might draw upon his house. But after doing so he gave me a letter to a Banker in this city[†3] for the same purpose; therefore I will not trouble you with the communication—which is a mere business one, rendered quite unnecessary.

To WILLIAM C. KINNEY,[†1] 14 APRIL 1842

Text from the Belleville Weekly Advocate, 21 Apr 42.

Planters' House,[†2] St. Louis | Fourteenth April 1842.

My Dear Sir,

I am truly obliged to you for your letter of welcome and congratulation,[†3] which has given me real pleasure. Accept my cordial thanks, and believe me,

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 15, 16 and [17] APRIL 1842

Extracts in F, III, vi, 257-65.

On board the Messenger again. Going from St. Louis back to Cincinnati.
Friday, fifteenth April, 1842.

We remained in Cincinnati one whole day after the date of my last, and left on Wednesday morning the 6th.[†4] We reached Louisville soon after midnight on the same night;[†5] and slept there.[†6] Next day at one o'clock we put ourselves on board another steamer,[†7] and travelled on until last Sunday evening the tenth; when we reached St. Louis at about nine o'clock. The next day we devoted to seeing the city. Next day, Tuesday the twelfth, I started off with a party of men (we were fourteen in all) to see a prairie;[†8] returned to St. Louis about noon on the thirteenth; attended a soirée and ball[†1]—not a dinner—given in my honor that night; and yesterday afternoon at four o'clock we turned our faces homewards. Thank Heaven!

Cincinnati is only fifty years old, but is a very beautiful city:[†2] I think the prettiest place I have seen here, except Boston. It has risen out of the forest like an Arabian-night city; is well laid out; ornamented in the suburbs with pretty villas; and above all, for this is a very rare feature in America, has smooth turf-plots and well kept gardens. There happened to be a great temperance festival; and[†3] the procession mustered under, and passed, our windows early in the morning. I suppose they were twenty thousand strong, at least. Some of the banners were quaint and odd enough. The ship-carpenters, for instance, displayed on one side of their flag, the good Ship Temperance in full sail; on the other, the Steamer Alcohol blowing up sky-high. The Irishmen[†4] had a portrait of Father Mathew,[†5] you may be sure. And Washington's broad lower jaw (by the bye, Washington had not a pleasant face)[†6] figured in all parts of the ranks. In a kind of square at one outskirt of the city, they divided into bodies, and were addressed by different speakers. Drier speaking I never heard. I own that I felt quite uncomfortable to think they could take the taste of it out of their mouths with nothing better than water.

In the evening[†1] we went to a party at Judge Walker's,[†2] and were introduced to at least one hundred and fifty first-rate bores, separately and singly. I was required to sit down by the greater part of them, and talk![†3] In the night we were serenaded (as we usually are in every place we come to), and very well serenaded, I assure you. But we were very much knocked up. I really think my face has acquired a fixed expression of sadness from the constant and unmitigated boring I endure. The LL's[†4] have carried away all my cheerfulness. There is a line in my chin (on the right side of the under-lip), indelibly fixed there by the New-Englander I told you of in my last. I have the print of a crow's foot on the outside of my left eye, which I attribute to the literary characters of small towns. A dimple has vanished from my cheek which I felt myself robbed of at the time by a wise legislator.[†5] But on the other hand I am really indebted for a good broad grin to P..E..,[†6] literary critic of Philadelphia, and sole proprietor of the English language in its grammatical and idiomatical purity; to P..E.., with the shiny straight hair and turned-down shirt collar, who taketh all of us English men of letters to task in print, roundly and uncompromisingly,[†7] but told me, at the same time, that I had "awakened a new era" in his mind....[†8]

The last 200 miles of the voyage from Cincinnati to St. Louis are upon the Mississippi, for you come down the Ohio to its mouth. It is well for society that this Mississippi, the renowned father of waters, had no children who take after him. It is the beastliest river in the world....[†9]

Conceive the pleasure of rushing down this stream by night (as we did last night) at the rate of fifteen miles an hour; striking against floating blocks of timber every instant; and dreading some infernal blow at every bump.[†1] The helmsman in these boats is in a little glass-house upon the roof. In the Mississippi, another man stands in the very head of the vessel, listening and watching intently; listening, because they can tell in dark nights by the noise when any great obstruction is at hand. This man holds the rope of a large bell which hangs close to the wheel-house, and whenever he pulls it, the engine is to stop directly, and not to stir until he rings again. Last night, this bell rang at least once in every five minutes; and at each alarm there was a concussion which nearly flung one out of bed.... While I have been writing this account, we have shot out of that hideous river, thanks be to God;[†2] never to see it again, I hope, but in a nightmare. We are now on the smooth Ohio, and the change is like the transition from pain to perfect ease.[†3]

We had a very crowded levee in St. Louis. Of course the paper had an account of it.[†4] If I were to drop a letter in the street, it would be in the newspaper next day,[†5] and nobody would think its publication an outrage. The editor objected to my hair, as not curling sufficiently.[†6] He admitted an eye;[†7] but objected again to dress,[†8] as being somewhat foppish, "and indeed perhaps rather flash."—"But such," he benevolently adds, "are the differences between American and English taste—rendered more apparent, perhaps, by all the other gentlemen present being dressed in black."[†9] Oh, that you could have seen the other gentlemen! ...

A St. Louis lady complimented Kate upon her voice and manner of speaking: assuring her that she should never have suspected her of being Scotch, or even English. She was so obliging as to add that she would have taken her for an American, anywhere: which she (Kate) was no doubt aware was a very great compliment, as the Americans were admitted on all hands to have greatly refined upon the English language! I need not tell you that out of Boston and New York a nasal drawl is universal,[†1] but I may as well hint that the prevailing grammar is also more than doubtful; that the oddest vulgarisms are received idioms; that all the women who have been bred in slave-states speak more or less like negroes, from having been constantly in their childhood with black nurses; and that the most fashionable and aristocratic (these are two words in great use), instead of asking you in what place you were born, enquire where you "hail from?"!![†2]

Lord Ashburton arrived at Annapolis t'other day,[†3] after a voyage of forty odd days in heavy weather. Straightway the newspapers state, on the authority of a correspondent who "rowed round the ship" (I leave you to fancy her condition), that America need fear no superiority from England, in respect of her wooden walls. The same correspondent is "quite pleased" with the frank manner of the English officers; and patronizes them as being, for John Bulls, quite refined. My face, like Haji Baba's, turns upside down, and my liver is changed to water,[†4] when I come upon such things, and think who writes and who read them....

They won't let me alone about slavery. A certain Judge in St. Louis went so far yesterday, that I fell upon him (to the indescribable horror of the man who brought him) and told him a piece of my mind.[†5] I said that I was very averse to speaking on the subject here, and always forbore, if possible: but when he pitied our national ignorance of the truths of slavery, I must remind him that we went upon indisputable records, obtained after many years of careful investigation, and at all sorts of self-sacrifice; and that I believed we were much more competent to judge of its atrocity and horror, than he who had been brought up in the midst of it. I told him that I could sympathise with men who admitted it to be a dreadful evil, but frankly confessed their inability to devise a means of getting rid of it: but that men who spoke of it as a blessing, as a matter of course, as a state of things to be desired, were out of the pale of reason; and that for them to speak of ignorance or prejudice was an absurdity too ridiculous to be combated....

It is not six years ago, since a slave in this very same St. Louis, being arrested (I forget for what), and knowing he had no chance of a fair trial, be his offence what it might, drew his bowie knife and ripped the constable across the body. A scuffle ensuing, the desperate negro stabbed two others with the same weapon. The mob who gathered round (among whom were men of mark, wealth, and influence in the place) overpowered him by numbers; carried him away to a piece of open ground beyond the city; and burned him alive. This, I say, was done within six years in broad day; in a city with its courts, lawyers, tipstaffs, judges, jails, and hangman; and not a hair on the head of one of those men has been hurt to this day.[†1] And it is, believe me, it is the miserable, wretched independence in small things; the paltry republicanism which recoils from honest service to an honest man, but does not shrink from every trick, artifice, and knavery in business; that makes these slaves necessary, and will render them so, until the indignation of other countries sets them free.

They say the slaves are fond of their masters. Look at this pretty vignette[†2] (part of the stock-in-trade of a newspaper), and judge how you would feel, when men, looking in your face, told you such tales with the newspaper lying on the table. In all the slave districts, advertisements for runaways are as much matters of course as the announcement of the play for the evening with us.[†1] The poor creatures themselves fairly worship English people: they would do anything for them. They are perfectly acquainted with all that takes place in reference to emancipation; and of course their attachment to us grows out of their deep devotion to their owners. I cut this illustration out of a newspaper which had a leader in reference to the abominable and hellish doctrine of Abolition—repugnant alike to every law of God and Nature. "I know something" said a Dr. Bartlett[†2] (a very accomplished man), late a fellow-passenger of ours: "I know something of their fondness for their masters. I live in Kentucky; and I can assert upon my honour, that, in my neighbourhood, it is as common for a runaway slave, retaken, to draw his bowie knife and rip his owner's bowels open, as it is for you to see a drunken fight in London."

Same Boat, Saturday, Sixteenth April, 1842.

Let me tell you, my dear Forster, before I forget it, a pretty little scene we had on board the boat between Louisville and St. Louis, as we were going to the latter place. It is not much to tell, but it was very pleasant and interesting to witness.[†3]

There was a little woman on board, with a little baby; and both little woman and little child were cheerful, good-looking, bright-eyed, and fair to see. The little woman had been passing a long time with a sick mother in New York, and had left her home in St. Louis in that condition in which ladies who truly love their lords desire to be.[†4] The baby had been born in her mother's house, and she had not seen her husband (to whom she was now returning) for twelve months: having left him a month or two after their marriage. Well, to be sure, there never was a little woman so full of hope, and tenderness, and love, and anxiety, as this little woman was: and there she was, all the livelong day, wondering whether "he" would be at the wharf; and whether "he" had got her letter; and whether, if she sent the baby on shore by somebody else, "he" would know it, meeting it in the street: which, seeing that he had never set eyes upon it in his life, was not very likely in the abstract, but was probable enough to the young mother. She was such an artless little creature; and was in such a sunny, beaming, hopeful state; and let out all this matter, clinging close about her heart, so freely; that all the other lady passengers entered into the spirit of it as much as she: and the captain (who heard all about it from his wife) was wondrous sly, I promise you: enquiring, every time we met at table, whether she expected anybody to meet her at St. Louis, and supposing she wouldn't want to go ashore the night we reached it, and cutting many other dry jokes which convulsed all his hearers, but especially the ladies. There was one little, weazen, dried-apple old woman among them, who took occasion to doubt the constancy of husbands under such circumstances of bereavement; and there was another lady (with a lap dog), old enough to moralize on the lightness of human affections, and yet not so old that she could help nursing the baby now and then, or laughing with the rest when the little woman called it by its father's name, and asked it all manner of fantastic questions concerning him, in the joy of her heart. It was something of a blow to the little woman, that when we were within twenty miles of our destination, it became clearly necessary to put the baby to bed; but she got over that with the same good humour, tied a little handkerchief over her little head, and came out into the gallery with the rest. Then, such an oracle as she became in reference to the localities! and such facetiousness as was displayed by the married ladies! and such sympathy as was shown by the single ones! and such peals of laughter as the little woman herself (who would just as soon have cried) greeted every jest with! At last, there were the lights of St. Louis—and here was the wharf—and those were the steps—and the little woman, covering her face with her hands, and laughing, or seeming to laugh, more than ever, ran into her own cabin, and shut herself up tight. I have no doubt, that, in the charming inconsistency of such excitement, she stopped her ears lest she should hear "him" asking for her; but I didn't see her do it. Then a great crowd of people rushed on board, though the boat was not yet made fast, and was staggering about among the other boats to find a landing-place; and everybody looked for the husband, and nobody saw him; when all of a sudden, right in the midst of them—God knows how she ever got there—there was the little woman hugging with both arms round the neck of a fine, good-looking, sturdy fellow! And in a moment afterwards, there she was again, dragging him through the small door of her small cabin, to look at the baby as he lay asleep!—What a good thing it is to know that so many of us would have been quite downhearted and sorry if that husband had failed to come.

But about the Prairie—it is not, I must confess, so good in its way as this; but I'll tell you all about that too, and leave you to judge for yourself.[†1] Tuesday the 12th was the day fixed; and we were to start at five in the morning—sharp. I turned out at four; shaved and dressed; got some bread and milk; and throwing up the window, looked down into the street. Deuce a coach was there, nor did anybody seem to be stirring in the house. I waited until half-past five; but no preparations being visible even then, I left Mr. Q to look out, and lay down upon the bed again. There I slept until nearly seven, when I was called.... Exclusive of Mr. Q and myself, there were twelve of my committee[†1] in the party: all lawyers except one.[†2] He was an intelligent, mild, well-informed gentleman of my own age—the unitarian minister of the place.[†3] With him, and two other companions, I got into the first coach.[†4] ...

We halted at so good an inn at Lebanon[†5] that we resolved to return there at night, if possible. One would scarcely find a better village alehouse of a homely kind in England. During our halt I walked into the village, and met a dwelling-house coming down-hill at a good round trot, drawn by some twenty oxen! We resumed our journey as soon as possible, and got upon the looking-glass prairie at sunset. We halted near a solitary log-house for the sake of its water; unpacked the baskets; formed an encampment with the carriages; and dined.

Now, a prairie is undoubtedly worth seeing—but more, that one may say one has seen it, than for any sublimity it possesses in itself. Like most things, great or small, in this country, you hear of it with considerable exaggerations. Basil Hall was really quite right in depreciating the general character of the scenery.[†6] The widely-famed Far West is not to be compared with even the tamest portions of Scotland or Wales. You stand upon the prairie, and see the unbroken horizon all round you. You are on a great plain, which is like a sea without water.[†7] I am exceedingly fond of wild and lonely scenery, and believe that I have the faculty of being as much impressed by it as any man living. But the prairie fell, by far, short of my preconceived idea. I felt no such emotions as I do in crossing Salisbury plain. The excessive flatness of the scene makes it dreary, but tame. Grandeur is certainly not its characteristic. I retired from the rest of the party, to understand my own feelings the better; and looked all round, again and again. It was fine. It was worth the ride. The sun was going down, very red and bright; and the prospect looked like that ruddy sketch of Catlin's,[†1] which attracted our attention (you remember?); except that there was not so much ground as he represents, between the spectator and the horizon.[†2] But to say (as the fashion is, here) that the sight is a landmark in one's existence, and awakens a new set of sensations, is sheer gammon. I would say to every man who can't see a prairie—go to Salisbury plain, Marlborough downs, or any of the broad, high, open lands near the sea. Many of them are fully as impressive; and Salisbury plain is decidedly more so.[†3]

We had brought roast fowls, buffalo's tongue, ham, bread, cheese, butter, biscuits, sherry, champagne, lemons and sugar for punch, and abundance of ice. It was a delicious meal: and as they were most anxious that I should be pleased, I warmed myself into a state of surpassing jollity; proposed toasts from the coach-box (which was the chair); ate and drank with the best; and made, I believe, an excellent companion to a very friendly companionable party. In an hour or so, we packed up, and drove back to the inn at Lebanon. While supper was preparing, I took a pleasant walk with my unitarian friend; and when it was over (we drank nothing with it but tea and coffee) we went to bed. The clergyman and I had an exquisitely clean little chamber of our own: and the rest of the party were quartered overhead....

We got back to St. Louis[†4] soon after twelve at noon; and I rested during the remainder of the day. The soirée came off at night, in a very good ball-room at our inn—the Planter's-house.[†1] The whole of the guests were introduced to us, singly. We were glad enough, you may believe, to come away at midnight; and were very tired. Yesterday, I wore a blouse.[†2] To-day, a fur-coat. Trying changes!

In the same Boat, | Sunday, Sixteenth[†3] April, 1842.

The inns in these outlandish corners of the world would astonish you by their goodness. The Planter's-house[†4] is as large as the Middlesex-hospital and built very much on our hospital plan, with long wards abundantly ventilated, and plain whitewashed walls. They had a famous notion of sending up at breakfast-time large glasses of new milk with blocks of ice in them as clear as crystal. Our table was abundantly supplied indeed at every meal. One day when Kate and I were dining alone together, in our own room, we counted sixteen dishes on the table at the same time.

The society is pretty rough, and intolerably conceited. All the inhabitants are young. I didn't see one grey head in St. Louis. There is an island close by, called bloody island. It is the duelling ground of St. Louis; and is so called from the last fatal duel which was fought there.[†5] It was a pistol duel, breast to breast, and both parties fell dead at the same time. One of our prairie party (a young man) had acted as second there, in several encounters. The last occasion was a duel with rifles, at forty paces; and coming home he told us how he had bought his man a coat of green linen to fight in, woollen being usually fatal to rifle wounds. Prairie is variously called (on the refinement principle I suppose) Para*a*rer; par*e*arer; and paro*a*rer.[†6] I am afraid, my dear fellow, you will have had great difficulty in reading all the foregoing text. I have written it, very laboriously, on my knee; and the engine throbs and starts as if the boat were possessed with a devil.

To DR STEPHEN COLLINS,[†7] 19 APRIL 1842*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Cincinnati. | Nineteenth April 1842.

My Dear Sir.

We have been on to Saint Louis, and are now returning through this place and by way of Columbus to Buffalo.

I gladly embrace this—really the first—opportunity I have had since I left Baltimore to thank you, heartily and cordially, for your kind letter, and for its most gratifying and welcome enclosures.[†1] I have read your criticisms[†2] with the sincerest pleasure, I do earnestly assure you.

My address in London, is No. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park. It will give me great satisfaction to hear from you at any time.

Dear Sir Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Stephen Collins.

To THE PROPRIETOR OF THE NEIL HOUSE, COLUMBUS,[†3] [?19 APRIL 1842]

MS[†4] Cornell University Library. Date: Since the coach for Columbus left Cincinnati at 8 a.m. on Wed 20 Apr and CD had arrived in Cincinnati only at 1 a.m. on Tues 19th, letter must have been dispatched on 19 Apr—though CD could have drafted it (see fn) on 18 Apr, while on the Benjamin Franklin.

Sir

I am requested by Mr. Charles Dickens to inform you that he is coming to Columbus by the Coach which leaves this City on Wednesday Morning next,[†5] and reaches your town on Thursday—and that he purposes resting that day, and night, at your house; preparatory to going on to Sandusky on Friday morning.

He will be greatly obliged to you if you will have the goodness to prepare comfortable quarters for him;[†6] and if you will have the kindness to say (in case any enquiries should be made on the subject) that he will not be able to have the pleasure of receiving any visitors in Columbus,[†7] as his short stay is one of rest: of which both himself and Mrs. Dickens stand in need,—as they have for some weeks been constantly travelling.

The accommodation we shall require, are a comfortable private parlor and bedroom adjoining—or as near to it as convenient—another sleeping chamber for myself—and another for Mrs. Dickens' Maid.

To MRS R. S. NICHOLS,[†1] 19 APRIL 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Cincinnati. | Nineteenth April 1842.

My Dear Madam

I am very much obliged to you for your beautiful lines upon the death of Nell;[†2] which I have read with great interest and pleasure.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. R. S. Nichols.

To JOHN FORSTER, 24 and 26 APRIL 1842

Extracts in F, III, vi, 265-71 (continuation and conclusion of letter of 15, 16 and [17] Apr).

We went ashore at Louisville this night week, where I left off, two lines above; and slept at the hotel, in which we had put up before. The Messenger being abominably slow, we got our luggage out next morning, and started on again at eleven o'clock in the Benjamin Franklin mail boat: a splendid vessel with a cabin more than two hundred feet long, and little state-rooms affording proportionate conveniences. She got in at Cincinnati by one o'clock next morning, when we landed in the dark and went back to our old hotel.[†3] As we made our way on foot over the broken pavement, Anne measured her length upon the ground, but didn't hurt herself. I say nothing of Kate's troubles—but you recollect her propensity? She falls into, or out of, every coach or boat we enter; scrapes the skin off her legs; brings great sores and swellings on her feet; chips large fragments out of her ankle-bones; and makes herself blue with bruises. She really has, however, since we got over the first trial of being among circumstances so new and so fatiguing, made a most admirable traveller in every respect. She has never screamed or expressed alarm under circumstances that would have fully justified her in doing so, even in my eyes; has never given way to despondency or fatigue, though we have now been travelling incessantly, through a very rough country, for more than a month, and have been at times, as you may readily suppose, most thoroughly tired; has always accommodated herself, well and cheerfully, to everything; and has pleased me very much, and proved herself perfectly game.[†1]

We remained at Cincinnati, all Tuesday the nineteenth, and all that night. At eight o'clock on Wednesday morning the twentieth, we left in the mail stage for Columbus: Anne, Kate, and Mr. Q inside; I on the box.[†2] The distance is a hundred and twenty miles; the road macadamized; and for an American road, very good. We were three and twenty hours performing the journey. We travelled all night;[†3] reached Columbus at seven in the morning; breakfasted; and went to bed until dinner time. At night we held a levee for half an hour, and the people poured in as they always do: each gentleman with a lady on each arm, exactly like the Chorus to God Save the Queen.[†4] I wish you could see them, that you might know what a splendid comparison this is. They wear their clothes, precisely as the chorus people do; and stand—supposing Kate and me to be in the centre of the stage, with our backs to the footlights—just as the company would, on the first night of the season. They shake hands exactly after the manner of the guests at a ball at the Adelphi or the Haymarket; receive any facetiousness on my part, as if there were a stage direction "all laugh;" and have rather more difficulty in "getting off" than the last gentlemen, in white pantaloons, polished boots, and berlins,[†5] usually display, under the most trying circumstances.

Next morning, that is to say on Friday the 22nd at seven o'clock exactly, we resumed our journey.[†6] The stage from Columbus to this place only running thrice a week, and not on that day, I bargained for an "exclusive extra" with four horses, for which I paid forty dollars, or eight pounds English: the horses changing, as they would if it were the regular stage. To ensure our getting on properly, the proprietors sent an agent on the box; and, with no other company but him and a hamper full of eatables and drinkables, we went upon our way. It is impossible to convey an adequate idea to you of the kind of road over which we travelled. I can only say that it was, at the best, but a track through the wild forest, and among the swamps, bogs, and morasses of the withered bush. A great portion of it was what is called a "corduroy road:" which is made by throwing round logs or whole trees into a swamp, and leaving them to settle there. Good Heaven! if you only felt one of the least of the jolts with which the coach falls from log to log! It is like nothing but going up a steep flight of stairs in an omnibus.[†1] Now the coach flung us in a heap on its floor, and now crushed our heads against its roof. Now one side of it was deep in the mire, and we were holding on to the other. Now it was lying on the horses' tails, and now again upon its back. But it never, never, was in any position, attitude, or kind of motion, to which we are accustomed in coaches; or made the smallest approach to our experience of the proceedings of any sort of vehicle that goes on wheels. Still, the day was beautiful, the air delicious, and we were alone: with no tobacco spittle, or eternal prosy conversation about dollars and politics (the only two subjects they ever converse about, or can converse upon) to bore us. We really enjoyed it; made a joke of the being knocked about; and were quite merry. At two o'clock we stopped in the wood to open our hamper and dine;[†2] and we drank to our darlings and all friends at home. Then we started again and went on until ten o'clock at night: when we reached a place called Lower Sandusky,[†3] sixty-two miles from our starting point. The last three hours of the journey were not very pleasant, for it lightened—awfully: every flash very vivid, very blue, and very long: and, the wood being so dense that the branches on either side of the track rattled and broke against the coach, it was rather a dangerous neighbourhood for a thunder storm.

The inn at which we halted was a rough log-house. The people were all abed, and we had to knock them up. We had the queerest sleeping room,[†4] with two doors, one opposite the other; both opening directly on the wild black country, and neither having any lock or bolt. The effect of these opposite doors was, that one was always blowing the other open: an ingenuity in the art of building, which I don't remember to have met with before. You should have seen me, in my shirt, blockading them with portmanteaus, and desperately endeavouring to make the room tidy! But the blockading was really needful, for in my dressing case I have about 250*l.* in gold; and for the amount of the middle figure in that scarce metal, there are not a few men in the West who would murder their fathers. Apropos of this golden store, consider at your leisure the strange state of things in this country. It has no money; really no money.[†5] The bank paper won't pass;[†6] the newspapers are full of advertisements from tradesmen who sell by barter; and American gold is not to be had, or purchased. I bought sovereigns, English sovereigns at first: but as I could get none of them at Cincinnati to this day, I have had to purchase French gold; 20-franc pieces; with which I am travelling as if I were in Paris!

But let's go back to Lower Sandusky. Mr. Q went to bed up in the roof of the log-house somewhere, but was so beset by bugs[†1] that he got up after an hour and lay in the coach[†2] ... where he was obliged to wait till breakfast time. We breakfasted, driver and all, in the one common room. It was papered with newspapers, and was as rough a place as need be. At half past seven we started again, and we reached Sandusky at six o'clock yesterday afternoon.[†3] It is on Lake Erie, twenty-four hours' journey by steam boat from Buffalo. We found no boat here, nor has there been one, since. We are waiting, with every thing packed up, ready to start on the shortest notice; and are anxiously looking out for smoke in the distance.

There was an old gentleman in the Log inn at Lower Sandusky who treats with the Indians on the part of the American government,[†4] and has just concluded a treaty with the Wyandot Indians at that place to remove next year to some land provided for them west of the Mississippi: a little way beyond St. Louis.[†5] He described his negotiation to me, and their reluctance to go,[†6] exceedingly well. They are a fine people, but degraded and broken down.[†7] If you could see any of their men and women on a race-course in England, you would not know them from gipsies.

We are in a small house here,[†8] but a very comfortable one, and the people are exceedingly obliging. Their demeanour in these country parts is invariably morose, sullen, clownish, and repulsive. I should think there is not, on the face of the earth, a people so entirely destitute of humour, vivacity, or the capacity of enjoyment. It is most remarkable. I am quite serious when I say that I have not heard a hearty laugh these six weeks, except my own; nor have I seen a merry face on any shoulders but a black man's. Lounging listlessly about; idling in bar-rooms; smoking; spitting; and lolling on the pavement in rocking-chairs,[†1] outside the shop doors; are the only recreations. I don't think the national shrewdness extends beyond the Yankees;[†2] that is, the Eastern men. The rest are heavy, dull, and ignorant. Our landlord here[†3] is from the East. He is a handsome, obliging, civil fellow. He comes into the room with his hat on; spits in the fire place as he talks; sits down on the sofa with his hat on; pulls out his newspaper, and reads; but to all this I am accustomed. He is anxious to please—and that is enough.[†4]

We are wishing very much for a boat; for we hope to find our letters at Buffalo. It is half past one; and as there is no boat in sight, we are fain (sorely against our wills) to order an early dinner.

Tuesday, April Twenty-sixth, 1842.

NIAGARA FALLS!!! (upon the English[†5] Side).

I don't know at what length I might have written you from Sandusky, my beloved friend, if a steamer had not come in sight just as I finished the last unintelligible sheet (oh! the ink in these parts!): whereupon I was obliged to pack up bag and baggage, to swallow a hasty apology for a dinner, and to hurry my train on board with all the speed I might. She was a fine steamship, four hundred tons burden, name the Constitution, had very few passengers on board, and had bountiful and handsome accommodation. It's all very fine talking about Lake Erie, but it won't do for persons who are liable to sea-sickness. We were all sick. It's almost as bad in that respect as the Atlantic. The waves are very short, and horribly constant. We reached Buffalo at six this morning; went ashore to breakfast; sent to the post-office forthwith; and received—oh! who or what can say with how much pleasure and what unspeakable delight!—our English letters!

We lay all Sunday night, at a town (and a beautiful town too) called Cleveland; on Lake Erie. The people poured on board, in crowds, by six on Monday morning, to see me; and a party of "gentlemen" actually planted themselves before our little cabin, and stared in at the door and windows while I was washing, and Kate lay in bed.[†1] I was so incensed at this, and at a certain newspaper published in that town which I had accidentally seen in Sandusky (advocating war with England to the death,[†2] saying that Britain must be "whipped again," and promising all true Americans that within two years they should sing Yankee-doodle in Hyde-park and Hail Columbia in the courts of Westminster),[†3] that when the mayor[†4] came on board to present himself to me, according to custom, I refused to see him, and bade Mr. Q tell him why and wherefore. His honor took it very coolly, and retired to the top of the wharf, with a big stick and a whittling knife, with which he worked so lustily (staring at the closed door of our cabin all the time) that long before the boat left the big stick was no bigger than a cribbage peg![†5]

I never in my life was in such a state of excitement as coming from Buffalo here, this morning.[†1] You come by railroad; and are nigh two hours upon the way. I looked out for the spray, and listened for the roar, as far beyond the bounds of possibility, as though, landing in Liverpool, I were to listen for the music of your pleasant voice in Lincoln's-inn-fields. At last, when the train stopped, I saw two great white clouds rising up from the depths of the earth— nothing more. They rose up slowly, gently, majestically, into the air. I dragged Kate down a deep and slippery path leading to the ferry boat; bullied Anne for not coming fast enough; perspired at every pore; and felt, it is impossible to say how, as the sound grew louder and louder in my ears, and yet nothing could be seen for the mist.[†2]

There were two English officers with us (ah! what gentlemen, what noblemen of nature they seemed), and they hurried off with me; leaving Kate and Anne on a crag of ice; and clambered after me over the rocks at the foot of the small Fall,[†3] while the ferryman was getting the boat ready. I was not disappointed,—but I could make out nothing. In an instant, I was blinded by the spray, and wet to the skin. I saw the water tearing madly down from some immense height, but could get no idea of shape, or situation, or anything but vague immensity. But when we were seated in the boat, and crossing at the very foot of the cataract—then I began to feel what it was.[†4] Directly I had changed my clothes at the inn I went out again, taking Kate with me; and hurried to the Horse-shoe-fall.[†5] I went down alone, into the very basin. It would be hard for a man to stand nearer God than he does there. There was a bright rainbow at my feet; and from that I looked up to—great Heaven! to what a fall of bright green water! The broad, deep, mighty stream seems to die in the act of falling; and, from its unfathomable grave arises that tremendous ghost of spray and mist which is never laid, and has been haunting this place with the same dread solemnity—perhaps from the creation of the world.[†1]

We purpose remaining here a week.[†2] In my next I will try to give you some idea of my impressions, and to tell you how they change with every day. At present it is impossible. I can only say that the first effect of this tremendous spectacle on me, was peace of mind—tranquillity—great thoughts of eternal rest and happiness—nothing of terror. I can shudder at the recollection of Glencoe[†3] (dear friend, with Heaven's leave we must see Glencoe together), but whenever I think of Niagara, I shall think of its beauty.

If you could hear the roar that is in my ears as I write this. Both Falls are under our windows. From our sitting-room and bed-room we look down straight upon them. There is not a soul in the house but ourselves. What would I give if you and Mac were here, to share the sensations of this time! I was going to add, what would I give if the dear girl whose ashes lie in Kensal-green, had lived to come so far along with us—but she has been here many times, I doubt not, since her sweet face faded from my earthly sight.

One word on the precious letters[†4] before I close. You are right, my dear fellow, about the papers; and you are right (I grieve to say) about the people. Am I right? quoth the conjuror. Yes! from gallery, pit, and boxes. I did let out those things, at first, against my will,[†5] but when I come to tell you all—well; only wait—only wait—till the end of July.[†6] I say no more.

I do perceive a perplexingly divided and subdivided duty,[†7] in the matter of the book of travels. Oh! the sublimated essence of comicality that I could distil, from the materials I have! ... You are a part, and an essential part, of our home, dear friend, and I exhaust my imagination in picturing the circumstances under which I shall surprise you by walking into 58, Lincoln's-inn fields. We are truly grateful to God for the health and happiness of our inexpressibly dear children and all our friends. But one letter more—only one.... I don't seem to have been half affectionate enough, but there are thoughts, you know, that lie too deep for words.[†8]

To THOMAS MITTON, 26 APRIL 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Niagara Falls | (Upon the English Side)
April The Twenty Sixth 1842 (at night)

My Dear Friend.

I have time for but six words. Coming here only today from a Month's hard travelling in the Far West, we have lost the Great Western,[†1] and have to make up a packet for the Cunard Boat, as though it were tea and sugar, or yellow soap, or anything else that can be tied up and dispatched by mere handicraft.

We are in good health, and tip top spirits. For now home, [?sweet][†2] Home [?, begins] to look near. Forster has some scraps from my Journal [?, and will give you] such details of our proceedings as I have made h[?im acquainted with.]

This place is the most wonderful and beautiful in the w[?orld. We have it a]ll to ourselves, and by the next boat I will tell you more [abou]t it.

I made no question about the Packet Ship; knowing that it is esteemed much safer. I had your affectionate letter this morning, and read it with surpassing pleasure.—You won't be surprised if I rush into your bedroom early one morning, about the end of June?

Kate (who has proved herself an out and outer to travel)[†3] unites with me in best regards. And I am, and always will be,

Your staunch and faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To THE EDITORS OF FOUR AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS,[†4] 27 APRIL 1842

MS Berg Collection. Date: written 27th April, the day after receiving Forster's letter and accompanying documents, but date changed to 30 April on copies sent to the Press (see below).

To the Editor &c[†5]

Niagara Falls | Twenty Seventh April 1842.

Sir

I found, awaiting me[†6] at the Post Office in Buffalo, certain letters from England, of which the following are copies.[†7] I ask the favor of you that you will publish them in your columns; and I do so, in order that the People of America may understand that the sentiments I have expressed on all public occasions since I have been in these United States, in reference to a law of International Copyright, are not merely my individual sentiments, but are, without any qualification, abatement or reserve, the opinions of the great body of British Authors—represented by the distinguished men whose signatures are attached to these documents.[†1]

That they are also the opinions of the Native Writers of America, they have sufficiently shewn in their earnest petitions to the Legislature upon this subject.[†2]

I would beg to lay particular stress upon the letter from Mr. Carlyle,[†3] not only because the plain and manly Truth it speaks is calculated, I should conceive, to arrest attention and respect in any country, and most of all in this; but because his creed in this respect is, without the abatement of one jot or[†4] atom, mine; and because I never have considered and never will consider this question in any other light than as one of plain Right or Wrong—Justice or Injustice.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To C. C. FELTON, 29 APRIL 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Clifton House. | Niagara Falls. | Twenty Ninth April 1842.

My Dear Felton.

Before I go any further, let me explain to you what these great Inclosures portend; lest—supposing them part and parcel of my letter, and asking to be read—you shall fall into fits, from which recovery might be doubtful.

They are, as you will see, four copies of the same thing.[†1] The nature of the Document, you will discover at a glance. As I hoped and believed, the best of the British brotherhood took fire at my being attacked because I spoke my mind and theirs on the subject of an International Copyright; and with all good speed, and hearty private letters,[†2] transmitted to me this small parcel of gauntlets for immediate casting down.[†3]

Now, my first idea was—publicity being the object—to send one copy to you for a Boston newspaper[†4]—another to Bryant for his paper[†5]—a third to the New York Herald (because of its large circulation)—and a fourth to a highly respectable journal at Washington (the property of a gentleman, and a fine fellow named Seaton,[†6] whom I knew there) which I think is called The Intelligencer. Then the Knickerbocker[†7] stepped into my mind—and then it occurred to me that possibly the North American Review[†8] might be the best Organ after all, because indisputably the most respectable and honorable; and the most concerned in the Rights of Literature.[†9]

Whether to limit its publication to one journal, or to extend it to several, is a question so very difficult of decision to a stranger, that I have finally resolved to send these papers to you, and ask you (mindful of the conversation we had on this head one day, in that renowned oyster Cellar) to resolve the point for me. You need feel no weighty sense of responsibility, my dear Felton, for whatever you do, is sure to please me. If you see Sumner, take him into our councils.[†1] The only two things to be borne in mind, are,—first, that if they be published in several quarters, they must be published in all, simultaneously.[†2] Secondly, that I hold them in trust, to put them before The People.

I fear this is imposing a heavy tax upon your friendship; and I don't fear it the less, by reason of being well assured that it is one you will most readily pay.— I shall be in Montreal about the 11th. of May. Will you write to me there, to the care of the Earl of Mulgrave, and tell me what you have done?

So much for that. Bis'ness first, pleasure artervards, as King Richard the Third said ven he stabbed the t'other King in The Tower, afore he murdered the babbies.[†3]

I have long suspected that oysters have a rheumatic tendency. Their feet are always wet; and so much damp company in a man's inside, cannot contribute to his peace.—But whatever the cause of your indisposition, we are truly grieved and pained to hear of it—and should be more so, but that we hope from your account of that Farewell Dinner,[†4] that you are all Right again. I did receive Longfellow's note.[†5] Sumner I have not yet heard from—for which reason I am constantly bringing Telescopes to bear on the Ferry Boat, in hopes to see him coming over, accompanied by a modest portmanteau.[†6]

— III - 216 —

To say anything about this wonderful place, would be sheer nonsense. It far exceeds my most sanguine expectations,—though the impression on my mind has been, from the first, nothing but Beauty and Peace. I haven't drunk the water. Bearing in mind your caution, I have devoted myself to Beer, whereof there is an exceedingly pretty Fall in this house.

One of the noble hearts who sat for the Cheeryble Brothers, is dead.[†1] If I had been in England, I would certainly have gone into mourning, for the loss of such a Glorious Life. His brother is not expected to survive him.[†2] I am told that it appears from a memorandum found among the papers of the deceased, that in his life time he gave away in charity £600,000, or Three Millions of Dollars!

What do you say to my acting at the Montreal Theatre?—I am an old hand at such matters, and am going to join the Officers of the Garrison in a public representation for the benefit of a Local Charity. We shall have a Good House, they say. I am going to enact one Mr. Snobbington in a funny farce called a Good Night's rest.[†3] I shall want a Flaxen Wig and Eyebrows; and my nightly rest is broken by visions of there being no such commodities in Canada. I wake in the dead of night in a cold perspiration, surrounded by imaginary barbers all denying the existence or possibility of obtaining such articles.[†4] If Hamlet[†5] had a Flaxen Head, I would certainly have it shaved, and get a wig and eyebrows out of him, for a small pecuniary compensation.

— III - 217 —

By the bye, if you could only have seen the Prince[†1] at Harrisburgh, crushing a friendly Quaker[†2] in the Parlour Door!—It was the greatest sight I ever saw. I had told him not to admit anybody whatever—forgetting that I had previously given this honest Quaker a special invitation to come. The Quaker would not be denied, and Hamlet was staunch. When I came upon them, the Quaker was black in the face, and Hamlet was administering the final squeeze. The Quaker was still rubbing his waistcoat with an expression of acute inward suffering, when I left the town. I have been looking for his Death in the Newspapers, almost daily.

Do you know one General Ganes?[†3] He is a weazen-faced Warrior—and in his dotage. I had him for a fellow passenger on board a steamboat.[†4] I had also a statistical Colonel with me, outside the coach from Cincinnati to Columbus. A New England Poet[†5] buzzed about me on the Ohio, like a gigantic Bee—A mesmeric Doctor, of an impossibly great age, gave me pamphlets at Louisville[†6]—I have suffered much—very much.

If I could get beyond New York to see anybody, it would be (as you know) to see you. But I do not expect to reach the Carlton until the last day of May—and then we are going with the Coldens, somewhere on the banks of the North River for a couple of days.[†7] So you see we shall not have much leisure for our Voyaging preparations.

You and Doctor Howe[†8] (to whom my Love) must[†9] come to New York. On the Sixth of June, you must engage yourselves to dine with us at the Carlton;[†10] and if we don't make a merry evening of it, the fault shall not be in us.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best regards to Mrs. Felton and your little daughter.[†11] And I am always My Dear Felton

Affectionately Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I saw a good deal of Walker[†1] at Cincinnati. I like him very much. We took to him mightily at first, because he resembled you in face and figure, we thought.—You will be glad to hear that our news from home is cheering from first to last—all well, happy, and loving—My friend Forster says in his last letter that he "wants to know Felton"—and looks forward to Longfellow—

To MRS CHARLES SEDGWICK,[†2] [?29 APRIL 1842]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 29 APRIL 1842

Photograph Dickens House.

Clifton House, Niagara Falls. | Twenty Ninth April 1842.

My Dear Friend.

Again let me thank you heartily for our letters,[†3] and for your note,—over which, I assure you, we were very merry. You will be glad to hear that nothing can be more cheering or happy than all our news from Home; and that we have not one speck or dot of uneasiness or regret.

There is no company here—to our unspeakable delight. We have the Falls to ourselves; ramble about, all day long; do just as we please; play cribbage o'nights; dine at two in the day; wear our oldest clothes; walk ankle-deep in the mud; and thoroughly enjoy ourselves. We have left corduroy roads, high pressure steamboats, seventeen-inside stage coaches, two-pronged pocket pitchforks, and crooked knives with both sides of the blade alike, far—far—behind us. New York is before us—beyond that home—and (as Mr. Brass observes) "the still small voice is a singing comic songs within us, and all is happiness and peace."[†4]

Will you send the next packet of letters to Montreal, addressed to the care of The Earl of Mulgrave?—I am going to act at the Montreal Theatre, with him and the officers of the Garrison, for the benefit of a local charity.—What do you think of that?—I can't get the books I wanted, and cannot therefore play any of the parts I should have liked best. I am going to do Mr. Snobbington (a priggish bank clerk of the most tidy habits possible) in a piece called A Good Night's Rest.[†5] It is funny enough. I would give fifty pounds if you were all coming from Laight Street to see it.

I don't expect that we shall be at the Carlton before the Thirtieth or the Thirty First of May. The day after our arrival, I should like to devote to leaving cards at divers street doors. After that, I wish to Heaven you would lay an embargo on us, and bear us off. Bespeak us—lay claim to us—let everybody know that we are not to be had—leave me no possibility of being persuaded, overpowered, or induced by any coaxings or threatenings to do violence to my own wishes, by going anywhere else. Put it in my power to say to all comers— "Engaged—bespoke—fully occupied, and tightly bound"—Take the bill down, and come into possession of us 'till we go on board the George Washington. I was under a kind of promise to go and see Mrs. Charles Sedgwick, but I have written her that it is impossible, and have pleaded prior engagements with you. We therefore resign ourselves, fully and unconditionally, into your hands— reserving only Monday June the Sixth, on which day we beseech your company to dinner at the Carlton House. I must ask Mr. and Mrs. Davis[†1]—and I think Professor Felton from Cambridge, and Dr. Howe from Boston, will be of the party likewise.

At Cleveland on Lake Erie, our steamboat lay all night. At 6 in the morning a party of gentlemen planted themselves opposite our little State room (it was an uncommonly tight fit, even for a State room) and stared in at the door and windows while I was washing, and Kate lay in bed. I was so incensed at this, that I straightway went to bed, and when the Mayor came, refused to see him. His Honor planted himself on the Wharf with a big stick, and a whittling knife, with which, after receiving my refusal, he worked so lustily that when the boat left, the stick which was at first a trifle bigger than a wooden leg, was shaved down to a small-sized cribbage peg.

We are charged in all our letters with all manner of loves to you and yours. We add our own to the number, and look forward to meeting you again (we count the days too) with inexpressible pleasure.

Always My Dear Friend | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David. C. Colden Esquire
You will most likely see by the publication of some documents which I have sent to Boston for that purpose, that the Greatest Writers in England have taken fire at my being misrepresented in the International Copyright matter, and have flung their gauntlets down atop of mine, nobly.

To MRS DAVID C. COLDEN, 29 APRIL 1842

Photograph Dickens House.

Clifton House, Niagara Falls. | Twenty Ninth April 1842.

My better Angel.

If this should meet HIS[†2] eye, I trust to you to throw dust into the same. HIS suspicions must not be aroused.

HE says that I have applied tender epithets to a certain Mrs. D. I repel the charge with indignation. Alas his motive is but too apparent! He conceives that by piquing you, and rousing your—forgive me for the application of such a term to your ethereal[†1] nature—your vanity, he will disrupt that bond between us, which nothing but that (and Death) can ever sever. HE IS A SERPENT.[†2] You are the Bride of a Scorpion—Like the (I forget the animal's name, but you will find it in any book of Natural History, dearest)—his sting is in his Tale— this tale—which I pronounce to be base and calumnious.

And could you?—but no—no—I am sure you couldn't!

I have thrown my feelings into verse; you will find it neatly copied on the other side. Forgive my presumption. I scarcely know what I write. It is difficult to be coherent, with a bosom full of arrows. Inclosed is a groan. I shall not miss it. I have a great many left.

Take no heed of HIM or HIS reports. Be true to me, and we may defy HIS malice.—When I think of HIS futile attempts to tear two hearts asunder that are so closely knit together, I laugh like a Fiend.

Ha! ha! ha!

CupiD

LOVE SONG.[†3]

Air—"London now is out of Town."
Sweet Woman is of many kinds;
She sometimes is propi-tious;
She sometimes has a Thousand minds;
Sometimes is raythe wi-cious.
Above her sex, my love doth shine,
Though by no means a bold 'un,
"I'd crowns resign, to call her mine"
—Her name is Missis .....

===

—Poor Frankenstein, that Prince of fools
Why grim male monster made he,
When with the self-same clay and tools
He might have built a Lady!
How wealthy in the Worlds effects,
If he had made and sold 'un,
So wery prime in all respects
As charming Missis .....!

===

But vain reflection! who could rear,
On scaffold, pier, or starling,
A creetur half so bright or dear,

As my unmentioned Darling!
No artist in the World's broad ways
Could ever carve or mould 'un,
That might aspire to lace the stays
Of charming Mrs.....

===

To ASBURY DICKENS, 30 APRIL 1842

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 297 (1904); MS 2 pp.; dated Niagara Falls, 30 Apr 42.

We have reached this wonderful place in safety. We often speak of you and your kindness in Washington. I say that you can't be a relation, however distant—if you were we never could have been on such good terms.

To JOHN PENDLETON KENNEDY, 30 APRIL 1842*

MS Peabody Institute, Maryland.

Niagara Falls | Thirtieth April 1842.

My Dear Sir

I am truly vexed to discover, by a mere accident, that a letter I wrote to you from Pittsburgh a month ago, went to England in a packet with others! The mistake is so ridiculous that I can hardly offer a serious apology to you for it, although it has annoyed me, inexpressibly.

I told you in that letter (it will come back to you, I dare say, one of these days) that on consideration, and on sitting down to the task, I found I could not write anything which was at all likely to prove of service to you in the matter of your report.[†1] That I have always felt, and do always feel, so keenly, the outrage which the existing Piracy inflicts upon writers—the flagrant injustice which Law Makers suffer to be committed upon them as though the exercise of the highest gifts of the Creator, of right entailed upon a man, heavy pains and penalties, and put him beyond the pale of Congressional and Senatorial sympathies—that I cannot, though I try ever so hard, discuss the question as one of expediency, or reason it as one of National profit and loss.[†2] Again and again, I put pen to paper, agreeably to the promise I made you; and again and again I threw it down in disgust. When Miss Martineau came to me to sign the petition which was presented to the American Legislature a few years ago, I said, then, that I had an invincible repugnance to ask humbly for what I had as clear a right to, as the coat upon my back; and that I could not bring myself to sue to a Body which had so long sanctioned such a Monstrous and Wholesale Injustice, as if, in seeking its correction, I asked a favor at their hands. I was persuaded to sign that petition, and did so.[†3] I have always regretted it since. And now, if I begin to write upon the subject, the old fit comes upon me, and I get (as Carlyle says of himself in the same matter) "inconveniently loud".[†1]—I made a few sketches for your report, clearly shewing—as all we authors know perfectly well—that under an International Copyright Law, popular books would be no dearer than they are now. Then I bethought myself that I had always said, and always intended to say, that the question was one of Plain Right and Wrong, and was not to be considered, honestly, in any other Light. So down went my pen, at the thought that if I went on with what I was doing, I could not reiterate that opinion, and say that much for myself, in writing on the subject when I got home. All this, I wrote to tell you: and all this is wandering about England at this moment.

I found the documents of which the inclosed are copies, awaiting me at Buffalo a day or two since. You will see that they are signed by the first writers in England; and that their object (as they have taken fire at my being misrepresented on such a matter) is Publicity. Not being very well able, as a stranger, to decide whether it would be best to publish these letters and the memorial, in a literary journal, or, in the newspapers, I have sent them to some friends in Boston; begging them to decide, and to do with them what they shall conclude right. I have added a few lines from myself—also for publication—stating that Mr. Carlyle's creed is mine.

I expect to be in New York, on the Thirtieth or Thirty First of March.[†2]— May I hope to hear from you?

Faithfully Yours always | My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorable |— Kennedy.

To MESSRS LEA & BLANCHARD, 30 APRIL 1842*

MS Messrs Lea & Febiger. Address: Paid | Messrs. Lea and Blanchard | Booksellers |

Philadelphia.

Niagara Falls. | Thirtieth April 1842.

My Dear Sirs.

Availing myself of your kind offers of service, I am going to trouble you with a few troublesome commissions. If you will execute them for me, between this time, and the end of May, and will send me to New York, at the same time, a note of the amount you have expended for me in so doing, you will very much oblige me.

1st.—Can you get me a good copy of a Book called "History of the Indian Tribes of North America, with biographical sketches and anecdotes of the Principal Chiefs &c 120 portraits. By Thomas. L. Mc Kenny and James Hall.

Published in Philadelphia. By C. Biddle."? If it be not very expensive,[†1] and is easily obtained, I should like two copies.

2ndly. Will you send me one complete set of my books?[†2]

3rdly. Did you republish an English Book, called "Lives of the Statesmen of the Commonwealth. By John Forster of the Middle Temple, London"?[†3]—If so, will you send me a Copy?

4thly.—Will you send me any and every edition of Mr. Talfourd's Tragedy of "Ion",[†4] that you can possibly lay your hands on?

There—that's modest. I have quite done.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard

To WILLIAM MITCHELL, 30 APRIL 1842*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Private.

Niagara Falls. | Thirtieth April 1842.

My Dear Sir

I write to ask a favor of you, which is quite in your way, and in which the exercise of your discretion will be of material assistance to me.

I am going to act at Montreal in some Private Theatricals, with the officers there—and I want a good, comical, flaxen wig; such as a priggish, tidy, bachelor clerk in the Bank would wear—if with a little bit of whisker, about half way down the cheek, so much the better. Now, I fear I should not be able to get such a commodity in Montreal; you have the size of my head, in virtue of the possession of that old hat; you no doubt know where to get such a thing; and if you will kindly try to procure it (within two days from the receipt of this, if possible) and will send it by the quickest conveyance, addressed to me at Montreal to the care of The Earl of Mulgrave, you will oblige me very much.

I hope to be in New York on the Thirtieth or Thirty First of May—and I need not add that I shall be happy to pay all expenses then.[†5]

I hear that you have "got me up" with great effect.[†1]—I hope I am putting money in your purse?[†2]

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R.[†3] Mitchell Esquire

To W. W. SEATON, 30 APRIL 1842

Text from [Josephine Seaton], William Winston Seaton of the "National Intelligencer", [Boston], 1871, p. 274.

Niagara Falls, 30th April, 1842.

My dear Sir,

You will be glad, I know, to receive my hasty report of our safe arrival at this scene of beauty and wonder,—of our being off Western waters and corduroy roads,—and of our looking forward with great pleasure and delight to home. We are perfectly well, and not at all tired by our long journey.

I have received some documents from the greatest writers of England, relative to the International Copyright, which they call upon me to make public immediately. They have taken fire at my being misrepresented in such a matter, and have acted as such men should.

They consist of two letters, and a memorial to the American people, signed by Bulwer, Rogers, Hallam, Talfourd, Sydney Smith, and so forth. Not very well knowing, as a stranger, whether it would be best to publish them in newspapers, or in a literary journal, I have sent them to some gentlemen in Boston, and have begged them to decide. In the event of their recommending the first-mentioned course, I have begged them to send a manuscript copy to you immediately.[†4]

We often speak of you and your family, I assure you; and entertain a lively recollection of your great kindness, and the pleasant hours we passed in your society. Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial regards to Mrs. Seaton and your family. And I am always, my dear sir,

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I enclose your son's pleasant and capital letter.[†1] Tell him that if he should ever come to London I will "swing" him about that city to some purpose,— being an indifferent good showman of the lions thereof.[†2]

To N. P. WILLIS, 30 APRIL 1842

Summary in H. A. Beers, Nathaniel Parker Willis, Boston, 1885, pp. 264-5; dated 30 Apr 42.

Regretting that he has not time to accept Willis's invitation to visit him at Oswego.

May

To THOMAS BEARD,[†3] 1 MAY 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Per Steam ship "Unicorn", by way of Halifax. | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London | England.

Niagara Falls (Upon the English Side)
First of May—Sunday—1842.

My Dear Beard.

This letter will not be as old a one when it comes to you,—as (observing this date) you will at first suppose it. I write it now: thinking it very probable that if I don't, I may be again disappointed in my endeavours to find time for that purpose. But I shall be obliged, for steamboat purposes, to carry it on to Montreal; and before I post it, I will add a line or two with the Latest Intelligence of our health and spirits.

I dare say you have long ago set me down as a forgetful, unmindful, discourteous, unfriendly—and not to say utterly profligate and abandoned villain. But we have been travelling so far and so constantly—have been, if I may be allowed the expression, such perfect Pashanger-Marjits[†4]—and have been, moreover, so beset, waylaid, hustled, set upon, beaten about, trampled down, mashed, bruised, and pounded, by crowds, that I never knew less of myself in all my life, or had less time for those confidential Interviews with myself whereby I earn my bread, than in these United States of America. But all our journeyings by Land and Water; by coach and steamer; wagon, railway, prairie, lake and river, shall be yours anon; and I will not be tempted to take the edge off that hearty laughter we shall raise (please God) in Number One,[†5] over its not despicable vintages, before we are many weeks older, by launching into present description. We have been into the Far West—into the Bush—the Forest—the log cabin—the swamp—the Black Hollow—and out upon the open Prairies.

By the time we reach home, we shall have travelled Ten thousand miles or more. I have a horrible fear that I shall return "a bore"—not to anticipate which dire consummation, I will only add, on this head, that we sail from New York, per George Washington Packet Ship (none of your steamers) on Tuesday the Seventh of June. Hoo— ray— ay— ay— ay— ay— ay— ay— ay!!!!!

You will naturally enquire about the Medicine chest[†1]—Oh! Shade of Sir Humphrey Davy![†2]—if you could only have seen me, Beard, endeavouring (with that impossible pair of scales, and those weights, invisible to the naked eye) to make up pills in heavy weather, on the rolling Atlantic! If you could only have seen me,—when Kate and Anne were deadly fearful of Shipwreck,—bent on raising their spirits by means of calomel, and ringing the changes on all the bottles in that Mahogany box, to restore their peace of mind! Anne struck at last. She objected to take any more pills, powders, or mixtures, "unless she knew what was inside of 'em". This stipulation did not please me by any means for two reasons—firstly, because it implied the absence of that blind reliance and faith which are essential to all great cures; and secondly, because I didn't always know, myself. She made distant allusions, too, to having her wages "ris"—and to physic not being in her articles of engagement. I therefore stopped short; but sometimes, in that unsettled state of body which fast travelling engenders, she asks for physic—and then—then—I give it her. No half measures. Strong, and plenty of it.

This is the only place we have had to ourselves, since we left home. We came here last Tuesday; and stay until next Wednesday Morning. Directly I arrived, I yearned to come over to the English Side, and ordered the Ferryman out, in a pouring rain, for that purpose. It fortunately happens that there really is no point of view to see the Falls from, properly, but this. They are under our windows. But in any case I should have come here. You cannot conceive with what transports of joy, I beheld an English Sentinel—though he didn't look much like one, I confess, with his boots outside his trousers, and a great fur cap on his head. I was taken dreadfully loyal after dinner, and drank the Queen's health in a bumper—in Port too, and by no means bad Port—the first I had put to my lips, since leaving home.

I was not sick for more than five or six days coming out. We had a terrible passage—had our paddle boxes torn off, and life boats broken to pieces—and were under water; wet; and leaky through every seam and crevice; the whole time. The agent at Liverpool came on board with me, and politely begged, on the part of the owners, that I would live in the Ladies' Cabin, which was the best on board. As there were only four ladies in all, we were very comfortable. I ordered dinner, and carved in great state every day. At night, we always had a rubber— Love points; half crown bets. We had the doctor down to play, regularly. And every night the captain appeared at half after ten, and we drank mulled wine together very jovially. I effected various improvements in the cabin; made it very tidy; invented new drinks; suggested the introduction of hot collops for lunch; and was admitted, even by the initiated stewardess, to be a great acquisition to her society.

†aI only recollect one amusing circumstance in my sickness. One day—it's impossible to say how I got there—I found myself on deck—the ship, now on the top of a mountain; now in the bottom of a deep valley. It was blowing hard; and I was holding on to something—I don't know what. I think it was a pump— or a man—or the cow.†1 I can't say for certain, which. My stomach, with its contents, appeared to be in my forehead. I couldn't understand which was the sea and which the sky; and was endeavouring to form an opinion, or a thought, or to get some distant glimmering of anything approaching to an idea, when I beheld, standing before me, a small figure with a speaking trumpet. It waved, and fluctuated, and came and went, as if smoke were passing between it and me, but I knew, by its very good-natured face, that it was the captain. It waved its trumpet, moved its Jaws, and evidently spoke very loud. I no more heard it, than if it had been a dumb man, but I felt that it remonstrated with me for standing up to my knees in water.—I was, in fact, doing so. Of course I don't know why. Sir, I tried to smile. Yes.—Such is the affability of my disposition, that even in that moment I tried to smile. Not being able to do so, and being perfectly sensible that the attempt had faded into a sickly hiccough, I tried to speak—to jest—at all events to explain. But I could only get out two words. They bore reference to the kind of boots I wore, and were these—"Cork soles".— I repeated, in the feeblest of voices, and with my body all limp and helpless,—"Cork Soles",—perhaps a hundred times (for I couldn't stop; it was a part of the disease)—The captain, seeing that I was quite childish, and for the time a maniac, had me taken below to my berth. And when consciousness returned I was still saying to myself, in a voice that might have melted a heart of sheer steel— "Cork Soles—Cork Soles!"—

Soon after this, we had a terrible gale at night. Indeed, I believe that gale drove my sickness away. At all events, there were, in the Ladies Cabin (which adjoined our little state room, the size whereof was something smaller than one of those Cabs with the door behind) Kate, Anne, and a little Scotch Lady—all in their night dresses, and all nearly mad with terror. It was blowing great guns; the ship was rolling from side to side with her masts in the water at every plunge; and the lightning streamed through the skylight, awfully. I could do no less, of course, than try to comfort them: and the first thing that occurred to me was Brandy and Water. Now all along this cabin was a great fixed sofa—built so as to form a part of it; and running the whole length. They were all three heaped together at one end of this sofa, when I appeared with the Jorum of Grog in my hand. Just as I was administering it to the lady who happened to be at the top of the live bundle, the vessel rolled, and to my horror and astonishment they all went to the other end of the couch. By the time I staggered to that end, there came another roll, and they all tumbled back to the other—as if they were in an otherwise empty omnibus, and two Giants were tilting it by turns at either end. I dodged them, perhaps for half an hour, without catching them once—with nothing on but a pair of rough trousers, and that blue jacket I used to wear at Petersham.[†1] And in all the misery of the time, I had a keen sense of the absurdity of my position which I cannot, even now, surpass.[†a]

We gave the Captain some Plate[†2] afterwards: and he well deserved it. I presented it, in the Saloon of the Boston Theatre—and thought of Stone and the snuff box.[†3]—Look over leaf for the PS—Remember me, heartily, (and Kate who, in getting in and out of coaches and boats has fallen down, per register, three hundred and forty seven times)[†4] to Catherine[†5] and your other sisters—and to Frank[†6] and Will[†7]—and to your father and mother.[†8] And ever believe me My Dear Beard Your old and faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS[†9]

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN,[†10] 1 MAY 1842

Facsimile in A Reference Catalogue of British and Foreign Autographs and Manuscripts Edited by Thomas J. Wise—Part III. The Autographs of Charles Dickens. ... London, 1894. Address: Per Unicorn Steam Ship by way of Halifax. | Henry Austin Esquire. | 87 Hatton Garden. | London | England.

Niagara Falls. (English side) | Sunday First of May 1842.

My Dear Henry.

Although I date this letter as above, it will not be so old a one as at first sight it would appear to be when it reaches you. I shall carry it on with me to Montreal and dispatch it from there, by the steamer which goes to Halifax to meet the Cunard boat at that place with Canadian Letters and Passengers. Before I finally close it, I will add a short Postscript; so that it will contain the Latest Intelligence.

We have had a blessed Interval of quiet in this beautiful place, of which, as you may suppose, we stood greatly in need; not only by reason of our hard travelling for a long time, but on account of the incessant persecution of the people, by land and water; on stage coach, railway car, and steamer; which exceeds anything you can picture to yourself by the utmost stretch of your imagination.

So far, we have had this Hotel nearly to ourselves. It is a large square house standing on a bold height, with over-hanging eaves like a Swiss Cottage; and a wide, handsome gallery, outside every story. These Colonnades make it look so very light, that it has exactly the appearance of a house built with a pack of cards; and I live in bodily terror, lest any man should venture to step out of a little observatory on the roof, and crush the whole structure with one stamp of his foot.†1

Our sittingroom (which is large and low, like a Nursery) is on the second floor, and is so close to the Falls that the windows are always wet and dim with Spray. Two bedrooms open out of it; one our own; one Anne's.—The Secretary slumbers near at hand, but without these sacred precincts. From these three chambers, or any part of them, you can see the Falls rolling and tumbling, and roaring and leaping, all day long—with bright rainbows making fairy arches, down a hundred feet below us. When the Sun is on them they shine and glow like molten gold. †aWhen the day is gloomy, the water falls like snow—or sometimes it seems to crumble away like the face of a great chalk Cliff—or sometimes again, to roll along the front of the rock like white smoke.†a But at all seasons, gay or gloomy, dark or light, by sun or moon; from the bottom of both falls, there is always rising up a solemn ghostly cloud,†2 which hides the boiling cauldron from human sight, and makes it, in its mystery, a hundred times more grand than if you could see all the secrets that lie hidden in its tremendous depth.—One Fall is as close to us, as York Gate is to No. 1 Devonshire Terrace. The other (the great Horse-Shoe Fall) may be perhaps about half as far off as "Cready's".†3 One circumstance in connexion with them, is, in all the accounts, absurdly exaggerated;—I mean the noise. Last night was perfectly still. Kate and I could just hear them at the quiet time of Sunset, a mile off. Whereas, believing the statements I heard, I began putting my ear to the ground, like a Savage or a Bandit in a ballet, thirty miles off, when we were coming here from Buffalo!

I was delighted to receive your famous letter, and to read your account of our darlings; whom we long to see, with an intensity it is impossible to shadow forth, ever so faintly. I do believe, though I say it as shouldn't, that they are good 'uns—both to look at, and to go.†4 I roared out this morning, as soon as I was awake, "Next Month",†5—which we have been longing to be able to say, ever since we have been here: I really do not know how we shall ever knock at the door, when that slowest of all impossibly slow hackney Coaches shall pull up—at Home.

I am glad you exult in the fight I have made about the copyright. If you knew how they tried to stop me, you would have a still greater interest in it. The Greatest Men in England have sent me out, through Forster, a very manly and becoming, and spirited, Memorial and address, backing me in all I have done.

I have dispatched it to Boston for publication, and am coolly prepared for the storm it will raise. But my best rod is in pickle.[†1]

Is it not a horrible thing that scoundrel-booksellers should grow rich here from publishing books, the authors of which do not reap one farthing from their issue, by scores of thousands?[†2] And that every vile, blackguard, and detestable newspaper,—so filthy and so bestial that no honest man would admit one into his house, for a water-closet door-mat—should be able to publish those same writings, side by side, cheek by jowl, with the coarsest and most obscene companions, with which they must become connected in course of time, in people's minds?[†3] Is it tolerable that besides being robbed and rifled, an author should be forced to appear in any form—in any vulgar dress[†4]—in any atrocious company— that he should have no choice of his audience—no controul over his own distorted text[†5]—and that he should be compelled to jostle out of the course, the best men in this country who only ask to live, by writing? I vow before High Heaven that my blood so boils at these enormities, that when I speak about them, I seem to grow twenty feet high, and to swell out in proportion.[†6] "Robbers that ye are"— I think to myself, when I get upon my legs—"Here goes!—"[†7]

The places we have lodged in; the roads we have gone over; the company we have been among; the tobacco spittle we have wallowed in; the strange customs we have complied with; the packing cases in which we have travelled; the woods, swamps, rivers, prairies, lakes, and mountains, we have crossed; are all subjects for legend and tale at home. Quires—reams—wouldn't hold them. In landing and going aboard, and getting in and out of coaches, Kate has fallen down (per register) seven hundred and forty three times. Once in going over a corduroy road—which is made by throwing trunks of trees into a marsh—she very nearly had her head taken off. It was a very hot day. She was lying in a languishing manner with her neck upon the open window—B[um]p![†1]—Crash!—it's a little on one side to this hour. I don't think Anne has so much as seen an American Tree. She never looks at a prospect by any chance, or displays the smallest emotion at any sight whatever. She objects to Niagara that "its[†2] nothing but water", and considers that "there is too much of that"!!!

I suppose you have heard that I am going to act at the Montreal Theatre, with the officers? Farce books being scarce, and choice consequently limited I have selected Keeley's[†3] part in Two O'Clock in The Morning. I wrote yesterday to Mitchell, the actor and Manager at New York, to get and send me, a comic wig—light flaxen, with a small whisker halfway down the cheek. Over this, I mean to wear two nightcaps; one with a tassel, and one of flannel. A Flannel wrapper, drab tights, and slippers, will complete the costume.

I am very sorry to hear that business[†4] is so flat, but the Proverb says it never rains but it pours; and it may be remarked with equal Truth upon the other side, that it never don't rain, but it holds up very much indeed. You will be busy again, long before we come home, I have no doubt.

We purpose leaving here on Wednesday Morning.—Give my love to Letitia[†5] and to mother. Also my affectionate and most devoted regards to Mr. Bremner.[†6]

And always Believe me | My Dear Henry | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†7]

To JOHN FORSTER, 3 MAY 1842

Extract in F, III, vii, 272-4.

Niagara Falls. | Tuesday, Third May, 1842

I'll tell you what the two obstacles to the passing of an international copyright law with England, are: firstly, the national love of "doing" a man in any bargain or matter of business; secondly, the national vanity.[†8] Both these characteristics prevail to an extent which no stranger can possibly estimate.

With regard to the first, I seriously believe that it is an essential part of the pleasure derived from the perusal of a popular English book, that the author gets nothing for it. It is so dar-nation 'cute—so knowing in Jonathan to get his reading on those terms. He has the Englishmen so regularly on the hip that his eye twinkles with slyness, cunning, and delight; and he chuckles over the humour of the page with an appreciation of it, quite inconsistent with, and apart from, its honest purchase. The raven hasn't more joy in eating a stolen piece of meat, than the American has in reading the English book which he gets for nothing.[†1]

With regard to the second, it reconciles that better and more elevated class who are above this sort of satisfaction, with surprising ease. The man's read in America! The Americans like him! They are glad to see him when he comes here! They flock about him, and tell him that they are grateful to him for spirits in sickness; for many hours of delight in health; for a hundred fanciful associations which are constantly interchanged between themselves, and their wives and children at home! It is nothing that all this takes place in countries where he is paid: it is nothing that he has won fame for himself elsewhere, and profit too. The Americans read him; the free, enlightened, independent Americans; and what more would he have? Here's reward enough for any man. The national vanity swallows up all other countries on the face of the earth, and leaves but this above the ocean. Now, mark what the real value of this American reading is. Find me in the whole range of literature one single solitary English book which becomes popular with them,[†a] before, by going through the ordeal at home and becoming popular there, it has forced itself on their attention[†2]—([a]and I am content that the law should remain as it is, for ever and a day. I must make one exception. There are some mawkish tales of fashionable life before which crowds fall down as they were gilded calves, which have been snugly enshrined in circulating libraries at home, from the date of their publication.[†3]

As to telling them, they will have no literature of their own, the universal answer (out of Boston) is, "We don't want one. Why should we pay for one when we can get it for nothing? Our people don't think of poetry, sir. Dollars, banks, and cotton are our books, sir." And they certainly are in one sense; for a lower average of general information than exists in this country on all other topics, it would be very hard to find. So much, at present, for international copyright.

[†1O]One of the most amusing phrases in use all through the country, for its constant repetition, and adaptation to every emergency is "Yes, Sir." Let me give you a specimen.[†2] ... I am not joking, upon my word. This is exactly the dialogue. Nothing else occurring to me at this moment, let me give you the secretary's portrait. Shall I?

He is of a sentimental turn—strongly sentimental; and tells Anne as June approaches that he hopes "we shall sometimes think of him" in our own country. He wears a cloak, like Hamlet;[†3] and a very tall, big, limp, dusty black hat, which he exchanges on long journeys for a cap like Harlequin's.... He sings; and in some of our quarters, when his bedroom has been near ours, we have heard him grunting bass notes through the keyhole of his door, to attract our attention. His desire that I should formally ask him to sing, and his devices to make me do so, are irresistibly absurd. There was a piano in our room at Hartford (you recollect our being there, early in February?)—and he asked me one night, when we were alone, if "Mrs. D" played. "Yes, Mr. Q." "Oh indeed Sir! I sing: so whenever you want a little soothing—" You may imagine how hastily I left the room, on some false pretence, without hearing more.

He paints.[†4] ... An enormous box of oil colours is the main part of his luggage: and with these he blazes away, in his own room, for hours together. Anne got hold of some big-headed, pot-bellied sketches he made of the passengers on board the canal-boat (including me in my fur-coat), the recollection of which brings the tears into my eyes at this minute. He painted the Falls, at Niagara, superbly; and is supposed now to be engaged on a full-length representation of me: waiters having reported that chamber-maids have said that there is a picture in his room which has a great deal of hair. One girl opined that it was "the beginning of the King's-arms"; but I am pretty sure that the Lion is myself.[†5] ...

Sometimes, but not often, he commences a conversation. That usually occurs when we are walking the deck after dark; or when we are alone together in a coach. It is his practice at such times to relate the most notorious and patriarchial[†6] Joe Miller,[†7] as something that occurred in his own family. When travelling by coach, he is particularly fond of imitating cows and pigs;[†1] and nearly challenged a fellow passenger the other day, who had been moved by the display of this accomplishment into telling him that he was "a Perfect Calf." He thinks it an indispensable act of politeness and attention to enquire constantly whether we're not sleepy, or, to use his own words, whether we don't "suffer for sleep." If we have taken a long nap of fourteen hours or so, after a long journey, he is sure to meet me at the bedroom door when I turn out in the morning, with this enquiry. But apart from the amusement he gives us, I could not by possibility have lighted on any one who would have suited my purpose so well. I have raised his ten dollars per month to twenty; and mean to make it up for six months.

To THE EARL OF MULGRAVE, [7 MAY 1842]

Extract in unidentified catalogue, Eastgate House, Rochester. Date: written from Kingston where they arrived 7 May.[†2]

Expect us at [Lachine][†3] on Wednesday afternoon,[†4] and we shall count on your escort to Montreal.[†5] The School for Scandal is usually considered the most impracticable and difficult play in the whole Theatrical Calendar, the parts being without a single exception "characters", which require very delicate manipulation.... I have heard so much of the fame of your Montreal Amateurs, since I have been in Canada, with considerable and becoming diffidence.

To B. J. TAYLOR,[†6] 11 MAY 1842*

MS The Marquis of Normanby.

Montreal. | Wednesday Eleventh May 1842.

My Dear Sir.

Don't be alarmed at my troubling you so soon—but will you allow your Servant to enquire at Lord Mulgrave's (they don't know, here,[†7] where he lives) whether there are not some more letters for me? Those we expected from home are not among the number received just now; and Mrs. Dickens is consequently in the last extremity of wonderment and complicated disappointment.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Taylor.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 12 MAY 1842

Facsimile in A Reference Catalogue ... Edited by T. J. Wise ... (conclusion of letter begun 1 May).

Montreal, Canada. Twelfth May, 1842—All well, though (with the exception of one from Fred) we have received no letters whatever by the Caledonia. We have experienced impossible-to-be-described attentions in Canada. Everybody's carriages and horses are at our disposal; and everybody's servants; and all the Government boats and boats crews. We shall play between the 20th. and the 25th.[†1]—A Roland for an Oliver—Two o'Clock in the Morning—and Deaf as a Post.

To THOMAS BEARD, 12 MAY 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet (conclusion of letter begun 1 May).

Montreal—Canada. May Twelfth 1842—All well, and looking forward to home. We have been to Toronto and to Kingston—have had everybodys[†2] carriages and horses at our disposal—and all the Govt boats, boats' crews, officers, and steamers. Derbishire[†3] (you remember him?) is a Member of Parliament at Kingston—holds a good sinecure office; Lord Sydenham's[†4] gift; and is quite a great man.—

To JOHN FORSTER, 12 MAY [1842]

Extract in F, III, vii, 274-5 (conclusion of letter begun 3 May).

Montreal, Thursday twelfth May

This will be a very short and stupid letter, my dear friend; for the post leaves here much earlier than I expected, and all my grand designs for being unusually brilliant fall to the ground. I will write you one line by the next Cunard boat— reserving all else until our happy and long long looked-for meeting.

We have been to Toronto,[†1] and Kingston;[†2] experiencing attentions at each which I should have difficulty in describing. The wild and rabid toryism of Toronto, is, I speak seriously, appalling.[†3] English kindness is very different from American. People send their horses and carriages for your use, but they don't exact as payment the right of being always under your nose.[†4] We had no less than five carriages at Kingston waiting our pleasure at one time;[†5] not to mention the commodore's[†6] barge and crew, and a beautiful government steamer.[†7] We dined with Sir Charles Bagot[†8] last Sunday. Lord Mulgrave was to have met us yesterday at Lachine; but as he was wind-bound in his yacht and couldn't get in, Sir Richard Jackson[†9] sent his drag four-in-hand, with two other young fellows who are also his aides, and in we came in grand style.

The Theatricals (I think I told you I had been invited to play with the officers of the Coldstream guards[†10] here) are, A Roland for an Oliver; Two o'clock in the Morning;[†1] and either the Young Widow,[†2] or Deaf as a Post.[†3] Ladies (unprofessional)[†4] are going to play, for the first time.[†5] I wrote to Mitchell at New York for a wig for Mr. Snobbington, which has arrived, and is brilliant. If they had done Love, Law, and Physick,[†6] as at first proposed, I was already "up" in Flexible, having played it of old, before my authorship days;[†7] but if it should be Splash[†8] in the Young Widow, you will have to do me the favor to imagine me in a smart livery-coat, shiny black hat and cockade, white knee-cords, white top-boots, blue stock, small whip, red cheeks and dark eyebrows. Conceive Topping's state of mind if I bring this dress home and put it on unexpectedly! ... God bless you, dear friend. I can say nothing about the seventh, the day on which we sail. It is impossible. Words cannot express what we feel now that the time is so near.

To [?DAVID C. COLDEN], 13 MAY 1842

Extract in unidentified New York catalogue, Apr 1939; MS 2 pp.; dated Montreal, Canada, 13 May 42. Address: almost certainly to Colden with whom CD had promised to make an expedition up the North River after his return to New York (To Felton, 29 Apr).

Your plans are mine, to a T. I particularly want to visit the scene of Rip Van Winkle's game at nine pins.[†9]

To C. C. FELTON, 16 MAY 1842*

Typescript Harvard College Library.

Montreal. | Sixteenth May 1842.

My Dear Felton.

A hundred thousand thanks for your ready and most friendly kindness in the matter of the International copyright. It would have been impossible to have taken a better or a more judicious course.[†1]

I shall bear the Bostonians and their Memorial in loving remembrance.[†2] I am steeping a little rod in strong Pickle, expressly on their account.[†3]

I have but a moment to add my best regards and Kate's to Mrs. Felton and my dear little friend.[†4] On the Sixth, we shall expect you, with Dr. Howe under your arm.[†5]

The play comes off on the Twenty Fifth. The wig and whiskers have arrived.

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS][†6]

To CHARLES SUMNER, 16 MAY 1842*

MS Maine Historical Society. Address: Paid | Charles Sumner Esquire | 4 Court Street | Boston.

Montreal—Canada. | Monday Sixteenth May 1842.

My Dear Sumner.

I received your last, at Niagara; where we enjoyed nine days of perfect repose; and where we were most comfortable and happy.

Directly we arrived at the end of the Railroad[†7] I hurried off: bearing Kate with me, as though General Swett were behind us[†8]—ran down the slope (it was raining hard, and was very slippery) ordered out the Ferryman—got into the boat—and crossed straightway; previously, I should have said, getting wet through, to the skin, by clambering over the rocks under the American Fall. I had a vague sense of the greatness of the scene, as we crossed; but it was not until I got upon Table Rock, that I was able to comprehend it—for I was in a kind of whirl up to that time, and should have been rather at a loss if I had been suddenly called upon to state what part of me I regarded as my head, and what as my heels. But when I had looked at the Great Horse Shoe Fall for a few minutes, from this point, I comprehended the whole scene.

I was never for a moment disappointed in any respect, except in the noise, which is preposterously exaggerated, and which really did not strike me at any time as being very loud,—except when one stands in the basin, and upon a level with the river, in front of the Horse Shoe Fall. Every other expectation I had formed, was fully and entirely realized. From the first, the impression on my mind was one of Beauty, unmixed with any sense of Terror. In the Vale of Glencoe in the Highlands of Scotland, I lost all count of time, and was exalted above every other reflection in the tremendous gloom and horror of the place, which filled me with the grandest sensations I have ever known.[†1] At Niagara, I never for a moment forgot that I was at Niagara, although from the first to the last of my stay there, I never looked at the Falling Water, without having the same train of thought awakened by it. It was always Peaceful Eternity; without the least admixture of trouble or commotion.

We idled about this Great Place, as I have said, for nine days—morning, noon, and night. And I think it would be difficult for any visitors to contemplate it under better circumstances than we did.

My wrath is kindled, past all human powers of extinction, by the disgusting entries in the books which are kept at the Guide's house;[†2] and which, made in such a spot, and preserved afterwards, are a disgrace and degradation to our nature. If I were a despot, I would force these Hogs to live for the rest of their lives on all Fours, and to wallow in filth expressly provided for them by Scavengers who should be maintained at the Public expence. Their drink should be the stagnant ditch, and their food the rankest garbage; and every morning they should each receive as many stripes as there are letters in their detestable obscenities.

I don't quite know what I would do with Mr. James Silk Buckingham,[†3] who writes blank verse in praise of the scene, and has it hung up framed and glazed, in the same chamber.[†1] Solitary confinement; lukewarm milk and water; very damp, clammy sop; and his own books to read; would perhaps be a sufficient punishment.

The extraordinary kindness and attention we experience here, in Canada, no words can express. I believe all the carriages, horses, boats, yachts, boats crews, and servants, in the Colony (whether belonging to Government or Private Individuals) are, or have been, at our disposal.

Let me thank you heartily, for the consultation you held with Felton about the copyright matter. It was impossible to take a more judicious course.

I am afraid and ashamed to give you trouble, but with regard to those books and things which were left in your charge at Boston.—My factotum reports that at the Dry Goods Stores there are old boxes to be bought for five and twenty cents or so, one of which wod. be a Masterpiece of art to pack them in. May I ask you to send them to New York, in such a Package, directed to me at the Carlton? And as soon as you please?—If I thought you would ever retaliate on me, I would invent fifty useless commissions for you to discharge, that I might have the pleasure of doing something for you.

Kate sends her best regards. And I am always (with cordiall[†2] remembrances to all friends)

Affectionately Yours | My Dear Sumner
CHARLES DICKENS

I was quite charmed with Hillard's lines on Longfellow's departure.[†3] Their Music is of the heart, and it goes to mine.[†4]

I shall walk into the Bostonians when I get home, for their precious Memorial, and its extravagant dishonesty. I have thought of a rod with tingling ends; and have put it in Pickle.

To [HUGH SIBBALD],[†1] 17 MAY 1842

Text from Leisure Hour, 1876, pp. 63-4, with emendations and additions from text provided by F. P. Hett in D, XXXIII (1937), 162.[†2] Address: recipient identified as Hugh Sibbald by Hett.

[Private][†3]

[Rasco's][†4] Hotel, Montreal, | Seventeenth May, 1842

Dear Sir,

I am much indebted to you for your gratifying and welcome letter,[†5] and am proud to know that you have conferred[†6] my name on your child in recollection of my writings.

That he may become all you wish him to be, and that he may in his [turn][†7] derive some entertainment and instruction from my endeavours[†8] to beguile the leisure time of children of a larger growth, is my sincere and earnest wish. If I could ever learn that I had happily been the means of awakening within him any new love of his fellow-creatures, and desire to help and assist them with his sympathy, I should [gain][†9] much pleasure from the knowledge.

Believe me, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

[Mr. Andrew Hughes][†10]

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 21 MAY 1842

Photograph Dickens House.

Rasco's Hotel, Montreal (which, by the bye, is the worst in the whole wide World)[†1] | 21st. May. 1842.

My Dear Friend.

I received your kind letter yesterday; and am truly grateful to you for the trouble you have taken, in the matter of the George Washington. The two state rooms decidedly—and as they offer to open a door of communication, please let them do so. It will be a great comfort and convenience to us.

My Bostonian factotum will come on to New York a day before us, with the baggage—I mean the trunks; not Kate. I will instruct him to call in Laight Street and give you timely notice of our movements. We are becoming very impatient to move, I assure you.

The young woman as formerly waited on G Warsen[†2] and wife, begs me to say that her name was at that time Miggs—not "Moggs".[†3] She considers that though she is but a servant, and her stations is humble and her fortunes lowly,[†4] no gentleman as can lay any claims to sich a title, has a rights to call her out of her name. Her name is but a short one, but she considers that it come direct from Evins, and was there invented for her ancestors' use and distinction. She thanks her blessed Stars that she has no shame in connections with her name, and has no call to disguise it; and she is of opinion that it hill becomes a 'Publican and Sinner (she is supposed to mean *Re*publican) to miscall his feller creeturs as isn't clothed in purple through no faults of their own, but may fly equally up'ards ven the time comes, in calico, notwithstanding.

Kate sends her best love to all. I join her heartily; and looking forward to our speedy meeting, am always My Dear friend

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S.
I inclose one tear for you

by rule - one out of many,

[†a] wrung from me by the hand of cruel Destiny. It is not so large as I could wish, but you will take the will for the deed.[†a]

To C. C. FELTON, 21 MAY 1842†

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Address: Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts | U.S.

Montreal. | Saturday Twenty First May 1842.

My Dear Felton.

I was delighted to receive your letter, yesterday; and was well pleased with its contents. I anticipated objection to Carlyle's Letter.[†1] I called particular attention to it for three reasons. Firstly, because he boldly said what all the others think; and therefore deserved to be manfully supported. Secondly, because it is my deliberate opinion that I have been assailed on this subject in a manner in which no man with any pretensions to public respect, or with the remotest right to express an opinion on a subject of universal literary interest, would be assailed in any other country [†a]on the face of the Earth.[†2] Thirdly, because I have seen enough to be assured that it is of no use to clutch these robbers in any other part of their ungodly persons but the throat. And Fourthly (I will add a fourth reason) because, meaning to let my indignation loose when I get home, I do not choose to curb it here, when I have an opportunity of giving it vent.[†a]

I really cannot sufficiently thank you, dear Felton, for your warm and hearty interest in these proceedings. But it would be idle to pursue that theme, so let it pass.

The wig and whiskers are in a state of the highest preservation. The play comes off, next Wednesday night, the Twenty Fifth. What would I give to see you in the front row of the centre box—your spectacles gleaming not unlike those of my dear friend Pickwick—your face radiant with as broad a grin as a staid Professor may indulge in—and your very coat, waistcoat, and shoulders, expressive of [†b]the rum and water we should drink[†b] together, when the performance was over! I would give something (not so much, but still a good round sum) if you could only stumble into that very dark and dusty Theatre in the day time (at any minute between 12 and 3) and see me, with my coat off, the Stage Manager and Universal Director, urging impracticable ladies and impossible gentlemen on to the very confines of insanity—shouting and driving about, in my own person, to an extent which would justify any philanthropic stranger in clapping me into a strait waistcoat without further enquiry— endeavouring to goad Hamlet into some dim and faint understanding of a prompter's duties—and struggling in such a vortex of noise, dirt, bustle, confusion, and inextricable entanglement of speech and action, as you would grow giddy in contemplating. We perform a Roland for an Oliver—A Good Night's Rest—and Deaf as a Post. This kind of voluntary hard labour used to be my great delight. The furor has come strong upon me again; and I begin to be once more of opinion that nature intended me for the Lessee of a National Theatre—and that pen ink and paper have spoiled a Manager.

Oh! How I look forward across that rolling water to Home, and its small tenantry! How I busy myself in thinking how my books look; and where the tables are; and in what positions the chairs stand, relatively to the other furniture; and whether we shall get there in the night, or in the morning, or in the afternoon—and whether we shall be able to surprise them—or whether they will be too sharply looking out for us—and what our pets will say—and how they'll look—and who will be the first to come and shake hands—and so forth! If I could but tell you how I have set my heart on rushing into Forster's study (Forster is my great friend, and writes at the bottom of all his letters—"My Love to Felton") and into Maclise's painting room, and into Macready's managerial ditto, without a moment's warning—and how I picture every little trait and circumstance of our arrival to myself, down to the very colour of the bow on the cook's cap—you would almost think I had changed places with my eldest son, and was still in pantaloons of the thinnest texture. I left all these things—God only knows what a love I have for them—as coolly and calmly as any animated cucumber; but when I come upon them again I shall have lost all power of self-restraint, and shall as certainly make a fool of myself (in the popular meaning of that expression) as ever Grimaldi[†1] did in his way, or George The Third in his.

And not the less so, dear Felton, for having found some warm hearts, and left some instalments of earnest and sincere affection, behind me on this continent. And whenever I turn my mental telescope hitherward, trust me that one of the first figures it will descry will wear spectacles so like yours that the maker couldn't tell the difference, and shall address a Greek class in such an exact imitation of your voice, that the very students, hearing it, should cry "That's he! Three cheers for Felton Hoo—ray—ay—ay—ay—ay!"

—About those joints of yours—I think you are mistaken. They can't be stiff. At the worst, they merely want the air of New York, which, being impregnated with the flavor of last year's oysters, has a surprising effect in rendering the human frame supple and flexible, in all cases of rust.

A terrible idea occurred to me, as I wrote those words—The oyster cellars—what do they do, when oysters are not in season? Is pickled salmon vended there—do they sell crabs, shrimps, winkles, herrings?—The oyster openers, what do they do? Do they commit suicide in despair, or wrench open tight drawers and cupboards and hermetically-sealed bottles—for practice? Perhaps they are dentists out of the oyster season. Who knows!

[†c]Kate sends her love to you, and Mrs. Felton, and your little girl—in which I join with all my heart. Being ever my dear Felton[†c]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS][†1]

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 25 MAY 1842

Mention in unidentified catalogue, 4 Apr, n.y.; dated Montreal, 25 May 42.

To JOHN FORSTER, 26 MAY [1842]

Extract in F, III, vii, 275-7.

[Rasco's][†2] Hotel, Montreal, Canada, twenty-sixth of May

This, like my last, will be a stupid letter, because both Kate and I are thrown into such a state of excitement by the near approach of the seventh of June, that we can do nothing, and think of nothing.

The play came off last night.[†3] The audience, between five and six hundred strong, were invited as to a party; a regular table with refreshments being spread in the lobby and saloon. We had the band of the twenty-third[†4] (one of the finest in the service) in the orchestra, the theatre was lighted with gas, the scenery was excellent, and the properties were all brought from private houses. Sir Charles Bagot, Sir

Richard Jackson, and their staffs were present; and as the military portion of the audience were all in full uniform, it was really a splendid scene.

We "went" also splendidly; though with nothing very remarkable in the acting way. We had for Sir Mark Chase[†5] a genuine odd fish,[†6] with plenty of humour; but our Tristram Sappy[†7] was not up to the marvellous reputation he has somehow or other acquired here. I am not however, let me tell you, placarded as stage-manager for nothing. Everybody was told they would have to submit to the most iron despotism; and didn't I come Macready over them?

Oh no. By no means. Certainly not.[†1] The pains I have taken with them, and the perspiration I have expended, during the last ten days, exceed in amount anything you can imagine. I had regular plots of the scenery made out, and lists of the properties wanted; and had them nailed up by the prompter's chair. Every letter that was to be delivered, was written; every piece of money that had to be given, provided; and not a single thing lost sight of.[†2] I prompted, myself, when I was not on; when I was, I made the regular prompter of the theatre my deputy; and I never saw anything so perfectly touch and go, as the first two pieces.[†3] The bedroom scene in the interlude was as well furnished as Vestris had it;[†4] with a "practicable" fireplace blazing away like mad, and everything in a concatenation accordingly.[†5] I really do believe that I was very funny:[†6] at least I know that I laughed heartily at myself, and made the part a character, such as you and I know very well: a mixture of T——,[†7] Harley,[†8]

Private Theatricals.

COMMITTEE.

Mrs. TORRENS. | Mrs. PERRY.
W. C. ERMATINGER, Esq. | Captain TORRENS.
THE EARL OF MULGRAVE.

STAGE MANAGER—MR. CHARLES DICKENS.

QUEEN'S THEATRE, MONTREAL.

ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 25TH, 1842,
WILL BE PERFORMED,

A ROLAND FOR AN OLIVER.

MRS. SELBORNE. —— Mrs Torrens
MARIA DARLINGTON. —— Miss Griffin.
MRS. FIXTURE. —— Miss Ermatinger.

MR. SELBORNE. —— Lord Mulgrave.
ALFRED HIGHFLYER. —— Mr Charles Dickens
SIR MARK CHASE. —— Mr Mathews
FIXTURE. —— Captain Willoughby.
GAMEKEEPER. —— Captain Granville

AFTER WHICH, AN INTERLUDE IN ONE SCENE, (FROM THE FRENCH,) CALLED

Past Two o'Clock in the Morning.

THE STRANGER. —— Captain Granville
MR. SNOBBINGTON. —— Mr Charles Dickens

TO CONCLUDE WITH THE FARCE, IN ONE ACT, ENTITLED

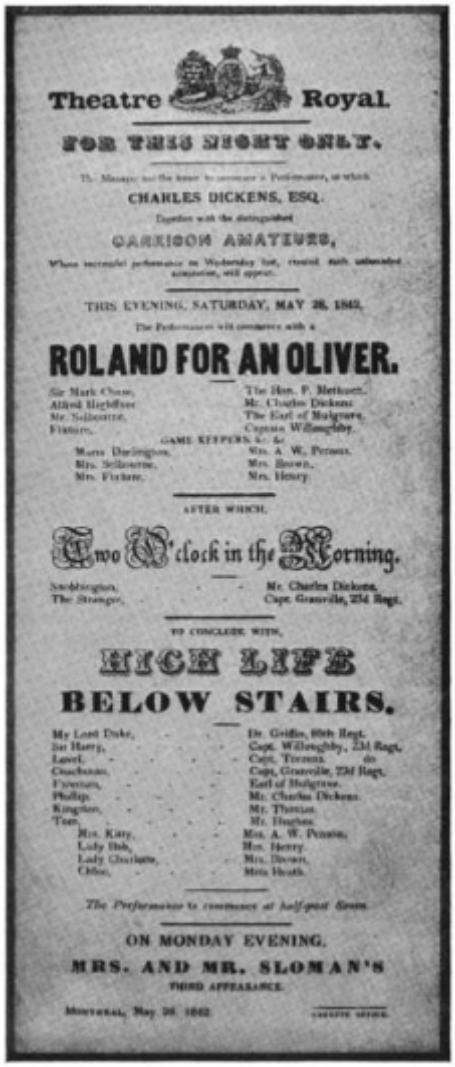
DEAF AS A POST.

MRS. PLUMPLEY. — Mrs Torrens
AMY TEMPLETON. — Mrs Charles Dickens!!!!!!!!
SOPHY WALTON. — Mrs Perry.
SALLY MAGGS. — Miss Griffin

CAPTAIN TEMPLETON. — Captain Torrens
MR. WALTON. —— Captain Willoughby.
TRISTRAM BAPPY. —— Doctor Griffin
CRUPPER. —— Lord Mulgrave
GALLOP. —— Mr. Charles Dickens.

MONTREAL, May 24, 1842. GAZETTE OFFICE,

Playbill of the Private Theatricals
Montreal, 25 May 1842



Theatre Royal.

FOR THIS NIGHT ONLY.

CHARLES DICKENS, ESQ.

GARRISON AMATEURS,

THIS EVENING, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1842,

ROLAND FOR AN OLIVER.

Two O'clock in the Morning.

HIGH LIFE BELOW STAIRS.

ON MONDAY EVENING,

MRS. AND MR. SLOMAN'S

THIRD APPEARANCE.

Playbill of the Public Theatricals
Montreal, 28 May 1842

Yates,[†1] Keeley,[†2] and Jerry Sneak.[†3] It went with a roar, all through; and, as I am closing this, they have told me I was so well made up that Sir Charles Bagot, who sat in the stage box, had no idea who played Mr. Snobbington, until the piece was over.[†4]

But only think of Kate playing! and playing devilish well, I assure you! All the ladies were capital, and we had no wait or hitch for an instant.[†5] You may suppose this, when I tell you that we began at eight, and had the curtain down at eleven. It is their custom here, to prevent heartburnings in a very heartburning town, whenever they have played in private, to repeat the performance in public.[†6] So, on Saturday (substituting, of course, real actresses[†7] for the ladies), we repeat the two first pieces to a paying audience,[†8] for the manager's[†9] benefit....

I send you a bill,[†10] to which I have appended a key.[†11]

I have not told you half enough. But I promise you I shall make you shake your sides about this play. Wasn't it worthy of Crummles that when Lord Mulgrave and I went out to the door to receive the Governor-general, the regular prompter followed us in agony with four tall candlesticks with wax candles in them, and besought us with a bleeding heart to carry two apiece, in accordance with all the precedents? ...

I have hardly spoken of our letters, which reached us yesterday, shortly before the play began. A hundred thousand thanks for your delightful mainsail[†1] of that gallant little packet. I read it again and again; and had it all over again at breakfast time this morning. I heard also, by the same ship, from Talfourd, Miss Coutts, Brougham, Rogers, and others. A delicious letter from Mac too, as good as his painting I swear. Give my hearty love to him.... God bless you, my dear friend. As the time draws nearer, we get FEVERED with anxiety for home.... Kiss our darlings for us. We shall soon meet, please God, and be happier and merrier than ever we were, in all our lives.... Oh home—home—home—home—home—home—HOME !!!!!!!!!!

June

To JONATHAN CHAPMAN, 2 JUNE 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Private. | The Honorable Jonathan Chapman Boston | Mass.

Carlton House, New York. | Second June 1842.

My Dear Friend.

I am going up the Hudson, for rest; and shall not return here until Monday. Though I have but a minute to spare, I cannot choose but answer your affectionate and warmly-welcomed letter.

I did receive that other communication from you,[†2] of which you speak. I am not ashamed to own it, although I have not written. I answered a great many other letters. They were mere things of course. But I always laid yours aside, and said "This is quite another matter. I won't write him a traveller's hurried, common-place note. I will wait"—Well! You know what waiting comes to, under such circumstances as these?

Besides, I have always said to my wife, "He'll come over to New York. I feel confident that he will dine with us, on Monday The Sixth."—When your letter was brought in, I plumed myself very much (before opening it) on being so accurate. And I do assure you that for a moment I was quite sorry and disappointed.[†3] But to connect any such feelings with such a letter, long, was out of the question; so I brightened up again, very soon, and am now quite radiant.

The ocean can no more divide you and me, than darkness can shut out Heaven from a blind man. Were it twenty times as broad as it is, we could send a warm pressure of the hand, across it. And I feel, besides, an inexpressible confidence that, on one side of it, or the other, we shall meet again.[†4]

God bless you, my dear fellow. In the happiness of Home, I shall only remember you the more earnestly, heartily, and affectionately. I don't know how extravagantly I shall feel, or what extravagant things I shall do, in the joy of heart with which I shall first stand among my household Deities again. But, I will tell you all about it, from the midst of them, with God's leave.

—I write God bless you, once more, as if that were a satisfaction. Who that has ever reflected on the enormous and vast amount of leave-taking there is in this Life, can ever have doubted the existence of another!

I have more than half a mind to write those three words of farewell, again.—But let this go without, for you know that it comes from Yours with all his heart

CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorable Jonathan Chapman.

I cannot tell you how often I feel grieved at our not having dined together, alone, on that day when we went to South Boston.[†1] And now, it really weighs upon me, quite heavily.

To JOHN PENDLETON KENNEDY, 2 JUNE 1842*

MS Peabody Institute, Baltimore.

In Haste.

Carlton House, New York.
Second of June 1842.

My Dear Sir

I am going on a short excursion up the Hudson, and shall not return until the day of Sailing. I have been here but a few hours,[†2] and have barely time to acknowledge the receipt of your very welcome and interesting letter.

My address in London is No. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park. Command me, at all times and seasons, in the International Copyright matter. And trust me that I will leave no stone unturned which human levers can uproot. Bulwer, Hallam,[†3] and all the signers of that letter (with many more behind) will help me cordially.[†4] Whatever you have need of, ask for. I will communicate your letter to them all, immediately on my arrival in England.[†5]

My first step shall be, to stop[†6] the sale of early proofs to any Newspaper in the United States.[†1] We will deprive them of that interest in the present Robbery, at any rate.

I inclose you Carlyle's autograph communication.[†2] And am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorable J. P. Kennedy.

To MESSRS LEA & BLANCHARD, 2 JUNE 1842

MS Messrs Lea & Febiger. Address: Paid | Messrs. Lea and Blanchard | Philadelphia.

Carlton House. New York. | Second of June 1842.

My Dear Sirs

I thank you, very sincerely, for your kind letter, and your handsome Present of Books. I shall carry them all home, and put them beside your other contributions to my shelves.[†3]

My inclination would lead me, with a silken cord, to Philadelphia. But, I am weary of travelling, and am going to lie in the shade of some Trees on the bank of the North River until Tuesday comes—that bright day in my Calendar when I turn towards Home and England.

Good b'ye. | Always Believe me
Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard.

To FREDERICK GRANVILLE,[†4] 2 JUNE 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Carlton House. | Thursday Second June 1842.

My Dear Granville.

I have taken a State room for you & Captain Woodhouse,[†5] on board the George Washington.[†6] It is just amidships, where there is least motion; and is next door to ours. She is not full; and promises, I hope, to be exceedingly comfortable.[†1]

Our goods and chattels will go on board at 9 o'Clock on Monday Morning. Mrs. Dickens's maid and Mr. Putnam are going down with them. They will stow your things, if you please, at the same time; and will observe any directions you may give them.

I am just starting on a short excursion up the Hudson.[†2] It is not very likely that we shall return before Monday. Will you be in the way between 11 and 1 on that morning? I have not paid for your passage, or my own: the owners[†3] begging me not to do so, until the day before sailing. We will call upon them together, and settle.

In the mean time, pray make use of our sitting room. And pray beg Captain Woodhouse, in my name, to dine with us on Monday at 6.[†4]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM MITCHELL, 6 JUNE 1842*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Carlton House. | Monday Evening | Sixth June 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am more sorry than I can tell you, to find that I am bound, in pursuance of a very old engagement, to go out to breakfast tomorrow Morning.[†1] You will believe, readily, that on the eve of going back to the old country, I regret this, sincerely, for the sake of past times. But I have just been reminded of this promise, and cannot choose but fulfil it, for many reasons—not least among them, for the sake of my best friends on this side.[†2]

I shall send you from England, please God, English copies of my books.[†3] If you receive them in the spirit in which I send them, the Olympic will prosper more and more; for I wish you more than well—not merely by reason of your extraordinary quiet, rich, comic humour (which I never saw exceeded) but in recollection of the gentlemanly and considerate spirit you have shewn in every pleasant communication we have had together.

The dog[†4] is in a superb state; & is already deeply attached to my Wife's maid.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To A. H. BURROWS,[†5] [?28 JUNE 1842]

Mention in Boston Daily Evening Transcript, 21 July 42. Date: They landed at Liverpool early on Wed 29 June; letter was probably written the day before.

A letter of thanks to the Captain of the George Washington for the comfort they had experienced and the attention they had received, signed by all the passengers.

July

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 1 JULY 1842*

MS Southeast Missouri State College.

Devonshire Terrace. | First July 1842.

My Dear Fonblanque.

Many thanks for your kind note and welcome.

We should have been truly delighted to have dined with you to day, had we not previously pledged ourselves to regale with Forster. I should have written to tell you this, yesterday afternoon, but the happy hurry of getting into my home again,[†1] made me oblivious.

In haste | Believe me ever
Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire

To THOMAS LONGMAN,[†2] [1 JULY 1842]

Text from MDGH, I, 73. Date: clearly the day after the meeting of 30 June chaired by Longman.

Athenæum, Friday Afternoon.

My dear Sir,

If I could possibly have attended the meeting yesterday[†3] I would most gladly have done so. But I [had][†4] been up the whole night, and was too much exhausted even to write and say so before the proceedings came on.

I have fought the fight across the Atlantic with the utmost energy I could command; have never been turned aside by any consideration for an instant; am fresher for the fray than ever; will battle it to the death, and die game to the last.

I am happy to say that my boy is quite well again. From being in perfect health he fell into alarming convulsions with the surprise and joy of our return.[†1]

I beg my regards to Mrs. Longman,[†2]

And am always, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 JULY 1842

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace.
Saturday Evening | Second July 1842

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I beg to report myself arrived and well—and in proof of the fact, to send you the Rocking Chair.[†3] Let me also ask your acceptance of some specimens of American Poetry,[†4] which I forward at the same time.

I send for Miss Meredith, an Eagle's feather.[†5] Its rightful owner fell over the great fall at Niagara last winter (or, I should rather say, was carried over by the strong current) and was picked up, dead, some miles down the river.

I did not forget Lady Burdett's request. A piece of rock from the cave behind the great sheet of water is slumbering ignominiously in the Custom House, among some other contraband articles. As soon as the chest comes to hand, I shall have the pleasure of redeeming my vow.[†6]

Believe me always
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To CHARLES MACKAY,[†1] [?EARLY JULY 1842]

Extract in Walpole Galleries catalogue No. 132; MS 2 pp. Date: probably not long after 30 June 42, date of publication of The Salamandrine (see fn).

My Dear Sir,

I have read your "wild poem"[†2] with great pleasure and delight ...

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, 4 JULY 1842

Mention in N, I, 461.

To MRS MACREADY, 4 JULY 1842*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace.
Monday Evening | Fourth July 1842.

My Dear Mrs. Macready.

As we never can thank you enough in all our lives for your most kind and zealous friendship,[†3] let me ask you to accept the accompanying little token of our love[†4]—to the end that whenever you look upon it, you may remember how powerless we were to express our grateful feeling to you on coming home from America, and how much we should have said, if we could have found words in our full hearts.

Ever Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Macready.

To DAVID BARNES,[†5] 6 JULY 1842*

MS Messrs Chas J. Sawyer Ltd.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Wednesday Sixth July 1842.

Dear Mr. Barnes.

We should like to get a house at Broadstairs this year, for the Months of August and September; and I shall be glad to hear from you, at your leisure, on the subject.

We wish it to be on the Terrace—and it must have a Water Closet.

I think of bringing my carriage (which is a one-horse Phaeton) down with me, but my Groom I shall be obliged to leave in town, to take care of the house, as I don't like to trust it to a stranger. Can you let me know whether I could get stabling &c in Broadstairs, and what it would cost—including, of course, the keep of the horse, and keeping the carriage and harness clean for daily use?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Barnes.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH,[†1] 7 JULY 1842

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh July 1842.

My Dear Ainsworth.

I turned back t'other day, directly Maclise called out to me that you had passed—and turned back up Portland Place yesterday, after an imaginary William Harrison—but it was no go on either occasion.

Will you dine with me at 6, next Saturday Week? I give you so long a notice—not because of any great party or mighty preparations, but in the hope of finding you disengaged.

My love to Mrs. Touchett[†2] and Miss Buckley[†3]—and to the Misses Ainsworth,[†4] with whom I am afraid (for I know what women they are by this time) of being too tender, lest they should erect their heads and wither me with a look.

Always My Dear Ainsworth
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire.

To BRITISH AUTHORS AND JOURNALS, 7 JULY 1842

Text from printed Circular.[†5]

1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park,
Seventh July, 1842.

[My Dear]

You may perhaps be aware that during my stay in America, I lost no opportunity of endeavouring to awaken the public mind to a sense of the unjust and iniquitous state of the law in that country, in reference to the wholesale piracy of British works.

Having been successful in making the subject one of general discussion in the United States, I carried to Washington, for presentation to Congress by Mr. Clay, a petition from the whole body of American authors, earnestly praying for the enactment of an International Copyright Law. It was signed by Mr. Washington Irving, Mr. Prescott, Mr. Cooper,[†1] and every man who has distinguished himself in the literature of America; and has since been referred to a Select Committee of the House of Representatives.[†2]

To counter any effect which might be produced by that petition, a meeting was held in Boston—which you will remember is the seat and stronghold of Learning and Letters in the United States—at which a memorial against any change in the existing state of things in this respect was agreed to,[†3] with but one dissentient voice.[†4] This document, which, incredible as it may appear to you, was actually forwarded to Congress, and received, deliberately stated that if English authors were invested with any controul over the republication of their own books, it would be no longer possible for American authors to alter and adapt them (as they do now) to the American taste![†5]

This memorial was, without loss of time, replied to by Mr. Prescott,[†1] who commented, with the natural indignation of a gentleman, and a Man of Letters, upon its extraordinary dishonesty. I am satisfied that this brief mention of its tone and spirit, is sufficient to impress you with the conviction that it becomes all those who are in any way connected with the Literature of England, to take that high stand, to which the nature of their pursuits, and the extent of their sphere of usefulness, justly entitle them; to discourage the upholders of such doctrines by every means in their power; and to hold themselves aloof from the remotest participation in a system, from which the moral sense and honourable feeling of all just men must instinctively recoil.

For myself, I have resolved that I will never from this time enter into any negociation with any person for the transmission, across the Atlantic, of early proofs of any thing I may write;[†2] and that I will forego all profit derivable from such a source. I do not venture to urge this line of proceeding upon you, but I would beg to suggest, and to lay great stress upon the necessity of observing, one other course of action: to which I cannot too emphatically call your attention.

The persons who exert themselves to mislead the American public on this question; to put down its discussion; and to suppress and distort the truth, in reference to it, in every possible way; are (as you may easily suppose) those who have a strong interest in the existing system of piracy and plunder; inasmuch as, so long as it continues, they can gain a very comfortable living out of the brains of other men, while they would find it very difficult to earn bread by the exercise of their own. These are the editors and proprietors of newspapers almost exclusively devoted to the republication of popular English works.[†3] They are, for the most part, men of very low attainments and of more than indifferent reputation;[†1] and I have frequently seen them, in the same sheet in which they boast of the rapid sale of many thousand copies of an English reprint, coarsely and insolently attacking the author of that very book, and heaping scurrility and slander upon his head.[†2]

I would therefore entreat you, in the name of the honourable pursuit with which you are so intimately connected, never to hold correspondence with any of these men, and never to negociate with them for the sale of early proofs of any work over which you have control; but to treat, on all occasions, with some respectable American publishing house, and with such an establishment only.[†3]

Our common interest in this subject, and my advocacy of it, single-handed,[†4] on every occasion that has presented itself during my absence from Europe, form my excuse for addressing you.

And I am,
Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To [W. C. MACREADY], 7 JULY 1842*

MS Morgan Library. Endorsed on outside in CD's hand: "Affidavit | of | Charles Dickens. Address: Both tone of letter and Macready's diary entry for 9 July, "A very amusing letter from Dickens" (Diaries, II, 179), point to him, not his wife, as recipient.

†aCharles Dickens†a of No. 1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park in the County of Middlesex Gentleman, Maketh oath and saith, That this Deponent hath been for many years last past in the custom and habit of making certain annual visits (to wit in the months of August, September and October) to a certain seaside dipping, bathing, or watering-place, much frequented by individuals of a lone and quiet temper, and by certain virtuous and monastic fishermen; as also by a gloomy and thoughtful race much given to contemplation and retirement, and commonly known as The Preventive Service†1—to wit, the Port, Landing, Village, hamlet, or town of Broadstairs in the County of Kent. And this Deponent saith that the said Port, Landing, Village, hamlet, or town of Broadstairs in the said county, was and is, and to the best of this Deponent's judgment and belief will always be, the chosen resort and retreat of jaded intellect and exhausted nature; being, as this Deponent further saith it is, far removed from the sights and noises of the busy world,†2 and filled with the delicious murmur and repose of the broad ocean; the said broad ocean being (as this Deponent further saith and fearlessly asserteth) the finest feature (when you are off it) in the whole creation.

And this Deponent further saith That he has been informed and verily believes that there are, roaming the world, and in particular the dominions of her Gracious Majesty Victoria, By the Grace of God, Queen Defender of the Faith and so forth; certain persons who by reason of their inability to appreciate the many excellencies and unequalled beauties of the said Port, landing, village, hamlet, or town of Broadstairs, do falsely and heretically decry the same; and do annually repair to a certain sty, hole, den, and sink of deep disgust called Eastbourne,†3 which, as this Deponent hath been informed and verily believes is a desolate and desert place, inhabited by gulls and sea-Mews, and excessively geological—in points of flints and chalk. And this Deponent further saith that the aforesaid sty, hole, den, and sink of deep disgust called Eastbourne, is, and was, and to the best of this Deponent's judgment and belief will always be, a kind of English Saint Helena, to which stern husbands banish their unwilling and reluctant wives. And that so great and manifold are the horrors of the aforesaid sty, hole, den, and sink of deep disgust called Eastbourne, that persons there confined grow desperate, as was distinctly proved not long ago (to wit last year) in a case which came within the observation and happened within the knowledge of this Deponent (to wit, the case of Catherine Macready) who being tolerably lodged therein, and furthermore supplied with meat, and drink, and clothes, did nevertheless grow weary of her life,†1 and being frantic did indite and send strange letters to her Lord and Master, to wit, threatening and Swing-like†2 letters, demanding her release on pain of Death and Suicide. And this Deponent further saith that he distinctly remembereth having heard the aforesaid Catherine vehemently protest that if she had not been brought up to London, she would have come without being sent for; and that if there had been no boat, or coach, or other carriage, she would have walked on foot; with other strong and terrible expressions, whereat the hair of this Deponent stood on end, and all bystanders shuddered. Wherefore this Deponent Saith—That the aforesaid sty, hole, den, and sink of deep disgust called Eastbourne, is in no wise comparable, and can by no credible and reasoning persons be likened unto, the delightful and unequalled Port, landing, village, hamlet or town of Broadstairs, which this Deponent doth assert to be (in the words of Thryza to Isambiel) †a"A token and a tone"†a—for evermore.†3

CHARLES DICKENS

Sworn before me, at the Mansion House, London, this Seventh day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty Two

John Pirie[†4] Mayor

To LADY HOLLAND, 8 JULY 1842*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Private and Confidential.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Eighth July 1842.

Dear Lady Holland.

You will, I know, forgive me for writing, before coming to see you; as the subject on which I am going to beg your kind influence, is one which admits of no delay.

Pehaps[[sic]] you are aware that the Courier Newspaper (formerly on the Whig side, and recently Conservative)[†1] is just now dead, and incorporated with the Globe.[†2] If I had been aware of its condition (which my absence from Europe prevented) I should have put myself into instant communication with the leaders of the Liberal party, and made proposals to them for saving the Paper—nailing the true colours to the mast—and fighting the battle staunchly, and to the Death. I need scarcely say, that if I threw my small person into the breach, and wrote for the paper (literary articles as well as political) I could command immediate attention; while the influence I have with Booksellers and Authors would give me a better chance of stamping it with a new character, and securing for it, after a reasonable trial, good advertisements, than almost any other man could possess.

I am assured, beyond all doubt, that the premises and types and so forth, are still to be disposed of—and I am strongly inclined to establish a new evening paper, on the right side, in its place. But of course it would be impossible for me to do this, unless I were assured of the countenance, and could receive direct pecuniary assistance from the Members of the late Government or from the Reform Club.[†3] It has occurred to me that the only straight-forward and short course of proceeding (and despatch is of great importance, as the things are about to be put up to auction, which I would prevent, if possible) is, to ascertain the sentiments of the leading members of the party, with as little delay as possible—and that, through you, if you would kindly make known the contents of this note—say to Lord Melbourne and Lord Lansdowne.[†1] With the latter I would communicate myself,[†2] and with Mr. Stanley[†3] and one or two more, did I not feel that, asking your kind interposition at all, I had better leave the matter entirely in your hands.

I feel a perfect confidence that I could establish an organ for the party which would do good service, and which would have the inestimable advantage of taking a certain position at once, instead of struggling for years before it became known. Knowing how strongly you sympathize with the views I am so earnestly desirous of advocating, I can scarcely think that I need offer you any lengthened apology— even for this long trespass on your time and patience.

Always Dear Lady Holland
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To SIR JOHN EASTHOPE,[†4] [JULY 1842]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS BEARD, 11 JULY 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh July 1842.

My Dear Beard.

Alfred has written me to say that the Line of Railway he is employed on, being nearly finished,[†5] the Head thereof[†6] (under whom he has been some Years) has given him a letter of Introduction to Mr. Locke:[†1] engineer of the Southampton—Havre and Rouen—and divers other works. He has it in his head (with some reason I dare say) that a word from Sir John Easthope would do his business— and has written to me for a Letter of Introduction to the Baronet; which I have given him.[†2]

If it comes in your way, to help him or keep him in mind at the right time, I know you will do so.

You are acquainted with the business that kept me away from the Chronicle last Saturday.[†3]— George Cruikshank came home in my phaeton, on his head— to the great delight of the loose Midnight Loungers in Regent Street. He was last seen, taking Gin with a Waterman.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire P.S. Directly I have concluded the Broadstairs arrangements, I will send you timely notice. Prepare the Baronet for an enormous[†4] absence. No half measures.

To MESSRS JOSEPH ELLIS & SON,[†1] 11 JULY 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh July 1842.

Gentlemen.

If you will have the goodness to send me your last year's Bill, I shall be glad to settle it.[†2]

And let me have, if you please, four dozen of Sparkling Champagne, and six dozen of the Metternich Hock—three dozen yellow seal, and three red. I have a dinner party on Saturday,[†3] and am out of both Wines. I want them, therefore, with all speed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Ellis and Son.

To LADY HOLLAND, 11 JULY 1842*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh July 1842.

Dear Lady Holland.

I cannot tell you how very much obliged to you I feel, for your kindness and interest in the matter in which I sought your valuable aid. Nor can I thank you sufficiently, believe me.

I think it very possible that Mr. Stanley is right[†4]—though we must not forget that in such questions, the Liberal party have very seldom made a mistake on the Bold side.

You embolden me to ask another favor of you. It is, that whenever you happen to see those with whom you spoke, again, you will give them to understand (if they do not already know) that my idea originated in no thought of personal advantage; and that at the very best, I should have been, in a pecuniary sense, a loser for many years;—besides undertaking a very serious amount of mental labour, as I could not have afforded to desist from my other pursuits. I should not have hinted at this fact while there remained any chance of trying the project, but there being none, I feel it but justice to myself to say that much.

The notion of this newspaper was bred in me by my old training—I was as well acquainted with the management of one,[†1] some years ago, as an Engineer is, with the Steam engine. And I always feel when I take up a paper now (which is not often) that the subjects which all the writers leave unhandled (except Fonblanque, who is another Swift)[†2] are exactly the questions which interest the people, and concern their business and bosoms,[†3] most.

I shall have the pleasure of calling in South Street on Thursday Morning.[†4] Meantime Mrs. Dickens begs me "to thank Lady Holland for her kind remembrance of her, and to say how happy she feels, now that she is at home again."—We found our children, thank God, quite well; but the eldest fell into convulsions soon after our arrival—from being, as he said, "too glad"—and was in a dangerous state all that night. He has since quite recovered.

Dear Lady Holland. Yours always faithfully
And Truly obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

[†a]P.S. I send with this—I brought them home from America, for the purpose—a book of American Poetry, in which Mr. Longfellow's pieces are very good,[†5] and an Eagle's Feather from the Great Falls at Niagara.—I hope the regard and respect which accompany them, may give them a value they have not in themselves.[†a]

To MISS C. LE GRAND,[†6] 11 JULY 1842

Text from N, I, 462.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park
Monday, Eleventh July, 1842

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Le Grand, and begs to assure her that he is much flattered and pleased by her obliging note; and that it will afford him much pleasure to accept the Dedication she does him the honor to offer.

To THOMAS MITTON, 11 JULY 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Eleventh July | 1842.

My Dear Mitton

Have you had the counterpart of the Inclosed?[†1]—I have not given it the most absorbing attention possible, certainly; but I can't understand it for the Life of me.

I will come to you on Thursday between One and Two, if that will suit you.

Always Faithfully
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

(Over)

They can't stand the Money for the Newspaper. I will shew you the letters thereanent.—Before I go to Broadstairs, I should like (if your household arrangements should be completed before I leave town) to have a chop in the swell first floor.[†2]

To JOHN OVERS,[†1] 11 JULY 1842*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Eleventh July 1842.

Dear Mr. Overs,

I am truly glad to hear that you are so much better; and am rejoiced (though not surprised) by this new instance of Dr Elliotson's kindness, and surpassing goodness of heart.[†2]

I shall not fail to tell Mr Ainsworth that you mentioned his very considerate reply to your note,[†3] and I shall add that I feel personally obliged to him for it.

I am usually at home every day between 11 and 12; and on Sunday, as of old, am almost always visible at that time. I shall be very glad to see you whenever you like to come.

Always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr J. A. Overs.

To H. P. SMITH,[†4] 11 JULY 1842*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh July 1842.

My Dear Smith.

I hoped to have been able to come to you today, with Mrs. Dickens, who bears this. But the correspondence I have to get through just now (to say nothing of any American Sketches that may be just shaping themselves in my head) is so preposterously enormous that even on this sunny day I am forced to stay at home until dinner time—though by Noon I was in the desperate condition of Jack in the spelling book, who was also a Martyr to all work and no play.

I was home within the half Year. Is it necessary for me to make any formal application to the Directors for the return of the balance of the sum paid for extra premium[†5]—or is this note to you enough?

If it will be necessary for me to come to the office, I am ready.

Always My Dear Smith | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To R. MONCKTON MILNES, 13 JULY 1842*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth July 1842.

My Dear Milnes

Do you dine with me on Saturday at 6,—or are you otherwise engaged?

A word in answer.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

To H. P. SMITH, 13 JULY 1842

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 486 (1926); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 July 42.

My rates and taxes being all paid, I beg to vote for Richmond—a Plumper.[†1] Richmond, Rustic Refreshment, and the rippling river!

I have already begun working like a dray-horse;[†2] to the great astonishment of my red face,[†3] which is turning white with wonder.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 13 JULY 1842

Mention in list of letters from CD to Thompson made by his son-in-law Wilfrid Meynell; MS 1 p.; from Devonshire Terrace, 13 July 42.[†4]

To LORD BROUGHAM, 14 JULY 1842*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourteenth July 1842.

Dear Lord Brougham.

In reply to your kind note, let me say, that I shall be disengaged next Saturday Week, or on the Wednesday following that Saturday. I need scarcely add that I shall be delighted to have an opportunity of seeing you before you leave town.— I go to the seaside on the First of August.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Brougham.

To H. P. SMITH, 14 JULY 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Fourteenth July 1842.

My Dear Smith.

The cheque safely received.[†1] As you say—it would be cheap at any money. My devotion to the fine arts renders it impossible for me to cash it. I have therefore ordered it to be framed and glazed.[†2]

I am really grateful to you for the interest you take in my proceedings. Next time I come into the City, I will shew you my introductory chapter to the American book.[†3] It may seem to prepare the reader for a much greater amount of slaughter than he will meet with; but it is honest and true.[†4] Therefore my hand does not shake.

Best loves and regards—"Certainly" to the Richmondian intentions.[†1]

Always Faithfully Your friend

CD.

H. P. Smith Esquire

To MRS DAVID C. COLDEN, 15 JULY 1842

Photograph Dickens House. Address: By The Cunard Steamboat Viâ Halifax | Mrs. Colden | 28 Laight Street | Hudson Square | New York | U.S.

Fifteenth July 1842.

My Dear Mrs. Colden.

It is more clear to me than ever that Kate is as near being a Donkey, as one of that sex whose luminary and sun you are, can be. You will immediately recall, when I express this—not strong, but merely expressive opinion,—that she has written about Great Westerns sailing on Fourteenths, and other impossibilities, when all reasoning beings know that this letter will come by the Cunard boat, and that the sixteenth is its day—at least I think it is: and any impression of mine is, I need not say, much better than a fact.[†2]

We ought to have written you by the last boat,[†3] and fully intended to have done so; but the thick throng of occupations which has continually beset me, has really, so far as I am concerned, deprived me of leisure to do anything I should have liked to do. And even now, in this Preface or Prologue to our future correspondence (in which I mean to shine very much) I have only time to be dull, and inclination to be bright.

How we enjoy our own home, and revel in everything connected wi[th][†4] it; and how I every day resolve to go dreadfully to work directly after breakfas[t and][†4] break my resolution in favor of some gentlemanly piece of vagabondism wit[h][†4] Maclise and Forster (who, by the bye, are madly delighted with, and grateful for, th[e][†4] Shaker Pipes)[†5] or some most riotous game at trap-bat and ball[†6] in the Garden with the children—and how I played the accordion[†7] perpetually on board ship (as I write the words, and remember that you never heard me perform on that instrument, my soul is filled with grief)—and established a select dinner party of four at the bottom of the table all the way home, who were called The United Vagabonds, of which honorable Society I was President[†1]—are topics which I shall handle in my next. At present I will only add; hearing the Bellman[†2] (an English Institution connected with the Post office, sweet Foreigner); that I wish you would come and live next door; for the best part of my heart is in Laight Street, and I find it difficult to get on without it.

God bless you—and—yes—and even—Him.[†3] And Them too, for I never loved any people better. For which reason I am half mournfully, and wholly faithfully

Yours | Always | My Dear Mrs. Colden

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, [15 JULY 1842]

Extract in Putnam to Charles Sumner, 4 Aug 42 (MS Houghton Library, Harvard). Date: 15 July according to Putnam.

Asking Putnam to tell Sumner that he could rely on hearing from him in August;[†4] that they were perfectly happy; that he had not a moment for correspondence; and that Sumner was not to be alarmed at his silence. He had found his children and friends quite well—thank God.[†5]

To FREDERICK MARRYAT, 16 JULY 1842

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth July 1842.

My Dear Marryatt.

Most unquestionably and undoubtedly I expect you at 6 to day—to dinner.[†6] I should have sent you a reminder, but when the Invitation has been given at dinner time,[†7] I have a delicacy in doing so, lest it should seem to intimate a suspicion that the Invited One was drunk!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I think I can give you some Hock today[†8] which will do your Leg good.

To THOMAS BEARD, 19 JULY 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth July 1842

My Dear Beard.

I have been thinking about a breast of Venison next Sunday at half past 5—and about making the Falstaffic F, read, in the evening,[†1] our passage out,[†2] which I have just finished writing—What do you say?

Kate begs her love to your sister Catherine, and desires me to say, that she counts upon seeing her, along with you. Mind you give that Message.

I have, at present, some Port Wine, called "Croft's London Particular".[†3] It is worthy of notice.

The Broadstairs arrangements being now concluded, I beg to give you notice that I have taken last Year's house at Broadstairs,[†4] for the months of August and September. Make your arrangements accordingly; but don't chip such a small piece as a week out of the Baronet. Cut a slice from him.

Always My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To LEIGH HUNT,[†5] 19 JULY 1842

Facsimile D, XII (1916), 41.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth July 1842.

My Dear Hunt.

I don't know your friend—but to the best of my belief he is not a bookseller;[†6] and therefore comes within the pale of human sympathies.

Although you didn't send me the Florentine Legend,[†7] nor the Palfrey,[†8] I have them both; and when that leg of Mutton does come off (Good God, how long it has been unamputated!) you shall write your name in them, for the sake of my Lawful Heir.

Your paper for Mrs. Macrone's book[†9] was sent by me to Mr. Colburn, for the Printer. Mr. Colburn exercised my duties, and accepted and rejected Papers at his most literary will and pleasure. I resisted this monstrous indecency in Mr. Colburn for a whole year; and then wrote him[†1] that as it was a work of charity, and I wanted his money for Mrs. Macrone, I would give him his own way—which, if it were my own case, and I wanted bread, I would never do. I damned his eyes (by implication and construction) at the same time; and declined to hold any further correspondence with him, on any subject.

But if you wish me to apply to him, or any of his Myrmidons, for this particular paper, I will do so. We fell out about a paper of Landor's,[†2] which he said "his literary friend had told him wasnt Protestant" !!!!!!!!!!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To MISS JULIA PARDOE,[†3] 19 JULY 1842

MS Harvard College Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Nineteenth July 1842.

Dear Madam.

I beg to set you right on one point, in reference to the American Robbers, which perhaps you do not quite understand.

The existing law allows them to reprint any English book, without any communication whatever—with the author, or anybody else. My books have all been reprinted on these agreeable terms.—
But sometimes when expectation is awakened there, about a book, before its publication, one firm of Pirates will pay a trifle to procure early proofs of it,[†4] and get so much the start of the rest, as they can obtain by the time necessarily consumed in printing it. Directly it is printed, it is common property; and may be reprinted a thousand times.[†5]

My circular only referred to such bargains as these.

I should add that I have no hope of the States doing Justice in this dishonest respect, and therefore do not expect to overtake these fellows—but we may cry "Stop Thief" nevertheless—especially as they wince and smart under it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Pardoe.

To HORACE SMITH,[†1] 19 JULY 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Nineteenth July 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am happy in the receipt of your kind note; and am very glad that we have become better acquainted through crying Stop Thief, together, in a crowd.

I believe there are hopes of throttling the continental Brigands.[†2] I have no hope, whatever, of stopping American Piracy in this Generation.[†3] But we may just as well serve the next, and assert our wrongs; and I know it galls them, and they wince.[†4]—That should be a comfort to us. It is a very great one to me.

I am very glad to read that passage in your letter, wherein you say that you have nearly run your literary career. For as all rich men complain of being poor, I trust I may discern in this, the promise of a great many more books from your Pen.[†5]

Believe me My Dear Sir
Very faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Horace Smith Esquire.

To CHARLES SWAIN,[†1] 20 JULY 1842*

MS Manchester Public Libraries.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace.
York Gate, Regents Park.
Twentieth July 1842.

My Dear Sir.

Let me thank you with unaffected cordiality, for your beautiful book.[†2] I have read it with great pleasure; and have derived many interesting and instructive thoughts from its teeming pages.[†3]

For this, and for the valuable and welcome terms of your note, I am very much your debtor.

Always believe me | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Swain Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 JULY 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First July 1842.

My Dear Beard.

I have consulted Mr. Groves of Charing Cross.[†4] His suggestive mind gave birth to this remarkable expression—"then why not consider this here breast o' wenson, off—and let me git another prime 'un in good eatin' order for you, for Sunday week? What"—continued Mr. Groves—"is the hodds to a day?"

Mr. Groves slapped a piece of venison[†5] as he spoke, with the palm of his hand; and plainly signified, by his manner no less than by his words, that this was wisdom. What do you say to it?—And what your sister?

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

If I don't swim, this Autumn, may I—but we will not anticipate.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [24] JULY 1842*

MS Messrs Henry Sotheran Ltd. Date: Sunday was 24 July in 1842.

Devonshire Terrace
Sunday Twenty Third July | 1842.

My Dear Mac.

I only heard from Forster yesterday Evening that you were still unwell;[†6] and had (with a tardy but most commendable wisdom) called in Blue Beard.[†1]— Send me word how you are, preparatory to my coming to see you between 2 and 4.

I say Seaside. So will Elliotson if you ask him. Tomorrow week, we shall go down by way of Rochester and Canterbury. That's your road, if you be wise.

We were at the Exhibition yesterday.[†2] Nothing is to be said of the Hamlet, but Wonderful.[†3] You know what I honestly think of your extraordinary powers; and how much in earnest I am when I say that it amazed, even me.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Daniel Maclise Esquire.

To LADY HOLLAND, [?18-25 JULY 1842]

Extract in Charles De F. Burns catalogue, May 1883; MS 1 p. Date: 1842 according to catalogue; since the conjuror was no doubt Döbler—to whom CD wrote on 26 Apr 44 that he had seen him perform "on the last occasion" of his being in London, and Döbler was not in England in 1843—CD was presumably writing on or soon after 18 July 42 (see fn) but before Döbler's final 1842 performance on 25 July.

I had engaged to carry a whole bevy of young people to see the conjuror[†4] tonight.[†5]

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT,[†1] 25 JULY 1842

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth July 1842

My Dear Sir.

I am exceedingly anxious to procure some assistance from the Literary Fund for Mr. W. A. Chatto,[†2] author of the History of Wood Engraving[†3] (published by Charles Knight)—Rambles on the Scottish Border[†4]—the History of Fly-fishing[†5]—and various works of research, and patient investigation. He is reduced by various causes, to a state of the most extreme temporary distress; and is, I earnestly assure you, a most fit and proper subject for immediate relief.

In addition to my personal certificate and assurance that this is the case, he has the strongest recommendation to the Committee from Messrs. Chapman and Hall, booksellers, who are well acquainted with his situation, and have already assisted him themselves.[†6]

Pray, my dear Sir, do all you can in this matter,[†7] and oblige

Yours always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire

I should have addressed the Committee without delay, but having only just now returned home from America, I do not know whether they are sitting or no.

To THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE, 25 JULY 1842

Text from the Morning Chronicle, 25 July 42; signed "B."[†8]

Monday morning, July 25, 1842

Sir,

As the Mines and Collieries Bill[†9] will be committed in the House of Lords to-night; or, in other words, as it will arrive to-night at that stage in which the tender mercies of the Colliery Lords will so distort and maim it, that its relations and friends elsewhere will be sorely puzzled to know it again when it is returned to them, I venture to trouble you with a few remarks upon the subject. From its first public exposition it has had such ready sympathy from you, and has received such able and manly support in your journal,[†1] that I offer no apology for this intrusion on your time and space.

That for very many years these mines and all belonging to them, as they have been out[†2] of sight in the dark earth, have been utterly out of legislative mind; that for so many years all considerations of humanity, policy, social virtue, and common decency, have been left rotting at the pit's mouth, with other disregarded dunghill matter from which lordly colliers could extract no money; that for very many years, a state of things has existed in these places, in the heart and core of a Christian country, which, if it had been discovered by mariners or missionaries in the Sandwich Islands,[†3] would have made the fortune of two quarto volumes, filled the whole bench of bishops with emotion,[†4] and nerved to new and mighty projects the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts,[†1] is well known to every one. That the evidence taken by the commissioners wrought (as well it might) an extraordinary impression on the public mind, from the first moment of its diffusion;[†2] that the bill founded upon it, passed the House of Commons with the hearty consent of all parties, and the ready union of all interests;[†3] that the people of every class, and their representatives of every class, were no sooner made acquainted with the evil, than they hastened to apply the remedy, are recent and notorious facts. It was reserved for the House of Lords alone to discover that this kind of legislation was very bad and odious, and would never do.[†4] Let us see on what grounds.

It is an interference with the rights of labour, because it proposes to banish women from the mines.[†5] It proceeds on insufficient evidence, because the witnesses were not upon oath. The sub-commissioners who examined the witnesses did so improperly. Nobody knows how or why—but somebody says so. To these formidable heads of objection Lord Londonderry[†6] adds (with true Lord Londonderry naïveté) that the prints upon their lordships' table[†7] are excessively disgusting. Wherefore, he argues, (with true Lord Londonderry logic) that the parties who originated them are excessively hypocritical.[†1]

In addition to these grounds of opposition, it was stoutly contended by their collier lordships that there are no grievances, no discomforts, no miseries whatever, in the mines; that all labourers in mines are perpetually singing and dancing, and festively enjoying themselves; in a word, that they lead such rollicking and roystering lives that it is well they work below the surface of the earth, or society would be deafened by their shouts of merriment. This is humorous, but not new. Exactly the same things have been said of slavery, factory-work, Irish destitution, and every other grade of poverty, neglect, oppression, and distress. There is a kind of opposition to truth, which may be called the out-and-out, or whole-hog opposition. It stops at nothing, and recognises no middle course. Show beyond all dispute, and the remotest possibility of doubt, that any class of persons are in especial need of legislative protection and assistance, and opponents of this stamp will instantly arise, and meet you with the assertion, not that that class are moderately well off, or have an average amount of comfort; but that of all earthly ranks and conditions, theirs is the most surpassingly and exquisitely desirable. Now, happiness capers and sings on a slave plantation, making it an Eden of ebony. Now, she dwelleth in a roofless cabin, with potatoes thrice a week, buttermilk o' Sundays, a pig in the parlour, a fever in the dungheap, seven naked children on the damp earth-floor, and a wife newly delivered of an eighth, upon a door, brought from the nearest hut that boasts one—five miles off. Now, she rambles through a refreshing grove of steam engines, at midnight, with a Manchester child, patting him occasionally on the head with a billy-roller.[†2] And now she sits down in the dark, a thousand feet below the level of the sea, passing the livelong day beside a little trapper six years old.[†3] If I were not this great peer, quoth Lord Londonderry, I would be that small trapper. If I were not a lord, doomed unhappily in my high place to preserve a solemn bearing, for the wonder and admiration of mankind, and hold myself aloof from innocent sports, I would be a jolly little trapper. Oh, for the cindery days of trapper infancy! The babes in the wood had a rich and cruel uncle. When were the children in the coals ever murdered for their inheritance? Jolly, jolly trappers![†4]

It is an interference with the rights of labour to exclude women from the mines—women who work by the side of naked men—(daughters often do this beside their own fathers)—and harnessed to carts in a most revolting and disgusting fashion, by iron chains. Is it among the rights of labour to blot out from that sex all form and stamp, and character of womanhood—to predestine their neglected offspring, from the hour of their conception in the womb, to lives of certain sin and suffering, misery and crime—to divest them of all knowledge of home, and all chance of womanly influence in the humble sphere of a poor peasant's hearth—to make them but so many weaker men, saving in respect of their more rapid and irresistible opportunities of being brutalised themselves, and of brutalizing others; and their capacity of breeding for the scaffold and the gaol? When we talk of "rights of labour," do we picture to ourselves a hideous phantom whispering discontent in the depths of pits and mines, sharpening the Chartist's[†1] pike by stealth, and skulking from the farmer's rickyard? Or are we men, possessing the common average of reason bestowed by God upon the descendants of Adam, who well know that what these lords proclaim to be the rights of labour are its wrongs? Who well know that the opposition to this vital clause originates with men who stand, it may be almost said, upon their trial—who in any other tribunal would be heard with caution and distrust; and could not sit upon the jury, far less carry in their pockets friendly verdicts from absent jurymen, by the score! To speak more plainly yet, do we not know, right well, that the real leader of the opposition to this very clause is himself the owner of the worst-conducted mine in that worst district of Scotland; who has at this moment 400 women in his weekly pay and service?[†2] And is there a man alive (out of the House of Lords) who does not read in this phrase "rights of labour," fears of possible claims for higher wages from the men, when the women no longer prostitute all the faculties of their minds and bodies to the degrading work they have pursued too long? Who does not see upon its face distinctly pictured apprehensions of a louder cry for bread? The mining labourers, with no complaint or hope of change, are bound to work, from year to year, and from age to age, their fingers to the bone; to turn their women into men, and children into devils; and do all this to live. These are the "rights of labour" with your collier lords!

The evidence is insufficient, because not taken upon oath. It was well observed in your journal some days since, that this was made no ground of objection to the Poor Law Bill upon its introduction; and that it arises for the first time.[†1] But why this extraordinary distinction between the Poor Law Act, and that for the better regulation of mines and collieries? Simply, because in the one case property sought protection against poverty; and in the other, poverty seeks protection against property. "A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears; see how yon justice rails upon yon simple thief. Hark in thine ear: change places: and handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?"[†2]

Abuse of the sub-commissioners is a very fruitful theme, and it daily grows in favour with these lords. Now, the sub-commissioners were chosen from among barristers, medical gentlemen, and civil engineers.[†3] I have examined the result of their labours, very attentively;[†4] and I honestly believe that a more impartial, able, and carefully-conducted investigation never was pursued. I believe that is the almost universal opinion; and I only concur with every friend of humanity, when I express my gratitude to these gentlemen, for the extraordinary pains they have taken to arrive at the truth; and the luminous manner in which they have stated it. But they by no means please the collier lords. I should be greatly surprised if they did. Barristers are not so liable as other men to be easily imposed on by false statements; surgeons cannot be blinded to the present and probable effects of a pernicious atmosphere, and the work of beasts of burden, on tender years and frames. Civil engineers are well acquainted with the dangers that lurk in ill-conducted pits, where no provision is made for the safety of the labourers. Lord Littleton's[†5] valet, Lord Londonderry's butler, and any steward or overseer of the Duke of Hamilton[†6] would have known better. They would have made an excellent commission. With three such sub-commissioners (one to form a quorum) the collier lords would have got on briskly. Jolly little trappers would have been quoted against us by the dozen, and not a whisper would have been heard about their jolly little affidavits.

It is something so new for a rational being to agree with Lord Londonderry on any subject, that I am happy to be enabled to lay claim to that distinction.

The pictures on the table of the House of Lords are unquestionably disgusting. They exhibit human beings in a condition which it is horrible to contemplate—which is disgraceful to the country, dangerous to the community, repulsive and offensive to all right-thinking persons, in the highest degree. But Lord Londonderry's objection is not to the existence of this deplorable state of society; it is confined to the naughty pictures that set it forth and illustrate it; "Keep it in the mines," says he, "but don't lay it on the table. Preserve it, but don't paint it. I equally protest against legislation and lithograph." In like manner the delicacy of the distillers of Hogarth's time was grievously outraged by the print of "Gin Lane,"[†1] and nearly all the stout landladies[†2] dwelling about Covent-garden voted "The Harlot's Progress"[†3] indecent and immoral.

Without taking up your time by following Lord Londonderry into his acute deduction before mentioned, that because these prints disgust him, therefore the gentlemen with whom they originated are of necessity hypocrites, I would beg, in conclusion, earnestly to impress on your readers that these are the only objections which have been urged against the Mines and Collieries Bill; and that these are the men who will to-night, by motions for delay, and other means, so pare, and cut, and fritter it away, as to reduce it to the very ghost and shadow of its former self, and to a mere absurd nonentity.[†4] Of the few petitions which have been presented against it by these same hands, purporting to come from the labourers in mines, I say nothing,[†5] as it is not very difficult to understand how signatures are procured to them, and as Lord Londonderry himself admitted a few nights ago, in his usually happy manner, on presenting one of these very documents, that the prospect of this relief "had thrown them into a fever."[†6]

In these times, when so wide a gulf has opened between the rich and poor, which, instead of narrowing, as all good men would have it, grows broader daily; it is most important that all ranks and degrees of people should understand whose hands are stretched out to separate these two great divisions of society each of whom, for its strength and happiness, and the future existence of this country, as a great and powerful nation, is dependent on the other. Therefore it is that I implore your readers closely to watch the fate of this measure, which has for its sole object the improvement of the condition and character of one great class of hewers of wood and drawars[†1] of water,[†2] whose lives, at the very best, must be fraught with danger, toil, and hardship; to compare the fate of this bill in the House of Lords, with its reception by the country,[†3] and its progress through the House of Commons, and to bestow their best attention on the debate of this night.

B.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 26 JULY 1842

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1842

My Dear Fred.

It has occurred to me that Mitton (having, I know, some unexamined papers of father's in his desk, and being necessarily absent from business just now) would wish him to know of the Death in his family.[†4] Will you write and tell him?[†5]

Don't forget Mister Groves[†6]—The battledores have arrived. They are brilliant—but the Shuttlecocks are not big enough.

Affy. Always

CD.

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To G. P. R. JAMES,[†7] 26 JULY 1842*

MS Haverford College, Pennsylvania.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am happy to acknowledge the receipt of your letter.[†8]

You are perfectly right, no doubt, in thinking that even in respect of the price of books, the American people would suffer very little (if at all) by being honest. I am well assured that they would have as cheap books as they have now; and would have them much more correctly[†1] and creditably printed.

With regard to the question of a corrupted Text, I fancy there is very little danger of that, in your case, or mine,[†2] or any such instance. I put forth that plea of the Pirates,[†3] rather as a proof of the amazing obtuseness of their moral sense, than as a reason for any serious alarm in the breasts of Writers of Fiction.

I fully agree with you that one can expect but little in this respect from a people who have shewn themselves so shamelessly dishonest in the plain question of repaying or with-holding borrowed money.[†4] But we can at least shew them that we, the robbed, entertain for them, the robbers, a very disdainful and contemptuous disgust. And I rather think that this, in the slow fulness of Time, will move them more, than all the considerations of abstract Justice that will have been spread abroad, between the first hour of the creation, and the last of the Day of Judgment, would be likely to do, if they could be all arrayed together and brought to bear against them.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. P. R. James Esquire.

To CHARLES MACKAY, 26 JULY 1842†

MS Berg Collection. Endorsed, probably by Mackay: "Chas. Dickens | In reference to the proposed establishment of a Literary Club".

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth July 1842.

My Dear Sir.

In the principle of your note, I heartily concur. Of the chances that hang about its successful reduction into practice, I am somewhat doubtful. These experiments have been very often tried; and have, almost as often, failed.[†1]

Nevertheless I shall be exceedingly glad to talk with you upon the subject; and any morning this week that may be convenient to you, I shall be happy to see you. About one o'Clock is usually the best time for such a purpose with me—but chuse your own time, and I will make it mine.

[†a]Don't ask if I am at home, but say, magisterially, to the servant as you give him your card—"Take that to Mr. Dickens, and tell him I am waiting."[†a]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 26 JULY 1842

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Twenty Sixth July 1842.

My Dear Mac

How are you?

Well enough to dine with us (inviolably alone) at 5—before the evening ride?

If so, say Yes.

Dieted at all? If so, say on what.[†2]

Yours
Sutherland.[†3]

To THOMAS MITTON, 26 JULY 1842

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth July 1842.

My Dear Mitton

I am heartily sorry to hear of your poor father's death;[†1] though it is a very great comfort to hear of any death, that it was unaccompanied by Pain. It is a real happiness, too, to know that for many years past, he has lived respectably and happily, which he never could have done but for your arrangements and care.

I should have written to you, directly on the receipt of this sad intelligence; but taking it for granted that you would be out of town, and would have many things to attend to, I deemed it best to wait a little. I did not yield to my first impulse, which was to write and tell you that I should be glad to attend the Funeral, if you desired it, because a moment's reflection assured me that if you had any such wish, you would have summoned me without hesitation.

Remember me with all the kindness possible, to your mother and sister.[†2] And believe me, in this trouble, as in all others, and at all times

Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 26 JULY 1842

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth July 1842.

My Dear Sir.

In thanking you for your last letter, let me thank you also for your last but one,[†3] which reached me shortly before I left England, and which I did religiously intend to answer. The thousand and one preparations for my American journey, alone prevented me from doing so.

I am happy to say that both Mrs. Dickens and I are in the highest health and greatest force—very happy, too, to be at home again, as you may readily suppose.

Before I heard from you, this last time, I had begun to fear that our subject[†4] was too stale.[†1] You see that I was not mistaken in supposing it would create a very strong and very general sensation, on the publication of the evidence.

I have resolved to describe my American journies, in a couple of volumes;[†2] and am consequently, just now, very closely engaged. I fear I shall not have anything for your October No., therefore; but I am really desirous to "come out" in the Edinburgh, and hope to do so, in the number following. I will keep the matter in my thoughts, and consult you, without loss of time, in reference to any subject that may occur to me.[†3]

Mrs. Dickens begs her best regards. And I am always

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier

To LADY HOLLAND, [27] JULY 1842*

MS The Earl of Ilchester. Date: 26 July 42 was Tuesday; doubtless CD was writing on the 27th. This misdating raises the possibility that last six letters, all dated 26 July 42 but without day of the week, were also written on the 27th.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Twenty Sixth July | 1842.

Dear Lady Holland

Pray do not suppose that I have ever forgotten my pledge[†4] to send you the inclosed books.[†1] The truth is that I found my own first copy so blotted and defaced by scoring and underlining, that you would have found it quite a Nuisance. I therefore sent for another; and did not get it until yesterday.

You must not suppose, either, that I have marked in the index to each volume the only pieces I think worth reading. On the contrary I really believe them to be nearly all equally good. I can only say of those I have marked, that they are good things to begin with.[†2]

Always Dear Lady Holland
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland

To THOMAS MITTON, 29 JULY 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth July 1842. | Friday.

My Dear Mitton

I will call on you tonight at 8 OClock, punctually.—I shall be writing all day.[†3]

To DAVID C. COLDEN, 31 JULY 1842

Photograph Dickens House. Address: By The Cunard Steam Packet viâ Liverpool. | David. C. Colden Esquire | 28 Laight Street | Hudson Square | New York | United States.

London 1 Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park. | Thirty First July 1842.

My Dear Friend.

Just to shew that I am a good boy, and not unmindful, being at home, of those to whom I am indebted for so much delight abroad, I write to say—all well—and Mrs. D going to write, next time. We move off to the Seaside tomorrow morning, and I write this in the agonies of packing, with nothing (except the carpet) in its usual place.

You remember our talking about a certain bust—of Maclise[†4]—done by a man in Howland Street,[†5] who forces folks into his sitting chair. It is in the Exhibition this year, and is certainly not a striking success. I don't think I should have recognized it in a room, but I certainly did not in the Academy without referring to the Catalogue; though I was looking hard in its face.—He says he don't exactly know what to do in the matter, and would like to know. It has good points. If I were he, I should give instructions for having it forwarded.

"Nothing is stirring but stagnation."[†1] I thank God that Peel continues hideously unpopular. Our united loves to all at home, beginning with HER.[†2]

Always My Dear friend | Yours with Sincere regard
Bully and Meek.[†3]

To C. C. FELTON, 31 JULY 1842†

MS Berg Collection. Address: [By The][†4] Cunard Packet viâ Liverpool | Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Sunday Thirty First July 1842.

My Dear Felton.

Of all the monstrous and incalculable amount of occupation that ever beset one unfortunate man, mine has been the most stupendous since I came home. The dinners I have had to eat, the places I have had to go to, the letters I have had to answer, the sea of business of business and business of pleasure in which I have been plunged,—not even the genius of an L.L.[†5] or the pen of a Putnam[†6] could describe.

Wherefore I indite a monstrously short, and wildly uninteresting epistle to the American Dando—but perhaps you don't know who Dando was?[†7] He was an oyster eater, my dear Felton. He used to go into oyster shops, without a farthing of money, and stand at the counter, eating Natives, until the man who opened them grew pale, cast down his knife, staggered backward, struck his white forehead with his open hand, and cried "You are Dando! ! !"—He has been known to eat twenty dozen at one sitting; and would have eaten forty, if the truth had not flashed upon the shop-keeper.[†8] For these offences he was constantly committed to the House of Correction. During his last imprisonment, he was taken ill—got worse and worse—and at last began knocking violent double knocks at Death's Door. The Doctor stood beside his bed, with his fingers on his pulse. "He is going"—says the Doctor. "I see it in his eye. There is only one thing that would keep life in him for another hour, and that is—oysters." They were immediately brought. Dando swallowed eight, and feebly took a ninth. He held it in his mouth, and looked round the bed, strangely. "Not a bad one, is it?" says the doctor. The patient shook his head, rubbed his trembling hand upon his stomach, bolted the oyster, and fell back—Dead. They buried him in the Prison Yard, and paved his Grave with oyster shells.

We are all well and hearty, and have already begun to wonder what time next year you and Mrs. Felton[†1] and Doctor Howe, will come across the briny sea together.[†2] Tomorrow we go to the Seaside for two months. I am looking out for news of Longfellow, and shall be delighted when I know that he is on his way to London and this house.[†3]

I am bent upon striking at the Piratical newspapers[†4] with the sharpest edge I can put upon my small axe; and hope in the next session of Parliament to stop their entrance into Canada.[†5] For the first time within the memory of man, the professors of English Literature seem disposed to act together, upon this question.[†6] It is a good thing to aggravate a scoundrel if one can do nothing else— and I think we can make them smart a little in this way. [†a]In a circular letter which I have addressed to every person connected with letters, I have (of course by mistake) given Prescott the credit of the Counter Memorial drawn by Mr. Bowen.[†7] I will take the earliest opportunity of doing Mr. Bowen justice.[†a]

I wish you had been at Greenwich the other day,[†8] where a party of friends gave me a private dinner—public ones, I have refused. George Cruikshank[†9] was perfectly wild at the reunion; and after singing all manner of maniac[†10] songs, wound up the entertainment by coming home (six miles) in a little open phaeton of mine, on his head—to the mingled delight and indignation of the Metropolitan Police. We were very jovial, indeed; and I assure you that I drank your health with fearful vigor and energy.

On board that ship coming home, I established a club, called The United Vagabonds, to the huge amusement of the rest of the passengers. This Holy Brotherhood committed all kinds of absurdities, and dined always, with a variety of solemn forms, at one end of the table, below the mast, away from the rest. The Captain being ill when we were three or four days out, I produced my medicine chest, and recovered him. We had a few more sick men after that; and I went round "the wards" every day, in great state, accompanied by two Vagabonds, habited as Ben Allen and Bob Sawyer, bearing enormous rolls of plaister, and huge pairs of scissors. We were really very merry, all the way— breakfasted in one party at Liverpool—shook hands—and parted most cordially.

[†a]God bless you my dear Felton. Commend me heartily to Mrs. Felton, and to your pretty little daughter, to whom our small fry send all manner of loves. Kate is—it is impossible to say how earnest in her messages. And I am always[†a]

Affectionately | Your faithful friend
[CHARLES DICKENS][†1]

I have looked over my Journal; and have decided to produce my American Trip in two Volumes. I have written about half the first,[†2] since I came home; and hope to be out in October.—This is "exclusive news"—to be communicated to any friends to whom you may like to intrust it,[†3] my dear F.

To THE EARL OF MULGRAVE, 31 JULY 1842*

Extract in unidentified bookseller's catalogue, n.d., Eastgate House, Rochester; dated 31 July 42.

What a villain you must suppose me to be! as to Sir Richard[†4] he has blotted me out of the Calendar of his affections altogether I know.... Good God, what a dream that play[†1] appears; I can hardly believe that Mister Latham[†2] had any material existence; Mr Whats-his-name in the Mackintosh, who puts our wigs on, I look upon as a mere fancy of my own brain.

To W. H. PRESCOTT, 31 JULY 1842*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society. Address: (By The Cunard Steam Packet, vîa Liverpool) | W. H. Prescott Esquire | Boston | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Sunday Thirty First July 1842

My Dear Prescott.

I seize upon a few spare minutes which present themselves before I leave town for the seaside (which I do, tomorrow morning) to acknowledge the receipt of your welcome letter, and to thank you for it, heartily. I was most delighted by its receipt, and read it with an unusual amount of eagerness, I assure you.

I have been stirring up our English Writers, in the matter of the International Copyright; and have other measures brewing. In a circular letter which I addressed to the whole Literature of England (you may perhaps have seen it)[†3] I gave you the credit of drawing up the Counter-Memorial. For although Felton had written me at Niagara a faithful account of Mr. Bowen's[†4] gallantry,[†5] I understood you to say, at Lebanon,[†6] that you were the author of that Document. I see clearly, from your letter[†7] that I was led into this mistake by your having been the first signer.[†1] Whenever you come across Mr. Bowen, pray tell him that I am exceedingly sorry to have made this error, and will do him justice.[†2]

We found our Darlings (thank God) quite well, and most rejoiced to see us. Charley, our eldest, told his mother he was "too glad", and fell, soon afterwards, into very alarming convulsions. We were obliged, besides having our regular apothecary,[†3] to call up Dr. Elliotson in the middle of the night, who said that joy had quite overthrown his system; and that he had never seen such a case before. I am happy to say the disorder took a favorable turn in a few hours, and he very soon recovered. He—that is, Charley—had previously confided to a confidential friend of his (a washerwoman) that he was afraid that when we did come home, he should "shake very much". He is a very queer fellow.[†4]

Everything here is proceeding in the usual track. Peel is desperately unpopular; and the labouring classes are badly off and worse disposed. There is no doubt of this, although their condition is stated in the Newspapers with Newspaper exaggeration.[†5]

I think it better to have the gratification of writing you a stupid letter, rather than none at all. Therefore, my dear Prescott, I hope you will receive this infliction, as having within it, a warm and lively assurance of my sincere regard. Remember me particularly to your father and mother, and all your house—and then to all friends. Mrs. Dickens adds her love. For the love of you, I waive considerations of jealousy, and forward it.

Ever believe me | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Prescott Esquire
P.S. There is a very general interest and curiosity here, to know what you are doing.—I hope you are getting on bravely with your new book.[†1]

To CHARLES SUMNER, 31 JULY 1842

MS Harvard College Library. Address: By The Cunard Steam Packet vîa Liverpool | Charles Sumner Esquire | Boston | Massachusetts | United States.

London 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Sunday Thirty First July 1842.

My Dear Sumner.

Here I am—at home again. Here I am in my own old room, with my books, and pen and ink and paper,—battledores and shuttlecocks—bats and balls— dumbbells—dog—and Raven. The Raven, I am sorry to say, has become a Maniac. He falls into fits periodically; throws himself wildly on his back; and plucks his own feathers up, by the roots. Nothing can be more unravenlike than that. To hurt anybody else would have been quite in character, but to hurt himself—Insanity in its most hopeless aspect.

I have had a medical gentleman who looks after the queen's birds,[†2] to see him. He says if it an't the weather, he don't know what it is. My man says its "aggerawation". The medical gentleman retorts that there is no such disorder in the books. I suspect poison.[†3] A malicious butcher was heard to threaten, some months since. He said that "he worn't a goin to have pieces took out of his leg ev'ry time he come down them Mews, at no price. And that if the wery dove as come out o' the Hark interfered vith him, he wished he might be busted, if he wouldn't scrag him."—which looks alarming, I think?

Lady Holland has fitted up some of the lower rooms at Holland House, and there are dinners there, as of yore. But the old rooms she has never entered.[†4] I dined there, a week ago,[†1] and had a strange sense of their being dark and vacant, overhead.[†2] Sydney Smith is in greater force than ever, though waxing gouty. Talfourd has just now printed privately, and circulated among his friends, a little book (in prose) called "Recollections of a Visit to the Alps in 1841".[†3] Here is the Dedication—Some folks think it uxorious.

To

H E R [†4]

Whose Image Endears The Recollections

Of a Delightful Tour,

As it cheers and graces

The journey of life,

These "trivial, fond records"

Printed only for partial eyes,

Are Inscribed

By

A grateful and admiring husband

Well, after writing it out, I do think it is rather Adam-and-Evey.[†5]

Brougham is in good health and spirits. Lyndhurst[†6] has been ill, but is recovering. Jeffrey is much better, and sits in his Court again.[†7] Rogers[†8] is a thought more deaf than he was eight months ago. Tom Moore ages. Mrs. Norton[†9] and Lady Seymour[†10] are both sights for the Gods, as they always have been. Poor Southey's case is quite hopeless.[†1] Landor is like forty lions concentrated into one Poet. D'Orsay is confined at home by bailiffs,[†2] but is not an atom the worse in temper, health, looks, or spirits. Lady Blessington[†3] wears brilliantly, and has the gloss upon her, yet. Bulwer is out of town, and I have not yet seen him. Edwin Landseer has thoroughly recovered.[†4] Macready is making great preparations for his next season at Drury Lane.[†1] Ditto the Kembles for theirs at Covent Garden.[†2] Forster is still uproarious with the joy of our return. Everybody else the same as usual.[†3]

Maclise's picture from Hamlet[†4] is a tremendous production. There are things in it, which in their powerful thought, exceed anything I have ever beheld in painting. You know the subject?—The play scene in Hamlet. The murderer is just pouring the poison into the ear of the mimic King. But what a notion is that, which hoods this murderer's head, as who should say to the real King— "You[†5] know what face is under that!" What an extraordinary fellow he must be, who so manages the lights in this picture, that on the scene behind, is an enormous shadow of this groupe—as if the real murder were being done again by phantoms! And what a carrying-out of the prevailing idea, it is, to paint the very proscenium of the little stage with stories of Sin and Blood—the first temptation—Cain and Abel—and such like subjects—crying Murder! from the very walls.[†6]

He is a great fellow, and I wish you knew him. I meant to write a long letter, and I wish you knew that, but you never will, for I am called away by invaders, and must finish this before I go, or lose the steamer. Remember me to all friends, beginning with Mr. and Mrs. Hillard.[†1] Accept all imaginable regards from Kate,—and always believe me

My Dear Sumner | Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Morpeth has written home, strong praise of Prescott. But not more than he deserves.

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, [?JULY 1842]

Mention in To Putnam, 18 Oct 42. Date: while "the large Packing Case" sent by Putnam from New York in June was still in the English Customs.

Asking Putnam to send him the books collected on his visit to America. [†2]

August

To JOHN MURRAY, 2 AUGUST 1842*

MS Sir John Murray.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Evening | August The Second 1842

My Dear Sir

On coming here an hour ago[†3] (it is just now, post time) I found your note. If any conveyance but tonight's Mail could have brought me to town in sufficient time to join the Deputation who wait on Mr. Gladstone,[†4] I should unquestionably have been a member of it.[†5]

But as it would have been necessary for me,—even to get a place in this Mail,—to have started off to Ramsgate immediately on my arrival, in a most dilapidated and dusty condition, I have no alternative but to write to you,—assuring you that if I had been fortunate enough to have seen you on Sunday, or to have received your note two hours earlier, I would have sacrificed any consideration of convenience or personal comfort, for the lightest feather of a cause in which I have taken, and shall ever take, such an earnest interest.

I send you a letter, just received, and a newspaper.[†6] They shew what the scoundrels are doing; and point out a new feature in their frauds which I think is most important[†1] Mr. Gladstone should understand.

If, at your convenience, you will write me a very brief account of what passed between the Deputation and Mr. Gladstone,[†2] I shall be truly obliged to you. And if any other deputation, or any other meeting or discussion of any kind should ensue, pray give me such notice as will enable me to be present.

In great haste to save the post,

Always Believe Me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire

To JONATHAN CHAPMAN, 3 AUGUST 1842

Text from Massachusetts Historical Society Proceedings, Boston, 1922, LIV, 153.[†3]

Broadstairs, Kent | Wednesday, August the Third, 1842.

My dear Friend,

I date this letter from a little fishing town on the sea coast, whither we have retired (according to our annual custom) for a couple of months. It is a very delicious place; and I wish I could meet you on the beach in one of my long walks hereabouts.

The receipt of your letter gave me inexpressible pleasure. I have read the lines in which you recall our parting—many times[†4]—always with new interest, and a still more eager looking forward to that bright day when we shall meet again on this side of the ocean. For I make a point of taking it for granted that that day is to come, and is to come moderately soon. There is nothing like assuming a fact stoutly in such a case as this. The comfort is unspeakable.

When we sat down in our own dear old home again, we did just as you have[†5] imagined. I never in my life felt so keenly as on the night of our reaching it. When we had expended ourselves upon the children, I hurried away to see

Macready who had had charge of them in our absence.[†1] He was sitting in a dark room by an open window, and had no idea who it was, until I laid my hand upon his sleeve and spoke. Such a scene as we had then![†2] I hustled[†3] off to see another most intimate friend. He was dining out. Thereupon I drove to the place where he was dining; and admonishing the servant not to say who it was, told him to carry in the message that a gentleman wanted to speak to him. Guessing directly what it was, he came flying out of the house, got into the carriage, pulled up the window and began to cry. We had gone a couple of miles before he remembered he had left his hat behind him![†4]

It would have been worth going anywhere—far less going where I have gained such friends as you—to feel the affection and attachment I have been made sensible of in ten thousand quiet ways, since I came home. As to the pleasures of home itself; they are unspeakable.

We found our darlings heartily well; and delighted beyond all telling to see us. They were in bed, but we very quickly had them up, you may believe. Charley (our eldest boy) told his mother that he was "too glad," as indeed he was, for he soon afterwards fell into violent convulsions. Dr. Elliotson told us afterwards that the sudden joy had perfectly turned his brain and overthrown his system, and that he had never seen the like in a child. Thank God he soon got well again. I can see him now, from the window at which I am writing, digging up the sand on the shore with a very small spade, and compressing it into a perfectly impossible wheelbarrow. The cliffs being high and the sea pretty cold, he looks a mere dot in creation. It is extraordinary how many hopes and affections we may pile up on such a speck; small as it is.

I have decided on writing an account of my journeyings in America[†5] and am at this moment busily engaged upon the book. It will be published in a couple of volumes, either in October (I hope) or November next.

I shall be very curious and eager to get your first letter after reading it.[†1] As I fear I may miss the next packet even at the best, I must make this a very short epistle. But as I never should feel, though I made it a mile long, that I had said anything I want to say, I have the less scruple in closing it. Mrs. Dickens desires her best regards to yourself and Mrs. Chapman. The children, hearing us speak of you look very hard at this sheet of paper, and repeat the message. So I will add Mary's love and Katey's and Walter's, and take upon myself the responsibility of sending Charley's also.

God bless you, ever believe me, affectionately your friend,

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY AUGUST 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 279. Date: one of CD's "first announcements" from Broadstairs according to Forster, who dates it 18 July—mistakenly (the Broadstairs visit began 1 Aug).[†2] CD was clearly replying to a letter from Forster presumably written shortly after the departure for Broadstairs, since proofs of the Boston chapter (finished before 29 July: see To Mitton, 29 July, fn) could soon be expected.

The subjects at the beginning of the book are of that kind that I can't dash at them, and now and then they fret me in consequence.[†3] When I come to Washington, I am all right. The solitary prison at Philadelphia is a good subject, though; I forgot that for the moment. Have you seen the Boston chapter yet? ... I have never been in Cornwall either.[†4] A mine certainly; and a letter for that purpose shall be got from Southwood Smith.[†5] I have some notion of opening the new book in the lantern of a lighthouse![†6]

To THOMAS BEARD, 4 AUGUST 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Broadstairs | Thursday Fourth August 1842.

My Dear Beard.

Thank you heartily for your thoughtfulness and consideration in the matter of Alfred.[†1] I have sent your note to him, by this Post.

I am looking out anxiously for your definite notice about that Month's holiday—for I say a Month, and down with the Baronet. This place is most beautiful just now: the weather being past all descriptive powers. Heavens, how crisp the water is—I bathed yesterday.

Ballard[†2] too has got me some Port Wine which is quite remarkable—for a place like this, really astonishing.

Regards from all | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 5 AUGUST 1842*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fifth August 1842.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

That fatal direction over your name—or I should rather say that fatal address[†3]—includes my answer to your kind and welcome note. A Tiger with such a name as Dwarkanaught Tagore,[†4] is not an everyday animal. Can a pinch of salt be dropped upon his tail?

I seem to think that I have seen puppet-shows in the Streets, placarding the Drama of Dwarkanaught Tagore—I half remember having seen him at Astleys, clad in a Leopard Skin with Salmon-colored arms and legs, throwing summersets in the Ring, and performing such feats of strength as amazed everybody but that misbelieving clown. I in part believe that I have seen him made up in a very small parcel with his heels very close together, and his card on his breast, at the Egyptian Room in the British Museum. And again my treacherous memory conjures up his portrait in colours, cut from a sheet of Theatrical Characters, and pasted on the lamp of a baked potatoe[†5] stand, in the public street at night.

Dwarkanaught Tagore! What does the postman think of him—what does a long-stage coachman say, when he has him on the Waybill—what does his washerwoman call him, when she mentions him to her friends—who gave him that name[†1]—had he godfathers and godmothers—or did some old Maniac of a Brahmin, drunk with the spirit of Rice, invent it?

Sometimes I think he is that grizzly Bear you spoke of—but then I remember that he came from America— not India. I have spelt it backwards, but it makes no less tremendous nonsense that way. He is a live hieroglyphic. I give him up.

I have hardly strength, after the exhaustion of this man, to beg my regards to Lady Blessington, and to Miss Power—and to say how very sorry I am— and how busy I am—for I have got into the very heart of my American Book, and night and day wish myself well through it.

Always Believe Me | Dear Count D'Orsay | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [HENRY] HALLAM,[†2] [?7 AUGUST 1842]

Mention in next.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 7 AUGUST 1842*

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor.

Broadstairs | Sunday Seventh August 1842.

My Dear Fred.

We shall find somebody or other, soon, to bring down the Accordion,[†3] I dare say.—By the bye, if you should see or hear from Fletcher, tell him I shall be very glad to see him in these Latitudes.[†4]

Let me have any Income Tax notices that may be left,[†5]—with all convenient speed.

Tell Topping that Mr. Handisyde[†6] has instructions to go into the dining room whenever he pleases. And in case Hewett should call, and leave his card, I know I may rely on your going to see him forthwith, and directly writing to me. I would come to town immediately, for the pleasure of meeting him.[†1]

I inclose a note for Mr. Hallam, to whom one of those pamphlets[†2] I spoke to you about sending, was addressed. Let Topping take it.

And at your leisure will you call at that big floorcloth place in the Strand (near St. Clements)[†3] and make an appointment with somebody to meet you in Devonshire Terrace. I want to know whether the floorcloth in the Hall, be worth new-painting. If so, they may take it up and do it. If not, let them state the cost of a new one of the same Pattern.

Has Maclise's framer[†4] sent for the picture and prints in the little room? If not, let Topping take them. Maclise will give you the address.

One more commission—Will you tell Chapman and Hall (at any time that may suit you) that I want to know what it would cost to have gas carried into the Hall, and to have the Hall Lamp altered, for burning it.[†5] Their gas-fitter wod. perhaps be the best workman to survey the job, and tell me.

All well,—with loves | Affy. always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 AUGUST 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 280. Date: 7 Aug according to Forster.

I have been reading Tennyson[†6] all this morning on the seashore. Among other trifling effects, the waters have dried up as they did of old, and shown me all the mermen and mermaids, at the bottom of the ocean;[†1] together with millions of queer creatures, half-fish and half-fungus, looking down into all manner of coral caves and seaweed conservatories; and staring in with their great dull eyes at every open nook and loophole.[†2] Who else, too, could conjure up such a close to the extraordinary and as Landor would say "most woonderful" series of pictures in the "dream of fair women," as—

> Squadrons and squares of men in brazen > plates,
> Scaffolds, still sheets of water,
> divers woes,
> Ranges of glimmering vaults with iron grates,
> And hushed seraglios![†3]

I am getting on pretty well, but it was so glittering and sunshiny yesterday that I was forced to make holiday.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 10 AUGUST 1842

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs. | Wednesday Tenth August 1842.

My Dear Fred.

In consequence of a letter I have had from Alfred, I expect him down here by Monday's boat. I wish you would write to him by Thursday's post (the day you receive this) at Birmingham, and tell him that Topping will bring Georgina's[†4] parcel to him, on board the 9 o'Clock Ramsgate Boat. And I wish Topping would take "Belle"[†5] down too. I should like to have her here.

The accordion, and Kate's parcel, both arrived safely.

Love from all.

Have you got your leave yet?

Affecy. Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 AUGUST 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 280. Date: four days later than letter of 7 Aug according to Forster.

I have not written a word this blessed day. I got to New York yesterday,[†6] and think it goes as it should .... Little doggy[†1] improves rapidly, and now jumps over my stick at the word of command. I have changed his name to Snittle Timbery, as more sonorous and expressive. He unites with the rest of the family in cordial regards and loves. Nota Bene. The Margate theatre is open every evening,[†2] and the Four Patagonians[†3] (see Goldsmith's Essays)[†4] are performing thrice a week at Ranelagh.[†5]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 14 AUGUST 1842*

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954; fragments (aa, bb) MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Broadstairs | Sunday Fourteenth August 42.

My Dear Mac

At the risk of awakening that suspicious resentment which always appears to fire your bosom when I give you an Invitation, I ask, I implore, I recommend[†6] you to come [a]down here. The beauty of the weather, the delicacy of the bathing, the crispness of the sea, and the charms of the Screamer,[†7] all cry "Come!"[a] Her swelling bosom and swelling other B invite you. Come! come! come! Had I three mouths I'd ask you.[†8]

[b]I want to know (with a view to the accuracy of a passage in[b] the Book I am writing) what an old Irishwoman would call a Burying Ground at home. Would she call that place in which the bones of her kindred lie—a Burying Ground— a Chapel Yard—or what. Mrs. Hall[†9] would call it a Cushla Ma Cree or a Ma Vourneen or an Obedadsir[†10]—but that's not what I mean, at all.[†11]

Tell me—and come.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN BLACK,[†1] 15 AUGUST 1842

Extract in John Heise catalogue No. 744 (1927); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, Monday Fifteenth August 1842.

I see that Lord Londonderry advertizes a letter to Lord Ashley on the subject of mines and collieries.[†2] If you would like to have it noticed, and will send it to me, HERE, when it comes out, I shall be happy to review it.[†3] Faithfully yours always, My dear Sir

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. MAXWELL,[†4] 15 AUGUST [1842]*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter. Date: 15 Aug was Monday in 1842.

Broadstairs | Monday Fifteenth August

My Dear Sir,

I was engaged to go to Minster[†5] early this morning[†6]—and I regret to say that in the hurry of getting away, I forgot to write to you. Pray excuse me.

I shall be at home to-morrow at half past one. If I should not see you then, I will do myself the pleasure of calling on you.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 20 AUGUST 1842

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Broadstairs, Twentieth August 1842.

My Dear George

Don't be much after 10 O'Clock. I'll tell you why.—We will dine late, and make a Morning at Minster, where there is a good old Church.[†7] We will send the Ladies there in a Fly—leaving them to start at a quarter before 12—and you, Maclise, Forster,[†1] and I, will start forthwith, to walk.

Always Faithfully Yours
BOZ

All manner of loves to Mrs. C—including mine.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 AUGUST 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 283; wrongly given as part of letter of 25 Sep. Date: American Notes was first advertised on Tues 30 Aug as to be published "in October next, in 2 vols"

(Morning Chronicle); CD presumably suggested the title to Forster a few days before (see fn).

What do you think of this for my title—American Notes for General Circulation; and of this motto?

"In reply to a question from the Bench, the Solicitor for the Bank observed, that this kind of notes circulated the most extensively, in those parts of the world where they were stolen and forged.[†2] Old Bailey Report."[†3]

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 26 AUGUST 1842

Summary in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Jan 1941; MS I p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, 26 Aug 42. Address (envelope, MS Sotheby's, June 1962): Albany Fonblanque Esquire | 48 Connaught Square | Edgeware Road | London; PM 27 Aug 42 (clearly day of receipt).

Asking if he might borrow the letter he had written Fonblanque from Washington [†4] to save himself the trouble of describing the scenes again. [†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 or 31 AUGUST 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 281. Date: "the opening of September" according to Forster; but news of the forged letter must have been sent to Forster before CD wrote about it to Felton and others on 1 Sep—on which day, moreover, he was in London, seeing Forster (To Felton, 1 Sep), and had no need to write. The Emerald from New York and Columbia from Boston both arrived at Liverpool 29 Aug, and mail should have reached Broadstairs on the 30th or 31st. Proofs of American Notes, Ch. 7, would almost certainly have arrived by 30 Aug (see fn).

The Philadelphia chapter I think very good,[†1] but I am sorry to say it has not made as much in print as I hoped.[†2] ... In America they have forged a letter with my signature, which they coolly declare appeared in the Chronicle with the copyright circular;[†3] and in which I express myself in such terms as you may imagine, in reference to the dinners and so forth. It has been widely distributed all over the States;[†4] and the felon who invented it is a "smart man" of course. You are to understand that it is not done as a joke, and is scurrilously reviewed.[†1] Mr. Park Benjamin[†2] begins a lucubration upon it with these capitals, DICKENS IS A FOOL, AND A LIAR....[†3] I have a new protégé, in the person of a wretched deaf and dumb boy whom I found upon the sands the other day, half dead, and have got (for the present) into the union infirmary at Minster. A most deplorable case.

September

To MESSRS THOMAS BARGE JUNR & BROS,[†1] 1 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS Dr Gordon N. Ray.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London.
First September 1842.

Gentlemen.

I am much indebted to you for your obliging letter (which I should have acknowledged sooner, but that I have been absent from town)—and for its most ingenious inclosure.

I assure you that I shall be proud and happy to accept your proposed present. And that I am always
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Thomas Barge Junr. and Brothers.

To JOHN JAY,[†1] 1 SEPTEMBER 1842

Text from the New York Independent, 25 Dec 1879.

[Private]

Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, | Regent's Park, London,
First Sept., 1842

My Dear Sir,

I am greatly obliged to you for your letter and for the newspapers which accompanied it.[†2]

You know what the American press is. I need scarcely add that these passages purporting to have been written by me, to which you call my attention, are forgeries as false as our felons swing for. I have not contradicted them publicly, nor shall I do so. I had not been many weeks in America (no stranger can be) before I was amazed and repelled beyond expression by these instruments of public degradation. No deed of their doing would surprise me and no falsehood of their telling would move me into communication with them for an instant.

I am, my dear sir, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK, [? 1 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract quoted in Clark to Robert Balmanno, [Oct 42], Letters of Willis Gaylord Clark and Lewis Gaylord Clark, ed. L. W. Dunlap, New York, 1940, p. 137 (aa); and extract in Knickerbocker Magazine, Oct 42, XX, 395 (bb). Date: Subject and wording point to same day as last.

[a]You know what the American papers are. Is it necessary for me to say that the passages which have been published in my name are lies and forgeries? I have not contradicted them publicly, nor do I mean to do so. When I enter the lists of literature with such adversaries, I shall have left my self-respect without the Barrier.[a] †3

[b]I have not forgotten my promise†1 nor your patience. I will not forget either.[b]

To C. C. FELTON, 1 SEPTEMBER 1842†

MS (incomplete) Yale University Library; missing passage (aa) from typescript Harvard College Library. Address: By The Great Wester[n Steamer via Bristol] | Professor Fel[ton] | Ca[mbridge | Massachusetts | United States.]

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London
First September 1842

My Dear Felton

Of course†2 that letter in the Papers was as foul a forgery as ever felon swung for. †b[You know what the American Press is, and are as little surprised as I am.†b

I have not contradicted it publicly, nor shall I.†3 When I tilt at such wringings-out of the dirtiest mortality, I shall be another man indeed—almost the creature they would make me.

I gave your message to Forster, who sends a despatch-box full of kind remembrances in return. He is in a great state of delight with the first Volume of my American Book (which I have just finished)†4—and swears loudly by it. It is True, and Honorable, †b[but they will like it the less for having those two obnoxious properties,†b I know. I shall hope to send it you, complete, by the First Steamer in November.

Your description of the Porter and the carpet bags,†5 prepares me for a first-rate facetious Novel, brim full of the richest humour, on which I have no doubt you are engaged. What is it called?—Sometimes I imagine the title-page thus:

OYSTERS
IN EVERY STYLE OR OPENINGS
OF LIFE.
BY YOUNG DANDO†6

As to the man putting the luggage on his head, as a sort of sign—I adopt it from this hour.

I date this from London, where I have come, as a good profligate, graceless bachelor, for a day or two—leaving my wife and babbies at the Seaside, [†b]just as you leave Mrs. Felton and that pretty little daughter in the academic Groves of Cambridge, while you gallivant about New York.[†b] Heavens! If you were but here, at this minute! A piece of Salmon and a Steak are cooking in the kitchen—it's a very wet day, and I have had a fire lighted—the Wine sparkles on a side table—the room looks the more snug from being the only *un*dismantled one in the house[†1]—plates are warming for Forster and Maclise whose knock I am momentarily expecting—that groom I told you of,[†2] who never comes into the house, except when we are all out of town—is walking about, in his shirt sleeves, without the smallest consciousness of impropriety[†3]—and a great mound of proofs are waiting to be read aloud,[†4] after dinner. With what a shout I would clap you down into the easiest chair, my genial Felton, if you could but appear—and order you a pair of slippers instantly!—

Since I have written this, the aforesaid groom—a very small man (as the fashion is) with fiery red hair (as the fashion is not) has looked very hard at me, and fluttered about me at the same time, like a giant butterfly. After a pause, he says, in a Sam-Wellerish kind of way—"I vent to the Club this mornin' Sir. There vorn't no letters Sir"—"Very good, Topping"—"How's Missis Sir?"—"Pretty well, Topping"—"Glad to hear it Sir. My Missis an't wery vell Sir"—"No!"—"No Sir—She's a goin', Sir, to have a hin-crease[†5] wery soon, and it makes her rather nervous Sir; and ven a young 'ooman gets at all down upon her luck at sich a time Sir, she goes down wery deep Sir"—To this sentiment, I reply affirmatively. And then he adds, as he stirs the fire (as if he were thinking out loud) "Wot a mystery it is! Wot a go is Natur!"—with which scrap of philosophy, he gradually gets nearer to the door, and so fades out of the room.

This same man asked me one day, soon after I came home, [wh]at[†6] Sir John Wilson was. This is a friend of mine, who took our house [a]and servants, and everything as it stood, during our absence in America. I told him, an officer—"A wot Sir?"—"an officer"—and then, for fear he should think I meant a Police officer, I added—"an officer in the army". "I beg your pardon Sir", he said touching his hat, "but the club as I always drove him to, wos the United Servants".

The real name of this club is the United Service, but I have no doubt he thought it was a High Life Below Stairs[†1] kind of resort, and that this gentleman was a retired Butler, or superannuated Footman.[a]

[†c]There's the knock—and the Great Western sails—or steams rather—tomorrow. Write soon again dear Felton, and ever believe me, [†b]with best regards from Kate to yourself and Mrs. Felton, in which I heartily join[†b]

Your Affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†c]

All good Angels prosper Dr. Howe's Courtship![†2] He, at least, will not like me the less, I hope, for what I shall say of Laura.[†3]

To T. C. GRATTAN, 1 SEPTEMBER 1842

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue No. 1583; MS 1 p.; dated London, 1 Sep 42.

Everybody is cursing the Income Tax,[†4] except the men to whom it gives places ... You will have seen that I have followed up the International Copyright question, and that they have forged a letter under my hand in the American papers—which does not startle me in the least. Nothing but Honesty or common sense would startle me, from such a quarter.

To JACOB HARVEY,[†1] 1 SEPTEMBER 1842

Text from Harry B. Smith, A Sentimental Library, privately printed, [New York], 1914, p. 88.

Says that he received Harvey's letter just before he embarked for England.

I always seek, in drawing characters, for a mixture of Good and Evil, as the Almighty has created human character after that fashion. It is commonly one of the weaknesses of my characters that they drink spirituous liquors—just because that is one of the weaknesses of real men. They do not prosper in their fortunes because of this taste (far from it), but in spite of it, through their better natures. I certainly do not advocate Temperance Doctrines, and on this plain ground: my reason and sense of justice are not at all convinced that men who can drink without abuse and excess should be deprived of the enjoyment of drinking in moderation because there are a vast number of men in the world who do not know what moderation is. A great many good qualities and a great many genial feelings are brought out in good men by a cheerful glass. I think Temperance may be as immoderate and irrational in its way as abuse is in its way; and what is called Total Abstinence is, in my opinion, a good thing ridden to death—just as Drunkenness is.... I learn that the New York newspapers have been forging some passages under my hand. Nothing that American newspapers can do (unless they should chance on something honest or becoming a decent state of society) would surprise me in the least.

To R. SHELTON MACKENZIE,[†2] 1 SEPTEMBER 1842

Extract in R. S. Mackenzie, Life of CD, Philadelphia, [1870], p. 219; dated "First September, 1842".

I am greatly obliged to you for your note and its accompanying Paper,[†3] which is indeed a phenomenon. The announcement[†4] you allude to had attracted my attention. We shall see a hundred others of the same family, and we shall continue to see them until we die.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 1 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday First September 1842.

My Dear Mac

Come here at a quarter before 3 tomorrow, to meet John Forster and

Yours ever faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS MITTON, 4 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Fourth September 1842 | Sunday.

My Dear Mitton

I quite forgot yesterday, to bring down some money with me. Will you get a bank-note for the inclosed,[†1] and send it me by Post?

I am happy to say that Chapman and Hall, and Bradbury and Evans opine that I was doing too much for the money—so that the first Volume will end with Washington, and the second begin with the black driver[†2]—which is a great help.

Faithfully Always
CD.

I am very unwell with a disordered stomach and a Beastly sickness.

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 5 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS University of Iowa Libraries. Address: Albany Fonblanque Esquire | 48 Connaught Square, Edgeware Road, London.

Broadstairs | Fifth September 1842.

My Dear Fonblanque

Many thanks for the inclosed.[†1] I shall hope to send you my book, pretty early in October.

Always Faithfully Yours | My Dear Fonblanque

CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Sixth September | 1842.

My Dear Henry.

Do you happen to have by you, in a semi-tindery state, the letter I wrote you from Niagara?[†2] I know it is not at all likely that you have, but if[†3] you have, will you lend it me? I should like to refer to it, when I come to that part of my "Voyages and Travels".[†4]

With love to Letitia, in which Kate and all the babbies join,

Believe me always | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To JOHN S. BARTLETT, 6 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS Doheny Memorial Library, California. Address: By the British Queen Steam Packet. | Doctor Bartlett | Office of | The Albion Newspaper | New York | United States | Private.

Private. [†5]

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park London.[†6]

Sixth September 1842.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly indebted to you for your letter,[†7] which does honor to yourself and to the Proprietors of the Journal over which you preside. I beg you to thank them in my name, and to assure them of my respect and obligation.

I cannot, however, enter into any such arrangement as that which you propose; nor can I submit it to other English Authors.

I decline to do so, simply because so long as the Law remains in its present state (and it will outlast our time) I shall rigidly abide by the determination I have publicly expressed,[†1] never to enter into any negociation for the transmission across the Atlantic, of early Proofs of anything I may write—because I object to addressing any book of mine to the American people, or recognizing them as Patrons of Literature, while they cling to the present system—and because I will not make an appeal to them, which I believe, with a penny's-weight in the other scale, they would certainly reject.

I am not the less obliged to you for this honorable and worthy carrying-out of the spirit you manifested in our first communication. And I am

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Bartlett.

To THOMAS BEARD, 8 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Broadstairs | Thursday Eighth September 1842

My Dear Beard

When is that jolly old Baronet (may Jackasses sit upon his Grandfather's grave!)[†2] coming home? Here is the bathing, in a most unprecedented state— the Punch, toothsome beyond description—the Ranelagh Gardens[†3] exulting in the Proprietorship of a family of Tumblers, called "The Five Patagonians"— the Theatre open at Margate—all manner of breeziness, freshness, and waviness going on—and no Beard! Again I ask, when does Fir Grove[†4] come on to Dunsinane?—and pause for a reply.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To G. L. CHESTERTON, 11 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Private |—Chesterton Esquire | Middlesex House of Correction | Coldbath Fields | London.

Private.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Eleventh September | 1842.

My Dear Sir

In my Book on America, I purpose introducing this note.[†1] Please to tell me in one line (directed here, where I am enjoying myself quietly, until the end of the Month) whether there is anything in it, you would desire to be altered or omitted.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Chesterton Esquire

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 11 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS University of Texas.

Private.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Eleventh September | 1842.

My Dear Sir.

In my book on America, I purpose introducing this note.[†2] Please to inform me, in one line (directed here, where I am staying quietly, until the end of the Month) whether there is anything in it, you would wish altered or omitted.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Tracey Esquire

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 12 SEPTEMBER 1842

Mention in American Art Association catalogue No. 3891; dated Broadstairs, 12 Sep 42; signed initials.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 14 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourteenth September 1842.

My Dear Ainsworth.

The inclosed has been sent to me by a young gentleman in Devonshire[†1] (of whom I know no more than that I have occasionally, at his request, read, and suggested amendments in, some of his writings) with a special petition that I would recommend it to you for insertion in your Magazine.

I think it very pretty, and I have no doubt you will also. But it is Poetry, and may be too long.

He is a very modest young fellow, and has decided ability.

I hope when I come home at the end of the Month, we shall foregather more frequently. Of course you are working, tooth and nail;[†2] and of course I am.

Kate joins me in best regards to yourself, and all your house (not forgetting, but especially remembering my old friend Mrs. Touchett).[†3] And I am always

My Dear Ainsworth
Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 281. Date: 14 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I have pleased myself very much to-day in the matter of Niagara.[†4] I have made the description very brief (as it should be), but I fancy it is good.[†5] I am beginning to think over the introductory chapter,[†6] and it has meanwhile occurred to me that I should like, at the beginning of the volumes, to put what follows on a blank page. I dedicate this Book to those friends of mine in America, who, loving their country, can bear the truth, when it is written good humouredly and in a kind spirit. What do you think? Do you see any objection?[†7]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 16 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Broadstairs | Sixteenth September 1842.

My Dear Sir

All right. That is the kind of extract I want.[†1] Mr. Forster seems to have got it into his head (and the quantity of hair he wears, probably prevents its coming out again) that I mean to use them for a separate chapter, and that they are not strong enough for such a purpose. Whereas I want them for the chapter on Slavery, as an Illustration of the State of Society in the Slave Districts.[†2]

Read the inclosed Letter from Mr. Prescott.[†3] I think it probable that a book of which he speaks so highly, is likely to be a creditable work. What do you say to it?[†4]

Summer is come again. Such a day as it is is here, this blessed sixteenth of September!

I suppose the Co. are tremendously busy, furnishing that house.[†5] Let them be careful, for we will be down upon them in the way of criticism (you and I, I mean) when the Warming comes off.

How is Mrs. Chapman? Tell her with my love, that I have ordered a Mug, and should be glad to know whether it is to be engraved for a Boy or a Girl.[†1] I say, a boy. Sometimes I think of twins, in which case there must be two mugs.

At the end of the month we had better advertize, I suppose, for the 20th. of October.[†2] There is no doubt, please God, of our being punctual to that day, easily.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 281 (aa), written "before the end of the month",[†3] and extract in F, III, viii, 279 (bb), dated 16 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

[a] For the last two or three days I have been rather slack in point of work; not being in the vein.[†4] To-day I had not written twenty lines before I rushed out (the weather being gorgeous) to bathe. And when I have done that, it is all up with me in the way of authorship until to-morrow. The little dog is in the highest spirits; and jumps, as Mr. Kenwigs would say, perpetually.[†5] I have had letters by the Britannia from Felton, Prescott, Mr. Q., and others, all very earnest and kind. I think you will like what I have written on the poor emigrants and their ways as I literally and truly saw them on the boat from Quebec to Montreal.[a †6]

[b] At the Isle of Thanet races yesterday I saw—oh! who shall say what an immense amount of character in the way of inconceivable villainy and black-guardism! I even got some new wrinkles in the way of showmen, conjurors, pea-and-thimblers,[†7] and trampers generally. I think of opening my new book on the coast of Cornwall, in some terribly dreary iron-bound spot.[†1] I hope to have finished the American book before the end of next month;[†2] and we will then together fly down into that desolate region.[b]

To PHILIP HONE,[†3] 16 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: By Steam Packet. | Philip Hone Esquire | New York | United States.

Broadstairs, Kent. England. | Sixteenth September 1842.

My Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your friendly letter, which I have received with real pleasure.[†4] It reached me last night, being forwarded from London to this sea-side Fishing town, where we are enjoying ourselves quietly, until the end of the month. I answer it without an hour's delay, though I fear my reply may lie at the Post office some days, before it finds a Steampacket to convey it across the ocean.

The letter to which you refer, is, from beginning to end, in every word and syllable, the cross of every t, and the dot of every i, a most wicked and nefarious Forgery. I have never published one word or line in reference to America, in any quarter whatever, except the Copyright Circular. And the unhung Scoundrel who invented that astounding Lie, knew this as well as I do.

It has caused me more pain, and more of a vague desire to take somebody by the throat, than such an act should, perhaps, have awakened in any honorable man. But I have not contradicted it publicly: deeming that it would not become my character or elevate me in my own self-respect, to do so.

I shall hope to send for your acceptance next month, my "American Notes".[†1] Meanwhile and always, and with cordial remembrances to all friends, I am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Philip Hone Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 281. Date: 20 Sep according to Forster. From Broadstairs.

I don't quite see my way towards an expression in the dedication of any feeling in reference to the American reception.[†2] Of course I have always intended to glance at it, gratefully, in the end of the book; and it will have its place in the introductory chapter, if we decide for that.[†3] Would it do to put in, after "friends in America," who giving me a welcome I must ever gratefully and proudly remember, left my judgment free, and who, loving, &c. If so, so be it.[†1]

To THOMAS MITTON, 21 SEPTEMBER 1842†

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Twenty First September 1842.

My Dear Mitton

I am very glad indeed to have heard from you, for I began to wonder where you were, and whether some country practitioner on whom you called with a large sum of money in your pocket-book, could possibly have laid violent hands on you in his Private Office.

[†a]Emma Picken (as wos)[†2] and her husband[†3] are here, as you have heard.[†4] But [ ] no more. But Fred,[†5] I believe has seen something of them, and danced with her in her Honey Moon Hops[†6] at the Ranelagh Gardens.[†7a]

I am going on rarely I hope. We intend to publish on the Twentieth of next month, please God. There is great curiosity afloat in all directions, about the book. I have made no arrangement in reference to it,[†1] nor shall I; but I think in all these matters, their[†2] interests and mine must be a little more identified than you think.

All well and hearty—A regatta here today, and a great flying of bright flags—let me know when you return to town.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 282. Date: in the last week of Sep according to Forster; but clearly the day after the Broadstairs regatta (see last).

I send you proofs as far as Niagara.... I am rather holiday-making this week ... taking principal part in a regatta here yesterday, very pretty and gay indeed. We think of coming up in time for Macready's opening,[†3] when perhaps you will give us a chop; and of course you and Mac will dine with us the next day? I shall leave nothing of the book to do after coming home, please God, but the two chapters on slavery and the people[†4] which I could manage easily in a week, if need were.[†5] ... The policeman who supposed the Duke of Brunswick[†6] to be one of the swell mob,[†1] ought instantly to be made an inspector.[†2] The suspicion reflects the highest credit (I seriously think) on his penetration and judgment.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 SEPTEMBER 1842

Text from Goodspeeds Book Shop monthly bulletin, n.d.

Broadstairs, | Sunday, twenty-fifth September, 1842

My Dear Henry,

I inclose you the Niagara letter,[†3] with many thanks for the loan of it.

Pray tell Mr. Chadwick[†4] that I am greatly obliged to him for his remembrance of me, and that I heartily concur with him in the great importance and interest of the subject[†5]—though I do differ from him, to the death, on his crack topic, the new Poor Law.[†6]

I had been turning my thoughts to this very item in the condition of American towns, and have put their present defects strongly before the American people.[†1] Therefore I shall read his report with the greater interest and attention.

We return next Saturday night. If you will dine with us next day, or any day in that week, we shall be truly glad and delighted to see you.

Let me know here, what day you will come.

I need scarcely say that I shall joyfully talk with you about the Metropolitan Improvement Society,[†2] then, or at any time—and with love to Letitia in which Kate and the babies join, I am always

My dear Henry, | Affectionately Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

The childrens'[†3] present names are as follows:

Katey (from a lurking propensity to fiery-ness)
Mamey (as generally descriptive of her bearing)
Charley (as a corruption of Master Toby)
Walter (suggested by his high cheek bones)

Each is pronounced with a peculiar howl, which I shall have great pleasure in illustrating.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 283. Date: three days later than letter of 22 Sep according to Forster.

For the last two days we have had gales blowing from the north-east, and seas rolling on us that drown the pier. To-day it is tremendous. Such a sea was never known here at this season, and it is running in at this moment in waves of twelve feet high. You would hardly know the place. But we shall be punctual to your dinner hour on Saturday.[†1] If the wind should hold in the same quarter, we may be obliged to come up by land; and in that case I should start the caravan at six in the morning.[†2]

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Broadstairs | Twenty Sixth September 1842

My Dear Mr. Rogers.

May I appoint tomorrow evening instead of tonight, for the pleasure of seeing you and Mr. Maltby?[†3] If I may, I pledge myself to walk eight miles tonight; detect Talfourd ensconced in fancied security in the Margate Theatre to see the Athenian Captive[†4] (at least, I fondly hope so); and report fully to you tomorrow, over our tea table.

It would be a brilliant thing to take him in the act; and it is well worth the effort. Is it not?[†5]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [27 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 280. Date: Forster implies that this was written in Aug; but since Betty's first performance in The Athenian Captive in this Margate season was on 26 Sep, CD must have been writing the day after the planned visit mentioned in To Rogers, 26 Sep.

Now you really must come. Seeing only is believing, very often isn't that, and even Being the thing falls a long way short of believing it. Mrs Nickleby[†1] herself once asked me, as you know, if I really believed there ever was such a woman; but there'll be no more belief, either in me or my descriptions, after what I have to tell of our excellent friend's tragedy, if you don't come and have it played again for yourself "by particular desire." We saw it last night, and oh! if you had but been with us! Young Betty,[†2] doing what the mind of man without my help never can conceive, with his legs like padded boot-trees wrapped up in faded yellow drawers, was the hero. The comic man of the company enveloped in a white sheet, with his head tied with red tape like a brief and greeted with yells of laughter whenever he appeared, was the venerable priest.[†3] A poor toothless old idiot at whom the very gallery roared with contempt when he was called a tyrant, was the remorseless and aged Creon. And Ismene, being arrayed in spangled muslin trowsers very loose in the legs and very tight in the ankles, such as Fatima would wear in Blue Beard, was at her appearance immediately called upon for a song. After this, can you longer ...?

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Twenty Eighth September 1842.

My Dear Henry

Young Methusaleh[†4] will put the initiatory dish on, at half past five, sharp.[†5]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 28 SEPTEMBER 1842

MS Longfellow House, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Address: M: W. H. Longfellow | Poste Restante | Bruges.

Broadstairs, Kent.
Twenty Eighth September Eighteen Forty Two.

My Dear Longfellow.

How stands it about your visit, do you say?[†1] Thus.—Your bed is waiting to be slept in, the door is gaping hospitably to receive you, I am ready to spring towards it with open arms at the first indication of a Longfellow knock or ring; and the door, the bed, I, and everybody else who is in the secret, have been expecting you for the last month.

The tortures of the mind that I have undergone—and all along of you—since I have been down here; a term of nine weeks!—The imaginings I have had of the possibility of your knocking at my door in London without notice, and finding nobody there, but an old woman who is remarkable for nothing but a face of unchangeable dirtiness—the misgivings that have come across me of your being, successively, in every foreign steamer that has passed these windows, homeward bound, since the first of last month—the horrible possibilities that have flashed across me of your shipping yourself aboard a Cunard Packet in gloomy desperation, and steaming back to Boston—the hideous train of Fancies from which your letter has relieved me, baffle all description.

My address in town (I shall be there, please God, next Saturday) is No. 1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park. But if you can manage to write and tell me when you will arrive in London, and by what conveyance, I will be there to meet you. This will be by far the best plan, so arrange it in that way, if you can. If you cannot, I shall look for you at home, and be ready for you.[†2]

I send you the circular you speak of. I addressed it to every person connected with Literature, who is at all known in England. It has made a great noise here, and will strip the Privateers of all exclusive profit in time to come. The forged letter of which Felton speaks, was published in the New York Papers, with a statement that I had addressed it to the Editor of the London Morning Chronicle, who had published it in his columns. I disparaged America very much in this production, and girded at my own reception. You know what the American Press is, and will be, I dare say, as little surprised at this outrage as I was. Still, it exasperated me (I am of rather a fierce turn, at times) very much; and I walked about for a week or two, with a vague desire to take somebody by the throat and shake him—which was rather feverish.

I have decided (perhaps you know this?) to publish my American Visit. By the time you come to me, I hope I shall have finished writing it.[†1] I have spoken very honestly and fairly; and I know that those in America for whom I care, will like me the better for the book. A great many people, I dare say, will like me infinitely the worse, and make a Devil of me, straightway.[†2]

Rogers is staying here, and begs me to commend him to you, and to say that he has made me pledge myself, on pain of non forgiveness ever afterwards, to carry you to see him without loss of time, when you come among us.[†3] Among other pleasant enjoyments we shall have together, and to which I look eagerly forward, I think I can promise you that we shall see Shakespeare on the stage as never he was seen before.[†4]

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial remembrances to you. And I am always
My Dear Longfellow | Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I have heard thrice from Felton, whom I love; and once from Prescott. I am sorry to see that Sumner, in the North American, speaks slightingly of Tennyson.[†1] Good God how strange it seems to me that anyone can do that— though many do.

To THOMAS MITTON, 28 SEPTEMBER 1842*

MS University of Texas. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Broadstairs | Twenty Eighth September 1842.

My Dear Mitton

I suppose it will be best to let him[†2] have the Cheque.[†3]—He has been living, it seems, in a cottage adjoining the old one,[†4] which he rented, furnished, at Twelve Shillings Pr. week.

I will call upon you on Monday—either between four and five, or between Seven and Eight.
Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 SEPTEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 283. Date: Forster makes two contradictory statements— that this letter was written on 25 Sep, and that he received it "on the last day of the month". The second is obviously correct: CD was writing the day before he left Broadstairs, and was leaving on Fri 30 Sep instead of Sat 1 Oct.

Strange as it may appear to you, the sea is running so high that we have no choice but to return by land. No steamer can come out of Ramsgate, and the Margate boat lay out all night on Wednesday with all her passengers on board. You may be sure of us therefore on Saturday at 5, for I have determined to leave here to-morrow, as we could not otherwise manage it in time; and have engaged an omnibus to bring the whole caravan by the overland route.[†1] ... We cannot open a window, or a door; legs are of no use on the terrace; and the Margate boats can only take people aboard at Herne Bay!

October

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 OCTOBER 1842]

Extract in F, III, viii, 283. Date: 5 Oct according to Forster.

I want you very much to come and dine to-day that we may repair to Drurylane together;[†2] and let us say half-past four, or there is no time to be comfortable. I am going out to Tottenham this morning, on a cheerless mission I would willingly have avoided. Hone, of the Every Day Book,[†3] is dying;[†4] and sent Cruikshank yesterday to beg me to go and see him, as, having read no books but mine of late, he wanted to see and shake hands with me before (as George said) "he went". There is no help for it, of course; so to Tottenham I repair,[†5] this morning. I worked all day, and till midnight; and finished the slavery chapter[†1] yesterday.

To THOMAS MITTON, [6 OCTOBER 1842]*

MS University of Texas. Date: On Thurs 6 Oct CD took Longfellow to Drury Lane to see As You Like It (Macready, Diaries, II, 185); Longfellow had evidently arrived the night before, having left Belgium on 4 Oct (see To Longfellow, 28 Sep, fn). Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Mitton

I am paralyzed by having to tell you, that the American Professor whom I expected on the 10th. suddenly made his appearance here, last night. Hence I am captive today—in which light I would have considered myself on no less compulsion, as you will readily suppose.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To A[NDREW] B[ELL], [9] OCTOBER 1842*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Address: To | A. B.[†2] Date: Sunday was 9 Oct in 1842.

Sunday Morning | October the Eighth. Forty two.

Dear Sir

I was aware of the cause of the preponderance in the representation, possessed by the Slave owners. But as it has its origin in the principle of representing Property (which finds favor here) I thought it would, with some persons, weaken the case, to state it.[†3]

I have called the drivers "Coachmen", simply because I know it will annoy them;[†1] and they deserve[†2] to be annoyed for such absurdities.

You will see that I have made an insertion relative to their sleeping in Iron Collars[†3]—though that was expressed in their wearing them, as it is not a kind of hosiery which is easily put on and taken off, or frequently sent to the Wash.

I am much obliged to you for your suggestions.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To A.B.

To [?WILLIAM HALL], [?9] OCTOBER 1842

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 142 (1884); dated 8 Oct 42; signed "D" according to catalogue, but presumably "CD". Address: since the visit was to return proofs and dining had been suggested, probably to William Hall, the partner in Chapman & Hall usually concerned with business arrangements (see references to dining with him in Vol. II, pp. 50 and 97). Date: probably 9 not 8 Oct (see last).

My American friend is going out on Monday evening.[†4] I can't dine with you; but I will be with you laden with proofs, at 7 exactly.

Faithfully yours ever
[CD.]

To MISS C. LE GRAND, 9 OCTOBER 1842

Mention in American Art Association catalogue No. 3823; MS I p., 3rd person; dated London, 9 Oct 42.

Acknowledging the receipt of her work, and thanking her for the compliment of her dedication.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 9 OCTOBER 1842

Extract in S. J. Davey catalogue No. 6336 (1893); MS I p.; dated 9 Oct 42.

I have looked over your sketches with very great pleasure; and have been quite charmed with their fidelity and their artistical merits.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 OCTOBER 1842]

Mention in F, III, viii, 283-4.[†5]

To LADY BLESSINGTON, [13 OCTOBER 1842]*

Photograph, Longfellow House. Date: Letter is endorsed "October 13, 1842", a Thursday.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

Dear Lady Blessington

Professor Longfellow, the best of the American Poets, (and a gentleman also, which latter recommendation it may be well to add), is staying with me on his way home from the Continent of Europe; and is very desirous to have the honor of being presented to you. May I bring him to Gore House some morning, for that purpose?[†1] I warrant him, not a Penciller by the way.[†2]

I beg my best regards to Miss Power[†3] and to Count D'Orsay. And am always

Dear Lady Blessington

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington.

To THOMAS HOOD, 13 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth October 1842.

My Dear Hood.

I can (and will) give you a copy of the American book, next Monday.[†1] It will not be in the hands of any other friend I have, until Tuesday night.

I will bring it myself about noon on Monday; and with it, if you will let me, Professor Longfellow of Boston (whose poetry you may have seen) who, admiring you as all good and true men do, wants to know you.[†2]

Peter Parley[†3] is a scoundrel and a Liar; and if he would present himself at my door, he would, as he very well knows, be summarily pitched into the street.[†4] That fellow, Hood, came to me at Washington, at his own request;[†5] brought papers and documents, and many dismal lamentations on the International robbery; got at my views on the subject, and heard me speak in full frankness and confidence; and then—went away to Boston, †a*and presided at that Meeting,*†6 where the Resolution was passed, that the Law must not be changed, for if it were, American Editors could not alter English books.†7a I was immediately informed of this, by Mr. Felton, Greek Professor at the American

Cambridge, and the best fellow in the States. I was so astonished at Parley's baseness (though before God, it was very American and tradesmen-like) that I wrote back to Felton, and besought him to be quite sure that there was no mistake.†1 He returned for answer that the only gentleman†2 present, who had spirit enough to protest against the proceedings, assured him, upon his honor, that he stood on Parley's right hand, and Parley filled the chair. Wherefore I will ever proclaim said Parley to be a Scoundrel.†3

I saw Grattan's speech.†4 He is a very false and time-serving fellow. He lives by those qualities, and is worth nothing but contempt.†5

Ever since we have been at home, my other half has been gradually filtering away, through the medium of a cold in her head. Directly she has anything solid about her, she is coming to make friends with Mrs. Hood. I hope it may be on Monday. The sooner the better, she says. And so do I, with all my heart.

My Dear Hood | Always Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hood Esquire

To FREDERICK MARRYAT, 13 OCTOBER 1842

MS Harvard College Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth October 1842

My Dear Marryatt

Many thanks for your famous book;†6 over which I have been chuckling, and grinning, and clenching my fists, and becoming warlike, for three whole days last past.

I have delayed acknowledging its receipt, that I might send you, at the same time, my American Volumes. But as I shall not be able to do so, I find, until Tuesday, I despatch this Thankful and Congratulatory Epistle first.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Stanfield tells me you have taken to drinking Cold Water in the morning. So have I. One of our pumps is dry, and the other drying, I drink so much of it.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 OCTOBER 1842

Extract from unidentified source; dated 13 Oct 42.

Longfellow is with us; we have taken many Expeditions; to Rochester: to the prisons: among tramps and thieves in the Mint lodging houses.[†1]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 14 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday October Fourteenth | Forty Two.

My Dear Henry.

Here are a plump brace of partridges and a stewed steak, on table today at half past five—and nobody to partake of them but the phlegmatic Poet. Can you come and assist?[†2]

Affectionately Always

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire Love to Tish.[†3]

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, [?14 OCTOBER 1842]†

MS Dickens House. Date: during the week before publication of American Notes. Envelope (MS Private), postmarked Manchester 15 Oct 42 (day of receipt), presumably belongs with this letter. Address: Mrs. Henry Burnett | 3 Elm Terrace | Higher Ardwick | Manchester.

...[†1] [†a]working people living in it. He[†2] seems to be somewhat of that opinion himself ...

... to you all.[†a]

I don't think it probable that I shall have a copy of my American book until Tuesday. On Tuesday night, I will send you, by the Mail train, a Parcel containing its two volumes, and Barnaby. The orders for it from the trade already, are much larger than have ever been known since Scott's time—taking off 3000 copies in two days, a week before its publication.

Make our affectionate remembrance to Burnett, and the children.—Harry,[†3] I suppose, is almost marriageable by this time.

Your affectionate brother

CHARLES DICKENS

Why don't you put your address in your letters?

To EDWARD JESSE,[†4] 14 OCTOBER 1842

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1909; MS I p.; dated 14 Oct 42.

To MISS [THOMASINA] ROSS,[†5] 14 OCTOBER 1842

Mention in N, I, 482.

To JONATHAN CHAPMAN, 15 OCTOBER 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: By Mail Steamer. | The Honorable Jonathan Chapman | Boston | Massachusetts | United States.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Fifteenth October 1842.

My Dear Friend.

I was heartily glad to see your hand-writing when the Cunard Boat which brought your letter, came in. And I was heartily glad to read it—not the less so, because it led me to the belief that your tenderness for me was keener and less bold[†1] than any anxiety you would ever entertain for yourself.[†2]

In lieu of the American people (or the worst among them) as a mass, consider them, for a moment, as a man. If you could only retain the friendship of an Individual by the sacrifice of everything which elevates you in your own respect—by fearing to speak the Truth—by keeping a timid silence—by debating within yourself at every turn, as though he were a rich relation, "will he like this; will he be angry if I say that; will he find out that I am but a toy for his amusement, if I do the other"—would you seek to hold it, for a day? If I know you, No. Neither would I. And because I claim to have been kindly received in America, by reason of something I had done to amuse its people and prepossess them in my favor; and not with reference to something I was not to do; therefore I write about its people, and write freely. And as I have never been deterred by hopes of promotion or visions of greatness, from pointing out abuses at home, so no amount of popular breath shall blow me from my purpose, if I see fit to point out what in my judgment are abuses abroad. And if my being an honest man, bring down caprice, and weathercock fickleness, and the falsest kind of insult on my head, what matters it to me—or to you—or to any man who is worth the name, and, being right, can look down on the crowd, and whistle while they hiss?

What is to prevent my writing? The certainty of not pleasing them. How does the certainty appear? By every claim I have upon them being disregarded and cast ruthlessly aside, at the printed bidding of some abandoned fellow; and aspersions being greedily believed which make me out a lying adventurer.[†3] My dear Chapman, if we yielded to such reasons or such men as these; in five year's[†4] time there would be no such thing as Truth in the world; and from that hour downward, her cause would be a hopeless, desperate venture.

I am well convinced that in your heart of hearts, you think and feel with me. I am well convinced that there is not, in my book, one solitary line in which you, and such as you, will not most thoroughly concur. I dispassionately believe that in the slow fulness of time, what I have written, will have some effect in purging your community of evils which threaten its very existence. And I know that it is written kindly and good-humouredly; and that I have never, for an instant, suffered myself to be betrayed into a hasty or unfair expression, or one I shall, at any time, regret.[†1] Believe me, my dear friend, the fact is literally so; and that you will find it so, to your entire contentment. And when you meet with evidences of a change in the popular opinion towards me, is it not enough to say within yourself, "if he had not brought about that change himself, he would not be the man who is my friend, but would be some other fellow whom I could hear dispraised with supreme indifference"?

Longfellow from Cambridge is staying with us just now, and will return, I believe, by the Great Western next Saturday. I shall charge him with a copy of my book for you. I have caused my publishers to take such precautions as will prevent (I hope) its reaching America by the Steamer which will bring you this letter.[†2]

Our darlings are all well, and send all manner of messages in broken English, to yours. Mrs. Dickens joins me in cordial and sincere remembrances to yourself, and to Mrs. Chapman.[†1] And I am always—stay; not always—conditionally—conditionally on your not, at any future time, talking about the length of your letters, or committing any such monstrous absurdity—Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. PRESCOTT, 15 OCTOBER 1842†

MS Berg Collection. Address: By Mail Steamer | W. H. Prescott Esquire | Boston | Massachusetts | United States.

Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park London
Fifteenth October 1842.

My Dear Prescott.

My publishers, Messrs. Chapman and Hall, will be happy to republish that book of which you speak: requiring no better commendation of it, than your description of its merits.[†2] [†a]They are exceedingly anxious to treat with you for the purchase of your new history; and I can distinctly say, from every day's knowledge and experience, that they are perfectly truthful, reliable, and honorable men in all their dealings.

Perhaps you don't know—if you do not, it is right you should—that Bentley advertizes himself as the Publisher, on this side, of the History aforesaid.[†3] But if he have done so, without authority, do not be disturbed; for the bookseller, whomsoever he may prove, to whom you send early proofs, will anticipate and stop him, beyond all kind of question.[†4][†a]

Longfellow is staying with me; and has been for some days. He thinks of returning by the Great Western on this day week. I shall charge him with a copy of my American Notes for you.[†1] I have no fear but they will find favor in your eyes, though they may not in those of the mass.[†2]

[†b]With best regards to your father[†1] and mother,[†2] and to all friends. Believe me My Dear Prescott,

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†b]

W. H. Prescott Esquire.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 15 OCTOBER [1842]*

MS University of Texas. Date: 15 Oct was Saturday in 1842; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Fifteenth Octr.

My Dear Sir

Our letters crossed.—For Heaven's sake, put the virtuous boy between those dismal blinkers, instantly.

We will carry you home in a hackney Coach on Monday Evening, and take up our friend, the Warden, in the same conveyance. Nothing can do better.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Lieutenant Tracey
&c &c &c

To EDWARD MOXON,[†3] 17 OCTOBER [1842]

MS copy, Massachusetts Historical Society. Address: Edward Moxon Esquire | Dover Street | Piccadilly; postmark 17 Oct 42.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Seventeenth October

My Dear Sir.

Mr. Longfellow, the best of the American Poets, (as I have no doubt you know) is staying with me and wishes to see you on the subject of republishing his verses.[†4]

We breakfast with Mr. Rogers tomorrow morning, and will call upon you, if convenient to yourself, when we leave his house.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Moxon Esquire

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 18 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

In great haste
Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth October 42.

Dear Fanny

I send you the books by tonights[†1] Mail. As I have made great efforts to baulk the American Pirates by not suffering the American Volumes to go out by tomorrow's boat,[†2] be very careful to keep them strictly to yourself and Henry until Thursday.

Affy. always
CD.

To THE EARL OF MULGRAVE, 18 OCTOBER 1842

Extract in unidentified bookseller's catalogue, n.d., Eastgate House, Rochester; dated 18 Oct 42.

Since I received your letter Mrs Dickens wrote to W. Patison's Hotel[†3] begging Miss Fisher[†4] to come and stay here.... Joe Miller[†5] whom you ask about was a Canadian dyspeptic who was ill the whole way home, and who, in the midst of apparently strong health, would suddenly fall head first into a bucket on deck and be horribly sick.

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, 18 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: By Mail Steamer. | Mr. George. W. Putnam | Salem | Massachusetts | United States.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park London
Eighteenth October 1842.

Dear Mr. Putnam

I received the parcel you sent me by the hands of Captain Hewett,[†6] quite safely. The papers, according to my old custom, I put in the fire without opening; but I was not the less obliged to you for sending them to me, as I know you did so, with the best intentions.

The truth is, that you so anticipated all my wants when we left New York, that I had no occasion for that parcel after all. When I wrote to you, to send me what books you had; the large Packing Case was still at the Custom House, and I was ignorant of its miscellaneous contents. But long before your last arrived, it came home; and I found in it, everything I could possibly require.

I send you, by the hands of Mr. Longfellow who has been staying with me for a week or two, and returns in The Great Western, a copy of a book I have just published, containing an account of our wanderings.[†1] Mr. Sumner of Boston will give it to you, or to anybody whom you may authorize to receive it.

Being in doubt where to address this, I send it to Salem: relying on its reaching you, through some of your friends. I have taken it into my head that you must be painting the portraits of the Factory Young Ladies at Lowell.[†2] If so,—make them very handsome, and the demand is certain to be brisk. The skilful introduction of a gold-watch occasionally, would be very judicious: and if you can counterfeit satin to the life,[†3] your fortune is made.[†4]

If I could make it, I would: for my recollection of your zealous and faithful services does not weaken with time or distance. Being no wizard however, [and][†5] having no aunt or grandmother who is a fairy (as the good people in the story books always have) I can only send you, across the Atlantic, my best and heartiest wishes.

Mrs. Dickens joins in them, she says, most sincerely: and desires all manner of kind remembrances to you. Anne (who is very blooming, but still a spinster) does the like. And the children, who are quite well and very happy, send their loves.

Remember me to Julia,[†6] and to all your family.[†7] And believe me, however much you may see me abused (it will not be seldom or sparingly) still Faithfully

Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. George. W. Putnam.

To CHARLES MACKAY, [19 OCTOBER 1842]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: CD's review appeared in the Morning Chronicle of Thurs 20 Oct. Address: Charles Mackay Esquire.

MC Office | Wednesday Night

My Dear Sir

Here is a review I promised to write (sub rosâ) of Lord Londonderry's Letter,[†8]

just now published.[†1] Will you kindly ask Hogarth,[†2] for me, to read the proof very carefully; as the Printers (unmindful of our old acquaintance)[†3] maimed my last communication, most surgically.[†4]

I have been going, every day, to write you about the Miltonians.[†5] I will, in a day or two. I cannot make up my mind that the thing would do—not by reason of any defects of its own, but because of its jarring materials.[†6]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay Esquire

To THOMAS CAMPBELL,[†7] OCTOBER 1842

Mention in Stan Henkels catalogue No. 1337 (1923); dated Devonshire Terrace, Oct 42 (clearly before leaving for Cornwall).

To [EDWARD CHAPMAN], 20 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Berg Collection. Address: clearly to Edward Chapman: see reference to Mrs Chapman's expected baby in letter of 16 Sep.

Thursday | Twentieth October 1842.

My Dear Sir

Here is Mrs. Chapman's Autograph[†8]—the gratification of her wish—"a real blessing to mothers"[†9]—in perspective.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 20 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Mr W. J. Goddard.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth October 1842

My Dear Sirs

I have given the lady who wrote the enclosed note,[†1] a letter of Introduction to you. There is no doubt whatever, of her ability as a translatress; and her credentials, as you will see, are of the best kind.

If you can avail yourselves of her services, I shall be particularly glad. For she is most deserving and reliable (though not beautiful); and it will be a high satisfaction to me, to have been instrumental in serving her. For this reason I write you privately; that you may know I really am interested in her.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. | Chapman and Hall.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 20 OCTOBER 1842

Text from N, I, 485.

1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate, Regents Park
Twentieth October 1842

Dear Sirs,

This will introduce you to Miss Ross; the lady in reference to whom I have already written you. I need say no more to secure to her your ready attention.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS THOMASINA ROSS, 20 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth October 1842.

My Dear Miss Ross.

I have been very closely engaged since I received your note, or I would have answered it, sooner.

To Chapman and Hall I have written very strongly, to the effect you desire; and I have urged the matter on them as one personally interesting to myself. This is the reason why I send you so brief a note of introduction as the Enclosed.[†1] Such a communication as I have made to them in private, will have fifty times the weight of any letter I could give you; and I can confidently depend on their attending to it.[†2]

If, either now or at any other time, you desire me to do more, or to render you further assistance, trust me that I will promptly meet your wishes, and that I shall have real pleasure in doing so.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to send you her kind regards. And I am always, believe me,
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ross.

To FREDERICK GRANVILLE, 20 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.

Twentieth October 1842.

My Dear Granville

It gave me very great pleasure this morning to hear from you; for I began to think—either that you had over-eaten yourself under the parental gooseberry bushes (as you threatened to do, aboard ship),[†3] or had been violently married by some Warwickshire beauty.[†4]

Of course there is no place like old England. There never was, and never will be. What has a rational man to do with Canada? Nothing at all. Nobody who "calls himself a gentleman"—here I quote our Theatricals,[†5] which have come to be like a dream—has anything in common with such outlandish parts.

Anything in the way of Game, is always acceptable. So shall anything in the shape of Granville, be, whenever it presents itself in these Latitudes.

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards. Little Miss Fisher, of Muffin Memory, is in town, and coming to stay here. We had a letter from Mulgrave, commending her to our protecting care.[†6]

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Granville

To LEIGH HUNT, 20 OCTOBER 1842

MS British Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twentieth October 1842.

My Dear Hunt.

Many thanks to you for your note. I saw the Rustic Walk and Dinner in the old Monthly;[†1] and had so much pleasure in seeing it, that I never once bethought myself of having had any other share in it, at any time, than that intimate one which all its readers may claim.[†2] You have apostrophized me and all true men in the cheese,[†3] the salad,[†4] the chairs, the view, the walk, and everything else. What more would a reasonable creature, such as I claim to be, have!

Trust me, that if you knew all, you would better like to have your Palfrey[†5] cantering, at your expense,[†6] through the whole American territory, wide as it is, than you would relish being there yourself.

Always My Dear Hunt | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To FREDERICK SALMON,[†7] 22 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Second October 1842.

My Dear Salmon.

Binding these Volumes[†8] to match the others,[†9] has occasioned a delay of two or three days, or you would have received them sooner.[†10]

God bless you, and yours.

Always Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Salmon Esquire

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 22 OCTOBER 1842

Text from Mrs C. L. Lewes, Dr Southwood Smith, 1898, p. 87.

Devonshire Terrace, | Saturday, October Twenty-second, 1842.

My dear Sir,

I have an expedition afoot in which I think you can assist me.

I want to see the very dreariest and most desolate portion of the sea-coast of Cornwall; and start next Thursday,[†1] with a couple of friends,[†2] for St. Michael's Mount.[†3] Can you tell me of your own knowledge, or through the information of any of the Mining Sub-Commissioners,[†4] what is the next best bleak and barren part? And can you, furthermore, while I am in those regions, help me down a mine?[†5]

I ought to make many apologies for troubling you, but somehow or other I don't—which is your fault and not mine.

Always believe me faithfully your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr Southwood Smith.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 26 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | October Twenty Sixth 1842.

My Dear Carlyle.

I have been truly delighted by the receipt of your most welcome letter. You will believe me, I know, when I tell you that having always held you in high regard for the manliness and honesty with which you have exercised your great abilities, there are very few men in the world whose commendation, so expressed, would so well please me.[†1]

I am going down into Cornwall for a few days. When I return, I shall come to Chelsea and report myself. For as we are to know each other well (which I take to be clearly recognized as a fact in perspective, by both of us) the sooner we begin, the better.

Ever believe me | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. L. CUYLER,[†2] 26 OCTOBER 1842

Text from T. L. Cuyler, Recollections of a Long Life: an Autobiography, 1902, p. 21.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | Regents Park, Oct. 26th, 1842.

My Dear Sir,

I am heartily obliged to you for your frank and manly letter.[†3] I shall always remember it in connection with my American book; and never—believe me— save in the foremost rank of its pleasant and honorable associations.

Let me subscribe myself, as I really am

Faithfully your Friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Theodore Ledyard Cuyler.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 26 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth October 1842.

My Dear Dr. Smith

Many thanks for your kind communication.[†1] I will bear all your hints in mind, and attend to them as promptly and faithfully, as though I were (which Heaven forbid!) in a high fever.

Believe me | Always Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

November

To JOHN LEECH,[†2] 5 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire | 9 Powis Place | Queen Square.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Saturday Evening Fifth November | 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I have had great pleasure in the receipt of your manly note; which I should have answered sooner, but that I have been in Cornwall for some days, and am only just now returned.[†3]

I had quite forgotten the circumstance to which you refer, and have never blamed you in the smallest degree.[†1] But I have never forgotten the having seen you some years ago,[†2] or ceased to watch your progress with much interest and satisfaction. I congratulate you heartily on your success; and myself on having had my eye upon the means by which you have obtained it.[†3]

If it can possibly be arranged, consistently with that regard which I feel bound to pay to Mr. Browne,[†4] I shall be truly happy to avail myself of your genius in my forthcoming Monthly Work. Until I have communicated with him (which I will do immediately) in reference to a project which has occurred to me, I cannot well explain myself further.[†5] But I will write to you again, in the course of next week; and will tell you exactly how my arrangements stand.

In the mean time let me say with perfect sincerity, that I shall hope, in any case, to improve your acquaintance, and not to lose sight of you any more.

My Dear Sir believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To MESSRS THOMAS BARGE JUNR & BROS, 5 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Dr Gordon Ray.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Fifth November 1842.

Dear Sirs.

Accept my cordial thanks for the two pieces of Nickleby furniture you have so kindly sent me. They are in course of conversion into Nursery bed curtains for my smallest Works; to the noisy delight of all the Four Volumes.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Thomas Barge Junr. and Brothers.

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 NOVEMBER [1842]

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Fifth November

My Dear Beard

If you are not at the Barrow Knight's[†7] tomorrow, or otherwise better engaged, there is a Leg of delicate Welsh Mutton in the Pantry (to be served up at half past five) which deserves attention.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To JOHN HILLARD,[†1] 5 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Fifth November 1842.

Dear Sir

I have been out of town for some days and have only just now returned home, or I would have sent you an earlier acknowledgement of the safe receipt of your enclosure of Ten Pounds on account of our friend Longfellow—who I fear has been most piteously tossed about, on that maddest of Oceans, during the last fortnight.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hillard Esquire

To G. JOY,[†3] 5 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales. Address: G. Joy according to contemporary endorsement.

Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Fifth November 1842.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Joy, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his obliging letter. He grieves to add, that there are but too many such instances as that which Mr. Joy cites, of the strange halting of Law and Equity.—He wishes he had the reforming of them.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 7 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Comte de Gramont.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Seventh November 1842.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

You would make me very glad, if you would come and dine with me next Sunday Week (I name that distant day, to give myself the better chance of laying violent hands upon you) at seven o'Clock.[†1] If this should find you able and willing, I will ask Fonblanque and Maclise, and perhaps Elliotson,—whom I know you like,—to meet you.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Le Comte D'Orsay.

To JOHN LEECH, 7 NOVEMBER [1842]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Private | John Leech Esquire | Powis Place.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | Monday Seventh November

My Dear Sir.

I find that there are so many mechanical difficulties, complications, entanglements, and impossibilities, in the way of the project I was revolving in my mind when I wrote to you last,[†2] as to render it quite impracticable. I perceive that it could not be satisfactory to you, as giving you no fair opportunity; and that it would, in practice, be irksome and distressing to me.[†3] I am therefore compelled to relinquish the idea, and for the present to deny myself the advantage of your valuable assistance.

But as I desire, notwithstanding, to lay a small quantity of salt on the tail of your private and personal coat, will you give me the means of doing so, by joining our family dinner table next Sunday at half past five?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 7 NOVEMBER 1842

MS University of Kentucky.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Seventh November | 1842

My Dear Stanfield

On making up our travelling accounts, I find that the total Expences were £88,[†4] and the stock purse £90. This leaves me with £2 in hand, one fourth of which, I now inclose you.

Always my Dear Stanfield | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To THE REV. GEORGE ARMSTRONG,[†1] [?5-8 NOVEMBER 1842]

Mention in Robert Henderson, A Memoir of the Late Rev. George Armstrong, Formerly Incumbent of Bangor in the Diocese of Down, and Latterly One of the Ministers of Lewin's-Mead Chapel, Bristol. With Extracts from his Journals and Correspondence, 1859, p. 150. Date: early Nov according to Memoir.

Declining Armstrong's suggestion that he should write an essay on W. E. Channing, but expressing a deep interest in him. [†2]

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 8 NOVEMBER 1842†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth November 1842.

My Dear Fonblanque.

[†a]Will you dine with me on Sunday Week, the Twentieth, at seven o'Clock? I name that distant day because D'Orsay dines with me then, and I know you and he have a great liking for each other.[†3†a]

I was very sorry to see in the Postscript to the last Examiner, something that careless readers (a large class) will easily twist into a comparison between the English and American Newspapers.[†1] Bad as many of our journals are, Heaven knows, they cannot be set against each other for a moment; and Decency is not befriended by any effort to excuse the Transatlantic Blackguardism, which is so intense that I seriously believe words cannot describe it.[†2]

My Dear Fonblanque
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1842

Text from MDGH, I, 76.

Devonshire Terrace, November 8th, 1842.

My dear Harness,

Some time ago, you sent me a note from a friend of yours, a barrister,[†2] I think, begging me to forward to him any letters I might receive from a deranged nephew of his, at Newcastle. In the midst of a most bewildering correspondence with unknown people, on every possible and impossible subject, I have forgotten this gentleman's name,[†3] though I have a kind of hazy remembrance that he lived near Russell Square. As the Post Office would be rather puzzled, perhaps, to identify him by such an address, may I ask the favour of you to hand him the enclosed, and to say that it is the second I have received since I returned from America? The last, I think, was a defiance to mortal combat.[†4] With best remembrances to your sister,[†5] in which Mrs. Dickens joins, believe me, my dear Harness,

Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T. J. OUSELEY,[†6] 8 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth November 1842.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your note, and shall be truly glad to comply with your request:[†7] which I will do with the first opportunity of safe conveyance.

I had heard of the Fraser Article,[†8] and I know the Writer[†9]—to whom, I need scarcely add, I have ever been kind and considerate. It is of no moment.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Ouseley Esquire

To CHARLES BARHAM,[†1] [?8 NOVEMBER 1842]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 8 NOVEMBER 1842

Text from Mrs C. L. Lewes, Dr Southwood Smith, 1898, p. 89.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Eighth November 1842.

My dear Sir,

I have just come home from Cornwall. I did not, after all, deliver your letter. Having Stanfield and Maclise and another friend[†2] with me, I determined not to do so, unless I found it absolutely necessary; lest the unfortunate Doctor should consider himself in a state of siege.

I saw all I wanted to see, and a noble coast it is. I have sent your letter to Dr Barham with a line or two from myself; and am as much obliged to you as though I had driven him wild with trouble.

Always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr Southwood Smith.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 9 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Ninth November 1842. Wednesday

My Dear Mac

It's a holiday—Lord Mayor's Day. We pledged ourselves to keep it. Do you remember? Shave. I'll come down, directly.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE LITERARY FUND,[†1] 12 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twelfth November 1842

Gentlemen.

As one of a Committee[†2] of Gentlemen who are exerting themselves for the relief of the Destitute widow and children of the late Mr. Hone, the author of The Every Day Book and other works of the same character which are well known to you, I beg to submit their hard case to your favorable consideration.

I am aware that Mr. Hone himself was more than once assisted by the excellent Institution whose affairs you administer.[†3] Nevertheless, I am well assured that the claims of his Widow[†4] and Family[†5] are not weakened in your opinion by that circumstance; and that you will feel, with me, that his contributions to the stock of cheerful blameless Literature, are deserving of remembrance in their afflicted persons.

I may be permitted to add, on behalf of myself and those other gentlemen who act with me in this matter, that the best use will be made of any sum of money you may be pleased to bestow on Mrs. Hone;[†6] and that in its appropriation, the strictest regard will be had to its being of lasting benefit and service to her, if possible.

I am Gentlemen | With great respect
Your faithful friend and Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To | The General Committee of The Literary Fund.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 12 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth November 1842.

My Dear Sir

Will you do me the favor to lay the enclosed before the Committee at their next Meeting; and to communicate the result to me?

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth November 1842.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Your most kind note found me in the agonies of plotting and contriving[†1] a new book;[†2] in which stage of the tremendous process, I am accustomed to walk up and down the house, smiting my forehead dejectedly; and to be so horribly cross and surly, that the boldest fly at my approach. At such times, even the Postman knocks at the door with a mild feebleness, and my publishers always come two together, lest I should fall upon a single invader and do murder on his intrusive body.

I am afraid if I came to see you under such circumstances, you would be very glad to be rid of me in two hours at the most; but I would risk even that disgrace, in my desire to accept your kind Invitation, if it were not indispensable just now, that I should be always in the way.[†3] In starting a work which is to last for twenty months, there are so many little things to attend to, which require my personal superintendence, that I am obliged to be constantly on the watch; and I may add, seriously, that unless I were to shut myself up, obstinately and sullenly in my own room for a great many days without writing a word, I don't think I ever should make a beginning.

For these reasons, I am fain to be resolute and virtuous, and to deny myself and Mrs. Dickens the great pleasure you offer us. I have not answered your letter until now, because I have really been tempted and hesitating. But the lapse of every new day, only gives me a stronger reason for being perseveringly uncomfortable, that out of my gloom and solitude, something comical (or meant to be) may straightway grow up.

If you should still be in your present retreat when I have got my first number written (after which, I go on with great nonchalance) we shall be more than glad to come to you for one or two days. In the meantime Mrs. Dickens begs me to add her best remembrances to my own; and to say that if you can oblige her with your box at Covent Garden on any of Miss Kemble's nights,[†1] she will be very thankful.

I am always Dear Miss Coutts

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

It is impossible for me to say how I should argue with Miss Meredith, under existing circumstances.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 NOVEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, IV, i, 290. Date: 12 Nov according to Forster.

Behold finally the title of the new book[;][†3] don't lose it, for I have no copy. "The Life and Adventures of Martin Chuzzlewig,[†4] his family, friends, and enemies. Comprising all his wills and his ways. With an historical record of what he did and what he didn't. The whole forming a complete key to the house of Chuzzlewig."[†5]

To THOMAS HOOD, 12 NOVEMBER 1842†

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth November 1842.

My Dear Hood

[†a]What could I be, but delighted with the New Monthly Notice?[†6] What can I say in reference to the Pirates,[†1] but demnition seize 'em; and that my blunt[†2] and my sharpness (such as they are) are both ready for the service of the association you suggest.[†3] Any set of men, but authors, would have had such an Institution long ago.[†a]

I can't state in figures (not very well remembering how to get beyond a Million) the number of Candidates for the Sanatorium Matronship, but if you will ask your little boy[†4] to trace figures in the beds of your garden, beginning at the front wall, going down to the cricket ground,[†5] coming back to the wall again, and "carrying over" to the next door; and will then set a skilful accountant to add up the whole; the product, as the Tutors assistants say, will give you the amount required.—I have pledged myself (being assured of her capability) to support a near relation of Miss Edgeworth's.[†6] Otherwise I need not say how glad I should have been to forward any wish of yours.[†7]

We shall be more than glad to come to you on any Evening you may name.[†8] [†b] I am in the agonies of new harness just now, and walk up and down the house smiting my forehead dejectedly, to the unspeakable consternation of my wife and children, and the great uneasiness of a very small dog.[†b]

Always My Dear Hood | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hood Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 12 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twelfth Novr. 1842.

My Dear Macready

You pass this house every day, on your way to, or from, the Theatre. I wish you would call once as you go by—and soon, that you may have plenty of time to deliberate on what I wish to suggest to you. The more I think of Marston's[†1] Play,[†2] the more sure I feel that a Prologue, to the purpose, would help it materially,[†3] and almost decide the fate of any ticklish point on the first night.[†4] Now I have an idea (not easily explainable in writing, but told in five words) which would take the prologue out of the conventional dress of prologues— quite—get the curtain up with a dash—and begin the play with a sledge hammer blow. If, on consideration, you should think with me, I will write the Prologue, heartily.[†1]

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To MRS PAYNTER,[†2] 12 NOVEMBER 1842

Text from Sketches from the Diaries of Rose Lady Graves Sawle 1833-1896, privately printed, 1908, p. 54.

Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, | Regent's Park.
Twelfth November, 1842.

My dear Mrs. Paynter,

Many thanks to you for your kind letter and for its enclosure from Lord A.,[†3] which I beg to return to you. The monument of which I make mention in my "Notes," is that which is raised to Wolfe and Montcalm[†4] jointly; and I call it worthy of two great nations, because it was created by subscriptions of the French and English.[†5] I do not enter into Canadian topics, or desire to make any extended mention of them, for the reason I have given in my book;[†6] and therefore I have no use for any information, highly valuable although it could not fail to be, which your kindness would procure for me from your brother.

I am afraid that the preparations for my new book will put a padlock on my locomotive powers, and keep me fast at home for some time. But, if I should get to Bath, rest assured that I have too pleasant a recollection of our old evenings there, and too earnest a desire to see you and Miss Paynter[†7] again, not to come very quickly up that inaccessible hill, and inflict a cheery double knock upon your door, to which the street shall ring again.[†1]

Mrs Dickens begs me to say all that is loving and kind;[†2] and, venturing to add similar remembrances to Miss Paynter on my own account,

I am, always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS [A. T.] THOMSON,[†3] 12 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twelfth November | 1842.

Dear Mrs. Thomson.

It would have given me great pleasure to vote for the lady in whom you are interested, if I had not already pledged myself (being assured of her capability) to support another candidate who is a near relation of Miss Edgeworth's, and who, therefore, has a strong claim on my attention and regard.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Thomson

To THOMAS BEARD, 15 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth November 1842.

My Dear Beard.

I should have been truly glad (I need not tell you) to serve any friend of yours,[†4] if my sympathy and interest had not been strongly enlisted beforehand, in behalf of a Niece of Miss Edgeworth, whose testimonials are immeasurably better than those of any other Candidate; and who has learned tenderness and patience, in the bitterest of schools.

I shall expect to see you towards the close of the week, if the Barrow Knight acts up to his title, and gives you leisure.

Best Regards and loves from everybody to everybody else.

I am working away upon my new book, like—like a brick. I don't know why it is, but that popular simile seems a good one.

Always Faithfully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To JOHN BLACK, 15 NOVEMBER 1842

MS National Library of Scotland.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth[†1] November 1842.

My Dear Sir

If an advertizement should come to the Chronicle from a Committee (to which I belong) who are trying to raise a little money for the Wife and Family of poor Hone of the Every Day Book, will you, if you see no objection, call attention to it, by a line in the Paper?[†2] They are very poor, and he was not a common man.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Black Esquire

To W. P. FRITH,[†3] 15 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Fifteenth November 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I shall be very glad if you will do me the favor to paint me two little companion pictures; one, a Dolly Varden (whom you have so exquisitely done already), the other a Kate Nickleby.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I take it for granted that the original picture of Dolly with the Bracelet, is sold?[†5]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 15 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tuesday Fifteenth November 1842.

My Dear Mac

Will you put the No on the enclosed, that John may take it?—I have asked him[†1] to paint for me, two little companion pictures. One, a Dolly Varden. One, a Kate Nickleby.

I have been working feebly all day; and between that and the weather, am damnably hipped.[†2] Shall we repair to some Saloon tonight? If so, I'll call on you, about half past seven.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 15 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth November 1842

My Dear Mitton

I am sorry to say, I couldn't help Mrs. Stevens.[†3] I was, and am, strongly interested in another Candidate, who is immeasurably the best among them. And besides, I had already, as a principle, strongly objected to their electing anybody who had been, or had sought to be, connected as Matron with any charity. It would have been destructive of the whole spirit and object of the Sanatorium, which heals and shelters those, who are above the receipt of charitable aid.

I am very much engaged—but will come to you on Thursday, at about 4 O'Clock.

Always Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

Wednesday. I open this again to say—Friday, instead of Thursday.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 17 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire | Amwell Street | Pentonville.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth November 1842.

My Dear George.

I want to ask you a question,[†1] when you next happen to be passing this way.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To W. P. FRITH, 17 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth November 1842

My Dear Sir

Pray consult your own convenience, in the matter of my little commission. Whatever suits your engagements and prospects, will best suit me.

I saw an unfinished proof of Dolly,[†2] at Mitchell's,[†3] some two or three months ago. I thought she was proceeding excellently well, then. It will give me great pleasure to see her when completed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H.[†4] P. Frith Esquire

To EDWARD MOXON, 17 NOVEMBER 1842

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Jan 1935; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 17 Nov 42.

Concerning the proposed publication of an American poet in England. [†5]

Pray write me such a reply as I can send to the author of the volumes; and to get absolution for my conscience in this matter.

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road,

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth November 1842.

My Dear Beard

I quite forgot yesterday, that I am engaged tomorrow. Wherefore, let our Prison trip[†1] stand over until your next Day of leisure.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To NAHUM CAPEN,[†2] 18 NOVEMBER 1842

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor. Address: By The Britannia Steam Ship | Mr. Nahum Capen | Boston | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth November 1842.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to express my general concurrence in its contents. It is exactly because I think the subject[†3] is not understood, or sufficiently discussed by those who are bound to bring it forward, that I have always, without fear or favor, expressed my opinion in reference to it, whenever I have had an opportunity of doing so. At the same time, I have always considered Justice in this respect, as pertaining only to a very advanced state of society; and that it will not be rendered until you and I have been many years in our graves.

Have the goodness to present my compliments and regards to your Partner. And believe me Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Nahum Capen

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 18 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth November 1842.

My Dear Fred

As I am engaged on Sunday, I wish you would call upon me, if you can, on Tuesday. I will tell you then what I shall have determined on, in reference to the Alphington Removal.[†1]

Affy. Always

CD.

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To L. HOSKINS,[†2] 18 NOVEMBER 1842

Mention in N, I, 490.

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS University of Texas. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | Southampton Buildings.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighteenth November 1842.

My Dear Mitton

The meeting at the Sanatorium, which was to have taken place yesterday, is postponed until today.[†3] I must therefore (as no doubt you go out of town tomorrow afternoon), defer our appointment until Monday.

Faithfully Always

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 19 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Library of Congress.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth November | 1842.

Dear Sirs

I wish you would send me by the Bearer, if you please, a dozen of the Chuzzlewit bills.[†4]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday November Twenty Second | 1842.

My Dear Macready

Don't fire such blunt arrows into my premises, but enlighten me like a Christian (not Pagan) manager, on two points; in respect of which I must know something, or I can't get my mind upon the subject.[†5] Firstly, what scene do you mean to have?[†6] Secondly, when do you propose to shew it?

At my cue in the Prologue,[†1] or when Anderson[†2] comes on?[†3] If your Hall Cerberus hadn't clean forgotten me during my absence in America, I would have come down and asked you these questions. As it is, I wait by proxy, in top boots;[†4] and demand to be instantly satisfied.

Indignantly Always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [24 NOVEMBER 1842]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Written across the top of the page is the following note in Cruikshank's hand: "My Dear Sir | I have just received this note from Mr. Dickens— | Yours truly | Geo Cruikshank | Nov. 24 | 42 | 8 oCk. | Dr. West".

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Evening

My Dear George.

I only received Coutts's answer this Afternoon; and was just about to send to you.—They will be happy to receive Subscriptions.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To HENRY BURNETT, [25 NOVEMBER 1842]

Mention in Henry Burnett to F. G. Kitton, 19 Dec 88 (MS Huntington). Date: given by Burnett.

Telling Burnett that he had received the Bill he had put his hand to on Burnett's behalf. [†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, [25 NOVEMBER 1842]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly written on the Friday after hearing from Macready what the first scene was to be and when he proposed to "shew it" (questions asked in To Macready, 22 Nov).

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Macready

I have made some verbal alterations in the enclosed, and substituted three new lines after the disclosure of the Library; in lieu of the three I first wrote.[†2] And I think it is improved.

Is it too late for me to say, that after considering the idea of the Allegorical Picture, I wish you would reconsider it also? Suppose the frame had, at first, merely some dim ground within it, like black glass—

Faithfully Always

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, [25 NOVEMBER 1842]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: no doubt the same day as last; Macready received and answered CD's morning letter (both letter and answer clearly being sent by hand) before going out (Diaries, II, 188); the "veiled picture" of the afternoon letter must have been what CD in his morning letter had suggested as an alternative to "the Allegorical Picture". By the following Friday Anderson was no longer involved with the Prologue.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday afternoon

My Dear Macready

I am very glad you like the Prologue; and also that you like the idea of the veiled picture first. I think I see it, as a good, mysterious thing, and simple too, as becomes the subject.

"Clangour" is an infinitely better word. Strange enough, I thought so, today.[†1]

I will come down to the Theatre once or twice (when you tell me it is time to do so), and hear and see the thing. If any word sound harshly then, or seem in Anderson's way, I need not say that as I write to please you and not myself, I will most gladly alter it.

Marston called on me yesterday, and asked 'if he were free to use my name as the author of the Prologue?'—I told him 'yes, provided he had a desire to do so'—He then asked 'if he were free to publish it, with the altered Edition of the Play?' And again I told him 'Yes'.—But both these matters are dependent on your opinions and wishes, for they are mine. [†a]It might be judicious to keep the Prologue fresh, and out of the book,[†2] and to say nothing of it but in the Bills of the Day? Eh?[†a]

Faithfully Always

CD.

— III - 381 —

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 NOVEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, IV, i, 291. Date: 25 Nov according to Forster, confirmed by To Maclise, 26 Nov.

Browning's play[†1] has thrown me into a perfect passion of sorrow. To say that there is anything in its subject save what is lovely, true, deeply affecting, full of the best emotion, the most earnest feeling, and the most true and tender source of interest, is to say that there is no light in the sun, and no heat in blood. It is full of genius, natural and great thoughts, profound, and yet simple and beautiful in its vigour.[†2] I know nothing that is so affecting, nothing in any book I have ever read, as Mildred's recurrence to that "I was so young—I had no mother."[†3] I know no love like it, no passion like it, no moulding of a splendid thing after its conception, like it. And I swear it is a tragedy that MUST be played; and must be played, moreover, by Macready.[†1] There are some things I would have changed if I could (they are very slight, mostly broken lines); and I assuredly would have the old servant[†2] begin his tale upon the scene; and be taken by the throat, or drawn upon, by his master, in its commencement. But the tragedy I never shall forget, or less vividly remember than I do now. And if you tell Browning that I have seen it,[†3] tell him that

— III - 382 —

— III - 383 —

I believe from my soul there is no man living (and not many dead) who could produce such a work.— Macready likes the altered prologue[†1] very much.

To WILLIAM MARTIN,[†2] 25 NOVEMBER 1842

Extract in N, I, 491, from catalogue source; dated 25 Nov 42.

I sincerely regret to say, that I cannot comply with the request you prefer to me, on behalf of Miss Isaacs,[†3] not, believe me, from any indifference to that young lady's position, or to her honorable exertions; but because I am, I may almost say every day and hour, forced, to convey a refusal to similar applicants; which is scarcely less painful to them, than it is to me.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 26 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954).

Saturday Morning | Twenty Sixth November 1842

My Dear Mac

I wonder when you would look up No 1 Devonshire Terrace, if No 1 Devonshire Terrace didn't look up you.

I dined out yesterday, and stayed at home the day before.

The Beloved and Co[†4] (indignant, as I suspect, at my not reviving the subject of Love for Love)[†5] immolate themselves tonight on Mrs. Macready's Private Altar. What do we do? Do you dine here at 5, or do we dine elsewhere at 5? Will you call here, or I shall[†6] call there? Did I see on your chimney piece t'other day, a summons for tonight to that Tomb of Good Fellowship in Trafalgar Square,[†7] or was I deceived? Tell me. Lead on. I'll follow.

How do you get on with the charming picture?[†8]

Always and Ever

CD

I gasp to write it—we go to Fonblanque's tomorrow.[†9] No such luck as meeting you there, I suppose?

[†a]P.S I do not hesitate to say that Browning's Tragedy could have been written by no other man living; and by very few dead. It is at once the most tender and the most terrible story I ever read. It made my eyes so red and dim, in the perusal, that I thought they would never sparkle (hem!) any more.[†a]

To THOMAS CHAPMAN,[†1] 27 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Seventh Novr. | 1842

My Dear Sir

Agreeably to your wish, I send you a sketch of what I shod. recommend for insertion in the Newspapers; relative to the Prince and the Sanatorium.[†2] I have been particularly mindful of the great desideratum in such a case, which is to say as little in relation to space, and as much in relation to purpose, as possible.

I think two letters (I have marked them in Pencil) are quite enough to publish. But if your opinion should differ from mine, I beg you to act upon it without ceremony, as we have but one object.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire

To EDGAR ALLAN POE, 27 NOVEMBER 1842

Text from the Century Magazine, New Series, XXVI (1894), 730.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regent's Park,
November 27, 1842.

Dear Sir,

By some strange accident (I presume it must have been through some mistake on the part of Mr. Putnam in the great quantity of business he had to arrange for me), I have never been able to find among my papers, since I came to England, the letter you wrote to me at New York. But I read it there, and think I am correct in believing that it charged me with no other mission than that which you had already entrusted to me by word of mouth.[†3] Believe me that it never, for a moment, escaped my recollection; and that I have done all in my power to bring it to a successful issue—I regret to say, in vain.

I should have forwarded you the accompanying letter from Mr. Moxon[†1] before now, but that I have delayed doing so in the hope that some other channel for the publication of [y]our book[†2] on this side of the water would present itself to me. I am, however, unable to report any success. I have mentioned it to publishers with whom I have influence, but they have, one and all, declined the venture.[†3] And the only consolation I can give you is that I do not believe any collection of detached pieces by an unknown writer, even though he were an Englishman, would be at all likely to find a publisher in this metropolis just now.

Do not for a moment suppose that I have ever thought of you but with a pleasant recollection; and that I am not at all times prepared to forward your views in this country if I can.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To THOMAS MITTON, 28 NOVEMBER [1842]

MS Huntington Library. Date: 1842 on handwriting; confirmed by reference to Greenwich in To Mitton, 1 Dec.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth November

My Dear Mitton

I have just received from Talfourd, a vexatious reminder of a solemn promise I had utterly forgotten—to dine with him in his Chambers tomorrow. Will you write and tell me, whether Friday or Saturday would suit you for the Greenwich Expedition?

I have heard from the Govr.,[†4] who professes peace.[†5]

Faithfully Ever
CD.

Thos Mitton Esquire

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 30 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth November 1842

My Dear Count D'Orsay

We shall all three[†6] be delighted to dine at Gore House on Friday; and,

(as you do not mention the hour) we shall take it for granted that you dine at Half past Seven, unless we hear to the contrary.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS HOOD, 30 NOVEMBER 1842

Text from Memorials of Thomas Hood, ed. [Mrs F. F. Broderip and T. Hood, Jr], 1860, II, 146-7.

Devonshire Terrace, November 30th, 1842.

My dear Hood,

In asking your and Mrs. Hood's leave to bring Mrs. D.'s sister (who stays with us) on Tuesday,[†1] let me add that I should very much like to bring at the same time a very unaffected and ardent admirer of your genius, who has no small portion of that commodity in his own right, and is a very dear friend of mine and a very famous fellow; to wit, Maclise, the painter, who would be glad (as he has often told me) to know you better, and would be much pleased, I know, if I could say to him, "Hood wants me to bring you."

I use so little ceremony with you, in the conviction that you will use as little with me, and say, "My dear D.—Convenient;" or, "My dear D.—Ill-convenient," (as the popular phrase is), just as the case may be. Of course, I have said nothing to him.[†2]

Always heartily yours,
BOZ

To DANIEL MACLISE, 30 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth November 1842

My Dear Mac.

You shall decide. Shall we go to Dulwich, and stroll and dine pictorially?[†1] Or to Richmond, and stroll and dine aquatically?[†2] (in either of which cases I will call for you at 1) Or take an afternoon's walk about the streets contemplatively, and afterwards dine Athenæumatively (in which case I will call between two and three)?

Decide. And I am ready.

I have said nothing to my Venuses,[†3] nor will I unless our arrangements include them; the which I mention,[†4]

December

To THOMAS MITTON, 1 DECEMBER 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | First December 1842.

My Dear Mitton

I am under an old engagement to dine with D'Orsay tomorrow, at 1/2 past 7. I don't like our only lunching at Greenwich, but if the day particularly suit you, I will be with you at 11.

If, like me, you would prefer our having a whole day, what say you to next Tuesday?

Faithfully Always

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire I have an immense No of letters from America.[†5] The effect of the book on the better orders, is decidedly favorable.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE,[†1] 2 DECEMBER 1842*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace

Friday Evening | Second December 1842.

My Dear Cattermole

I have delayed writing to you, until I saw how this day's work turned out— much or little. I am sorry to say that it is as little a one as I would desire to see; and, consequently, that I must stay at home tomorrow.

Best loves and regards.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esqre.

To R. S. HORRELL,[†2] 2 DECEMBER 1842

MS Public Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

Devonshire Terrace. | Second December 1842.

My Dear Sir

I write in haste to you to say that I no sooner received your two pieces, than I sent them to Mr. Ainsworth[†3] (previously speaking to him on the subject), who returned me a favorable and hopeful answer. But since then, I have not seen him,[†4] or heard of them.

I think the best thing you can do, if you see no objection, will be to leave them where they are: resting assured that I will be their faithful guardian during your absence.[†5]

I should have written to you before, but I have been expecting every day to have some good news for you.

With best wishes for your restoration to health,

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

R. S. Horrell Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 4 DECEMBER 1842*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth December 1842

My Dear Macready

Here are three Income Tax notions.[†6] Two of them I mentioned to you, and one I didn't. If there be anything else I can do; you know how truly delighted I shall be to do it.

—— gather'd, stored, and grown
I think you made that alteration?[†1]

It might be well to counsel Marston to burn his copy of the prologue, pro tem: in order that he may be enabled to say, if applied to by any of the papers, that he hasn't got it—If you think so, pour that wholesome medicine in his ear.[†2]

And if you have a Private Box to spare on the night,[†3] remember the truly Inimitable; so shall he ever pray &c.

Faithfully Always
CD.

W. C. Macready Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 7 DECEMBER 1842*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh December 1842

My Dear Sir,

Can you tell me (in a word) whether Mr. Davis the writer of the letter I enclose, states the Truth?[†4] He mentions the Literary Fund; and perhaps you may know something of his case.

I have not known Mrs. Hone, save by report, until very lately; and therefore do not think (do you?) that I can very well sign the enclosed form.[†5] Perhaps my letter[†6] will serve the purpose as well.

I shall be glad to be at the Board of the Literary Fund once more, if its members, having an opportunity of summoning me thither, should desire to avail themselves of it.[†7]

My Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To RICHARD KING,[†1] 7 DECEMBER 1842

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate Regents Park.
Seventh December 1842.

Dear Sir,

I am much obliged to you for your note, and its accompanying Prospectus;[†2] and I beg to assure you that I am strongly impressed with a sense of the great importance and value of such a society as that whose objects it developes. But I regret to add that I cannot become a member of it at this time; being already connected with so many Institutions, that if I were free of half of them for evermore, I should still be encumbered by the number of the rest.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard King Esquire.

To MRS JOHN DICKENS, [DECEMBER 1842]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 7 DECEMBER 1842

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh December 1842 | Wednesday Night.

My Dear Mitton

I have been so busy and so full of complicated thoughts to day, that I could not get to my Mother in person.[†3] But I have written to her, and shall be glad if you will make the Seventy Pound offer for that little house on Blackheath.[†4]

I inclose a cheque for the Pensioner—four and twenty pounds.[†5]

A party and some hot Punch—made hotter inside of me by dancing, last night[†1]—has rather impaired my memory today. Did you say you would like to go on Saturday, if I could get a newspaper order, or how was it?

Faithfully Yours ever

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To T. J. PETTIGREW,[†2] 7 DECEMBER 1842

Text from N, I, 493.

Devonshire Terrace | December Seventh 1842

My Dear Pettigrew,

I shall be delighted[†3]—and was coming, myself,[†4] this morning to tell you so.

Faithfully yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 DECEMBER 1842]

Extract in F, IV, i, 290. Date: 8 Dec according to Forster.

The Chuzzlewit copy makes so much more than I supposed,[†5] that the number is nearly done. Thank God!

To SAMUEL PHILLIPS,[†1] [?8 DECEMBER 1842]

Extract in Mrs Oliphant, Annals of a Publishing House: William Blackwood and his Sons, 1897, II, 306. Date: probably received by Phillips on 9 Dec (see below).

Having begun your story[†2] I cannot resist telling you at once that I think it excellent, and of great merit, and that next week I promise myself the pleasure of writing you again, and giving you my opinion more in detail.[†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, [10 DECEMBER 1842]†

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly a last minute suggestion for The Patrician's Daughter; could scarcely have been written on Sat 3rd, or To Macready, 4 Dec, would have contained some reference to Macready's response.

Saturday Morning

My Dear Macready

One suggestion, though it be a late one. Do have upon the table in the opening scene of the second act, something in a velvet case or frame that may look like a large Miniature of Mabel[†4]—such as one of Ross's;[†5] and eschew that Picture.[†6] It haunts me with a sense of danger. Even a titter at that critical time[†7] with the whole of that act before you, would be a fatal thing. The picture is bad in itself, bad in its effect upon the beautiful room, bad in all its associations with the house. In case of your having nothing at hand, I send you by Bearer what would be a Million times better.

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I need not remind you how common it is, to have such pictures in cases, lying about elegant rooms: [†a]and what a frightful phenomonon[†1] such a work of art as that Portrait and its stand would be in real life.[†a]

To T. J. PETTIGREW, 14 DECEMBER 1842

Facsimile in Ralph Straus, Dickens: a Portrait in Pencil, 1928, facing p. 72.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth December 1842

My Dear Pettigrew.

I cannot tell you how much I regret the being obliged to say that I have received letters this morning which oblige me to leave town by Railroad immediately on some family business[†2] (not the most pleasant in its nature), which will detain me until tomorrow.[†3]

In haste | Believe me
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Pettigrew Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 15 DECEMBER 1842*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Fifteenth December 1842

My Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge, with very many thanks, the safe receipt of a donation of £50 from the Literary Fund, for Mrs. Hone. And I entreat you to present her most grateful thanks to the Committee of that estimable Society for their liberal gift.[†4]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To [THOMAS] COOKE,[†1] 15 DECEMBER 1842

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Fifteenth December 1842

My Dear Cooke

I am most unfeignedly and heartily obliged to you for your kind remembrance of me. I don't begin in Cornwall,[†2] though it is possible I may come there, in course of time. If you can get the dialect book without inconvenience, I shall be very glad to see it.[†3]

Mrs. D desires her best regards to Mrs. Cooke. And I am always

Hers and Yours | Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

I want to improve the acquaintance of your "little boy"; and I wish you would give me his address.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 16 DECEMBER 1842

Text from N, I, 494.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth December 1842

My Dear George,

I am happy to say that I received the enclosed last night from the Secretary of the Literary Fund, and that I have a fifty pound note to hand over to anyone authorised to receive it on behalf of the committee.

Always believe me | Heartily Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?16 DECEMBER 1842]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: late 1842 on handwriting, and paper watermarked 1842. The first number was "nearly done" on 8 Dec (To Forster, that day); but working time would have been lost on 9th-10th through The Patrician's Daughter and on 14th-15th by the unexpected journey on family business.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday

My Dear Mac

Let our engagement for tonight, stand for tomorrow instead; will you? I am afraid to go out this evening: having pledged myself to the Printer, that I will finish tomorrow morning.[†4]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MRS FRANCES TROLLOPE,[†1] 16 DECEMBER 1842

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park
Sixteenth December 1842

My Dear Mrs. Trollope

Let me thank you most cordially for your kind note in reference to my Notes; which has given me true pleasure and gratification.

As I never scrupled to say in America, so I can have no delicacy in saying to you, that allowing for the change you worked in many social features of American Society, and for the time that has passed since you wrote of the Country,[†2] I am convinced that there is no Writer who has so well and accurately (I need not add, so entertainingly) described it, in many of its aspects, as you have done;[†3] and this renders your praise the more valuable to me.

I do not recollect ever to have heard or seen the charge of exaggeration made against a feeble performance, though, in its feebleness, it may have been most untrue. It seems to me essentially natural, and quite inevitable, that common observers should accuse an uncommon one of this fault. And I have no doubt that you were long ago of this opinion; very much to your comfort.[†1]

Mrs. Dickens begs me to thank you for your kind remembrance of her: and to convey to you, her best regards.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Trollope.

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 DECEMBER [1842]

MS Dickens House. Address: Wait | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Eighteenth December | Sunday

My Dear Beard

I want your help in a pious fraud—such a pious one, that I have no doubt you will give it me.

I am very anxious for many reasons, to possess a little picture which Maclise is at this minute painting;[†2] and I know very well, that if I were to say so, he would either insist upon giving it to me, or would set some preposterous price upon it, which he can by no means afford to take. Now, I think I may purchase it without his knowing I am the purchaser; and if I can, he is a cleverer fellow than I take him to be (highly as I estimate his abilities), if he can ever return the money to me afterwards.

Behold my project.

I want you to write him a note, and say that Mr. So and So of such and such a place in Sussex—one of your country friends—is enthusiastic in his admiration of him, and is very anxious to possess a small picture (he can't afford a large one) of his painting. That he has commissioned you to ask him what he has now by him, and has empowered you to purchase any subject, with one[†3] figure in it. That you have spoken to me on the subject, and I have mentioned privately to you, his having a most charming picture of a girl at a Waterfall. That you wish to buy the girl at the Waterfall, forthwith. That you will take it as a personal favor, if he will sell you the girl at the Waterfall. And that you are prepared to give him the money down, for the girl at the Waterfall, if he will let you know what sum you shall forward to him as her ransom from his damned uncomfortable studio.[†1]

A hundred, or a hundred and fifty Guineas, will most likely be the mark. If you can only buy it, I will give you the needful instantly wherewith to close the bargain;[†2] and a hundred and fifty thousand thanks, in.

All minor points I leave to your discretion.—I suppose you an't at home, and couldn't dine here today at half past five—could you?

Always Faithfully
CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 20 DECEMBER 1842†

MS Berg Collection. Address: George Cattermole Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth December 1842

My Dear George

It is impossible for me to tell you how greatly I am charmed with those beautiful pictures,†3 in which the whole feeling and thought and expression of the little story is rendered to the gratification of my inmost heart; and on which you have lavished those amazing resources of yours with a power, at which I fairly wondered when I sat down yesterday before them.†1

I took them to Mac, straightway, in a cab—and it would have done you good if you could have seen and heard him. You can't think how moved he was by the old man in the church, or how proud I was to have chosen it, before he saw the drawings.

You are such a queer fellow, and hold yourself so much aloof, that I am afraid to say half I would say, touching my grateful admiration. So you shall imagine the rest.

†aI enclose a note from Kate; to which I hope you will bring the only one acceptable reply.†a Always

My Dear Cattermole | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

To LEIGH HUNT, 20 DECEMBER 1842

MS Iowa University Libraries.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth December 1842.

My Dear Hunt.

I have received your letter—and read it with some pain. In Heaven's name, don't imagine there is any man alive from whom you could possibly, if you knew his heart, accept a "favor"†2 with less reason for feeling it a burden or a cause of uneasiness, than

Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 22 DECEMBER 1842

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second December | 1842.

My Dear Beard.

I have a few people coming to dine here tomorrow at a quarter past Six, on a short notice, to meet a gentlemanly bore from Quebec[†3] from whom I received some attentions, who is going away directly. Join us at that hour, and try the Wintages.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 22 DECEMBER [1842]

Extract in Chas J. Sawyer catalogue, 1939; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 22 Dec (1842 on evidence of CD's article).

As I haven't had time to do that "Snoring for the Million"[†1] yet, and shall not have until tomorrow, I will tell Forster to send a boy here for it tomorrow afternoon; and will despatch it straight to the Printers.

To LADY HOLLAND, 23 DECEMBER 1842*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third December 1842

Dear Lady Holland.

I return you, with this, the French Papers you kindly lent me.[†2] And I send, at the same time, Kohl's[†3] book on Russia;[†4] and a queer old book for Mr. Allan,[†5] which he and I were talking of t'other night.[†6]

I will make an early report to you, touching Bulwer.[†1] And am always

Dear Lady Holland | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To MISS CATHERINE HUTTON,[†2] 23 DECEMBER 1842

Text from Catherine H. Beale, Reminiscences of a Gentlewoman of the Last Century, 1891, p. 210.

1, Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regent's Park,
Twenty-third December, 1842.

Dear Miss Hutton,

I am very glad to have heard from you again, and to have such evidence of your good health and spirits as I find in your letter; though I cannot agree with you on the subject of your penmanship, which, in its marvellous plainness, so puts mine to the blush that I should not be at all surprised if, by the time this reaches you, it seems to have been written in red ink.

It gave me a great shock at the time, and I am very unwilling to tell you now, that my friend Pitch[lynn]'s[†3] card is printed.[†4] If it had been written, I would have sent it to you.

I am the worst correspondent in the known world, for when I have been writing (as I have this morning), I am as anxious to get the pen out of my hand, as a school-boy is. But if you will only imagine what I would say to you, and will lay great stress on my assurance that I have committed the offending picture[†5] (it was a bad one) to the flames, you will forgive me readily, for this short infliction.

Always believe me, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hutton.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 23 DECEMBER 1842

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1143 (1915); dated Devonshire Terrace, 23 Dec 42; signed initials.

Mentions that he is writing an article[†1] for Fonblanque, who is ill.

To THOMAS MITTON, 24 DECEMBER [1842]*

MS University of Texas. Date: Christmas Eve was Saturday in 1842; handwriting supports that year.

Saturday Mg. Xmas Eve | 9 o'Clock

My Dear Mitton

I am reminded of my promise to see to the Pantomime,[†2] and am called out at this unholy hour. I shall hope to be in time to see you before you leave. I have not more than £20 at Coutts's, in all.[†3]

Faithfully Always
CD

To COUNT D'ORSAY, [26 DECEMBER 1842]*

MS Comte de Gramont. Date: Maclise had sat to D'Orsay on Tues 20 Dec 42;[†4] doubtless CD was writing the following Monday. He, Maclise and Forster dined at Gore House on Wed 28 Dec (see To Maclise, 27 Dec).

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I think Maclise's profile, most excellent. I should have recognized it instantly, though I had seen it pasted on the wooden leg of a Greenwich Pensioner,[†5] or in any other equally unexpected place. It is a very striking likeness; and is full of character.

I shall be rejoiced to dine at Gore House on Wednesday. Pray convey my best regards, with all the good wishes of the Season, to Lady Blessington and the Miss Powers—I can't say "the Misses Power", for it looks so like the blue board at the Gate of a Ladies' Seminary.[†1]

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My Wife has just come in, and is delighted with Maclise's likeness, which, she says, he couldn't have done better, if he had done it himself.

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 27 DECEMBER 1842

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1922; MS 3 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 27 Dec 42.[†2]

About the Sanatorium.

There is a natural repugnance on the part of most people to be in the society or neighborhood of madmen.... Touching Mrs. Gibbons[†3] she appears rather to have gone into the matter as if the patients were, by the ordinary and established laws of nature, her natural enemies—as if she were a warranted mouser and they all mice.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 27 DECEMBER 1842*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh December 1842

My Dear Mac

I received yours, this morning.

I have had a Note from D'Orsay asking me to dine there, tomorrow. I can't make out from its contents whether you are already invited or I am to invite you; for he says "you, Maclise, and Forster, en famille". How is it? Do you go? I will.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 DECEMBER 1842]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: Handwriting suggests late 1842; possibly "the Notice" was his Examiner review of Macready's pantomime (see To Mitton, 24 Dec and fn). Address: John Forster Esqre.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evg.

My Dear F.

Here is the Notice.—I will come down at about 12 tomorrow, to correct the proof, if you can have it by that time.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MRS LYDIA MARIA CHILD,[†1] 28 DECEMBER 1842*

MS Boston Public Library. Address: [By M]ail Steamer | [Mrs. Lydia] M. Child | [Ne]w York | United States.[†2]

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Twenty Eighth December 1842.

My Dear Madam.

Let me thank you for your earnest and interesting letter; and pray do not estimate the amount of pleasure I have had in it, by the length of my reply: which has reference only to the extent of my correspondence and the nature of my avocations.

You hardly give me credit, I think, for being as good a friend to Temperance as I really am.[†3] As to denying myself my cheerful glass of wine because other men get drunk, I see no more reason for doing so, than I do for recognizing no distinction between Use and Abuse in any other commodity, temporal or spiritual. I am a great friend to Temperance, and a great foe to Abstinence. The more stoutly that Abstinence is insisted upon now, the more clearly I can foresee, I think, that the next age will run riot in Drunkenness. For all history and experience warn us that of one violent extreme, its opposite has always sprung.

Besides which, there is an immense amount of ignorance and folly and false reasoning, constantly broached by the Abstinence Disseminators. The position that Drunkenness is the cause of all other passions, is one of the most monstrous in the world. You will almost invariably find that some other passion has been the cause of Drunkenness; and that that vice is the coping on the top of most of the Devil's Edifices—not the foundation stone, as your mole-eyed enquirers into Human Nature would have us believe.

The man who cannot drink without drinking too much for his Soul and Body, should be urged to abstinence by all manner of means. But the man who can, should be left alone. If I walk among honest men with my hand kerchief hanging out of my pocket, I am guilty of throwing no temptation in their way, but if I do the like among thieves I am very culpable indeed.

To STEPHEN COLLINS, 28 DECEMBER 1842*

MS New York University Library. Address: By Mail Steamer | Stephen Collins Esquire | Baltimore | United States.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Twenty Eighth December 1842

Dear Sir.

I have duly received your letter and your book;[†1] for both of which, I beg to thank you cordially.

Mrs. Dickens (who, with our children, is quite well and happy) begs to be kindly remembered to you.

I am always, Dear Sir
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Stephen Collins Esquire.

To MESSRS LEA & BLANCHARD, 28 DECEMBER 1842

MS Messrs Lea & Febiger. Address: Private. By Mail Steamer. | Messrs. Lea and Blanchard. | Philadelphia. | United States.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Twenty Eighth December 1842.

Dear Sirs

Rest assured that if any personal or private feeling were intermixed with the resolution at which I arrived when I came home in reference to American republications of my books,[†2] it would have great weight in your favor. I formed it, on principle. Disgusted with the infamous state of the Law in respect of Copyright, and confirmed in the opinion I have always held that there is no reasonable ray of hope of its being changed for very many years to come, I determined that so far as I was concerned the American people should have the full pride, honor, glory, and profit of it; that I would be no party to its evasion; and that I would have nothing blown to me by a side-wind, which the dishonest breath of the popular legislature with-held.

I hope that the more you see of this plunder, and the dirty hands into which it goes; the more you will feel and advocate the necessity of a change.†1

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard.

To CORNELIUS MATHEWS,†2 28 DECEMBER 1842†

MS Berg Collection. Address: By Mail Steamer. | Cornelius Mathews Esquire | 14 Pine Street | New York | United States.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Twenty Eighth December 1842

My Dear Sir

I was very glad to receive your letter, and to read your remarks on the spirit of my American book. I know it deserves them for its good intentions.

Do not suppose, I beg you, that I for a moment misunderstood your suggestions in reference to the want of an International Copyright, or that I conceived it possible you had any personal or private interest to serve, in making them. I simply intended to convey to you my rooted and decided objection to get the better of †a the nefarious system which now exists†a (and will, long after you and I are dead) by an evasion, or to take anything from the American People which they will not give me honestly and openly. So far as I am concerned, your†1 intensely intelligent and respectable newspapers†2 shall have the full credit and profit of the present state of things. And perhaps, in time, your publishers may begin to see that it is their interest to have some Law besides the Law of Plunder.

I have to thank you for the Copy of Puffer Hopkins†3 you have kindly sent me for myself; and to acknowledge the receipt of those other sheets of the same work which you sent me at the same time, for a purpose to which, I am sorry to say, I cannot put them. I know of no publisher here, who is at all disposed to reprint an American book unless it have attached to it, some name which is already well known on this side of the water. Since I came home, I have, in the discharge of other commissions to the same effect, several times offered American books (on any terms) to Mr. Moxon,†4 the most likely bookseller for the purpose; but always with the same result.

In the matter of the Brother Jonathan, I would certainly recommend you to take charge of that Journal, if you can do so with profit and advantage.[†5] As to your using the works of British Authors, there can be no doubt that you would be justified in doing so, while matters remain as they are; and that the best return you could make, would be the advocacy of an honorable and honest change. At the same time, I am quite certain in my own mind that such an advocacy would be prejudicial to the interest of the paper, and would seriously affect its circulation, when opposed to the [†b]free and independent doctrines of Mr. Benjamin; which are popular and patriotic.[†b]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Cornelius Mathews Esquire

To FRANK STONE,[†6] 28 DECEMBER 1842*

MS Mr David Borowitz.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Twenty Eighth December 1842

My Dear Stone

All manner of childish entertainments are coming off here on Twelfth Night, in honor of my eldest son attaining the tremendous age of six years. It has occurred to me that a few older boys and girls (all of whom you know) might protract the festivities on their own account, and make a merry evening of it. Come and try—as early as between 7 and 8. I have asked Charles Landseer[†1] to join us, also.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 29 DECEMBER 1842

MS Princeton University Library.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Ninth December 1842.

My Dear Longfellow.

I was delighted to receive your assurance of your safe arrival among our hearty friends, and to think of your sitting down in your own comfortable rooms[†2] after all your cold watering[†3] (and Good God what a quantity of water you had in that halfyear, counting the two passages!) safe and sound again. I was but poorly received when I came home from Bristol that night,[†4] in consequence of my inability to report that I had left you actually on board the Great Western; and that I had seen the chimney smoking. But I have got over this ... gradually; and am again respected.

I have been blazing away at my new book, whereof the first Number will probably be published under the black flag,[†5] almost as soon as you receive this. The Notes had an enormous sale;[†6] and I trust the Chuzzlewit (so I call this new baby) will go and do likewise. I quite agree with you that we shall never live to see the passing of an International Law. I have always held the same opinion. But we may sow the seed, and leave the gathering of the fruit to others.

Heaven speed your Slavery poems![†7] They will be manful, vigorous, and full of indignant Truth, I know. I am looking for them eagerly. By the way I have been somewhat shocked to find that Everett[†1] plays fast and loose in our English Society on that question; and says, as any trimming counting-house porter might, "that it is easy to find fault with the system, and not so easy to propound a remedy"[†2]—as if any man with a head on his shoulders fit for anything but a block to put his hat on, did not know perfectly well that it is only after many years of strong denouncement that any remedy in such a case has birth! But here is another instance of the discordant materials he represents. He is the Minister of the Federal Government; and the Federal Government upholds Slavery—wherefore the man of Massachusetts goes to the wall and Freedom with him.

There is nothing new here. A tragedy of the present day has been played at Drury Lane, for which I wrote a Prologue which was spoken by Macready. It has been excellently received, but has not drawn money. He is quite well. Mrs. Macready has just presented him with a little girl,[†3] with whose coming (having an indifferent good stock already) they would perhaps have dispensed if they could have done so, conveniently.[†4] Forster thinks he is hard at work; in which delusion he has been plunged for the last six years.[†5] Rogers has appeared at a Police Office, after threshing divers frail ladies (his former concubines) with a big umbrella.[†6] Talfourd—who much regrets not having seen you[†1]—is in rude health and high spirits, in consequence of the Tragedy before-mentioned, not having proved attractive.[†2] George Cruikshank got rather drunk here, last Friday night, and declined to go away until Four in the morning, when he went—I don't know where, but certainly not home.[†3] D'Orsay was in great force yesterday, when I dined at Gore House;[†4] and Lady Blessington asked kindly after you. Maclise is painting wonderful pictures.[†5] And the Cornwall expedition was the greatest success ever known in this country.

After you left us, Charley invented and rehearsed with his sisters a dramatic scene in your honor, which is still occasionally enacted. It commences with expressive pantomime, and begins immediately after the ceremony of drinking healths. The three small glasses are all raised together, and they look at each other very hard. Then Charley cries "Mr. Longfellow! Hoo—ra— a— a— a— a— a— e!". Two other shrill voices repeat the sentiment, and the little glasses are drained to the bottom. The whole concludes with a violent rapping of the table, and a hideous barking from the little dog, who wakes up for the purpose.

They all send their loves to you, in which Kate joins very earnestly. I wish you had seen her sister who is usually with us, as she is now;[†6] but was with her mother when you were here. There was[†7] another when we were first married, but She has been my better Angel six long years.

Ever My Dear Longfellow Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Mc Dowall the boo[t] Maker,[†1] Beale the Hosier,[†2] Laffin the Trousers Maker,[†3] and Blackmore the Coat Cutter,[†4] have all been at the point of death, but have slowly recovered. The medical gentlemen agreed that it was exhaustion, occasioned by early rising—to wait upon you, at those unholy hours.[†5]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 30 DECEMBER [1842]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 30 Dec was Friday in 1842; handwriting supports that year.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night Thirtieth Decr.

My Dear Talfourd.

My attention was attracted to the book in the accompanying parcel, by an advertisement in the Papers the other day, which announced for eighteen pence Such and such a Volume of "Parley's Library. Containing every incident in The Old Curiosity Shop and Barnaby Rudge".[†6] The yellow pamphlets (Nos. of the same publication)[†7] contain a great amount of Extract from the American Book.[†1] The fellow who publishes these Piracies hasn't a penny in the World; but I shall be glad to know, at your convenience, whether the Law gives us any means of stopping him short.[†2]

If you will tell me in one line, when and where I can see you, I will come, and be much obliged to you.

My Dear Talfourd | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To C. C. FELTON, 31 DECEMBER 1842†

MS Huntington Library. Address: By Mail Steamer. | Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park

Thirty First December 1842

My dear Felton. Many and many happy New Years to you and yours! As many happy children as may be quite convenient, (no more); and as many happy meetings between them and our children and between you and us, as the kind Fates in their utmost kindness shall favorably decree!

The American book (to begin with that), has been a most complete and thorough-going success—Four large Editions have now been sold and paid for;[†3] and it has won golden opinions from all sorts of men[†4]—except our friend in

— III - 412 —

Fraser,[†1] who is a miserable creature; a disappointed man in great poverty, to whom I have ever been most kind and considerate (I need scarcely say that); and another friend in Blackwood[†2]—no less a person than an illustrious gentleman named Warren,[†3] who wrote a story called Ten Thousand a Year.[†4] They have done no harm, and have fallen short of their mark, which, of course, was to annoy me. Now I am perfectly free from any diseased curiosity in such respects, and whenever I hear of a notice of this kind, I never read it. Whereby I always conceive (don't you?) that I get the Victory. With regard to your Slave owners, they may cry, 'till they are as black in the face as their own Slaves, that Dickens lies. Dickens does not write for their satisfaction, and Dickens will not explain for their comfort. Dickens has[†1] the name and date of every newspaper in which every one of those advertisements[†2] appeared;—as they know perfectly well; but Dickens does not choose to give them, and will not, at any time between this and the Day of Judgment. [†a]Neither will Dickens correct, to the joy of the Republican Free (and Easy) Newspapers, any little local errors into which he has fallen—not even that of Brock's Monument,[†3] which is a misprint[†4]—but he will leave the book with all its imperfections on its head,[†5] just as it first came out, and alter nothing.([a]

— III - 413 —

I have been hard at work on my new book, of which the first Number has just appeared.[†6] The Paul Jones's[†7] who pursue Happiness—and Profit—at other mens'[†1] cost, will no doubt enable you to read it, almost as soon as you receive this. I hope you will like it. And I particularly commend, my dear Felton, one Mr. Pecksniff and his daughters, to your tender regard.[†2] I have a kind of liking for them, myself.

— III - 414 —

Blessed star of morning, such a trip as[†3] we had into Cornwall, just after Longfellow went away! The "we", means Forster, Maclise, Stanfield (the renowned Marine Painter) and the Inimitable Boz. We went down into Devonshire by the Railroad, and there we hired an open carriage[†4] from an Innkeeper, patriotic in all Pickwick matters; and went on with Post Horses. Sometimes we travelled all night; sometimes all day; sometimes both.[†5] I kept the joint stock purse; ordered all the dinners and drinks;[†6] paid all the turnpikes; conducted facetious conversations with the postboys; and regulated the pace at which we travelled. Stanfield (an old sailor) consulted an enormous map on all disputed points of wayfaring: and referred moreover to a pocket compass and other scientific Instruments. The luggage was in Forster's department; and Maclise, having nothing particular to do, sang songs. Heavens! If you could have seen the necks of bottles—distracting in their immense varieties of shape—peering out of the carriage pockets! If you could have witnessed the deep devotion of the post boys—the wild attachment of the Hostlers—the maniac glee of the waiters. If you could have followed us into the earthy old Churches we visited, and into the strange caverns on the gloomy seashore, and down into the depths of Mines,[†7] and up to the tops of giddy heights[†8] where the unspeakably green water was roaring I dont know how many hundred feet below! If you could have seen but one gleam of the bright fires by which we sat in the big rooms of ancient Inns at night, until long after the small hours had come and gone—or smelt but one steam of the hot[†1] Punch (not white, dear Felton, like that amazing compound I sent you a taste of, but a rich, genial, glowing brown) which came in every evening in a huge broad china Bowl! I never laughed in my life as I did on this journey. It would have done you good to hear me. I was choaking and gasping and bursting the buckle off the back of my stock, all the way. And Stanfield (who is very much of your figure and temperament, but fifteen years older) got into such apoplectic entanglements that we were often obliged to beat him on the back with Portmanteaus before we could recover him. Seriously, I do believe there never was such a trip.[†2] And they made such sketches, those two men, in the most romantic of our halting places,[†3] that you would have sworn we had the Spirit of Beauty with us, as well as the Spirit of Fun.—But stop 'till you come to England—I say no more—.

The actuary of the National Debt couldn't calculate the number of children who are coming here on Twelfth Night, in honor of Charley's birthday, for which occasion I have provided a Magic Lantern and divers other tremendous engines of that nature. But the best of it, is, that Forster and I have purchased between us the entire stock in trade of a conjurer,[†1] the practice and display whereof is entrusted to me. And oh my dear eyes, Felton, if you could see me conjuring the company's watches into impossible tea caddies, and causing pieces of money to fly, and burning pocket handkerchiefs without hurting 'em,— and practising in my own room, without anybody to admire—you would never forget it as long as you live. In those tricks which require a confederate I am assisted (by reason of his imperturbable good humour) by Stanfield, who always does his part exactly the wrong way: to the unspeakable delight of all beholders. We come out on a small scale tonight, at Forster's, where we see the Old Year out and the New One in. Particulars [†b]of Success[†b] shall be forwarded in my next.

I have quite made up my mind that Forster[†2] really belie[ves][†3] he does know you personally, and has, all his life. He talks to me about you with such gravity that I am afraid to grin; and feel it necessary to look quite serious. Sometimes he tells me things about you—doesn't ask me, you know—so that I am, occasionally perplexed beyond all telling, and begin to think it was he, and not I, who went to America. It's the queerest thing in the World.

The book I was to have given Longfellow for you, is not worth sending by itself: being only a Barnaby. But I will look up some Manuscript for you (I think I have that of the American Notes complete)[†1] and will try to make the parcel better worth its long conveyance. With regard to Maclise's pictures, you certainly are quite right in your impression of them; but he is "such a discursive devil", (as he says of himself) and flies off at such odd tangents that I feel it difficult to convey to you any general notion of his purpose. I will try to do so, when I write again.[†2]

I want very much to know about Howe[†3] and that charming girl;[†4] [†c]and to hear whether he has got as far as the finger (or squeezing) language yet.[†5c] Give me full particulars. Will you remember me cordially to Sumner, and say I thank him for his welcome letter? The like to Hillard, with many regards to himself and his [†d]most sensible[†d] wife, with whom I had one night a little conversation which I shall not readily forget.[†6] The like to Washington Allston, and all friends who care for me, and have outlived my book. [†e]Kate joins me in earnest and affectionate remembrances to yourself and Mrs. Felton and your little daughters. So does Charley. So does Mary. So does Kate. So does Walter.[†e] Always My Dear Felton

With true regard and affection Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. PRESCOTT, [28-31 DECEMBER 1842]

Mention in Prescott to CD, 30 Jan 43. Date: received by Prescott "by the last steamer", i.e. the Caledonia, which had sailed from Liverpool 4 Jan and arrived in Boston 25 Jan; CD clearly intended his other American letters of 28-31 Dec for the same boat.

About arrangements for the publication of Mme Calderón's book, and stating the amount Chapman & Hall proposed to advance. [†7]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?LATE DECEMBER 1842]

Text from W. Justin O'Driscoll, A Memoir of Daniel Maclise, R.A., 1871, p. 67. Date: clearly soon after the "device" (see To Beard, 18 Dec and fn) was revealed to Maclise, which must have been not long after the payment of the cheque to Beard on 24 Dec, but later than To Maclise, 27 Dec, where the matter is not mentioned.

Do not be offended. I quite appreciate the feeling which induced you to return what I sent you;[†1] notwithstanding, I must ask you to take it back again. If I could have contemplated for an instant the selfish engrossment of so much of your time and extraordinary powers, I should have had no need (knowing you, I knew that well) to resort to the little device[†2] I played off. I will take anything else from you at any time that you will give me, any scrap from your hand; but I entreat you not to disturb this matter.[†3] I am willing to be your debtor for anything else in the whole wide range of your art, as you shall very readily find whenever you put me to the proof.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [?1842]

Extract in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 50 (1914); from Devonshire Terrace. Date: Probably CD's thanks were for one (or both) of Stanfield's watercolour drawings, Land's End and The Logan Rock,[†4] done during the trip to Cornwall Oct-Nov 42 (see To Felton, 31 Dec, fn p. 415).

My dear Stanfield

Many thanks for your most beautiful present, which I shall frame conspicuously, and prize, most highly.

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards to Mrs. Stanfield and hopes she is getting on well,

1843

January

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 2 JANUARY 1843*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1843.

My Dear Count D'Orsay

Mrs. Dickens thinks the portrait,[†1] "capital", and so do divers other domestic authorities who have seen it—though some protest that the lower part of the face is susceptible of improvement.

I have kept it thus long, to collect opinions.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Le Comte D'Orsay.

To FRANK STONE, 2 JANUARY [1843]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 1842 impossible; clearly CD's error for 1843. Handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1842

My Dear Stone

Did you get a letter I wrote to you t'other day,[†2] and forwarded Per Post, touching the next Twelfth Night as ever comes? If 'yes', well and good. If 'no', learn that you are expected here, early on that Evening.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To LEIGH HUNT, 3 JANUARY 1843

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Third January 1843.

My Dear Hunt.

Next Friday—Twelfth Night—is the Anniversary of my Son and Heir's birthday; on which occasion, a Magic Lantern and divers other engines are going to be let off on these premises.

I have asked some children of a larger growth (all of whom you know)[†3] to come and make merry on their own account. If you be well enough to join us, and will do so by half past seven, you will give my Wife and myself great pleasure, and (I think I may predict) Leigh Hunt no pain.

Always Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To FREDERICK MARRYAT, 3 JANUARY [1843]

Text from Life and Letters of Captain Marryat, ed. Florence Marryat, 1872, II, 118-9. Date: 6 Jan was Friday in 1843; and see To Hunt, above, and next. Misdated 1849 in N, II, 141.

Devonshire Terrace | January 3

My Dear Marryat,

Friday next—twelfth night—is the anniversary of my son and heir's birthday; on which occasion I am going to let off a magic lantern and other strong engines.

I have asked some children of a larger growth (nearly all of whom you know) to come and make merry. If you are in town, and will join us as early as halfpast seven or so, you will give us very great pleasure.

Faithfully yours always,

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK MARRYAT, 3 JANUARY 1843*

MS Colegate University Library, New York.

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1843

My Dear Marryat

As we old girls and boys will muster in sufficient strength to defend ourselves, on Friday; I can safely promise to give you some Supper. But I think it would be prudent if you were to dine before you come.

My son and heir is not (being of very tender years) a fast-goer in the reading way, yet: and consequently is not in the possession of Masterman Ready.[†1] But I will undertake for his being very proud of the book as your gift, when he is much older. And if he be not Delighted with its contents, he is no son of mine—which, at present, I believe him to be. So don't forget it, please.

I will immediately remedy that dire mistake, concerning the American Notes.[†2] I cannot conceive how it has arisen, but I am as much vexed, as if it were my own fault.

They sent me that Christian Book[†3] too. Setting aside the incidental cant, I thought it a good article.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Marryat.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 JANUARY 1843*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss B Coutts (in Mrs Dickens's hand).

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Sixth January | 1843

Dear Miss Coutts

I shall be delighted to dine with you on Wednesday next—always supposing that the fatality which seems to have attended all my recent chances of seeing you, should so far relent, as to allow me to enjoy that pleasure.

Always Yours | Faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 JANUARY 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 292. Date: 8 Jan according to Forster.

I hope the number[†1] will be very good. I have been hammering away, and at home all day. Ditto yesterday; except for two hours in the afternoon, when I ploughed through snow half a foot deep, round about the wilds of Willesden.

To [LADY BURDETT], 13 JANUARY 1843*

MS Chicago University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth January 1843.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to [Lady Burdett][†2] and begs to express (with Compliments to [Sir Francis])[†3] the great regret it gives him to be already engaged on Monday, and therefore unable to dine in [Saint James's Place].[†4]

Mr. Dickens begs, at the same time, to forward to [Lady Burdett], two very small Mineral Specimens from America, which he brought home expressly for [her]. The yellow piece, is Virginia Marble;[†5] and the dark piece is from Niagara.[†6] He brought it away from behind the Great Horse Shoe Fall, where it formed a portion of the cavern worn into the Rock by the mere spray of the Cascade in tumbling over from the height above. It has been saturated in its dismal home, for Ages.

To MISS HANNAH MEREDITH, 13 JANUARY 1843

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth Jany. 1843

Dear Miss Meredith

Pray thank Miss Coutts from me, for her kindness in respect of the box.

I am sorry I was not at home, and able to answer your note yesterday. I was ploughing at a tremendous pace through the snow near Harrow, with Mr. Pinch on my right hand and the Pecksniffs on my left.[†1]

To day I have sent Lady Burdett a piece (a very small one) of Niagara, and also a tiny scrap of Virginia Marble. As ill-luck would have it, I was already engaged for Monday.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to add her Compliments.

Always Believe Me

(with the firm conviction that you will shortly dote (dramatically speaking) on Anderson)[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Meredith

To JOHN TOMLIN,[†3] 13 JANUARY 1843

Text from N, I, 503.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park, London
January 13, 1843.

Dear Sir,

I am much flattered by your having inscribed to me your very beautiful lines to Shelley's memory.[†4] I have read them with very great pleasure, and like them exceedingly. I regret, however, that I cannot undertake to procure their insertion in a London Magazine, as I have no connection with any of them, and am obliged to make a rule never to address their Editors on behalf of other writers. If I did, I assure you they would have no rest; and I should be suffocated by favours of their conferring.

Always your faithful and obliged,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 15 JANUARY 1843

Text from The Times, 16 Jan 43.

1, Devonshire-Terrace, Sunday, Jan. 15.

Sir,

In your paper of Saturday you thought it worth while to refer to an article on my American Notes published in the recent number of the Edinburgh Review,[†1] for the purpose of commenting on a statement of the reviewer's in reference to the English and American press, with which I have no further concern than that I know it to be a monstrous likening of unlike things.[†2]

I am anxious to give another misrepresentation made by the same writer, whosoever he may be,—which is personal to myself,—the most public and positive contradiction in my power; and I shall be really obliged to you if you will allow me to do this through the medium of your columns.

He asserts "That if he be rightly informed, I went to America as a kind of missionary in the cause of international copyright."[†3] I deny it wholly. He is wrongly informed; and reports, without inquiry, a piece of information which I could only characterize by using one of the shortest and strongest words in the language. Upon my honour the assertion is destitute of any particle, aspect, or colouring of truth.

It occurred to me to speak (as other English travellers connected with literature have done before me) of the existing laws—or rather want of laws—on the subject of international copyright, when I found myself in America, simply because I had never hesitated to denounce their injustice while at home; because I thought it a duty to English writers, that their case should be fairly represented; and because, inexperienced at that time in the American people, I believed that they would listen to the truth, even from one presumed to have an interest in stating it, and would no longer refuse to recognize a principle of common honesty, even though it happened to clash with a miserably shortsighted view of their own profit and advantage.

I am, Sir, your obliged servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 JANUARY 1843†

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Sixteenth Jany. | 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts

I am very sorry to say that we, only yesterday, made an engagement for Wednesday. I was not much disposed to contemplate it with satisfaction then; but now I hate it.

Mr. Penn†1 made an engagement to call on me on Wednesday Morning, "to talk about America". I find I shall not have finished my Number by that time, and must put him off. As I don't know his address, if Miss Meredith would kindly convey this piece of information to him on my behalf, per post—adding that I shall be glad to see him any day next week he may appoint—she would bind me to her for ever.

Your note finds me in Mr. Pinch's society. He seems comfortable and in good spirits: having a holiday.†2

Always believe me | Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts P.S. Mrs. Dickens begs me to present her compliments, and to express her regrets.

To MRS M'IAN, 16 JANUARY 1843*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Sixteenth Jany. | 1843.

Dear Mrs. Mc Ian

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind Note, and will certainly do myself the pleasure of calling tomorrow.

I hope your face is better.

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Mc Ian

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 JANUARY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Seventeenth Jany. 1843

My Dear Henry

Mitton is going to dine with me at the Jack Straw's Castle at Hampstead, on Friday next, when I shall most likely have the new No. in my pocket. Will you be my only other guest? If so, let us meet at his place in Southampton Buildings at 3, and I will drive you up there.

With love to Letitia, | Always Affectionately
CD.

Henry Austin Esquire

To R. R. M'IAN,[†1] 17 JANUARY 1843*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth January 1843

My Dear Sir

I am perfectly delighted with the Sketches[†2] you have so kindly sent me. I will swear to their truthfulness, at all times and seasons, and am proud to possess them. Thank you, heartily.

There seems to be some spell against my calling in Coram Street,[†3] for I have twice been kept in double irons at home, when I have been coming to you. Will you and Mrs. Mc Ian reverse the venture, and promise to come to us next Wednesday at Six exactly? That is our dinner-hour. We have either no party at all, or a very, very, small one.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. R. Mc Ian Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, [17 JANUARY 1843]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: the Tuesday before Fri 20 Jan 43; see fn. Handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Mitton

Unless Friday will be too late for Parbury purposes,[†1] I should like to appoint that morning at your own hour. If Thursday would be better, I can (but not so conveniently) make it that day instead.

Faithfully Always

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To [JOSEPH] ABLETT,[†2] 19 JANUARY 1843*

MS Yale University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth Jany. 1843.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ablett, and begs, with many thanks, to acknowledge the receipt of his kind cheque on the London and Westminster for Two Pounds, in aid of the Subscription for the Widow and family[†3] of the late Mr. Hone.

To WILLIAM DAY,[†1] 19 JANUARY 1843†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth January 1843

My Dear Sir.

Let me thank you for the proof of the letter you have addressed to me;[†2] which I received, by your favor, this morning. I have read it with the greatest satisfaction. And though I cannot lay claim to the merit you would give me; for doing so slight a thing as denouncing Slavery on any terms, but especially in co-existence with that monstrous Lie, the declaration of American Independence; still I cannot but feel proud of your approval and Good opinion.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Day Esquire

To MRS FRANCES TROLLOPE, 19 JANUARY 1843†

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth Jany. 1843

My Dear Mrs. Trollope.

Do, in the name of all the live physic[†3] in the World, read my letter from your esteemed correspondent! And when you have done so, kindly send it back to me: for it is too good to be lost.

What do you suppose the delicate readers of books (whose ears, as Mrs. Slipslop[†4] says, are the delicatest parts about them) would have said, if you had imagined such a case as this, in your Domestic Manners?

I am much pleased by your communicating the matter to me: and can only feel gratified by your making any mention of me you please, to this, or any other skulker under the Black Flag of Literature.

But it is right I should tell you, at the same time, that I have not yet learned that there is any general intention of abstaining from the custom of selling early proofs when they are asked for, on the other side. Indeed I know of nobody save myself who has come to that resolution.

Always Believe me | Dear Mrs. Trollope
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Trollope.

P.S. I have sent Mr. T. J. Marshall,[†1] this letter from my Solicitors.

Sir

We are requested by our client, Mr. Charles Dickens, to inform you, that having had an opportunity of comparing your letter to him of the 13th. Instant, with another (to a similar purpose, but couched in a very different tone) which you addressed elsewhere on the very next day; he would consider himself degraded by holding any communication with you.

We have it further in request from Mr. Dickens, to acquaint you, that if you address him again, your letter will be returned, unopened, to the Post Office; and that your letter of the 13th. would have been sent back to you herewith, but that it is probable Mr. Dickens may want it for reference hereafter.

Smithson and Mitton
23 Southampton Buildings.

To SIR ROBERT INGLIS,[†2] 21 JANUARY 1843

Mention in Stan Henkels catalogue No. 1297 (1922); dated Devonshire Terrace, 21 Jan 43.

Regretting his inability to accept an invitation.

To FREDERICK MARRYAT, 21 JANUARY 1843*

Facsimile, Nicolas Rauch S.A. Geneva (Auction catalogue No. 13).

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First Jany. 1843

My Dear Marryat.

I have always been on friendly terms with Bulwer, but I am by no means pleased with his having taken no notice of my International Copyright letter. I held my Gauntlet somewhat toughly to Jonathan's nose, and should have deserved better of the Baronet though I had been a stranger.

Therefore I will not sign his paper;[†1] the rather as it seems to me to be an unnecessary kind of flourish, importing that we mean to do, what we can do very well, without blast of trumpet.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg to be well remembered to you. We are going to Bath[†2] today, but shall be home again in the middle of the week.

Always My Dear Marryat | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MACVEY NAPIER, 21 JANUARY 1843

MS British Museum.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty First January 1843.

My Dear Sir.

In acknowledging the receipt of your two letters, let me hasten to say, in the fullest and most explicit manner, that you have acted a most honorable, open, fair, and manly part in the matter of my complaint;[†3] for which I beg you to accept my best thanks, and the assurance of my friendship and regard.

I would on no account, publish the letter you have sent me for that purpose; as I conceive that doing so, I should not reciprocate the spirit in which you have written to me privately. But if you should, upon consideration, think it not inexpedient to set the Review right in regard to this point of fact, by a note in the next number,[†1] I should be glad to see it there.

In reference to the article itself (which I consider now, as I need hardly say, quite apart from you) it did, by repeating this statement, hurt my feelings excessively; and is, in this respect, I still conceive, most unworthy of its author. I am at no loss to divine who its author is.[†2] I know he read in some cut-throat American paper, this and other monstrous statements, which I could at any time have converted into sickening praise by the payment of some fifty dollars. I know that he is perfectly aware that his statement in the Review, in corroboration of these Lies, will be disseminated through the whole of the United States; and that my contradiction will never be heard of. And though I care very little for the opinion of any person who will set the statement of an American Editor (almost invariably an atrocious scoundrel) against my character and conduct, such as they may be; still, my sense of Justice does revolt from this most cavalier and careless exhibition of me to a whole people, as a traveller under false pretences, and a disappointed intriguer.

The better the acquaintance with America, the more defenceless and more inexcusable such conduct is. For I solemnly declare (and appeal to any man, but the Writer of this Paper, who has travelled in that country; for confirmation of my statement) that the source from which he drew the "Information" so recklessly put forth again in England, is infinitely more obscene, disgusting, and brutal, than the very worst Sunday newspaper that has ever been printed in Great Britain.—Conceive the Edinburgh Review, quoting "The Satirist", or "The Man about Town", as an authority against a man with one grain of honor or feather-weight of reputation!

With regard to yourself, let me say again that I thank you with all sincerity and heartiness; and fully acquit you of everything but kind and generous intentions towards me. In proof of which, I do assure you that I am even more desirous than before, to write for the Review, and to find some topic which would at once please me, and you.

My Dear Sir I am always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

Professor Napier

To LORD BROUGHAM, 25 JANUARY 1843*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth January 1843.

Dear Lord Brougham.

I have been passing a few days at Bath; on my return from which place, last night, I found your kind letter.[†2] I address my answer to your town residence: hoping, from what you tell me of your movements, that you are already on your way home.

The first information I had of that mighty cool and reckless statement in the Edinburgh review (taken, by the bye, from the most atrocious of the American Newspapers;[†3] which I could have silenced at any time by the payment of a pound or two; or by consenting—which I never would—to receive the Editor) was brought to me last Saturday Week. I immediately wrote a letter to the Times, giving it the flattest and strongest contradiction I could put into words. I did not write to Napier, because I knew; having always been on friendly terms with him; that he was kindly disposed towards me. And I was apprehensive that by doing so, I might occasion some difference between him and Jeffrey, who, I also knew, was very favourable to the book, in his affectionate regard for me.

But the next Post brought me a long, and very honorable letter, from Napier himself: giving me the whole history of the Notice (except the Writer's name) and expressing his very great regret. He enclosed a second letter; for publication if I desired; retracting the assertion most explicitly and fully. I wrote him back, that I would on no account publish it, as I did not think I should, in doing so, respond to the manly spirit in which he had written to me. But that if he thought it not inexpedient to correct the statement by a note in the next No. of the review, I should be glad to see it there.

I have not the least doubt of the review having been written by Lord Morpeth.†4 Not the slightest in the world.

The English Press†1 is bad enough—a great part of it, very bad—but it can no more be compared with the American Journalism, than a silver fork can be likened to a bowie knife, or a gold bracelet to an iron handcuff. I firmly believe it has no parallel in the history of the World. And I hope to God it never may have.

I quite agree with you in your estimate of the power of newspapers at home, in the long run. But in the short run—the trot of the day—they can be Angel or Devil—as the humour seizes them—with vast effect, I think.

I am always | My Dear Lord
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Brougham.

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 25 JANUARY 1843

Mention in unidentified catalogue, New York Public Library, and in N, I, 505; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 25 Jan 43 (date in N); signed initials.

Bitterly attacking Lord Morpeth for writing a review.

To W. M. THACKERAY,†2 26 JANUARY 1843

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth January 1843.

My Dear Thackeray

I have been at Bath for some few days.—Remember, that I expect you to dinner on Sunday, at Six, sharp. No party.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD LANE,[†1] 30 JANUARY 1843*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

Monday Morng | January 30th. | 1843

My Dear Sir

Tomorrow at eleven will suit me excellently well.

I am very sorry that "Mercy"[†2] arrived when I was dressing; and that I could not therefore have the pleasure of becoming personally acquainted with her. But I count on having that gratification before long.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Lane Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 30 JANUARY [1843]

MS Chas J. Sawyer Ltd. Date: 1843 on handwriting.

Victoria By The Grace of God Queen Defender of The Faith, to her trusty subjects John Forster and Charles Dickens, Greeting.

This is to will and require you, the said John Forster and Charles Dickens to have in your safe keeping, at No 1 Devonshire Terrace on this present Thirtieth day of January at half past five exactly, the body of Clarkson Stanfield, Royal Academician, and him in safe Custody to keep and hold, until the said Clarkson has taken his fill of certain Meat, to wit hashed Venison from America, and has washed down the same with certain liquors, to wit fermented liquors, provided at the said Charles Dickens' proper cost and charge.

Herein fail not at your peril.
Victoria.

Countersigned
CHARLES DICKENS
JOHN FORSTER

To RICHARD LANE, 31 JANUARY 1843*

MS Mr L. C. Hopkins.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1843

My Dear Sir

I am obliged to be the postponer, this morning. In the hurry of writing to you yesterday, I forgot an engagement which compels me to ask whether tomorrow at the same hour will suit you instead of today.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard. J. Lane Esquire

February

To ANDREW BELL, 1 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Andrew Bell Esquire | 23 Liverpool Terrace | Islington.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate Regents Park
First February 1843

My Dear Sir

I thank you for your gratifying letter; and for the loan of the enclosed sketches.[†1] They have pleased me very much. I know something of Coal Heavers, and of the hostelry you mention in that paper. There is another in Milbank[†2]—not very far from Abingdon Street; on the left hand side of the way, as you go towards Vauxhall Bridge. It is a famous house.[†3] There is a heaver who uses it, who, in his sober moments is a merry fellow, but who, after his eighth or ninth pot (I am not sure which) becomes rather maudlin and Byronical. You will find him in this state any night when the clock strikes Twelve, staggering past the great lamp-post in the Strand, opposite Northumberland House, and crying "I'm a bloody orphan!" in accents full of grief. This is really a fact. He never says more, and never less; is a sturdy, broad-shouldered, honest fellow; fifty years old, or more; sensitive to a fault in porter, but quite a plain man out of it.

I owe you an apology for having thought you hard on the Americans.[†4] Accept it from me, in my improved and clearer sight. Your dedication to Peel stuck in my throat; and I thought (perhaps still think) that you lost sight of the fact that the Republic had its growth—not in liberal principles, but in the wrongest-headed Toryism and the obstinacy of that swine-headed anointed of the Lord—his Majesty King George The Third. But for him it might have been a very different place at this hour.

The note you are free to use.[†5] I wish it were better worth your using. Such as it is, it is heartily at your service.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Bell Esquire

To W. CARPENTER,[†1] 1 FEBRUARY 1843

Mention in Waller catalogue No. 124 (1879); dated Devonshire Terrace, 1 Feb 43.

Declining the Presidentship of the Literary and Dramatic Fund. [†2]

To JOHN DE GEX,[†3] 1 FEBRUARY 1843

MS Bernard Quaritch Ltd. Address: John De Gex Esquire | 5 New Square | Lincolns Inn.

Devonshire Terrace. | First February 1843.

My Dear De Gex.

I am very sorry I missed you t'other day.

You have done quite right, I think, in deciding to run the hazard of the die.[†4] I need not say that I shall drop my white ball into the box,[†5] vigorously.

I never ask men to vote for a friend, when the voting is by ballot, nor do I ever respond to those who ask that favor of me: as I hold it to be inconsistent with the ballot to have any negociation on such a subject. But if anybody ask me whether I know you, I will give that report of you which dwelleth within me.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John De Gex Esquire.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 1 FEBRUARY 1843

MS Boston Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace | First February 1843

My Dear Dr. Smith

I have read the enclosed with great pain, and with a foreknowledge of its entire Truth.

I fear, however, that I cannot take up the subject.[†6] Firstly and mainly, because I am fully engaged in doing my best for similar objects by different means.[†7] And secondly, because this question involves the whole subject of the condition of the mass of people in this country. And I greatly fear that until Governments are honest, and Parliaments pure, and Great men less considered, and small men more so, it is almost a Cruelty to limit, even the dreadful hours and ways[†1] of Labor which at this time prevail. Want is so general, distress so great, and Poverty so rampant—it is, in a word, so hard for the Million to live by any means—that I scarcely know how we can step between them, and one weekly farthing. The necessity of a mighty change, I clearly see; and yet I cannot reconcile it to myself to reduce the earnings of any family—their means of existence being now so very scant and spare.

I shall be very glad to see the evidence,[†2] and to have an opportunity of studying it. It will not fall on rocky ground if you send it here, I think.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith

To T. B. L. BAKER,[†3] 3 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Miss Olive K. Lloyd-Baker. Address: T. B. G.[†4] Baker Esquire | Hardwicke Court.

Private.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Third February 1843

Dear Sir.

I am much indebted to you for your interesting note.[†5] The Gloucestershire facts were quite unknown to me. The sad history of Captain Brenton and his Institution,[†6] I was perfectly acquainted with. But I feared to make any allusion to it in my book, lest some Samaritan should be sickened and put out of heart, and his good deeds throttled in their birth.

I thank you cordially, for your obliging favor. And am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. B. G. Baker Esquire

To H. SMALE,[†1] 3 FEBRUARY 1843

Extract in N, I, 506.

Devonshire Terrace | Third February, 1843

The months come round so fast....

... I shall not be able to have the pleasure of coming to dine with you until my February work has had its throat cut: which laudable deed I shall perform with all convenient despatch.

I was hurried away unexpectedly to Bath, in the beginning of my January leisure, and have since been reposing on some rheumatic laurels gathered on the railway.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 3 [FEBRUARY] 1843

MS University of Kentucky. Date: "January" clearly an error; 3 Feb 43 was a Friday, and 4 Feb Ainsworth's birthday.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning | Third January 1843.

My Dear Stanfield.

Landseer[†2] has spread such exciting reports of the conjurations we performed on Twelfth Night,[†3] that I have been fain to promise Mrs. Norton they shall come off for the behoof of her boys on Monday.[†4]

I have some new tricks, and some improvements on the old, which require an exact knowledge on the part of Ivory.[†1] And as I hear you are going to Mrs. Norton's on Monday, will you be here at 5—not later—that we may have time to go over them? Do you dine at Ainsworth's tomorrow? In the event of such extraordinary good luck, will you come here tomorrow at 5?

A word in answer.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?EARLY FEBRUARY 1843]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting points to early 43; probably soon after seeing Ainsworth on 4 Feb.

My Dear Ainsworth.

Relying on auld acquaintance, I had made exactly the arrangement you propose; and shall send the Carriage back in the Evening for my small relation.[†2]

Many thanks for the Magazine.[†3]

Always Heartily

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 6 FEBRUARY 1843

Text from J. B. Findlay, Charles Dickens and his Magic, privately printed, Shanklin, 1962. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire, | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday, Sixth February, 1843.

My Dear Mitton,

I am greatly obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in relation to the turn-out.[†4] I had already told the coachmaker to put all possible strength into the splinter-bar, and to make as stout a job of it as he really could.

You will be delighted to hear that my Mother is formally "bespoke" for the Easthorpe[†1] Park delivery!!![†2]

I have made a most splendid trick of that apparatus which Hamley[†3] couldn't manage: by the addition of one or two simple contrivances. It is better than the Northern Wizard[†4] and as good as Doebler.

Faithfully Always,

CD.

To GEORGE STEVENSON,[†5] 6 FEBRUARY 1843

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 2 pp.; dated 6 Feb 43; signed initials.

Referring to repairs to a coach.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 7 FEBRUARY 1843

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh February 1843.

Dear Sirs

I wrote to Mr. Browne yesterday morning, and told him he should have both subjects by the Tenth. In the meantime, I asked him to make and send me, a sketch of Mark, who will appear in the first.[†6]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 FEBRUARY 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 292. Date: 12 Feb according to Forster.

I am in a difficulty, and am coming down to you some time to-day or tonight. I couldn't write a line yesterday; not a word, though I really tried hard. In a kind of despair I started off at half-past two with my pair of petticoats[†1] to Richmond; and dined there!![†2] Oh what a lovely day it was in those parts.

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 13 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth February 1843

My Dear Elliotson.

I am much indebted to you for the loan of the enclosed.[†3] The letter has particularly interested me: being very womanly and tender.

But I fear—I greatly fear—that in that place, which is the very last resort of the most hardened crime, we must be stern.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Elliotson.

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 FEBRUARY 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 293, dated by Forster two days after letter of 12 Feb.

Send me word how you are.[†4] But not so much for that I now write, as to tell you, peremptorily, that I insist on your wrapping yourself up and coming here in a hackney-coach, with a big portmanteau, to-morrow. It surely is better to be unwell with a Quick and Cheerful (and Co.) in the neighbourhood, than in the dreary vastness of Lincolns-inn-fields. Here is the snuggest tent-bedstead in the world, and there you are with the drawing-room for your workshop, the Q and C for your pal, and 'everythink in a concatenation accordingly.' I begin to have hopes of the regeneration of mankind after the reception of Gregory[†1] last night, though I have none of the Chronicle[†2] for not denouncing the villain. Have you seen the note touching my Notes in the blue and yellow?[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-FEBRUARY 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 311. Date: probably while writing the March No. (Chs 6-8); see below.

As to the way in which these characters have opened out,[†4] that is, to me, one of the most surprising processes of the mind in this sort of invention. Given what one knows, what one does not know springs up; and I am as absolutely certain of its being true, as I am of the law of gravitation—if such a thing be possible, more so.

To EBENEZER JOHNSTON,[†1] 15 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth February 1843

My Dear Sir

I have been waiting to answer your note, until now, simply because Mrs. Dickens has been exceedingly unwell, ever since your daughters[†2] did her the favor to call here (when she had already been in bed two or three days), and is only just now recovering. Though greatly better, she is afraid to encounter the night air,—nor do I think, though generally on the bold side in such matters, that it would be well for her to do so, for some few days longer.

For myself, I am in agonies peculiar to February—a month which, by reason of its shortness, ought to be blotted out of the almanacks—and although, if she had been able to come to you on Friday, I would have made a dash and accompanied her; still, now that I have the opportunity of consideration which her staying at home gives me, I decide in behalf of Virtue and Constancy, and remain at home to finish.[†3]

Mrs. Dickens begs her compliments to your daughters, and looks forward to returning their visit, very soon.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Ebenezer Johnstone Esquire
P.S. Not being quite certain of your address, I despatch this to the root and branch in Fenchurch Street.[†4]

To CHARLES MACKAY, 17 FEBRUARY 1843

Text from Charles Mackay, Forty Years' Recollections, 1877, I, 172.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth February 1843

My dear Mackay,

I have such strong reasons to doubt the easy working of your project,[†5] and to fear it will end in disappointment, that I "cannot"—as the honest, and I am sorry to add, very heavy servant in "High Life below Stairs,"[†1] says,—"make one among you." Some of these weighty arguments shall be yours when I see you next.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay, Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 FEBRUARY 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth Feby. | 1843.

My Dear Mitton

If I bring the carriage down on Tuesday, at what time shall I come?

Shall we make a day of it, somewhere? I shall most likely have the No.[†2] in my pocket.

Until that day, will you stave off the mischievous lunatic[†3] (on the best terms you can) whose letter I enclose? And will you tell the man, Reeves,[†4] under Grays Inn archway who has sent me in for the second time a bill which I think is Frederick's, that the papers[†5] never came to me, and I know nothing about 'em?

In haste | Always Faithfully

CD.

To LORD BROUGHAM, 20 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1843

Dear Lord Brougham.

Thank you for your kind note. I was misled by Napier's letter; which seemed strongly to point to Lord Morpeth; and did indeed admit, as I thought, of no other construction than that which I put upon it. Except to you, I had only mentioned my impression to one friend, however: and therefore I have done him but little injustice beyond the compass of my own thoughts.

I know the Writer's name now.[†1]

You saw how the town took the law into their own hands in the case of a scoundrel Editor who appeared, the other night, as an Actor at Covent Garden?[†2] It is as good a sign of the popular detestation of printed stabs, as I have seen, I think.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Brougham.

To EDWIN LANDSEER, 20 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Mrs Joan Stern.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twentieth February | 1843.

My Dear Landseer

Have you anything better to do, than to dine here next Wednesday at 6— sharp—precise—exact? We have no party, saving Mc Ian and his wife; and may be two others whom you know.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Landseer Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, 20 FEBRUARY 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1843.

My Dear Mitton

I quite agree in opinion with you, touching my father[†3] who I really believe, as Sam Weller says of some one in Pickwick, "has gone ravin' mad with conscious willany".[†4] The thought of him besets me, night and day; and I really do not know what is to be done with him. It is quite clear that the more we do, the more outrageous and audacious he becomes.

Perhaps we cannot do better tomorrow than go to Dulwich where there is an interesting Picture Gallery, which I think you never saw. I will be with you at one. If the day be anything short of cats, dogs, and pitchforks, in its dampness, I will send Topping on, by buss, in order that you may the better see (from the box seat), the performance of the horses. I have to go to a party at night,[†1] but not until late.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

P.S. I finished on Saturday Night, last.

To T. PRICE,[†2] 24 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Chas J. Sawyer Ltd. Address: T. Price Esquire | 95 Islington | Birmingham.

Private.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth February 1843

Sir.

I am much obliged to you for your good-humoured note. The sheets to which you allude, are merely (as I conceive) impressions of some detached tales published in the commencement of the clock:[†3] which I have had cancelled, at some loss, merely because I considered that they injured the effect of the two long stories, which are now published in separate Volumes, without those interruptions. They sold as well as the rest, but they did not please me; and therefore I disposed of them to the four Winds.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Price Esquire

To H. P. SMITH, 24 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth February 1843

My Dear Smith.

We rejoice in your being out of quarantine at last; and congratulate you, heartily, thereupon.

On Tuesday, we shall be very glad indeed, to dine with you. I should have written you as much yesterday, but that I was from home all day.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 27 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS University of Kentucky.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh February | 1843.

My Dear Stanfield

My Missis says that we dine at 5, not half past—otherwise it is such a struggle and bustle to reach the Theatre[†1] in time. Of course I understand that you will come or not, just as suits your convenience.

Faithfully always
CD

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To T. E. WELLER,[†2] 27 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Mrs Sowerby.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Seventh February 1843

Dear Sir.

I am obliged to you for your good-humoured letter; and I beg you to present my regards to your accomplished daughter,[†3] together with this autograph,[†4]

which must be understood to include all manner of good wishes for her, and you, and the Wellers generally.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. E. Weller Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 FEBRUARY 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth February 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I don't know whether you may happen to remember that there was a Public Subscription some two or three years ago, for the purchase of a Testimonial to Macready, in honor of his exertions to elevate the National Drama. However, there was: a handsome piece of plate was designed and made;[†2] and is at last[†3] to be presented by the Duke of Sussex[†4] in the course of the ensuing month.[†5]

But the failure of Hammersley's Bank, and the consequent loss of a part of the money, has rendered a second Subscription necessary. Being a Member of the Committee, and casting about to whom it would be right to apply, I have naturally thought of you. Firstly, because I know you are attached to the most rational of all amusements. And secondly, because in the horrible indifference to it which prevails among people of influence and station, any support from you, cannot fail to be at once most valuable to the cause, and most gratifying and cheering to Macready himself.

Therefore, if you see no objection to aiding the object (a much higher one than the froth of the World suppose) I shall be most proud and glad to act as your Secretary or steward in the matter. Lord Lansdowne is one of the very few men in high places, who have dealt with it as they should. There be some (whose titles would startle you) who have put down their names with round sums attached, but have not put down their money; in consequence of which, I am in danger of turning misanthropical, Byronic, and devilish.

I hope you liked the Much Ado—and the Comus[†6]—and that you will go to see Virginius[†1] next Monday. If you were not pleased last Friday, I shall certainly carry my misanthropical impulses into effect, and leave off my neck cloth[†2] without further notice.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY HOLLAND, 28 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth February 1843

Dear Lady Holland.

I beg to return you the French newspapers, with many thanks. I shall hope to have the pleasure of coming to see you when the middle of next month is past. My plan now, is, to keep myself strictly at home (with the exception of a long country walk or ride every day) during one half of the month; and I find it a capital one, both for health, and pleasant authorship.

Let me thank you too, for your kind Message, touching the Edinburgh Review. Napier's private letters to me, seemed to point so plainly at Lord Morpeth, that I fell into that mistake against my will and desire: which were, and always have been, to consider him incapable of any but good actions. Saving to Fonblanque, I only mentioned my suspicion to one other person. That was Lord Brougham; who immediately corrected it, and set me right.

I hope you are in such health and spirits as I would have you enjoy. And I am always
Dear Lady Holland
Yours faithfully and truly obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To D. M. MOIR,[†1] [JANUARY-FEBRUARY 1843]

Mention in letter from Moir to Aird, quoted in The Poetical Works of David Macbeth Moir, ed. Thomas Aird, 1852, p. lxv. Date: according to Moir, "a few months" before he wrote the Preface to the edition published 18 May,[†2] but not before Jan 43.

Encouraging him to publish his Domestic Verses circulated privately early in 1843.[†3]

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART,[†4] [?DECEMBER 1842-FEBRUARY 1843]

Extract from unidentified newspaper cutting about a Dickens exhibition, in possession of Mr W. J. Carlton. Date: clearly at least some weeks after CD first heard Tagart in Nov 42

(see To Felton, 2 Mar 43, fn), but tone suggests early in their acquaintance, and the "discourse" may have been in Feb; see below.

As one of your congregation[†5] I cannot resist the opportunity of conveying to you my earnest and grateful feelings for your eloquent and charming discourse of last Sunday.[†6] It made more impression upon me than any sermon I have ever yet heard—even from your lips.[†7]

March

To JOHN BRITTON,[†1] 2 MARCH 1843*

MS Mrs S. S. Clephan.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Second March 1843

Dear Sir.

Nobody who knows me, will, I am certain, consider me supine when the interests of Literature or any of its Professors are in question. I have always done my duty in upholding it and them to the utmost extent of my power. And if, in my business transactions I had had less regard to its honor, and more to my own profit, I might have been by this time—almost as rich a man as you take me for.

But I am not by any means clear that the Society[†2] you propose will tend to its advancement. Nor can I exercise that right of private judgment in such a matter which unquestionably belongs to me, until I know of whom it is composed, and what it is to do. Until I have reasonable information on these heads from its own proceedings, I must, in all good humour, decline to add another to my already long list of Clubs and Societies. In the meantime, pray rest assured that the Pursuit of Literature as a Profession shall suffer no greater disparagement in my person, than I can possibly help.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Britton Esquire.

To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 2 MARCH 1843*

MS Dr Peter Beattie.

Devonshire Terrace | Second March 1843

Dear Sirs

I enclose you Mr. Prescott's letter.[†3]

I shall be glad to hear of any improvement in Chuzzlewit.[†4] Please to take care that Mrs. Hogarth has the No. every month.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK, 2 MARCH 1843

MS Berg Collection.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Second March 1843.

My Dear Clark

Let us lay a wager upon that Copyright business. What impossible odds shall

I set against some piece of property of yours, that we shall be in our graves and out of them again in particles of dust, impalpable, before those honest men at Washington, in their earthy riots, care one miserable damn for Mind?

You will not take it ill when I tell you that the last-sent Nicks[†1] remain uncut. When I resolved on shipboard coming home, to write upon America, I solemnly determined with myself that I would never read an American Criticism on the book. Innumerable newspapers have been sent to me across the Atlantic since its publication. If there were anything to pay, they have gone back to the Post Office; if nothing, they have gone, unopened, into the fire. I have never once departed from my resolution in the least degree. And I feel the wisdom of it, in my good spirits and good humour.[†2]

I don't think you will like Chuzzlewit less, as it goes on. I particularly commend Mr. Pinch, and a sister of his who will one day appear upon the scene,[†3] to your favorable consideration.

Ah! That unfulfilled promise! If I ever have a scene of Chuzzlewit written early enough to send to you—but I will not lay down any more pieces of stone in the Infernal Pavement. Nous verrons.

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards to yourself and Mrs. Clark; in which I cordially join.—Last Thursday twelvemonth, we dined at your house.[†4]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

L. Gaylord Clark Esquire.

To C. C. FELTON, 2 MARCH 1843†

MS Berg Collection. Address: By Mail Steamer | Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts | United States.

1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park London
Second March 1843.

My Dear Felton.

I don't know where to begin, but plunge headlong with a terrible splash into this letter, on the chance of turning up somewhere.

Hurrah! Up like a Cork again—with the North American Review[†5] in my hand. Like you, my dear Felton. And I can say no more in praise of it, though I go on to the end of the sheet. You cannot think how much notice it has attracted here. Brougham called the other day with the No. (thinking I might not have seen it) and I being out at the time, he left a note, speaking of it, and of the writer, in terms that warmed my heart. Lord Ashburton (one of whose people wrote a Notice in the Edinburgh, which they have since publicly contradicted)[†1] also wrote to me about it in just the same strain. And many others have done the like.

I am in great health and spirits, and powdering away at Chuzzlewit, with all manner of facetiousness rising up before me as I go on. As to news, I have really none, saving that Forster (who never took any exercise in his life) has been laid up with the rheumatism for weeks past, but is now, I hope, getting better. My little captain,[†2] as I call him—he who took me out, I mean, and with whom I had that adventure of the cork soles[†3]—has been in London too, and seeing all the lions under my escort. Good Heavens! I wish you could have seen certain other mahogany faced men (also Captains) who used to call here for him in the morning, and bear him off to Docks and Rivers and all sorts of queer places, whence he always returned late at night, with rum and water tear-drops in his eyes, and a complication of Punchy smells in his mouth! He was better than a Comedy to us—having marvellous ways of tying his pocket hand kerchief round his neck at dinner time in a kind of jolly embarrasment[†4]—and then forgetting what he had done with it. Also of singing songs to wrong tunes, and calling land objects by sea names, and never knowing what o'Clock it was, but taking midnight for seven in the evening; with many other sailor oddities, all full of honesty, manliness, and good temper. We took him to Drury Lane Theatre to see Much Ado About Nothing.[†5] But I never could find out what he meant by turning round to Kate after he had watched the first two scenes with great attention; and enquiring "whether it was a Polish piece?"!

[†a]Forster must make haste and get well, for this day month, the second of April, is our wedding day and his birthday; on which high festival, we always go down in great state to Richmond (an exquisite place upon the River Thames: some twelve miles off) and hold a solemn dinner, whereat we empty our glasses, you may believe.[†a] On the fourth, I am going to preside at a Public Dinner for the benefit of the Printers;[†1] and if you were a guest at that table, wouldn't I smite you on the shoulder, harder than ever I rapped the well-beloved back of Washington Irving at the City Hotel in New York![†2]

You were asking me—I love to say, asking—as if we could talk together— about Maclise. He is such a discursive fellow, and so eccentric in his might, that on a mental review of his pictures I can hardly tell you of them as leading to any one strong purpose. But the Annual Exhibition at the Royal Academy comes off in May,[†3] and then I will endeavour to give you some notion of him. He is a tremendous creature, and might do anything. But like all tremendous creatures, he takes his own way, and flies off at unexpected breaches in the conventional wall.

You know Hone's[†4] Every Day Book, I dare say. Ah! I saw a scene of mingled comicality and seriousness at his funeral some weeks ago,[†5] which has choked me at dinner-time ever since. George Cruikshank and I, went as Mourners;[†6] and as he lived, poor fellow, five miles out of town, I drove George down. It was such a day as I hope for the credit of Nature is seldom seen in any parts but these—muddy, foggy, wet, dark, cold, and unutterably wretched in every possible respect. Now, George has enormous whiskers which straggle all down his throat in such weather, and stick out in front of him, like a partially unravelled bird's-nest; so that he looks queer enough at the best, but when he is very wet, and in a state between jollity (he is always very jolly with me) and the deepest gravity (going to a funeral, you know) it is utterly impossible to resist him: especially as he makes the strangest remarks the mind of man can conceive, without any intention of being funny, but rather meaning to be philosophical. I really cried with an irresistible sense of his comicality, all the way, but when he was drest out in a black cloak and a very long black hatband by an undertaker, who (as he whispered me with tears in his eyes—for he had known Hone many years—was "a character, and he would like to sketch him") I thought I should have been obliged to go away. However, we went into a little parlor where the funeral party was, and God knows it was miserable enough, for the widow and children were crying bitterly in one corner, and the other mourners—mere people of ceremony, who cared no more for the Dead Man than the hearse did—were talking quite coolly and carelessly together in another; and the contrast was as painful and distressing as anything I ever saw. There was an Independent clergyman[†1] present, with his bands on and a bible under his arm who as soon as we were seated, addressed George thus, in a loud emphatic voice—"Mr. Cruikshank. Have you seen a paragraph respecting our departed friend, which has gone the round of the morning papers?"[†2]—"Yes Sir", says George, "I have"—looking very hard at me the while, for he had told me with some pride, coming down, that it was his composition. "Oh!" said the clergyman. "Then you will agree with me Mr. Cruikshank that it is not only an insult to me who am the servant of the Almighty, but an insult to the Almighty whose servant I am"—"How's that Sir?" says George. "It is stated, Mr. Cruikshank, in that paragraph", says the Minister, "that when Mr. Hone failed in business as a bookseller, he was persuaded by me to try the Pulpit, which is false, incorrect, unchristian, in a manner blasphemous, and in all respects contemptible. Let us pray." With which, my dear Felton—and in the same breath I give you my word—he knelt down, as we all did, and began a very miserable [jumble][†3] of an extemporary prayer. I was really penetrated with sorrow for the family, but when George (upon his knees, and sobbing for the loss of an old friend) whispered me "that if that wasn't a clergyman, and it wasn't a funeral, he'd have punched his head", I felt as if nothing but convulsions could possibly relieve me.[†4]

[†b]Tell Longfellow that I can't find that book of his, but that I have some others from the Shakespeare Society[†1] for him; and that I want to know whether I shall send them to Hillard.[†2] Remember me heartily to our Hillard, and to Sumner, and all friends. We have been greatly concerned at Mrs. Felton's not being well,[†3] but hope your next accounts will be more favorable. Our united loves to her. Tell me something in your next, about Dr. Channing's family. Disgusted with our Established Church, and its Puseyisms,[†4] and daily outrages on common sense and humanity, I have carried into effect an old idea of mine, and joined the Unitarians,[†5] who would do something for human improvement, if they could; and who practise Charity and Toleration. The Tories will love me better than ever, if this gets wind. My children shall return the compliment, please God![†b]

Faithfully Always My Dear Felton

CD.

To W. H. PRESCOTT, 2 MARCH 1843

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: By Mail Steamer | W. H. Prescott Esquire | Boston | Massachusetts | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Second March 1843.

My Dear Prescott.

You are playing at blindmans buff with International copyrights, I see. In the existing state of the law (whereof the folks at Washington have the full credit) no transmission of early copies, secures a copyright in this country. All you gain is priority of publication; and at this moment anybody who thought it worth his while could print Madame de Calderon's book,[†1] or yours, on his own account, without paying the author one sixpence. Therefore what you have to consider in the disposal of your own wares, is, who will give you the most, for the desperate chance he purchases.[†2]

Chapman and Hall are going to write you by this packet;[†1] and therefore I will leave business matters to them. We are all well, and unite in cordial regards to yourself, and Mrs. Prescott, and all your house.

As to the Pirates, let them wave their black flag, and rob under it, and stab into the bargain, until the crack of doom. I should hardly be comfortable if I knew they bought the right of blackguarding me in the Model Republic; but while they steal it, I am happy.[†2] So hurrah for Spring; which, I hope, by the time you get this, will be drawing upon us in England; and may we all enjoy what Leigh Hunt calls "the leafy greenery"[†3] as much as Heaven meant us to, in sending it!

Faithfully your friend My Dear Prescott

CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Prescott Esquire.

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM, 2 MARCH 1843*

MS New York Public Library. Address: By Mail Steamer. | Mr. G. W. Putnam | Nashua | New Haven | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Second March 1843.

Dear Mr. Putnam.

I was very glad indeed to receive your letter dated on the First of January; for, from your long silence, we began to fear you were not well; and to wonder, if you were, what on earth had become of you. I hope you will not only put counterfeit gold into the portraits,[†4] but will put the real metal into your own pockets. For I know you deserve it, and should be better pleased to hear of your well-doing than I can easily tell you.

You write of the American newspapers, and cause me to smile afresh as I turn once more to your letter. If you could see me in my quiet study at home here, you would begin to know how little they trouble me, I fancy. You remember my old way of not reading them? Well! Since I came home, and the book was published, I have received some bushels of them by post. If there were anything to pay, they went back to the post office; if nothing, they went, with their covers on them, into the fire. And to this hour I have not seen one line of their producing, but am in glorious health and glorious spirits, and writing merrily at my new story.

Mrs. Dickens is quite well, and desires to be cordially remembered to you. So does Anne, who brightened up very much on the receipt of your message, and says she wouldn't mind travelling over all that land and water, again. As to Kate, she holds her old opinion on this point—which perhaps you recollect? The children are mightily red in the face and very fat; and if we tell them we are going to America again, they all roar lustily.

Captain Hewitt has been in town here, and I have shewn him all the Lions; as I should very much like to do for you. Perhaps I shall, one of these days. In the meantime, and ever, believe in the assurance of my true regard, and always reckon me

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Dickens says I have "forgotten Julia"; to which I say "No. For she is understood, like a latin pronoun, though not expressed."—We went to Bath (a hundred miles or so) the other day, with one of the renowned boys, which made us talk of you more than once, upon the road.[†1]

To LADY LOVELACE,[†2] 4 MARCH 1843*

MS Estate of Mary Lady Lovelace.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1843

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Lady Lovelace, and in acknowledging the receipt of her kind answer to his note, begs to say that he will be very happy to call in St. James's Square at ten o'Clock on Tuesday morning.

He is not aware that the subscription list[†3] has ever been printed, or that any copy of it is in existence, save that which has been most desperately thumbed by a persevering collector.[†1] But he will procure it, such as it is, and bring it with him on Tuesday.

He may be permitted to add that he is too well assured of the interest felt by Lady Lovelace in all that concerns the improvement and happiness of the people, to have ever entertained the idea of addressing her on this subject, merely as the daughter of Lord Byron.[†2] He intended to urge that circumstance, only as an apology for what, under other circumstances, might have seemed an unwarrantable intrusion.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 6 MARCH 1843

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | New Broad Street | City.

Private

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth March 1843.

My Dear Dr. Smith

I sent a message across the way today, begging you, in case you should come to the Sanatorium, to call on me, if convenient. My reason was this;—

I am so perfectly stricken down by the blue book[†3] you have sent me, that I think (as soon as I shall have done my month's work) of writing, and bringing out, a very cheap pamphlet, called "An appeal to the People of England, on behalf of the Poor Man's Child"—with my name attached, of course. I should be very glad to take counsel with you in the matter, and to receive any suggestions from you, in reference to it. Suppose I were to call on you one evening in the course of ten days or so, what would be the most likely hour to find you at home?

In haste | Always Faithfully | Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith

To ALFRED TENNYSON,[†1] 9 MARCH 1843

MS Yale University Library. Address: Alfred Tennyson Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth March 1843.

My Dear Tennyson.

For the love I bear you, as a man whose writings enlist my whole heart and nature in admiration of their Truth and Beauty, set these books upon your shelves[†2]; believing that you have no more earnest and sincere homage than mine.[†3]

Faithfully | and Gratefully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Alfred Tennyson Esquire

To MR LOVE,[†1] 10 MARCH 1843

Mention in Samuel T. Freeman & Co. catalogue, Apr 1917; MS 1 p. (3rd person); dated Devonshire Terrace, 10 Mar 43.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 10 MARCH 1843

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | 36 New Broad Street | City.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth March 1843.

My Dear Dr. Smith

Don't be frightened when I tell you, that since I wrote to you last, reasons have presented themselves for deferring the production of that pamphlet, until the end of the year. I am not at liberty to explain them further, just now; but rest assured that when you know them, and see what I do, and where, and how, you will certainly feel that a Sledge hammer has come down with twenty times the force—twenty thousand times the force—I could exert by following out my first idea. Even so recently as when I wrote to you the other day, I had not contemplated the means I shall now, please God, use. But they have been suggested to me, and I have girded myself for their seizure—as you shall see in due time.[†2]

If you will allow our tete a tete, and projected conversation on the subject, still to come off, I will write to you, as soon as I see my way to the end of my Month's work.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith

To T. J. THOMPSON, 10 MARCH 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tenth March 1843

My Dear Thompson.

When you said t'other day that you had forgotten how much you gave to the Macready Testimonial, I told you I thought it was five guineas. Now, how I got that idea into my mind, I don't know—perhaps I had a confused remembrance of your giving that sum to the Minor Theatrical Fund[†1]—but however that may be, I think it right to tell you that I have looked at the Subscription List, and find you didn't give anything!

Will you like to remedy this defect, and taking up the stone you have laid down in the infernal pavement, replace it with precious metal? You can tell me on Sunday.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 13 MARCH 1843*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth March 1843.

My Dear Fonblanque

I plainly see, by your treatment of that order, that you are going over to the Tories. You stand by your order[†2] too long and too much.—If you don't take the Examiner with you, leave it to me, and I'll be your Shadow; undoubtedly faint; but warranted fierce.

The Drury Lane Order for next Saturday would purge me of a promise,[†3] made in an unthinking hour. I say no more.

I have been expecting to see or hear from you, all the week. Forster told me you had found a mote in Pecksniff's eye;[†4] and I see too much brightness in yours, to render me indifferent to the knowledge of it, or anything but anxious that you should freely point it out to me.

I find that I am getting horribly bitter about Puseyism. Good God to talk in these times of most untimely ignorance among the people, about what Priests shall wear, and whither they shall turn[†5] when they say their prayers.—They had best not discuss the latter question too long, or I shrewdly suspect they will turn to the right about: not easily to come back again.

Always Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 13 MARCH 1843

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth March 1843

My Dear Beard.

Coming on, in due course, for the first vacant Saturday, I send you the unforgotten Drury Lane Order.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [13 MARCH 1843]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 14 MARCH 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday, Fourteenth March 1843

My Dear Mitton

When I wrote to you last night, I had not received your letter. All I meant by "deferring the consideration" of the freehold project, was, that I had received C and H's account; and that the balance being still heavy against me,[†1] I wished to be careful.

It must be something highly advantageous (don't you think?) which would render it desirable to borrow any part of the purchase money? And I fear that Highgate, though a place I like of all things, would be too dear. But I shall be guided, very much, by your enquiries and advice.[†2]

Hertfordshire—some twelve or thirteen miles from town, in the direction of Rickmansworth &c—is the cheapest neighbourhood I know of.

Write me again if you have time—supposing, that is, that I don't come to you this evening before 8.

I inclose a cheque for £15[†3]

Faithfully Ever
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 15 MARCH 1843*

MS Mrs Sowerby.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth March 1843.

My Dear Thompson

Second sight no doubt—caught (I see it all), from Donald what's his name, who came bock agen to that unspellable Glen, and published the news of his arrival so extensively.†1

Next time you send to your bankers, if you will let them have a cheque for the money, payable to Coutts & Co. on account of the Macready Testimonial; you will receive the hearty thanks of the committee, and all other privileges and gratifications to which the subscription entitles you.

I shall very likely see you, sometime next week.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To FRANCIS ROSS,†2 16 MARCH 1843*

MS The Rev. Charles T. Mentzer.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth March 1843

My Dear Frank

I am truly sorry that I missed you again, last Sunday. And therefore I write to give you notice that I have altered my former arrangements for that day; and that a quarter before Two, is the time to have me on the hip.†3

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Ross Esquire

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 20 MARCH 1843

Text from P. W. Clayden, Rogers and his Contemporaries, 1889, II, 231.

Devonshire Terrace: | Twentieth March, 1843.

My dear Mr. Rogers,

If I am not at your house at seven next Wednesday, write me down an ass.†4

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 MARCH 1843

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First March 1843

My Dear Beard.

I write to you with mingled feelings of Pride and Shame—of honest pride, for that I have discovered a sequestered Farm House at Finchley,[†1] five miles and a half from the Regents Park, whereat I do beseech the honor of your company to dinner, next Sunday; and to which retreat I will myself conduct you, if you will be here at a quarter before Two. Beds on the premises, or close at hand.

Now for the bitter, bitter shame.

I don't know whether I mentioned to you at the Theatre,[†2] that a Finchley Postman, meeting me in the road accompanied by an animal I brought from America, made proposals of marriage, having reference to that creature—in short, to Timber; for I must write his name, sooner or later. Having my doubts on certain points of consummation, I avoided the subject (ran away, in fact) but yesterday, of all evil days in the year, I met this demon Postman in a solitary lane. Again he proposed; and I think I saw distinctly, something fiendish in his face. The result was, that the settlements (involving all possible contingencies of probable puppies) were arranged; and Timber was taken by Topping to the demon's cave; I dining meanwhile, at a rural tavern in the neighbourhood.

The female appeared to be of his own breed—in the full glow of youth and passion—and in every point of view, in the highest state of perfection.

He was absent one hour and a half.

He returned, covered with disgrace and mortification. He had done nothing. The official report was, that he had tried, but was considered to be weak in his loins.

I am in a distracted frame of mind. Dreadful thoughts come over me at times, of taking his life. At other times I think of only taking his—but I will not anticipate. Heaven send him a safe deliverance. He is at present in a basket on the top of the bookcase, pending the decision of the particular kind of Torture to which he shall be exposed.

Yours despondingly

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 MARCH 1843

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First March 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I hope you have by this time got the better of your cold. I speak feelingly, having had a tremendous one of my own, besides the pleasure of six weeks contemplation of another in my wife. I have discovered a lonely Farm House at Finchley; and am going to bury myself there for at least a month to come; visiting this City at rare Intervals[†1]—and immersing myself in my story. But it is not so far off that I shall have any difficulty in reaching this place "for a consideration"[†2]—and if you will give me that kind and valuable one which will lie in a favorable answer to the enclosed, I shall be delighted.

Macready has been so much pleased by your approval and support;[†3] and is a man who while he courts nobody, feels such encouragement with great keenness; that I shall be glad to present him to you, if you will dine here.[†4] I know you will like him, as a private gentleman, exceedingly.

With best regards to Miss Meredith

Believe me always
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts. P.S. I return the enclosed with many thanks, and I need hardly say that it was most gratifying to all of us—but especially so to the party chiefly interested.

To THOMAS MITTON, 22 MARCH 1843

Text from N, I, 514.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-Second March 1843

My Dear Mitton,

I enclose you the accounts. If you see either of the firm, say nothing to them of what I am about in the writing way.[†5] I am bent on its coming (if it come at all) a surprise.

Faithfully always,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS MITTON, 28 MARCH 1843

Mention in Hodgson & Co. catalogue, May 1903; dated 28 Mar 43.

To JOHN DE GEX, 30 MARCH 1843

Extract in Hodgson & Co. catalogue, June 1914; MS 2pp; dated Devonshire Terrace, 30 Mar 1843.

Accepting an invitation.[†1] If the devil could be got to dine at the Freemasons' through one season, I think he'd die; and then the world would come all right again.

To E. W. ELTON,[†2] 30 MARCH 1843

MS Duke University Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Morning | March Thirtieth 1843

My Dear Sir

I beg to enclose you the Fund Document,[†3] duly executed and attested.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. W. Elton Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 31 MARCH 1843

MS Dickens House.

Finchley | Friday Thirty First March | 1843

My Dear Beard

I find that the wedding feast at Richmond,[†4] does come off on Sunday. Tomorrow week, therefore, I shall expect you here, as early as you can come. The green man[†5] will receive you with open arms. So will the flesh-colored one.

Faithfully Always
CD.

I am happy to report that Timber runs into a corner and stands on 2 legs, at the word of command.

April

To RICHARD LANE, 2 APRIL 1843 †

MS Dr De Coursey Fales.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Second April | 1843.

My Dear Sir

I am sorry to say that I cannot sit to you any morning next week, for my whole time is disposed of. If I could have anticipated your request, I would have arranged to meet it; but I had a notion in my head (Heaven knows how it came there), that the Drawing was done.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Lane Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [2 APRIL 1843]

Mention in Macready, Diaries, II, 201.

About dining with Miss Coutts on Friday. †1

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 6 APRIL 1843*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth April 1843

My Dear Sir

I beg you to thank the Vice Presidents and other officers of the Literary Fund, on my behalf, for the Invitation to the Anniversary Dinner with which they have honored me, and which I am most happy to accept.†2

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To J. P. HARLEY, 6 APRIL 1843*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth April 1843

My Dear Harley

Thank you very much for consulting me in the matter of our friend's†3 note. He must be rather a rum customer, I take it, for he had written to me before, forwarding a book of Poems (?) of his writing: the which I graciously acknowledged. Therefore I should have thought he needed no other Introduction. Whatever you desire to do in the matter—do—and be assured it will please me.

always Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 6 APRIL 1843*

MS The Frank Hollings Bookshop. Address: The Reverend William Harness | Heathcoate Street | Mecklenburg Square.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth April 1843

My Dear Harness.

I can never be sufficiently grateful to you for that amazing and stupendous circular. You have conferred an obligation on me which is as enduring in its character as Humbug itself.

I must ask your leave (and that of Miss Harness) to retain it—at all events for a short time. I have thought of certain weekly squibbers who ought to know of it. For it is a noble thing.[†1]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Harness.

To MARK LEMON,[†2] 6 APRIL 1843*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth April 1843.

My Dear Sir

Don't forget that you dine with me next Wednesday (with as little botheration about it, in the way of ceremony as may be) at a quarter before 6 for 6 sharp—not a blunt half after.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 7 APRIL 1843

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday. Seventh April 1843

My Dear Beard

As I am obliged to attend a Meeting of Authors[†1] in town tomorrow, at 2 o'Clock, wouldn't it be as well for us to dine somewhere, and walk out afterwards? If you will call on me as you go by in the morning, we can arrange in a second, about place and time.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 APRIL 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening | Seventh April 1843.

My Dear Macready

Forster is here; and we are all very anxious to know what kind of house there was, on the Third Night of our friend of the Italian Academies.[†1] If you are at home, tell us.

T'other night, at the Printers' Dinner, I asked Jerrold,[†2] and Mr. Lemon of Punch (in return for his kindly inviting us to the Palace)[†3] to dine with me next Wednesday at a quarter before 6 for 6 exactly. Will you come? If you can—do.[†4] I have since asked Serle.[†5]

Affectionately always
W. C. Macready.[†6]
Over [†7]

To LUIGI MARIOTTI,[†1] 12 APRIL 1843*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | April Twelfth 1843.

Dear Sir.

I am at present staying out of town, that I may the better get through certain labours in which I am engaged. I am only here today for a few hours: and contemplate retiring to my Cave[†2] again, this evening. But on Sunday Week (not Sunday next) I shall be visible here, between two o'Clock and half past. I contemplate making a longer stay than the Comet did;[†3] for after that time, I have no idea of being out of my sphere (supposing this place to be my proper orbit) for some months.

I have not forgotten our "Merry Meeting" on board of that accursed Craft, wherein we crossed the damnable Atlantic Ocean. In grateful recollection of the Mustard poultice, I shall be truly glad to see you.[†4]

Believe me | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Mariotti Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 13 APRIL 1843*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday | April Thirteenth 1843

My Dear Mitton

I will call on you tomorrow, between five and a quarter past; I am forced to go to Chelsea[†1] to day.

In haste

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 18 APRIL 1843[†2]

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Address: Thomas Carlyle Esquire | 5 Cheyne Row | Chelsea.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth April 1843

My Dear Carlyle

In the multitude of our unmentioned Wrongs under the Black Flag of Literature, I don't think Mr. Ticknor's case deserving of especial mention;[†3] and I have therefore returned it, as you requested, to the Geologist.[†4] I am the less disposed to assist in giving it publicity, because of certain Thieves in books, called Wiley and Putnam,[†1] having recently published a variety of similar statements, to which publicity was given by the Athenæum—and in which, they lie consumedly—after the true American fashion of smartness.

Always | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Carlyle Esquire

To JOHN DE GEX, 18 APRIL 1843

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth April 1843

My Dear De Gex

In the last piece I saw at the Victoria, a murdering Brigand (of high moral sentiments) was urged by another murdering Brigand (of low moral sentiments) to slaughter a child, whom it was indispensable to the plot of the play—but not otherwise—to murder.[†2] After a severe moral struggle, he said "I'll do it!"—whereat the audience were very much delighted, and applauded hugely; though I couldn't tell exactly why. I repeat the Brigand's sentiment; and I hope my audience[†3] may be in the same humour.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John De Gex Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 22 APRIL 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second April 1843

My Dear Mitton

I have had a bad cold in my ears for some days, and woke up this morning with a most horrible affection of all the nerves on one side of my face (ear included) since which cheerful discovery, I have been roaming up and down stairs in perpetual, restless, uneasiness and pain.

This will throw me back in my work. Couldn't you manage to dine in the country with me, next Saturday instead of Tuesday? Consider, and let me know. Meanwhile I will reserve Henry's Invitation.[†1]

Faithfully Always

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 APRIL 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth April 1843.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Marjoribanks was with me this morning; and I really cannot tell you how very much I feel your great kindness and interest in my behalf. I wrote to him, and not to you, in the first instance; because, feeling assured of your friendship, I was the more sensitive and delicate in troubling you, if I could help it.

I enclose such a note to you as Mr. Marjoribanks told me you wished to have.[†2] Nor do I know that I can add anything to it, further than that I am prepared to catch thankfully at anything which promises a reasonable opening, no matter where.

We are much concerned to hear of Miss Meredith's illness. I am myself kept within doors by the doctor for a kind of rheumatism in the face, which penetrates into the depths of my ears, and makes me feel at times as if a beehive had been upset in the intricacies of my brain. But as divers small tortures are to be inflicted on me this morning, I look for a release into the open air tomorrow; and whenever I do get out, I shall walk straight to your door, and make my personal enquiries.

Pray let me recommend the Dragon in the Easter Piece[†3] to your particular regards. I look upon him as the most comic animal of modern times. When he gets drunk at the Fountain, he is Sublime—the Learned Pig[†1] turns pale before him, in his dullest moments.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 APRIL 1843

MS Morgan Library. Enclosed with last.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth April 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I have it very much at heart at this time to obtain some suitable and worthy employment for a brother of mine[†2]—just now of age—who has been bred a Civil Engineer, and has for the last four years been constantly employed on one of the great main lines of Railway, performing all the duties of assistant Engineer—drawing plans and executing them—levelling—constructing bridges— and so forth; all of which, from the beginning of the work to its close, he has done to the great satisfaction of those above him, as his testimonials fully shew, and as I can most honestly avouch.[†3]

The work on which he was engaged, being completed;[†4] and the Profession being, as I dare say you know, most horribly overstocked; he has applied to me to exert any interest or influence I may possess in his behalf. And knowing the kind interest you take in any application or design of mine, I have determined to write to you to ask you if it be possible that you can assist me in this. I know him to be possessed of great energy, industry, and ability; and I am more anxious than I can tell you to procure him the means of exercising these qualities, either at home or abroad.

I will not ask you to forgive my troubling you on such a subject; for if I were not sure you had already done that, I could never have made up my mind to trouble you at all.

I am always | Dear Miss Coutts

Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE STEWARDS OF THE ARTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND,[†1] 27 APRIL [1843]

Text from N, II, 23. Date: clearly 1843, from address; confirmed by reference to another Dinner (see fn). Wrongly given in N as 1847, a common misreading.

Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park
Twenty-Seventh April 184[3]

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to The Stewards of the Artists' Benevolent Fund, and begs to thank them for the honor they have done him in forwarding him an Invitation to the forthcoming Dinner.[†2] It would have given him the very greatest pleasure to accept it, if he had not been already pledged to attend another Public Dinner in the City on the same day.[†3]

To CHARLES BABBAGE, 27 APRIL 1843

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh April 1843

My Dear Sir

I write to you, confidentially, in answer to your note of last night; and the tenor of mine will tell you why.

You may suppose, from seeing my name in the Printed Letter[†4] you have received, that I am favorable to the proposed Society. I am decidedly opposed to it. I went there on the day I was in the chair,[†5] after much solicitation; and being put into it, opened the Proceedings by telling the meeting that I approved of the Design in theory, but in practice considered it hopeless. I may tell you—I did not tell them—that the nature of the meeting, and the character and position of many of the men attending it, cried Failure trumpet-tongued[†1] in my ears. To quote an expression from Tennyson, I may say that if it were the best society in the world, the grossness of some natures in it, would have weight to drag it down.[†2]

In the wisdom of all you urge in the Notes you have sent me, taking them as statements of Theory, I entirely concur.[†3] But in practice, I feel sure that the present Publishing system cannot be overset, until Authors are different men. The first step to be taken, is, to move as a body in the question of copyright—enforce the existing laws—and try to obtain better. For that purpose, I hold that the Authors and Publishers must unite, as the wealth, business-habits, and interests of that latter class are of great importance to such an end. The Longmans and Murray have been with me proposing such an association. That I shall support. But having seen the Cockspur Street Society, I am as well convinced of its invincible hopelessness as if I saw it written by a Celestial Penman in the book of Fate.

My Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Babbage Esquire

To SIR EDWARD LYTTON BULWER, 27 APRIL 1843

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh April 1843

My Dear Sir Edward

I wish to speak with you in relation to that Brood of birds at the British Coffee House in Cockspur Street,[†4] who have certainly taken my name in vain, and I dare say have taken yours likewise. I also wish to impart to you the purport of some communications I have had from the Longmans and Murray.[†1] At what time will you be at home this morning, if you can make it convenient to see me?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 APRIL 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth April 1843

My Dear Henry

Mitton is going to dine with me in the country, next Tuesday.[†2] Will you come and do likewise? And shall we meet in Southampton Buildings at 12? That is, unless you should be in this Neighbourhood in the morning, and will come here at halfpast Eleven.

Love to Letitia. | Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 28 APRIL 1843*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth April 1843

My Dear Sirs

Please send up to me on Monday Morning, for copy of next No.[†3] and when you have it all in type, send proofs to Mr. Browne and Mr. Forster. In No. 4 page 108, there is a horrible mistake, which I think must be yours. "What do you go a lowerin the table for?" says Bailey in the type. "What do you go a lowerin' the table BEER[†4] for", my Bailey says.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury & Evans.

May

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 2 MAY 1843

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Second May 1843

My Dear Frederick.

Your absence from here, has been your own act always.[†1] I shall be perfectly glad to see you; and should have been, at any time.

Mitton and I are going to dine somewhere in the Country to day. If you like to join us, and can conveniently,—do. I will take the chance, and will send Topping up to you at half past 12 when I shall be in the carriage at the Treasury Door.

Affectionately Always

CD.

To THOMAS LONGMAN, 2 MAY 1843

Extract in Walter T. Spencer catalogue No. 104 (1901); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 2 May 43.

Sir Edward Lytton was with me yesterday. I explained our views to him, and he is very much of our opinion in the matter. Saturday Week (he is going out of town in the meanwhile) he would be glad to attend a meeting.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 MAY 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 295. Date: 3 May 43 according to Forster.

I am deeply grieved about Black.[†3] Sorry from my heart's core. If I could find him out, I would go and comfort him this moment.[†4]

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 3 MAY 1843

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Third May 1843

My Dear Jerrold.

Let me thank you, most cordially, for your books[†1]—not only for their own sakes (and I have read them with perfect delight) but also for this hearty and most welcome mark of your recollection of the friendship we have established; in which light I know I may regard and prize them.

I am greatly pleased with your opening paper[†2] in the Illuminated.[†3] It is very wise, and capital; written with the finest end of that iron pen of yours; witty, much needed, and full of Truth. I vow to God that I think the Parrots of Society are more intolerable and mischievous than its Birds of Prey.[†4] If ever I destroy myself, it will be in the bitterness of hearing those infernal and damnably good old times, extolled. Once in a fit of madness, after having been to a Public Dinner which took place just as this Ministry came in, I wrote the Parody[†5] I send you enclosed, for Fonblanque. There is nothing in it but wrath; but that's wholesome—so I send it to you.

I am writing a little history of England[†1] for my boy, which I will send you when it is printed for him, though your boys are too old to profit by it. It is curious that I have tried to impress upon him (writing, I dare say, at the same moment with you) the exact spirit of your paper. For I don't know what I should do, if he were to get hold of any conservative or High church notions; and the best way of guarding against any such horrible result, is, I take it, to wring the parrots' necks in his very cradle.

Oh Heaven, if you could have been with me at a Hospital Dinner[†2] last Monday! There were men there—your City aristocracy—who made such speeches, and expressed such sentiments, as any moderately intelligent dustman would have blushed through his cindery bloom to have thought of. Sleek, slobbering, bow-paunched, overfed, apoplectic, snorting cattle—and the auditory leaping up in their delight![†3] I never saw such an illustration of the Power of Purse, or felt so degraded and debased by its contemplation, since I have had eyes and ears. The absurdity of the thing was too horrible to laugh at. It was perfectly overwhelming. But if I could have partaken it with anybody who would have felt it as you would have done, it would have had quite another aspect—or would at least, like a "classical" mask (oh damn that word!)[†4] have had one funny side to relieve its dismal features.

Supposing fifty families were to emigrate into the wilds of North America— yours, mine, and forty eight others: picked for their concurrence of opinion on all important subjects, and for their resolution to found a Colony of Common Sense. How soon would that Devil, Cant, present itself among them in one shape or other—the day they landed, do you say—or the day after?

That is a great mistake (almost the only one I know) in the Arabian Nights, where the Princess restores people to their original beauty by sprinkling them with the Golden Water.[†5] It is quite clear that she must have made monsters of them by such a christening as that.

My wife is very sorry to hear of your daughter's illness,[†6] and sends many kind messages to her and Mrs. Jerrold—whereof the best, is, that she hopes the latter will never stand upon ceremony, but always on something better.

My Dear Jerrold | Faithfully your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 5 MAY 1843

MS University of Kentucky. Address: Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth May 1843.

My Dear Stanfield

Mac told me (I mean Maclise: not Macready) of the party today;[†1] and I should have been delighted to join it, had we not engaged to dine with Forster, previous to going to "Doory Lane".[†2] There, however, I shall hope to see you in a double sense—firstly in your proper person; secondly, in your immortal screenery. To both of whom be all Love Honor and Glory, now and for evermore. Amen.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS GEORGE HOGARTH, 8 MAY 1843

Text from MDGH, III, 50-1.

Devonshire Terrace, 8th May, 1843.

My Dear Mrs. Hogarth,

I was dressing to go to church yesterday morning—thinking, very sadly, of that time six years[†3]—when your kind note and its accompanying packet were brought to me. The best portrait that was ever painted would be of little value to you and me, in comparison with that unfading picture we have within us; and of the worst (which ——'s really is)[†4] I can only say, that it has no interest in my eyes, beyond being something which she sat near in its progress, full of life and beauty. In that light, I set some store by the copy you have sent me; and as a mark of your affection, I need not say I value it very much. As any record of that dear face, it is utterly worthless.

I trace in many respects a strong resemblance between her mental features and Georgina's—so strange a one, at times, that when she and Kate and I are sitting together, I seem to think that what has happened is a melancholy dream from which I am just awakening. The perfect like of what she was, will never be again, but so much of her spirit shines out in this sister, that the old time comes back again at some seasons, and I can hardly separate it from the present.

After she died, I dreamed of her every night for many months—I think for the better part of a year—sometimes as a spirit, sometimes as a living creature, never with any of the bitterness of my real sorrow, but always with a kind of quiet happiness, which became so pleasant to me that I never lay down at night without a hope of the vision coming back in one shape or other. And so it did. I went down into Yorkshire, and finding it still present to me, in a strange scene and a strange bed, I could not help mentioning the circumstance in a note I wrote home to Kate. From that moment I have never dreamed of her once,[†1] though she is so much in my thoughts at all times (especially when I am successful, and have prospered in anything) that the recollection of her is an essential part of my being, and is as inseparable from my existence as the beating of my heart is.[†2]

Always affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM BROWN,[†3] 10 MAY 1843

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1938-9; MS 1 p.; dated 10 May 43.

Thanking him warmly for the gift of a book.

To DAVID DICKSON,[†4] 10 MAY 1843

Text from MDGH, I, 89.

1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park,
May 10th, 1843

Sir,

Permit me to say, in reply to your letter, that you do not understand the intention (I daresay the fault is mine) of that passage[†5] in the "Pickwick Papers" which has given you offence. The design of "the Shepherd" and of this and every other allusion to him is, to show how sacred things are degraded, vulgarised, and rendered absurd when persons who are utterly incompetent to teach the commonest things take upon themselves to expound such mysteries, and how, in making mere cant phrases of divine words, these persons miss the spirit in which they had their origin. I have seen a great deal of this sort of thing in many parts of England, and I never knew it lead to charity or good deeds.

Whether the great Creator of the world and the creature of his hands, moulded in his own image, be quite so opposite in character as you believe, is a question which it would profit us little to discuss. I like the frankness and candour of your letter, and thank you for it. That every man who seeks heaven must be born again, in good thoughts of his Maker, I sincerely believe. That it is expedient for every hound to say so in a certain snuffling form of words, to which he attaches no good meaning, I do not believe. I take it there is no difference between us.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. H. FRISWELL,[†1] 10 MAY 1843

Mention in Bangs & Co. catalogue, June 1902; MS 1 p. (3rd person); dated 10 May 43.

To EDWARD F. LEEKS,[†2] 10 MAY 1843

MS Bowdoin College, Maine.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1843.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say that circumstances over which I have no controul, and which oblige me to be otherwise engaged this evening, will prevent my having the pleasure I had expected, of attending your Anniversary Dinner.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward. F. Leeks Esquire

To [?THOMAS LONGMAN], 10 MAY 1843*

MS New York University Library. Address: Substance of letter suggests Longman.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tenth May 1843.

My Dear Sir

I have glanced at the papers you send me; and they appear to be quite correct.

I did not forget yesterday, that I had promised to send to Murray;[†1] but on my life I did not know, without entering into a regular history, what to write. Nor do I know now, unless it be the very short paragraph I send you on the other side,[†2] which you might insert,[†3] where that letter of yours comes out.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 10 MAY 1843

MS University of Texas. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1843.

My Dear Mitton.

If tomorrow at 5, will suit you (as, in the event of my not hearing from you to the contrary, I shall take it for granted it will), I will sign, seal, and deliver, at that hour.[†4] If you are engaged at that time, say when your leisure serves on Friday or Saturday.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To CHARLES SMITHSON, 10 MAY 1843

Text from N, I, 519.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park
Tenth May 1843

My Dear Smithson,

If you will act as my representative at the Font, I will gladly be supposed to make all manner of impossible promises for your blooming daughter,[†5] in right of whom I cordially congratulate you and Mrs. Smithson. And as the captain of the ship in which Mr. William Taylor[†1] served as an able seaman said of the lady who followed Mr. Taylor on board in man's attire, so I say of Mrs. Smithson that "I've wery[†2] much applauded her for wot she's done." I hope my missis won't do so never no more: but that's nothing to the purpose.

We talk of invading you[†3] for a day or two, some time before we go to Broadstairs, which fashionable movement takes place usually on the First of August. I have likewise made rash pledges to go to Scotland, but whether I shall carry out either design is at present hidden in the mists of time and monthly numbers.

Great changes have taken place here, during the many years that have elapsed since your retirement into Yorkshire. I am grey, and Kate is bald. Charles (you remember him a little boy?) was married some years ago to a fascinating girl (with no prospects)[†4] and is just appointed the Government Inspector of Egyptian Balloons, which is a very good post. Mary's second husband is not quite equal to her first, poor fellow!—but in his capacity of chief clerk to the chief magistrate at Bow Street, which office I have filled, as you know, for nearly ten years, he is always near me, which is a great comfort, I find, in the decline of life.

Mr. Mitton after living on hard eggs for several years, under the delusion that he was fast approaching the workhouse, has married his only friend, the old charwoman whom he employed when you first left Southampton Buildings. I am told she beats him cruelly. These are a few of the alterations wrought by Time, you see!

Commend me heartily to all your house,—not forgetting Beauteous Billa,— and lay your hand for me, as apostolically as you can, on the head of my God-child.

Always my Dear Smithson— | Faithfully your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 11 MAY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh May 1843

My Dear Macready

I have proposed next Saturday Week, for poor Black's dinner[†5] at Greenwich (the house we dined in the other day),[†6] at 6 exactly. Will this suit you? I will take you down and bring you home, if you please.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 MAY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth May 1843.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am most earnestly obliged to you for your cordial kindness, which, in its spirit, I really cannot acknowledge sufficiently.

I will take care that my brother immediately acts upon the hint contained in the letter you sent me yesterday. It was a previous knowledge of the perfect truth of all that is stated there, in respect to Railway Making, that first suggested to me the expediency of finding him some other pursuit, if I possibly could. And I still think that if I could get him out to some better sphere of action—as to India—I should do him, as an active and intelligent young man, the best service. Whatever he may get, or fail to get, I cannot be more truly grateful to you than I am.

I called on you the other day, but, I fear, before the Wedding[†1] was over. The wind having, at last, gone round to the South, I think and hope Miss Meredith will make a dashing recovery. Pray tell her, with my best wishes, that she is bound to do so.

Always Yours faithfully & obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 12 MAY 1843

MS British Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Twelfth May 1843

My Dear Sir

Any day next week, I shall be truly delighted if you will breakfast or dine with me.[†2] I will not bore you with a party. That I promise; and I do so, because I think no party will be a relief to you. Name your own hour.

But if you be already sufficiently engaged; do not, I beg, put yourself out of the way. It is a great misery to do so, I know; and in that case you must bind yourself to give me early notice of your next arrival in these parts.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier

To JOHN WILSON,[†3] 13 MAY 1843

Text from N, I, 521.

Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park
Thirteenth May 1843

My Dear Sir,

A few friends of Mr. Black (a countryman of yours) who has been Editor of the Morning Chronicle for nearly thirty years, are going to give him a Strictly Private dinner at the Trafalgar Tavern at Greenwich next Saturday the Twentieth, at a quarter before 6 for 6 exactly. The party is composed of a few influential and private gentlemen who are his personal friends; and will not exceed fifteen in number.

I am one of the circle; and my object in writing to you is to ask you if you will allow me to carry you there, as my guest. You already know the majority of the Company—and would, I think, have pleasure in the Society of the remainder. On the other and more selfish hand, I must frankly tell you that I can think of nothing so appropriate and pleasant to all of us on such an occasion, as the presence of a National man like you who can carry an old Scotchman home again by one sound of your voice.

I will not offer any other apology to you for this request, than that very comprehensive one which lies in the assurance that I well know how valuable your time is, and how numerous your engagements are.

I should be happy to bring you home and to take you down. Oblige me with one line in answer at your early convenience.

Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To ROBERT WOOD,[†1] [13 MAY 1843]

Mention in N, I, 521.

To SIR EDWARD LYTTON BULWER, 14 MAY 1843

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth May 1843

My Dear Sir Edward.

By this time you will, I have no doubt, have received Longman's Circular.[†2] Pray come,[†3] and let us see if we can do anything reasonable.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer

&c &c &c

To THOMAS MITTON, 14 MAY 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Evening | Fourteenth May 1843

My Dear Mitton

Here is as much as I can manage now.[†1] I hope it will do.

When you see Moody,[†2] will you tell him you can get him a cheque from me for £7, if he will take that in full. Should he say, yes, I will forthwith send you that separately. What I now enclose, is "between you and the Schoolmaster".[†3]

Faithfully Always
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To THE REV. HENRY COLMAN,[†4] 16 MAY 1843

MS Harvard College Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixteenth May 1843.

Dear Sir.

The rain prevented me from being punctual yesterday; and you had left your lodgings before I reached them. I was very sorry to miss you, but glad you had not stood upon ceremony, and had taken me at my word.

Will you join our family dinner on Friday (which is, I am sorry to say, the first day we are disengaged) at half past five o'Clock? We shall be quite alone.

If there be, in the mean time, any Lion whose Den I can open for you, pray command me. I called on Sunday last, to say thus much and a great deal more, and to tell you I had been busy all the week, or I should have come to you sooner for Felton's sake. But unfortunately you were from home.

I shall be within doors tomorrow, from half past Eleven to Half past twelve. On other days, I usually leave off work at a quarter before Three in the afternoon, and go out at Three.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend | Henry Colman

To THE REV. W. J. FOX,[†1] 16 MAY 1843

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 157; MS 1 p.; addressed to the Reverend W. J. Fox; dated [London], 16 May 43; marked Private.

Concerning the postponement of the friendly and private dinner to Mr. Black.

To W. C. MACREADY, 16 MAY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth May 1843

My Dear Macready

Sheil,[†2] Fonblanque, and I, have held a kind of Divan,[†3] wherein we have determined that it will be better to defer the dinner to Black, for the present; in as much as some negociations[†4] (having no reference, however, to his restoration) are pending between him and Easthope; and the dinner, however private and friendly, might give offence to the latter Potentate whose sickly soul was cradled in the Stock Exchange, and ran alone in Lombard Street.[†5]

So the dinner, for the time, is off. And if it never comes on, until men are Men and Nature's Nobility are baronets, God help the Landlord who looks to profit from it.

Affectionately Your friend always

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To THOMAS LONGMAN, 17 MAY 1843*

MS Mr Arnold U. Ziegler.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Seventeenth May | 1843.

My Dear Sir

If you and Murray should be together, before I come; pray consider the "two principles" which Dilke[†6] informs me he intends to move in the opening and outset of the business.[†7]

1. That a main object of the association is to advance the cause of International Copyright all over the World.

2. That as it protests against being robbed, it protests no less against robbing; and therefore[†a] pledges itself by all its Members, not [†a]to lay violent hands upon the property of any Foreign author whomsoever, without his permission in writing.

I cannot oppose either of these things, so far as I am concerned. Indeed I consider them unquestionably honorable and just, and calculated to give the association a high standing.

In haste | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Longman Esquire

To W. M. THACKERAY, [6-18 MAY 1843]

Mention in Thackeray to his mother, Mrs Carmichael Smyth, Letters and Private Papers, ed. G. N. Ray, II, 113. Date: On 20 May Thackeray wrote "Boz has written me a letter of compliments" (on his Irish Sketch Book,[†1] published 5 May).

To DR S. G. HOWE, 19 MAY 1843

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1917; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 May 43.

A cordial letter of greeting and invitation to dine. [†1]

To D. M. MOIR, 19 MAY 1843

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth May 1843.

My Dear Sir

Very many thanks to you for your beautiful book,[†2] and for your affectionate letter. I can very truly say that I have not received half as much pain from the sources you mentioned,[†3] as I have received pleasure from any one piece in your volume, or any one sentence in your note. I have a strong spice of the Devil in me; and when I am assailed, as I think falsely or unjustly, my red hot anger carries me through it bravely, until I have forgotten all about it.

When I first began to write, too, I suffered intensely, from reading Reviews. And I made a solemn compact with myself, at last, that I would only know them, for the future, from such General report as might reach my ears. For five years[†4] I have never broken this Rule, once. I am unquestionably the happier for it— and certainly lose no Wisdom.

Upon the whole I have as little to complain of in this respect, as any man perhaps. I set your note against the worst thing[†1] I have heard of within these six months—and find the balance in my favor.

It gives me great pleasure to read your account of Jeffrey.[†2] I have ever found him a warm-hearted, zealous, kindly-natured friend, and I love him very much. I know no man who would be more truly and keenly alive to the tenderness and pathos of your verse.

God bless you and all your house! Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial regards to Mrs. Moir. And I am always

My Dear Moir
(For here I vow never to call you 'Sir' again)
Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

D. M. Moir Esquire

To J. C. PRINCE,[†3] 19 MAY 1843

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1929; MS, 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 May 43.

I think highly of your tribute to Southey;[†4] and was very much influenced by it, on reading it this morning.

To WILLIAM SHOBERL,[†5] 19 MAY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth May 1843

Dear Sir

I am obliged to you for your note—and regret very much that I was not at home on either occasion of your calling here. But I have been constantly engaged in the adjustment of some family affairs;[†6] and they have sadly interfered with my ordinary routine of business and recreation.

I have a great horror of "editing", and have much employment on my hands. I cannot therefore entertain the project[†1] to which your note refers.

I shall not fail to remember, at your desire, that our correspondence on this head, is strictly private.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Shoberl Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 20 MAY 1843†

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night Twentieth May | 1843.

My Dear Talfourd

[†a]I am more vexed than I can tell you, that I overlooked a horrible engagement for Tuesday, the other night; and have only had it brought home to me today.([a]

I am a steward at the Dinner of the Deaf and Dumb Charity,[†2] which comes off that very evening.[†3] That I wouldn't mind; but, most unhappily one Dr. Howe[†4] from America who invented the means of communicating with Laura Bridgman; the deaf, dumb, and blind girl at Boston; has come to London, just when I don't want him, for the express purpose of being carried to that dinner (in pursuance of a wild engagement made four thousand miles off) by me. But for this, he would have remained another week at Liverpool—as I devoutly wish he had.

[†b]We were talking the other night, when we were last together, of the nuisance of these things. Previously to that, I had registered a Vow to have nothing more to do with them. But now,[†b] I swear I will shun them like a Pestilence; and that I will make this, my Third Public Dinner[†5] this year, my final appearance on the London Tavern Stage.

If I get away in decent time, will you let me in?

[†c]Always Faithfully | My Dear Talfourd
CHARLES DICKENS[†c]

P.S. When are you going to let us into the secret of that unconfessed Tragedy?[†6]

To W. C. MACREADY, [25 MAY 1843]

Mention in Macready, Diaries, II, 208. Date: On 25 May Macready recorded: "Note from Dickens".[†1]

To JOHN OVERS, 25 MAY 1843*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Twenty fifth May, 1843.

My Dear Mr Overs,

I have learned the value of a good and honest intention so well, that when I am assured of its deserving that character, I look upon it as a deed done. Do not therefore suppose that in my mind, you have left anything unaccomplished in the matter you wrote me of, a few days since. The measure of my gratification is as well filled up, as if I had the mark of recollection on my table.

I hope your wife is better. She has a fine season before her: and I hope is laying up a store of health, as peasants store up fuel, for the winter.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Overs.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 25 MAY 1843[†2]

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth May 1843.

My Dear Stanfield

No—no—no—Murder, murder! Madness and misconception—Any one of those subjects—not the whole. Oh blessed Star of Early Morning,[†3] what do you think I am made of, that I should, on the part of any man, prefer such a pig-headed, calf-eyed, donkey-eared, imp-hoofed request!

Says my friend,[†4] to me, "Will you ask your friend, Mr. Stanfield, what the damage of a little picture of that size, would be—that I may treat myself with the same—if I can afford it?"—Says I, "I will". Says he, "Will you suggest that I should like it to be one of those subjects?" Says I, "I will".

I am beating my head against the door, with grief and frenzy—and shall continue to do so, until I receive your answer.

Mrs. Stanfield has heard from Kate?[†5]

Ever Heartily Yours
The Misconceived One.

To T. J. WATSON,[†1] 25 MAY 1843

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1924; MS 1 p.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, 25 May 43.

Pray do not forget your kind promise to dine here on Saturday next. We shall be quite a family party;[†2] and our hour is half-past six.

To JOSEPH SOUL,[†3] 26 MAY 1843

Text from N, I, 523.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
Twenty-Sixth May 1843

Dear Sir,

I am greatly obliged to Mr. Abdy[†4] for his kind and flattering recollection of me; and to you for conveying his welcome mark of it. I have not forgotten the Working School,[†5] but have been so constantly engaged in a Private Working School of my own, wherein I am teacher and scholar too, that I have not been able to get there.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND,[†1] 26 MAY 1843*

MS William H. Robinson Ltd.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth May 1843

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Duchess of Sutherland, and very much regrets that having an engagement for this evening which he cannot set aside, and which he has reason to fear will detain him late; he cannot have the honor and pleasure of availing himself of The Duchess of Sutherland's kindness. It is unnecessary for him to add that if it had been possible to forego his previous engagement, he would most gladly have relinquished it.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 26 MAY 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth May 1843.[†2]

My Dear Thompson

Read the enclosed,[†3] and say Will it do?

Faithfully Always.
Anti Pusey[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 MAY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth May 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts

Very many thanks to you for your kind note of yesterday. I will not fail to call on Captain Fitzroy,[†5] and to carry my brother with me, at the appointed time. But I rather fear from what I read in the note you send me from Mr. Parkinson,[†1] that I shall trouble him in vain.

I am delighted to hear that Miss Meredith is getting on so well, and beg to send her my best regards and congratulations. If she goes back any more, though by but the twentieth part of an inch, my faith in her is at an end, and my affections shall be transferred—as a mark of the wildest desperation—to Lady Sale.[†2]

If you will permit me—which I shall take it for granted you will, unless I hear from you to the contrary—I will call on you at about Two on Wednesday: after I have seen Captain Fitzroy.

Dear Miss Coutts
Always Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

June

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 JUNE 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second June 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I will not weary you, at present, by saying anything more in the way of Thanks. I enclose a note, written according to Mr. Marjoribank's[†3] suggestion. It is quite needless, I am sure, for me to add that I am fully sensible of its value, and of his kindness.

Lady Sale, I renounce for ever. And I here register a vow to look upon her henceforth with an eye, colder and duller than a Fish's. Nor will I ever envy her Husband—her dog—her maid—nor anything that is her's,[†4] except the Memory of her departed Son in Law.[†5] He must have had a blessed release; and I have no doubt is in an uncommon state of Peace. If his wife took after her mother, I believe more implicitly than I ever did, that every bullet has its billet, and that there is a Special Providence in the Fall of a Sparrow.[†6]

If Miss Meredith will receive me in that Poet's apartment[†7] you write of, on Sunday next; there will I be. I have pondered and reflected about the best time. Something seems to point in my mind to 3.[†8] But if that something be wrong by the Horse Guards, all times are alike to me in such a pleasant case, and an anonymous figure received per post in the course of tomorrow, will be perfectly understood and gratefully attended to.

There is a terrible paper on Theodore Hook,[†1] in the last Quarterly—admirably written—as I think, from its internal evidence, by Lockhart. I have not seen anything for a long time so very moving. It fills me with grief and sorrow. Men have been chained to hideous prison walls and other strange anchors 'ere now, but few have known such suffering and bitterness at one time or other, as those who have been bound to Pens. A pleasant thought for one who has been using this very quill all day!

Always Faithfully Yours | And earnestly obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To GEORGE FLETCHER,[†2] 2 JUNE 1843

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 119 (1944); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 2 June 43.

I thank you very much for the book ... I have already one reason to read it with interest; and I have very little doubt that its own merit[†3] will give me another.

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 JUNE 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second June 1843.

My Dear Macready.

It has been a matter of Life or Death with the Sanatorium[†4]—which has done a World of Good, and if it can weather the storm, will do worlds more. We are going to have a dinner (Lord Lansdowne, I believe, in the chair)—and they are very anxious to have you for a steward, as being the distinguished head of a large class who come immediately within its objects.[†5] For a similar reason, though it is not so powerful in his case, I have secured Maclise. So, in the name of Wise Charity, and Church Mice—the Sanatorium represents the first; and I—being very poor—the second—let me put you down. I wouldn't ask you in behalf of any other Establishment.

The dinner is proposed for the last Wednesday or Thursday in June—this present Month.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 7 JUNE 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Evening | Seventh June 1843.

My Dear Mitton

I duly received your first note; but I have been (as you never seem to think I am) busied and worried in a hundred ways; with scores of perplexing engagements[†1] on my hands, and the American episode[†2] in Chuzzlewit to wo[rk][†3] at; which takes me at least [twic]e as long, every line of it, [as t]he ordinary current of [it w]ill.

I will try [to] come down to you tomorrow ev[eni]ng at 8. It is the first evening I have had for nights and nights; though every evening, I have meant to come down to you upon the next.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To AMÉDÉE PICHOT,[†4] 7 JUNE 1843

Text from Le Neveu de ma Tante, 3rd edn, Paris, 1851, I, viii-ix; presumably Pichot's translation: of CD's letters to him, only those in Le Neveu de ma Tante are in French.

Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park

7 juin 1843.

Mon cher monsieur,

Je serai vraiment heureux de recevoir votre visite et celle d'un gentleman aussi universellement connu que le personnage noir[†5] dont vous me parlez dans votre billet. S'il vous convenait de venir lundi prochain à midi (je fais une petite absence à la campagne[†1] dans l'intervalle), ce sera un grand plaisir pour moi de faire personnellement votre connaissance.[†2]

Je vous remercie beaucoup de la Cloche du Tocsin,[†3] ainsi que de tout ce que vous me dites d'obligeant et d'aimable.

Croyez-moi fidèlement à vous,
CHARLES DICKENS

A M. Amédée Pichot.

To THE BARONESS DE ROTHSCHILD,[†4] [7 JUNE 1843]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 9 June 43.

To [AUGUSTUS TRACEY], 7 JUNE 1843*

MS University of Texas. Address: clearly to Lieutenant Tracey, Governor of Tothill Fields Bridewell.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Seventh June 1843.

Governor.

Now, we don't want none of your sarse—and if you bung any of them tokes[†1] of yours in this direction, you'll find your shuttlecock sent back as heavy as it came. Who wants your Bridewell umberellers? Do you suppose people can't perwide theirselves with crooked handles, without axing you? Who ever see your umbereller? I didn't. Go and look for it in the Gruel; and if it an't there, search the Soup. It an't so thick, but wot you'll find three and sixpence worth of ginghum[†2] among the ox heads as you pave your garden with. Ah. Oh. Yes. No. Yor'ne too cheekish[†3] by half Governor. That's where it is. You'd better take it out of yourself by a month and labour, on the Mill. If that don't answer, let off one of them blunderbusses in the office agin your weskut. That's what your complaint wants.

his
Villium X Gibbuns
Mark. [†4]

Memorandum added by the Chaplain [†5]

P.S.[†6] The unfortunate man forgot to state that the umbrella was Found in his possession while he penned the above—that his wretched wife was as well as could be expected; also her sister—that he had determined not to ask the Governor in Dr Howe's behalf, for a ticket to the St. Giles's Lions[†7] (thinking the said Doctor troublesome in that respect) but had conferred with Mr. Crea[†8] according to the Governor's kind suggestion; and would write the Governor when the Night was fixed.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 JUNE 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Ninth June 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I hasten to say, in answer to your kind note, that I wrote to the Baroness De Rothschild on Wednesday Night, proposing to call to day at Half Past Three. I did not name an earlier day, because on Tuesday and Wednesday the Baroness was engaged; and yesterday I was obliged to shut myself up, from 9 until 5.

I am truly sorry to hear that Miss Meredith is so slow—the more so, as I think it is quite a new complaint with her. But it must be a comforting reflection, both to her and you, that there are outward causes enough, in all conscience, to account for her tardy recovery. I suppose it is morally impossible to get rid of rheumatism while this terrible wetness prevails.[†1]

I enclose you the little pamphlet[†2] I spoke of—and will report progress when I have seen the Baroness.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 9 JUNE 1843*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth June 1843

My Dear Sir

Will you tell the watchful Crea (who always sits, by instinct, close to the door when he comes here, and looks as if he would like to lock it and keep the key) that at Halfpast Eleven tonight, a carriage—most probably a Brougham—will be waiting by St. Giles's Church; and that in that mysterious vehicle, he will find Dr. Howe and his friend expecting him, eagerly.

He is a cold-blooded fellow, that Howe—a regular American—and I wouldn't have taken the trouble to put even your friendly willingness to this test, but for your letter.[†3]

To DR S. G. HOWE, 9 JUNE 1843

Text from Laura E. Richards and Maud H. Elliott, Julia Ward Howe, 1819-1910, New York, 1916, I, 183.

Ninth June, 1843.

My Dear Howe,

Drive to-night to St. Giles's Church. Be there at half-past 11—and wait. One of Tracey's people will put his head into the coach after a Venetian and mysterious fashion, and breathe your name. Trust him to the death.

So no more at present from

The Mask[†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, [?9 JUNE 1843]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: June 43 on handwriting; likely to be before Macready's last performance on 14 June; Macready mentions a call on 9 June (see fn).

My Dear Macready

Will you call here, if you are coming out?—The sooner after 12, the better.[†2] I wod. come to you; but forgot last night, having appointed a man to call.

Talfourd was sublimely ridiculous—a very comet of absurdity—last night.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To [? SIR FRANCIS AND LADY BURDETT], 10 JUNE 1843*

MS Bodleian Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth June 1843.

Mr. Charles Dickens very greatly regrets that he cannot have the pleasure of accepting [Sir Francis & Lady Burdett's][†3] kind Invitation for Wednesday;[†4] but on that evening his friend Mr. Macready retires from the direction of Drury Lane Theatre, and, for some considerable time,[†1] from the English Stage—and it is an occasion in which he has so much interest and regret, that he cannot avoid being present.[†2]

To GEORGE LAVAL CHESTERTON, [12 JUNE 1843]

Mention in Revue Britannique, Paris, June 1843, p. 702. Date: written during Pichot's and Forgues' call on CD (see To Pichot, 7 June 43, fn).

Introducing Amédée Pichot and Emile Forgues to the Governor of the Middlesex House of Correction. [†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, 12 JUNE 1843*

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. C. Macready Esquire.

Twelfth June 1843

My Dear Macready. Moore[†4] will be very glad to receive your Invitation to the Theatre,[†1] though the chances seem against his being able to use it. His address is 31 Sackville Street.[†2]

Affectionately always

CD.

To [MAJOR] H. S. STEPHENS,[†3] 12 JUNE 1843

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth June 1843.

Sir.

I have appointed the time kindly proposed by His Royal Highness,[†4] for the presentation of the Testimonial[†5] to Mr. Macready.[†6] And I avail myself of the permission of His Royal Highness, to forward such facts connected with the Testimonial, as I conceive His Royal Highness may desire to know. To the best of my recollection, they include those points upon which his late Royal Highness The Duke of Sussex,[†7] laid the greatest stress, and set the most value.

Mr. Smith, 12 Duke Street Lincolns Inn Fields, is the Working Silversmith, at whose house the Testimonial will be, after the day I mentioned in my former letter. In the mean time it is undergoing some process necessary to its completion.[†8]

Should His Royal Highness give me leave, it would afford me pleasure to attend there at any time His Royal Highness might appoint, to explain the views the Committee have had, in the selection of the Design.

I have the honor to be | Sir,

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Captain H. S. Stephens.

To JAMES SILK BUCKINGHAM, 13 JUNE 1843

Facsimile in Henri Saffroy catalogue No. 52 (1967).

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth June 1843.

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your kindness in forwarding me a prospectus of the British and Foreign Institute[†1]—not the less so, because I cannot, at present, become a member of any New association.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James S. Buckingham Esquire

To SIR EDWARD LYTTON BULWER, 13 JUNE 1843

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth June 1843.[†2]

My Dear Sir Edward

The Duke appoints 12 for 1, instead of 1 for 2.

"There's no such thing"[†3]—as an Honorary Secretary. Some phantom with that name, once flitted through the books at Coutts's, but has long since passed away;[†1] and unlike old Aubrey's spectres left no "melodious twang" behind.[†2]

I found two or three restless men, wandering in the depths of the Drury Lane Scenery last night, and plundered them of as many Guineas. They had heard of the Testimonial in their infancy, and thought it a pleasant fiction. One hoary sage had been a Member of the Committee of Taste,[†3] he mournfully said.

Always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 13 JUNE 1843

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth June 1843.

My Dear Jerrold.

Yes. You have anticipated my occupation. Chuzzlewit be damned,—High Comedy and five hundred pounds are the only matters I can think of.[†4] I call it The One Thing Needful, or A Part is Better than the Whole. Here are the characters.

Old Febrile — Mr. Farren.[†5]

Young Febrile (his son) — Mr. Hone.

Jack Hessians (his friend) — Mr. W. Lacy.

Chalks (a landlord) — Mr. Gough.

Hon. Harry Staggers — Mr. Mellon

Sir Thomas Tip — Mr. Buckstone

Swig — Mr. Webster

The Duke of Leeds — Mr. Coutts
Sir Smivin Growler — Mr. Macready

Sir Smivin Growler — Mr. Macready

Servants, gamblers, visitors &c

Mrs. Febrile — Mrs. Gallot

Lady Tip — Mrs. Humby

Mrs. Sour — Mrs. W. Clifford

Fanny — Miss A. Smith[†1]

One scene, where Old Febrile tickles Lady Tip in the ribs, and afterwards dances out with his hat behind him, his stick before, and his eye on the pit, I expect will bring the house down. There is also another point—where Old Febrile, at the conclusion of his disclosure to Swig, rises and says "And now Swig, tell me, have I acted well?"—and Swig says "Well Mr. Febrile! Have you ever acted ill!"—which will carry off the piece.

Herne Bay.[†2] Hum. I suppose it's no worse than any other place in this weather—but it is watery, rather—isn't it? In my mind's eye, I have the sea in a perpetual state of smallpox; and the chalk running downhill like town milk. But I know the comfort of getting to work "in a fresh place", and proposing pious projects to one's self, and having the more substantial advantage of going to bed early and getting up ditto, and walking about, alone. If there were a fine day, I should like to deprive you of the last-named happiness, and to take a good long stroll, terminating in a public house, and, whatever they chanced to have in it. But fine days are over, I think. The horrible misery of London in this weather, with not even a fire to make it cheerful, is hideous.

But I have my Comedy to fly to. My only comfort! I walk up and down the street at the back of the Theatre every night, and peep in at the Green Room Window—thinking of the time when "Dick—Ins"[†3] will be called for, by excited hundreds, and won't come, 'till Mr. Webster[†4] (half Swig and half himself) shall enter from his dressing room, and quelling the tempest with a smile, beseech that Wizard if he be in the house (here he looks up at my box) to accept the congratulations of the audience, and indulge them with a sight of the man who has got five hundred pound in money and it's impossible to say how much in laurel. Then I shall come forward and bow—once—twice—thrice—Roars of approbation—Brayvo—Brarvo—Hooray—Hoorar—Hooroar—one cheer more— and asking Webster home to supper shall declare eternal friendship for that public-spirited Individual—which Talfourd (the Vice) will echo with all his heart and soul and with tears in his eyes: adding in a perfectly audible voice, and in the same breath, that "he's a vewy wetched cweature, but better than Macweady any way, for he wouldn't play Ion[†1] when it was given to him"— after which he will propose said Macweady's health in terms of red hot eloquence.

They have not sent me the Illustrated Magazine.[†2] What do they mean by that?—You don't say your daughter is better, so I hope you mean that she is quite well. My wife desires her best regards. I am always My Dear Jerrold

Faithfully Your friend
The Congreve of the 19th. Century
(which I mean to be called in the Sunday Papers).

P.S. I shall dedicate it to Webster, beginning—"My dear Sir. When you first proposed to stimulate the slumbering dramatic talent of England, I assure you I had not the least idea"—&c—&c—&c.

[†a]P.S. I did your errand to Maclise,[†3] who sends Regards and Thanks.[†a]

To WILLIAM LUCY,[†4] 13 JUNE 1843

MS Mr Leslie Staples. Address: Mr. William Lucy | 25 College Green | Bristol.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth June 1843

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. William Lucy, and begs to inform him, in reply to his letter, that Bailey Junior was liberally rewarded by the Miss Pecksniffs, and broke the bandboxes and damaged the luggage, in the greatness of his energy.[†1]

To WILLIAM SANDYS,[†2] 13 JUNE [1843]

Text from MDGH, I, 178-9. Date: 1843 on Devonshire Terrace and reference to Cornwall; wrongly given as 1847 in MDGH—a common misreading.

1, Devonshire Terrace, June 13th, 184[3].

Dear Sir,

Many thanks for your kind note. I shall hope to see you when we return to town, from which we shall now be absent (with a short interval in next month) until October.[†3] Your account of the Cornishmen gave me great pleasure; and if I were not sunk in engagements so far, that the crown of my head is invisible to my nearest friends, I should have asked you to make me known to them. The new dialogue[†4] I will ask you by-and-by to let me see. I have, for the present, abandoned the idea of sinking a shaft in Cornwall.[†5]

I have sent your Shakesperian extracts to Collier.[†6] It is a great comfort, to my thinking, that so little is known concerning the poet. It is a fine mystery; and I tremble every day lest something should come out. If he had had a Boswell, society wouldn't have respected his grave, but would calmly have had his skull in the phrenological shop-windows.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 17 JUNE 1843

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Parthenon Club | Seventeenth June 1843.

My Dear Milnes

The Duke of Cambridge gives Macready his "Testimonial" on Monday in Willis's rooms at 12 for one. Pray, as a Member of the Committee, come up to the Scratch.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [19 JUNE 1843]

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the day of the presentation.

From the Chapel of the Jail | Monday Morning

Unhappy man.

Yes. I am of opinion that in your miserable condition, you might extend your remarks—so far, for instance, as to say what you had done in the Theatres, and tried to do. But whatever is easiest and most comfortable to yourself, will be the best course to take.[†1]

You will be expected on the Scaffold at halfpast twelve. Enquire for the Committee Room—or the Sheriffs.

If you have anything on your mind, yet unrevealed, now is the time to throw the weight from off your conscience and make a clean breast.

Sympathetically Yours
The Ordinary[†2]

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 20 JUNE 1843*

MS Mr J. M. Dawkins. Address: George Hogarth Esquire | 8 Willows Place | Brixton.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twentieth June 1843.

My Dear Hogarth.

I was obliged to go out very early yesterday morning to arrange for the presentation of Macready's Testimonial. In that way I missed you when you called.

Pray let Mr. Doyle[†1] know that I have heard nothing said to his disadvantage, but on the contrary have learned on all hands, that he acted, in the business of the Chronicle Editorship, with the utmost consideration and manliness. When I first heard of Black's removal, I asked a deservedly distinguished man, in a conversation we had together, at the Athenæum one morning, "whether Mr. Doyle was friendly to him?"—meaning Black. I did so casually, and for information, really not knowing at that time in what relation they stood, with reference to each other. If this should have reached Mr. Doyle (which is very possible), and he supposes on that account that I am "under any wrong impression", undeceive him by all means, and assure him from me, that he is quite mistaken.

So very anxious have I been not to be supposed to cast the slightest blame on Mr. Doyle, that when I wrote certain notes postponing a Private Dinner a few friends had intended to give to Black;[†2] I went out of my way to say, in so many words, that it was merely a mark of our personal regard, and had no reference whatever to any other Transaction or Individual. You know my old regard and esteem for Black, and can perfectly understand this to be the case. I should be greatly shocked and disgusted if I could suppose that my favorable feeling towards him, were considered by any man to include a disfavorable feeling towards his successor, or anybody else. Any such representation is very monstrous, wholly absurd, and from the crown of its head to the sole of its foot, unwarranted.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hogarth Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 22 JUNE 1843

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Wait. | George Cruikshank Esquire | 23 Amwell Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second June 1843.

My Dear George

Can you, and will you, dine with me on Sunday, at 6 exactly? I shall have an American of the better sort[†3]—and Maclise—and maybe two more. That's all.

I am obliged to make it Sunday, for we are going out of town soon; and the preparatory work leaves me no other day to dine upon.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

United best regards to Mrs. C.

To T. B. BRINDLEY,[†1] 26 JUNE 1843*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Sixth June 1843

My Dear Sir

In consequence of your book and kind letter having been sent to my Publishers (where parcels addressed to me, accumulate until there is a great heap to be opened) I have only just now received them. I need not assure you that this is the sole cause of the present tardy acknowledgment of your glowing Dedication.[†2]

Although it puts my modesty to the blush, and makes it very rosy indeed, I am truly obliged to you for your earnest and fervent tribute. I am sure you mean and feel what you say; and this consoles me for not deserving it.

I shall not forget your request, with which I am delighted to comply. My booksellers shall find means of forwarding to you a couple of Volumes,[†3] which pray put upon your shelves in remembrance of me.

Believe me Yours | Faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. T. B. Brindley

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [27 JUNE 1843]

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1923;[†1] MS 1 p; dated Devonshire Terrace, Tuesday Morning. Date: presumably the Tuesday before 1 July 43 (see fn).

Your friend's lines[†2] on seeing poor Scott embark for his last voyage, are in a very worthy spirit, and do him honor. If it is likely to give any pleasure to know that I think so, pray tell him as much;

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JUNE 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 303. Date: 28 June according to Forster.[†3]

I am so irritated, so rubbed in the tenderest part of my eyelids with bay-salt, by what I told you yesterday,[†4] that a wrong kind of fire is burning in my head, and

I don't think I can write.[†1] Nevertheless, I am trying. In case I should succeed, and should not come down to you this morning, shall you be at the club or elsewhere after dinner? I am bent on paying the money. And before going into the matter with anybody I should like you to propound from me the one preliminary question to Bradbury and Evans.[†2] It is more than a year and a half since Clowes[†3] wrote to urge me to give him a hearing, in case I should ever think of altering my plans. A printer is better than a bookseller, and it is quite as much the interest of one (if not more) to join me. But whoever it is, or whatever, I am bent upon paying Chapman and Hall down.[†4] And when I have done that, Mr. Hall shall have a piece of my mind.

To J. SPANTIN,[†5] 30 JUNE 1843

Mention in N, I, 527

To FREDERICK WILKINSON,[†1] 30 JUNE 1843†

MS Dickens House.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park
Thirtieth June 1843

Sir.

I am exceedingly sorry to have read your note incorrectly. I have no doubt the mistake was mine.

Pray believe that I am quite [†a]as much obliged by your polite communication, as if you had offered me a Hundred Translations.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Wilkinson Esqre

July

To JOHN MILES,[†2] [30 JUNE or 1 JULY 1843]

Extract in N, I, 527, from catalogue source; dated Devonshire Terrace, June 1843. Date: CD was still in London 30 June (see last); in To Beard, 18 July, he was back from Yorkshire having been there "all the month".

It would have given me great pleasure to come to you today, if I had been disengaged. But I am going into Yorkshire this evening[†3] to pay a long-promised visit

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 5 JULY 1843*

MS The Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Easthorpe Park | Fifth July 1843

Dear Lady Blessington.

The sins of my youth (I was quite a boy when I made that ancient promise)[†4] rise up against me, fearfully.

If I can think of anything, though it be but a scrap of rhyme, I will send it you by the end of the week. Keep me in your charitable and forgiving remembrance.

Many thanks to you for so kindly recollecting me in the matter of your new book, Meredith.[†5] I torture myself by wondering what its[†6] about, and am all impatience to read it.

Pray make my best regards to Count D'Orsay—and to your nieces—And believe me, with sincerity,

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington

To DANIEL MACLISE, 6 JULY 1843*

MS University of Texas.

Easthorpe Park, near Malton | Yorkshire | Sixth July 1843

My Dear Mac.

It is plain to me, that Smithson (who don't know you as I do) is living in the delusive idea that you are coming down here to see him. Now, if it be delusive, I wish you'd write and tell him so. But if it be not, I wish much more that you would write and say that much. For I am quite serious in saying that this is the most remarkable place of its size in England[†1] and immeasurably the most beautiful; and that if you lose the opportunity of seeing it (they move next Autumn)[†2] you will miss something which would certainly have been most suggestive and enjoyable to you. As to the rides—and they would mount you capitally—it is impossible to do them justice by description.

In the event of your coming, all you have to do, is to start from the Birmingham Railway, for York, at a quarter before Nine in the morning—and to write here, and say on what day. My present intention is to return home on Saturday Week,[†3] but I should be delighted to stay longer, if you were coming.[†4]

Tell me how you get on at the Palace, and whether you are knighted yet.[†5] Kate and Georgy send their best regards.

Always My Dear Mac | Faithfully

CD

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 or 7 JULY 1843]

Extracts in F, IV, i, 294. Date: "July 1843", and "from Yorkshire", according to Forster; dated by reference in To Lady Blessington, 5 July.

Tell me what you think of Mrs. Gamp?[†1] You'll not find it easy to get through the hundreds of misprints in her conversation, but I want your opinion at once. I think you know already something of mine. I mean to make a mark with her.

I have heard, as you have, from Lady Blessington, for whose behoof I have this morning penned the lines I send you herewith. But I have only done so to excuse myself, for I have not the least idea of their suiting her;[†2] and I hope she will send them back to you for the Ex.

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 JULY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Easthorpe Park | Saturday Eighth July 1843

In haste.

My Dear Macready.

You will not suppose, I am certain, that I forgot your request,[†1] the day before I left town.[†2] But I had so much to do, that I was occupied until midnight, and went to bed quite weary and worn out. Since I have been here, I have done nothing but ride over all manner of country;[†3] stroll among ancient Ruins; eat, drink, and sleep.

Your note finds me just setting out for Scarboro'. But having an hour to spare, I sketch hurriedly what I think you had best say. I have followed your own ideas closely, and have, indeed, seldom departed from them except when it occurred to me that they could be showily combined with mine.

Kate unites with me in best regards to Mrs. Macready, and all your house We shall be home, I think, this day Week.

Always My Dear Macready
Affectionately Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To JOHN BOWRING,[†4] 15 JULY 1843*

MS The Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Easthorpe Park | Near Malton | Yorkshire. | Fifteenth July 1843.

My Dear Sir

I have been in this county for some weeks, and your kind note has only just now reached me. If I had been in town, it would have given me much pleasure to accept your friendly Invitation.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Bowring

To THE EARL OF MULGRAVE, 15 JULY 1843*

MS The Marquis of Normanby.

Easthorpe Park, Near Malton
Fifteenth July 1843.

My Dear Lord Mulgrave.

We were at Mulgrave last Sunday afternoon. There we found the most hospitable and generous arrangements made for our reception—everybody on the look out for us—and the whole establishment with a lively Faith in our having come to stay a couple of days at least—all owing to your kind instructions in our behalf.

But I never dreamed of such a thing, when I wrote to you. All I intended, was, to stroll about the grounds and walk through the house. And being in that part as a mere bird of passage, and having (besides Mrs. Dickens and her sister) two friends with me, I went to Mulgrave solely with this view. So the bed was unslept in, and the dinner was untasted, and the wine was undrunk, and the buck was unattended in his Death next morning, and I, most probably, at the time of his violent decease, was returning to this place by the Whitby railroad.[†1]

Pray receive my hearty thanks for your great kindness. We were perfectly charmed with Mulgrave, which is one of the most desirable and beautiful places[†2]

I ever saw. I could ride about those woods, and look out upon the sea from that terrace, and write in that Library, for ever and a day. More I will report to you when we come home next week; but I could not avoid shaking hands with you by post, first, and telling you how much indebted we are to you.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl of Mulgrave.

To JOHN OVERS, 15 JULY 1843*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Easthorpe Park, | Near Malton, Yorkshire.
Fifteenth July, 1843.

Dear Mr Overs,

Your letter has only just now been forwarded to me here. I have been in this county for some weeks.

It gives me much sorrow to receive so bad an account of your doings—the more so, because my influence in respect of newspapers is most insignificant: my position suggesting to me the propriety of keeping aloof from them. But it has occurred to me that with the Doctor's[†1] assistance, I may possibly be able to advance your object. And immediately on my return to town I will see him on the subject.

This will be very early next week. By Wednesday, or Thursday at latest, you shall hear from me again.

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr J. A. Overs.

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 JULY 1843

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth July 1843

My Dear Beard

I have been in Yorkshire all the month, and am only just now in the receipt of your note. I address my answer to the old house: hoping that by this time you have come home, round and sound. You know who has always treated you successfully, and you know where that great physician is to be found, during the months of August and September. Kate agrees with me that to make your cure complete, there would be nothing like eight undisturbed weeks at Broadstairs with that distinguished man. Now, do think of this. There are a hundred things you could do for the paper on the Margin of the Sea—abstracting Parliamentary reports, and so forth—matters of great use in the Recess. The bedroom you had last year, is ready for you. The bathing machine beckons its wooden finger— and cocks its preposterous eye—on the sands. The tide rushes in, demanding to be breasted. Dick is all joviality, and very brown in the face from Northern toasting. Mac swears "he'll swim to the Goodwin Sands if HE will—there!" Forster asserts with dignified emphasis that "it is the very sort of thing my dear boy that Beard requires to set him on his legs". Timber makes himself as unlike a dog as possible, in confirmation of these sentiments. Topping forgets even "Mount Consumious"[†1] at the Surrey Zoological Gardens (his crack subject just now) and overhearing these discussions, redly[†2] remarks to me that "a little pickling 'ud make Mister Beard wot he used to be, wen we wos down at whats his name"—meaning Petersham[†3]—in short, everything and everybody are decisive on the subject; so take the Sussex card[†4] off your Portmanteau, and label it afresh Pashangermarjit.

Have you come back? If so, will you ride out on Sunday, and dine here afterwards? Say yes: and I will call for you at half past two.

I am so full of Broadstairs and your going there, that I have scarcely left room to say, with my regards to Mr. Blackburn, that we have sent out Powers of attorney to divers parts of India,[†5] for the enforcement of the new law as far as my books are concerned; and that I don't think I can entertain any proposal for an arrangement, after handing the matter over to others by these means. But if he would like to make a distinct proposal, I will take counsel with the Publishers upon it.

Regards from all to all. Ever Faithfully My Dear Beard.

CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire

To MISS MARGARET GILLIES,[†6] 21 JULY 1843*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First July 1843.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Gillies, and begs to say that he will have the pleasure of sitting to her, next Tuesday, at 12.

To THOMAS MITTON, 22 JULY 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty Second July | 1843.

My Dear Mitton

I want you to help me in money matters, until the 1st. of September; for several things have come crowding on me at once,[†1] and although at any other time I wouldn't mind overdrawing my account at Coutts's, I cannot prevail upon myself to do so now, when she is exerting herself in behalf of Alfred. I needn't say why I will not exceed by sixpence the reduced monthly of C and H.[†2]

Therefore what I want you to do, is, to draw £70 on account of that bill you have deposited at your banker's,—for me,—and to pay [it][†3] into Coutts's. This will not [pu]t[†4] you about, as you have already effected the necessary understanding with them. On the 1st. of September, as I have said, you shall have it back[†5]—of course with whatever interest the bankers charge for the five or six weeks.

Faithfully Always

CD.

I am working like a Dragon.[†6]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 24 JULY 1843

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday 24th. July 1843

Dear Sirs

Please to send a proof of the enclosed[†7] to the Parthenon Club in Regent Street; this evening at 7 exactly. Mr. Forster and myself will be there together, and the boy can wait while it is corrected.

Faithfully Always

C.D.

Messrs. Bradbury & Evans.

To JOHN DE GEX, 24 JULY 1843

Text from N, I, 529, checked from MS Sotheby's, May 1966.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth July 1843.

My Dear De Gex.

I am truly sorry to be obliged to return the enclosed papers to you, without having written a Statement for the Charity.[†1] But I have so much to do, and have been so beset by other Institutions to use my pen in their behalf also, that I really have no alternative. Trust me that if I could have done it by any reasonable means, I would.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John De Gex Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 24 JULY 1843

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1949; MS 2 pp; dated Devonshire Terrace, 24 July 43.

I finished my work on Saturday; having gone at it every morning at eight o'clock. I have great confidence in the story, and have just received some tremendous and elaborately written panegyrics on the same from Sydney Smith,[†2] which from such an authority are worth having.

To JOHN OVERS, 24 JULY 1843*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Twenty fourth July, 1843.

Dear Mr Overs,

As soon as I returned to town, I fulfilled my promise, and saw the doctor on the subject of your last note. He agreed with me that there was a bare possibility of being able to do something with the newspaper proprietor[†3] I mentioned to him, whom he knows better than I do. He said he would see him straightway. I have nothing further to report yet; but am waiting, still, to hear the result.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 JULY 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts

I don't know whether you have seen an advertisement in the papers of this morning, signed by me and having reference to the family of Mr. Elton[†1] the actor, who was drowned in the Pegasus. I consented last night to act as Chairman of a Committee[†2] for the assistance of his children; and I assure you that their condition is melancholy and desolate beyond all painting.

He was a struggling man through his whole existence—always very poor, and never extravagant. His wife died mad, Three Years ago, and he was left a Widower with seven children—who were expecting his knock at the door, when a friend arrived with the terrible news of his Death.[†3]

If in the great extent of your Charities, you have a niche left to fill up, I believe in my heart this is as sad a case as could possibly be put into it. If you have not, I know you will not mind saying so to me.

Do not trouble yourself to answer this, as I will call upon you today between one and two. I called on Sunday last, to enquire after Miss Meredith; but seeing your carriage at the door, I left my card.—By the way—lingering at the street corner, was a very strange looking fellow, watching your house intently. I hope it was not Mr. Dunn.[†1]

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Yours Faithfully & obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To SIR EDWARD LYTTON BULWER, 26 JULY 1843

MS Lytton Papers.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843[†2]

My Dear Sir Edward.

I am Chairman of a Committee whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit for the relief of the seven destitute children of poor Elton (your Beauseant)[†3] who was drowned in the Pegasus. They are exceedingly anxious to have the great assistance of your name; and if you will allow yourself to be announced as one of the Body,[†4] I do assure you, you will help a very melancholy and distressful cause.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 26 JULY 1843

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843

My Dear Cruikshank.

I am Chairman of a Committee whose object is to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit, for the relief of the seven destitute children of poor Elton the actor, who was drowned in the Pegasus. They are exceedingly anxious to have the great assistance of your name; and if you will allow yourself to be announced as one of the body, I do assure you, you will help a very melancholy and distressful cause.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

†[a]The committee meet tonight, at 8, at the Freemasons' Tavern.†[a]

To J. P. HARLEY, 26 JULY 1843*

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth July 1843.

My Dear Harley.

I am Chairman of a Committee whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit for the relief of poor Elton's seven children. They are exceedingly anxious to have the great assistance of your name. Let them have it my good fellow for God's sake.

We meet at the Freemason's tonight at 8.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To THOMAS HOOD, 26 JULY 1843*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843

My Dear Hood.

I am Chairman of a Committee whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit for the relief of the seven destitute children (they have no mother) of poor Elton the actor, who was drowned in the Pegasus. They are exceedingly anxious to have the great assistance of your name; and if you will kindly allow yourself to be announced as one of the Body, I do assure you, you will help a very melancholy and distressful cause.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

We meet at the Freemasons tonight at 8 oClock.†[1]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 26 JULY 1843*

MS Benoliel Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843

My Dear Mac.

I am Chairman of a Committee whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a Benefit for the relief of poor Elton's children. They are exceedingly anxious to have your name as one of the body. Pray give me permission to announce it.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 26 JULY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843.

My Dear Macready.

I consented last night to be Chairman of a Committee for doing the best that can be done for the unfortunate family of that poor man, Elton. A couple of hours put the business into good shape; and I have written this morning to everybody I can think of.

Lumley[†1] replies that he cannot allow the Singers to assist—but sends five guineas as his Subscription. Now, what do you think? I ask you for the guidance of my own opinion. Without the singers, wod. you run the hazard of opening Drury Lane if it is to be got for nothing—or would you accept an offer which has been made by Webster, of the Haymarket and the Lighting?[†2]

Faithfully Always

CD

W. C. Macready Esquire

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 26 JULY 1843*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843

My Dear Mr. Rogers.

I am Chairman of a Committee whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit for the relief of the seven destitute children (for they have no mother) of poor Mr. Elton the actor, who was drowned in the Pegasus. They are exceedingly anxious to have the great assistance of your name; and if you will kindly allow yourself to be announced as one of the Body, I do assure you you will help a very melancholy and distressful cause.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 26 JULY 1843

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July 1843

My Dear Stanfield

I am Chairman of a Committee, whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit for the relief of the seven destitute children of poor Elton the actor, who was drowned in the Pegasus. They are exceedingly anxious to have the great assistance of your name; and if you will allow yourself to be announced as one of the body, I do assure you you will help a very melancholy and distressful cause.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Committee meet tonight at the Freemasons', at 8 oClock.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,†1 26 JULY [1843]

Text from N, II, 44, from catalogue source, dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 July 47. Date: clearly 1843, with other Elton letters.

I am Chairman of a Committee, whose object is, to open a Subscription and arrange a benefit for the relief of the seven destitute children of poor Elton the actor who was drowned in the Pegasus. They are exceedingly†2 anxious to have the great assistance of your [name];†3 and if you will allow yourself to be announced as one of the body, I do assure you, you will help a very melancholy and distressful cause.

To W. C. MACREADY, 26 JULY 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Evening | Twenty Sixth July 43

My Dear Macready

I called at Forster's today, and found him in the act of writing to you, before going to Greenwich with Procter.†4 As soon as he told me what he was writing,

I undertook to save him the trouble of going on, by communicating its substance to you in the strongest terms I cod. employ.

He had been thinking all day of your declining to act for Elton's family—and had been considering it: not with any reference to them, but solely with reference to You. And he says that if you do not act at that benefit, you will, in your position, do yourself irretrievable injury, and give your enemies a lever to use against you, which will be worked beyond all foreseeing.

I had a delicacy in telling you my opinion on this subject, for I thought it might be only mine. But when I find Forster so bent and set upon this opinion— and call to mind that the instant I heard of your refusal last night, I considered it the most rash and injudicious step that such a man as you could take—I should be wanting in the duty which my love for you prescribes, if I did not tell you plainly—along with him—that I think you have made a mistake, which I urge you to reconsider.

My Dear Macready everything that you urge as a reason for not playing, is a reason why you should play, and a reason why the grace of playing wod. be immeasurably the greater. I am confident you are in error.

Do think of this once more, and let me hear from you between this and a quarter to Eight, when I leave home to preside at the Meeting.[†1]

Faithfully Ever

CD

W. C. Macready Esquire

To JOHN [POVEY],[†2] [27 or 28] JULY 1843

Extract in S. J. Davey's catalogue No. 42, (Dickens House, in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", III, 20); MS 1 p.; Date: 13 July 1843 according to catalogue, but certainly later; probably the day after one of the early meetings of the Elton committee. Address: "Pavey" in catalogue, clearly a misreading of "Povey".[†2]

Your kind offer of assistance in behalf of poor Elton was joyfully and gratefully accepted by us all. I have sent—I mean, I will send immediately—your note to Serle, who is our acting manager.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 JULY 1843

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth July 1843.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will not attempt to tell you what I felt, when I received your noble letter last night.[†1]

Trust me that I will be a faithful steward of your bounty; and that there is no charge in the Wide World I would accept with so much pride and happiness as any such from you.

I should be uneasy if I did not let you know that your letter being put in my hands at the Freemasons' last night where the committee were sitting,[†2] I told them what it contained, before I arrived at your injunction of secrecy. But the gentlemen who were there, were far too much impressed by what I had conveyed to them, ever to betray your confidence, I am sure. I can answer for that.

Charley will be ready at the appointed time, and is counting the clock already.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JULY 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 308. Date: 28 July 43 according to Forster.

I write in haste, for I have been at work all day; and, it being against the grain with me to go back to America when my interest is strong in the other parts of the tale, have got on but slowly.[†3] I have a great notion to work out with Sydney's favourite,[†4] and long to be at him again.

To MRS HOOD,[†1] [?28 JULY 1843]*

MS (fragment) Mr Graham Storey. Date: June-July 1843 on handwriting; probably in reply to hers of ?27 July (see To Hood, 26 July, fn).

I shall be glad to hear from you, or to see you, next week.

Always Dear Mrs. Hood | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 31 JULY 1843*

MS Mr Theodore Hewitson.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First July 1843

My Dear George.

I received your hearty letter in due course; and have begged the Secretary to send you, in the course of to day, some Circular Letters and Subscription Lists. Any money you can collect,[†2] we shall be truly glad to receive.

I hope we are getting on as well as we could expect. Much depends on the benefits.[†3] After one or two of them have come off, we shall know better where we are.

In haste | Always Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

August

To T. P. COOKE,[†4] 3 AUGUST 1843

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1272 (1917); MS 1 p.; dated London, 3 Aug 43.

Acknowledging a contribution for Elton's children. [†5]

To VISCOUNT MORPETH, 3 AUGUST 1843

MS Mr George Howard.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Third August 1843.

Dear Lord Morpeth

In acknowledging the safe receipt of your kind donation in behalf of poor Mr. Elton's orphan children,[†1] I hope you will suffer me to address you with little ceremony, as the best proof I can give you of my cordial reciprocation of all you say in your most welcome note. I have long esteemed you, and been your distant but very truthful admirer; and trust me that it is a real pleasure and happiness to me to anticipate the time when we shall have a nearer intercourse.

Believe me | With sincere regard
Faithfully Your Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Viscount Morpeth

To JOHN OVERS, 3 AUGUST 1843*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Third August | 1843.

Dear Mr. Overs.

The Dr. has taken immense pains in the matter I wrote you of. The result is, that Mr. Young[†2] of the Sun Newspaper requests you to call on him, next Saturday evening at 6. The office is in the Strand, and you must send up to him the enclosed card.

Be as plain; and as cheerful in your anticipations of him and yourself; as you can. Tell him what things of yours have been published, and fill him with the impression, so far as in you lies, that you desire to be useful. If you do anything for him, lay this to heart—never use a hard word, where an easy one will serve your turn.

Write to me at Broadstairs, and tell me what passed. If, at any time, you have anything to do for him that admits of so much leisure, let me see your Manuscript.

In great haste | Faithfully Yours always

CD

Mr. J. A. Overs

To WILLIAM PULFORD,[†3] 6 AUGUST 1843†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth August 1843.

Dear Sir

In reply to your enquiry, I beg to say that what we are doing for the orphan Family of poor Mr. Elton, is simply this—endeavouring to get as much money as possible. We shall be truly glad to have some from you; and I have written to the Secretary, begging him to send you a Blank subscription List by Post.

I do not see that it is possible to suggest anything to Mr. Welch.[†1] Whatever he could get for us, we would gratefully accept; but we have no means of sending professional people down to Brighton,[†2] nor should we feel justified in incurring any risk in getting up a concert or other entertainment there. But I will not fail to make Mr. Welch's kind offer of service known to the Committee when they meet again on Monday week; and I can answer for their thanking him for his kindness.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Pulford Esquire

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 6 AUGUST 1843*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Broadstairs,[†3] Kent. | Sixth August 1843.

My Dear Milnes

Behold the date of this. And say,—being here, and receiving your kind note only this morning—how could I breakfast with you yesterday?

I wish you would endorse this Card for me. Mr. Jerrold (who is a friend of mine, and a man of very great ability) wishes to join the British and Foreign Institute; and by the endorsement of an original member, can do so without ballot.[†4] Therefore if you will affix your sign manual to this little bit of pasteboard, and send it me back again by return of post, you will truly oblige me.

My Dear Milnes | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire

To R. W. HONNER,[†5] 6 AUGUST 1843

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1912; MS 1 p; dated Broadstairs, 6 Aug 43.

I am truly gratified by your account of the splendid result of the Benefit[†6] at the Surrey Theatre in behalf of the orphan children of poor Mr. Elton—and so will the committee be, I am sure, when we meet again on Monday week.

To AMBROSE WILLIAMS,[†1] 6 AUGUST 1843*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth August 1843

Dear Sir

Pray accept the best thanks of the Committee for your Address in behalf of poor Mr. Elton's children. It impressed me very favorably in the reading, as being appropriate, modest, and pathetic.

You will have seen that having had another and an earlier offer[†2] we could not avail ourselves of your kindness. But we are not the less indebted to you, believe me.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Ambrose Williams Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 AUGUST 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Seventh August 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I went up to town last Thursday to preside at a Meeting of the Committee for poor Mr. Elton's children; but as I came back here next morning, I had no opportunity of calling on you.

Owing to the offensive conduct of Mr. Charles Mathews[†3] and his estimable lady we were unable to use either Harley, the Keeleys, Mrs. Nisbett, or Mrs. Stirling at the Haymarket, although they had all been previously announced with Mr. Webster's full consent. The consequence was, that we were obliged at the last moment to alter an excellent bill; and the entertainments were very trash.[†4] You will be glad to hear, however, that the receipts were £280; a very large sum in that Theatre, which when crammed to the very utmost will not hold more than £300. Including this sum, we had in hand on Thursday night, hard upon a thousand pounds; since which time the benefit at the Surrey[†5] (the only return I have yet had) has produced a hundred and forty pounds more, and some additional private subscriptions have also come in.

Finding it exceedingly difficult in the midst of their trouble to arrive with anything like tolerable certainty at the weekly expenses of the family; last Thursday, I placed £10—the ten you sent me—in the hands of a lady[†1] who knows them, and can be trusted to make a careful report: and begged her to account to me for it, and to get me an estimate by the time we meet again (next Monday) of their average bills. Before I see you on that head, I will visit the children myself. For I wish particularly to speak to the eldest girl[†2] about it, and to be very careful that your assistance, is free from the controul of any relation or friend,[†3] but such as she knows can be thoroughly trusted, and is kindly disposed towards them. I fancy I have observed some slight signs and tokens, which render this precaution indispensable.

This little place is very bright and beautiful—and I wish you and your Patient could see it this morning. I have been here six years, and have never had a Piano next door; but this fortune was too good to last, and now there is one close to the little bay window of the room I write in, which has six years' agony in every note it utters. I have been already obliged to take refuge on the other side of the house, but that looks into a street where the "Flies" stand, and where there are donkeys and drivers out of number. Their Music is almost as bad as the other, and between the two, I was driven into such a state of desperation on Saturday, that I thought I must have run away and deserted my family. The matter was not mended when the paper came down, with Mr. Thomas Duncombe's[†4] tribute to the character and acquirements of Mr. Bunn;[†5] which so exasperated me (though the two gentlemen are well worthy of each other's friendship) that I walked ten miles over burning chalk, before I could resume the least composure.

Charley and two hundred and fifty other children, are making fortifications in the sand with wooden spades, and picking up shells and sea weed. He is still full of his last visit to you, and brightened up like burnished copper at breakfast when I asked him if he had any message to send. If I thought his love would do (he said) he should like to forward it. So I promised to convey it to you, in due form. I have some idea of writing him a Child's History of England,[†1] to the end that he may have tender-hearted notions of War and Murder, and may not fix his affections on wrong heros, or see the bright side of Glory's sword and know nothing of the rusty one. If I should carry it out, I shall live in the hope that you will read it one wet day.

I fear the weather has been sorely against Miss Meredith; as indeed it has been against all invalids, Mrs. Dickens[†2] included, who begs me to send her best remembrances. It would give us great pleasure to hear that Miss Meredith had left her room, though individually I must say that if I once knew of her eating two thirds of a roast chicken, and drinking three glasses of Wine, I would be content to leave all the rest to Herself and Good Fortune. I beg to be heartily remembered to her, and am ever dear Miss Coutts with high regard

Faithfully Yours

Miss Coutts.

To THOMAS MITTON, 10 AUGUST 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent | Tenth August 1843.

My Dear Mitton

I have but a moment before the Post goes: having been at work the livelong day.

If the Insurance[†3] be not for Chapman and Hall, let it drop. But if it be theirs, I think we had better let it be renewed; the account not having been wiped off to the extent we had looked for. If it be mine—decidedly No.

I shall come to town for a meeting of the Elton Committee, on Monday: returning next Morning. I will appoint a time for calling on you when I know my movements better—most likely by Sunday Night's Post from here. We have about £1500 in hand.

The next No.[†4] is not so much to my taste as the last—being in America again. But I am making the best of it.

Faithfully Yours ever

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 13 AUGUST 1843

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1932; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 13 Aug 43.

I come up to town tomorrow for one night, and dine with Mr. Forster at 5. If you can send a proof of the accompanying MS[†1] by that time, I should like to have it.... Punch is better than ever[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 AUGUST 1843]*

MS Mr Alfred Essex. Date: clearly same day as last.

Broadstairs | Sunday.

My Dear Forster.

I shall come up by the Fame; we may dine at halfpast 5 to the moment—and I have little doubt that I shall be with you before then.

I have "Yeses" from Barham and Stanny. Thompson will be out of England. Stone uncertain, till tomorrow night. Edwin Landseer, very.

Have you asked Fox?[†3]

Ever affecy.

CD.

John Forster Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [13 AUGUST 1843]*

MS University of Texas. Date: clearly same day.

Broadstairs | Sunday

My Dear Mitton

I shall come up by the Fame tomorrow, and will immediately call—it will be only a call I am sorry to say—on you. But I shall be in town again, soon.

I have nearly killed myself with laughing at what I have done of the American No.[†4]—though how much comicality may be in my knowledge of its Truth,[†5] I can't say. I seem to hear the people talking again.

Faithfully Ever

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 AUGUST 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Fifteenth August 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I have satisfactorily ascertained that the weekly expenses of the Elton Family, will be, as nearly as possible, Three Pounds—not more. I have also taken the utmost care that not a farthing of the money shall be appropriated to any but the main and single purpose of their support; and that no man, woman, or child, shall interfere with its expenditure in any way. I will keep such a watch upon them as Argus could not have surpassed, though all his eyes had been melted down into one; and will take care that every shilling you entrust me with in their behalf, shall be satisfactorily accounted for.

You will be glad, I am sure, to hear that the Subscriptions and benefits together, will amount to a couple of Thousand Pounds.[†1]

I shall come to town to see the children on Friday week; and if you are not otherwise engaged, will call on you next morning about one o'Clock. I sincerely hope Miss Meredith is better. She ought to be much better now, I think.

Always Dear Miss Coutts
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 AUGUST 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 309. Date: 15 Aug according to Forster; but he is probably wrong in saying that it was accompanied by the "second chapter of his eighth [error for ninth] number".

I gather from a letter I have had this morning that Martin has made them all stark staring raving mad across the water.[†2] I wish you would consider this.

Don't you think the time has come when I ought to state that such public entertainments as I received in the States were either accepted before I went out, or in the first week after my arrival there; and that as soon as I began to have any acquaintance with the country, I set my face against any public recognition whatever but that which was forced upon me to the destruction of my peace and comfort—and made no secret of my real sentiments.

To H. K. BROWNE, [?15-18 AUGUST 1843]

MS Huntington Library. Date: probably between 15 Aug (his return to Broadstairs) and the completion of the No. on 18 Aug.[†1]

2nd Subject[†2]

The First Subject having shewn the settlement of Eden on paper, the second shews it in reality. Martin and Mark are displayed as the tenants of a wretched log hut (for a pattern whereof, see a Vignette brought by Chapman and Hall) in a perfectly flat swampy, wretched forest of stunted timber in every stage of decay, with a filthy river running before the door, and some other miserable loghouses indicated among the trees, whereof the most ruinous and tumbledown of all, is labelled BANK. And National Credit Office. Outside their door, as the custom is, is a rough sort of form or dresser, on which are set forth their pot and kettle and so forth: all of the commonest kind. On the outside of the house at one side of the door, is a written placard CHUZZLEWIT AND CO. ARCHITECTS AND SURVEYORS; and upon a stump of tree, like a butcher's block, before the cabin, are Martin's instruments—a pair of rusty compasses &c On a three legged stool beside this block, sits Martin in his shirt sleeves, with long dishevelled hair, resting his head upon his hands: the picture of hopeless misery—watching the river, as sadly remembering that it flows towards home. But Mr. Tapley, up to his knees in filth and brushwood, and in the act of endeavouring to perform some impossibilities with a hatchet, looks towards him with a face of unimpaired good humour, and declares himself perfectly jolly. Mark the only redeeming feature. Everything else dull, miserable, squalid, unhealthy, and utterly devoid of hope: diseased, starved, and abject.

The weather is intensely hot, and they are but partially clothed.[†1]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 18 AUGUST 1843*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Address: clearly to Bradbury & Evans (see 13 Aug).

Broadstairs | Friday 18 August 1843

Dr. Sirs.

Proof with all speed

Faithfully

CD.[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 AUGUST 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Twentieth August 1843

Dear Miss Coutts

I avail myself of the last moment before the post leaves, to say that I have just received your kind note, and that either you misread, or I miswrote mine. I said Saturday Week[†3]—meaning next Saturday. I only mention it, lest you should think I had neglected my appointment.

I am truly rejoiced to hear that Miss Meredith has made a rally; and am quite sure of her, now. Charley sends his best love.

The piano goes away on Friday. My mind misgives me that some other Instrument will take the house afterwards. I have seen a man looking at the bill, who has been heard playing the flute in the Evening under solitary cliffs.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Yours faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To MR COOPER,[†1] 21 AUGUST 1843

Mention in N, I, 533.

To FRANCIS CREW,[†2] [24 AUGUST 1843]

Text (with corrected punctuation) from version by F. Crew, described by him as "something like this" (MS John Rylands Library; see fn below). Mention in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1492; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Thursday night—clearly the Thursday before the Macready dinner on 26 Aug.

Dear Sir

A few friends[†3] will dine together at the Star and Garter, Richmond, on Saturday at four for the purpose of giving a farewell dinner to Mr Macready on his departure for America. It struck me on my journey to town from Broadstairs that your company would be a great acquisition to our party. I do not pretend to hide from you that I am in some measure selfish in this invitation, but yet I think you will derive some pleasure from such a meeting. You [cannot][†1] but be aware how charmed I always am with your delightful voice, nor less admirable taste, and I would willingly afford my friends who will be present upon this occasion an example of them. Do not, however, look upon the reason of my asking the pleasure of your company, but come. You will by doing it very much oblige

Yours most faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE GENTLEMEN OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE, 28 AUGUST 1843

MS Boston Public Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Twenty Eighth August 1843.

Gentlemen.

You are aware, I have no doubt, that a Public Subscription has been entered into, for the benefit of the Seven Orphan Children—all girls but one—of the late Mr. Elton, who was drowned in the Sad Shipwreck of the Pegasus. Their mother died insane some years since; and but for the friends they have found since their father's death, they would be quite destitute and unprotected.

The fund will be vested in three trustees—Edward Marjoribanks Esquire, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, and myself. A committee of five gentlemen; all known to Mr. Elton and to the public; will be associated with them for promoting, by all means in their power, the welfare of these orphans, and the benevolent intentions of the Subscribers.

I have refrained from addressing you until now, for I deemed it right to bring our plans thus far towards a practical conclusion, before I troubled you upon the subject. But I feel that I should be very imperfectly discharging my duty as Chairman of the Committee of this Fund, if I allowed the Subscription to come to a close, without soliciting the aid of a body of Gentlemen, always conspicuous for their Charity and Generosity, and always so nobly representing, in its best aspect, the Wealth of this great city.

Trust me, Gentlemen, that if you should feel disposed to assist the object I have thus briefly explained and have very much at heart, you will extend a helping hand to persons not unworthy of your notice; and may securely rely on as careful, and at the same time as tender and becoming an appropriation, of every farthing of the money, as even you yourselves could desire.†1

I have the honor to be
Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Gentlemen | of | The Stock Exchange.

To W. H. MURRAY,†2 29 AUGUST 1843†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Broadstairs, Kent | Twenty Ninth August 1843

Dear Sir

As I do not know the address of Bishop Gillies;†3 and as the kind offer of that reverend Gentleman in reference to the disposal of one of poor Elton's children, was made through you; I shall feel much obliged to you if you will convey to him the purport of this communication.

The smaller committee to whom the immediate consideration of the family's necessities has been entrusted, have given their best and most grateful attention to the offer of Bishop Gillies. But they have come to the conclusion that as it would involve the necessity of one child being educated in the Roman Catholic persuasion, it is best for them to decline it.

In arriving at this opinion, they have not allowed themselves to be influenced by any religious opinions or scruples of their own: but have confined themselves to three points of consideration—firstly, how their father would have viewed such a proposal had he been happily alive—secondly, how the elder children regard it among themselves—and thirdly how far they would be justified in introducing differences of faith and separations of opinion among persons too young to judge on such difficult matters, for themselves. The result is, what I have already stated.

They beg, at the same time, to return the Bishop their warm and cordial acknowledgements; and to assure him of their high esteem.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Murray Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 AUGUST 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 296. Date: according to Forster, "at the close of August", from Broadstairs,[†1] and "a few days" before To Felton, 1 Sep; but clearly not earlier than 29 Aug, to allow time for a whole day since CD's return from London.

I performed an insane match against time of eighteen miles by the milestones in four hours and a half, under a burning sun the whole way. I could get no sleep at night, and really began to be afraid I was going to have a fever. You may judge in what kind of authorship-training I am to-day. I could as soon eat the cliff as write about anything.

September

To C. C. FELTON, 1 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Berg Collection. Address: By the Caledonia Mail Packet | Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts | United States.

Broadstairs, Kent. First September 1843.

My Dear Felton. If I thought it in the nature of things that you and I could ever agree on paper touching a certain Chuzzlewitian question whereupon Forster tells me you have remarks to make, I should immediately walk into the same tooth and nail. But as I don't—I won't. Contenting myself with this prediction—that one of these years and days, you will write or say to me "My dear Dickens you were right, though rough, and did a world of good, though you got most thoroughly hated for it." To which I shall reply, "My dear Felton, I looked a long way off and not immediately under my nose, [†a]and I value their hatred, being haters, just as much as I prized their love, being lovers—a little more indeed, for Nature formed them to be very constant in their prejudices, and not at all constant in their affections."[†a] At which sentiment you will laugh, and I shall laugh; and then (for I foresee this will all happen in England) we shall call for another pot of porter, and two or three dozen of oysters.

Now don't you in your own heart and soul[†b]—in that secretest of Feltonian chambers—[†b]quarrel with me for this long silence? Not half so much as I quarrel with myself, I know; but if you could read half the letters I write to you in imagination, you would swear by me for the best of correspondents. The truth is, that when I have done my morning's work, down goes my Pen, and from that minute I feel it a positive impossibility to take it up again, until imaginary butchers and bakers wave me to my desk. I walk about brimful of letters, facetious descriptions, touching morsels, and pathetic friendships, but can't for the soul of me uncork myself. The Post-Office is my rock ahead. My average number of letters that must be written every day, is, at the least, a dozen. And you could no more know what I was writing to you spiritually, from the perusal of the bodily thirteenth, than you could tell from my hat what was going on in my head, or could read my heart on the surface of my flannel waistcoat.

This is a little fishing-place; intensely quiet; built on a cliff whereon—in the centre of a tiny semicircular bay—our house stands: the sea rolling and dashing under the windows. Seven miles out, are the Goodwin Sands (you've heard of the Goodwin Sands?) whence floating lights perpetually wink after dark, as if they were carrying on intrigues with the servants. Also there is a big lighthouse called the North Foreland on a hill behind the village—a severe parsonic light— which reproves the young and giddy floaters, and stares grimly out upon the sea. Under the cliff are rare good sands, where all the children assemble every morning and throw up impossible fortifications which the sea throws down again at high water. Old gentlemen and ancient ladies, flirt, after their own manner, in two reading rooms and on a great many scattered seats in the open air. Other old gentlemen look all day through telescopes and never see anything. In a bay-window in a one pair, sits from nine o'Clock to one, a gentleman with rather long hair and no neck-cloth who writes and grins as if he thought he were very funny indeed. His name is Boz. At one, he disappears, and presently emerges from a bathing machine, and may be seen—a kind of salmon-coloured porpoise— splashing about in the ocean. After that, he may be seen in another bay window on the ground floor, eating a strong lunch—after that, walking a dozen miles or so— or lying on his back in the sand, reading a book. Nobody bothers him unless they know he is disposed to be talked to; and I am told he is very comfortable indeed. He's as brown as a berry, and they do say, is a small fortune to the innkeeper who sells beer and cold punch. But this is mere rumour. Sometimes he goes up to London (eighty miles or so, away) and then I'm told there is a sound in Lincolns Inn Fields at night, as of men laughing: together with a clinking of knives and forks and wine-glasses.

I never shall have been so near you since we parted aboard the George Washington, as next Tuesday. Forster, Maclise, and I—and perhaps Stanfield— are then going aboard the Cunard Steamer at Liverpool, to bid Macready good bye, and bring his wife away.[†1] It will be a very hard parting. You will see and know him of course. We gave him a splendid dinner last Saturday at Richmond, whereat I presided with my accustomed grace. He is one of the noblest fellows in the world; and I would give a great deal that you and I should sit beside each other to see him play Virginius, Lear, or Werner—which I take to be, every one, the greatest piece of exquisite perfection that his lofty art is capable of attaining. His Macbeth, especially the last act, is a tremendous reality; but so indeed is almost everything he does.[†1] You recollect perhaps that he was the guardian of our children while we were away. I love him dearly. [†c]He has no letters from me: not even to you.[†2] Do not laugh, when I say that I have given him none, lest they should injure him; for I know how many head of vermin would eat into his heart if they could, that they might void their hatred even second-hand, upon a man I prized.[†3] But pray tell Sumner, Ticknor, and such friends as you know I esteem, with what commendation and affectionate regard, I mention him through you.[†4] If I could un-dedicate Nickleby, I would, until his return from America.[†c]

You asked me, long ago, about Maclise. He is such a wayward fellow in his subjects,[†5] that it would be next to impossible to write such an article as you were thinking of, about him. I wish you could form an idea of his Genius. One of these days, a book will come out—Moore's Irish Melodies[†6]—entirely illustrated by him, on every page. When it comes, I'll send it to you. You will have some notion of him then. He is in great favor with the Queen, and paints secret pictures for her to put upon her husband's table on the morning of his birthday[†7]

—and the like. But if he has a care, he will leave his mark on more enduring things than Palace Walls.

And so Longfellow is married.[†1] I remember her well; and could draw her portrait—in words—to the life. A very beautiful and gentle creature—and a proper love for a poet. My cordial remembrances and congratulations. Do they live in the house where we breakfasted?[†2] [†d]And does Longfellow find cold water as essential to matrimony as to a single life. I greatly desire to be enlightened on this head. Do ask him—in confidence. As to oysters—but I may be open to misconstruction, if I pursue that subject.[†d]

I very often dream I am in America again; but strange to say, I never dream of you. I am always endeavouring to get home in disguise, and have a dreary sense of the distance. Apropos of dreams, is it not a strange thing if writers of fiction never dream of their own creations: recollecting I suppose, even in their dreams, that they have no real existence? I never dreamed of any of my own characters and I feel it so impossible, that I would wager Scott never did of his, real as they are. I had a good piece of absurdity in my head a night or two ago. I dreamed that somebody was dead. I don't know whom, but it's not to the purpose. It was a private gentleman and a particular friend; and I was greatly overcome when the news was broken to me (very delicately) by a gentleman in a cocked hat, top boots, and a sheet. Nothing else. "Good God", I said. "Is he dead!". "He is as dead Sir", rejoined the gentleman, "as a door-nail. But we must all die Mr. Dickens—sooner or later my dear Sir"—"Ah!" I said. "Yes. To be sure. Very true. But what did he die of?" The gentleman burst into a flood of tears, and said, in a voice broken by emotion, "He christened his youngest child, Sir, with a toasting-fork." I never in my life was so affected as at his having fallen a victim to this complaint. It carried a conviction to my mind that he never could have recovered. I knew that it was the most interesting and fatal malady in the world; and I wrung the gentleman's hand in a convulsion of respectful admiration—for I felt that this explanation did equal honor to his head and his heart!

What do you think of Mrs. Gamp? And how do you like the undertaker? I have a fancy that they are in your way. Oh Heaven such green woods as I was rambling among, down in Yorkshire, when I was getting that done, last July![†3] For days and weeks, we never saw the sky but through green boughs; and all day long, I cantered over such soft moss and turf that the horse's feet scarcely made a sound upon it. We have some friends in that part of the country (close to Castle Howard, where Lord Morpeth's father dwells in state—in his Park indeed) who are the jolliest of the jolly: keeping a big old country house, with an ale cellar something larger than a reasonable church, and everything like Goldsmith's bear dances, "in a concatenation accordingly". Just the place for you, Felton! We performed some madnesses there, in the way of forfeits, pic-nics, rustic games, inspections of ancient monasteries at midnight[†1] when the moon was shining; that would have gone to your heart, and as Mr. Weller says, "come out on the other side."[†2]

†eI was going to say a great deal about Mrs. Felton, and the good it would do her to bring her to England, but Kate is going to write to her by this Mail:†3 which is much better. Our domestic news is slight but portentous. Coming events cast their shadows before. I have visions of a fifth child, sometimes.†e

Write soon My Dear Felton, and if I write to you less often than I would, believe that my affectionate heart is with you always. Loves and regards to all friends, from Yours ever and ever
CHARLES DICKENS

†fP.S. I heard from Hamlet†4 by the last packet.†5 He seems to be a prey to Gentle Melancholy. But he was a Good fellow, and I believe as honestly and disinterestedly attached to me, as a Man could be. I wish you could have seen his lady love. Quite a practical joke, she was.†f

To W. C. MACREADY, 1 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | First September 1843.

My Dear Macready.

I have lately had great doubts of the propriety of my seeing you on board the Steamer. It will be crowded with Americans at this season of the year; and believe me, they are not the people you suppose them to be. So strongly have I felt that my accompanying you on board, would be, after the last Chuzzlewit, fatal†6 to your success, and certain to bring down upon you every species of insult and outrage, that I have all along determined within myself to remain in the Hotel, and charge the Landlord to keep my being there, a secret.

But this morning I have heard from Marryatt†7 to whom Stanfield had chanced to mention our Liverpool design.†1 And he so emphatically and urgently implores me, for your sake, not even to go to Liverpool, that I instantly renounce the delight of being among the last to say God bless you. For when a man who knows the country confirms me in my fears, I am as morally certain of their foundation in Truth and freedom from exaggeration, as I am that I live.

If you but knew one hundredth part of the malignity, the monstrous falsehood, the beastly attacks even upon Catherine;†2 which were published all over America, even while I was there, on my mere confession that the country had disappointed me—confessions wrung from me in private society, before I had written a word upon the people—you would question all this, as little as I do. Soon after you receive this, I hope to come to Clarence Terrace to shake you by the hand.†3

And now my dear Macready, I have one request to make to you; the indisputable expediency of which is as clearly presented before my eyes, as if it were written in fire upon the wall: Whatever you see or hear stated of me—whatever is addressed to you or to anybody else in your presence—never contradict it, never take offence at it, never claim me for your friend, or champion me in any way.†4 I not only absolve you from any such office, but I distinctly entreat you to consider silence upon all such topics, your duty to those who are nearest and dearest to you. It is enough for me that while you are away, you hold me in your heart. I have no desire to be upon your lips. Nor have I the faintest glimmering of a wish that you should say any monstrous assertions to my disparagement are false, because you know them—knowing me—to be so. Every anxiety of my breast, points in an exactly opposite direction.

Further—do not write to me through the post, but enclose any letter to me, in some other one, and let it come that way. And do not be shaken out of this by your own prepossessions or by anything else. For I know that such precaution is necessary—though I do not know that I should have had the courage to tell you so, but for the indescribable earnestness of Marryatt, who gives expression, in a perfect agony of language, to every misgiving that has haunted me for months past.

Ever My Dear Macready | Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

I wish to Heaven I could un-dedicate Nickleby until you come home again.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?3 SEPTEMBER 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 296. Date: "from Broadstairs" according to Forster; presumably the day after their meeting in London 2 Sep (Macready, Diaries, II, 219).

Your main and foremost reason for doubting Marryat's judgment,[†1] I can at once destroy. It had occurred to me many times; I have mentioned the thing to Kate more than once; and I had intended not to go on board, charging Radley to let nothing be said of my being in his house. I have been prevented from giving any expression to my fears by a misgiving that I should seem to attach, if I did so, too much importance to my own doings. But now that I have Marryat at my back, I have not the least hesitation in saying that I am certain he is right. I have very great apprehensions that the Nickleby dedication will damage Macready. Marryat is wrong in supposing it is not printed in the American editions, for I have myself seen it in the shop windows of several cities. If I were to go on board with him, I have not the least doubt that the fact would be placarded all over New York, before he had shaved himself in Boston. And that there are thousands of men in America who would pick a quarrel with him on the mere statement of his being my friend,[†2] I have no more doubt than I have of my existence. You have only doubted Marryat because it is impossible for any man to know what they are in their own country, who has not seen them there.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | (Lord De Grey's)[†3] | Putney.

Broadstairs. | Fifth September 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts.

All of a sudden it occurred to me the other day that if I went to Liverpool with Macready they would bowstring his throat in New York; so tightly that not a word should come out of it upon the stage—and drive him out of the country, straightway. While I was deliberating whether this was probable in the abstract, or I was like Dennis (who after writing a satire on the French Nation, fled from the English Coast on catching sight of a French ship in the distance: thinking it must be despatched to seize and bear him off)[†1] the Postman brought me a note from Marryatt, adjuring me not to go, or Macready was "done for". As he knows the virtuous Americans pretty well and as I think I do too, I immediately abandoned my intention. And so it came to pass that I sat down to Chuzzlewit quietly, and am now in the heart of it. Under other circumstances I should have been reporting to you this week, touching the Ragged Schools.[†2]

I find that they are only open on Sundays and Thursdays. Next Thursday week,[†3] in the evening, I will take my seat among the fluttering rags of Saffron Hill. If I have finished my Number, and can remain in town next day, I will come out to Putney. If I should be obliged to return here on Friday morning, I will punctually write you a full account of the school, the pupils, and the masters; and all concerning them.[†4]

Charley and his sisters desire their loves to be faithfully conveyed to you. The piano is gone, and the flute is out of hearing—at Dover. But a barrel organ, a monkey, a punch, a Jim Crow, and a man who plays twenty instruments at once and doesn't get the right sound out of any one of them, are hovering in the neighbourhood. Also a blind man who was in a Sea Fight in his youth; and after playing the hundredth psalm on a flageolet, recites a description of the Engagement.

Charley is so popular with the boatmen, that I begin to think of Robinson

Crusoe, and the propriety of living in-land. I saw him yesterday through a telescope, miles out at sea, steering an enormous fishing-smack, to the unspeakable delight of seven gigantic companions, clad in oilskin. Katey is supposed to be secretly betrothed, in as much as a very young gentleman (so young, that being unable to reach the knocker, he called attention to the door by kicking it) called the other evening, and being gratified in a mysterious, I may say quite a melodramatic, request, to speak with the Nurse, produced a live crab, which he said he had "promised her".

I hope Miss Meredith is past the fowl stage, and getting on towards beef. I beg to be cordially remembered to her.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN OVERS, 5 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fifth September 1843.

Dear Mr. Overs

I received your five pound note, quite safely, this morning. I take it for granted that if you could not comfortably afford to return it, you would never dream of sending it to me.

I shall be glad to hear whether you do anything satisfactory with Mr. Young. Don't you think you could suggest to him the feasibility of your writing some original articles in the paper? It is much read by working men in London. Couldn't you hit upon some subject of interest to them (and consequently to other people of liberal opinions) and suggest it to Mr. Young? I fear—this is strictly between ourselves—that your Guildhall attendance[†1] may turn out unprofitable in more ways than one. But be as patient as you can, because the difficulty of holding any moderate recompense in that way (I mean the newspaper way) would be nothing to the difficulty of seizing it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I hadn't time to tell you the other day, how immeasurably better I thought you looking.

To FREDERICK MARRYAT, 6 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS University of Texas.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sixth September 1843.

My Dear Marryat,

A hundred thanks for your kind note, and the renewal of your hospitable invitation—and for your truly friendly suggestion in the joint matter of Macready and Liverpool. The same thought had occurred to me, but I felt it would seem so preposterous to people who didn't "know our country",[†1] that I really lacked the courage to give it utterance. As soon as I heard what you had said, I resolved, of course, to keep away—and did so.

It gives me great pleasure to find that you like the tickling. I shall go in again before I have done, and give the Eagle a final poke under his fifth rib.[†2]

I fear I cannot say with any degree of certainty, sooner than the third week in October for the pleasures of Langham;[†3] but please God I shall be ready about the 19th. or 20th. I will make this known to Maclise and Forster; and we will send you a threatening letter when the time approaches.

Kate (that's Mrs. Dickens) is very thankful for your kind recollection of her, and begs me to say that she hopes to have the pleasure of knowing your daughter[†4] well. I fear however that she will not be fit for travelling. A coming event casts its shadow before. Still she can't make up her mind to a capital No[†5] yet.

My Dear Marryat | Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 7 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Seventh September 1843

My Dear Fred

I have only time to say that we are all well, and here is the Money. Best regards and loves to all at pleasant Easthorpe.

Acknowledge safe receipt.

Affy. always

CD.

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To MR CAPEL,[†1] [8 SEPTEMBER 1843]

Mention in next.

Thanking him for Stock Exchange subscriptions to the Elton Fund.

To [EDWARD MARJORIBANKS], 8 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Morgan Library. Address: clearly written to Marjoribanks, a banker and a fellow trustee of the Elton Fund.

Broadstairs, Kent | Eighth September 1843.

My Dear Sir

I think the Stock Exchange Subscription, all things considered, an excellent one. I assure you I should have thought Twenty Pounds a most satisfactory result. The suggestion was truly valuable.

I have written by this post to Mr. Capel. I think we had better enter all their names in the book. Perhaps it would be well to bracket them, "Stock Exchange"? I return you the list.

A Misgiving came over me that the quondam Dr. Kaye,[†2] while tinkering his name into something else, might have permanently taken off the handle. But in the days when I met him he wore that appendage; and I didn't like to apply my shears to it without authority.

I begin to be afraid from the tone of your letters that you are going to set up an opposition Chuzzlewit.[†3] If your mind be made up, you won't believe anything I may say to dissuade you. But I assure you it's a poor trade—nothing like banking.

My Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

N.B. | The Original Boz. | All others are Counterfeits.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†4] 8 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighth September 1843

Sir.

I thank you for your welcome and obliging note; and I beg to inform you, in reply, that Chuzzlewit, like Pickwick and Nickleby, will be completed in Twenty Numbers.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MADAME SALA,[†2] [?AUGUST-SEPTEMBER 1843]

Mention in G. A. Sala, Things I Have Seen and People I Have Known, 1894, I, 59, as "from Broadstairs, or Brighton, or some other watering-place". Date: 1843, as Sala says he was "about fifteen" and that Punch had started "some two years previously"; in the period when CD was at Broadstairs and making occasional visits to London.

An amicable letter, making an appointment for Sala and his mother to meet him at ten o'clock on a given morning at the Euston Hotel.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 12 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS British Museum. Address: By favor of Thomas Hood Esquire | Professor Napier | Castle Street | Edinburgh.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twelfth September 1843

My Dear Sir

I will not offer any apology for introducing to you, Mr. Hood—a personal friend of mine whom I greatly value; and a public friend of yours, I have not the least doubt, already. If his writings have not found for him greater favor in your eyes than any I could bespeak, then am I the most mistaken of Edinburgh citizens.

I am going to write to you in a week or two, upon the subject we spoke of when you were last in London,[†3] in reference to which, an idea has now and then occurred to me: though I am yet sadly in want of your suggestive help.—In the meantime Mrs. Dickens begs to unite with me in cordial regards to yourself and daughter.[†4] And I am always

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier.

To THOMAS HOOD, 12 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twelfth September 1843

My Dear Hood

Since I received your first letter, I have been pegging away, tooth and nail, at Chuzzlewit. Your supplementary note[†1] gave me a pang such as one feels when a friend has to knock twice at the street door, before anybody opens it.

There can be no doubt in the mind of any honorable man, that the circumstances under which you signed your agreement, are of the most disgraceful kind in so far as Mr. Colburn is concerned. There can be no doubt that he took a money-lending, bill-broking, Jew clothes-bagging, Saturday Night pawnbroking advantage of your temporary situation. There is as little doubt (so I learn from Forster who had previously given me exactly your version of the whole circumstances) that like most pieces of knavery, this precious document is a mere piece of folly, and just a scrap of wastepaper wherein Mr. Shoberl might wrap his dirty snuff.[†2] But I am sorry—speaking with a backward view to the feasibility of placing you in a better situation with Colburn—that you flung up the Editorship of the Magazine. I think you did so at a bad time, and wasted your strength in consequence.

When a thing is done, it is of no use giving advice—not even when it can be as frankly rejected as mine can be by you. But have you quite determined to reject his offer of the Thirty Guineas per sheet? Have you placed it, or resolved to place it, out of your power to enter into such an arrangement if you should feel disposed to do so, bye and bye? On my word I would pause before I did so— and if I did, then, most decidedly, I would open a communication with Bentley, and try to get that Magazine.[†3] For to any man, I don't care who he is, the Editorship of a Monthly Magazine, on tolerable terms, is a matter of too much moment, in its pecuniary importance and certainty, to be flung away as of little worth. It would be to me, I assure you.

I send you letters for Jeffrey and Napier.[†1] If the former should not be in Edinburgh, you will find him at his country place, Craigcrooch,[†2] within three or four miles of the City. Should you see Wilson, give him a hundred hearty greetings from me. And should you see the Blackwoods[†3] don't believe a word they say to you. Moir (their Delta) is a very fine fellow, and you will like him much. In all probability he will come to see you, should he know of your being in Edinburgh.

A pleasant journey and a pleasant return! Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best regards to Mrs. Hood. And I am always

My Dear Hood | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hood Esquire P.S. The light of Mr. Colburn's countenance has not shone upon me in these parts.[†4] May I remain in outer darkness!

To T. J. SERLE, 12 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Broadstairs. | Twelfth September 1843

My Dear Serle

I shall see you tomorrow evening, of course. Will you send Miss Elton the enclosed? She ought to have had it last Friday, but I had no memorandum of her address.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To S. R. STAREY, 12 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Boston Public Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twelfth September 1843.

Sir.

I take a great interest in the advertizement of the Ragged School;[†1] and am deeply impressed by a sense of the great benevolence and importance of the scheme. I have also promised a wealthy and influential person to whom you made application for support, that I would see your pupils, and take an opportunity of being present in the school. I do not suppose that you would consider a visit from me, likely to be prompted by idle curiosity; and I merely mention this latter circumstance as one that is likely to interest you.

I shall be in town on Thursday; and if you will kindly write me word (addressed to my house in town) at what hour that evening, I could visit the school and see it in its usual aspect without giving you any inconvenience, I will be punctual in coming—bringing two, or at most three friends, along with me, if I have your permission.[†2]

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Samuel R. Starey

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14 SEPTEMBER 1843]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 323. Date: according to Forster, 18 Feb 44; but neighbouring extracts contain other dating errors, and the only Nos in which Betsey Prig appears are Oct and Nov 43 and June 44. In this period the only recorded visit to the Ragged School (perhaps with "two, or at most three friends", and certainly with Stanfield) was on 14 Sep 43.

Stanfield and Mac have come in, and we are going to Hampstead to dinner. I leave Betsey Prig as you know, so don't you make a scruple about leaving Mrs. Harris.[†3] We shall stroll leisurely up, to give you time to join us, and dinner will be on the table at Jack Straw's at four... In the very improbable (surely impossible?) case of your not coming, we will call on you at a quarter before eight, to go to the ragged school.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Mr Roger W. Barrett.

Broadstairs | Sixteenth September 1843

Dear Miss Coutts.

I wished very much to have had the pleasure of coming to Putney on Friday, and to have remained there that night, in compliance with your kind Invitation. But when I got to town on Thursday, I had still an unfinished number on my hands and mind. So I came back here again yesterday—too late for the post, or I would have saved it, and written to you. Pray tell Miss Meredith, with my best regards, that I have written the second chapter in the next number, with an eye to her experiences.[†1] It is especially addressed to them, indeed.

On Thursday night, I went to the Ragged School; and an awful sight it is.[†2] I blush to quote Oliver Twist[†3] for an authority, but it stands on that ground, and is precisely such a place as the Jew lived in. The school is held in three most wretched rooms on the first floor of a rotten house; every plank, and timber, and brick, and lath, and piece of plaster in which, shakes as you walk. One room is devoted to the girls: two to the boys. The former are much the better-looking—I cannot say better dressed, for there is no such thing as dress among the seventy pupils; certainly not the elements of a whole suit of clothes, among them all. I have very seldom seen, in all the strange and dreadful things I have seen in London and elsewhere, anything so shocking as the dire neglect of soul and body exhibited in these children. And although I know; and am as sure as it is possible for one to be of anything which has not happened; that in the prodigious misery and ignorance of the swarming masses of mankind in England, the seeds of its certain ruin are sown, I never saw that Truth so staring out in hopeless characters, as it does from the walls of this place. The children in the Jails are almost as common sights to me as my own;[†4] but these are worse, for they have not arrived there yet, but are as plainly and certainly travelling there, as they are to their Graves.

The Masters are extremely quiet, honest, good men. You may suppose they are, to be there at all. It is enough to break one's heart to get at the place: to say nothing of getting at the children's minds afterwards. They are well-grounded in the Scotch—the Glasgow—system[†5] of elementary instruction, which is an excellent one; and they try to reach the boys by kindness. To gain their attention in any way, is a difficulty, quite gigantic. To impress them, even with the idea of a God, when their own condition is so desolate, becomes a monstrous task. To find anything within them—who know nothing of affection, care, love, or kindness of any sort—to which it is possible to appeal, is, at first, like a search for the philosopher's stone. And here it is that the viciousness of insisting on creeds and forms in educating such miserable beings, is most apparent. To talk of Catechisms, outward and visible signs, and inward and spiritual graces, to these children, is a thing no Bedlamite would do, who saw them. To get them, whose whole lives from the moment of their birth, are one continued punishment, to believe even in the judgment of the Dead and a future state of punishment for their sins, requires a System in itself.

The Masters examined them, however, on these points, and they answered very well—sometimes in a shout all at once, sometimes only one boy, sometimes half a dozen. I put a great many questions to them upon their answers, which they also answered very well. There was one boy, who had been selling Lucifer Matches all day in the streets—not much older than Charley—clad in a bit of a sack—really a clever child, and handsome too, who gave some excellent replies, though, of course, in language that would be very strange in your ears. Hardly any of them can read yet. For the masters think it most important to impress them at first with some distinction (communicated in dialogue) between right and wrong. And I quite agree with them. They sell trifles in the streets, or beg (or some, I dare say, steal) all day; and coming tired to this place at night, are very slow to pick up any knowledge. That they do come at all, is, I think, a Victory.

They knew about the Saviour, & the Day of Judgment. The little match boy told me that God was no respecter of persons, and that if he (the match boy) prayed "as if he meant it", and didn't keep company with bad boys, and didn't swear, and didn't drink, he would be as readily forgiven in Heaven, as the Queen would. They understood that the Deity was everywhere, and had knowledge of everything; and that there was something in them which they couldn't see or lay their hands on, which would have to account to him after they were dead. They were very quiet and orderly, while the Master said a little prayer; and sang a short hymn before they broke up. The singing was evidently a great treat, and the match boy came out very strong, with a Shake, and a Second.

I am happy to say I afforded great amusement at first—in particular by having a pair of white trousers on, and very bright boots. The latter articles of dress, gave immense satisfaction, and were loudly laughed at. Mr. Stanfield, who was with me,—in consequence of looking rather burly and fat in the small room— was received with a perfect cheer; and his sudden retirement, in consequence of being overcome by the closeness of the atmosphere, and the dread of Typhus Fever, was much regretted. When they saw that I was quite serious, and had an interest in their answers, they became quiet, and took pains. They were still better-behaved on seeing that I stood with my hat off, before the master (though I heard one boy express his opinion that I certainly wasn't a barber, or I should have cut my hair); and so far as their behaviour is concerned, I should not have the least doubt of my ability—or that of anybody else who went the right way to work—to reduce them to order in five minutes, at any time.

The school is miserably poor, you may believe, and is almost entirely supported by the teachers themselves. If they could get a better room (the house they are in, is like an ugly dream); above all, if they could provide some convenience for washing; it would be an immense advantage. The moral courage of the teachers is beyond all praise. They are surrounded by every possible adversity, and every disheartening circumstance that can be imagined. Their office is worthy of the apostles.

My heart so sinks within me when I go into these scenes, that I almost lose the hope of ever seeing them changed. Whether this effort will succeed, it is quite impossible to say. But that it is a great one, beginning at the right end, among thousands of immortal creatures, who cannot, in their present state, be held accountable for what they do, it is as impossible to doubt. That it is much too squalid and terrible to meet with any wide encouragement, I greatly fear. There is a kind of delicacy which is not at all shocked by the existence of such things, but is excessively shocked to know of them; and I am afraid it will shut its eye on Ragged Schools until the Ragged Scholars are perfect in their learning out of doors, when Woe to whole garments.

I need not say, I am sure, that I deem it an experiment most worthy of your charitable hand. The reasons I have, for doubting its being generally assisted, all assure me that it will have an interest for you. For I know you to be very, very far-removed, from all the Givers in all the Court Guides between this, and China.

If you will let me know whether there is anything you would like me to do in the matter, I shall be truly rejoiced to do it—I shall certainly visit the school again; for some important topics have occurred to me, in reference to which, I want to offer strong suggestions to the Masters.

We return to town on the second of next month. I am going down to Manchester for a couple of days, on the fifth, to preside at the re-opening of their Athenæum, whereat some couple of thousand people are to be assembled.[†1] If you are at Putney on the Third or Fourth, perhaps you will let me come to see you.

With best regards to Miss Meredith—and Mr. Young[†2] if the bird of passage known by that name be still with you—I am always Dear Miss Coutts

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 16 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS British Museum.

Confidential

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixteenth September 1843

My Dear Sir

I hinted in a letter of introduction I gave Mr. Hood the other day to you, that I had been thinking of a subject for The Edinburgh.[†1]

Now, would it meet the purposes of the Review, to come out strongly against any system of Education, based exclusively upon the principles of the Established Church? If it would, I should like to shew why such a thing as the Church Catechism is wholly inapplicable to the state of ignorance that now prevails; and why no system but one, so general in great religious principles as to include all creeds, can meet the wants and understandings of the Dangerous Classes of Society.

This is the only broad ground I could hold, consistently with what I feel and think, on such a subject. But I could give, in taking it, a description of certain voluntary places of instruction, called "The Ragged Schools", now existing in London—and of the schools in Jails[†2]—and of the ignorance presented in such places, which would make a very striking paper—especially if they were put in strong comparison with the effort making, by subscription, to maintain exclusive Church Instruction.[†3] I could shew these people in a state so miserable and so neglected, that their very nature rebels against the simplest religion—and that to convey to them the faintest outlines of any system of distinction between Right and Wrong, is in itself a Giant's task, before which Mysteries and Squabbles for Forms, must give way. Would this be too much for the Review? I shall be glad to know what you think.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier P.S. We should have to find a peg[†4] to hang the paper on.—Perhaps you know of one.

To A. VAN LEE,[†1] 16 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS[†2] Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: M. Avan Lee | Amsterdam.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate—Regents Park
September 16th. 1843

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to thank you for the terms in which it is expressed.

I am compelled to add, however, that it is not in my power to enter into any arrangement for the transmission of early proofs of my wrtings, with a view to their translation abroad, unless some distinct proposal is made to my publishers, upon which in the ordinary course of business they can form an opinion and report the same to me in consulting my views upon the subject.[†3]

I believe there are difficulties and objections in the way of such an arrangement, unless it were attended with a certain profit to them.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

M. Avan Lee[†4] | Amsterdam

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventeenth September 1843

My Dear Mitton

As soon as I receive Smithson's communication, I will answer it in the needful way.[†5] It gives me great delight to find him yielding so readily to your proposition; and I must say that I think he has always behaved like a Man in this matter.[†6]

I am not surprised at your having enjoyed yourself at Easthorpe, for it is a most enjoyable place. I never saw such varieties of scenery crowded within so small a space, as on the Whitby Railroad.[†7] From Devonshire to the Scottish Highlands, all the grades and diversities are there.

They write to me from Manchester 'Thursday, October the Sixth'. But Thursday is the Fifth. I suppose, however, that they are more likely to be wrong in the day of the month than the day of the week. Supposing it is Thursday, we will go down on Wednesday (staying with Fanny) and return on Friday.[†8]

The weather here is gorgeous, but the heat terrific. All well except Mrs. D who has ailed very much this time, and suffers a good deal.

The next Number,[†1] bangs all the others!

Faithfully Ever
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To THE REV. JOHN SINCLAIR,[†2] [?17 SEPTEMBER 1843]

Mention in next.

To T. J. SERLE, [?17 SEPTEMBER 1843]

MS Mr Peter Brandt. Date: 1843, as obviously referring to the Eltons;[†3] CD returned 2 Oct, therefore Sep; 17 Sep the likeliest Sunday (see To Serle, 12 Sep and 24 Sep).

Broadstairs | Sunday

My Dear Serle

The writer of the enclosed is the Reverend John Sinclair. I have written to him, and told him that if we proceed in the matter before I return next month, one of the Committee will communicate with him. Will you, like a good Christian—either through yourself or that better Christian, Mrs. Serle—possess the two girls with the contents of the Printed Scrap? And if either of them should be ready to go, I suppose she had better, like Macbeth's visitors, go at once[†4]— had she not?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To CHARLES SMITHSON, 20 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Twentieth September 1843.

My Dear Smithson.

He[†5] is the most tremendous fellow in the world. I don't know what is to be done with him. Just before he left town, he came out in a waistcoat that turned my whole mass of blood—a flowery waistcoat, with buttons like black eyes; I don't mean natural black eyes, but artificial ones. He has also a sea-weed coloured coat, against which human nature revolts and reason rebels. His trousers (especially at the knees) are a spectacle I wouldn't meet in a lonely place for the wealth of a Rothschild. His cravats would be rejected with scorn in Holywell Street. Any magistrate of intelligence (if there were such a thing) would commit him to the treadmill, on the evidence of his jewellery. There is a ring, like a lady bird in the dropsy, on one of his fingers (one of those that are always crooked: I think the third) which tempts me to stab him. I don't see the end of it. But it must be something awful.

I am going to Manchester on the fifth, to take the chair at a great set-out at their Athenæum, where a vast number of people are to be assembled. He wants to go with me. I have said "Yes". My mind is disturbed in consequence, so excuse the incoherence of this letter. Sometimes I wonder whether I could get him in, in a box; sometimes, a bag. Sometimes I think of making interest with the Railroad to put him in a wrong train and run him into Scotland. I fancy the Manchester people putting him on the platform, as a distinguished friend of mine from London. I see him standing there. I behold that boot (oh what a boot it is!) crossed over the other boot; one hand playing with that cruel watch-chain, and the crooked fingers of the other pushing up that bird's nest of hair, which meets a little rill of whisker. I see his countenance twisted up into an expression of auctioneering acuteness, while he mentally appraises the furniture, and ticks off the benches at "four and half each—I mean to say they shan't be more." I then give a great shriek, and fall upon the floor, where I am found by a disconsolate wife and four small children, in a state of mind bordering on distraction.

My best love, and all our best loves, to all at Easthorpe. We often talk of you. I think when I am a bachelor pro tem. I shall look in at one of the ground floor windows of the abbey with a carpet bag in my hand, and terrify Miss Thompson with what HE[†1] would call high-strikes—oh!—but I think a great many things that never come to pass. Good God how green You must be! I don't mean you, but the country about you,—those exquisite leaves—and Castle Howard Park.[†2] You see how incoherent I am. But I have told you why; so pity me.

I have been expecting, and am still expecting, Thompson here. I have his little dog; for I wished that an alliance shd. take place between her and Timber; but there seems to be an incompatibility—I don't know whether of temper, or taste. Its an uncommon nice dog, and regularly runs away twice a day—once after breakfast, and once after tea—always being brought back by the Police. We have a police here now. A.I. He wears an uniform. But it has been discovered that he hasn't any power (not being legally appointed)[†3] so strong vagrants come over, and dare him to take 'em up. As they come on purpose, we find him rather an inconvenience than otherwise.

Among other similar invites, I have had a note from Ld. Brougham this morning, asking me to go on there, when I am at Manchester, and take anyone I may have with me. Shall I make them known to each other? If Mrs. Smithson says Yes,—I will. Damme.—There!

Document enclosed.[†1] Always My Dear Smithson

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. C. PRINCE, 22 SEPTEMBER 1843

Mention in N, I, 541; dated Broadstairs, 22 Sep 43.

CD hopes to be able to meet Prince when he comes to Manchester. [†2]

To JAMES QUILTER[†3], 22 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS[†4] Dickens House.

Broadstairs—Kent | September 22nd. 1843

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compts to Mr. Quilter and begs to thank him for his obliging note.[†5] He can scarcely admit, however, that the unfortunate Postboy of Lincoln at all contravenes the great authorities in question,[†6] as he came to his end by violent means, and not in the ordinary course of nature.

To LORD BROUGHAM, 24 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fourth September 1843

Dear Lord Brougham.

I have had much pleasure in the receipt of your kind note. I wish it were in my power to come on into Cumberland,[†1] when I am as far upon the way as Manchester—there are few things I should like better—but I grieve to say that I am obliged to return to town on the day after the Meeting:[†2] having been here for two months; and before then, in Yorkshire.

Since I had the pleasure of seeing you, I have gone very much about the Jails and byeplaces of London, and although they are old sights to me, am more than ever amazed at the Ignorance and Misery that prevail. I saw the other day the announcement of a New Treatise in your name upon the subject of Education,[†3] which brings the theme to my mind.

I would that I were a Police Magistrate,[†4] and could take and hold this question from such a 'vantage ground at its lowest and most wretched end. I think I should be a pretty good one, with my knowledge of the kind of people that come most commonly within their Jurisdiction; and I would never rest from practically shewing all classes how important it has become to educate, on bold and comprehensive principles, the Dangerous Members of Society. I have often had this desire in my mind, but never so strongly as now.

With many thanks for your kind remembrance, and begging to send my compliments to Lady Brougham[†5]

I am always | Dear Lord Brougham
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Brougham.

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 24 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty Fourth September | 1843.

My Dear Fanny.

I am declining all Invitations to peoples'[†1] houses, about Liverpool and Manchester (it's one man's work to answer them); and hold myself bound to you, of course. They invited Lord Brougham who can't attend, but has written to ask me to go on to his place in Cumberland, and stay there—and to bring any friend I may have with me. I have been chuckling, ever since, over the notion of taking Mitton, and making Them known to each other.

I mean to leave town on the Wednesday Morning, and come direct to you. Will it not be best for us to dine upon the road? And should we stop at Ardwick[†2] (if we can) or go on? And shall I bring John? I wish you would write me a line, addressed to Devonshire Terrace, by next Saturday's or Sunday's post, and enlighten me. I shall be home next Monday night.

Don't think of making Mitton a bed on the sofa, but get him one at the nearest public house, or any decent place. He would be wretched at the idea of putting you out of the way, I am sure.

Kate[†3] sends her best love to yourself, and Burnett, and the children—to whom commend me kindly also. I hope Harry is getting on well.[†4] I shall be delighted to renew our old facetiousness.[†5]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Twenty Fourth September 1843

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I shall be most glad to confer with you, about Little Nell;[†6] and I will come out to Putney on Tuesday Afternoon, the Third, which will be the day after I return to town. But I solemnly protest against the number being read out of its proper course—especially as the first chapter is not mortally long. If Miss Meredith resorts to any such improper and unjustifiable courses, Pinch is a dead man from that moment.[†7]

I will endeavour between this time, and when I have the pleasure of seeing you, to ascertain what you so kindly desire to know, in reference to the Ragged Schools. There are fewer girls than boys; but the girls are more numerous than you would suppose, and much better behaved—although they are the wretchedest of the wretched. But there is much more Good in Women than in Men, however Ragged they are. People are apt to think otherwise, because the outward degradation of a woman strikes them more forcibly than any amount of hideousness in a man. They have no better reason.

Mr. Rogers is[†1] down here, with an old Schoolfellow, Mr. Maltby.[†2] We have had some mutual tea-drinkings of a rather forlorn description: the same stories being related over and over again, at each festivity. But really Rogers walks about, in a most surprising manner. I find him, with a little cane under his arm, airing himself on the top of inaccessible cliffs, and trotting, with his head on one side and his chin on his waistcoat, down gulfs and chasms where few middle-aged Visitors penetrate. Sometimes I see him on the sand, hustled by beggars, and defending himself manfully against a host of Vagrants. And his occupation within doors is to make perpetual alterations in the Pleasures of Memory,[†3] and blot them out again. "Everybody writes too fast,"[†4] he says. It's the great pleasure of his life to think so.

Charley sends his best love, and so do his sisters. The unknown (who like a Greater Unknown[†5] is called Walter) does the like, on the faith of their representations. Mrs. Dickens begs to add her best regards.

I don't wonder that Miss Meredith, in her weak state, has suffered from the heat. Everybody here, has been ill from the same cause.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Yours most faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 SEPTEMBER 1843]

Extract in F, IV, i, 298 (aa), dated 24 Sep according to Forster; and extract in F, IV, i, 298 (bb), wrongly dated "at the close of the year". (Both the "sledge-hammer account" for Miss Coutts and the suggestion to Napier for an article were written on 16 Sep; CD would doubtless have reported on them both in the same letter to Forster.)

[a]I sent Miss Coutts a sledge-hammer account of the Ragged schools;[†6] and as I saw her name for two hundred pounds in the clergy education subscription-list,[†7] took pains to show her that religious mysteries and difficult creeds wouldn't do for such pupils. I told her, too, that it was of immense importance they should be washed. She writes back to know what the rent of some large airy premises would be, and what the expense of erecting a regular bathing or purifying place; touching which points I am in correspondence with the authorities. I have no doubt she will do whatever I ask her in the matter. She is a most excellent creature, I protest to God, and I have a most perfect affection and respect for her.[a]

[b]I have told Napier I will give a description of them in a paper on education, if the Review is not afraid to take ground against the church catechism and other mere formularies and subtleties, in reference to the education of the young and ignorant. I fear it is extremely improbable it will consent to commit itself so far.[†1b]

To G. CARR GLYN,[†2] 24 SEPTEMBER 1843

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1904; MS 1 p.; dated 24 Sep 43.

In reference to CD's brother. [†3]

To T. J. SERLE, 24 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fourth September 1843

My Dear Serle.

I wrote to this Mr. Griffiths,[†4] as we agreed, politely declining. Whereupon, with the perseverance of a Fiend with a newly-ground pitchfork, he addresses the enclosed note, and accompanying pieces of Gold-beaters skin to me. If you think there is no reason for us to alter our opinion, I wish you would try him with a communication (as Secretary) again declining. Its quite clear to me, that he wants to make an advertizement[†5] for himself of the little Eltons.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To S. R. STAREY, 24 SEPTEMBER 1843

MS Shaftesbury Society.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fourth September 1843.

Dear Sir.

Allow me to ask you a few questions in reference to that most noble undertaking in which you are engaged—with a view, I need scarcely say, to its advancement and extended usefulness. For the present, I could wish them, if you please to be considered as put in confidence, but not to the exclusion of the gentlemen associated with you in the management of the Ragged School on Saffron Hill.[†1]

It occurred to me when I was there as being of the most immense importance that if practicable the boys should have an opportunity of Washing themselves, before beginning their tasks.

Do you agree with me? If so, will you ascertain at about what cost, a washing-place—a large trough or sink, for instance, with a good supply of running water, soap, and towels,—could be put up? In case you consider it necessary that some person should be engaged to mind it, and to see that the boys availed themselves of it in an orderly manner, please to add the payment of such a person to the expence.

Have you seen any place, or do you know of any place, in that neighbourhood—any one or two good spacious lofts or rooms—which you would like to engage (if you could afford it) as being well suited for the school? If so, at what charge could it be hired, and how soon?

In the event of my being able to procure you the funds for making these great improvements, would you see any objection to expressly limiting Visitors (I mean visiting teachers—volunteers, whoever they may be—) to confining their questions and instructions, as a point of honor, to the broad truths taught in the School by yourself and the gentlemen associated with you? I set great store by this question, because it seems to me of vital importance that no persons, however well intentioned, should perplex the minds of these unfortunate creatures with religious Mysteries that young people with the best advantages, can but imperfectly understand. I heard a lady visitor, the night I was among you, propounding questions in reference to "the Lamb of God" which I most unquestionably would not suffer any one to put to my children: recollecting the immense absurdities that were suggested to my own childhood by the like injudicious catechizing.[†2]

I return to town on Monday the second of next Month. If you write to me before then, please to address your letter here. If after that date, to my house in town.

With a cordial sympathy in your Great and Christian Labour, I am Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. R. Starey

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 27 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Twenty Seventh September 1843

Dear Sirs

I shall be much obliged to you, if you will get for me, and send to Devonshire

Terrace on Monday, those Volumes of The Library of Entertaining Knowledge, which contain "The Pursuit of Knowledge under difficulties".[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman & Hall

To THOMAS MITTON, 28 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Broadstairs | Twenty Eighth September 1843

My Dear Mitton

He is certain to do it again.[†2] There was no help but to pay it, as you so kindly did. But he is sure to do it again.

Even now, with the knowledge of him which I have so dearly purchased, I am amazed and confounded by the audacity of his ingratitude. He, and all of them, look upon me as a something to be plucked and torn to pieces for their advantage. They have no idea of, and no care for, my existence in any other light. My soul sickens at the thought of them.

There seems to be no hope of anything—or next to no hope—for Alfred,[†3] yet. I had been debating in my own mind what to do for the present, and had resolved to give him a pound a week[†4] and his boathire[†5] to and fro, and to make use of him as a Secretary. I have tried him in that capacity here, and he does exceedingly well: being very quick, and very neat.[†6] I think I should have proposed it to him this very day. But his father's letter—a threatening letter, before God!—to me!—chokes the words in my throat.

What do you think of this? If you think it the best thing I can do, and should see my disinterested and most affectionate parent, will you undertake to tell him that his letter has disgusted me beyond expression; and that I have no more reference to anything he wants or wishes or threatens or would do or wouldn't do, in taking on myself this new Burden, than I have reference to the Bell of Saint Paul's Cathedral or the Statue at Charing Cross?

Nothing makes me so wretched, or so unfit for what I have to do, as these things. They are so entirely beyond my own controul, so far out of my reach, such a drag-chain on my life, that for the time they utterly dispirit me, and weigh me down.

I shall be punctual on Tuesday. In the meantime, perhaps I shall receive a line from you.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

I received Smithson's communication, and answered it by Return.

October

To EDWARD WATKIN[†1] AND PETER BERLYN, [?2 OCTOBER 1843]

Mention in Edward William Watkin, Alderman Cobden of Manchester, 1891, p. 123. Date: CD would wait to write until he heard from Ardwick on Mon 2 Oct (see To Mrs Burnett, 24 Sep).

Desiring an interview for Wednesday night, October 4, at about 9 o'clock, to arrange for the meeting. [†2]

To GEORGE LOVEJOY,[†1] 4 OCTOBER 1843

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1930; MS 1 1/2 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 4 Oct 43.

Regretting that he cannot attend the opening of the new buildings of a Literary and Scientific Institution. [†2]

To WILLIAM JERDAN,[†3] 9 OCTOBER 1843

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2298; MS 1 p.; dated London, 9 Oct 43.

A thousand thanks for your kind and genial letter. I have been out of town, and only received it yesterday. It is not a weak cheer, but good cheer, strong cheer, heart cheer, and cheer I love to have.[†4] It satisfies me more than I can tell you. My Dear Jerdan, Faithfully your friend,

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS POWELL,[†5] 9 OCTOBER 1843*

MS Mrs Caroline Trollope.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth October 1843.

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens is much beholden to you for your kind recollection of her, and for your elegant present.[†1] She begs me to thank you most cordially. I should have done so, before now; but we have been out of town, and I returned only yesterday.

— III - 578 —

I shall not fail to keep a sharp eye on Horne.[†2] Let him beware! If he gives me the least offence, I will unsay all I have said, everywhere, in praise of his report on youthful labour.[†1] It will take a long time to do, but vengeance is strong, and Dickens persevering.

— III - 579 —

Believe me | Very Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Powell Esquire

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†2] 9 OCTOBER 1843

Extract in Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912.

London, 1, Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park,

October 9th, 1843.

In reply to your letter I beg to say that if you will favour me with any distinct proposition ... I shall be happy to give it immediate consideration.[†3]

— III - 580 —

To EDWARD WATKIN AND PETER BERLYN, 10 OCTOBER 1843

Text from facsimile in Edward William Watkin, Alderman Cobden of Manchester, 1891, p. 139.

London Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regent's Park
Tenth October 1843

Dear Sirs

I am exceedingly glad to receive so good a report of our Athenæum prospects.[†1] And I hope when I next hear from you, to learn that everything continues to realize your expectations.

Pray assure the Ladies' Committee and the Bazaar Committee, of the great gratification I have in their kind and flattering recollection of me.

Many thanks to you for the Manchester Newspapers—in which the proceedings of the other night, are remarkably well reported.[†2] If you should see, or know, any of the gentlemen who attended for the Press, I wish you would say as much from me, in common justice.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Watkins Esquire
Peter Berlyn Esquire

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 13 OCTOBER 1843

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth October 1843.

My Dear Ainsworth

I want very much to see you: not having had that old pleasure for a long time. I am at this moment deaf in the ears, hoarse in the throat, red in the nose, green in the gills, damp in the eyes, twitchy in the joints, and fractious in the temper, from a most intolerable and oppressive cold—caught the other day, I suspect, at Liverpool,[†3] where I got exceedingly wet. But I will make prodigious efforts to get the better of it tonight, by resorting to all conceivable remedies. And if I succeed so far as to be only negatively disgusting tomorrow, I will joyfully present myself at 6, and bring my womankind along with me.

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 OCTOBER 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth October 1843

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The "Ragged" Masters are really very honest men. I infer from the enclosed,[†1] that they fear they may not succeed in the long run, and are delicate of availing themselves of individual kindness, beyond the temporary help of a Subscription. But I may be wrong in this; and when I have done my month's work (with which I am now in spasms) I will see the writer, and talk to him more fully. This will be, very early, I hope, in the week after next.[†2]

I have been thinking very much about Nell. Will you tell me whether you wish her to learn anything? I am not quite clear about that.—I mean, to learn a trade, or learn what is popularly called "her book".

A hideous cold has taken possession of me to an almost unprecedented extent. I am not exactly, like Miss Squeers, screaming out loud all the time I write;[†3] but I am executing another kind of performance beginning with an s, and ending with a g; perpetually.

The Manchester Meeting, composed of men of all parties, was very brilliant I assure you. A thousand tickets were sold, and most of them admitted two,— many three,—persons.[†4] I am strongly tempted to send you a local paper, containing all the Speeches. But modesty (a besetting sin with authors) prevents me.

It will be a comfort to Miss Meredith to know that my other rheumatic friend[†1] who got well long before her—that is to say too soon—is turning all wrong again, just as she is turning all right. May I trouble you to tell her that my hair is growing,[†2] and I'll never do so any more?

Charley and his sisters, entrust me with messages full of partially unintelligible enthusiasm. Mrs. Dickens begs me to say that if you can oblige her with your Drury Lane Box[†3] for any performing night next week, she will take it as a great favor.

Always Dear Miss Coutts
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

I was greatly pleased with Mr. Morier.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 OCTOBER 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth October 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts.

In a scarlet fever of modesty, I send you two papers. The report in the Guardian, is, upon the whole, the better of the twain.

Certainly I would teach Nell, a trade. It is a matter of stupendous difficulty, however, to say what trade. I will keep the point in my mind, and after making some enquiries, report to you next week.

Undoubtedly if the Ragged School could obtain any assistance from the Government, it would be an immense thing. I am not sanguine in my hopes of any Government in such cases; but Lord Sandon[†1] would be an excellent person to interest in Saffron Hill's[†2] behalf, and I believe would be easily interested in any question involving so much misery. Your intervention would be most powerful.

I send you the advertisement,[†3] and will duly forward your valuable donation.

Always Believe me | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

P.S. I beg to inform Miss Meredith, (with my best regards) that my other rheumatic friend is of the sterner sex. But I have shrewd misgivings that his disorder is not rheumatism after all, though it has been treated as such. May I trouble you to keep the Manchester papers until you see me?

To MACVEY NAPIER, 17 OCTOBER 1843

MS British Museum. Address: Professor Napier | Castle Street | Edinburgh.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth October 1843.

My Dear Sir

My view of the case is precisely yours.[†4] I know it would be very bad policy to hit the church unnecessarily in any tender place; and I have no inclination to do so.

I think you had best make up your January No. without reference to me, as I am not certain for that time. But in the course of that month you shall have the paper; and then you will suffer no uneasiness or chance of disappointment in reference to it.

I should say a dozen pages or thereabouts, will be the utmost extent of the article. That is not too long, I hope?

Mrs. Dickens sends you her best regards. We have been in Yorkshire, and in Kent; but are fixtures in London now, until next Summer.

My Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier

To S. R. STAREY, 17 OCTOBER 1843*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park,
Seventeenth October 1843.

Dear Sir,

I very much regret that it is not more immediately within your power, and in that of the gentlemen who are associated with you, to carry out the object I hinted in my last. I have made the best interest in my power to bring your case before the council of education;[†1] and although I am not very sanguine as to the result, I have no doubt that it will be considered there.

I have ten pounds for you, which is a subscription from Miss Burdett Coutts. As I do not like to send it by the post, I shall be glad if you will have the goodness to let it be called for here. I will leave it out in an envelope addressed to you,

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

R. S. Starey Esquire. P.S. When you send for the money will you be good enough to forward a receipt.

To MISS MARGARET GILLIES, 23 OCTOBER 1843

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday October Twenty Third | 1843.

Dear Miss Gillies

Tomorrow, Tuesday, at 3 o'Clock, I will dutifully present myself: having now got rid (almost) of a cold, which has ridden rough-shod—to use the favorite newspaper expression—over my features.

Would you like me to ask Mr. Maclise to look in, during the sitting? He has a mighty knowledge of my face, and expressed himself much struck with the "spirit"[†1] of your portrait as photographed.[†2] "A very little bit"—he said, waving his hand in the air, something [?like an auc]tioneer,[†3] and giving it a twist [at] the same time, "would make it ca-pi-tal".

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Gillies

To T. BOYS,[†4] 24 OCTOBER 1843

Mention in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue No. 1535 (1954); MS 1 p.; dated 24 Oct 43.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 24 OCTOBER 1843

MS British Museum. Address: Professor Napier | Muirestone House | Mid-Calder | by Edinburgh.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth October 1843

My Dear Sir

I am extremely sorry to find that my proposal puts you to any inconvenience; but the fault is really not mine. You wrote me in answer to my letter,[†5] that you were much oppressed by matter of all kinds and from a variety of distinguished sources (as I can readily understand)—but would "endeavour" to find room for me in the January Number. I immediately resolved not to give you that trouble, but to write the paper at my leisure, and send it to you for the Number following—really meaning to be considerate, and to meet your views, as I understood them. And I thought the postponement, rather advantageous than otherwise, as the mention of the subject in the Queen's Speech,[†6] or the omission of it, would be alike a good reason for taking it up afresh. Accordingly I plunged headlong into a little scheme[†7] I had held in abeyance during the interval which had elapsed between my first letter and your answer; set an artist[†8] at work upon it; and put it wholly out of my own power to touch the Edinburgh subject until after Christmas is turned. For carrying out the notion I speak of, and being punctual with Chuzzlewit, will occupy every moment of my working time, up to the Christmas Holidays.[†1]

I hope you will see how this has come to pass; and that I acted on your letter, distinctly.

I did not fail to give your message to Hood, who thanks you very much, and greatly regrets having missed you.[†2]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier.

To MRS CROWE,[†3] 26 OCTOBER 1843†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Sixth October 1843

My Dear Mrs. Crowe.

It can't be done. When there is unanimity among authors, perhaps it may be.[†4] As that state of things may be expected to come to pass on the afternoon of the Last Day But One, I hope neither you nor I may live to see it.

You are not alone in your sufferings, nor does great success carry with it any exemption from such penalties. If you knew what my books have brought to others, and what they have brought to me, you would, as the Song says, open your eyes

and die with surprise[†5]

[†a]—so I won't tell you; the more especially as I want you to get off your back with all speed, and be as well and merry as you can wish to be.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

Mrs. Crowe.

November

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 NOVEMBER 1843]

Text from F, IV, ii, 304-5. Date: 1 Nov according to Forster.

Don't be startled by the novelty and extent of my project. Both startled me at first; but I am well assured of its wisdom and necessity. I am afraid of a magazine—just now. I don't think the time a good one, or the chances favourable. I am afraid of putting myself before the town as writing tooth and nail for bread, headlong, after the close of a book taking so much out of one as Chuzzlewit. I am afraid I could not do it, with justice to myself. I know that whatever we may say at first, a new magazine, or a new anything, would require so much propping, that I should be forced (as in the Clock) to put myself into it, in my old shape. I am afraid of Bradbury and Evans's desire to force on the cheap issue of my books, or any of them, prematurely. I am sure if it took place yet awhile, it would damage me and damage the property, enormously. It is very natural in them to want it; but, since they do want it, I have no faith in their regarding me in any other respect than they would regard any other man in a speculation. I see that this is really your opinion as well; and I don't see what I gain, in such a case, by leaving Chapman and Hall.[†1] If I had made money, I should unquestionably fade away from the public eye for a year, and enlarge my stock of description and observation by seeing countries new to me; which it is most necessary to me that I should see, and which with an increasing family I can scarcely hope to see at all, unless I see them now. Already for some time I have had this hope and intention before me; and though not having made money yet, I find or fancy that I can put myself in the position to accomplish it. And this is the course I have before me. At the close of Chuzzlewit (by which time the debt will have been materially reduced) I purpose drawing from Chapman and Hall my share of the subscription[†2]—bills, or money, will do equally well. I design to tell them that it is not likely I shall do anything for a year; that, in the meantime, I make no arrangement whatever with anyone; and our business matters rest in statu quo. The same to Bradbury and Evans. I shall let the house if I can; if not, leave it to be let. I shall take all the family, and two servants—three at most—to some place which I know beforehand to be CHEAP and in a delightful climate, in Normandy or Brittany, to which I shall go over, first, and where I shall rent some house for six or eight months. During that time, I shall walk through Switzerland, cross the Alps, travel through France and Italy; take Kate perhaps to Rome and Venice, but not elsewhere; and in short see everything that is to be seen. I shall write my descriptions[†1] to you from time to time, exactly as I did in America; and you will be able to judge whether or not a new and attractive book may not be made on such ground. At the same time I shall be able to turn over the story I have in my mind,[†2] and which I have a strong notion might be published with great advantage, first in Paris[†3]—but that's another matter to be talked over. And of course I have not yet settled, either, whether any book about the travel, or this, should be the first. "All very well," you say, "if you had money enough." Well, but if I can see my way to what would be necessary without binding myself in any form to anything; without paying interest, or giving any security but one of my Eagle[†4] five thousand pounds; you would give up that objection. And I stand committed to no bookseller, printer, moneylender, banker, or patron whatever; and decidedly strengthen my position with my readers, instead of weakening it, drop by drop, as I otherwise must. Is it not so? and is not the way before me, plainly this? I infer that in reality you do yourself think, that what I first thought of is not the way? I have told you my scheme very baldly, as I said I would. I see its great points, against many prepossessions the other way—as, leaving England, home, friends, everything I am fond of—but it seems to me, at a critical time, the step to set me right. A blessing on Mr. Mariotti my Italian master, and his pupil!— If you have any breath left, tell Topping how you are.

To T. J. SERLE, 1 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS Mr C. D. B. Hawksley. Address: T. J. Serle Esquire | 9 Southampton Row | Russell Square.

1 Devonshire Terrace | First November 1843.

My Dear Serle.

Let us meet here on Saturday at half past Seven exactly, as an Elton Committee.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 NOVEMBER 1843

MS Morgan Library. Address: To be forwarded | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.[†1]

Devonshire Terrace. | Second November 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts.

On going out to Putney yesterday, I was perfectly amazed to find that Miss Meredith had gone direct to Brighton[†2] in the Garden chair. I trust she is better; and that your Ague has gone over to Holland, to settle there.

I enclose you a note[†3] I have had from the Ragged Schoolmaster. I don't know what you may have said to Lord Sandon, or whether you would desire to shew it him. But I send it to you, on the chance.

Nell distracts me. It unfortunately happens that there is no Institution (that I know of, or can find out, at least) where such a girl could learn a trade. This throws one on a choice of trades. Then I think of tambour-working—then of stay-making—then of shoe-binding—then of ready made Linening—then of Millinery—then of Straw Bonnet Making[†4]—then of Mrs Brownrigge[†5]—then of surplus labor—and then I give it up, with a headache.

Would it not be a good plan—first, to find out what the child thinks herself, and then to cast about among your servants for instance, whether they have not some friend or relation who is, or who knows some other friend or relation who is, in a respectable little way of business that would do for her? I could very easily find out, by personal inspection, whether it promised well. None of our former handmaidens are settled in any trade, except a most respectable cook,[†6] who married from us (in a cab—No. 74) and keeps a thriving shop, I am told, "in the general line". But there seems to be nothing to learn, in the general line,[†1] except making up infinitessimal[†2] parcels of pepper, and chopping soap into little blocks—and she can do that now, I dare say.

There's half a bonnet-shop in Tottenham Court Road, with an Inscription in the window in these words—"Wonted a feamail Prentis with a premum". That wouldn't do, perhaps?

This day week, I shall have paid the Eltons, the full amount you gave me. One of the poor girls[†3] is very ill, I am sorry to say, and seems consumptive. Did you see the cruel hoax of the bottle?[†4] We have the slip of paper which was shut up in it; and it is not (they tell me) in his handwriting, or at all like it. What strange minds those must be, which can find delight in such intolerable cruelties—for which, and which only, if I had my will, I would flog at the church-doors. After the President went down, Mrs. Power[†5] had some new letter, almost every day, saying that he had landed in Ireland, and was staying at the Writer's house!

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 NOVEMBER 1843]

Text from F, IV, ii, 305-6. Date: 2 Nov according to Forster.

I expected you to be startled.[†6] If I was startled myself, when I first got this project of foreign travel into my head, MONTHS AGO,[†7] how much more must you be, on whom it comes fresh: numbering only hours! Still, I am very resolute upon it—very. I am convinced that my expenses abroad would not be more than half of my expenses here; the influence of change and nature upon me, enormous. You know, as well as I, that I think Chuzzlewit in a hundred points immeasurably the best of my stories. That I feel my power now, more than I ever did. That I have a greater confidence in myself than I ever had. That I know, if I have health, I could sustain my place in the minds of thinking men, though fifty writers started up to-morrow. But how many readers do not think! How many take it upon trust from knaves and idiots, that one writes too fast, or runs a thing to death! How coldly did this very book go on for months, until it forced itself up in people's opinion, without forcing itself up in sale![†8] If I wrote for forty thousand Forsters, or for forty thousand people who know I write because I can't help it, I should have no need to leave the scene. But this very book warns me that if I can leave it for a time, I had better do so, and must do so. Apart from that again, I feel that longer rest after this story would do me good. You say two or three months, because you have been used to see me for eight years[†1] never leaving off. But it is not rest enough. It is impossible to go on working the brain to that extent for ever. The very spirit of the thing, in doing it, leaves a horrible despondency behind, when it is done; which must be prejudicial to the mind, so soon renewed, and so seldom let alone. What would poor Scott have given to have gone abroad, of his own free will, a young man, instead of creeping there, a driveller, in his miserable decay![†2] I said myself in my note to you—anticipating what you put to me—that it was a question what I should come out with, first. The travel-book, if to be done at all, would cost me very little trouble; and surely would go very far to pay charges, whenever published. We have spoken of the baby,[†3] and of leaving it here with Catherine's mother. Moving the children into France could not, in any ordinary course of things, do them anything but good. And the question is, what it would do to that by which they live: not what it would do to them.—I had forgotten that point in the B. and E. negociation[†4]; but they certainly suggested instant publication of the reprints, or at all events of some of them; by which of course I know, and as you point out, I could provide of myself what is wanted. I take that as putting the thing distinctly as a matter of trade, and feeling it so. And, as a matter of trade with them or anybody else, as a matter of trade between me and the public, should I not be better off a year hence, with the reputation of having seen so much in the meantime? The reason which induces you to look upon this scheme with dislike—separation for so long a time—surely has equal weight with me. I see very little pleasure in it, beyond the natural desire to have been in those great scenes; I anticipate no enjoyment at the time. I have come to look upon it as a matter of policy and duty. I have a thousand other reasons, but shall very soon myself be with you.

To MRS HURNALL,[†5] 2 NOVEMBER 1843

Extract in Edwin A. Denham catalogue No. XII (1902).

The Story of a Feather[†6] (which you so justly commend) is written by Mr. Jerrold, an author of great power, who has been laid up with rheumatic gout, but is getting better rapidly.

To J. C. PRINCE, 2 NOVEMBER 1843

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Second November 1843

Dear Sir,

I regret too, I assure you, that we had not the pleasure of a longer conversation when we became known to each other at Manchester.[†1]

I should say that the chances of your being able to connect yourself with a London Magazine as a paid contributor, were very good. I would recommend you to send one or two pieces, with a short note, to the Editor of Blackwood's Magazine; and one or two to Mr. Ainsworth for insertion in his Magazine. That gentleman is a native of Manchester, and very likely, I think, to be interested in you. If Blackwoods say No, try if Tait will say Yes.[†2]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. C. Prince. P.S. I have no connexion with any magazine myself, or I would gladly assist you.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 6 NOVEMBER 1843

MS Royal Literary Fund.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth November 1843

My Dear Sir.

I have heard, with much distress, from Mr. Charles Whitehead,[†3] that he finds it necessary to seek assistance from the Literary Fund.[†4] And he has requested me to speak to my knowledge of him.

I know him to be a gentleman of very great accomplishments, and of very high original power as a writer of Fiction.[†1] I have always considered him to be an author of remarkable ability; have read his productions with strong interest; and have borne my testimony to their merit on many occasions, when I little thought he would ever need such a service as this at my hands.

I have reason to know that he has been proud in his troubles, and has never obtruded them on the notice of his admirers. I am sure he is a man of too honorable and high a spirit to appeal to the Literary Fund, but on the pressure of strong necessity. And I can conscientiously and earnestly recommend his case.

If you think I can say more, or that it is desirable for me to address the Committee in any other form, I will gladly do it.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire

To R. W. OSBALDISTON,[†2] 8 NOVEMBER 1843

Mention in To Perry, 10 Nov.

To P. B. TEMPLETON,[†3] 8 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS University of Texas. Address: P. B. Templeton Esquire | Manchester Advertizer Office | Manchester.

London—1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighth November 1843.

Dear Sir

"Laid down by brutal ignorance, and held together like the Solid Rock, by years of this most wicked axiom"—certainly.[†4] This wicked axiom, meaning, the axiom that a little Learning is a dangerous thing.

I have glanced at your book on Short Hand; and it seems to me a very good one—as indeed you practically shew it to be, in your excellent Reporting. But I am sorry that I feel obliged to lay my earnest entreaties on you, not to publish this opinion. I have a great objection to seeing such things in Print as if I were asserting my infallibility. And I assure you that if I were to comply with one Twentieth part of such requests, my warmest admirers would be disgusted by the sight of my name: as I certainly should be myself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. B. Templeton Esquire

To EDWARD WATKIN AND PETER BERLYN, 8 NOVEMBER 1843*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter. Address: Edward Watkin Esquire | Peter Berlyn Esquire | The Athenæum | Manchester.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth November 1843

Dear Sirs

I am extremely happy to hear that the Athenæum is going on so favourably. The half holiday and the gift of the membership by the Merchants as a reward for good behaviour, are vital points.[†1] The latter does great honor, I think, to the gentlemen of Manchester.

I enclose an acknowledgment[†2] of the elegant gift[†3] I received in due course; and I shall be much obliged if you will entrust yourselves with its delivery.

Dear Sirs | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Watkin Esquire
Peter Berlyn Esquire

To P. E. PEMBERGUE,[†4] 8 NOVEMBER 1843

Text from Manchester Guardian, 11 Nov 1843.

Devonshire Terrace, | Eighth November 1843

Dear Sir,

Allow me to most gratefully acknowledge the gift of a life membership of the Manchester Athenæum; and the flattering, and earnest terms in which it is bestowed on me, in the elegant testimonial to which your signature is attached. I cannot have a warmer interest in the prosperity of such an Institution than I had before, nor can anything enhance the pleasure I feel in the recollection of having presided at one of its festivals. But I am truly gratified by this mark of the regard and approbation of the directors, and shall ever prize it highly— trust me.

I have the honor to be, dear sir,
Your most obliged and faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 NOVEMBER 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 306-7. Date: 10 Nov according to Forster.

I have been all day in Chuzzlewit agonies[†1]—conceiving only. I hope to bring forth to-morrow. Will you come here at six? I want to say a word or two about the cover of the Carol and the advertising,[†2] and to consult you on a nice point in the tale. It will come wonderfully I think. Mac will call here soon after, and we can then all three go to Bulwer's[†3] together. And do, my dear fellow, do for God's sake turn over about Chapman and Hall, and look upon my project as a settled thing.[†4] If you object to see them, I must write to them.

To R. B. [PERRY],[†5] 10 NOVEMBER 1843

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2273 (1928); dated Devonshire Terrace, 10 November 1843.

I enclose you my account of subscriptions; the balance is paid into Coutts's.[†6] I wrote to Mr. Osbaldistone the day before yesterday, but have not yet received an answer.

To W. H. PRESCOTT, 10 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS Mr Linzee Prescott. Address: By Mail Steam Packet | W. H. Prescott Esquire | Boston | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Tenth November 1843.

Mr Dear Prescott.

I avail myself of a minute's leisure this morning, to acknowledge the receipt of your last kind note. I am afraid of putting it off until I have time to write a long reply; for how many boats would cross and recross the Atlantic before that came about, Heaven only knows.

I have received your noble book, through Mr. Rich.[†1] It came here a few days ago. I am half way through it already, and am full of delight and pleasure— dreaming of it, talking of it, and thinking of it. It will exceed the warmest expectations of your warmest admirers, I am convinced.[†2]

Your bargain with Bentley, amazes me! He has no copyright, you know, one moment after the publication of the work in America. You could not have got more, in the existing state of the law; and could have got much less with stupendous ease.[†3] Moreover, the Brigand has really brought the book out in a handsome form, and done it justice.[†4] For which I take off one of the seven hundred thousand imprecations I laid upon his head during the ancient intercourse between myself and him;[†5] and leave him only six hundred and ninety nine thousand to wipe off by decent conduct.

The heartiest of Greek Professors has become strangely mute. I wrote him a beaming epistle of four sides of paper; and he introduces a friend[†1] (after its receipt) with four lines! I am not quite certain whether he won't find himself in Chuzzlewit before long. At the best, I shall cut him off with an oyster.

What an unnatural villain you must be, to disparage Mrs. Prescott's eyes.[†2] I shuddered when I read the passage. Her critical taste assures me that her mental eyes are brighter than Diamonds. To her physical organs of vision I have indited a Sonnet, which will be forwarded by the next mail. Being rather heavy, it will come as Goods.

Mrs. Dickens sends her love and best regards. We think of keeping the New Year, by having another child. I am constantly reversing the Kings in the Fairy Tales, and importuning the Gods not to trouble themselves: being quite satisfied with what I have. But they are so generous when they do take a fancy to one!

Longfellow has done quite right, and I commend him for it. My best remembrances to him, and all old friends in Boston.

Always My Dear Prescott | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Prescott Esquire

To SIR WILLIAM ALLAN,[†3] 13 NOVEMBER 1843[†4]

Text from Sir Theodore Martin, Helena Faucit (Lady Martin), 1900, p. 117.

Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regent's Park,
13th November 1843.

My Dear Allan,

I am very anxious to bespeak your kind offices in behalf of Miss Helen Faucit:[†5] a young lady who is a much esteemed friend of ours, and whose great abilities I hold in high regard. She is coming to Edinburgh to fulfil an engagement with Murray. If you and Miss Allan[†1] can come to know her in private, I will answer for your having real pleasure in her society, and for your not taxing me with overrating her excellent qualities. I am "say[†2] fond" of her, which I think—and as an Edinburgh citizen I ought to know[†3]—is good Lowlan' Scotch.

Kate unites in this, and in kind loves to Miss Allan and yourself.

Always, my dear Allan, faithfully your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. HORNE, 13 NOVEMBER 1843

Text from MDGH, I, 93.

Devonshire Terrace, November 13th 1843.

Pray tell that besotted —— to let the opera sink into its native obscurity.[†4] I did it in a fit of d—— ble good nature long ago, for Hullah, who wrote some very pretty music to it. I just put down for everybody what everybody at the St. James's Theatre wanted to say and do, and that they could say and do best, and I have been most sincerely repentant ever since. The farce[†5] I also did as a sort of practical joke, for Harley, whom I have known a long time. It was funny— adapted from one of the published sketches called the "Great Winglebury Duel," and was published by Chapman and Hall. But I have no copy of it now, nor should I think they have. But both these things were done without the least consideration or regard to reputation.[†6]

I wouldn't repeat them for a thousand pounds apiece, and devoutly wish them to be forgotten. If you will impress this on the waxy mind of —— I shall be truly and unaffectedly obliged to you.

Always faithfully yours

To CHARLES SMITHSON, 14 NOVEMBER 1843

Text from transcript by Mr R. E. G. Woodman (Times Literary Supplement, 25 Jan 1947).

Devonshire Terrace, | Tuesday, Fourteenth November, 1843.

My Dear Smithson,

I wish you to know one or two facts and one or two opinions of mine, upon which (so far as I understand what Mitton tells me of your correspondence together) I have a natural desire to set you right.

Don't believe all you hear; and least of all believe the flying rumours that rise about Lewisham and Blackheath Hill.†1

More than £2,000—in fact all the debt that is likely to exist at the expiration of Chuzzlewit—was advanced by Chapman and Hall to wrest the copyright of Oliver Twist from Bentley, and release me from the Magazine. It was advanced, more for their benefit than mine; for they had a fortune, and I had only an income from the work then in progress, which would have been greatly damaged by his flooding the town with Oliver in numbers.†2 The Clock, with a circulation more than equal to that of The Times multiplied by five, was certainly not a very profitable undertaking. But not from any onesidedness in the agreement, but because every calculation made by Chapman and Hall (who are preposterously ignorant of all the essentials of their business) was wrong, and the thing could not pay largely at the price. The Oliver agreement was of my own making, and so was the Pickwick. It was a consequence of the astonishing rapidity of my success and the steady rise of my fame that the enormous profits of these books should flow into other hands than mine. It has always been so (I speak from a knowledge of the lives of eminent and successful writers); and I cannot reasonably hope to be exempt from the curse which has fallen on all the Professors of Literature.

The Nickleby agreement turned out to be a terrible mistake, though at that time the stability of my success was not certain. But it was a mistake to which I was the chief party, and the blame of which mainly rests with me.†3

I wish you to know that Bradbury and Evans would bring to my house £3,000†4 to-morrow morning. But I do not take it, and will not; simply because I wish to free myself by my own exertions, and not by the assistance of "The Trade."

I cordially approved of the project of confiding with you, because I had no reason to be delicate of your knowing these things; and had reason, I thought, to believe that if you had the money to put out at all, you would as soon advance it for a short period to one in whose energy and honor you could confide, as you would employ it in any other way. If you haven't got it to spare—you can't send it.

But as I would not have been assisted on mistaken grounds, and would not have had the money on any terms while you were wrong in your understanding of anything connected with my position, so I do not like to close the matter in any misconception and therefore I have written you this note.

My dear Smithson, | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Smithson, Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17 NOVEMBER 1843]

Mention in F, IV, ii, 307. Date: according to Forster "a few days" after CD's letter of 10 Nov; his letter of 19 Nov answered, "on the following day", Forster's reply.

Describing with great bitterness one of his family's financial demands. †1

To JOHN FORSTER, [19 NOVEMBER 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 307-8. Date: 19 Nov according to Forster.

I was most horribly put out for a little while; for I had got up early to go at it, and was full of interest in what I had to do. But having eased my mind by that note to you, and taken a turn or two up and down the room, I went at it again, and soon got so interested that I blazed away till 9 last night; only stopping ten minutes for dinner! I suppose I wrote eight printed pages of Chuzzlewit yesterday. The consequence is that I could finish to-day, but am taking it easy, and making myself laugh very much.†2

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 NOVEMBER 1843]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 308. Date: the day after last according to Forster.†3

I am quite serious and sober when I say, that I have very grave thoughts of keeping my whole menagerie in Italy, three years.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 21 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire | 4 Clifton Terrace | near The Baths | Gravesend.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First November 1843.

My Dear George

Many Thanks for the Almanack,†1 in which you are prodigious.

I am afraid I may not be in the way tomorrow; and therefore write to you. For I am finishing a little Book for Christmas, and contemplate a Bolt, to do so in peace. As soon as I have done, I will let you know, and then I hope we shall take a glass of Grog together: for I have not seen you since I was grey.

Always Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To JOHN WILSON,[†2] 24 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Evening | Twenty Fourth November 1843.

Sir.

Allow me to ask whether you addressed a letter to me this morning, recommending a Petitioner from Scotland? If so, I grieve to assure you that my means are utterly inadequate to answer the enormous number of similar appeals that are made to me every day; and would be if my income were multiplied by four, and my blood-petitioners divided by six.[†3] Do you know anything of this unhappy person's case, beyond what you have told me? And how do you know that?

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Wilson.

To THOMAS MITTON, 25 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS University of Texas. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Twenty Fifth November 1843

My Dear Mitton

Let every bill be returned, with "No orders" noted on it; and let the answer be, that no such person is known at your office.

After that, he[†1] must have the money to take them up, and must be seen to take them up, or he'll not do it. What after that, it is impossible to say. I am full of Grief.

On Monday Evening I will come to you. Your note found me in the full passion of a roaring Christmas scene![†2]

Faithfully Ever
CD

To MISS MARION ELY, [29 NOVEMBER 1843]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Since from Devonshire Terrace, the only possible Christmas book is the Carol or the Cricket; but by 1845 Miss Ely had seen CD act. Wednesday must be 29 Nov, as he is finishing the Carol, and refers to the dinner on 2 Dec (see below).

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Miss Ely.

Forgive my not having answered your kind note; but I have been working from morning until night upon my little Christmas Book; and have really had no time to think of anything but that.

I am much pleased by your sister's[†3] recollection of me, and if I can possibly get to the "Theatre"[†4] tonight (I have strong hopes of it, for I am finishing now)—trust me, I will. For I have such a passion for anything in the shape of Private Theatricals—Ah! You never saw me act!—as nobody but Mrs. Harris[†5] ever had.

We dine on Saturday[†6]—Kate begs me say, with her love to Mrs. Talfourd— at a Quarter before Seven.

Dear Miss Ely | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ely.

December

To JOHN W. BOWDEN,[†1] 2 DECEMBER 1843*

MS New York University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Second December 1843.

Sir.

Being the person referred to, in your letter, I have much pleasure in complying with your request, for an Autograph[†2]—as I should have had in any case.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Bowden Esquire

To CHARLES MARTIN,[†3] 2 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second December 1843.

Dear Sir

I regret that I was not at home yesterday, when you called.

It will give me pleasure to see you Tomorrow (Sunday) at Two, or on Monday at half past Twelve.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Martin Esquire

To CHAPMAN & HALL, [2-4 DECEMBER 1843]

Mention in next. Date: written after seeing Bradbury on 2 Dec.

To THOMAS MITTON, 4 DECEMBER [1843]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 1843 on reference to Carol; 4 Dec was a Monday.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fourth December

My Dear Mitton

Just now, as I was coming down to you, a man brought a note from Lady Holland: begging me to dine there today,[†1] and to go and give her some advice this morning—Heaven knows what about. So I am obliged to turn my face Westward, and not Eastward. But I write to you for three reasons. First, to know whether anything has occurred. Secondly, what time tomorrow will suit you best for my calling on you. Thirdly, to ask you to turn over in your mind, between this and tomorrow, how I can best put £200 into Coutts's. For on looking into the matter this morning, for the first time these 6 weeks, I find (to my horror) that I have already overdrawn[†2] my account. This month's money I have paid into the Eagle.[†3] Next month's is bespoke. And therefore I must anticipate the Christmas Book, by the sum I mention, which will enable me to keep comfortable.

If it would[†4] damage you, or bother you very much, to break the bill at Dixons[†5] by that sum, suppose you give me your acceptance at 3 months for it, and I will tell them I want it discounted at Coutts's?[†6] What do you think of this? The reason that I am pressed to do it, at once is, that I want it done, before I have any notice of my account being overdrawn—which is very important.

Of course, I could have double the sum from C and H, instantly. But I have been obliged to write them a most tremendous letter, and have told them not to answer it, or to come near me, but simply to do what I have ordered them. Can you believe that with the exception of Blackwood's, the Carol is not advertized in One of the Magazines![†1] Bradbury would not believe it when I told him on Saturday last. And he says that nothing but a tremendous push can possibly atone for such fatal negligence. Consequently, I have written to the Strand, and said—Do this—Do that—Do the other—keep away from me—and be damned.

I have shewn the book to two or three Judges[†2] of very different views and constitutions. I have never seen men, personally and mentally opposed to each other, so unanimous in their predictions, or so hot in their approval.

I can come down to you before dinner to day—at 4 or 5. A word by Bearer. I wouldn't trouble you about the money, if it were not a case of necessity. But being so busy, I have let it pass until the very last moment. In March or so, please God, I shall be as rich as (a very moderate) Jew.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, [6 DECEMBER 1843]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Coutts's had discounted the bill on 5 Dec (To Mitton, 4 Dec, fn). Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday

My Dear Mitton

I am extremely glad you feel the Carol.[†3] For I knew I meant a good thing. And when I see the effect of such a little whole as that, on those for whom I care, I have a strong sense of the immense effect I could produce with an entire book. I am quite certain of that.

Bradbury predicts Heaven knows what. I am sure it will do me a great deal of good; and I hope it will sell, well.

The title page I have had materially altered.[†4] They always look bad at first.

I had a letter from Coutts's yesterday afternoon to say that they had much pleasure in discounting the bill: though they were not in the habit of doing so, without the acceptance of a banker or large mercantile house.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 7 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh December 1843.

My Dear Ainsworth.

Half past five. Sharp as Jack Sheppard, and bright as Jolly Nose.[†1]

Loves to all.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 7 DECEMBER 1843

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh December 1843.

My Dear George.

Ainsworth, Thackeray, Maclise, and Forster—and maybe another or two— dine here, at a short notice, on Saturday next at Half Past Five, punctually. Come to my arms!

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

To THOMAS HOOD, 7 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Folio Society.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh December 1843

My Dear Hood.

It has not at all surprised me, that I have not heard from you. I know how busy you must be just now; and did not expect it.

I am glad I did not make your proposal to C and H. There can be no kind of doubt that your ballads should appear, in the first instance at all events, in your own Magazine.[†2]

Your prospectus[†1] is admirable, and I hear but one opinion of it on all sides. Whatever you do, be early with your number.[†2] Up to the scratch in good season!

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hood Esquire

To MR FOUNTAIN,[†3] 12 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twelfth December 1843

Sir.

I truly regret to say, that I have no present means of giving you any employment in your present occupation. But if I should have an opportunity, I will bear your letter in mind. Do not suppose I shall be the less mindful of it, because, in the pressure of laborious engagements, I acknowledge its receipt thus briefly.

Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Fountain

To W. M. THACKERAY, [?12-13 DECEMBER 1843]

Mention in Thackeray to Ainsworth, [Dec 43], Letters and Private Papers, ed. G. N. Ray, II, 132. Date: see fn.

Begs for a remission of the dinner. [†4]

To JOHN LEECH, 14 DECEMBER 1843[†1]

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth December 1843.

My Dear Sir

I do not doubt, in my own mind, that you unconsciously exaggerate the evil done by the colourers.[†2] You can't think how much better they will look in a neat book, than you suppose. But I have sent a Strong Despatch[†3] to C and H, and will report to you when I hear from them. I quite agree with you, that it is a point of great importance.

Faithfully Yours
CD

John Leech Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 17 DECEMBER 1843*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth December 1843

My Dear Mac.

I think of walking out to Ainsworth's this morning at a quarter before 2, and giving him his copy of the enclosed.[†4] Will you come? I was writing this Morning until Three o'Clock.[†5]

Faithfully Ever

CD

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 17 DECEMBER 1843

MS Professor E. S. Pearson.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth December 1843.

My Dear Mr. Rogers

If you should ever have inclination and patience to read the accompanying little book,[†6] I hope you will like the slight fancy it embodies. But whether you do or no,[†7] I am ever

Your friend and admirer

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To ANDREW BELL, 19 DECEMBER 1843*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace,

Nineteenth December, 1843. | Tuesday Afternoon.

Dear Sir,

I have only this moment risen from the current number of Chuzzlewit; or I would have answered your note sooner.

I have no doubt that I shall be at home at eleven on Thursday morning, or at Eleven on Friday morning. I shall be glad to see you on either day. If both are inconvenient, let me know, and I will appoint another.

I have conceived a real regard for Bradbury and Evans, and am pained by your allusions to them. It is very possible that six months hence you will think more tenderly of them yourself.[†1] But in any case, it is a subject I would rather avoid.

Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Bell, Esquire. P.S. I am very glad you think so highly of the Carol.[†2] It interested me exceedingly.

To CHARLES MACKAY, 19 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth December 1843.

My Dear Mackay.

Believe me that your pleasure in the Carol,[†3] so earnestly and spontaneously expressed, gives me real gratification of heart. It has delighted me very much. I am sure you feel it; that your praise is manly and generous; and well worth having. Thank you heartily.

I was very much affected by the little Book myself; in various ways, as I wrote it; and had an interest in the idea, which made me reluctant to lay it aside for a moment. Your allusion to that inexorable Pot, tempts me into saying that the Subscription was large, and the demand great.[†1]

I shall not forget your note, easily.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?20 DECEMBER 1843]*

MS Cornell University Library. Date: Handwriting suggests 1843-4; perhaps refers to the party at Mrs Macready's on Tues 26 Dec.

At your chambers | Wednesday afternoon

My Dear Talfourd.

I thought it better, on consideration, not to urge Mrs. Talfourd again, to go to Mrs. Macready's,—as I threatened to do—when I left your house on Saturday. Not because I had the least doubt of her receiving it kindly, or being disposed to accede to a request of mine; but because I really was unwilling to associate myself with any subject disagreeable or irksome to her—I am here to tell you so, and to ask you whether you don't think I am right. And not finding you, I leave this note.

Ever Yours CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?20 or 27 DECEMBER 1843]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 1843-4 on handwriting; "quadrille" suggests Christmas season, and 23 and 30 Dec are possible Saturdays for the gathering.

Athenæum | Wednesday

My Dear Fred

Moses[†2] is the most impudent dog in the world; and Moses's Son is another.

I am going to give Ainsworth's little daughters, a quadrille on Saturday. No party. Will you dine with that family and ours, at half after five?

Affectionately Always

CD

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 22 DECEMBER 1843

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Decr. 22nd. 1843

My Dear Harness.

I have run short of copies of the Carol,[†1] owing to the demand, or I would have sent you this before.

I forget your pretty niece's[†2] christian name. When you have read the little book, send it me back with that information; and I will write the same on the title page.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Harness.

To JOHN NOBLE,[†3] 22 DECEMBER 1843

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 1 p.; dated 22 Dec 43.

Refusing an invitation.

To T. J. PETTIGREW, 22 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Twenty Second December 1843

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks for the ingenious and interesting book[†4] you were kind enough to leave for me the other day (though I should have been better pleased if you had put your name in it); and which I have read with very great pleasure. I take some blame to myself for not having acknowledged it sooner, but I have been too closely engaged to do many things I ought to have done.

I mentioned the enclosed little book to Mrs. Pettigrew. It's such a small one,[†5] that I was afraid I never should find it again.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Pettigrew Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 25 DECEMBER 1843*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1843.

Recreant of the Castle.

The banquet hour on this eventful day, is when the turret chimes denote Half Past Five. If, in accordance with a Sacred Custom, you dine with the Bozonian Knight be punctual. If with Royalty,[†1] be hungry and be jovial— strange qualities, Sir Painter, at your Queenly boards!

Carol.

To WILLIAM BEHNES,[†2] 26 DECEMBER 1843

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD was mistaken in the day of the week; 26 Dec was a Tuesday in 1843.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Sixth December | 1843.

My Dear Sir

I am obliged to remain at home this morning. Mrs. Dickens extremely unwell; and I am waiting to see the Doctor. Will you let our Engagement stand for the same hour tomorrow?[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Behnes Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 26 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth December 1843.

My Dear Mac

How are you today? Better? If so, will you dine here at half past Four, preparatory to going to Macready's?[†1]

Faithfully Ever

CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 DECEMBER 1843

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh December 1843.

Dear Miss Coutts.

If every Christmas that comes to you, only makes you, or finds you, one half as happy and merry as I wish you to be, you will be the happiest and merriest person in all the world. I should have sent you my seasonable wishes; but I feared (from not having heard from you) that Lady Burdett[†2] was still very ill; and am exceedingly sorry to have the apprehension confirmed by your note.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to thank you for your kind remembrance of her, and to say that she will use the box tonight.[†3] She is not very well, and I am glad of a pantomime or anything else that is likely to amuse her.

Charley is in great force, and, with his sisters, desires his hearty love. They all went, with us, last night to a juvenile party at Mrs. Macreadys,[†4] and came out very strong—especially Charley who called divers small boys by their Christian names (after the manner of a Young Nobleman on the Stage) and indulged in numerous phases of genteel dissipation. I have made a tremendous hit with a conjuring apparatus, which includes some of Doëbler's best tricks, and was more popular last evening after cooking a plum pudding in a hat, and producing a pocket handkerchief from a Wine Bottle, than ever I have been in my life. I shall hope to raise myself in your esteem by these means.

Macready still continues as successful as it is possible to be. He is very well, and likes the people—which must be a great comfort to him.[†1]

We are getting on steadily with the Elton's.[†2] The sick one is quite restored to health.

I am very glad to hear that Miss Meredith has left that corner she was so long in turning, quite out of sight. Will you remember me, kindly and cordially to her?

I shall have a request—a petition I ought to say—to make to you before I finish the Chuzzlewit, which is very selfish, for it will give the book a new interest in my eyes.[†1] But I will defer it, and all questions concerning the charities into which I have made enquiry for you, until you have more leisure for such subjects. I am sure this ancient Year must have been a very arduous one to you; and but for such occupations being their own reward, would have wearied you to a serious extent.

With every good wish

Believe me Dear Miss Coutts
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

You will be glad to hear, I know, that my Carol is a prodigious success.[†2]

To M. A. DE GOY,[†3] 27 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Mr Robert L. Henderson. Address: M. A. De Goy | London Coffee House | Ludgate Hill.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Seventh December 1843.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to M. A. De Goy, and begs to say that being engaged with friends in town and country just now, he cannot have the pleasure of making an appointment, without a previous delay which M. De Goy may find inconvenient and troublesome. But his Publishers, Messrs. Chapman and Hall 186 Strand will be happy to receive M. De Goy at any time, and have full power in the business. He begs to thank M. De Goy for his obliging note.

To THOMAS MITTON, 27 DECEMBER 1843

Text from N, I, 550.

Devonshire Terrace, | Twenty-Seventh December, 1843

My dear Mitton,

You will be glad to hear that I had a note from C and H on the twenty-fourth to say that the Carol was then in its Sixth Thousand;[†4] and that as the orders were coming in fast from town and country, it would soon be necessary to reprint. I am very glad you saw the children the other day, and made them so happy. I have much to say in reference to your note of last Friday, but cannot say it better perhaps than when France draws nearer to us.[†1] I shall see you within a day or two.

Ever faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To S. R. STAREY, 29 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Ninth December 1843

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that my engagements render it impossible for me to preside at the Meeting in behalf of the Field Lane School.[†2] I regret that I did not know of it sooner; and that when the Superintendent[†3] did me the favor to call here, he did not leave some card or note in explanation of his business. In which case I would have made an appointment with him immediately.

I can have no objection to your stating (as you desire it) that I have visited the School, and am deeply impressed with a sense of the vital importance of such Institutions. I have already taken measures for directing public attention to them, and urging their claims to the best of my ability.[†4]

There can be no objection either, to the announcement of Miss Coutts's Subscription.

As I have not yet seen Lord Sandon (who I believe is still absent from town) I would recommend you to say no more in reference to your wish to obtain a Government Grant, and your hopes of success, than that application has been made through a private channel.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Samuel Robert Starey.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 30 DECEMBER 1843*

MS Chicago University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth December 1843.

My Dear Frederick.

You will find a bed in my dressing room on the Ground floor. The door will be on the latch; the gate open; and a light in the hall. I enclose you the latch key.

In consequence of your putting off your request about money to so late a moment, and my not returning home until after the time you mentioned, I have not known what to do about it. And I fear to send it you with this: feeling that so strange a letter is not unlikely to be opened at any rate. For a post office order there is no time. Therefore, as you say nothing on the subject, I think it best not to send it. Of course you can have it, when you arrive.

Kate and Georgy send their loves to all. Kate is but poorly, and keeps at home. There was some talk of a Maltonian[†1] hamper. If it has been sent, some fiend in human shape has got it, for we haven't.

The Carol is a prodigious success.

In haste, always affecy.

CD.

To H. G. ATKINSON,[†2] 1843

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1935; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1843.

Thanking him for kind remembrances.

To JOHN BRADFORD,[†3] 1843

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 617 (1908); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1843.

I am glad to learn that I have ever given you pleasure

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1843

Extract in George D. Smith catalogue, 1901; MS 1 p.; dated London, 1843.

In case you should call to-morrow. I write a hasty line to tell you that contrary to my usual Sunday custom I shall not be at home.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [1843]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Handwriting suggests 1843.

My Dear Mac

How in respect of dining at the Athenæum today? Can you call here, about 4?

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Wednesday Morning

Volume IV

1844 – 1846

1844

January

To THOMAS HOOD,[†1] [?1 JANUARY 1844]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1892. Date: answering Hood to CD (see fn), probably written Sun 31 Dec as copies of Hood's Magazine were available 30 Dec.

A thousand thanks for your kind and charming notice of the Carol.[†2] Take my advice, be energetic the right way, and I'll carol again when your magazine is a twelvemonth old.

To JAMES CLEPHAN,[†3] 2 JANUARY 1844

Text from N, I, 554.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
January the Second, 1844

Dear Sir,

Pray assure the lady who has asked me through you for the enclosed autographs in furtherance of a benevolent object, that she is heartily welcome to them;[†4] and that I wish they were a far more valuable commodity.

I quite agree with you in your admiration of the forbearance and long-suffering of the poor—everyone who knows them must. Their outbreaks, whenever they recur, can surprise few, I think, but Governments and Parliaments, who are always disposed to virtuous wonder.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To C. C. FELTON,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1844†

MS Berg Collection. Address: By The January Cunard Steamer | Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts | United States.

Devonshire Terrace London | Second January 1844

My very dear Felton.

You are a Prophet, and had best retire from business straightway. Yesterday Morning, New Year's Day, when I had walked into my little work room after breakfast, and was looking out of window at the Snow in the Garden—not seeing it particularly well in consequence of some staggering suggestions of last night's Punch and Turkey[†2] whereby I was beset—the Postman came to the door with a knock for which I damned him from my heart. Seeing your hand upon the cover of a letter which he brought, I immediately blessed him—presented him with a Glass of Whisky—inquired after his family (they are all well)—and opened the despatch, with a moist and oystery[†3] twinkle in my eye. And on the very day from which the new year dates, I read your New Year congratulations, as punctually as if you lived in the next house.—Why don't you!

Now, if instantly on the receipt of this, you will send a free and independent citizen down to the Cunard Wharf at Boston, you will find that Captain Hewett[†4] of the Britannia Steam Ship (my ship) has a small parcel for Professor Felton of Cambridge; and in that parcel you will find a Christmas Carol in Prose. Being a Ghost Story of Christmas by Charles Dickens.[†5] Over which Christmas Carol, Charles Dickens wept, and laughed, and wept again, and excited himself in a most extraordinary manner, in the composition; and thinking whereof, he walked about the black streets of London, fifteen and twenty miles, many a night when all the sober folks had gone to bed. [†a]He don't like America, I am told, but he has some friends there, as dear to him as any in England; so you may read it safely.[†a] Its success is most prodigious. And by every post, all manner of strangers write all manner of letters to him about their homes and hearths, and how this same Carol is read aloud there, and kept on a very little shelf by itself. Indeed it is the greatest success as I am told, that this Ruffian and Rascal has ever achieved.

Forster[†6] is out again—and if he don't go in again after the manner in which we have been keeping Christmas, he must be very strong indeed.[†7] Such dinings, such dancings, such conjurings, such blindmans-buffiings, such theatre-goings, such kissings-out of old years and kissings-in of new ones, never took place in these parts before. To keep the Chuzzlewit going, and do this little book, the Carol, in the odd times between two parts of it, was, as you may suppose, pretty tight work. But when it was done, I broke out like a Madman. And if you could have seen me at a children's party at Macready's[†1] the other night, going down a Country dance [†b]something longer than the Library at Cambridge[†b] with Mrs. M. you would have thought I was a country Gentleman of independent property, residing on a tip-top farm, with the wind blowing straight in my face every day.

[†c]We have not yet achieved that family performance I told you of; which I expect will come off in the course of next week. Kate is not quite as well as usual: being nervous and dull. But her health is perfectly good, and I am sure she might rally, if she would. I shall be much relieved when it is well over. In the mean time total abstinence from oysters seems to be the best thing for me; and good spirits for all of us. She is much rejoiced to hear that Mrs. Felton continues to improve; and sends her cordial love. In which I, no less cordially, join.[†c]

Your friend, Mr. Parker[†2] dined with us one day (I don't know whether I told you this before?), and pleased us very much. Mr. Coleman[†3] has dined here once, and spent an evening here. I have not seen him lately, though he has called twice or thrice; for Kate being unwell, and I busy, we have not been visible at our accustomed seasons. I wonder whether Hamlet[†4] has ever fallen in your way. Poor Hamlet![†4] He was a good fellow, and has the most grateful heart, I ever met with. Our journeyings with Hamlet seem to be a dream, now. Talking of dreams, strange thoughts of Italy and France—and maybe Germany[†5]—are springing up within me, as the Chuzzlewit clears off. It's a secret I have hardly breathed to any one, but I "think" of leaving England for a year, next midsummer—bag and baggage, little ones and all—then coming out with such a story, Felton—all at once—no parts—sledge hammer blow.

I send you a Manchester paper,[†6] as you desire. The report is not exactly done, but very well done, notwithstanding. It was a very splendid sight, I assure you, and an awful-looking audience. I am going to preside at a similar Meeting at Liverpool on the 26th. of next month; and on my way home, I may be obliged to preside at another at Birmingham. I will send you papers, if the reports be at all like the real thing.

[†d]Forster thought I should be very much surprised by what you told him of Lardner;[†1] but I was not. I don't know much of the man—but I know the country he is in, and think he acted with great sagacity.[†d†2]

I wrote to Prescott[†3] about his book, with which I was perfectly charmed. I think his descriptions, Masterly; his style, brilliant; his purpose, manly and gallant always. The introductory account of Aztec civilisation impressed me, exactly as it impressed you. From beginning to end, the whole History is enchanting and full of Genius. I only wonder that having such an opportunity of illustrating the Doctrine of Visible Judgments, he never remarks when Cortes and his men tumble the Idols down the Temple Steps and call upon the people to take notice that their Gods are powerless to help themselves[†4]—that possibly if some intelligent Native had tumbled down the Image of the Virgin or patron saint after them, nothing very remarkable might have ensued, in consequence.

Of course you like Macready.[†5] Your name's Felton. I wish you could [see][†6] him play Lear. It is stupendously terrible. But I suppose he would be slow to act it, with the Boston Company.[†1]

Hearty remembrances to Sumner,[†2] Longfellow,[†3] Prescott, and all whom you know I love to remember. Countless happy years to you and yours, my dear Felton, and some instalment of them, however slight, in England, in the loving company of

The Proscribed One.
Oh breathe not his name[†4]

To RICHARD LANE,[†5] 2 JANUARY 1844

Composite text, from MS[†6] Sir John Nicholson (aa) and facsimile of complete letter (without subscription) in Autographic Mirror, 20 Feb 64, p. 7.[†7]

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1844.

My Dear Sir

That is a very terrible case you tell me of. I would to God I could get at the parental heart of ——— ———,[†8] in which event I would so scarify it, that he should writhe again. But if I were to put such a father as he into a book, all the fathers going (and especially the [a]bad ones) would hold up their hands and protest against the unnatural caricature. I find that a great many people (particularly those who might have sat for the character) consider, even Mr. Pecksniff,[†9] a grotesque impossibility.[†10] And Mrs. Nickleby herself,[†11] sitting bodily before me in a solid chair, once asked me whether I really believed there ever was such a woman.[a†12]

So ———[†13] reviewing his own case, would not believe in Jonas Chuzzlewit. "I like Oliver Twist," says ———[†1] "for I am fond of children. But the book is unnatural. For who would think of being cruel to poor little Oliver Twist!"

Nevertheless I will bear the Dog in my mind. And if I can hit him between the eyes so that he shall stagger more than you or I have done this Christmas under the combined effects of Punch and Turkey—I will.

[a]Thank you cordially for your note. Excuse this scrap of paper. I thought it was a whole sheet, until I turned over.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. J. Lane Esquire.[a]

To THOMAS MITTON,[†2] 2 JANUARY 1844*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1844.

My Dear Mitton

So long ago, as the Second of last month, I made an appointment with the Elton Treasurer[†3] pro tem, to go through his accounts tonight and discharge him, before transferring the Banker's account to the Trustees. I have only just now (5 o'Clock) been reminded of it; and as I don't know how long it may take (all other Prosers in the World are chickens to this man) I think it best to postpone coming to you until Thursday at the usual time.

The subscription in the City (*ex*clusive of the West End) for the Second Edition of the Carol,[†4] was 1500. They have consequently printed 3000 additional, instead of 2, making in all 9000, and not 8.

Hurrah, say I! As to the letters about it, there's no saying what they are.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To WILLIAM SCHOLEFIELD,[†5] 2 JANUARY 1844*

MS Authors' Club.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park. | Second January 1844.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, inviting me to attend a public Meeting at Birmingham in behalf of the Polytechnic Institution of that town.[†6]

I have read the Prospectus of the Institution with great interest. For I know that on the wise regulation and success of such Establishments, in such places, the future happiness and character of the people mainly depend; and that they are the most important and salutary influence at work for their improvement.

But honored as I feel by your communication, and gratified as I should be, to witness such a festival as you describe, in such a place as Birmingham, I regret to say that I cannot leave home at the time you mention. I have been requested, within this fortnight, to preside at a similar meeting at Liverpool, which was originally intended to have taken place early in the present month, but has been postponed until the 26th. of February, in consequence of my inability to leave town on an earlier day.

If your meeting had been fixed for the 27th. of February, or for the 28th. I should have been truly glad to take Birmingham in my way home. As it is, I can only thank you for your Invitation—assure you of my hearty and cordial sympathy with the Great object to which it relates—and hope for the pleasure of visiting Birmingham at some future time.[†1]

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Scholefield Esquire

To T. J. SERLE,[†2] 2 JANUARY [1844]

MS Mr Peter Brandt. Date: "1843" clearly CD's error for 1844.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1843.

My Dear Serle.

If I can come to you before you separate tonight—I will. But an engagement which I could not anticipate, renders it exceedingly improbable.

Will you therefore formally pass Mr. Perry's accounts, and discharge him of the same? If my signature should be necessary, I will attach it afterwards, of course. Perhaps if Mr. Perry signs an order to Coutts & Co. to the effect that the account is now to be transferred to the Three Trustees, subject to the drafts of any two of them,—and sends it to me for my signature and subsequent proceeding on—it will be the shortest course.

The Lady[†3] with whom the Ali Baba Miss Elton[†4] resides, has sent me the enclosed note. I answered it by saying that the Committee met tonight, and I had no doubt would readily comply with her request. We may make the sum a part of Mr. Perry's accounts perhaps. I therefore enclose a blank cheque, with my signature.

I have received ten shillings additional, the amount of sundry Subscriptions, from Mr. John Reddish of the York and London Assurance Office.[†1] I have paid fifteen shillings for Three Insertions of the "Companion" advertisement in The Times.[†2] Whereby the Estate owes the Inimitable B. five shillings.

The advertisement will be inserted tomorrow, Friday, and Saturday. I have delayed it at Miss Elton's request, as the young lady was absent on a little recreation.

Dr. Elliotson[†3] reports his patient,[†4] getting on famously.

I don't know that I have anything else to say, except to send my remembrances and seasonable congratulations to our friends. Always My Dear Serle Yours and Theirs

CHARLES DICKENS

No room for the flourish. We must "suppose that"—as you say at Rehearsals.

To ALBERT SMITH,[†5] 2 JANUARY 1844*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1844.

Dear Sir

I hasten to thank you for your Three Volumes[†6] received last night, and for the courteous note accompanying them.

I read a specimen of a certain Miniature Magazine the other day (I believe you know something of it?) which entertained me very much indeed.[†1] It is full of a pleasant humour and capital observation.

That sounds so like the Evening Paper, that I am half disposed to write another note of Thanks. But I will defer it, on second thoughts, until you send me another Book.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albert Smith Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 JANUARY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 314. Date: 3 Jan according to Forster.

Saying about sales of the Carol that two thousand of the three printed for second and third editions are already taken by the trade.[†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 JANUARY 1844†

MS Morgan Library. Address: By the Cunard Steam Packet for January | W. C. Macready Esqre. | To the Care of David Colden Esqre. | Laight Street | Hudson Square | New York | United States.[†3]

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1844.

My very dear Macready.

You know all the news, and you know I love you; so I no more know why I write, than I do why I "come round" after the play to shake hands with you in your dressing-room. I say, Come, as if you were at this present moment the lessee of Drury Lane, and had Jones[†4] with a long face on one hand—Smith,[†5] elaborately explaining that everything in creation is a joint stock Company, on the other—the Inimitable B by the fire, in conversation with [†a]Serle—and Forster confidential with everybody about nothing particular.[†a] Well a day!—I see it all, and smell that extraordinary compound of odd scents peculiar to a theatre, which bursts upon me when I swing open the little door in the hall; accompanies me, as I meet perspiring supers in the narrow passage; goes with me, up the two steps; crosses the stage; winds round the third entrance P.S.[†1] as I wind; and escorts me safely into your presence, where I find you *un*winding something slowly round and round your chest, which is so long that no man ever saw the end of it.[†2]

Oh that you had been in Clarence Terrace on Nina's birthday! Good God how we missed you, talked of you, drank your health, and wondered what you were doing! Perhaps you are Falkland enough (I swear I suspect you of it) to feel rather sore—just a little bit you know; the merest trifle in the world—on hearing that Mrs. Macready looked brilliant—blooming, young, and handsome; and that she danced a country dance with the writer hereof (Acres to your Falkland) in a thorough spirit of beaming good humour and enjoyment.[†3] Now you don't like to be told that? Nor do you quite like to hear that Forster and I conjured bravely—that a hot plum pudding was produced from an empty saucepan, held over a blazing fire, kindled in Stanfield's[†4] hat, without damage to the lining—that a box of bran was changed into a live Guinea Pig, which ran between my God child's[†5] feet, and was the cause of such a shrill uproar and clapping of hands that you might have heard it (and I daresay did) in America—that three half crowns being taken from Major Burns[†6] and put into a tumblerglass before his eyes did then and there give jingling answers unto questions asked of them by me, and knew where you were, and what you were doing; to the unspeakable admiration of the whole assembly.[†7] Neither do you quite like to be told that we are going to do it again, next Saturday, with the addition of Demoniacal dresses from a Masquerade Shop.[†8] Nor, that Mrs. Macready, for her gallant bearing always, and her best sort of best affection, is the best creature I know. Never mind. No man shall gag me; and those are my opinions.

My dear Macready, the lecturing proposition[†9] is not to be thought of. I have not the slightest doubt or hesitation in giving you my most strenuous and decided advice, against it. [†b]I am not at all clear, even of its success in America, for as it is invariably the characteristic of low, coarse, and mean minds in the circle of one's own acquaintance to delight in new faces and change of friends, so it is one of the most striking features in that low, coarse, and mean Nation to be perpetually playing skittles with different sets of Idols. And I am by no means sure, that any second visit of yours to any place for any purpose will be the success it ought to be, and would, with people of a higher standard, most indubitably prove. But setting aside this, and looking only to its effect at home,[†b] I am immoveable in my conviction that the impression it would produce would be one of failure, and a reduction of yourself to the level of those who do the like here. To us who know the Boston names and honor them, and who know Boston and like it (Boston is what I would have the whole United States to be) the Boston requisition would be a valuable document of which you and your friends might well be proud. But these names are perfectly unknown to the public here, and would produce not the least effect. The only thing known to the public here, is, that they ask (when I say "they", I mean the people) everybody to lecture. It is one of the things I have ridiculed in Chuzzlewit.[†1] Lecture, you, and you fall into the roll of Lardners, Vandenhoffs,[†2] Eltons,[†3] Knowleses,[†4] Buckinghams.[†5]—You are off your pedestal, have flung away your glass slipper, and changed your triumphal coach into a seedy old pumpkin. I am quite sure of it, and cannot express my strong conviction, in language of sufficient force.

"Puff-ridden"! Why to be sure they are. The Nation is a miserable Sindbad, and its boasted press (the braggarts!) the loathsome, foul old man upon his back. And yet [†c]with that extraordinary disregard of Truth, that monstrous audacity of assertion, which makes a Gentleman in heart so rare a man among the people,[†c] they will tell you, and proclaim to the four winds, for repetition here, that they don't heed their ignorant and brutal papers. As if the papers could exist if they didn't heed them! [†d]As if a man could live in the United States a month, and not see the whole country is led and driven by a herd of rascals, who are the human lice of God's creation![†d†6] Let any two of these vagabonds in any town you go to, take it into their heads to make you an object of attack, or to direct the general attention elsewhere, and what avail those wonderful images of passion which you have been all your life perfecting, [†e]and which I no more believe the rotten heart of that false land is capable of feeling, otherwise than as a fashion, a fancy, than I believe, or ever did believe, it made a distinction between me and Fanny Elssler,[†7] or between her and La Fayette. Pah! I never knew what it was to feel disgust and contempt, 'till I travelled in America.[†e]

— IV - 12 —

I have sent you, to the charge of our trusty and well-beloved Colden,[†1] a little book I published on the 17th.[†2] of December, and which has been a most prodigious success—the greatest, I think, I have ever achieved. It pleases me to think that it will bring you Home for an hour or two. And I long to hear you have read it, on some quiet morning. Do they allow you to be quiet, by the way? "Some of our most fash'nable people Sir", denounced me awfully, for liking to be alone sometimes.

Now that we have turned Christmas, I feel as if your face were directed homewards, Macready. The downhill part of the road is before us now, and we shall travel on to midsummer at a dashing pace. [†f]Damn them, I can't damage you by coming with open arms to Liverpool[†3] (for you won't be going back again in a hurry, much as you relish them);[†f] and please Heaven I will be there, when you come steaming up the Mersey, with that red funnel smoking out unutterable things, and your heart much fuller than your trunks, though something lighter! If I be not the first Englishman to shake hands with you on English Ground, the man who gets before me will be a brisk and active fellow, and even then need put his best leg foremost. So I warn Forster to keep in the rear, or he'll be blown.

If you should have any leisure to project, and put on paper, the outline of a scheme for opening any Theatre on your return, upon a certain List Subscribed, and on certain understandings with the actors, it strikes me that it would be well to break ground, while you are still away. Of course I need not say that I will see anybody or do anything—even to the calling together of the actors—if you should ever deem it desirable. My opinion is, that our respected and valued friend Mr. Bunn, will stagger through another season, if he don't rot first. I understand he is in a partial state of decomposition at this minute. He was very ill, but got better.[†4] How is it that Bunns always do get better, and strong hearts are so easy to die!

[†g]Burn this letter, lest it should be abstracted from your desk (as Jeffrey's pocket book was) and published in a newspaper.[†5] Being confidentially addressed to yourself, it would be very extensively read. I hope you saw Mr. Park Benjamin[†6] in New York—a literary gentleman, and "smart", oh very smart. Also Mr. James Gordon Bennet[†7] (think of his proposing to Chapman and Hall to publish his travels in England!)[†1] and Colonel Webb,[†2] and all that holy brotherhood.[†g] Kate sends her tender love. So does Georgy. So does Charley, so does Mamy, so does Katey, so does Walter, so does the other one who is to be born next week. Look homeward always, as we look abroad to you. God bless you my dear Macready. Ever your affectionate friend

— IV - 13 —

C.D.

To LAMAN BLANCHARD,[†3] 4 JANUARY 1844

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth January 1844.

My Dear Blanchard

I cannot thank you enough for the beautiful manner, and the true spirit of friendship, in which you have noticed my Carol.[†4] But I must thank you, because you have filled my heart up to the brim, and it is running over.

You meant to give me great pleasure, my dear fellow, and you have done it. The tone of your elegant and fervent praise has touched me in the tenderest place. I cannot write about it; and as to talking of it, I could no more do that, than a dumb man. I have derived inexpressible gratification from what I know and feel was a labour of love on your part. And I can never forget it.

When I think it likely that I may meet you (perhaps at Ainsworth's[†5] on Friday?) I shall slip a Carol into my pocket, and ask you to put it among your books for my sake.[†6] You will never like it the less for having made it the means of so much happiness to me.

Always My Dear Blanchard | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Laman Blanchard Esquire

To FREDERICK DICKENS,[†1] 4 JANUARY 1844*

MS L. & H. Nathan Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth January 1844.

My Dear Fred

Will you, and can you, make it convenient to go to the Lowther Rooms[†2] for me, after the receipt of this; upon the following errand.

I want to hire for twelfth night, a Magician's Dress—that is to say a black cloak with hieroglyphics on it—some kind of doublet to wear underneath—a grave black beard—and a high black sugar-loaf hat—and a wand with a snake on it, or some such thing. Forster wants a similar set of garments in fiery red. Anything between these and the dress of Mephistopheles will suit him, but it must be blazing red, or have a good deal of red in it. Also he wants a jolly mask—such as Wieland[†3] would have if he were a grinning spirit. He must be able to see well out of it. Our legs we don't care for.

I have been to Nathan's myself, but they have not such things. The production of my card will materially assist you with the Lowther Vagabond,[†4] I dare say. But I want to know the cost, and must have the things sent up for inspection, that I may be quite sure they are of the right sort.

If you can effect this wonderful work, fifty people are expected to fall into fits.

Affectionately Always

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Don't leave my card if you can't get the dresses. For they'll stick it up in the chimney glass of some [se.][†5]

To THOMAS MITTON, 4 JANUARY 1844*

MS Private. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fourth January 1844

My Dear Mitton.

I must come down to you this morning, some time before dinner, and between 3 and 4. For I have a cold upon me, which makes me afraid to go out at night. My chest is raw, my head dizzy, and my nose incomprehensible. I tried hot water to my feet last night, but I could not sleep. And this morning I can hardly hold up my watery old eyes. I must see what a Warm Bath will do tonight.

Faithfully Always

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To SIR GEORGE HAYTER,[†1] 5 JANUARY 1844

Text from N, I, 558.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park

Fifth January 1844

Dear Sir,

However kindly and well you understand my little work, believe me that you have a most imperfect understanding of its author, if you suppose that he can ever, in public or in private, derive anything but satisfaction from the receipt of your earnest note. I am happy to say that I have received very many letters to the same effect; but not one among them has given me greater pleasure than that to which your name is appended.

I thank you sincerely and am always

Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To R. R. M'IAN,[†2] 5 JANUARY 1844*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifth January 1844.

My Dear McIan.

Pray tell the fair authoress of the Quadrupeds' Pic Nic,[†3] that I am greatly obliged to her for sending me that pretty little book. I have put it into the very small hands of my Son and Heir, who is delighted with it—which I take to be a kind of bud of good taste in the Young Plant.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. R. McIan

To THOMAS MITTON, 7 JANUARY 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh January 1844
Sunday Night.

My Dear Mitton.

I received the enclosed letter from Bradburys, and the enclosed yellow book[†1] on Saturday afternoon at about Four o'Clock.[†2]

I have not the least doubt that if these Vagabonds[†3] can be stopped, they must be. So let us go to work in such terrible earnest that everything must tumble down before it.

First, register the copyright as mine.[†4]

Secondly, will you get an immediate opinion from some man, learned in Injunction matters?[†5] If he be a man who has a taste for Literature besides, so much the better. Should it be favorable, let us instantly apply for an injunction[†6] or their second number will be out.[†7] If we could have a conversation with the Counsel, it would be well that I, who know the original book, should be present. And I certainly would be in court too, as I know the V. C.[†8] and would wish to shew that I have a strong feeling in the matter.

I shall not leave home all the morning: expecting a summons from you. I have written on a piece of paper, and slipped into the yellow book, a few remarks that occur to me. Let us be sledge-hammer[†9] in this, or I shall be beset by hundreds of the same crew, when I come out with a long story.

Faithfully Always
CD

First.[†1] To observe the title on the first page of the story under the wood cut, and Secondly the Advertisement on the bottom of the wrapper at the back.

[That the story] is precisely the same and the characters the same and the names the same with the exception of the name Fezziwig, which is printed F*u*zziwig. That the incidents are the same, and follow in the same order.

That very frequently indeed (I have marked some of the instances) the language is the same. That where it is not, it is weakened, degraded; made tame, vile, ignorant, and mawkish.

[And] I particularly wish it to be put to the [Judge] and to the Counsel, that this is a [material] part of my damage and complaint. That with the idea (though not, as I think, with the effect) of evading the letter of the law in such matters, my book is made to appear a wretched, meagre, miserable thing; and is still hawked about with my title and my name—with my characters, my incidents, and whole design.[†2]

To DR GEORGE SHRENBURGH,[†3] 9 JANUARY 1844

Extract in N, I, 560 and Sotheby's catalogue, July 1912; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 9 Jan 44.

I believe my publishers facilitate the German translations[†4] of my writings, by sending early sheets to certain German booksellers.[†5] But this is a matter of arrangement between them. The books are translated in Germany, and the enterprise is not mine, or my publishers', but originates with German houses of business.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 9 JANUARY 1844

MS Mr Philo Calhoun.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth January 1844.

My Dear Stanfield

Is your Leg really bad, or did you merely want to keep at home, when our friend W. H. A.[†1] asked you to dine with him?

I was coming up to you today to make this enquiry, but was detained abroad until dinner time, swearing affidavits against a Gang of Robbers who have been printing the Carol; and against whom the most energetic vengeance of the Inimitable B, is solemnly (and lawfully) denounced.

Send me a line—literally, a line or word—in answer.

With best regards to all. | Faithfully Yours Ever

My Dear Stanfield

Philo Forecastle.[†2]

P.S. I think of going back to the Garrick; having received earnest invitations from the Committee.[†3] What do you say? Umph?

P.P.S. We expect, every hour, to have a Baby born here.[†4] If anything happens while I am putting this in the envelope, I'll write the Sex in large text, outside.

To THOMAS MITTON, 11 JANUARY 1844

Facsimile in Black & White, 21 Dec 1901.

Devonshire Terrace.
Thursday Evening Eleventh January | 1844.

My Dear Mitton

It has been most brilliantly and promptly done. I am glad to find that the Publishers are frightened.[†5]

Meet Mr. Cross[†1] of Surrey Street, with doubled fists, and peg away at him Right and Left. I think it very likely the printers are in earnest. At all events let us seem to suppose so, and hold out no appearance of an idea of anything but War to the Knife.

I am planning and scheming my No tonight, and shall begin (I hope) in good earnest tomorrow Morning.[†2] I shall expect to hear from you when anything occurs.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS HANNAH MEREDITH,[†3] 13 JANUARY 1844

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning
Thirteenth January 1844.

My Dear Miss Meredith.

I am truly grieved (though not surprised) to hear of Lady Burdett's death.[†4] I have very often thought of Miss Coutts[†5] in her long and arduous attendance upon her poor Mother; and but that I know how such hearts as hers are sustained in such duties, should have feared for her health. For her peace of mind in this and every trial, and for her gentle fortitude always, no one who knows her truly, can be anxious in the least. If she has not the materials of comfort and consolation within herself, there are no such things in any creature's nature.

I am much concerned for Sir Francis;[†6] but he has a strong mind and a young spirit; and I hope will rally soon.

Let me thank you for your kind remembrance of me at such a time. I value it very much, and am exceedingly grateful to you.

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards. She is in hourly expectation of her confinement, but I trust is pretty well. Charley and his sisters are in rude health, and beg to add their loves.

Believe me Dear Miss Meredith

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Meredith.

To THOMAS MITTON, 13 JANUARY 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Thirteenth January | 1844.

My Dear Mitton

They are the damndest rascals in the World, one and all.[†1] If we do not trounce them, all I can say, is, that the English Law in these matters is even worse than I take it to be. And it does not need to be that.

We had a corresponding case—corresponding I mean to that of the Liverpool Albion[†2]—with a Birmingham paper[†3] once. I do not remember the exact circumstances, but I know they made submission. I will go carefully over the Piracy,[†4] and let you have it on Monday. Sometime on that day, I will certainly come down. The parcel shall be sent on to you, the first thing on Monday Morning. You may perhaps think it worth while to ask Chapman and Hall to tell you exactly what occurred.

The passages you have marked, don't seem to me as important as they do to you. If the Carol don't fix them, nothing will.[†5]

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, [15 JANUARY 1844]*

MS University of Texas. Date: the Monday after the appearance of No. 18 of Parley's, presumably on 13 Jan when No. 17 would have been published but for the injunction.

Devonshire T. | Monday afternoon

My Dear Mitton

No. 18 of Parley's is out with this Inscription on the front "that for reasons stated on the back, No. 17 will not be published until next week."[†6] If you have not seen this, will you let one of your people buy a Copy. The wording of the notice may serve our end.

Faithfully Ever

To GEORGE BERGER, [16 JANUARY 1844]

Mention in To Mitton, 17 Jan 44.

To JOHN FORSTER, 17 JANUARY 1844

Text from F, IV, i, 300.

DEVONSHIRE LODGE,[†1] Seventeenth of January, 1844. FELLOW COUNTRYMEN![†2] The appeal with which you have honoured me, awakens within my breast emotions that are more easily to be imagined than described. Heaven bless you. I shall indeed be proud, my friends, to respond to such a requisition. I had withdrawn from Public Life—I fondly thought for ever—to pass the evening of my days in hydropathical pursuits, and the contemplation of virtue. For which latter purpose, I had bought a looking-glass.—But, my friends, private feeling must ever yield to a stern sense of public duty. The Man is lost in the Invited Guest, and I comply. Nurses, wet and dry; apothecaries; mothers-in-law; babbies;[†3] with all the sweet (and chaste) delights of private life; these, my countrymen, are hard to leave. But you have called me forth, and I will come. Fellow countrymen, your friend and faithful servant, CHARLES DICKENS.

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 JANUARY 1844*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth January 1844.

My Dear Mitton

First and foremost, I enclose a letter from "the Defendant Berger"[†4] marked "Gammon", and an answer thereunto, marked "Spinach", which was posted before 8 this morning.

The Boston Dinner was on the 1st. of February 1842. The name of the gentleman who produced the Piracy, is Doctor Palfrey.[†5]

I made the enquiry of Forster as I came home last night whether I had ever mentioned the receipt of such a book as Hewitt's to him. Without making it matter of recollection, at all, he distinctly says as a point of fact that he is certain I never did, and that he never saw or heard of any such thing. Considering that I never mentioned it to you either, and that you were both so much here, immediately before my going to America, I believe said Hewitt lies.[†6]

But I should be uneasy if I swore that too strongly. To say nothing of its having occurred to me as being just barely and wildly possible that I might have written even, acknowledging the receipt of some book called Parley's Something or other—really without knowing what it contained—and that a Vagabond like this, may actually have such a letter to produce. I should therefore like you to alter the affidavit to this effect—"But this Deponent has Great Doubts of the correctness of that part" &c—"and founds his doubts upon the following circumstances &c". And then after they are all stated, and after the words "before or since", Insert this. "At the same time this Deponent is bound to admit that he is at all times in the constant receipt of very strange communications and that it is possible though not as he considers probable that the said book may have been sent to him as aforesaid and may have reached his hands and may have been by him immediately laid aside or hastily thrown into the fire as an impertinence. But he again saith that although he has a good memory he has no recollection whatever of any such circumstance as that deposed to by the said Hewitt and certainly never possessed himself of the contents of any such book otherwise than as aforesaid at Boston in America."[†1]

This will reserve the distinct charge of falsehood for his other Lie,[†2] & will be better every way.

At what time?

Affecy. always

CD.

To DR F. H. F. QUIN,[†3] [?17 JANUARY 1844]

Text from Edward Hamilton, A Memoir of Frederick Hervey Foster Quin M. D., privately printed, 1879, p. 50. Date: soon after 15 Jan ("new babby") and before CD had progressed far with Feb No., still in progress Sat 20 Jan: see To Lady Holland, that day. Not 18 or 19 Jan as "Friday" mentioned.

Devonshire Terrace.

My dear Quin,

You know as I am of a convivial turn, and should be delighted to dine with you on Friday, but I have a cold in my head, a new babby in the house, six chancery suits on my hands, and my next number unborn and unbegotten.

Distractedly yours,

Rebecca.[†1]

To WILLIAM SCHOLEFIELD, 17 JANUARY 1844*

MS Cornell University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth January 1844.

Dear Sir

I shall be happy to preside at the Birmingham Meeting, or to do anything (in an honest way) that the Committee desire.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Scholefield Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 JANUARY 1844

MS Chas J. Sawyer Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth January 1844.

My Dear Mitton.

I am not at all clear about that: being naturally averse to putting any one over Talfourd's head.[†2] If I retained Wilde[†3] (after consultation with Talfourd to prevent his being against us, if T thinks right, and without any kind of suggestion from me) I would retain the next best Queen's Counsel junior to Talfourd, also, and have three of them. The extra fee makes very little difference.

Why can't it be in the Queen's Bench.[†4] Lord Denman[†5] really likes me, and has an interest in me. He is a man of the world, and would be better up to their "Literary" witnesses than Tindal,[†6] I think.

I wish to God you would come here, from Westminster, and take what you can get, in the Study, for dinner. You and Kate must join hands when she is about again, and I see no reason why we should make any further difficulty of a bad business from beginning to end.[†1]

Affecy. always
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 JANUARY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 321. Date: 18 Jan, "after leaving the court", according to Forster.

The pirates are beaten flat. They are bruised, bloody, battered, smashed, squelched, and utterly undone. Knight Bruce would not hear Talfourd, but instantly gave judgment. He had interrupted Anderdon constantly by asking him to produce a passage which was not an expanded or contracted idea from my book. And at every successive passage he cried out, "That is Mr. Dickens's case. Find another!" He said that there was not a shadow of doubt upon the matter. That there was no authority which would bear a construction in their favour; the piracy going beyond all previous instances. They might mention it again in a week, he said, if they liked, and might have an issue if they pleased; but they would probably consider it unnecessary after that strong expression of his opinion.[†2] Of course I will stand by what we have agreed as to the only terms of compromise with the printers. I am determined that I will have an apology for their affidavits.[†3] The other men may pay their costs and get out of it, but I will stick to my friend the author.[†4]

To T. J. SERLE, [18] JANUARY 1844

MS Mr Peter Brandt. Date: Thurs was 18 Jan; presumably the day rather than the date is correct.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday January Nineteen | 1844.

My Dear Serle.

My individual opinion is distinctly opposed to the settlement of Miss Angell's claim.[†1] No such thing was contemplated by the donors of the Money. And if we have run a risk in respect of Fifty Pounds, that is no reason, to me, for making it Seventy.

The family seems to be of an odd kind, and especially liable to odd influences. I shall take an opinion about the possibility of any one among them who may have less of the Fund than another, putting me into chancery one of these fine days, before I formally accept my Trustee Ship.

I don't value M'Ian's idea that nobody else would come forward if we paid Miss Angell—one peppercorn. He is a very good fellow, and I like him much. But if there be two commodities with which he is especially unfurnished, I should say they were judgment and discretion.

We must formally debate Miss A, and vote pro and con, when we meet. At Forsters let it be.

Yours up to his eyes in work

CD

To THOMAS MITTON, [19 JANUARY 1844]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly the day before the publication of Mitton's letter to the press: see fn; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morng

My Dear Mitton

Turn over leaf. If you should think it right to send that letter, will you do so? If the mistakes be repeated in any other paper, it should go to that paper too.[†2]

The brief and Short Hand Writer's Notes,[†1] deliver to Topping,[†2] separate from your note to me. I want him to leave them at Forster's, that he may read them.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Any time between this and 8 at night, will do for the Newspapers.

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 JANUARY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 321-2. Date: "two days later" than letter of ?18 Jan according to Forster.

The farther affidavits put in by way of extenuation by the printing rascals are rather strong, and give one a pretty correct idea of what the men must be who hold on by the heels of literature.[†3] Oh! the agony of Talfourd at Knight Bruce's not hearing him! He had sat up till three in the morning, he says, preparing his speech; and would have done all kinds of things with the affidavits. It certainly was a splendid subject. We have heard nothing from the vagabonds yet.[†4] I once thought of printing the affidavits without a word of comment, and sewing them up with Chuzzlewit. Talfourd is strongly disinclined to compromise with the printers[†5] on any terms. In which case it would be referred to the master[†6] to ascertain what profits had been made by the piracy, and to order the same to be paid to me. But wear and tear of law is my consideration.

To LADY HOLLAND,[†1] 20 JANUARY 1844*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth January 1844

Dear Lady Holland.

Pray do not think me neglectful, in not having answered your kind note before now. Certain vagabonds have recently produced a flagrant and most audacious piracy of the Carol; and being resolved to put it down, I plunged immediately into Six Chancery Suits.[†2] One is usually considered very good measure, in respect of irritation and anxiety; but half a dozen at a time have quite a powerful effect, I assure you.

I have come off victorious in all points yet decided, but have been busying myself so much in getting up the case that I have delayed my Monthly Work beyond all precedent, and am now, and have been since the receipt of your note, in the full tide of it. This is the real occasion of my not having seen you; and this prevents me from having the pleasure of accepting your kind Invitation to Dinner on Sunday.[†3] I shall not fail to call upon you as soon as I have finished; and I hope to be at large again, on Wednesday.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to say, that she is much gratified by your enquiries; and that she is as well as it is possible to be. We had some apprehensions beforehand, as she was exceedingly depressed and frightened; but thank God that all passed off before the reality.

I took Serjeant Talfourd out of his own Court,[†4] to lead my Chancery cases. Knight Bruce, who was the Judge, understood the matter so perfectly, and appreciated the Piracy so well, that he did not require to hear Talfourd at all. Which I think was a prodigious disappointment to the Serjeant who had made up his mind for a great speech.

I am always Dear Lady Holland | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To MRS PROCTER,[†5] 22 JANUARY 1844*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Twenty Second January | 1844.

My Dear Mrs. Procter

Your kind note coming in, met, or might have met, a man in spectacles[†6] going out. And to the man in spectacles, the unhappy writer hereof had said "Dine with me on Sunday next at 6."—to which the man in spectacles made answer, "Yes! I will!" Moreover the man in spectacles said he would bring his sister. For which, may my curse—a father's curse—!

At this crisis the five children are borne in. They twine themselves about my legs; the nurse seizes my outstretched arm; I relax—look upon my offspring —become penitent—burst into tears. At the same moment the man with the spectacles, happening to come back for his gloves (which he left behind him) looks in at the cottage window. He raises his arm and eyes, as invoking a blessing upon the family. I am heard to sob "My Love to Procter",[†1] and the Curtain comes down very slowly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Procter.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD,[†2] 23 JANUARY 1844

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Feb 1963; MS 3 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 23 Jan 44.

Enclosing something unidentified[†3] which he had intended to send to Jerrold out of town; because of delays, he is now sending it to him on his return. Forster tells me that Bradbury told him that you are "discharged cured".[†4] Is it true? I have faith in Hydropathy[†5] myself—drink cold water night and morning—and pour it down my back besides . . . I can't tell you how often I read, Brown, Jones, and

Robinson,[†1] whereunto I solemnly called Horne's[†2] attention[†3] t'other day. It is full of melancholy and pain to me, but its truth and wisdom are prodigious.[†4]

To MISS HANNAH MEREDITH, 24 JANUARY 1844*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fourth January 1844.

My Dear Miss Meredith

Will you kindly let me know, by a brief verbal message, how Miss Coutts really is.[†5] I need not offer an apology to you, for wishing to hear as an anxious friend, and not as a formal caller.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Meredith

To ARTHUR RYLAND,[†6] 24 JANUARY 1844*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth January | 1844.

Sir.

Let me thank you cordially, for your earnest and welcome communication in reference to my little Christmas Carol. It has given me real pleasure, I assure you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†7] 25 JANUARY 1844

MS Lytton Papers.

Athenaeum.
Thursday afternoon | Twenty Fifth January 1844.

My Dear Sir Edward.

I received your kind cheque yesterday, in behalf of the Elton Family; and am much indebted to you on their behalf.

Pray do not believe that the least intentional neglect has prevented me from calling on you, or that I am not sincerely desirous to avail myself of any opportunity of cultivating your friendship. I venture to say this to you in an unaffected and earnest spirit, and I hope it will not be displeasing to you.

At the time when you called[†1] and for many weeks afterwards, I was so closely occupied with my little Carol (the idea of which had just occurred to me) that I never left home before the owls went out; and led quite a solitary life. When I began to have a little time, and to go abroad again, I knew that you were in affliction, and I then thought it better to wait, even before I left a card at your door, until the pressure of your distress had passed.[†2]

I fancy a reproachful spirit in your note—possibly because I know that I may appear to deserve it. But do let me say to you that it would give me real pain to retain the idea that there was any coldness between us, and that it would give me heartfelt satisfaction to know the reverse.

I shall make a personal descent[†3] upon you before Sunday, in the hope of telling you this myself. But I cannot rest easy without writing it also. And if this should lead to a better knowledge in each of us, of the other, believe me that I shall always look upon it as something I have long wished for.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer.

To THEODORE COMPTON,[†4] 26 JANUARY 1844

Text from N, I, 563.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
Twenty-Sixth January 1844

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter together with a copy of the address of the National Temperance Society.

Believe me that I honour and esteem the efforts of the honest advocates of Temperance, and am convinced that they have been productive of inestimable benefits to society. But in restraining Drunkards, I do not see the wisdom or the justice of depriving sober men of that which moderately used, is undoubtedly a cheerful, social, harmless, pleasant thing—often tending to kindness of feeling and openness of heart. If I were a Drunkard, I would take the pledge. If I had a drunkard in my family or service I would urge him by all means to do the like. But I can no more concur in the philosophy of reducing all mankind to one total abstainment level, than I can yield to that monstrous doctrine which sets down as the consequences of Drunkenness, fifty thousand miseries which are, as all reflective persons know, and daily see, the wretched causes of it.

Those who insist upon total abstinence shut me out from the possibility of helping them. I will gladly add my small subscription to your funds if I could do so, consistently with the principle I maintain, that all sober men should be left in possession of their sober enjoyments—of which there are not so many in this world of six working days to one day's rest, that we can afford to diminish them lightly. But you won't have that. You require me to bind myself to an unreasonable adaptation to all sorts and conditions of men, of one sweeping measure. And I am quite serious in saying that I cannot get it into my mind, that this is just or wise.[†1]

The position that Beer, Spirits, and Wine are not natural to man, is poor and unfair. Shew me any Total Abstainer at his dinner and I will shew you fifty things making their way into his digestive organs, which are as foreign to his natural condition as the clothes he wears.

The certificate of the medical Gentleman bearing testimony to the injurious effects of even the most temperate use of liquor, might be applied with equal truth to scores of eatables in which I see my total abstaining friends continually revelling.

I am, Sir, | Yours faithfully, and obliged
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. B. HODGSON,[†2] 26 JANUARY 1844*

MS B. H. Blackwell Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth January 1844.

Dear Sir.

Let me thank you for your valuable addition to the kind letter of Mr. Yates.[†3] I have answered it by this day's post.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. B. Hodgson Esquire

To [R. V.] YATES, 26 JANUARY 1844

Mention in last.

To MRS CARLYLE,[†1] 27 JANUARY 1844

MS National Library of Scotland.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Seventh January 1844.

My Dear Mrs. Carlyle.

Your note has no date; but if it had, I fear the figures would look reproachfully upon a man of modest merit like myself. So I am very glad it has not. I should have written to you long ago, but have been so much engaged in another kind of Penmanship, that I have not answered a letter this fortnight. Yours is the thirty eighth in the batch. Forgive me!

I don't know how it was, but I certainly did most strongly suspect the expediency of taking that story about our friend,[†2] quite literally, when you and I were audience to the same. And consequently I did not back a vague suggestion thrown out by Titmarsh, touching a Subscription List in behalf of its unfortunate subject.[†3] Perhaps it arose from my knowledge of the man (meaning Robertson) the tendency of whose manner certainly is to impress one with the idea that he is in the last stage of fasting, and exists upon the very smallest independence that can be stated in figures. I had picked him up one day in Bond Street, not long before; and such a watery, washed-out, vapid old rag of humanity, never presented itself before my mental vision. A bottle of wine left without a cork for twelve months—a vat full of Ginger Beer without the effervescing quality—an Atlantic of the feeblest milk and water, lukewarm—are figures of speech, perfectly inadequate to the expression of my feelings concerning the Projector of the Great Literary Association. I fancy that if I met him in the street within five minutes after his receiving an announcement of somebody having left him twenty thousand pounds, I should feel disposed (looking upon that meek face, and observing the gasp and struggle, which precedes all his codfish-like attempts at speech), to press half a crown into his hand, wring it, burst into tears, and run away.

I really, therefore, am not surprised at Thackeray's having, in perfect good feeling, mistaken him. But I quite agree with you that he ought to have been very sure indeed, before mentioning such a circumstance even to yourself and me.

Your countrywoman is going on very favorably—though with Northern caution and slowness. She sends her love, and hopes to come and see you as soon as she is well.

Remember me affectionately to Carlyle. I am glad he saw that American General.[†1] I am quite serious when I say that it is impossible, following them in their own direction, to caricature that people. I lay down my pen in despair sometimes when I read what I have done, and find how it halts behind my own recollection.[†2]

The Guinea Pig is dead! He left it in his will that he believed conjuring had done it; but that he forgave his enemies, and died (he was a very small Pig you know) believing in the whole Bench of Bishops.—Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MACVEY NAPIER,[†3] 27 JANUARY 1844

MS British Museum.

Athenaeum | Twenty Seventh January 1844

My Dear Sir

A very intimate and valued friend of mine—Mr. Forster, the author of the Lives of the Statesmen of The Commonwealth: who does the literary portion of Fonblanque's[†4] paper, the Examiner—is desirous of propounding to you a subject on which he wishes to write an article for the Edinburgh;[†1] and has asked me to make him known to you. What is the best mode of doing so? Shall I ask you whether his notion is agreeable? or shall I tell him that he may consider himself introduced?

A word in reply, will oblige me.

I am thinking of my little paper,[†2] and shall not fail to be punctual.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier.

To LORD JEFFREY,[†3] [?LATE JANUARY 1844]

Mention in Jeffrey to CD, 1 Feb 44; Lord Cockburn, Life of Lord Jeffrey, II, 382. Date: probably shortly before 1 Feb since Jeffrey is unlikely to have delayed in replying.

Asking Jeffrey to be godfather to his newly-born son and telling him that Catherine wished it.[†4]

To LAMAN BLANCHARD, 29 JANUARY 1844

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Morning | January Twenty Nine 1844.

My Dear Blanchard

It was a joke of Forster's. He wanted me to play it off upon you, but I hadn't the heart.

When I went down to my Solicitor's, the first thing said, was, 'Who[†5] do you think has made an affidavit?'—'God knows. Bunn?'—'Your friend Mr. Blanchard' —'D____d nonsense'—'Oh but he has. And there an't two Laman

Blanchards, for I went down to Serjeant Talfourd's directly, and his clerk says there's only one, and it's your friend'.!!![†1]

But you can't see the cream of the thing, without seeing the affidavit itself. Oh my stars!

I am in for it now; and I dare say (through the villainy of the Law, which after declaring me robbed, obliges me to bring an action against men from whom it demands no security for the expences to which I shall be put) am in a fair way to lose Three Hundred Pounds or so. Never mind. I declare War against the Black Flag; and down it shall come, if strong and constant hauling will do it.[†2]

Here is the little book[†3] my dear Blanchard, which pray put upon your shelves for the love of Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Laman Blanchard Esquire

To MRS S. C. HALL,[†4] 29 JANUARY 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Twenty Ninth January | 1844.

My Dear Mrs. Hall

I heartily wish you success in your new Undertaking.[†5] There can be no doubt that if its high end be not too much insisted on, or held too prominently before the readers' eyes, it will do great good. And I think, myself, that the opening is a wide one with rich promise about it.

But I am sorry to add that journeying towards the same goal, I have different paths before me, and cannot bear you company. The occupation I have at this time on my hands, will keep me in employment until June; and after that, I have a hope of working out some cherished projects which are almost as old as myself, and which, if entered on, will be a twelvemonth's task.[†1]

Kate desires her best regards to you, and Mr. Hall, and Mrs. Fielding.[†2] She has been going on slowly, but always well; and I hope has now begun to stride in good seven-league earnest.[†3]

I must come out one day, and see the little Elton's.[†4] You promised to introduce me to Miss Rogers,[†5] so I shall ring your bell, in the hope of not disturbing you.

Dear Mrs. Hall. | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. J. SERLE, 29 JANUARY 1844

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Morning January Twenty Nine | 1844.

My Dear Serle.

Have you done with my Maurice Morgann on Falstaff?[†6] I want to lend it to Charles Kemble.[†7]

Is it not one Elton we wish to advertize for? I will do it at once, and head the advertizement P R E M I U M [†8]—which, in the critical language of the day, looks rather "soul-stirring", I think?

Faithfully Always

CD.

T. J. Serle Esquire

February

To MRS S. C. HALL, 1 FEBRUARY 1844†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | First February 1844

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

I fear it is not possible for me to comply with your request. I quite understood it in the first instance as an expression of your wish that I would write some little paper for the first number only; and if my compliance merely involved the expenditure of so much time and thought as would be required for such a purpose, I would gladly do so. But similar entreaties have been at different times strongly urged upon me by other friends; and my reply, where I have any feeling of personal regard has always been "I do not wish to write in any Magazine, or think of doing so, but if I should, I will write something for you." Departing from my total abstinence in this respect, at all, [†a]I should hold myself bound to assist Hood for instance in his hazardous enterprises:[†1] inclining towards him with the interest of a private friend, and with the highest admiration of his powers. For scattered scraps of writing, here and there, I really have no leisure,[†a] however; and the publication of one would, in honor and good faith, involve the necessity of publishing several.

[†b]The lines I wrote for Lady Blessington, I gave her in redemption of a promise four years old.[†b†2] It is two years, since I pledged myself to write a paper for the Edinburgh;[†3] and I have not yet done it; although it is not open to the same objection in anything like the same degree, as it would not bear my name.

I did not mention these things when I wrote to you last, because I was unwilling to parade them as reasons for my not doing what I really should like to do, and feel disposed to do. But this is the plain truth of my situation, and I see no way out of it, except to keep my strait waistcoat on—unless you can show me another.

My Dear Mrs. Hall | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. S. C. Hall.

To S. R. STAREY,[†4] 1 FEBRUARY 1844

MS Shaftesbury Society.

Devonshire Terrace | First February 1844.

Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness to turn over in your mind, and to note down for me as briefly as you please, any little facts or details connected with the Ragged School, which you think it would benefit the design to have publicly known?

If you could make it convenient to favor me with a call any evening next week, or on Sunday Week, and will let me hear from you to that effect, I shall be glad to make an appointment with you. But pray do not hesitate to let me know what time suits you best, as I can easily accommodate myself to your engagements.

The kind of thing I wish to know is—your average number of scholars—whether it increases or falls off—whether any boys are pretty constant in their attendance—whether, after absenting themselves, they return again—whether the ignorance of their parents be one of your rocks ahead—and the like. In short, I think I can turn any result of your experience and observation of these unfortunate creatures, to the account you would desire.[†1]

Pray, mention to me the discouraging as well as the encouraging circumstances, for they are equally a part of the sad case; and without a knowledge of them, it is impossible to state it forcibly.

You are at perfect liberty to mention this to the Masters in the School. But beyond this, or such other limits as you may consider necessary, I could wish our correspondence to be confidential.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. R. Starey.

To LAMAN BLANCHARD, 2 FEBRUARY 1844

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday February Second 1844

My Dear Blanchard

Jerrold and Leech[†2] are coming to dine with me on Sunday, at half past five sharp. No party. Can you, and will you, join us?

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Laman Blanchard Esquire.

To MRS DAVID LAING,[†3] 2 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Dickens House. Address: Mrs. Laing | 1 Cambridge Terrace | Regents Park.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Second February 1844.

Dear Madam.

I have found it necessary—sorely against my will—to decline attending many projected dinners in behalf of charitable Institutions. But I will most certainly make an exception in favor of the Governesses. Their cause has my warmest sympathy; and I should perform Lord Castlereagh's remarkable feat of turning my back upon myself,[†4] if I hesitated for an Instant.

Allow me to thank you, cordially, for your letter; and to beg that you will do me the favor to assure Mr. Laing of my high and respectful sense of the good he is doing, and of the value which attaches to his benevolent services.

I have made a memorandum that I am engaged for Saturday the Twentieth of April. I would rather avoid being a steward; but in any other respect, the Institution may command me.[†1]

Dear Madam | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Laing

To JOHN DILLON,[†2] 3 FEBRUARY 1844

Text from Autograph Prices Current, I (1914-16); dated 1, Devonshire Terrace, 3 Feb 44; salutation from N, I, 566.

My Dear Sir,

No, indeed. Trust me you were not wrong in believing—in feeling well assured, I hope—that the testimony you bear to the success of my little book, would sink deep into my heart, and fill it with a sad delight. Nothing could touch me half so nearly. No roar of approbation that human voices could set up would affect me like the faintest whisper from a home such as yours. . . . I shall ever prize your letter. I thank God for the high privilege of speaking to the secret hearts of those who are in grief like yours;[†3] and I thank you earnestly, for the courage you have given me.

To MR WHEELER,[†4] 3 FEBRUARY 1844

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1929; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 Feb 44.

A grateful letter for a basket of game.

To SAMUEL RADLEY,[†5] 6 FEBRUARY 1844

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1930; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Feb 44.

Asking him to take special care of his friend, Harrison Ainsworth, who is staying at the Adelphi, Liverpool, for a fancy ball.

To G. H. RODWELL,[†1] 6 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixth February 1844.

Dear Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your note, requesting permission to have one of the Carol Designs copied, as a frontispiece to your song—and to assure you that you are at perfect liberty to have it copied for that purpose, and to consider this as your license to do so.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Rodwell Esquire

To THOMAS CHAPMAN,[†3] 8 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Thomas Chapman Esquire | 14 Montague Place | Bryanstone Square.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth February 1844.

My Dear Sir

Pray excuse my troubling you with a petition. But my City friends are not numerous; and casting about how to strive after an object I have very much at heart just now, it occurred to me as just coming within the bounds of possibility that you might be able to assist me.

I have a young brother (about Seventeen) recently come up from a Good School at Exeter,[†4] and now living, with his father, at Greenwich.[†5] I am extremely anxious to get employment for him in the office of some respectable house, where he would carry (in his pockets) such metal as is usually bestowed on such small craft. He is quick and clever; has never given any trouble to anybody; and has been well brought up. Above all, I have no reason to suppose that he is addicted to authorship, or any bad habits of that nature.

If any such thing should present itself before you at any time, and you will kindly think of the Committee-Man who never comes to the Sanatorium (in consequence, chiefly, of living close to it: which is a terrible drawback) you will confer a very great obligation on him.

I beg my compliments to Mrs. Chapman.[†6] To whom I am happy to report that Mrs. Dickens is doing extremely well.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire

To JOHN MORTIMER,[†1] 8 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Mr David Borowitz.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighth February 1844.

Dear Sir.

I thank you very much for your kind attention in sending me the Story Teller;[†2] and beg you to believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Mortimer Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, 10 FEBRUARY 1844†

MS Berg Collection. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tenth February 1844

My Dear Mitton.

Fred was telling me last night about the impudence of the Pirates—which I think I had much better not know, unless they should give us an opportunity of being down upon them in some new fashion. For I can easily conceive the possibility of its being an advantage to us, and certainly a position of dignity, to be able to declare that I have never seen their effusions. [†a]Even in the event of your thinking it desirable at any time that I should be acquainted with their doings,[†a] I should like to receive the book, sealed up, that I might even then pause before I looked into it.[†3]

[†b]Have you served the second man, and has the first appeared?[†4] It seems to me that we have no course but to go on with the action pell mell.[†b†5] It is of no use to falter with such Rascals.

Mr. Blanchard's name is not Laman at all.[†6] He was christened Edward Lyt, and is a desperate bad character. [†c]I can get the Certificate of his christening. Jerrold knows all about him.[†7]

Mr. Cleave,[†1] I also find, is active in the business. I have set the real Blanchard to get news of him, and think I shall be able to nail the "gent."

On we must go. Depend upon that.[†c]

C and H promise the Carol accounts, today!

Faithfully Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 FEBRUARY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, ii, 314. Date: "Saturday morning 10 February", according to Forster; but To Mitton, 10 Feb, shows CD received the accounts that day, so the disturbed night must have been Sat, and the date of the letter 11 Feb.

Such a night as I have passed! I really believed I should never get up again, until I had passed through all the horrors of a fever. I found the Carol accounts awaiting me, and they were the cause of it. The first six thousand copies show a profit of £230![†2] And the last four will yield as much more. I had set my heart and soul upon a Thousand, clear. What a wonderful thing it is, that such a great success should occasion me such intolerable anxiety and disappointment! My year's bills, unpaid, are so terrific,[†3] that all the energy and determination I can possibly exert will be required to clear me before I go abroad; which, if next June come and find me alive, I shall do. Good Heaven, if I had only taken heart a year ago![†4] Do come soon, as I am very anxious to talk with you. We can send round to Mac[†5] after you arrive, and tell him to join us at Hampstead or elsewhere. I was so utterly knocked down last night, that I came up to the contemplation of all these things quite bold this morning. If I can let the house for this season, I will be off to some seaside place as soon as a tenant offers. I am not afraid, if I reduce my expenses; but if I do not, I shall be ruined past all mortal hope of redemption.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 12 FEBRUARY 1844

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 12 FEBRUARY 1844†

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace

Monday Morning | Twelfth February 1844.

[My][†6] Dear Mitton

Prepare yourself for a shock. I never was so knocked over in my life, as when I opened this Carol account on Saturday Night. And though I had got over it by yesterday and could look the thing good-humouredly in the face, I have slept as badly as Macbeth ever since—which is, thank God, almost a Miracle with me.

I have not the least doubt that they have run the expences up, anyhow, purposely to bring me back,[†1] and disgust me with charges. If you add up the different charges for the plates, you will find that they cost more than I get.[†2] I had £200 for the Young Couples[†3]—a poor thing of little worth, published without my name.

You will see my letter to them in reply. I have adhered to the strict business percentage; seeing the Shadow of War before me. The Vouchers I shall inspect before I sign their books. But of course they have got them.

Observe little Hall's note, with the allusion to the American book.[†4] Oh Heaven!

If you can send me these papers back, in the course of the day,—do. Pray do not talk of this to anyone. I shall not tell Bradbury and Evans; as I think it highly important not to dash the triumph of the book.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]The half years profits of Chuzzlewit are £750.[†a†5]

To THOMAS MITTON, 12 FEBRUARY [1844]

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twelfth February.

My Dear Mitton

I am afraid I cannot possibly get round to you before dinner, as I want to finish a chapter; and after that, am obliged to attend a ballot at the Athenæum, which will most likely keep me until Ten o'Clock. If you will call there and ask for me at that time, we can go over to the Parthenon, and discuss matters.—As to Chapman and Hall's, that is past and over. Nothing can remedy that.

I am, as you may suppose—not only on my beam ends, but tilted over on the other side. Nothing so unexpected and utterly disappointing, has ever befallen me. That you know.

The bill for £200 must be provided for.[†1] To that, I mean to devote this precious balance.[†2] The rest must be worked round somehow. I wish I could say that I see how (I am thunder-stricken by the amount) but I have been on the other side with you often, and you must do your best for me.

Nothing upholds me under this, but the very circumstance that makes it so tremendous—the wonderful success of the book.

I expect that Chapman and Hall's answer will be impertinent. Forster thinks otherwise. If you should be engaged tonight, you will find me at home, and alone, between this and half past Four.
Faithfully Ever

CD

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH,[†3] [12 FEBRUARY 1844]

Envelope only, MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Date: PM 12 [Feb] 44—only the "e" of the month clearly visible, but must be Feb as CD was in Italy Sep 44. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | 38 Finsbury Square.

To THOMAS BEARD,[†4] 14 FEBRUARY 1844

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth February 1844.

My Dear Beard

I need not tell you how truly glad I am at any time to comply with any wish of yours. And although that disposition cannot be strengthened by any circumstance, I should be really glad to oblige Mr. Mc Cabe[†5] in so small a matter; for I entertain (I think I do, at least?) a very pleasant recollection of him as an especially cheerful and good natured old colleague. But I am in this difficulty—that I have recently stood in relations towards Chapman and Hall, which are not perfectly agreeable, and which have limited our correspondence to affairs of business. I have had no distinct quarrel with them; but this vague kind of barrier has arisen between us; and I do not entertain the least desire to throw it down.

To the best of my recollection it is more than a year since I introduced anybody to them. And my doing so now, would consequently seem an unusual proceeding—rather out of my way, and against my ordinary course.

I leave it to you to tell Mr. Mc Cabe as little or as much of this, as you think proper; merely bearing in mind that I mention the plain Truth in confidence, because I do not wish him to suppose that I evade or slight his wish.

I have every reason to believe—I may add—that they are surrounded by translators. There is the whole Corps of the Foreign Quarterly;[†1] and there are other linguists who do not write in it, to my personal knowledge.

My Dear Beard | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 14 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday 14 Feby. 44

My Dear Mitton

What do you think of the enclosed???[†2] If you can manage to give me a call at any time, I wish you would.

I really think I shall begin to give in, one of these days. For anything like the damnable Shadow which this father[†3] of mine casts upon my face, there never was—except in a nightmare.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOHN EASTHOPE,[†4] 15 FEBRUARY 1844

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth February 1844

Dear Sir John

I am exceedingly sorry not to have been able to answer your note[†5] when your servant was here. But I was much engaged with visitors two deep; and lived in hopes of their business being brief—which it was not.

I am obliged to wait at home this Morning until Four; and if you could call, as you kindly propose, I should be happy to see you. I very much regret to say that I have an engagement to dine out, or I should have been truly glad to dine with you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir John Easthope.

To SIR JOHN EASTHOPE, [15 FEBRUARY 1844]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: endorsed 15 Feb 44 in a contemporary hand.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday afternoon

Dear Sir John

I find (which I had forgotten when I wrote to you) that in all probability, I shall have to be at my Printers' tomorrow Morning, and may be detained there, after the time I named in my note.[†1] Allow me to say then, that I will take the chance of finding you at home on Sunday between two and three. And pray do not take the trouble to write, in the event of your being engaged as I shall be calling in your neighbourhood[†2] in any case, and shall not be in the least degree inconvenienced though you be not at home.

After Tuesday next, I shall be quite free in the Morning; and should I not find you at home on Sunday, I will repeat my visit at a quarter before Eleven on Wednesday.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir John Easthope.

To T. J. THOMPSON,[†3] 15 FEBRUARY 1844†

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth February 1844

My Dear Thompson

Yes. For my sins, I am going to Liverpool—and to Birmingham, for a similar purpose, on my way home. [†a]I shall be at the Adelphi on Sunday Evening, the 25th.; and shall write to Radley the day previous. I shall order a sitting room, and shall hope to find you in it.

I need not say that if you would like to behold my steeple run[†4] (and be d____d to it)[†a] I shall be happy to mount you in a post of honor.

I don't think you quite consider the number of commissions Stanfield always has—and you certainly have not considered (for you don't know) that he has been laid up for many weeks, with a cruel old leg,[†5] which appears to be emulous of raspberry Jam, and to break out into a concatenation accordingly. He is greatly better, and was much hurt when I told him of your note: calling me to witness that he had several times said "Now I will do your friend's little picture" &c &c.[†1] The which I solemnly affirm to be true in all respects.

My love to Smif,[†2] and all the rest. Kate is all right again; and so, they tell me, is the Baby. But I decline (on principle) to look at the latter object.

Faithfully Yours Always | In Great Haste
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [MID-FEBRUARY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 323. Date: 16 Jan according to Forster (in a passage containing other dating errors); but Jonas and Mrs Gamp both appear in the Mar No., not Feb; "distractingly late" suggests mid-Feb as the No. had to be completed before CD left for Liverpool.

I had written you a line pleading Jonas and Mrs. Gamp, but this frosty day tempts me sorely. I am distractingly late; but I look at the sky, think of Hampstead, and feel hideously tempted. Don't come with Mac, and fetch me. I couldn't resist if you did.

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 FEBRUARY 1844*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Seventeenth February 1844.

My Dear Mitton,

Dropping the £500[†3] (which we may certainly do,) what is the exact amount you will want for the Premium?[†4] I don't remember.

Faithfully yours,
C.D.
Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To J. P. HARLEY,[†5] 18 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Morgan Library. Address: J. P. Harley Esquire | 14 Upper Gower Street.

Sunday afternoon | Eighteenth February 1844

My Dear Harley.

I am so much depressed and worried by an intolerable cold, that I am obliged, with a view to tomorrow's work,[†1] to deny myself the pleasure of dining with you. I have not seen you for ages; and shall hope to reverse the medal—or in other words to get you to dine with me—before we are many weeks older.

To day I am neither useful nor ornamental—simply stupid, drowsy, snivelling, ugly, red-nosed, watery-eyed, and gasping.

Kate sends her love to your sisters. She is doing brawly.—I ought to say has done, for she is off the Invalid List, Thank God.

Theatricals are looking up—AN'T THEY?[†2]

Always Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To FREDERICK DICKENS,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1844

Text from George D. Smith catalogue, n.d. (?1910). Date: extract in American Art Association and Anderson Gallery catalogue, Mar 1914, dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Feb 44.

My dear Fred.

You will find me at the Adelphi[†4] tomorrow night, with Mitton, if you like to come, or at the Garrick at any time after a quarter before 6, and before the play if you will enquire there for me.

Affectly and Always
C.D.

To JOHN FOWLER,[†5] 19 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: John Fowler Esquire | Mechanics' Institution | Sheffield.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park, London.
Nineteenth February 1844.

Sir.

I am honored and flattered by your request to preside at a Public Meeting, in behalf of the Building Fund of the Sheffield Mechanics' Institution.

Believe me, that I have too earnest and staunch an interest in such an Establishment in such a town, to decline acceding to a proposal so congenial to my feelings, if I could—with any kind of regard to my own convenience, and previous engagements—give it my reasonable acquiescence. But I regret to say, that I see no probability of being enabled to comply with your request, at any time between this and June. And in July, I have engaged to leave London for quite another Quarter.

Under these circumstances, I am reluctantly compelled to say, that I cannot accept your welcome proposal.

Allow me to thank you, very cordially, for the kind terms in which you have addressed me. I am Dear Sir

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Fowler.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 FEBRUARY 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iii, 319-20, 320. Date: first extract 21 Feb according to Forster; second extract said to be on his return from Liverpool and Birmingham, but clearly 21 Feb, the day after his visit to the Adelphi: see To Fred Dickens, 19 Feb.

Advise me on the following point. And as I must write to-night, having already lost a post, advise me by bearer. This Liverpool Institution, which is wealthy and has a high grammar-school[†1] the masters of which receive in salaries upwards of £2000 a year (indeed its extent horrifies me; I am struggling through its papers this morning), writes me yesterday by its secretary a business letter about the order of the proceedings on Monday; and it begins thus. "I beg to send you prefixed, with the best respects of our committee, a bank order for twenty pounds in payment of the expenses contingent on your visit to Liverpool." —And there, sure enough, it is. Now my impulse was, and is, decidedly to return it. Twenty pounds is not of moment to me; and any sacrifice of independence is worth it twenty times' twenty times told. But haggling in my mind is a doubt whether that would be proper, and not boastful (in an inexplicable way); and whether as an author, I have a right to put myself on a basis which the professors of literature in other forms connected with the Institution cannot afford to occupy. Don't you see? But of course you do. The case stands thus. The Manchester Institution, being in debt, appeals to me as it were in formâ pauperis, and makes no such provision as I have named. The Birmingham Institution, just struggling into life with great difficulty, applies to me on the same grounds. But the Leeds people (thriving) write to me, making the expenses a distinct matter of business;[†2] and the Liverpool, as a point of delicacy, say nothing about it to the last minute, and then send the money. Now, what in the name of goodness ought I to do?—I am as much puzzled with the cheque as Colonel Jack was with his gold.[†3] If it would have settled the matter to put it in the fire yesterday, I should certainly have done it. Your opinion is requested.[†1] I think I shall have grounds for a very good speech at Brummagem; but I am not sure about Liverpool; having misgivings of over-gentility.

I saw the Carol[†2] last night. Better than usual, and Wright[†3] seems to enjoy Bob Cratchit, but heart-breaking to me. Oh Heaven! if any forecast of this was ever in my mind! Yet O. Smith[†4] was drearily better than I expected. It is a great comfort to have that kind of meat underdone; and his face is quite perfect.

To THOMAS POWELL,[†5] 24 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace.
Saturday Twenty Fourth February | 1844.

My Dear Powell.

I enclose the brother,[†6] concerning whom Mr. Chapman has been so kind as to talk with you. I need not commend him I know (being a Spirit,[†7] and I hope a good one) to your favorable regard.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Powell Esquire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 26 FEBRUARY 1844

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Liverpool Radley's Hotel.
Monday Twenty Sixth February 1844.

My Dear Kate.

I got down here last night (after a most intolerably wet journey) before Seven; and found Thompson sitting by my fire. He had ordered dinner; and we ate it pleasantly enough, and went to bed in good time. This morning Mr. Yates,[†1] the great man connected with the Institution (and a brother of Ashton Yates's)[†2] called. I went to look at it with him. It is an enormous place, and the tickets have been selling at two and even three guineas apiece. The lecture room, in which the celebration is held, will accommodate over thirteen hundred people.[†3] It was being fitted with Gas—after the manner of the Ring at Astleys —I should think is an easy place to speak in: being a semi-circle, with seats rising one above another to the ceiling—and will have eight hundred ladies tonight, in full dress. I am raythe shakey just now, but shall pull up, I have no doubt. At dinner time tomorrow you will receive, I hope, a facetious document, hastily penned after I return tonight, telling you how it all went off.

When I came back here, I found Fanny.[†4] And Hewitt had picked me up just before. We all went off straight to the Britannia, which lay where she did, when we went on board. We went into the old little Cabin, and the Ladies Cabin, but Mrs. Bean[†5] had gone to Scotland, as the ship does not sail again before May. In the Saloon we had some champagne and biscuits; and Hewitt had set out upon the table a block of Boston Ice weighing fifty Pounds.[†6] Lott of the Caledonia lunched with us—a very nice fellow. He saw Macready play Macbeth in Boston, and gave me a tremendous account of the effect.[†7] Poor Burroughs of the George Washington[†8] died on board, on his last passage home. His little wife was with him.

Hewitt dines with us today, and I have procured him admission tonight. I am very sorry indeed (and so was he) that you didn't see the old Ship. It was the strangest thing in the world to go on board again.

There is no more news that I can remember. I am lying on the sofa and keeping myself quiet. It is pouring of rain: and has been all day. Fanny and Thompson are playing back-gammon—Hewitt has gone to dress himself and order some wonderful piece of finery—and the great Burnett[†1] has not yet shewn. Give my best love to Georgy, and kisses to the Darlings. Also affectionate regards to Mac and Forster.

You had better write to me by Wednesdays Post, and address me at Dee's Royal Hotel, Birmingham. I had Bacon with me as far as Watford yesterday—and very pleasant. Sheil[†2] was also in the Train, on his way to Ireland.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Love from Fanny, and best regards from T. and Hewitt.

Out of The Common.—Please.[†3]

Dickens against The World.

Charles Dickens of No 1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, the successful Plaintiff in the above cause, maketh oath and saith: That on the day and date hereof, to wit at seven o'clock in the evening, he this Deponent took the chair at a large assembly of The Mechanics Institution at Liverpool, and that having been received with tremendous and enthusiastic plaudits, he this Deponent did immediately dash into a vigorous, brilliant, humourous, pathetic, eloquent, fervid, and impassioned speech. That the said speech was received by Thirteen Hundred Persons with frequent, vehement, uproarious, and deafening cheers; and that to the best of this Deponent's knowledge and belief he this Deponent did speak up like a man and did to the best of his knowledge and belief, considerably distinguish himself. That after the proceedings of the Evening were over, and a Vote of Thanks was proposed to this Deponent, he this Deponent did again distinguish himself; and that the cheering at that time, accompanied with clapping of hands and stamping of feet, was in this Deponents ears Thundering and awful. And this Deponent further saith that his white and black or magpie waistcoat did create a strong sensation, and that during the hours of promenading, this Deponent heard from persons surrounding him, such exclamations as "What is it! Is it a waistcoat? No, its a shirt," and the like, all of which this Deponent believes to have been complimentary and gratifying. And this Deponent further saith that he is now going to supper, and wishes he may have an appetite to eat it.[†4]

CHARLES DICKENS

Sworn before me at the Adelphi Hotel Liverpool, on the 26th of February 1844

S. Radley

To THE REV. WILLIAM GILES,[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1844

MS Liverpool Public Library.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool | Twenty Seventh February 1844.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say, that I shall not be able to get over to your house, during my very brief stay in Liverpool. I am engaged during the whole of this day—pledged indeed to more appointments than I am likely to have it in my power to fulfil[†2]—and tomorrow morning early, I start for Birmingham, where I have arranged to preside at a meeting in Behalf of a Mechanics Institution in the Evening.

I need not tell you that if I had time, I would most cheerfully and joyfully dispose of some of it, in seeing my old Master. Remember me with sincere kindness to Mrs. Giles and all your family, and ever believe me.

Faithfully Yours My Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Giles.

To MISS CHRISTIANA WELLER,[†3] 27 FEBRUARY [1844]

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, p. 3.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool. Tuesday Twentyseventh February.

My Dear Miss Weller,

Riding out to see you to-day[†4]—the horse's name is not Pegasus—I conceived the idea of putting this bit of doggerel in your album. But you do nothing like anybody else, and therefore did not produce one. So I send it to you.[†1]

Faithfully yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Christiana Weller. P.S. I shall not forget Tennyson.[†2]

To [SIR JOHN EASTHOPE], [24-27 FEBRUARY 1844]

MS (fragment) Dr De Coursey Fales. Date: The reference to "Meetings" suggests Feb 44; handwriting confirms; either 24 Feb, the day before leaving for Liverpool, or during his absence. Address: as with other Easthope papers, probably to him: see To Easthope, 15 Feb—but just possibly to Andrew Doyle.

Preside at some Meetings in behalf of Educational Institutions. But I hope to be at home by Thursday, or at latest by Friday; and I shall be happy to find a note from you.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours Always

CHARLES DICKENS

To T. J. THOMPSON, 28 FEBRUARY [1844]

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, p. 7.

Brummagem. Wednesday night, twentyeighth February.

Half-past-ten at night

My dear Thompson,

There never were such considerate people as there are here. After offering me unbounded hospitality and my declining it, they leave me to myself like gentlemen. They saved me from all sorts of intrusion at the Town Hall—brought me back and left me to my quiet supper (now upon the table) as they had left me to my quiet dinner.

I wish you had come. It was really a splendid sight. The Town Hall was crammed to the roof—by, I suppose, two thousand persons. The ladies were in full dress and immense numbers; and when Dick showed himself the whole company stood up; rustling like the leaves of a wood. †aTar-nation grand, it was, and rather unbalancing (especially after Sir Rogers†1 and brandys-and-waters), but†a Dick with the heart of a lion dashed in bravely †band made decidedly the best speech I ever heard him achieve. Sir, he was jocular, pathetic, eloquent, conversational, illustrative, and wise—always wise.†b He introduced that about the Genie in the casket with marvellous effect;†2 and was applauded to the echo which did applaud again.†3 He was horribly nervous when he arrived in Birmingham, but when he stood upon the platform I don't believe his pulse increased†4 ten degrees. A better or a quicker audience never listened to man.†5

The ladies had hung the hall (do you know what an immense place it is?) with artificial flowers, all round. And on the front of the great gallery, immediately fronting this †chighly-gifted†c young gentleman were the words (still in artificial flowers you'll observe) "Welcome Boz", in letters about six feet high. Behind his head, and about the great organ, were immense transparencies, representing several Fames in the act of crowning a corresponding number of Dicks—at which Victoria (taking out a poetic licence) was highly delighted. †dBeing positively the first time of her appearance in that character.†6

I cannot joke about Miss Weller; for she is too good; and interest in her (spiritual young creature that she is, and destined to an early death, I fear) has become a sentiment with me. Good God what a madman I should seem, if the incredible feeling I have conceived for that girl could be made plain to anyone!

Well, well! There must be things of this kind in heaven; and some of us are going there, faster than we think perhaps. I shall never be a wise man (except oratorically) as long as I live on earth, unless I get Hewett to bring some Boston blocks over and ice me.

When the train moved off today I put my head out, gasping with chuckles, to ask you whether you didn't think Smith[†7] looked more like an ancient Roman than a Dane[†1] last night—and whether that wouldn't be a good description of the amount of his classicality. But you were too far off, and I was alone. I continued so all the way.[†d]

I am going to bed. The landlady is not literary, and calls me Mr. Digzon. In other respects it is a good house.

My dear Thompson, always yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

March

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 1 MARCH 1844

MS Miss Gladys Storey.

Athenaeum | Friday First March 1844

My Dear Fanny.

I left Liverpool at half past ten on Wednesday Morning, and reached Birmingham at about half past Three; where I was received by some most excellent fellows,[†2] and straightway conducted to the Town Hall, which positively took away my breath. A committee of ladies had decorated that immense building with artificial flowers,[†3] to such an extent that it looked like a vast garden; and on the front of the Gallery facing the platform (which was erected below the organ) were the words "Welcome Dick", in gigantic letters of the same material. There were also transparencies representing divers Fames in the act of crowning divers Dicks: to the unspeakable admiration and delight of the queen, who looked on, approvingly. Having danced a Sir Roger of forty couple until Three o'Clock in the morning, I was rendered rather nervous by these splendid preparations—especially as I was vexed to have nobody with me to see them. But I dined by myself at the Inn—took a pint of Champagne and a pint of Sherry—dressed in the Magpie waistcoat—and was as hard as iron and as cool as a cucumber again. At ten minutes before eight, they fetched me; and immediately on my arrival, I ascended the Scaffold. The hall was crammed to the roof, with all the first-rate tories, whigs, and radicals in the town; and ladies in full-dress were standing, for want of seats, in all parts of the crowd. The moment Dick appeared the whole assembly stood up, with a noise like the rustling of leaves in a wood; and then began to cheer in the most terrific manner I ever heard; beginning again and again and again. When they at last left off, Dick dashed in—and I must say that he delivered the best speech I ever heard him make: to the great disconcertment of the Reporters, who fairly laid down their pens; sometimes to laugh, and sometimes to stare at him. On he went, right and left, hammer and tongs, until the audience (and oh such a good audience! [ ][†4] London by the train at a quarter past one yesterday.

The Newspaper with the best Report[†1] will be out tomorrow. I will not fail to send you one by Monday's Post. Now that the excitement is all over, I am perfectly exhausted, dead, worn-out, and Spiritless. The wear and tear since Sunday last—to say nothing of that of the number, which I finished shortly before—has rendered me quite prostrate. And but for the recollection of Miss Weller (which has its tortures too), I don't know but I would as soon be comfortably suffocated, as continue to live in this wearing, tearing, mad, unhinged, and Most extraordinary world[†2]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [?WILLIAM SCHOLEFIELD], 1 MARCH 1844*

MS University of California Los Angeles. Address: ending of letter with subscription cut away: probably William Scholefield (see To Scholefield, 19 Jan).

Athenaeum. | Friday First March 1844.

My Dear Sir

I cannot resist the impulse I feel, to write and beg you not to believe that in expressing a desire for our better acquaintance yesterday, I used (as I might have done in any ordinary case) mere words of course, having no deeper root than such words strike in common politeness. I am anxious to assure you that our brief intercourse has afforded me real pleasure; and that it will gratify [ ][†3] more [ ][†4] and I do [ ][†5] much in this plain manner, because if I were not well-assured of your receiving it in the same spirit, I should have no desire to say it at all.

I have been asked for Papers by so many people, that if you will kindly send me a dozen Journals, I shall be saved some importunity. For the cost and charge thereof, I am your Debtor.

And when you tell me how the Polytechnic is going on, let me know whether my books are in its Library.[†6] If they be not, I shall be glad to present the Members with a set.

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T. E. WELLER,[†1] 1 MARCH 1844

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, pp. 13-15.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.

First March, 1844

My dear Sir,

Finding that your daughter had not read the volumes[†2] which I send her in the enclosed parcel (from one of which I quoted a few words last night)[†3] and, knowing that they could not but prove most acceptable to a mind such as hers, I obtained her permission to send them—and made a promise which it gives me real pleasure and delight to fulfil.

Will you tell her that I have marked with a pencil in the Index to each, those pieces which I should like her to read first—as being calculated to give her a good impression of the Poet's Genius?[†4] And will you say that I have sent her a copy which is not quite new, in preference to a new one; hoping she might like it none the worse for having been my companion often, and for having been given to me by Tennyson himself?[†5]

I scarcely know whether I do right or wrong in not closing my note to you here. But I cannot help saying to you that your daughter's great gifts and uncommon character have inspired me with an interest which I should labour in vain to express to you, though I set myself to it as to a task. I see many people as you may suppose; and many whom Nature has endowed with talents of one kind or another. The figures which come and go before me are so numerous, and change so constantly, that, however bright they may be, I am not accustomed to care much for them, or to feel any great degree of concern in their proceedings. But I read such high and such unusual matter in every look and gesture of the spiritual creature who is naturally the delight of your heart and very dear to you, that she started out alone from the whole crowd the instant I saw her, and will remain there always in my sight.

Your affection will not be displeased to hear this, I know, and therefore I disregard the singularity of the impression—or lose it in the singularity of the cause —and tell you the honest truth.

With cordial remembrance to Mrs. Weller and all your family,

Believe me always, Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. C. BEARD,[†1] 2 MARCH 1844

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 2 pp.; dated 2 Mar 44.

Having just returned from a trip to Liverpool and Birmingham and received a present of turtle soup and venison, CD invites Beard to dine with him. The notice is short, because the turtle won't keep, and its not a thing to be trifled with.

To J. R. ISAAC,[†2] 2 MARCH 1844*

MS Mr Cedric Dickens.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Second March 1844.

Dear Sir

Permit me from my own house (I had not leisure in Liverpool) to thank you for the presentation copies of my lithographed likeness,[†3] and for your very modest letter. The first needed no apology; and the second was exceedingly acceptable to me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John. R. Isaac Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 2 MARCH 1844

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Second March 1844

My Dear Mac

We dine together at the Piazza before going to Paganini's[†4] tonight. I will call for you at about 10 minutes to 6.

I send you a Liverpool paper, and will add the munificent gift of a Birmingham paper when I get one. In the course of the day they will come I have no doubt.

On the other side[†5] is a copy of the Graceful Impromptu penned by Dick in the album of that most wonderful girl Miss Weller. You had better have it copied in letters of gold—framed—glazed—and hung—by Green.[†6]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To CORNELIUS MATHEWS,[†1] 2 MARCH 1844*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton. Address: By The Cunard Steamer. Cornelius Mathews Esquire | New York | United States of America.

London 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Second March 1844.

My Dear Sir.

Pray do not suppose for a moment that your letter was suggestive of anything but pleasure and gratification to me. I am in fault not to have replied to it, though even by a brief acknowledgement of its receipt; but my correspondence at home is something so tremendous, that I fall into arrear with my friends abroad, in spite of myself and my desire to retain their good opinion.

I am very glad you like the Christmas Carol. It has been an astonishing success here; and affected me so much in the composition, that if it had been otherwise, I verily think I should have broken my heart.

I do not remember having received the address you speak of, on the subject of Copyright.[†2] But I may have done so without being able, now, to call it to mind. For the subject has long since passed from my thoughts. It only dwelt there, when I viewed the influences that make up an American government, through the mist of my own hopes and fancies. When that cleared away, I ceased to have any interest in the question.

Should you ever be in doubt again, relative to the expediency of sending me a Book, pray give me the benefit of it; and believe that I shall, at all times, be glad to hear from you.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Cornelius Mathews Esquire.

To MRS CLARKSON OSLER,[†3] 2 MARCH 1844*

MS Mr Howard Smith.[†4]

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Saturday Second March 1844

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Clarkson Osler, and the Ladies; and begs to return them his warmest thanks for the little token of Original and forgery of letter to Mrs Clarkson Osler their labours in the Town Hall, which they have so kindly sent him. He does not believe, and never will believe, that the flower is an artificial one; for to his senses it will always be in full bloom and fragrance.

To THOMAS POWELL, 2 MARCH 1844*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Second March 1844.

My Dear Powell.

I really am more indebted and obliged to you than I can express, for your great interest and kindness in the matter of my small "bit of blood"[†1]—to use a sporting phrase. And though there be five hundred thousand gallons of water to every scruple of Spirit in the Total abstinence Volume,[†2] yet will I read it through and through, and never Wink.

Audiences of twos of thousands have been driving me mad at Liverpool and Birmingham, with their loving cheers. Ah! It is a brave thing, by Heaven it is, to walk out of the room where one is shut up for so many hours of such a short life, into a sea of agitated faces, and think that they are always looking on—Woa, Spirit Number one. Woho my boy. Gently, gently. Don't be maudlin, Spirit. Think of your ethereal essenence,[†3] my buck. Steady, steady.

Come and take a little Ambrosia here, next Sunday (I mean tomorrow week) at 6 exactly, will you? I have a trifle of bottled Dawn—the old Aurora particular —the real crusted Rosy—if you can make your dinner off that, and a Zephyr or two. I shall be delighted to see you.

Ever Faithfully Yours

Ariel.

P.S. You don't happen to know anybody who wants a blossom (furnished)—do you? I think of letting my harebell.[†4]

To G. H. RODWELL, 2 MARCH 1844

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1906; MS 1 p., dated 2 Mar 44.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 4 MARCH 1844

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | Whitehall.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fourth March 1844.

My Dear Fred.

I forgot yesterday to give you the enclosed letter, addressed to yourself. Will you see the writer of the other one (who is close in your neighbourhood) and explain that I have been out of town—that I have no means whatever of giving the gentleman employment—receive scores of similar applications every day—&c &c.

If it seem a real case, I will give him my mite; but I have no knowledge whatever, so far as I know, of this Mr. Walker;[†1] and you cannot watch him too sharply.

Let me know the result.

Affectionately Always

CD

To ANDREW DOYLE,[†2] 5 MARCH 1844*

MS Dr De Coursey Fales. Address: Andrew Doyle Esquire | Morning Chronicle Office | Strand.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth March 1844.

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks for your letter. I would rather leave the matter as I left it with you yesterday. For I should not desire to enter upon any other terms—I mean on any lower terms.[†3]

I send you a short leader[†4] agreeably to my promise. For tomorrow if you have room. May I ask you to give directions that the proofs are well read? Or to send them, by a boy, to me? A point is so easily spoiled.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Doyle Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 MARCH 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 323. Date: 5 Mar according to Forster.

Sir, I will—he—he—he—he—he—he—will NOT eat with you, either at your own house or the club. But the morning looks bright, and a walk at Hampstead would suit me marvellously. If you should present yourself at my gate (bringing the R. A.'s[†1] along with you) I shall not be sapparized.[†2] So no more at this writing from Poor MR. DICKENS.[†3]

To COLONEL W. L. MABERLY,[†4] 5 MARCH 1844*

MS Post Office Records.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Fifth March 1844.

Sir.

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, in which you do me the honor to enquire on behalf of The Postmaster General whether the representation made by the Proprietor of the Albion Newspaper, published in New York,[†5] relative to his having purchased of me the Right of publishing "Martin Chuzzlewit", in Canada,[†6] be correct or otherwise; I beg to say that it is perfectly accurate.[†7]

Allow me to thank you for your care and attention in this regard; and to remain

Sir | Your most obedient | Faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Colonel Maberly

To JOHN MURRAY,[†8] 5 MARCH 1844

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, v, 1919-21; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Mar 44.

Ordering books.[†9]

To THE REV. R. H. BARHAM,[†10] 6 MARCH 1844†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth March 1844.

My Dear Barham.

The Garrickers and the Aldermen are wonderful temptations; so are the Vintages, if not the Vintners.[†1] But I fear I must not go out to dinner next week. It is the week in every month in which I never go out to dinner, except on some tremendous provocation—such as a twin brother's coming home from China, and having appointed to return next Morning. Which does not often happen.

On one side I perceive a clear head, looking forward to the end of Chuzzlewit. On the other, a blear-eyed (but amiable and prepossessing) Youth, drinking Soda Water and incapable of any greater mental exertion than ordering it. On the one side, a solitary chop. On the other a Gregarious and Aldermanic spread.

[†a]I strike myself on the breast—beat the stage doubtfully with my right russet boot—shake the feathers in my slouched hat—look darkly at you—suddenly cry "Tempter! No More!"—cross—defy you by tapping the hilt of my sword—and go off through a very little door, which has previously been shoved on sideways, by a man in scarlet plush.[†a]

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend R. H. Barham

To H. J. MORTON,[†2] 6 MARCH 1844

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth March 1844.

Sir.

I am truly indebted to the Committee of the Wakefield Mechanics' Institution, for the Invitation with which they have honored me, through you. But I regret to add that the pressure of other engagements will render it impossible for me to attend their Anniversary Meeting on the Twenty Eighth.

I am Sir Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

H. J. Morton Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN,[†3] 7 MARCH 1844*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh March 1844.

My Dear Henry.

I was coming to you yesterday, and brought Kate to walk half the way. She walked so impossibly slowly, that I was benighted at Covent Garden Market, and came back again.

I was coming to you to day at One. A false man[†1] who was to have been here at 11 on business, took it into his head to write that he would come at 3 instead. Having disappointed him once myself, I was obliged to wait for him. And now your pavement is coming up Cheapside in a waggon, I know.[†2]

If you lay down half as large a piece in Parliament as I have laid down in a still lower place, in right of these unfulfilled intentions, your fortune's made. I hope to Heaven you may floor both houses. I would if I could. I have no respect for them.

I wish you would come and see me sometimes. I have hardly set eyes on you, since we bearded an obdurate old Dragon who keeps watch and ward over Rochester Castle.[†3] A question arises in my mind whether you would come and dine with me next Sunday, at 6. But God knows (as Maclise would say)—I dare say you wouldn't.

Longfellow is married—"him as got over the Wall"—(See principles of English Composition by T. Mitton).[†4]

Affy. Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 MARCH 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 325. Date: 7 Mar according to Forster.

Then[†5] said the editor—and this I particularly want you to turn over in your mind, at leisure—supposing me to go abroad, could I contemplate such a thing as the writing of a letter a week under any signature I chose, with such scraps of descriptions and impressions as suggested themselves to my mind? If so, would I do it for the Chronicle? And if so again, what would I do it for? He thought for such contributions Easthope would pay anything. I told him that the idea had never occurred to me; but that I was afraid he did not know what the value of such contributions would be. He repeated what he had said before; and I promised to consider whether I could reconcile it to myself to write such letters at all. The pros and cons need to be very carefully weighed. I will not tell you to which side I incline, but if we should disagree, or waver on the same points, we will call Bradbury and Evans to the council. I think it more than probable that we shall be of exactly the same mind, but I want you to be in possession of the facts and therefore send you this rigmarole.[†1]

To CHARLES MACKAY,[†2] 7 MARCH 1844

Text from Charles Mackay, Forty Years' Recollections, 1877, I, 191.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh March, 1844.

My Dear Mackay,

I find (so far as I can judge from the few friends I have talked with) that there is an idea abroad that the Edinburgh people, or Scotch people, at all events, should finish their own monument,[†3] and that some prejudice is created by the incompleteness of the testimonials to their two great men, Scott and Burns. I would, therefore, prefer to leave men to their own opinions in reference to joining the Committee, and have sent Brougham's[†4] letter by post to him, without making any addition to it.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Charles Mackay, Esq.

To H. J. [MORTON], 7 MARCH 1844

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1929; MS 2 pp.; dated 7 Mar 44. Address: "H. J. Merton" according to catalogue—clearly an error for "Morton".

Regretting that he cannot be present at a dinner on behalf of an institution; he would not in any case have entertained the idea of displacing their President.

To HENRY HERSEE,[†1] 9 MARCH 1844

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1970; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Saturday Evening, 9 Mar 44.

Saying how much he appreciates the request by the Elocution Class of the City of London Institution[†2] conveyed to him by Hersee; but he regrets that he must decline owing to his numerous engagements.

To MR PARKIN,[†3] 9 MARCH 1844*

MS Benoliel Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Ninth March 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Parkin, and begs to thank him for his note. The dreadful thought that there was no Suet in the pudding, had already suggested itself to Miss Pinch's mind. Mr. Dickens will be careful that the Public shall not be deluded on the subject, and that the indispensability of Suet shall be distinctly recognized.[†4]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 10 MARCH 1844*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Tenth March 1844.

My Dear Henry.

I cannot possibly be offended by your being mysterious, or pleasing yourself in any other harmless way. I feel much too cordially towards you for that.

I will give you a call in the city, sometime between this and June. I am bound for a long journey in July; when I turn my face towards Rome.

My hearty good wishes are with the Pavement. You must have had many anxieties and disappointments, and procrastinations of hope, I am very sure.

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON,[†1] 10 MARCH 1844

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Tenth March 1844.

Dear Lady Blessington

I have made up my mind to "see the world"; and mean to decamp, bag and baggage, next midsummer, for a twelvemonth. I purpose establishing my family in some convenient place, from whence I can make personal ravages on the neighbouring country—and somehow or other have got it into my head that Nice would be a favorable spot for Headquarters.[†2]

You are so well acquainted with these matters, that I am anxious to have the benefit of your kind advice.[†3] I do not doubt that you can tell me whether this same Nice be a healthy place the year through—whether it be reasonably cheap—pleasant to look at and to live in—and the like. If you will tell me when you have ten minutes to spare for such a client, I shall be delighted to come to you, and guide myself by your opinion. I will not ask you to forgive me for troubling you, because I am sure beforehand that you will do so.

I beg to be kindly remembered to Count D'Orsay and to your nieces.—I was going to say "the Misses Power",[†4] but it looks so like the blue Board at a Ladies' School,[†5] that I stopped short.

Always Believe me | Dear Lady Blessington
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington.

To THOMAS MITTON, 10 MARCH 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Tenth March 1844.
On Greasy Paper.

My Dear Mitton.

Easthope is such a damned screw, and it is so impossible to fix him to anything, that I thought it best not to dally, but to do something—or the good men of the party, if they heard I was standing out on a question of Guineas (which they would be sure to do from him) might think I had rather forgotten Fred's quick appointment and rapid removal.[†6] So I said to Doyle, "I won't make any bargain with him at all, or haggle like a pedlar, but I'll write a leader now and then, and leave him, in June, to send me a cheque for the whole. He shall set his own value on them; and if he sets too little, the shame is his, and not mine."

He would pay anything[†1] he says for letters from Italy. But that wouldn't do. I have no doubt he would pay 20 Guineas a week. But it wouldn't do.[†2]

I send you a paper with my first article in it—the second leader.[†3] When you have read it, send it me back, as I have no other.

The half year's account is good.[†4] Deducting £50 a month from Chuzzlewit up to the end, the Debt is reduced to Nineteen Hundred Pounds. There will then be the half years profits to deduct and the whole Subscription.[†5] So, please God, it will have come down bravely by the time I start.

This looks well, I think?

Faithfully Always

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 11 MARCH 1844

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, p. 18.

Devonshire Terrace. Monday, Eleventh March, 1844

My dear Thompson,

I swear to you that when I opened and read your letter this morning (I laid down my pen to break the seal, being just shut up in my room) I felt the blood go from my face to I don't know where, and my very lips turn white. I never in my life was so surprised, or had the whole current of my life so stopped, for the instant, as when I felt, at a glance, what your letter said. Which I did, correctly. For when I came to read it attentively, and several times over, I found nothing new in it.

This was not because it contained a word to astonish me, but because I never had imagined you remaining in Liverpool, or seriously admiring her.[†6] Forgive me when I say that I did not think it lay in your temper or habit to do so unless it had become a thing of pretty long custom. I supposed you had returned to Yorkshire—I expected you in town any day—and have often wondered within myself whether you would still have an interest in recalling with me her uncommon character and wonderful endowments. I know that in many points I am an excitable and headstrong man, and ride O God what prancing hobbies!—and although I knew that the impression she had made on me was a true, deep, honest, pure-spirited thing, I thought my nature might have been prepared to receive it, and to exaggerate it unconsciously, and to keep it green long after such a fancy as I deemed it probable you might have conceived had withered. So much for my injustice, which I must release myself of in the first instance.

You asked me to write, and I think you want me to write freely. I will tell you what I would do myself, if I were in your case and I will tell you without the least reserve.

If I had all your independent means, and twenty times my own reputation and fame, and felt as irresistibly impelled towards her as I should if I were in your place and as you do, I would not hesitate, or do that slight to the resolution of my own heart which hesitation would imply. But would win her if I could, by God. I would answer it to myself, if my world's breath whispered me that I had known her but a few days, that hours of hers are years in the lives of common women. That it is in such a face and such a spirit, as part of its high nature, to do at once what less etherial creatures must be long in doing.[†1] That as no man ever saw a soul or caught it in its flight, no man can measure it by rule and rod. And that it has a right in such lofty development to pitch all forms laid down by bodies to the devil—the only thing, as far as I know, who was never in love himself, or inspired it in others.

And to the father I would point out, in very tenderness and sorrow for this gentle creature, who otherwise is lost to this sad world which needs another, Heaven knows, to set it right—lost in her youth as surely as she lives—that the course to which he is devoting her, should not be called her life but Death; for its speedy end is certain. I saw an angel's message in her face that day that smote me to the heart. He may not know this, being always with her; it is very likely he does not; and I would tell it him. Repose, change, a mind at rest, a foreign climate would be, in a springtime like hers, the dawning of a new existence. I believe, I do believe and hope, that this would save her; and that many happy years hence, she would be strong and hardy. But at the worst, contemplating the chance, the distant chance in such a case, of what is so dreadful, I could say in solemn and religious earnestness that I could bear better her passing from my arms to Heaven than I could endure the thought of coldly turning off into the World again to see her no more; to have my very name forgotten in her ears; to lose the recollection of her myself but at odd times and in remorseful glances backwards; and only to have the old thoughts stirred up at last by some indifferent person saying "You recollect her? Ah! She's dead."

As I live, I write the Truth and feel it.

So many ideas spring up within me, of the quiet happiness we might enjoy abroad, all of us together, in some delicious nook, where we should make merry over all this, that I don't know whether to be glad or sorry at my own hopefulness —Such Italian Castles, bright in sunny days, and pale in moonlight nights, as I am building in the air!—

But time is precious, and Dick is (to a certain extent) a prosing Donkey, if you give him the rein. So as it is pouring very hard, and John will probably contract an asthma in running at the rate of seven miles an hour to the post-office to save the post, I will go on with my building after I have dispatched this.

I never was more in earnest, my dear Thompson, in my life.

Always faithfully your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I am truly sorry to hear about Smithson[†1] but I have been afraid of it for a long time. Write, if you remain.
P.P.S. I don't seem to have said half enough.

To W. M. THACKERAY,[†2] [1-11 MARCH 1844]

Mention in Thackeray to his wife, 11 Mar 44 (Letters and Private Papers, ed. G. N. Ray, 1945-6, II, 165). Date: news included in Thackeray's first letter to his wife in Paris after his own return to London, 3 Mar.

Saying that Thackeray's notice[†3] of him had touched him to the quick, encouraged him and done him good.

To F. W. POWELL,[†4] 13 MARCH 1844

MS Columbia University Libraries.

I wish I had given this book[†5] to Frank Powell; but I didn't, and couldn't How could I, you know Frank, when I was not acquainted with you? Don't you see? If you had come to my house, and had knocked at my door, and had said to my servant "Is Mr. Dickens at home?" my servant would have said "What name Sir?" Then you would have said, "Powell". Then he would have said "Powell of Peckham Sir?" Then you would have said, "The same". Then he would have said, "Walk in Sir". When you came in, I should have shewn you an Eagle (a real Eagle, you know, no nonsense or make belief), a Raven,[†6] and a very small white dog;[†7] curling all over; and barking, as the vulgar expression is, like Bricks. And when you asked me to write my name in this book, I should have taken up a pen and done it so—

CHARLES DICKENS

But don't you flourish when you grow up, because its a bad habit, and don't leave room for the day of the month: which is the Thirteenth of March 1844.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 13 MARCH 1844

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, pp. 25-7.

Devonshire Terrace. Thirteenth March, 1844

My dear Thompson,

"Think of Italy!" Don't give that up! Why, my house is entered, at Philipps's[†1] and at Gillow's,[†2] to be let for twelve months; my letter of credit lies ready at Coutts's; my last number of Chuzzlewit comes out in June; and the first week, (if not the first day) in July, sees me, God willing, steaming off towards the Sun.

Yes. We must have a few books, and everything that is idle, sauntering, and enjoyable. We must lie down in the bottom of those boats, and devise all kinds of engines for improving on that gallant holiday. I see myself in a striped shirt, moustache, blouse, red sash, straw hat, and white trousers, sitting astride a mule, and not caring for the clock, the day of the month, or the day of the week. Tinkling bells upon the mule, I hope? I look forward to it, day and night; and wish the time were come. Don't you give it up. That's all.

[†a]I feel what you say in respect of your old suffering, and quite understood it as being expressed in your former letter. No man can enter on such lists with one who has trodden them, if he only knew them in imagination.

At the father, I snap my fingers. I would leap over the head of the tallest father in Europe, if his daughter's heart lay on the other side, and were worth having.

As to my chance of having it—well, I think I could make a guess about that (tesselating a great many little things together) which should not be very wide of the mark.

But I could not tarry where I could not resolve. For aught you know, you may deal a heavier wound than you realize; and you certainly will not salve your own by keeping it open. You will crucify nothing but yourself upon that Diamond Cross unless it be *her*self too.

If you come to town I shall look to see you immediately. If you remain there, to hear from you. In either case to go abroad with you, stay there with you, and come back with you.[†a]

Always, my dear Thompson, Faithfully your Friend,

CHARLES DICKENS

[†b]I'll send him those verses[†1] to-morrow.[†b]

To MISS ISABEL BOOTH,[†2] 14 MARCH 1844

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1911; MS 1 p.; dated 14 Mar 44.

To CHARLES FOWLER,[†3] 14 MARCH 1844

Text from N, I, 581.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth March 1844

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Fowler and with many thanks to the President and Council of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution for the invitation with which they have honoured him, regrets that it will not be in his power to attend the dinner on Saturday the Thirtieth.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 MARCH 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 324. Date: soon after 13 Mar when the Hibernia reached Liverpool.

I heard from Macready by the Hibernia. I have been slaving away regularly, but the weather is against rapid progress. I altered the verbal error, and substituted for the action you didn't like some words expressive of the hurry of the scene.[†4] Macready sums up slavery in New Orleans[†5] in the way of a gentle doubting on the subject, by a "but" and a dash. I believe it is in New Orleans that the man is lying under sentence of death, who, not having the fear of God before his eyes, did not deliver up a captive slave to the torture?[†1] The largest gun in that country has not burst yet—but it will. Heaven help us, too, from explosions nearer home! I declare I never go into what is called "society" that I am not aweary of it, despise it, hate it, and reject it. The more I see of its extraordinary conceit, and its stupendous ignorance of what is passing out of doors, the more certain I am that it is approaching the period when, being incapable of reforming itself, it will have to submit to be reformed by others off the face of the earth.

To EDWIN LANDSEER,[†2] 15 MARCH 1844*

MS Mr W. D. Varnals.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth March 1844.

My Dear Landseer.

I am delighted to book myself for Sunday the Twenty Fourth. You don't say at what hour. Let me know in the meanwhile.

All well, and loving | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Landseer Esquire.

To T. E. WELLER, 15 MARCH [1844]*

MS Dr. LaFayette Butler. Date: CD wrote "1845" in error (impossible as he was then abroad).

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Fifteenth March 1845.

My Dear Sir

I return you the letter you were so kind as to send me;[†3] and also the critiques, which you may naturally desire to preserve.[†4] I will not fail to interest Mr. Hogarth[†5] in one who needs no favor from any man, woman, or child;—though Heaven has shewn her, much.

Before the Month is out, I shall take an opportunity of acknowledging the receipt of a letter from Miss Weller, which it gave me very great pleasure to receive. In the mean time, do me the favor to convey to her my best wishes and truest regard, and to commend me cordially to all your house.[†1]

[ ]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS MITTON, 18 MARCH 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighteenth March 1844.

My Dear Mitton

Kate heard from Mrs. Smithson yesterday. I was therefore prepared for your account of Mr. Smithson's health.

A man giving his name Smith,[†2] and declining to leave his business, called here twice (thrice, I think) on Friday, and once on Saturday: giving each time a thundering double knock, and sort of fire-bell ring. On Saturday, he left a Card of Strange's;[†3] and you being out of town, I thought it best to see him if he came again; and as he called early this morning, and said he would call again at One, I had him shewn up.

As I must use the Interview in a book,[†4] I can't weaken it by writing it down. He was a literary gentleman—not a friend of Mr. Strange's, but acquainted with him—called out of a regard for my character—Mr. Strange had shewn him an advertizement he intended to print, which would have a dreadful effect on any man—Mr. Strange had spoken of applying to Sir Peter Laurie (!)[†5] representing that the Solicitor had been going round, taking different sums of money from different people—he (Smith) would suggest to me that there was no Equity in punishing the innocent utterers of a Piracy, like the Pirates—&c &c &c &c. "Sir", said I, with my hand upon the bellrope, "I know nothing of Mr. Strange except what you tell me, which enlightens me curiously; touching that Gentleman. I regard my character as quite beyond the reach of Mr. Strange's assailment. There does not seem to me to be any particular Equity in my being one or two hundred Pounds out of pocket, even if Mr. Strange paid his full costs. Tell Mr. Strange from me that I am determined to stop this Piracy and to put it down[†6]—and that if he Sent Everybody in London to me, I would not interfere between him and my Solicitors." So—he saying the same thing over and over again, and I doing the like—the Interview terminated.

Now, I think Mr. Strange must imperatively be looked to, forthwith.

I have been writing all day, and I have only just time to save the Post. Barely that.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To COUNT D'ORSAY,[†1] 19 MARCH 1844*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth March 1844.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I am heartily obliged to you for your kind letter, and thank you, most sincerely, for the interest you take in my proceedings.

I swear by Pisa.[†2] It's[†3] accessibility, position, climate, recommendation, and everything else (to say nothing of the Kid;[†4] upon whose grave I will shed a tear if I can find one) beckon me thither. Pisa is the Devonshire Terrace of my adoption.

I am on the look-out for some bilious colonel or dark West Indian, who will take my house for a twelvemonth. He shall have a Raven and an Eagle in, if he wish it. Together with a litter of little bulldogs, with very large blunt heads, who, when they are brought into my room, think the flowers in the pattern of the carpet are milestones or some such thing, and try to get over them.

Always Dear Count D'Orsay
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Le Comte D'Orsay.

To T. N. TALFOURD,[†1] 19 MARCH 1844

Text in N, I, 582, checked from MS Sotheby's, Dec 1964.

London 1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park.
Nineteenth March 1844.

My Dear Talfourd.

The writer of the enclosed is Mr. Charles Mackay—"poet"; and Sub Editorial, paste-and-scissorsorial Craftsman of the Morning Chronicle. He called on me, and asked me for my name: which I gave him, chiefly because while Statues are erected to fighting men by sea and land, I like one to be put up now and then, in honor of that amiable Dragon, Intellect, which Saint George (in his courtdress) is rather fond of riding over. But in principle, I quite agree with you.

He asked me to speak to you; and my reply was, that you were on circuit, but in writing to you, he was free to say he had been with me. I have no feeling whatever on the subject, which is worthy of the name. Indeed I especially told him that there would be a prejudice abroad in reference to the Edinburgh people requiring external assistance to finish Monuments in honor of their two great men, Scott and Burns; and that unless he could get a very good Committee indeed, starting with bright prospects of success, he had better leave the thing alone. In which he entirely agreed—or so professed.

Mr. Berger[†2] has paid his costs. At least, his bill was £42, and we let him off for £30. If you could have seen a man whom Mr. Strange sent to me yesterday! He had called, he said, (he was a Literary Gentleman) entirely from a regard to my reputation. Mr. Strange, indignant at Injunctions being obtained against four publishers, had drawn up an advertizement which must have an immense effect upon the reputation of any man. Mr. Strange had hinted darkly at making application to Sir Peter Laurie (!!) on the subject of costs being got from several parties; and he recommended me, for my own sake, to let Mr. Strange off, scot free. I told him, with my hand upon the bell rope, (but with a comfortable coolness which threw him out of his saddle instantly) that I had not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Strange, except as a Pirate; and that what he had mentioned of that gentleman did not dispose me to form a very high estimate of his character. That he might give my compliments to Mr. Strange, and inform him that I was determined to put the Piracy down, and Mr. Strange with it, as far as his invasion of my property was concerned; and that if Mr. Strange sent all London to me, I would not interfere between him and the attornies, who had already treated him with infinitely more consideration than he deserved. My gentleman, coming down a peg or so, then said, that there were sentiments expressed in my books which—which Mr. Strange (I suggested) had construed into a disposition on my part to allow myself to be plundered in all directions. I would endeavour to shew Mr. Strange that he was mistaken in his reading.

So it ended. And this Strange having been in contempt for some days, I would have had him taken this morning, for his Audacity, but that Mr. Mitton is unfortunately out of town. The Action against the Assignees of the Bankrupts, we will pursue to the Death.[†1]

I had a great notion myself, of making them drink something with that pudding —or rather of stating what they did drink (it was Punch; you are quite right) but on reconsideration I thought it best to let the Pudding stand by itself.[†2] I have a little idea for the last two or three pages of the book, which I hope will please you. So far as I know, it is quite a new thought; and if I can work it out as I have it in my head, I think it will be very gentle and pretty.[†3]

Horne's book[†4] is Syncretic.[†5] Shadows of Martinuzzi, Gregory the Seventh,[†6] and Co. darken its pages, and make the leaves hideous. Don't you feel that, rather? I am a disinterested objector[†1] Heaven knows—except in the regard of my portrait, which looks in my eyes a leetle like the Iron Mask,[†2] without The Man in it.

I hope my dear Talfourd that when you come back, I shall see you often. For on the first of July, please God, I turn my face towards Italy—most likely for a whole year's absence. D'Orsay recommends Pisa for headquarters; and other judgments back him.

Ever My Dear Talfourd | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 MARCH 1844

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Apr 1923; MS 2 pp.; 3rd person; dated 19 Mar 44.

To SAMUEL ROGERS,[†3] 20 MARCH 1844*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday March Twentieth | 1844.

My Dear Mr. Rogers.

I am greatly vexed to say, that I have a friend from Italy[†4] (you have heard of Italy?) coming to breakfast here tomorrow,[†5] and most likely to sleep here tonight. As he will only be a single day in town, I cannot put him off. And I am therefore most reluctantly obliged to deny myself—or rather to be denied—the pleasure you so kindly propose.

I am sorry to hear you are confined to the house; but I take it for granted it is only Influenza. I have a very red nose myself, and wheeze incessantly.

Kate and her sister send their best loves to you. Will you give my kind remembrances to Moore?[†1]

Always My Dear Mr. Rogers | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire

To JOHN OVERS,[†2] 21 MARCH 1844

MS Harvard College Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Twenty First March | 1844

Dear Mr. Overs.

I am very sorry to hear you are so unwell. If you have ever any particular reason for desiring to see me, let me know; and I will come out to you with pleasure.

You are quite right to try, in the regard of the Blue Coat School.[†3] Faint heart never won anything, but has always stood towards every object in the World, in the same relative position as towards the fair lady. I must tell you, however, that these presentations are very eagerly sought after[†4]—that immense influence is exerted to obtain them—and that the Institution is very much abused.

There are only two names on the list (of which I have any knowledge)[†5] that appear promising. I have marked them. I know some of the other gentlemen; but I know also, that their influence has been long engaged. I do not take them into account, therefore.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Overs.

To ANGUS FLETCHER,[†6] 24 MARCH 1844

MS Berg Collection. Address: Angus Fletcher Esqre. | Poste Restante | Carrara.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate
Sunday Twenty Fourth March 1844.

My Dear Fletcher

You have (unconsciously) covered me with shame; and degraded me to an ignominious and deplorable level.

In an evil hour, I invited Fred, the McIans, and Maclise, to dine here last Wednesday the Twentieth—I repeat it in capitals, THE TWENTIETH. Said

I, "Fletcher—a punctual man—is coming from Italy, and will turn up at half past five, sharp." I made use of the expression "sharp". They jeered; they sneered; they taunted me. "He will not appear",—said they. "I know him better", said I. "We will dine", said they, "with pleasure. But Fletcher will not appear." Confiding in the rectitude and punctuality of my own heart, I ordered your knife and fork to be laid. John laid it. The guests arrived. At five and twenty minutes to six, [†a]they became restless. At twenty minutes to six, they remonstrated formally. At a quarter to six, they grew mutinous and insolent. At ten minutes to six,[†a] they proposed to leave me in a body, and dine together at the Star and Garter, Richmond. At five minutes to six, they rang the bell, and ordered John, on pain of death, to serve the Banquet. That wretched Innocent complied. Over my mortification and anguish, let me draw a decent veil.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Seventhly—I think it was seventhly I left off at, in my last—seventhly—

I find it necessary for the sake of effect to turn over. Seventhly, I am coming to Italy.[†1] Bag and baggage, children and servants, I am coming to Italy for twelve months. We start, please God, on the first of next July! Take breath, and I will proceed.

I purpose establishing my head quarters in some one place, from which I can, at such intervals as suit me, harass and ravage the neighbouring countries. Lady Blessington and Count D'Orsay, who are well acquainted with the locale, assure me that I cannot do better than set up my rest at Pisa. And to Pisa, therefore, we shall proceed straight. Unless I hear any special reason (which does not seem likely) for giving the preference to any other place.

Now, my modern Canova, I don't know where Carrara[†2] is. I dont know where anywhere is, indeed, exactly. But if you can come to Pisa, and meet us, we shall be truly delighted to see you. And the benefit of your advice in taking quarters, would be very great. [†b]Of course I don't mean to live at an hotel: but in private apartments.[†b] There is a Palazza[†3] di Something, commanding a southern view of somewhere, in which I am told[†4] we could be agreeably lodged. I want[†5] to do the thing comfortably, but I don't want to fling my money away, for the benefit of the olive visaged sons of the balmy South—especially, as I have none to spare. Here is a list of the Caravan.

1. The Inimitable Boz
2. The other half of Do.
3. The sister of Do.—Do.—
4. Four babbies, ranging from two years and a half old, to seven and a half.
5. Three women servants, commanded by Anne of Broadstairs.[†6]

Do you think a genteel stranger (No. 1) extensively *un*acquainted with the language, manners and customs, of Italy, could penetrate to Pisa (with Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5) without engaging a sort of courier to attend him thither? If he could, do you or do you not consider that he would be most infernally done, by the way? Your reply on these points will be highly esteemed.

I have some idea of writing to the Astronomer Royal at Greenwich, to let me have a couple of solitary rooms in the observatory for Three months, that I may grow a reasonable moustache. London Society in the season, is not favorable to the cultivation of that Vegetable.

Tell me your opinion about the best way of coming, with such a train—whether we shall meet, and where—together with all other matters and things that occur to you. I look forward to these new and brilliant scenes impatiently, as you may suppose.

Kate sends her best regards. We are all well. Fred's boots are still rather tight,[†1] and he suffers in his feet. But in all other respects he is reasonably healthy.

If I have not astonished you, I am disappointed. I received your note, announcing the prolongation of your stay for six months, last Friday.

Always My Dear Fletcher | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR,[†2] 24 MARCH 1844*

MS New York University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Fourth March 1844

A hundred thousand thanks my dear Landor for your note. Alas! No Bath for me, until the Chuzzlewit is done. And I am not much more advanced in it, at this present writing (I hope) than you are.[†3] D'Orsay and Lady Blessington strongly insist that there is no such place for the Family Head Quarters, as Pisa; and they back this opinion by divers weighty arguments. What do you say?

Carry that same commodity up the Hill again, for me.[†4] My mind misgives me that you play tricks with it, Landor. I see you at this instant coming out of your bedroom with that strawberry stock on. And no man knows (nor woman neither) how my blood boils at the sight.

Kate and her sister send their best loves to you. You see how fairly I deliver the goods entrusted to my charge! Take care I am not down upon you, in an old Bailey point of view, for Embezzlement.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. J. SERLE, 24 MARCH 1844

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth March 1844.

My Dear Serle.

I confess I have a strong personal desire to "pull"[†1] Mr. Lancaster,[†2] the hero of the enclosed letter; and make a Bow-street application in regard of his swindling in Charity's name. I would as soon do it, in my own person, as eat my breakfast.

I shall be glad to hear what you think of it, and also to confer with you, about Rosa's[†3] passage out (which should be secured) &c &c. By the way, she is coming to you tomorrow morning for some money.

Can you come to me any Evening in this next week; or, better still, can you come and dine with me, quite alone, any day but Friday, at half past five? Make your own appointment, and it will be sure to be acceptable and convenient to me.

Always My Dear Serle | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 24 MARCH 1844

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, pp. 29-31.

Devonshire Terrace. Sunday, March Twenty-fourth, 1844

My dear Thompson,

My study fireplace having been suddenly seized with symptoms of insanity, I have been in great affliction. The brick-layer[†4] was called in, and considered it necessary to perform an extensive[†5] operation without delay. I don't know whether you are aware of a peculiar bricky raggedness (not unaccompanied by pendant stalactites of mortar) which is exposed to view on the removal of a stove, or are acquainted with the suffocating properties of a kind[†1] of accidental snuff which flies out of the same cavernous region in great abundance. It is very distressing. I have been walking about the house,—after the manner of the Dove before the waters subsided—for some days, and have had no pens or ink or paper. Hence this gap in our correspondence, which I now repair.

What are you doing??? When are you coming away???? Why are you stopping there????? Do enlighten me, for I think of you constantly, and have a true and real interest in your proceedings.

D'Orsay, who knows Italy very well indeed, strenuously insists that there is no such place for Headquarters, as Pisa. Lady Blessington says so also. What do you say? On the first of July—the first of July!—Dick turns his head towards the orange groves.

[†a]Do you eat at all yet? Are you still drinking? What do you drink? Thin potations that make your liver white; or generous fluids that inflame your heart to deeds of valour? At what time do you rise; at what time go to bed; where ride, and when, with whom and how; where sup and spend the evenings; what do you dream about? Give me something to guess by. Shake up the grouts[†2] of that Liverpool life of yours, and let me read your fortune in the cup.[†a]

Daniel not having yet come to judgment,[†3] there is no news stirring. Every morning, I proclaim: "At home to Mr Thompson." Every evening I ejaculate with Monsieur Jacques: "But he weel come. I know he weel!"[†4] After which I look vacantly at the boxes; put my hands to my grey wig, as if to make quite sure that it is still on my head, all safe; and go off, 1st. entrance O.P. to soft music.

[†b]Give her my love. And don't appropriate it by the way.[†b]

Always Faithfully your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. P. GALE,[†5] 25 MARCH 1844†

MS Morgan Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth March 1844.

Sir.

†cI beg to thank you for your courteous and good-humoured communication.†c

I was perfectly aware of Steevens's note in reference to the door-nail.†6 My meaning in observing gaily, in the Carol, that I don't know what there is particularly dead about a door-nail, is, that I don't know why a door-nail is more dead (if I may use the expression) than anything else that never had life.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend P. Gale

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,†1 25 MARCH 1844†

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth March 1844.

My Dear Milnes

†aI am very sorry to say, that having been out every day this last week, I have been obliged to take a solemn vow, and make strict compact with myself, that I will not go out to any meal, or other enjoyment this week, saving on Friday: when I shall hope to meet you.†a

I have not acknowledged the receipt of your highly-esteemed present, because I think it a poor compliment to thank an author for his book, without having first read it. I am now in a condition to thank you; and honestly to assure you that the elegance, tenderness, and thoughtful fancy of the Palm Leaves,†2 have greatly charmed me, and have made an impression on me, such as I believe you would yourself desire to produce, and would be satisfied with—fully.†3

Believe me | With Many Thanks
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

To MR PUNSHON,†4 25 MARCH 1844*

MS Duke University.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth March 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Punshon, (if the name be incorrectly spelt, he begs to apologize: not being able to decypher his correspondent's signature satisfactorily), and begs to say that there is not, at present, any uniform Edition of his books.

To THOMAS MITTON, 26 MARCH 1844*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth March 1844.

My Dear Mitton

I am afraid he[†1] is in a bad way. It presented itself to me, when I came to think of it, as exceedingly probable that you would not have an opportunity of speaking to him on such a subject[†2] at such a time.

I will call on you at about 3. There is no news of the house. All well.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To F. O. WARD,[†3] 26 MARCH 1844

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Twenty Sixth March 1844.

Dear Sir

It is quite unnecessary for me to say that I have a great regard for Hood; and hold his genius in the highest estimation.

I cannot promise to render any but the slightest assistance to his Magazine, in case it should recover the consequences of its late appearance this month.[†4] But if it should, and if it should be in the hands of Mr. Spottiswoode,[†5] I will certainly write something for the next Number.[†6] It will necessarily be very short, and will most probably refer to its starting under new and favorable circumstances.

But in the case I have put, I will do that much with sincere pleasure—and would do much more, if my engagements permitted.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

F. O. Ward Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, [?27 MARCH 1844]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the last Wednesday before Smithson's death. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane.

Wednesday Morning

My Dear Mitton

I don't send you the enclosed,[†1] because I think you can do anything, but because I think you would desire to know it. I have also heard from Thompson this morning: who says "I have no hopes of his getting over this Illness".

Faithfully Always
CD.

To H. J. MORTON, 27 MARCH 1844*

MS Yale University Library.

London—1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Seventh March 1844.

Sir.

I beg to assure you, in reply to your letter, that it would have given me sincere gratification to attend the Meeting of the Delegates from the Associated Mechanics' Institutions of the West Riding of Yorkshire,[†2] if I could, by any reasonable alteration of my Engagements, have done so. Nor would I allow my own personal convenience to stand in the way. But I regret exceedingly, that I could not leave town for such a purpose at the time you mention, without entailing serious inconvenience on others, whom I have no right to disappoint; and that I cannot, therefore, have the pleasure you propose to me.

The terms of your letter, sufficiently assure me, that I need not convey to you the expression of my hearty and cordial sympathy in the objects you have in view.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. J. Morton Esquire

To THE COMMITTEE OF THE METROPOLITAN DRAPERS' ASSOCIATION,[†1] 28 MARCH 1844

Text from The Student . . . a Magazine of Literature, Science, and Art, New Series, No. 1, Jan 1845, p. 19.

Devonshire Terrace, 28th March, 1844

Gentlemen,

I beg to assure you, that it gives me great satisfaction to have the honour of enrolling my name among the Vice-Presidents of your Association.

My engagements will not permit, I regret to say, of my attending your Meeting at the Hanover Square Rooms on Monday Evening.[†2] But though absent in the body, I am with you in the spirit there and always. I believe that the objects you have in view, are not of greater importance to yourselves than to the welfare and happiness of society in general; to whom the comfort, happiness, and intelligence of that large class of industrious persons whose claims you advocate, is, if rightly understood, a matter of the highest moment and loftiest concern.

I understand the late-hour system to be a means of depriving very many young men of all reasonable opportunities of self-culture and improvement, and of making their labour irksome, weary, and oppressive. I understand the early-hour system to be a means of lightening their labour without disadvantage to any body or any thing, and of enabling them to improve themselves, as all rational creatures are intended to do, and have a right to do; and, therefore I hold that there is no more room for choice or doubt between the two, than there is between good and bad, or right and wrong.

I am, Gentlemen, | Your faithful Servant,
CHARLES DICKENS.

The Committee of the | Metropolitan Drapers' Association.

To THE REV. HENRY HART MILMAN,[†1] 28 MARCH 1844

Mention in unidentified catalogue.

An amusing letter, regretting the impossibility of getting to a meeting of the Geographical Association,[†2] owing to prior engagements.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 29 MARCH 1844

MS Mrs Sowerby.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Ninth March 1844

My Dear Thompson.

I congratulate you, with all my heart and soul, a million of times. It is a noble prize you have won. And I am sure you have won it, in a noble Spirit. A hearty God Bless you!

Good Heaven what a Dream it appears! Shall we ever forget that night when she came up to THE Piano—that morning when Dick, the energetic Dick, devised the visit! Shall we ever cease to have a huge and infinite delight in talking about the whole Romance from end to end—in dwelling upon it, exaggerating it; recalling it in every possible way, form, shape, and kaleidoscopic variety!

Ask her to save the dress—the dress with the fur upon it. Let it be laid up in Lavender. Let it never grow old, fade, shrink, or undergo millinerial alteration, but be a household God, Immortally Young and Perpetually Green. Wasn't it Green? I think so.

The father seems to have acted like a man. I had my fears of that, I confess; for the greater part of my observation of Parents and children, has shewn selfishness in the first, almost invariably.

I swear, my dear Thompson, that I am as well pleased as yourself. I send you all manner of cordiality, in this.

Of course I shall see you, as soon as you arrive here. I rather expect to hear that you have been called to Yorkshire, for I received dreary accounts of poor Smithson, this morning and yesterday, through Alfred.[†3]

Always Faithfully Your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [JANUARY-MARCH 1844]*

MS (fragment) Mr W. J. Carlton. Date: Jan-Mar 44 on handwriting.

first note. But my answer must still have been, in effect, what you have already received from me.

I have not been unmindful of Mrs. and Miss Barrow's[†1] condition as it is stated to me, but have made it known to Mrs. Barrow's nearest, and wealthiest relation.[†2] If I decline to mention to you what kind of assurance from myself I coupled[†3]

April

To MESSRS LEA AND BLANCHARD, 2 APRIL 1844

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Address: By Post Office Steamer. | Messrs. Lea and Blanchard | Philadelphia | United States.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Second April 1844.

My Dear Sirs

Many thanks to you for your kind recollection of me, in the matter of the Indian Biography.[†4] I had just given up the rest; and had my numbers bound—not doubting you, but thinking (I am sure I don't know why) that the rest were not going to be published.

It is needless for me, I hope, to say, that personal regard would lead me to break my determination in your favor, if I could possibly contemplate the breaking of it upon any consideration. But I cannot. I have made a covenant with myself, which admits of no violation.[†5]

How came you to address your letter to me at my publisher's, when Mr. Willis[†6] has given you (as I understand) my address so elaborately in print?[†7] Surely you don't doubt the Mouthpiece of the Greatest Country in the World—do you! I will swear that neither of you will ever get into Congress if you do.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Lea and Blanchard.

To C. C. FELTON, 2 APRIL 1844*

MS The Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Second April 1844. Tuesday

My very dear Felton.

The boat sails a day earlier than I expected;[†1] and I have time for but a line. We are all well, and quite happy. Kate recovered. Babby thriving. I have been writing all the morning (it is now two) and am not dressed. At a quarter to three, we always proceed to Richmond, eleven miles off, and hold a solemn dinner on this day—our wedding day, and Forster's birthday. Party composed of the three interesting Individuals concerned; Maclise; and Kate's sister. Dinner, Forsters. Your health shall be drunk with all the honors.

My dear Felton, if I do go in at Willis (and I am sorely tempted),[†2] I will put that mark upon him, which he shall carry red, to his grave.

Best loves from Kate and myself to Mrs. Felton, *your*self, and all your house.

Ever Your Affectionate friend
The Insolvent One.
Professor Felton

To THOMAS MITTON, 2 APRIL 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Second April 1844.

My Dear Mitton

Your second letter has thrown me upon the immediate but careful consideration of the adviseability of my complying with your suggestion and that of Mr. Jackson:[†1] and coming down straightway. I am quite sure that I could not do so, with any propriety, unless I were 'specially asked by Mrs. Smithson or Thompson. I have not the least doubt of that. It is needless for me to say, that I would allow no consideration of personal convenience to influence my decision, in that case, or in any other. But it would not do. There would be an indelicacy—a positive impropriety—in it, which, in the after recollection of it by others, would more than outweigh any service I could possibly render. And it is quite in the nature of things that you and Jackson, who are on the spot, should not see this; while I, who am at a distance, should be fully possessed with it.

I have always thought it possible that, beingthere, I might be a check upon the Opposition of Allen[†2] & Co. For this reason, if I had had such an excuse as Thompson's coming here, I think I should have seized it, and gone down with him. But without a special reason arising in the family, and presented to me by the family, I could not reconcile it to myself.

It does not strike me, that your being invited to Allen's, looks bad. I have not the least doubt of his being a Rascal—not the smallest; he is much too turfy to be anything else—but I should hardly think, if he meant mischief in that, he would think you such a confounded Jackass as to be taken in by it.

Pray communicate all this to Jackson. I have not heard from Thompson since he left Liverpool. He wrote to tell me that he was summoned away, and did not expect to find poor Smithson alive.

I am much grieved by his death; and little thought when we parted at Easthorpe, that I should never see him again. There are old fairy-tales about men being changed into stones; but the men I know are changed into Gravestones, with terrible rapidity and reality.

Do not fail to tell me news of Mrs. Smithson.[†3] I feel for her, deeply.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To ALFRED DICKENS, 3 APRIL 1844

Text from N, I, 590-1.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday April Third 1844

My Dear Alfred,

Fred sent me up your account of poor Smithson's death, last night. I had been anxious to know the particulars, having felt very much for all the house, and thought about them constantly.

It is a comfort to know, poor fellow, that his end was so peaceful. He was a kind-hearted creature; and I regret him most truly.

I need not say to you that if I were sure of being of the least comfort to Mrs. Smithson, or of affording her the slightest grain of consolation by my attendance at the Funeral, I should have started off to the railway immediately upon the receipt of your note of yesterday's date. But she has so many people about her, and it is so doubtful whether what one means for sympathy and kindness, be really so at such a time, or be but an aggravation of the mourner's distress; that I could not resolve to come, unless I were assured by Thompson that she actually and actively wished it. God knows that if she did, I would cheerfully and zealously render—not such a trifling attention as that—but services of patient attention and fatigue, and think myself happy in their performance. When I think, however, of the number of friends about her, I am not (as I have already said) at all confident that I am not much better and kinder, away.

I deem it best therefore, to stay where I am. But in case Thompson should happen to write to me to the same effect by to-day's post, I will order my portmanteau to be packed, and if I should hear from him (as in that case I should) by a quarter past 9 tomorrow morning, I shall be all ready for repairing to the railway which I will then do immediately, and come down by the first train after my arrival at the terminus in Euston Square which I suppose would be the Day Mail.

Affectionately always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS OSBORNE,[†1] 3 APRIL 1844*

MS Text from copy, Mrs John Silcock.

1 Devonshire Terrace | April 3, 1844

Dear Miss Osborne

Let me thank you, very earnestly, for your kind remembrance of me. I shall not fail to read the little books[†2] you have sent me as soon as possible; and though they were the dullest little books in the world instead of being what I expect them to be, yet would I read them with an unwearying mind for the givers sake.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to say that we both respond to Lady Osborne's[†1] desire for our better acquaintance.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM PICKERSGILL,[†2] 3 APRIL 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Third April 1844.

Sir.

I fear the best reply I can give you, in acknowledging the receipt of your letter, will be rather unsatisfactory; but if it be so, it is not from any lack of interest on my part. It is in the nature of all literary beginnings to be surrounded by unsatisfactory circumstances.

You know the general character of your composition; and can tell, by looking over the Magazines for any single Month, to which Periodical it seems to be the best adapted by its resemblance to the prevailing tone. You send it addressed to the Editor, with a brief note, intimating that you wish it to be inserted at the usual rate of remuneration. If you send it at the end of one month, you will most likely know its fate at the end of the next.

A Magazine Sheet is sixteen pages. If you count the words in any one page of the Magazine you select, and then count the words in any one page of your own writing, you can easily calculate what quantity of your MS will go to a sheet. When I say that a Magazine Sheet is sixteen pages, I mean sixteen pages of the Magazine, of course.

The rate of remuneration to unknown writers, is six or eight Guineas a sheet, usually. Many unknown Writers, write for nothing. I wrote for the next thing to it myself, when I was one and twenty.[†3]

The only additional piece of advice I can give you, is to concentrate on this pursuit all the patience that would be required in all the other pursuits of this world, put together; and to lay your account with having it tried. I have no great private knowledge of any Magazine, but I should say that Ainsworth's, Hood's and Bentley's[†4] were the least likely to be already oppressed by a great accumulation of accepted contributions. So far as I know, your offering is pretty certain to be read, and to receive courteous attention.

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

William Pickersgill Esquire

To J. V. STAPLES,[†1] 3 APRIL 1844

Text from F, IV, ii, 317*n*.

Third of April, 1844. I have been very much gratified by the receipt of your interesting letter, and I assure you that it would have given me heartfelt satisfaction to have been in your place when you read my little Carol to the Poor in your neighbourhood.[†2] I have great faith in the poor; to the best of my ability I always endeavour to present them in a favourable light to the rich; and I shall never cease, I hope, until I die, to advocate their being made as happy and as wise as the circumstances of their condition, in its utmost improvement, will admit of their becoming. I mention this to assure you of two things. Firstly, that

I try to deserve their attention; and secondly, that any such marks of their approval and confidence as you relate to me are most acceptable to my feelings, and go at once to my heart.

To GEORGE HODDER,[†3] [?1-4 APRIL 1844]

Mention in George Hodder, Memories of my Time, 1870, p. 147. Date: not earlier than 1 Apr since the advertisement for a secretary to the Art-Union appeared 30 Mar (Literary Gazette), and before the closing date of 5 Apr.

Recommending Hodder for the post of Secretary to the Art-Union of London.[†4]

To JOHN OVERS, 4 APRIL 1844*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Fourth April 1844.

My Dear Mr Overs,

I am suddenly called away into Yorkshire to attend a Funeral;[†1] but I have found time this morning to read your Poem.

Doing so with a pencil in my hand, I have marked here and there such slight observations as occurred to me. I think it very good all things considered, though here and there a little obscured and forced.

I fear that with Gray's Ode on the books, it is not likely to find a ready market. I would counsel you to try Tait[†2] with it again. I am not hopeful in regard to it; but let me know what you determine,

In great haste, | Faithfully yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr J. A. Overs.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 6 APRIL 1844

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London. On mourning paper.

Malton Abbey.[†3] | Saturday Sixth April 1844.

My Dearest Kate. I found Alfred waiting for me at York yesterday; but one of the horses having gone lame, we had nothing to come over here in, but a Post chaise. And as we did not leave York until 7, and poor Smithson was to be buried at ½ past 9 you may suppose it was pretty sharp work to get here, and get dressed, in time. We managed it, however. When we drove in to the Gannock[†4] (as that green place which you recollect, outside the house is called) it was filled with country-people hurrying away to the abbey churchyard; and with Malton trades-people, dressed in mourning. The sight was very affecting indeed; and so was the funeral, which was very solemnly performed in the old abbey church; the rector[†1] walking there, before the Hearse. Poor Smithson is buried immediately outside his own Garden Wall—in a piece of ground which was lately taken from his garden by the abbey Property, and consecrated.[†2] A tree is to be planted over his Grave.

Mrs. Smithson had been upstairs by herself ever since, but I saw her yesterday afternoon. She cried a good deal at first, and looked very lonely and miserable: her face a good deal altered by crying and anxiety: and not improved by the widow's cap. She was quite sensible about it though, and made no show of sentiment. Thompson, Fanny,[†3] and I, sat with her in the Evening. She was comfortable enough, then, and came down to breakfast this morning, and was in her old place, before anybody was up. Everything goes on now again much as ever.

There appears to be no doubt whatever, that he died without a will. Every place has been searched that could be thought of: and nothing has been found.[†4] He had even dropped a certain Life Insurance for £3000, which in a man of business is extremely strange. Mitton tells me that on the best calculation Jackson can make after looking over the papers in the office, the estate will not yield more than two or three thousand pounds, after everything is got in, and everything is paid.[†5] But this, for the present, is mere talk. She has £330 a year, of her own. Milly[†6] has the same. And this, with what Thompson pays for the two children,[†7] would of course maintain them genteelly anywhere. She has not yet mentioned to Thompson what her wishes are in respect of leaving this place—But Thompson talks of Devonshire. He is going to remain with them until everything is finally arranged. It will take a long time; and all his foreign projects are of necessity broken up.

I think, being so near, I shall go over to Mulgrave[†8] by the coach on Monday Afternoon, and return here either on Tuesday or Wednesday: coming to town most probably on Thursday Night, but sometime on Thursday at latest. Write to me by Tuesday's Post; and if there be any letters that you think particular, send them—not otherwise.[†1] Pray write to Mrs. Smithson at the same time. I blushed to think yesterday, that I had come down at such a time, without bringing a line from you.

Fanny goes home again today—Alfred to York tomorrow. Mitton somewhere else on Monday, I believe. I grieve to report that Wallace was almost too drunk to wait at table yesterday; which is horribly discouraging, in reference to one's treatment of servants. I am sure no man ever had a kinder master than he had in poor Smithson.

Love to the Darlings, and to Georgy. I shall look for your letter. Of course you will open any that may come from Jeffrey.[†2] Always affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Sunday Morning

The state of the Miss Weller business is exactly what I predicted to you. A prior attachment—kept secret by her—and the parents with Thompson. You have the key of my round Study Table. If you open the drawer in which I keep my cheque-book, you will see two latch keys. They both belong to the street door. Send me one of them in your letter, that I may admit myself on Thursday night.

To MISS CHRISTIANA WELLER, 8 APRIL 1844

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, pp. 37-43.

Malton Abbey, Yorkshire, Monday Eighth April, 1844

My dear Miss Weller,

I was exceedingly glad to receive your letter some weeks since; and should have written to thank you for it if I had anything to say. Not being one of those remorseless persons who look upon the Penny Postage as a General Licence to let fly with a paper pellet at all sorts of game, however, I waited in the hope that I might have something to say in course of time. In which expectation I have been disappointed. Nobody's house, in whom I have recently supposed you interested, has taken fire; nothing has changed for good or evil which is likely to concern you at all; and unless the modest creature who sang about the Ugly Man[†3] at Liverpool has grown bold since I was there (which is not probable:

considering his remarkable bashfulness at that time) no man or woman whom we both know is one bit the better or the worse since we parted, that I know.

Yet that is not so, either. For to my amazement, I have found one friend of mine very much the worse for a visit to your town. Something comes over the paper like the light of a blush from you; I don't know what is the cause of the effect, but it is very red. I mention it on account of its singularity; and, losing the thread of my discourse in doing so—(it is so very slight that it is hard to find)—I must turn overleaf, and look back.

O, my friend! I recollect. Yes. He went to Liverpool, and fell desperately, madly, irretrieveably in Love there. Which was so perfectly natural (the circumstances of his case being quite uncommon and his provocation enormous) that I could not find it in my heart to remonstrate with him for his folly. Indeed I rather encouraged him in it than otherwise; for I had that amount of sympathy with his condition, which, but that I am beyond the reach—the lawful reach—of the Wings that fanned his fire, would have rendered it the greatest happiness and pleasure of my life to have run him through the body. In no poetical or tender sense, I assure you, but with good sharp Steel. He fell in love, this man; and, after divers misgivings and hesitations and deliberations and all that, mentioned the fact—first to the winds, and to the gentle airs that blow in Mr. Radley's bed-chambers; and afterwards to—to Her. Well. He thought he was getting on Hopefully, gently, reasonably, smoothly; and wrote as much to me, in London. I immediately threw up a small cap (sky-blue) which I keep on a peg in my study for such joyful occasions as very seldom happen; and remained for some days perpetually casting it into the air and catching it again, in a transport of delight.

In the midst of this enthusiasm I was summoned down here (he visits hereabouts) to attend a funeral; and at this funeral I found him, to my great amazement, acting as chief mourner to his own hopes, and attending them to an early grave with the longest hat-band and the usefullest pocket handkerchief I ever saw in my life.

At this I was very much surprised and very sorry, as you will believe; and the sky-blue cap (still in the air) fell down upon my head with the weight and velocity of a Cannon-ball.

For I found out, when I came to talk to him, that one wretchedness coming on the head of another—they always make a pyramid, God knows why—he had heard, in the very height of another distress, from Her; and She had told him that he had been a little premature, and that there were other footprints in the field—and so forth.

But, by little and little, I got the cap up again—not very high, but up—and there it is now, over my head as I write. For I told him that, as to other foot-marks being in that course, there might be a host, and yet the best flowers might grow up at last in the steps of the last man, if he were True, Unselfish, Manly, Honourable, Patient, and Persevering. I told him that I had a Faith in such strong qualities never being inspired in a man's breast for failing purposes; that I had a Faith in his possessing them, and carrying them gallantly with his attachment; and that I had as high and confident a Faith (O Heaven what a boundless Faith it is!) in Her, and that whatever she worked out would be for Good. I know, I do know it, as well as if I had known her from her cradle. As, in the spirit, I have.

In short, I went on as if I had a white head, a staff, a patriarchal beard, and a bent back—saving that I threw the sky-blue cap a little higher than an old man would have done perhaps, and kept it up as gaily as I could. Which I mean to do, unless you hold my hands; and that you won't do, I believe. Whatever happens in this case, of this I am quite sure—that it will all happen Wrong, and cannot happen otherwise but Wrong; the undersigned being excluded from all chance of competition, and only throwing up his cap for other men, instead of cutting it up into Favors for himself. Not last among your faithful and admiring friends, my dear Miss Weller, nor yet a cold spectator of the slightest thing that can concern your happiness,

Faithfully your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD JEFFREY, [12 APRIL 1844]*

MS Professor Harry Stone. Date: the day after CD's return from Yorkshire.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Lord Jeffrey.

I have just returned from Yorkshire, and shall wait at home today until I see or hear from you.[†1] I am yours tomorrow, if that will suit you better.

Always | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS MITTON, [12 APRIL 1844]

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 141 (1884); signed initials; undated, but clearly same letter as To Mitton, 12 Apr 44, mentioned in catalogue of Quabbin Book House, Ware, Mass (Jan 1942), MS 1 p., from Devonshire Terrace, since CD had arranged to see Jeffrey on this date (see last).

I forgot the very thing I came to town for—to see Lord Jeffrey, who is our boy's Godfather—I breakfast with him to-morrow at 10.

To [MRS. GORE],[†2] 13 APRIL 1844*

MS The Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate | Saturday Thirteenth April 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the author of Agathonia,[†3] and begs to acknowledge, with very many thanks, the receipt of that book. He is much indebted to the author for his courteous and flattering attention; and anticipates great pleasure from its perusal.

Mr. Dickens loses no time in acknowledging its receipt: having lost some days already, he fears, through being in Yorkshire, whence he only returned home yesterday.

To CHARLES KNIGHT,[†1] [?13 APRIL 1844]

Text from MDGH, I, 152. Date: "Saturday, April 13th, 1846" according to MDGH's text; but Sat was 11 Apr in 1846, 13 Apr in 1844. Knight's book was published July 1843, and it seems very unlikely that he would have delayed sending CD a copy of so important a work for two years.

Devonshire Terrace, Saturday, April 13th, 184[4].

My Dear Sir,

Do you recollect sending me your biography of Shakespeare[†2] last autumn, and my not acknowledging its receipt? I do, with remorse.

The truth is, that I took it out of town with me, read it with great pleasure as a charming piece of honest enthusiasm and perseverance,[†3] kept it by me, came home, meant to say all manner of things to you, suffered the time to go by, got ashamed, thought of speaking to you,[†4] never saw you, felt it heavy on my mind, and now fling off the load by thanking you heartily, and hoping you will not think it too late.

Always believe me, | Faithfully yours.
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 13 APRIL 1844*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | 38 Finsbury Square.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth April 1844.

My Dear Sir

I feel, on second thoughts, the delicacy of Chairmanship[†1] so strong upon me, that I would rather leave Lords Normanby[†2] and Seymour[†3] to be written to, by the man of business.[†4] All the other people we spoke of this morning, I have faithfully written to, already.[†5]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To EBENEZER JONES,[†6] 15 APRIL 1844†

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Monday Fifteenth April 1844

Dear Sir

I don't know how it has happened that I have been so long in acknowledging the receipt of your kind present of your Poems,[†7] but I do know that I have often thought of writing to you, and have very often reproached myself for not carrying that thought into execution. [†a]It is not my habit or intention to be dilatory in such cases; and I hope in all plain sincerity that you will excuse me.[†a]

I have not been neglectful of the Poems themselves, I assure you, but have read them with very great pleasure. They struck me at the first glance as being remarkably nervous, picturesque, imaginative, and original. I have frequently recurred to them since; and never with the slightest abatement of that impression. I am much flattered and gratified by your recollection of me; I beg you to believe in my unaffected sympathy with, and appreciation of, your powers; and I entreat you to accept my best wishes, and genuine though tardy thanks.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Ebenezer Jones Esquire

To MRS CHARLES SEDGWICK,[†1] 15 APRIL 1844*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society. Address: By the Hibernia Post Office Packet. | Mrs. Sedgwick | Lenox | Massachusetts | United States | Private.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park.
Fifteenth April 1844.

Dear Madam. I am too glad to have heard from you (remembering in what earth, our correspondence first took root) to be disposed to contest the points you set forth in your letter, at any length. But I cannot help remarking, with the very best feeling and temper in the world, that the Popular Instructor of America —its gallant and veracious press—has left you uninstructed on one or two points of fact, which it was rather essential for you to have known, before you formed such very strong opinions in reference to the Pennsylvanian Penitentiary.[†2] You seem to regard my opinion of the system, as something so extraordinary and unaccountable that it can only be understood or comprehended in any degree as consistent with honesty, by the supposition that I was under some strange influence—some wonderful and unparalleled perversion of judgment, unknown to all other men—when I wrote about that Prison. I have no doubt this has been very often represented to you, and very seldom so politely; but this cannot change the fact that it is no peculiar crotchet of mine—that many most excellent, amiable, virtuous, thoughtful, and enlightened men have arrived at exactly the same conclusions from exactly the same premises—that the introduction of this discipline is strongly opposed in England, and has already been attended with lamentable results—that it has lately been distinctly and decidedly reported against, in Paris, where its introduction was contemplated[†3]—and that it has unquestionably, more opponents than defenders among those who are best acquainted with the subject of Prison regulations, and have most attentively studied the operations of the human mind. Of myself, and my own means of arriving at a right conclusion, I will only say that I have paid great attention to the first of these themes for several years; and that if I have no natural aptitude for the second, I have entirely mistaken my vocation, and some few readers of books have done so, likewise.

And in reference to my expressed opinion at the time, by word of mouth, I will merely remind you that not even the Governor of an American Prison can alter the Truth, or change an iota of it; the Truth being even a higher thing than such Governor, and far beyond his reach, assailment, or controul. And the Truth is, upon my honor as a Gentleman and as I must see God as a mortal creature, that after a dinner in the Prison, I, being called upon, did say in so many words to the party then assembled that the Punishment was an awful and tremendous one; and that if it were inflicted at all, it should only be inflicted for very short terms; and that I believed very few men knew what a Punishment it was. All of which sentiments, I, of course, separated however, from the cleanliness, order, and humanity of intention observable throughout the establishment; to which I awarded the Praise such arrangements deserved. I recollect, as distinctly as if it had been yesterday, an awkward and blank pause succeeding upon these remarks; and I have no doubt that a gentleman in Philadelphia named Ingersoll,[†1] an officer in the United States Navy, remembers these circumstances as well as I; and our reference to them in a coach as we rode back together.

If you recollect a few details on this same subject—I mean the Prison generally —in your letter, and look back to my book, you will find that you have not read it quite correctly. Unless you have an American Edition with a few forged passages in it. Which is exceedingly probable. Having seen my own hand to a letter I never wrote,[†2] and Mr. O'Connell's hand to a letter he never wrote;[†3] and being possessed of some information in reference to the concoction and dispersion of those magnanimous documents by tens of thousands, through America, I can easily compass this likelihood.

The case of the interesting lady who stabbed the gentleman,[†4] is exactly the illustration I should have invented, if I were putting a supposititious case, of one of the many phases in which America differs from other Countries, and does such stupendous and grievous injury to the progress of Free Institutions elsewhere. I mean the readiness of her people to take the Law into their own hands; and their manifest want of confidence in, and want of real respect for, the Institutions which they parade so noisily. In the ordinary course of events in any other civilized country, the Jury in that case must have found the lady guilty—inasmuch as they were upon their oaths, and she did unquestionably stab the gentleman. So they would have found her guilty, and would have recommended her, in their confidence in the Powers that be, to the Mercy of the authorities, with a perfect reliance on their recommendation being carefully, and honorably, and favorably considered. And as to the Constables applauding, they would have appeared in that character for positively the first and last time: and would very likely (and deservedly) have been clapped into prison to boot, for so far forgetting the dignity and decency of a solemn Court of Justice. In America, the course is what you describe—and in the absence of that respect and confidence of which I have just treated, quite naturally so. But not the less dangerously.

Of Mrs. Childe's[†1] appearance as a Comforter at the Bar, I will only say (the same being a question of taste) that I am very glad I am not Mr. Childe.

I have marked this letter Private—not, of course, with any distrust of your delicacy, but because I wish you expressly to understand my dear Madam, that my desire is, NOT to be set right upon any subject of slander or falsehood whatever; as I have resolved not to compromise the respect which I owe to myself by rebutting, refuting, explaining, or denying, any accusation whatever which is brought against me on your side of the Atlantic; the character of such accusations and such unimpeachable Gentlemen as they originate with, being not of that kind which any person claiming the least superiority to a Scavenger, could possibly notice, without a compromise of his degree. You wrote to me first, in the confidence of grief and a full heart;[†2] and for this reason I have written in a spirit of confidence to you. This being the first, as it will be the last time, of my replying to anything like a reproach from any correspondent in America.

I write to you, and no one else. And I beg you (beyond your own house) to consider this letter, as strictly private and confidential, as if it treated of none but private topics.

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards. We are all very well, thank God, and very happy. I hope your daughter[†3] is so, likewise. If I could draw (which I can't), I could make a portrait of her engaging face at this moment: I remember it so well.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sedgwick.

To THOMAS POWELL, 16 APRIL 1844

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Thomas Powell Esquire | 2 Leadenhall Street.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixteenth April 1844.

My Dear Powell.

Lord bless you! Thursday or Friday!!! Why, I composed (though I say it, as shouldn't) the best little party you can imagine; comprehending everybody I had room for, whom I thought Mr. Chapman would like to know.[†1] Let me see. Rogers for Poetry, Sydney Smith[†2] for Orthodoxy, Charles Kemble and Young[†3] for Theatricality, Lord Denman for Benchity, Lord Dudley Stuart[†4] for Polarity, Mr. and Mrs. Milner Gibson[†5] for Anti Corn Law Leaguality, Mrs. Norton[†6] for beauty, and divers others for variety. Lord love you! Why, at this time of the year it couldn't be done again under three weeks. Not to mention the Dwarf—General Tom Thumb[†7]—whom on the word of a Spiritiwal creetur, I had summoned, and have summoned, for the Evening in question. No. We won't come down with the run. We'll have a long notice, and see what can be done with the second wentur. When we doos go in, we plays to win Sir.

Says Shrimp to me (I allude to the humble individual who has the honor to be my brother) "Mr. Powell is coming up one evening".—"Shrimp", said I. "Why evening? We dine at half past 5. Cannot said Powell, with a day's notice (to ensure my not being out) come up to dinner?" I saw that I had touched him; and had a modest confidence in my Message reaching you safely. Whether Shrimp broke down, or Prawn (otherwise Powell) I don't know. But until this point is cleared up, I decline to acknowledge the receipt of [†a]potted chair.[†1] If indeed that be chair in a black bag; which I don't believe.[†a] Faithfully Ever

CD.

To LORD DUDLEY COUTTS STUART,[†2] 16 APRIL 1844

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1970; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 Apr 44.

Saying he and the whole party will be delighted to see him and that I am not acquainted with the other Governesses and believe these are the genuine unadulterated and original G's.

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 APRIL 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Seventeenth April | 1844.

My Dear Mitton. I am engaged to dine tomorrow with Rodwell the Music man] at Brompton. I was coming do[wn ye][†3]sterday Morning to tell you [that I was, detained by my last [chapter] of the next No which I have not yet finished, as it requires great[†4] discretion.[†5]

The No. will be a teazer,[†6] I think.

I am very much and pressingly in want of a hundred pounds until June. Though the time is short, my father's debts, two quarters income tax[†7] &c, coming all at once, drive me, sailing so near the wind by not drawing any profits from C and H, into a most [un]comfortable corner.[†8] Ca[n you oblige] me with this, or devise any [means] of doing so? Send me a line, and say how the land lies in your view, and at what time you will be in the Way on[†1] Friday.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To MRS CHARLES SMITHSON, 18 APRIL 1844*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth April 1844.

My Dear Mrs. Smithson.

I send you the long-promised Carol.[†2] Better now, I hope, than never.

I think it best, on consideration, not to send you the other books we spoke of. You will have enough to occupy your thoughts just now, I do not doubt, without them. And when you come to town, you will be better able to judge of what you wish to know, by going with us (as I hope you will) on Sunday Mornings,[†3] twice, or thrice, than if you read a Library. I cannot reconcile it to myself to influence anybody's mind on such a subject. There would be happier lives and happier Deaths, perhaps, if we read our Saviour's preaching a little more, and let each other alone. If men invest the Deity with their own passions, so much the worse for them. He remains the same; and if there be any Truth in anything about us, and it be not all one vast deceit, he is full of Mercy and Compassion, and looks to what his creatures do, and not to what they think.

I was in hopes our house would have suited you for a twelvemonth; and thought it would be like a kind of Home to you. Since you were here, we have made a pretty bedchamber of the Breakfast Room.

Thompson wrote me, however, a few days since, that there were not bedrooms enough for you;[†4] and that he was coming up house-hunting.[†5] I am on the lookout for him.

I shrewdly suspect there was a Concert at Manchester last night—and that she played there[†6]—and that he went.

Here I put my finger at the side of my nose, and pull up; with love to beauteous Bill,[†7] and my Glorious Godchild whom I have proclaimed in the highways as being in all respects a Brilliant Baby.[†8]

Let us have another to match, and we'll get on happily yet.

Always Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Smithson.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN,[†1] 20 APRIL 1844*

MS John F. Fleming, Inc.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twentieth April 1844

Dear Sir. The lettering is on the other side. I wondered what on earth had become of the plates.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Chapman Esquire

Mrs. Gamp makes tea[†3]
Mr. Moddle is led to the contemplation of his destiny.[†4]

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 20 APRIL 1844*

MS Dr William A. Whittaker.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twentieth April 1844

My Dear Dr. Smith. On Monday Morning at Ten—or a quarter before Ten if that will suit you better—I shall be delighted to see you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To T. J. SERLE, 22 APRIL 1844

MS Mr Peter Brandt. Address: T. J. Serle Esquire | 9 Southampton Row | Russell Square.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Evening April Twenty Second 1844

My Dear Serle.

The Captain of the Britannia has written me, that unless the berth be taken straightway, she can't go by that ship,[†5] as it is filling fast. Will you draw me a cheque for the passage-money (leaving the sum blank, as I don't at this moment know what it is—I will put it in when I find out) & send the same to me forthwith.

In haste Ever Yours

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 APRIL 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 323. Date: 23 April according to Forster.

November blasts! Why it's the warmest, most genial, most intensely bland, delicious, growing, springy, songster-of-the grovy, bursting-forth-of-the-buddy, day as ever was.[†1] At half-past four I shall expect you.[†2] Ever, Moddle.[†3]

To MRS S. C. HALL, 23 APRIL 1844

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third April 1844.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

Many thanks for Chambers's Journal.[†4] Your Governess[†5] is an immense relief to that somewhat cast-iron and utilitarian publication (as congenial to me, generally, as the brown paper packages in which Ironmongers keep Nails); and I have read it with very great pleasure. It is delicately and beautifully done; with a womanly touch that cannot be mistaken.

When I saw you among the Ladies at the Dinner t'other night,[†6] I made a valorous resolve to come out with a reference to this very tale; thinking and hoping it would not displease you. I was very much vexed when I sat down again, to have forgotten it. And they have been laughing at me here, ever since, for swearing I would tell you what I meant to have done. "As if that were of any use!" they say.

Remember me to Mr. Hall and your Good Mother. And believe me always

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. S. C. Hall.

To JAMES THOMSON,[†1] 23 APRIL 1844

Extracts in N, I, 595, and James F. Drake catalogue No. 196 (1928); MS 2 pp.; dated 23 Apr 44.

[†a]I am greatly indebted to you for your kind attention and Mrs. Dickens begs me to present her compliments and thanks.[†a] In the execution of a peculiar faculty for which I am distinguished in an eminent degree, I quite forgot when we spoke about those tickets, that Mrs. Dickens had invited some friends at home for the very day to which they refer. In the modesty of my mind, I should not have mentioned this circumstance, but for her special desire that you should know why she is unable to avail herself of your kindness.

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 25 APRIL 1844

MS Professor Robert D. Horn. Address (envelope, MS Myers & Co.): Thomas Chapman Esquire | 2 Leadenhall Street.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Twenty Fifth April | 1844

My Dear Sir. Lord Lansdowne[†2] has been out of town; and I only received the enclosed last night. I have written to Doctor Smith, and made him acquainted with its contents.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?25 APRIL 1844]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 25 APRIL 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth April 1844.

My Dear Mitton.

Bradbury and Evans[†1] are dead[†2] and decided on my paying C and H's balance before I go, and settling the whole question of the Stock on hand of the books in which I have an interest: considering it would be leaving a power in their hands which under circumstances of separation would be full of danger and embarrassment otherwise. I think this is right; especially as C and H have never taken the slightest steps towards informing me of the state of Pickwick.

I have therefore written to them for the necessary statements, and informed them that I wish to pay them before I go, if I can. They have replied that the Statements shall be made out with all despatch.

It will now be necessary for me to discuss with Bradbury and Evans, the terms on which we are to proceed; and in doing this, I must of course give them an Interest in throwing every possible kind of briskness and alacrity into the business working of books old, and books new.

Before I enter on this, I want to look over the papers I have, in connexion with C and H, and perfectly understand the different Agreements. Will you send me up all the documents connected with my Books, that are now in your possession?

Thompson was here yesterday, and is in treaty for another house[†3] (£250 for the half year, if I remember right) which will be settled today.

Faithfully Ever

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire
Any news of the "Gent" upstairs??[†4]

To CHARLES WATSON,[†5] 25 APRIL 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth April 1844.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter of the Twenty Third Instant.

I am perfectly aware that there are several passages in my books which, with very little alteration—sometimes with none at all—will fall into blank verse,[†6] if divided off into Lines. It is not an affectation in me, nor have I the least desire to write them in that metre; but I run into it, involuntarily and unconsciously, when I am very much in earnest. I even do so, in speaking.

I am not prepared to say that this may not be a defect in prose composition; but I attach less importance to it than I do to earnestness. And considering that it is a very melodious and agreeable march of words, usually; and may be perfectly plain and free; I cannot agree with you that it is likely to be considered by discreet readers as turgid or bombastic, unless the sentiments expressed in it, be of that character. Then indeed it matters very little how they are attired, as they cannot fail to be disagreeable in any garb.

Upon the whole I am inclined to think that if I had altered the passages which give you offence, you would not have liked my books so well as you are kind enough to say you do; and would not have given me that credit for being in earnest which has procured for me the pleasure of receiving your good-humoured and agreeable letter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Watson Esquire

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 26 APRIL 1844

Mention in S. V. Henkels catalogue No. 1249 (1920); MS 4 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Friday, twenty-sixth April, 1844.[†1]

Referring to the Sanatorium dinner: making suggestions as to whom to invite and the manner of holding the same; very emphatic in declaring ladies should be invited.[†2]

To LUDWIG DÖBLER,[†3] 26 APRIL 1844

Text from N, I, 596.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park | Twenty-sixth April 1844

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to M. Döbler, and very much regrets that being already engaged for tomorrow, he cannot avail himself of the box which M. Döbler has so kindly sent him through Mr. Schloss.[†4] But if M. Döbler should have another opportunity of conferring a similar favor on Mr. Dickens, it will give Mr. D. great pleasure to accept it.

Mr. Dickens begs to add, that he had the pleasure of seeing M. Döbler at the Saint James's Theatre on the last occasion[†1] of M. Döbler's being in London; and that he was much astonished and delighted by his magical performances.

To MRS TALFOURD,[†2] 27 APRIL 1844

Text from N, I, 596.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-Seventh April 1844

My Dear Mrs. Talfourd,

I will not fail to give my best attention to the subject of the Home Mission,[†3] and its report. And if its Christian aid be extended to all classes of Believers, and its Christian instruction be such as all poor creatures may receive, I will drop my mite into its treasury—not when I grow rich, like the bells of Shoreditch[†4] (for that will never be), but when I have recovered my last half-dozen subscriptions, which have been rather quick—even for subscriptions—on each other's heels.[†5]

Poor Fanny Chandler![†6] God knows she is better where she is! Pray tell me, when I next see you, how her good nurse is, and where.

Isms! Oh Heaven for a world without an ism. The wickedness of us moles to each other in our isms is enough to have brought a comet on the head of this, a thousand years ago.

Always My Dear Mrs. Talfourd | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS WILLIAMS & CLAPHAM,[†7] 27 APRIL 1844*

MS Messrs B. F. Stevens & Brown.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh April 1844.

Mr Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Messrs. Williams and Clapham, and hopes the latter end of next Month (May) may suit their convenience for the settlement of their account. But if they should have any pressing occasion for the money before that time, and will let Mr. Dickens know, he will not fail to do what they require.

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART,[†1] 29 APRIL 1844

MS Mr Justin Turner.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Ninth April 1844

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for Mr. Piper's[†2] letter. Will you kindly charge yourself with the enclosed for him? Also with the other enclosed for Mrs. Tagart?[†3]

Dr. Dewey[†4] sent me his pamphlet,[†5] which, in the exercise of a stern resolve, I immediately put in the fire, without glancing at, beyond the title page. When I determined to tell the Truth about America, I determined also that I would not, from that time, read any American Paper, Pamphlet, Book, or Review, in which I had reason to suppose (from the very fact of its being sent to me) there might be the least allusion to myself.

I do not mean to say that it requires a Roman fortitude to exercise this Self-Denial. But I have beaten, by these means, every free and independent Citizen who has written to annoy me (judging from the number of packets I return to the Post Office unopened, I should think their name is Legion); and I do not think I am less wise or less honest, and I know I am more good-tempered, in consequence.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Edward Tagart.

To THE REV. H. H. PIPER, [?29 APRIL 1844]

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1937; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1844—probably the enclosure referred to in last.

Thanking him for a generous allusion to him in a sermon.[†6]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 30 APRIL 1844

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth April 1844.

My Dear Stanfield

The Sanatorium, or Sick House for Students, Governesses, Clerks, Young Artists, and so forth, who are above Hospitals, and not rich enough to be well attended in illness in their own Lodgings (you know its objects) is going to have a Dinner at the London Tavern on Tuesday the Fifth[†1] of June.

The Committee are very anxious to have you for a Steward, as one of the heads of a large class; and I have told them that I have no doubt you will act. There is no Stewards' Fee, or Collection, whatever.[†2]

They are particularly anxious also, to have Mr. Etty[†3] and Edwin Landseer.[†4] As you see them daily at the Academy, will you ask them, or shew them this note. Sir Martin[†5] became one of the Committee some few years ago, at my solicitation, as recommending young Artists, struggling alone in London, to the better knowledge of this Establishment.

The dinner is to comprize the new feature of Ladies dining at the tables with the Gentlemen—not looking down upon them from the Gallery.[†6] I hope in your reply you will not only book yourself, but Mrs. Stanfield[†7] and Mary.[†8] It will be very brilliant and cheerful, I hope. Dick in the cheer. Gentlemens'[†9] dinner-tickets a guinea as usual. Ladies' Twelve Shillings.

I think this is all I have to say, except (which is nonsensical and needless) that I am always affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquires

To J. ASHTON YATES, 30 APRIL 1844*

MS Mrs Pauline Dower.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth April 1844.

My Dear Sir

They may book you as a Sanatorium Steward. May they not? There is no Stewards' Fee whatever.

Tuesday the fifth of June is the day.

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Ashton Yates Esquire

May

To T. J. SERLE, 1 MAY 1844*

MS Dr F. H. Fuller.

My Dear Serle. I think this will be the best form of cheque. If you will send it to me, I will arrange the matter with Coutts's. Miss Elton will have, I suppose to take a Letter of Credit.

Faithfully Ever
CD

1st May 1844.

Pay to your Correspondent at Halifax Nova Scotia, payable to the drafts of Miss Rosa Elton

To CHARLES EVANS,[†1] 2 MAY 1844*

MS Liverpool Public Libraries.

Devonshire Terrace | Second May 1844

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for so promptly forwarding the letter addressed, by an unknown correspondent, to me at Birmingham. What on Earth, or above it, or under it, put it into his head to direct his communication there I cannot in the faintest degree imagine.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles. M. Evans Esquire

To T. J. SERLE, 2 MAY 1844

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Second May 1844

My Dear Serle

As Rosa will most probably have to take a letter of credit, I have thought it best to make a round Sum, and fill up the cheque for five and twenty pounds. May some Nova-Scotian bedlamite fall in love with her, and marry her!

The passage cheque was £39..18..0. She will have to give the Steward a Guinea besides, and the Steward*ess* summut for herself.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD

T. J. Serle Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 3 MAY 1844*

MS Columbia University Libraries.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third May 1844

My Dear Mitton. I am just reminded that Burnett dines here today. Come and dine with us at half past 5 exactly. Will you? Kate is ill—abed—but she would have been delighted to see you.

I have a most hideous cold—and am obliged to dine with the Prince and the Academicians[†1] tomorrow, nevertheless.

Faithfully Yours always

CD

To JOHN WALKER, [3 MAY 1844]

Mention in The Times, 23 May 44. Date: answering a letter from Walker of 3 May: see To Forster, ?22 May.

Saying that he could not aid the writer further.

To WILLIAM SANDYS,[†2] 5 MAY 1844

Extract in Maggs's catalogue No. 104 (1896).

Very many thanks for the accompanying dialogues.[†3]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 5 MAY 1844

Text in N, I, 598, checked from MS Sotheby's, Dec 1964.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Fifth May 1844.

My Dear Talfourd.

Very many thanks for the newspaper,[†4] and your friendliest of eloquent memories.

I have dropped—dropped!—the action and the Chancery Suit[†1] against the Bankrupt Pirates. We have had communication with the assignees, and found their case quite desperate. The four booksellers have come in and compounded. So that I lose nothing by them. By Lee and Haddock[†2] (the vagabonds) I do lose, of course, all my expences, costs and charges in those suits.[†3] But it is something to know the worst of it and to be rid of Knight Bruce, whom I should call (if he were not a friend of yours) rather a pragmatical donkey—judicially speaking.

I think it is high time we invested the Elton money. When would it suit you best, to bear me company to Coutts's, and settle it in five minutes with Mr. Marjoribanks?

Always Faithfully Yours | My Dear Talfourd
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY and JAMES EDWARDS,[†4] 6 MAY 1844

Extract in Anderson Auction Co. catalogue No. 1098 (1914); MS 2 pp.; dated London, 6 May 44.

I do not quite understand from your letter what it is that you want of me. If it is a contribution to your little storehouse[†5] that, I regret to say I cannot give; as my acquiescence in one such request would involve me in too many sources of similar engagements to be contemplated for a moment.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT,[†6] 6 MAY 1844

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth May 1844 | Monday Evening

My Dear Sir

I have delayed acknowledging the courtesy of the Committee, not because I was in the least degree insensible to it, but because I deemed it probable that I might be leaving town (to write peacefully), before the Dinner of the Literary Fund;[†1] and in case I should not do so I wished to accept the Invitation with which I have been honored. But although I am not going away just now, and am not therefore prevented from attending by that course, I regret that I am prevented by a no less potent one; and that is, a most intolerable cold or taste of influenza, which keeps me sneezing and wheezing from morning until night, and would render the sharpening of a saw an infinitely more agreeable sound to the Literary Fund Diners than any observations from me.

Pray assure the Committee of my obligation to them, and believe me

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To JOHN OVERS, 6 MAY 1844*

MS Mrs Jessie Reed. Address: Mr. Overs | 8 John's Place | Camberwell New Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth May 1844

Dear Mr. Overs.

Don't on any account come out, unless you are in a proper condition to do so; but write to me when you have any news.[†2] I did not intend to imply in my note that you ought to have come, or were in any way bound to do so, but that I had, without any particular reason, expected you.[†3]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]
Mr. Overs.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, [MAY 1844]

Text from W. Blanchard Jerrold, The Life and Remains of Douglas Jerrold, 1859, pp. 217-18. Date: soon after the publication of The Story of a Feather on 4 May.

I am truly proud of your remembrance, and have put the 'Story of a Feather'[†4] on a shelf (not an obscure one) where some other feathers are, which it shall help to show mankind which way the wind blows, long after we know where the wind comes from. I am quite delighted to find that you have touched the latter part again, and touched it with such a delicate and tender hand.[†5] It is a wise and beautiful book. I am sure I may venture to say so to you, for nobody consulted it more regularly and earnestly than I did, as it came out in Punch.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 8 MAY 1844

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Evening Eighth May 1844.

My Dear Sirs.

I will begin with a statement of the amount in which I must desire to become indebted to you. The balance payable to C and H will be £1,500. The sum I shall require for my anticipated expenses will be £1,500. I owe you already £500;[†1] and against this entire sum of £3,500, I propose to place to your credit, when the account for the subscription to the completed Chuzzlewit is rendered, £500. I apprehend there is little doubt of its realizing that much.[†2]

But in addition to this sum of £3,000 which will then be left, I may require, for anything I know, in the spring of next year, or about that time, £500 more. I do not know that this will be so; but I think it right to mention it.[†3]

Now, for the repayment of these advances, we must look, of course, to the following heads.

First. The New Carol,[†4] and the new next Christmas issue of the old one.

Secondly. The Magazine or Journal, and the mutual relations we may agree upon, respecting it. I would suggest that it should be commenced within six months, certainly, after the expiration of my year's retirement.[†5] There is also the question of other new books by me.

Thirdly. The best working of the copyrights in existence.[†6]

Oliver Twist, which has not yet been published in a single volume or a cheap form, is absolutely mine; free from any conditions whatever. The stock on hand is 27 copies in cloth—583 in quires.[†7]

The Christmas Carol is also mine, unconditionally. The Stock on hand is 227 copies in cloth—337 in quires.

My interest in Pickwick is at present one third of the copyright. They cannot alter the form or price without my consent. If I wish to sell my third, I must offer to them. If they wish to sell their shares or any part of them, they must offer to me. If we disagree about the price in either case, two arbitrators are to be called in; one by them and one by me. If they disagree, they elect an umpire who decides. I may now, if I please, buy a third of the Stock on hand, but this would not give me the power of appointing any other publishers, as long as C and H hold their two thirds. I have not yet received their account of the stock (which is preparing), but as they were moving me not long ago towards a new issue of this book, I suppose it is not very large.

Nickleby. In the November of this year, the whole copyright of Nickleby becomes mine, but I cannot sell it without the offer to C and H as before. There is, however, no clause in the agreement, confirming them as the perpetual publishers. In November I may buy the Stock at Cost Price; and until November I have no right to ask what it is.

Humphrey's Clock, or, in other words, The Old Curiosity Shop, and Barnaby Rudge. In these books, I have half the copyright. The same provisions as to sale, and offers are in the agreement as in the others. I cannot exactly give you the Stock, but you can calculate it easily. It is 208,753 numbers. This of course has to be divided by the number of numbers in the two stories. The miscellaneous papers were reserved for wasting; and of them, there are on hand 99,250. There is no distinct clause as to their being always the Publishers, but I apprehend the stipulation that they shall not alter the form or price without my consent, implies that.

American Notes. I have three fourths of this book. There is no agreement whatever, respecting it. I wrote them a letter, giving them their share.[†1] The Stock is, 61 copies in cloth—168 in quires.

Chuzzlewit. I have three fourths of the profits of this book (Subscription included) up to the last no., and for six months afterwards. At Christmas in this year, C and H on payment to me of a fourth of the cost price of the stock then on hand, come into half the copyright. This agreement contains the same stipulations as to disposal of the interest on either side. Same as Humphrey's Clock, with respect to their publishing.

The Sketches they bought of Macrone, with his stock, for £2,250; and hold the copyright in trust for five years from March 1840, to assign half of it to me, if it have paid the advance and expences on it at that time, or before. If it have not paid that money, and I still wish to buy, I get half the copyright and stock, if I choose to pay half the balance. All the same clauses as to offers of sale, &c.

You will see at once that the only immediately available books, apart from C and H, are the Oliver Twist, and the American Notes. And what I particularly wish you to consider is, whether you think it would be more advisable to publish each of them with a new publisher, in a cheap form (in which neither has appeared) or to break ground with Chapman and Hall, for a general serial Edition of all the books in Volumes, under your auspices. This Edition I should propose to embrace new prefaces, and here and there a note, by me; and in short anything I could think of, to increase its interest.

The money I should want, upon the first of June,[†1] or as soon afterwards as may suit your convenience. When you have considered these various heads, and got them into some shape in your minds, I shall hold myself ready for any appointment you may make with Mr. Forster.

I have confined myself entirely to the business details of the matter; not wishing to give you the trouble of having to separate them from a crowd of remarks.

My Dear Sirs | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To THOMAS [POWELL], 9 MAY 1844

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue, Jan 1947; MS 1 p.; dated 9 May 44. Address: "Thomas Ponele" in catalogue.

About the Sanatorium dinner.[†2] I do not like to ask men to act as stewards at a dinner over which I preside, otherwise I could have had no possible objection to the bagging of Talfourd and Richard Monckton [Milnes].

To JOHN OVERS, 10 MAY 1844

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1844 | Friday

My Dear Mr. Overs. I have thought it best, for divers reasons, not to put any publisher's name in the letter; but I have slightly altered it, as you will see. Try Newby.[†3] If he won't, try Mortimer. If he won't, let me know.

Faithfully Yours always

CD

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 13 MAY 1844†

MS Mrs R. E. Yeats-Brown. Address: Angus Fletcher Esq. | Poste Restante | Genoa.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirteenth May 1844

My dear Fletcher.

Ten thousand thanks. Take the illustrious abiding place of the illustrious man for three Months[†4] (I do not like to bind myself to a place I have not seen and tried, for longer): stipulating in the agreement that if I, at the expiration of that time continue it for 12 months, I shall pay so and so. Of course you will get it as cheap as you can. But I do not wish to bind the butcher very tight for the three months, so that what I overpay, as it were, in that term, is afterwards allowed me if I hold it for twelve. You understand, bright Dugald?[†1]

[†a]Likewise let the butcher make a water closet. If I should leave at the end of the three months, I will pay for it. If I hold the house for 12 months, he shall pay for it. If you employ a—(what's a lawyer in Italian? Solicito I suppose?) hold me your debtor, like a good Canova, 'till I come.[†a]

Hadn't your bedroom better be on the Ground floor, lest those enormous blocks of marble you will work upon, should fall through, and damage the family? I feel myself on the roof with a telescope at my Eye. You stand beside me with a blouse and chisel. But little of me is visible behind my moustache, but that is of a swarthy and Bandit hue. I look towards my Native Land, and scowl. I also drink—a little. Do I smoke at all?

A duplicate of this, has gone to the other address.[†2] You are a nice man to hope I am working at Italian, when I am working my very head off at Martin Chuzzlewit! [†b]How is Clara?[†b†3]

Best regards and many thanks from Kate. [†c]Mrs. Wilson's[†4] letter has not yet arrived. I will write again soon. Start on the 1st. of July, please God.[†c]

Ever faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

To MACVEY NAPIER, 13 MAY 1844

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirteenth May 1844.

My Dear Sir.

I have altered all my plans, (or I should rather say so unexpectedly carried out very old plans) since our compact was made, that I must throw myself upon your merciful consideration, even with reference to next October. I am going abroad on the first of next July—to Italy—where I shall remain some time —six or eight months, I dare say. Do anything but finish Chuzzlewit before I go, I cannot. And what I may do there, it is impossible for me to say, until I know by experience what manner of life I lead in sunny places, and whether I am stupendously idle, or moderately active.

I will report to you from some Vineyard, in August or thereabouts. But do not count upon a John Doe[†5] so far out of your bailiwick. It is likely, I think, that I might hit upon something fresh (in your way) under such new circumstances; and if I do, I shall be delighted to let you have it, to be used at your convenience.

I have just heard from Lord Jeffrey, whom I am going to see tomorrow. It gives me great concern to learn from him that he has been very ill again:[†1] and has a consultation of Doctors just now, at his Hotel. He talks of returning to Scotland on Wednesday, if they will allow him.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier.

To H. P. SMITH, 13 MAY 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirteenth May 1844

My Dear Smith

Quite Papist[†2] enough, but by no means man of leisure enough. Dinners,[†3] meetings, and the like, are already the Death of me—nearly. Add a Pope festival to the rest, and my Eagle Policies will fall in, prematurely.

Chapman and Hall have expressed a desire to see the Volcanic MS, and have written me to that effect. I have duly apprized the Milanese[†4] thereof. I clearly foresee that he will smash some bookseller by assault and battery; and as Hall is small, perhaps he may answer his purpose better than another.

Cordial regards | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To T. E. WELLER, 13 MAY 1844

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, pp. 45-9.

Private

Devonshire Terrace, Monday, Thirteenth May, 1844

My dear Sir,

It will afford me real pleasure and gratification to see your family in London, and to promote your views in reference to Miss Weller (in whom, I need not say, I have the truest and most lively interest) to the utmost of my power. That power is not, I fear, as great as you suppose. It certainly is not with reference to the Press; from which the circumstances of my position keep me very much aloof. But, as I told you, the Chronicle is the most looked to, as scientifically musical in that department of its criticism; which is written by Mrs. Dickens's father, to whom I shall be delighted to present Miss Weller, immediately on her arrival. To Moscheles[†1] and some of the best musical Professors we can also make her known (if she is not already so) without a moment's loss of time. And everything, or I should rather say anything, that the unreserved expression of my personal regard for, and warmest interest in, Miss Weller, can effect, shall be effected vigorously. Rely on that!

I presume you know that you will be very late in the season,[†2] and that the concerts are all made up. There is a concert and Ball to come off, early in June, for the benefit of the Poles.[†3] These festivals are usually attended by a great array of fashionable people, and by the opera singers. Mrs. Dickens was suggesting to me, yesterday, that it might be a very good place for Miss Weller's first appearance; and, in case you should think so, I would immediately speak to Lord Dudley Stuart who manages the whole affair, and is a friend of mine. And I have no doubt that he would gladly do anything I might suggest to him. It would be difficult to decide upon the subject without your being in town, but I will open it at a venture. Mrs. Dickens will also see her father, and ascertain whether he can suggest any other opening which it would be desirable to seize. I would strongly impress upon you that every day you lose at this time of the year (if you be bent on bringing Miss Weller out) is a very serious loss indeed.

In reference to the Press (where I think you are a little mistaken) take my word that the quieter you keep in London on that score the better. The provincial criticisms on Miss Weller are not so remarkable for their good-taste that they are likely to do any good here.[†4] Indeed I am sure their injudicious obtrusion would do her serious dis-service, and prejudice her very much. I do not scruple to mention this to you, because I deem it very natural that you should be disposed to sound those provincial trumpets lustily. But let them be dumb.[†5] After Mrs. Dickens's father has heard Miss Weller play, she can be very easily heralded in print,[†6] with a general reference to her previous reputation, and to the times and places of its acquisition.

One can only judge of these things by their personal effect. Shall I candidly tell you that when you first wrote[†1] to me sending me some provincial notices of Miss Weller, I instantly got it into my head that she needed every kind of puff? You cannot be too careful on this head. You may catch tittlebats by spreading such nets, but the large fish won't come near them.

I fear that one charge of your double-barrelled gun will hang fire; and that the difficulties in Miss Weller's way are stupendous. Faint heart never won anything, and the trial is worth making, but the number of Professors of her art and mystery in London,[†2] and the immense time it takes to establish a connexion, dishearten me, I confess to you.

Let me know at your convenience on what morning you and Mrs. Weller will call here with Miss Weller, in order that Mrs. Dickens may lose no time in knowing her, as well and lovingly as I desire her to, and as I am sure she will. Make my best regards at home and believe me faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. We are going abroad in the first week in July.

To JOHN FORSTER, [MAY 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iii, 325. Date: In Forster's account of CD's preparations for departure, the carriage precedes the courier (see To Roche, 15 May) and the tenant (see To Landseer, 27 May).

It occurred to him that he might perhaps get for little money some good old shabby devil of a coach—one of those vast phantoms that hide themselves in a corner of the Pantechnicon[†3] and exactly such a one he found there; sitting himself inside it, a perfect Sentimental Traveller, while the managing man told him its history. As for comfort—let me see—it is about the size of your library; with night-lamps and day-lamps and pockets and imperials[†4] and leathern cellars, and the most extra-ordinary contrivances.[†5] Joking apart, it is a wonderful machine. And when you see it (if you do see it) you will roar at it first, and will then proclaim it to be "perfectly brilliant, my dear fellow."

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 14 MAY 1844

Mention in next.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 15 MAY 1844*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth May 1844.

My Dear Sirs.

The Stock on hand of the Christmas Carol, in which, as well as in the copyright of that book, you have one fourth share,[†1] agreeably to my letter of yesterday, is, I find by Chapman and Hall's account,

337 copies in quires

227 in cloth: on hand, and with agents. Their account is dated 30th. April last; and from that time your interest dates.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To D. M. CORKINDALE,[†2] 15 MAY 1844

Extract in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 173; MS 1 p.; dated London, 15 May 44.

I am much beholden to yourself and to those other gentlemen whose sentiments you represent, for the flattering request preferred in it. But I do not desire to offer myself as a candidate for the honor of sitting in Parliament, at this time.[†3]

To LOUIS ROCHE,[†4] 15 MAY 1844

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Fifteenth May 1844

Louis Roche.

If you will call upon the gentleman with whom you travelled last; or, if he should not be in town, upon the other gentleman whom you mentioned to me as being able to speak to your character; and will ask him when it will be most convenient for me to call upon him, and will let me know, I shall be happy to make the needful enquiries. In case they are quite satisfactory, I shall be glad to engage you, if we can agree upon terms.

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I send you one of my cards, that you may arrange with your old employer for my calling on him.

To GEORGE B. WEBB,[†1] 15 MAY 1844

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 623; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 15 May 44.

I am much obliged to you for sending me the enclosed . . . Any sense I might otherwise have of the oddity of the letter is quenched in my pity for the poor "chance child" who wrote it. He certainly is not the son mentioned in Grimaldi's Life, for he is described as dying under very terrible circumstances.†2 Nor should I think it likely that his name is, of right, Grimaldi at all. For it is the custom in such unhappy cases to be poetic and fanciful in the choice of names; and if the Beadle is a man of fertile imagination to leave it pretty much to him.†3 Perhaps the Beadle in your Correspondent's case was fond of Pantomimes.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 18 MAY 1844*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth May 1844 | Saturday

My Dear Fred. I wish you would see this man,†4 today, or this evening. You will observe he has moved.

If he be really in the distress he states, I shod. be sorry to refuse him another Sovereign. If you have one in your pocket give it him (being thoroughly satisfied); if not, I will send it to him after I have spoken with you at breakfast tomorrow.

But I have some doubts of him. Do not be taken in. If I could establish it for a fact that he has imposed upon me, I would have him up to Queen Square†5 forthwith.

I hope you are not going behindhand in money matters. Besides my ten pounds, I am told there are five pounds due upon the Lewisham account.†6

Affectionately Always

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 MAY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 326. Date: CD almost certainly sent Forster his account of the Walker case on the day of the hearing, 22 May.

When the Mendicity officers†7 themselves told me the man was in distress, I desired them to suppress what they knew about him, and slipped out of the bundle (in the police office) his first letter, which was the greatest lie of all.†1 For he looked wretched, and his wife had been waiting about the street to see me, all the morning. It was an exceedingly bad case however, and the imposition, all through, very great indeed. Insomuch that I could not say anything in his favour, even when I saw him. Yet I was not sorry that the creature found the loophole for escape.†2 The officers had taken him illegally without any warrant; and really they messed it all through, quite facetiously.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 22 MAY 1844

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May 1844

My Dear Thompson

I will bring that treasure[†3] with me.

I have been at the Police Office. The man really was in distress tho' he had lied damnably—The Mendicity people had taken him illegally —and he got off. Thank God!

Faithfully Ever

CD.

P.S. If Hogarth isn't ecstatic,[†4] I shall go into fits.

To LEIGH HUNT,[†1] 24 MAY 1844

MS Iowa University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth May 1844.

My Dear Hunt.

Very many thanks for your companionable, and welcome, and valued book.[†2] I can cordially send back to you, your own words in the Inscription.

Talfourd punctually told me the news[†3] you write of. No one who knows and cherishes you, can be better pleased by it than I am.

Always My Dear Hunt | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To EDWIN LANDSEER, 27 MAY 1844

Text from MDGH, I, 103.

Athenæum, Monday Morning, May 27th, 1844.

My dear Landseer,

I have let my house with such delicious promptitude, or, as the Americans would say, "with sich everlass'in slickness and al-mity sprydom," that we turn out to-night! in favour of a widow lady, who keeps it all the time we are away![†4]

Wherefore if you, looking up into the sky this evening between five and six (as possibly you may be, in search of the spring), should see a speck in the air—a mere dot—which, growing larger and larger by degrees, appears in course of time to be an eagle (chain and all) in a light cart, accompanied by a raven of uncommon sagacity, curse that good-nature which prompted you to say it—that you would give them house-room.[†5] And do it for the love of

Boz.

P.S.—The writer hereof may be heerd on by personal enquiry at No. 9, Osnaburgh Terrace,[†6] New Road.

To BENJAMIN LUMLEY,[†1] 27 MAY 1844*

MS Mrs Violet Martham Jones.

Athenæum | Twenty Seventh May 1844 | Monday Morning

Dear Sir

I will not apologize for troubling you with this note; hoping that when you have read it, you may consider that unnecessary.

I have a great interest in a young Lady from Liverpool and Manchester who has just come to London, partly at my instance; and not on account of her name (which is Weller) but because she is eighteen—very handsome—accomplished in many ways—and (this is the point) a brilliant and extraordinary Piano Forte player. Mr. Hogarth has heard her; and Count D'Orsay, and Mr. Ayrton,[†2] came to my house yesterday for that purpose. The latter is decidedly of opinion that she will be a great hit, and will take the town by storm. He considers her equal to Thalberg.[†3]

Coming so late in the Musical Season, it became a question with us how she could be brought out, to reasonable advantage, before it draws to a close. Count D'Orsay suggested—and begged me to say as much to you—that as you had Hoffenbach,[†4] and some French Singer whose name I forget,[†5] to whom you desired to afford an opportunity; it might suit your views to have a Musical Act one Opera night, including those Professors and this young lady—of whom he will not fail to report beforehand as she deserves, to the best-known among the audience. Mr. Ayrton considering this a good idea, and one which might not be unacceptable to you, I engaged to write to you this morning. Hence this note.[†6]

I do not know that I can add anything to this plain statement of the case, unless I say that I shall be delighted to give you an opportunity of hearing Miss Weller, if you will allow me: and that it would be an unspeakable pleasure to me, if I could be instrumental, through your means, in making her known.

I am going abroad in July, and have already let my own house, from which I remove today. But I encamp this evening, and henceforth until I leave England, at No. 9 Osnaburgh Terrace New Road, where it will be a great satisfaction to me to receive your answer, at your convenience.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

B. Lumley Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?JANUARY-27 MAY 1844]

Extract in S. V. Henkels catalogue No. 1328 (1923); dated Devonshire Terrace, 5 June 44— impossible, as CD left Devonshire Terrace 27 May (see next).

I would to Heaven your letter were not one of many scores of scores, that I might give you a better proof of my sympathy with your distresses than I now enclose.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 MAY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 326-7. Date: 28 May according to Forster. From 9 Osnaburgh Terrace.

Advise, advise, advise with a distracted man. Investigation below stairs renders it, as my father would say, 'manifest to any person of ordinary intelligence, if the term may be considered allowable,' that the Saturday's dinner cannot come off here with safety. It would be a toss-up, and might come down heads, but it would put us into an agony with that kind of people. . . . Now, I feel a difficulty in dropping it altogether, and really fear that this might have an indefinably suspicious and odd appearance. Then said I at breakfast this morning, I'll send down to the Clarendon.†1 Then says Kate, have it at Richmond. Then I say, that might be inconvenient to the people. Then she says, how could it be if we dine late enough? Then I am very much offended without exactly knowing why; and come up here, in a state of hopeless mystification. . . . What do you think? Ellis†2 would be quite as dear as anybody else; and unless the weather changes, the place is objectionable. I must make up my mind to do one thing or other, for we shall meet Lord Denman at dinner to-day. Could it be dropped decently? That, I think very doubtful. Could it be done for a couple of guineas apiece at the Clarendon? . . . In a matter of more importance I could make up my mind. But in a matter of this kind I bother and bewilder myself, and come to no conclusion whatever. Advise! Advise!†3 . . . List of the invited. There's Lord Normanby. And there's Lord Denman. There's Easthope, wife, and sister. There's Sydney Smith.†4 There's you and Mac. There's Babbage. There's a Lady Osborne and her daughter. There's Southwood Smith. And there's Quin. And there are Thomas Chapman and his wife. So many of these people have never dined with us, that the fix is particularly tight. Advise! Advise!

To CHARLES BABBAGE,†1 28 MAY 1844†

MS British Museum.

9, Osnaburgh Terrace, New Road | Twenty Eighth May 1844

My Dear Sir.

I regret to say that we are placed in the preposterous situation of being obliged to postpone our little dinner party on Saturday, by reason of having no house to dine in. We have not been burnt out; but a desirable widow (as a tenant, I mean) proposed, only last Saturday, to take our own house for the whole term of our intended absence abroad—on condition that she had possession of it today. We fled, and were driven into this place, which has no convenience for the production of any other Banquet than a cold collation of Plate and Linen—the only comforts we have not left behind us.

My consolation lies in knowing what sort of dinner you would have had if you had come here; and in looking forward to claiming the fulfilment of your kind promise when we are again at home. †aI cannot tell you how much obliged both Mrs. Dickens and I feel to you, for your very friendly interest in procuring the enclosed information for us. It is an unspeakable encouragement and relief (I had taken precisely the course which your son suggests);†2 and I assure you that we are truly indebted to you.†a

Always Believe Me | My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Babbage Esquire

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 28 MAY 1844*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | 38 Finsbury Square.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace, New Road | Twenty Eighth May 1844

My Dear Dr. Smith

I regret to say that we are placed in the preposterous situation of being obliged to postpone our little dinner party on Saturday, by reason of having no house to dine in. A most desirable Widow (as a tenant, I mean) proposed, only last Saturday, to take our own house for the whole term of our intended absence abroad—on condition that she had possession of it today. We fled, and were driven into this place, which has no convenience for the production of any other banquet than a cold collation of Plate and Linen—the only comforts we have not left behind us.

I pledge myself to try and be the better man at the Sanatorium Dinner, and to make you as happy and contented as I can.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 30 MAY 1844*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace, New Road
(for I have let my own house for the term of my absence)
Thirtieth May 1844

My Dear Milnes

I want for a Maniac from the Agricultural Districts,[†1] two Commons Gallery Orders for tomorrow night. Have you parted with yours? And if you have, will you kindly undertake to ask any mutual friend whom you may see in the house tonight, for his?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

over

R. M. Milnes Esquire
I will send to you at 12 tomorrow.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 31 MAY 1844*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace | Thirty First May 1844.

My Dear Milnes.

Any day after the nineteenth, I shall be delighted to breakfast with you.[†2] But for one of your days (next Wednesday) I was obliged to refuse Sydney Smith yesterday. For I am finishing Chuzzlewit—at such times I work slowly—and the break up of a morning would ruin me.

Many thanks for the orders. Much good may they do the unhappy person who is going to use them!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire P.S. I am not going to live (or die, I hope) at Pisa. My head quarters are at Albaro—close to Genoa.

To THOMAS MITTON, 31 MAY 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Osnaburgh Terrace | Thirty First May 1844.

My Dear Mitton

If Jackson[†3] seeks to influence me, falsely, against you, he is a fool. And if he be only a fool, I care very little about him.

The number of years during which I have kept the advice I felt it strongly and imperatively necessary to give you this morning, to myself, is a sufficient demonstration of two things. Firstly, that any words but words of kindness between such old friends as you and me, occasion me unaffected pain.

Secondly that I had such strong reliance on you as to believe from day to day that you would see, without my shewing, what you have not seen yet.

If you know anything in which my heart has changed for the colder or the worse with the change in my fortunes, I do not. I could say that with perfect truth, or belief of perfect truth, if I were dying. And I do not think that anyone who knows me as I really am, would quarrel with me for doing so, or say I wanted cause.

I will not dash the spirit which animates me in writing to you, or which animated you in writing to me the manly letter which you left upon my desk today;[†1] by making any remark in reference to this Insurance Policy—save one. It is not the Policy[†2] in reference to which some passages passed between us a year or two ago,[†3] that did endanger (for the only time) the old feeling between us. You recollect that I was to hold a policy on your life[†4] for the amount of my liability under Smithson's bond.[†5] The continuance of it, and the punctual payment of the premiums, is a matter of such common honor, that I will not do you the injustice of hinting at it. I know it is enough for me to say that I want that understanding acted on, and wish to have the policy in my own charge.

Faithfully Yours as always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, [LATE MAY 1844]

Text from W. Blanchard Jerrold, A Day with CD, 1871, p. 6. Date: after CD had taken the villa at Albaro (To Fletcher, 13 May), and before 3 June when he knew Jerrold would not be present at the Sanatorium dinner.

Come and see me in Italy. Let us smoke a pipe among the vines. I have taken a little house surrounded by them, and no man in the world should be more welcome to it than you.

Is your modesty really a confirmed habit, or could you prevail upon yourself, if you are moderately well, to let me call you up for a word or two at the Sanatorium dinner?[†1] There are some men—excellent men—connected with that institution who would take the very strongest interest in your doing so, and do advise me one of these days, that if I can do it well and unaffectedly, I may.

June

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 3 JUNE 1844

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Osnaburgh Terrace | Monday Third June 1844

My Dear Sir

I send you the name[†2] of my Printers' Party. I observe that two among them (the first two) are men of great ability, whom I know; and foremost in Punch. They would not like to leave their party, to join the horseshoe, I dare say; but I would begin the middle table down the room with them, so that they may have very good places. Mr. Lemon (the third name) is the Editor of Punch, moreover. The names are

Mr. A'Beckett[†3]
Mr. Leech
Mr. and Mrs. Lemon[†4]
Mr. and Mrs. Bradbury
Mr. and Mrs. Evans
Mrs. Hicks[†5]
Miss Chambers[†6]

My own private little party, for a good place, not at the chief table, are:

Mr. Austin & Mrs. Austin[†1]
Mrs. John Dickens[†2]
And (I believe) Augustus and a third lady. Mr. Thompson, of whom I spoke to you, as having an eye on Miss Weller, is coming. So I must trust to your miraculous arrangement-power (in which I have great faith) to insinuate him into that region of the horseshoe.

I find that Mr. Forster is coming; and I have given him the toast "The Medical Profession, but especially" &c.—thinking it would be well to have a new speaker in that place, as I shall just have been proposing The Ladies.

Always Believe me | My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esq.

(Over)

I have forgotten to mention that Doctor Hitchman[†3] came to me today, saying that Mr. Laing had sent for two Ladies tickets for the Gallery (!);[†4] and what should he do? I advised him to reply that there was no such thing, but he could have ladies tickets for the dinner, with all the pleasure in life. Could you send to the Tavern in the morning, to tell them to lock up the Gallery, and on no account to let a single person in?

To T. J. THOMPSON, 3 JUNE 1844*

MS Morgan Library.

Osnaburgh Encampment | Third June 1844

My Dear Thompson

Will you bring your Bruffam tomorrow. Otherwise we shall be short of conveyance.

Faithfully Ever
The Cheer

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 JUNE 1844

Text from MDGH, I, 104.

Devonshire Terrace, June 4th, 1844.

My dear Sir,

Many thanks for your proof, and for your truly gratifying mention of my name. I think the subject excellently chosen, the introduction exactly what it should be, the allusion to the International Copyright question most honourable and manly, and the whole scheme full of the highest interest.[†1] I had already seen your prospectus,[†2] and if I can be of the feeblest use in advancing a project so intimately connected with an end on which my heart is set—the liberal education of the people—I shall be sincerely glad. All good wishes and success attend you![†3]

Believe me always, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 4 JUNE 1844*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace | Fourth June 1844

My Dear Milnes

If Friday the Twenty First will do as well—at what hour? I am going away with Fonblanque on the Saturday, a sailing.

Ever Yours
W. Ferrand[†4]

Sell this for two and eight,[†5] if you can.

To T. PHILLIPS,[†1] 4 JUNE 1844*

MS Private.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace | Fourth June 1844

Dear Sir

I beg to send you a cheque[†2] for the amount of your account and to thank you for the great interest and attention with which you transacted my business.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Phillips Esquire.

To H. K. BROWNE,[†3] [?JUNE 1844]

MS Huntington Library. Date: early June, to leave Browne enough time; CD was still writing 13 June, but could have foreseen all he describes.

FRONTISPIECE

I have a notion of finishing the book, with an apostrophe to Tom Pinch, playing the organ. I shall break off the last Chapter suddenly, and find Tom at his organ, a few years afterwards.[†4] And instead of saying what became of the people, as usual, I shall suppose it to be all expressed in the sounds; making the last swell of the Instrument a kind of expression of Tom's heart. Tom has remained a single man, and lives with his sister and John Westlock who are married—Martin and Mary are married—Tom is a godfather of course—Old Martin is dead, and has left him some money—Tom has had an organ fitted in his chamber, and often sits alone, playing it; when of course the old times rise up before him. So the Frontispiece is Tom at his organ with a pensive face; and any little indications of his history rising out of it, and floating about it, that you please; Tom as interesting and amiable as possible.[†5]

VIGNETTE FOR TITLE PAGE.

The finger post at the end of the lane, which has been so often mentioned. You can either have Tom Pinch waiting with John Westlock and his boxes, as at the opening of the book; or Mr. Pecksniff blandly receiving a new pupil from the coach (perhaps this will be better);[†1] and by no means forgetting the premium in his welcome of the Young Gentleman.

Will you let me see the Designs for these two?

(Over)

1st. Subject.[†2]

The Room in the Temple. Mrs. Lupin, with Mary in her charge, stands a little way behind old Martin's chair. Young Martin is on the other side. Tom Pinch and his sister are there too. Mr. Pecksniff hastens in to rescue his venerable friend from this horde of plunderers and deceivers. The old man in a transport of burning indignation, rises from his chair, and uplifting his stick, knocks the good Pecksniff down; before John Westlock and Mark who gently interpose (though they are very much delighted) can possibly prevent him. Mr. Pecksniff on the ground. The old man full of fire, energy and resolution.

Lettering.
Warm Reception of Mr. Pecksniff by his Venerable friend.

2nd. SUBJECT.[†3]

Represents Miss Charity Pecksniff on the bridal morning. The bridal breakfast is set out in Todgers's drawing-room. Miss Pecksniff has invited the strong-minded woman, and all that party who were present in Mr. Pecksniff's parlor, in the second number, to behold her triumph. She is not proud, but forgiving. Jinkins is also present and wears a white favor in his button hole. Merry is not there. Mrs. Todgers is decorated for the occasion. So are the rest of the company. The bride wears a bonnet with an orange flower. They have waited a long time for Moddle. Moddle has not appeared. The strong-minded woman has expressed a hope that nothing has happened to him; the daughters of the strong-minded woman (who are bridesmaids) have offered consolation of an aggravating nature. A knock is heard at the door. It is not Moddle but a letter from him. The bride opens it, reads it, shrieks, and swoons. Some of the company catch it up crowd about each other, and read it over one another's shoulders. Moddle writes that he can't help it—that he loves another—that he is wretched for life—and has that morning sailed from Gravesend for Van Diemen's Land.
Lettering. The Nuptials of Miss Pecksniff receive a temporary check.

To JOHN KENYON,[†1] 5 JUNE 1844*

MS Mrs Sheila Sokolov-Grant.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace | Fifth June 1844

My Dear Kenyon.

I am rather late this morning, or I would have answered your friendly note sooner.

First, let me thank you for your kind and liberal donation to the Sanatorium. When they send you, as they will, a little report,[†2] do give it a perusal one morning at breakfast. It will shew you what an excellent Institution it is, and how well it merits your voluntary support.

On Saturday next, we dine with the Milner Gibsons. And I verily believe that we have at least one engagement for every day between this and the first of July, when we leave England. In this list I don't include the slight engagement of having to finish Chuzzlewit, which I shall be very glad to dispose of, notwithstanding.

We shall come and shake hands with you before we go; and we shall meet you one night, I hope, at Mrs. Macreadys. Let us take a vow to be better neighbours[†3] in time to come. As the boys say, "I will, if you will".

Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards. And I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Kenyon Esquire.

To MR HOWELL,[†4] [?7 JUNE 1844]

Mention in report of meeting of Charterhouse Square Infirmary, 8 June (Morning Herald, 10 June 44).

Regretting his inability to attend the meeting of the Charterhouse Square Infirmary on 8 June to decide on a testimonial for Frederick Salmon.[†5]

To DUDLEY COSTELLO,[†6] 7 JUNE 1844

Text from MDGH, I, 104.

June 7th, 1844.

Dear Sir,

Mrs. Harris, being in that delicate state (just confined, and "made comfortable," in fact), hears some sounds below, which she fancies may be the owls (or howls) of the husband to whom she is devoted. They ease her mind by informing her that these sounds are only organs. By "they" I mean the gossips and attendants. By "organs" I mean instrumental boxes with barrels in them, which are commonly played by foreigners under the windows of people of sedentary pursuits, on a speculation of being bribed to leave the street. Mrs. Harris, being of a confiding nature, believed in this pious fraud, and was fully satisfied "that his owls was organs."[†1]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, 10 JUNE 1844

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace. | Tenth June 1844

My Dear Beard. Many many thanks for your interest and recollection. The Sanatorium was exceedingly well done in the Herald[†2]—to the great delight of its Committee—and I have no doubt the Institution will derive great benefit from that account.

Miss Weller plays tomorrow, at the Hanover Square Rooms, at one Maras's Morning Concert.[†3] And she plays on Thursday, at the same place, at a Concert of her own—evening.

Will you book yourself to come and dine with us on the last Sunday in the month, at half after five? It will be the day before our departure. Kate begs her love to your sister,[†4] and desires me to say how happy she will be, if she will join you.

Come about an hour before dinner. We will then go over to the stable at Devonshire Terrace, to see the wonderful Carriage. The price whereof shall on that tremendous occasion be made known.

Ever My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To JOHN FOWLER, 10 JUNE 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: John Fowler Esquire | 50 Occupation Road | Sheffield.

London Tenth June 1844

Sir.

It would afford me pleasure to comply with your request, if it were one of rare occurrence. But I am so frequently asked to do the same thing for others, and have so strong an objection to obtruding my individual opinion through the medium of the public announcement,[†1] that I must beg to decline in this case, as in all others.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Fowler Esquire

To LADY HOLLAND, 10 JUNE 1844†

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace, New Road | Monday Tenth June 1844

Dear Lady Holland

I write from a new address, as we have happily been able to let our own house for the whole term of our absence abroad. We leave England on the First of July.[†2]

I assure you that it appears a very long time to me, since I had the pleasure of seeing you. And although it has not been my fault (for I have been almost incessantly occupied, at your hours, for months past, in present and prospective engagements of all kinds) it has bred such misgivings in me, that I was on the very point of writing to you to say that if you hadn't rated me in your blackest of books, I would come and see you this week. Your kind note relieves me very much, and does not render me the less desirous of executing this intention.

[†a]But not on Wednesday,[†3] I grieve to say; for I am finishing Chuzzlewit; and am this day upon the very last touches (I have not room, or story, for many more) of Tom and his sister. I do not expect to finish the book until Friday; and in the meantime I am obliged to walk about the fields and streets every evening, and to avoid all dinners; otherwise I should not be steadily enough set upon the dismissal of two of the greatest favorites[†1] I have ever had. I think halfpast twelve at noon is a good time to see you? And unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will come at that time on Saturday next.

I am delighted to find that Chuzzlewit has risen so highly in your estimation—and I hope you perceive, now, why the undertakers[†2] appeared; and how the selfishness of the book is the setting for these little sparklers; and how their influence is intended to refine and improve the rest. It is the great misery of such a form of publication that conclusions are necessarily arrived at, in reference to the design of the story, before the design becomes apparent or complete.

I mean to send over, please God, from Italy, a small successor to the little Carol, to appear next Christmas. I wish you may like it as well. That book has been a most extraordinary success; and still sells, quite rapidly. It has been reprinted eight times.[†a] [†3]

Fonblanque called the other day—I have no doubt as the bearer of your kind message—but I was not at home. The children are all well and blooming; and Mrs. Dickens begs me to present her grateful regards.

Believe me always, Dear Lady Holland
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, [?11 JUNE 1844]*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Date: the Tuesday after the publication of CD's speech in the Herald, 5 June. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | 38 Finsbury Square. PM 1844 (day and month illegible).

Osnaburgh Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Dr. Smith

Here is the Speech.[†4] Word for word, and letter by letter.

I wish I could be the Patron of your scheme in better essentials than in name. Use that, as you will.

Faithfully Always
CD[†5]

To H. G. ROGERS,[†1] 11 JUNE 1844

MS Boston Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh June 1844

Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say that I am prevented from attending the dinner of the United Law Clerks' Society today,[†2] and personally expressing (as it would have afforded me great gratification to do) my interest in the welfare of so excellent an Establishment.[†3]

I beg to enclose you a small subscription towards its funds.[†4] And am Sir

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Harry G. Rogers Esquire

To MRS GORE, [11] JUNE 1844*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton. Date: Tuesday was 11 June.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace New Road

Tuesday Evening Tenth June 1844

Dear Mrs. Gore.

The Marble Halls[†5] having fallen into the temporary possession of an ancient Princess (sent by a kind Fairy to take them for the term of my intended absence abroad) I am to be found in a temporary encampment as above. The which is proclaimed to all comers through the medium of a tin plate something larger than the largest sized teatray, boldly affixed to the right hand side of the Marble Porch of my vacated Castle.

I would gladly—cheerfully—heartily—help you with a Prologue,[†6] if I could. But it will require my utmost exertions to finish Chuzzlewit this week; and on Monday I am going down, in pursuance of an old engagement, to see Walter Landor at Bath,[†7] whence I shall only return in time for the dinner at which you will not be present.[†1] If it ever were, at any time, an utter impossibility with me to do such a thing, it is now.

But believe that the last line of the Song you quote, is, at least, as true as the first; and that "I love you, still the same".[†2] The same being very truly and admiringly, always,

My Dear Mrs. Gore | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gore P.S. I'll warrant you safe. And I write to you before going to bed, that I may not delay the answer.

To [CAPTAIN DI VILLA], 11 JUNE 1844

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1179 (1915); MS 3 pp.; dated Tuesday night, eleventh June, 1844. Address: name of recipient removed, but clearly Captain Di Villa: see To Di Villa, 15 June.

I am exceedingly sorry to say that I cannot comply with your request, in the matter of the novel and Mr [Newby].[†3] You may recollect my telling you that I had the strongest objection to communicating, even with my own Publishers, on such a subject. But I have an objection to communicating with anyone else. Even if I had read the book, or had time to read it in Manuscript, my feelings on this point would be equally strong and decided,

To MISS CHRISTIANA WELLER, 14 JUNE 1844

MS Mrs Sowerby.

Friday Morning | Fourteenth June 1844.

My Dear Miss Weller

Let me congratulate you with my whole heart, on your brilliant achievements last night.[†1] You rose with the occasion, nobly. Nothing could have been more successful, graceful, charming—triumphant, in every particular.

I felt a pride in you which I cannot express. I do not write to you, therefore, with the view of expressing it, or giving language to my great delight; but merely to say that I can't do either.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Christiana Weller. P.S. Anna[†2] was great. I adored her. I refused all comfort afterwards, because I hadn't sent her a bouquet. But writing all day put it out of my head. It was there, several times. Tell her it was Mr. Chuzzlewit's omission. Not mine.

To CAPTAIN DI VILLA,[†3] 15 JUNE 1844

MS Mr Alan Moore. Address: Captain Di Villa | 1 Old Cavendish Street.

Osnaburgh Terrace | Fifteenth June 1844

My Dear Sir

I tried very hard to come to you today; but every previous engagement (I had three) turned out at least half an hour longer than I had expected, and I did not get home again: thoroughly tired: until four o'Clock.

I thank you for the privilege of reading the enclosed. The writer seems to have become my friend. I know her, perfectly well.

Do not suppose that I attach the least idea of impropriety to your request in the matter of Mr. Newby; or that I ever confounded the fair authoress of the Misjudged[†4] with it; or that I ever supposed you intended it to be a public recommendation; or that I ever had the least reference to the merits or demerits of the book, in declining to give it. My objection is, to addressing myself to any Publisher on such a subject. I have found my own negociations with that class of gentlemen quite sufficient to keep me in genially warm water, from my toes to the crown of my head.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Di Villa.

To MISS ELIZABETH HORNE,[†1] 15 JUNE 1844

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Elizabeth Horne | 124 Edgeware Road.

Fifteenth June 1844.

Dear Madam.

I believe you wrote to me for an autograph. Here it is. I do not know whether you are married, or single; but you will see that in the superscription of this note, I have given Mankind the benefit of the doubt.

Pray do not suppose that I attribute the least impropriety of motive to you, in addressing me anonymously. But I object to correspond in the slightest degree, with any one, on such terms.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Elizabeth Horne.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 17 JUNE 1844*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Osnaburgh Terrace | Monday Seventeenth June 1844

My Dear Mac

I don't know whether you are aware (for I don't know when you went away last night, or what previous communication you had with Forster) that we meet here, to day, at half past one.[†3] If you feel dispoged for a morsel of warm lunch at one exactly, you will find it on the table.

Faithfully Ever

CD

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To ROBERT KEELEY,[†1] 24 JUNE 1844

MS J. W. Garrett Library, Johns Hopkins University.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace.
Monday Evening | Twenty Fourth June 1844.

My Dear Sir.

I have been out Yachting[†2] for two or three days; and consequently could not answer your letter in due course.

I cannot, consistently with the opinion I hold, and have always held, in reference to the principle of adapting novels for the Stage, give you a Prologue to Chuzzlewit.[†3] But believe me to be quite sincere in saying that if I felt I could reasonably do such a thing for anyone, I would do it for you.

I start for Italy on Monday next; but if you have the piece on the Stage, and rehearse on Friday, I will gladly come down at any time you may appoint, on that morning: and go through it with you all. If you be not in a sufficiently forward state to render this proposal convenient to you, or likely to assist your preparations, do not take the trouble to answer this note.

I presume Mrs. Keeley[†4] will do Ruth Pinch. If so, I feel secure about her. And of Mrs. Gamp I am certain. But a queer sensation begins in my legs, and comes upward to my forehead, when I think of Tom.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Keeley Esquire

To G. CARR GLYN,[†1] 25 JUNE 1844

Extract and summary in Chicago Book & Art Auction catalogue No. 2; summary in John Anderson catalogue No. 2298; mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1904; MS 1 p.; dated London, 25 June 44. Address: "G. Carr Glyn" in Sotheby's is clearly correct (see fn); John Anderson catalogue gives as "Seymour Glyn".

I am going abroad on Monday next. If a proxy vote is possible he will leave one for the lady in whom the recipient is interested.[†2]

To THOMAS BEARD, 28 JUNE 1844

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 28 June 44. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. On the flap of the envelope above the seal is written: "It is particularly requested that if Sir James Graham should open this, he will not trouble himself to seal it [agai]n."[†3]

Osnaburgh Terrace | Friday

My Dear Beard

You will see from the enclosed, that Sunday's dinner[†4] is transferred to Forster's.

To which, I hope, you will not object. Will you come here, at about half past 4, that we may leisurely inspect the Magnificent Carriage?

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 28 JUNE 1844*

MS Morgan Library.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace | Friday Twenty Eighth June | 1844

Dear Sirs.

Please to deliver to Messrs. Bradbury and Evans on my behalf; at any time when they may produce this letter as their authority; the stock on hand and plates of Oliver Twist, or The Christmas Carol, or both, as they may require.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]
Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To MESSRS D'ALMAINE,[†2] 28 JUNE 1844

Mention in John Anderson Jr. catalogue No. 455; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 28 Jun 44.

Granting some request.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 28 JUNE 1844

MS John Rylands Library.

Osnaburgh Terrace. | Twenty Eighth June 1844

My Dear Frederick.

Forster tells me he has asked you to dine with him on Sunday; so I presume we shall meet there.

I wish you would get me a bottle of dye for my unprecedented Moustache at the Baron's[†3] in Regent Street, or some such good place. We shall be passing the Treasury about 3 or 4 today, on our way from calling at Tracey's.[†4] I will send up to you on the chance of your having received this.

We do not go until Tuesday Morning, as there is no boat on Monday.

Affecy. always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JUNE 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 327. Date: 28 June according to Forster.

I wish you would read this,[†1] and give it me again when we meet at Stanfield's to-day. Newby has written to me to say that he hopes to be able to give Overs more money than was agreed on.

To T. C. NEWBY, 29 JUNE 1844*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Osnaburgh Terrace | Twenty Ninth June 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Newby, and begs to forward him the proofs of Mr. Overs' book:[†2] corrected. Mr. Dickens will be glad if Mr. Newby will send a complete revise of the whole book, title page, dedication,[†3] and introduction[†4] to Mr. Overs, for his attentive perusal. Mr. Overs will certainly not detain them beyond one day.[†5]

Mr. Dickens will feel still further obliged to Mr. Newby, if, on the publication of the book, he will pay the five and twenty pounds agreed upon, to his account with Messrs. Coutts & Co., bankers. He begs to enclose Mr. Overs' receipt for the amount.[†6]

Mr. Dickens would prefer to leave all arrangements connected with presentation copies of the work, to Mr. Newby's business discretion. He cannot terminate this correspondence, however, without expressing his very high sense of Mr. Newby's honorable and manly note, in reference to the possibility of his extending some further remuneration to Mr. Overs.

To LADY HOLLAND, 30 JUNE 1844*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

Osnaburgh Terrace
Sunday Morning Thirtieth June | 1844.

My Dear Lady Holland

Let me thank you, earnestly, for the letters which you have, with so much kindness, remembered to procure for me.

I have an engagement, I am sorry to say, to a parting dinner with some very old friends today[†1]— and on Tuesday Morning I leave England.[†2] But I will call to say Good B'ye, before you go out tomorrow.

I was in the country yesterday; and coming home very late last night; and going out early this morning to breakfast with Rogers; could not answer your kind note until now, when I blush to hear it striking Two.

Always Dear Lady Holland
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland

July

To LUIGI MARIOTTI,[†3] 1 JULY 1844*

MS Morgan Library.

Osnaburgh Terrace. | First July 1844

Dear Sir

I beg to send you on the other side, a cheque for the amount in which I am indebted to you;[†4] and I feel greatly obliged, I assure you, by the interest you have taken in your two pupils.

They desire to be remembered to you, very kindly. And I am
Always | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

M. Mariotti

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14-15 JULY 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iv, 329. Date: They arrived in Marseilles 14 July, according to Forster, and left by sea the following afternoon (Pictures from Italy, 1846, p. 35). From Marseilles.

Describing the journey, he says that not being able to get vetturino horses in Paris, they had come on, post—paying for nine horses but bringing only four, and thereby saving a shilling a mile out of what the four would have cost in England. But what with distance, caravan, sight-seeing, and everything, two hundred pounds would be nearly swallowed up before they were at their destination.[†1]

The children had not cried in their worst troubles, the carriage had gone lightly over abominable roads, and the courier had proved himself a perfect gem.

Surrounded by strange and perfectly novel circumstances, I feel as if I had a new head on side by side with my old one.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20 JULY 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 330, and F, 1872-4, II, v, 91*n*. Date: second extract 20 July according to Forster; first extract clearly a few days after arrival at Albaro on 16 July, therefore same letter. CD soon established a pattern of weekly letters to Forster,[†1] normally writing at weekends.

The villa at once impressed him with its likeness to a pink jail. It is the most perfectly lonely, rusty, stagnant old staggerer of a domain that you can possibly imagine.[†2] What would I give if you could only look round the courtyard! I look down into it, whenever I am near that side of the house, for the stable is so full of "vermin and swarmers"[†3] (pardon the quotation from my inimitable friend) that I always expect to see the carriage going out bodily, with legions of industrious fleas[†4] harnessed to and drawing it off, on their own account.[†5] We have a couple of Italian work-people in our establishment; and to hear one or other of them talking away to our servants with the utmost violence and volubility in Genoese, and our servants answering with great fluency in English (very loud: as if the others were only deaf, not Italian), is one of the most ridiculous things possible. The effect is greatly enhanced by the Genoese manner, which is exceedingly animated and pantomimic; so that two friends of the lower class conversing pleasantly in the street, always seem on the eve of stabbing each other forthwith. And a stranger is immensely astonished at their not doing it.

We have had a London sky until to-day, grey and cloudy as you please:[†1] but I am most disappointed, I think, in the evenings, which are as commonplace as need be; for there is no twilight, and as to the stars giving more light here than elsewhere, that is humbug.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?22 JULY 1844]

Mention in next. Date: probably same day as next.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 22 JULY 1844

MS Berg Collection. Address: Frederick Dickens Esqre. | Commissariat | Treasury | London.

Villa di Bagnerello. Albaro. Monday Twenty Second July 1844.

My Dear Fred.

I have written a rather long letter to Mitton, with a few wandering Notes of this place, which I have begged him to put you in possession of, forthwith. And as I dare say you will have heard from Forster besides, I will confine myself at this moment, to what immediately concerns you—namely, the notion you had of coming here, in your holidays. I am assured that the journey, straight through, can be very well done in something less than a week, for £15 each way. If you should decide to come, I will very gladly stand £10 of this Thirty. And I can answer for your seeing all manner of novelties, and being very much entertained in this New World. I believe (but I will enquire further into this, if you decide to come) that you would cross the Alps, and not steam it. In that case; or indeed in any, most probably; I would come on to some point to meet you. Such french phrases as you would want, I could give you in a letter; but you can book yourself to Paris, in London; and very nearly to this place, in Paris. And one word "combien"—how much?—would carry you further than you are ever likely to go, in Foreign Parts.

Let me know what you really intend in this respect, and [I][†1] can make all that part of it, easy enough, if you decide to come.

We are all very well, Thank God; and living in the queerest [sort][†2] of place that ever was anywhere. We expect a Piano up from Genoa to day. I trea[ted][†3] the Pigs[†4] with a carriage yesterday, wherein they went to that City, with Roche, Cook, and the Nurses; and seeing a very magnificent religious Procession in the streets, came back with a decided leaning towards the Roman Catholic faith. The Genoese Ladies wear Veils[†5] instead of bonnets; and we had no rest here, until the Dolls were similarly attired.

Fletcher is living with us, and desires to be heartily remembered. He says "Boots" are cheap here; and you can't do better than come and buy 'em. But I don't know what you would do on the pavements; which are very trying. It is like walking on marbles, with here and there a peg-top—all red hot, and smoking.

Kate, Georgy, and the darlings, send their loves. Give mine to everybody who comes in your way, who is worth receiving it. Address still to the Poste Restante, Genoa, as that is the shortest mode. If Mitton gives you the MS of the last 2 Nos. of Chuzzlewit, will you give it to Forster.

Always My Dear Fred | Your affectionate Brother

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire P.S. Will you see Topping one evening, and ascertain that the Phaeton has come home, safely?

To DANIEL MACLISE,[†6] 22 JULY 1844

MS New Brunswick University Library. Address: Inghilterra. | Daniel Maclise Esqre. R.A. | 14 Russell Place | Fitzroy Square | London.

Villa di Bagnerello, Albaro. Monday Twenty Second July 1844.

My very dear Mac.

I address you[†7] with something of the lofty spirit of an exile—a banished commoner—a sort of Anglo Pole.[†1] I don't exactly know what I have done for my country in coming away from it, but I feel it is something, something great—something virtuous and heroic. Lofty emotions rise within me, when I see the sun set on the blue Mediterranean. I am the limpet on the rock. My father's name is Turner, and my boots are green.[†2]

Apropos of blue. In a certain picture, called the Serenade,[†3] you[†4] painted a sky. If you ever have occasion to paint the Mediterranean, let it be of exactly that colour. It lies before me now, as deeply and intensely blue. But no such color is above me. Nothing like it. In the South of France; at Avignon, at Aix, at Marseilles; I saw deep blue skies (not so deep though—oh Lord no!);[†5] and also in America; but the sky above me is familiar to my sight. Is it heresy to say that I have seen its twin brother shining through the window of Jack Straw's—that down in Devonshire I have seen a better sky? I dare say it is; but like a great many other heresies, it is true.

But such green—green—green—as flutters in the vineyard down below the windows, that I never saw; nor yet such lilac and such purple as float between me, and the distant hills; nor yet—in anything—picture, book, or verbal[†6] boredom[†7]—such awful, solemn, impenetrable blue, as in that same Sea. It has such an absorbing, silent, deep, profound effect; that I can't help thinking it suggested the idea of Styx. It looks as if a draught of it—only so much as you could scoop up, on the beach, in the hollow of your hand—would wash out everything else, and make a great blue blank of your intellect.

When the Sun sets clearly, then, by Heaven, it is Majestic! From any one of eleven windows here; or from a terrace, overgrown with grapes; you may behold the broad sea; villas, houses, mountains, forts; strewn with rose leaves—strewn with them? Steeped in them! Dyed, through and through and through. For a moment. No more. The Sun is impatient and fierce; like anything else in these parts; and goes down headlong. Run to fetch your hat—and it's night. Wink at the right time of black night—and it's morning. Everything is in extremes. There is an insect here (I forget its name; and Fletcher and Roche are both out)[†1] that chirps all day. There is one outside the window now. The chirp is very loud: something like a Brobdignagian Grasshopper. The creature is born to chirp—to progress in chirping—to chirp louder, louder, louder—till it gives one tremendous chirp, and bursts itself. That is its life and death. Everything "is in a concatenation accordingly". The day gets brighter, brighter, brighter, 'till its night. The summer gets hotter, hotter, hotter, 'till it bursts.[†2] The fruit gets riper, riper, riper, 'till it tumbles down and rots.

Ask me a question or two about fresco,[†3] will you be so good? All the houses are painted in fresco, hereabout—the outside walls I mean; the fronts, and backs, and sides—and all the colour has run into damp and green seediness, and the very design has straggled away, into the component atoms of the plaster.[†4] Sometimes (but not often) I can make out a Virgin with a mildewed Glory round her head; holding nothing, in an undiscernible lap, with invisible arms; and occasionally the leg, or arm, or what Marryat would call the arthe[†5] of a cherub. But it is very melancholy and dim. There are two old fresco-painted Vases outside my own gate—one on either hand—which are so faint, that I never saw them 'till last night; and only then, because I was looking over the wall after a Lizard, who had come upon me while I was smoking a cigar above; and crawled over one of these embellishments in his retreat. There is a Church here—the Church of the Annunciation—which they are now (by "they", I mean certain noble families) restoring at a vast expence, as a work of piety. It is a large Church, with a great many little chapels in it; and a very high dome. Every Inch of this edifice is painted; and every Design is set in a great gold frame or border, elaborately wrought.[†6] You can imagine nothing so splendid. It is worth coming the whole distance to see. But all sorts of splendour is in perpetual enactment through the means of these churches. Gorgeous processions in the streets, illuminations of windows on Festa nights; lightings up of Lamps, and clusterings of flowers before the shrines of Saints; all manner of show and display. The doors of the churches stand wide open; and in this hot weather great red curtains flutter and wave in their places; and if you go and sit in one of them, to get out of the Sun, you see the queerest figures kneeling against pillars, and the strangest people passing in and out, and such streams of women in veils (they don't wear bonnets) with great fans in their hands coming and going, that you are never tired of looking on. Except in the churches, you would suppose the City (at this time of year) to be deserted; the people keep so close within doors. Indeed it is next to impossible to go out into the heat. I have only been into Genoa twice, myself. We are deliciously cool here, by comparison; being high, and having the sea breeze. There is always some shade in the Vineyard too; and underneath the rocks on the sea shore. So if I choose to saunter, I can do it easily: even in the hot time of the day. I am as lazy, however, as—as you are; and do little but eat, and drink, and read.

As I am going to transmit regular accounts of all sight-seeings and journeyings to Forster, who will shew them to you, I will not bore you with Descriptions, however. I hardly think you allow enough, for the great brightness and brilliancy of colour which is commonly achieved on the continent, in that same fresco painting. I saw some—by a French artist and his pupil—in progress at the Cathedral at Avignon[†1] which was as bright and airy as anything can be; nothing dull or dead about it. And I have observed quite fierce and glaring colours, elsewhere.

We have a Piano now (there was none in the house) and have fallen into a pretty settled, easy, track. We breakfast about half past nine or ten—dine about four—and go to bed about eleven. We are much courted by the visiting people of course; and I very much resort to my old habit of bolting from callers, and leaving their reception to Kate.[†2] Green figs I have already learnt to like. Green almonds (we have them at dessert every day) are the most delicious fruit in the world. And green lemons, combined with some rare Hollands that is to be got here, make prodigious Punch, I assure you.

You ought to come over, Mac;[†3] but I don't expect you, though I am sure it would be a very great move for you. I have not the smallest doubt of that. Fletcher has made a sketch of the house,[†4] and will copy it in pen and ink, for transmission to you in my next letter. I shall look out for a place in Genoa between this and the winter time. In the meantime, the people who come out here, breathe delightedly, as if they had got into another climate. Landing in the City, you would hardly suppose it possible that there could be such an air within Two Miles.

Write to me as often as you can, like a dear good fellow; and rely upon the punctuality of my correspondence. Losing you and Forster is like losing my arms and legs; and dull and lame I am without you. But at Broadstairs next year, please God, when it is all over, I shall be very glad to have laid up such a store of recollections and improvement.

I don't know what to do with Timber. He is as ill adapted to the climate at this time of year, as a suit of Fur. I have had him made a Lion Dog; but the fleas flock in such crowds into the hair he has left, that they drive him nearly frantic, and render it absolutely necessary that he should be kept by himself. Of all the miserable, hideous little frights you ever saw, you never beheld such a Devil. Apropos, as we were crossing the Seine, within two stages of Paris, Roche suddenly said to me: sitting beside me on the box: "the littel dog ave got a great lip!" I was thinking of things remote and very different, and couldn't comprehend why any peculiarity in this feature on the part of the dog, should excite a man so much. As I was musing upon it, my ears were attracted by shouts of "Helo! Hola! Hi hi hi! Le Voila! Regardez!" and the like. And looking down among the oxen—we were in the centre of a numerous drove—I saw him, Timber, lying in the road, curled up—you know his way—like a lobster, only not so stiff; yelping dismally in the pain of his "lip" from the roof of the carriage; and between the aching of his bones, his horror of the oxen, and his dread of me (whom he evidently took to be the immediate agent in, and cause of the damage) singing out to an extent which I believe to be perfectly unprecedented: while every French Man and French Boy within sight, roared for company. He wasn't hurt, but I think the fall must have affected his bowels which were very open, all through the journey.

Kate and Georgina send their best loves; and the children add theirs. Katey in particular desires to be commended to "Mr. Teese". She has a sore throat; from sitting in constant draughts I suppose; but with that exception, we are all quite well. Ever believe me, my dear Mac

Your Affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 JULY 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 335, 336, 330. Date: These extracts, undated by Forster, suggest early but not initial impressions: Forster introduces the second extract with "I soon heard of", and follows the third by saying there had been "a whole week" of the sirocco "soon after his arrival". He says "the second letter" also "sketched the story of his travel through France", but attaches this comment to To Maclise, 22 July.

Sharp as the tradespeople at Albaro were after money, their idleness quenched even that propensity. Order for immediate delivery two or three pounds of tea, and the tea-dealer would be wretched. "Won't it do to-morrow?" "I want it now," you would reply; and he would say, "No, no, there can be no hurry!" But everywhere there was deference, courtesy, more than civility. In a café a little tumbler of ice costs something less than threepence, and if you give the waiter in addition what you would not offer to an English beggar, say, the third of a halfpenny, he is profoundly grateful.

Describing the Strada Nuova and Strada Balbi—the former narrower than Albanystreet, the latter less wide than Drury-lane or Wych-street; but both filled with palaces of noble architecture and of such vast dimensions that as many windows as there are days in the year might be counted in one of them, and this not covering by any means the largest plot of ground. Other streets had no footways, and all varying in degrees of narrowness, but for the most part like Field-lane in Holborn, with little breathing-places like St. Martin's-court; and the widest only in parts wide enough to enable a carriage and pair to turn. Imagine yourself looking down a street of Reform Clubs[†1] cramped after this odd fashion, the lofty roofs almost seeming to meet in the perspective. He was struck by the profusion of trash and tinsel[†2] in the churches; but that of the Capucin friars blazed every inch of it with gold, precious stones, and paintings of priceless art; the principal contrast to its radiance being the dirt of its masters, whose bare legs, corded waists, and coarse brown serge never changed by night or day, proclaimed amid their corporate wealth their personal vows of poverty. He preferred the country people of their suburb on festa-days, with the Indulgences that gave them the right to make merry stuck in their hats like turn-pike tickets. He did not think the peasant girls in general good-looking, though they carried themselves daintily and walked remarkably well: but the ugliness of the old women, begotten of hard work and a burning sun, with porters' knots of coarse grey hair grubbed up over wrinkled and cadaverous faces, he thought quite stupendous. He was never in a street a hundred yards long without getting up perfectly the witch part of Macbeth.

The heat tried him less than he expected, excepting always the sirocco,[†3] which, near the sea as they were and right in the course of the wind as it blew against the house, made everything hotter than if there had been no wind. One feels it most, on first getting up. Then, it is really so oppressive that a strong determination is necessary to enable one to go on dressing; one's tendency being to tumble down anywhere and lie there. It seemed to hit him behind the knee, and made his legs so shake that he could not walk or stand.

To SIR JAMES MURRAY,[†4] 28 JULY 1844

Text from Horace G. Commins Catalogue No. 132 (1948).

Albaro, | Sunday Morning July Twenty-eighth, 1844

Dear Sir James,

Little Kate appears to be pretty well in health this morning: but the swelling in her neck hardly seems to have subsided or softened, so far as I can judge. It will be a great satisfaction to Mrs. Dickens if you can kindly make it convenient to see our pet to-day—and certainly to myself also.

With best regards, Believe me,

Faithfully Yours,

CHARLES DICKENS.

Sir James Murray

August

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 AUGUST 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 331; F, 1872-4, II, V, 91*n* (aa), 95*n*; F, IV, iv, 333-4. Date: first extract 3 Aug according to Forster, and aa probably same letter; others, part of "that August letter".

He opened his letter by saying that there was a thick November fog, that rain was pouring incessantly, and that he did not remember to have seen in his life, at that time of year, such cloudy weather as he had seen beneath Italian skies. The story goes that it is in autumn and winter, when other countries are dark and foggy, that the beauty and clearness of this are most observable. I hope it may prove so; for I have postponed going round the hills which encircle the city, or seeing any of the sights, until the weather is more favourable. [a]My faith on that point is decidedly shaken, which reminds me to ask you whether you ever read Simond's Tour in Italy.[†1] It is a most charming book, and eminently remarkable for its excellent sense, and determination not to give in to conventional lies.[a] I have never yet seen it so clear, for any long time of the day together, as on a bright, lark-singing, coast-of-France-discerning day at Broadstairs; nor have I ever seen so fine a sunset, throughout, as is very common there. But the scenery is exquisite, and at certain periods of the evening and the morning the blue of the Mediterranean surpasses all conception or description. It is the most intense and wonderful colour, I do believe, in all nature.

He described his first call from the French consul-general.[†2] Their house is next to ours on the right, with vineyards between; but the place is so oddly contrived that one has to go a full mile round to get to their door. He made the visit his excuse for breaking off from a facetious description of French inns to introduce a sketch[†1] from a pencil outline by Fletcher, of what bore the imposing name of the Villa di Bella Vista, but which he called by the homelier one of its proprietor, Bagnerello. This, my friend, is quite accurate. Allow me to explain it. You are standing, sir, in our vineyard, among the grapes and figs. The Mediterranean is at your back as you look at the house: of which two sides, out of four, are here depicted. The lower story (nearly concealed by the vines) consists of the hall, a wine-cellar, and some storerooms. The three windows on the left of the first floor belong to the sala, lofty and whitewashed, which has two more windows round the corner. The fourth window did belong to the dining-room, but I have changed one of the nurseries for better air; and it now appertains to that branch of the establishment. The fifth and sixth, or two right-hand windows, sir, admit the light to the Inimitable's (and uxor's) chamber; to which the first window round the right-hand corner, which you perceive in shadow, also belongs. The next window in shadow, young sir, is the bower of Miss H. The next, a nursery window; the same having two more round the corner again. The bowery-looking place stretching out upon the left of the house is the terrace, which opens out from a French window in the drawing-room on the same floor, of which you see nothing: and forms one side of the courtyard. The upper windows belong to some of those uncounted chambers upstairs; the fourth one, longer than the rest, being in F.'s[†2] bedroom. There is a kitchen or two up there besides, and my dressing-room; which you can't see from this point of view. The kitchens and other offices in use are down below, under that part of the house where the roof is longest. On your left, beyond the Bay of Genoa, about two miles off, the Alps stretch off into the far horizon; on your right, at three or four miles distance, are mountains crowned with forts. The intervening space on both sides is dotted with villas, some green, some red, some yellow, some blue, some (and ours among the number) pink. At your back, as I have said, sir, is the ocean; with the slim Italian tower of the ruined church of St John the Baptist[†1] rising up before it, on the top of a pile of savage rocks. You go through the courtyard, and out at the gate, and down a narrow lane to the sea. Note. The sala goes sheer up to the top of the house; the ceiling being conical, and the little bedrooms built round the spring of its arch. You will observe that we make no pretension to architectural magnificence, but that we have abundance of room. And here I am, beholding only vines and the sea for days together. . . . Good Heavens! How I wish you'd come for a week or two, and taste the white wine at a penny farthing the pint. It is excellent.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 7 AUGUST 1844*

MS Comte de Gramont. Address: Inghilterra. | Le Comte D'Orsay | Kensington Gore. | near | London.

Albaro, Near Genoa. Wednesday August Seventh 1844

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I hope you will not think me tardy in commencing that correspondence—with yourself and Lady Blessington alternately—from which I am o[[sic]] derive so much interest and happiness during my stay in these latitudes. I should have flung my loving glove into Gore House before now; but that the restlessness of a perfectly new life, and the illness of my pet little daughter (the smaller of the two Kensington lunchers)[†2] have sadly interfered with my good resolutions. Once off, however, I think I can back myself to keep going. I am a bad starter —nothing more.

We had a charming journey here. I cannot tell you what an immense impression Paris made upon me. It is the most extraordinary place in the World. I was not prepared for, and really could not have believed in, its perfectly distinct and separate character. My eyes ached and my head grew giddy, as novelty, novelty, novelty; nothing but strange and striking things; came swarming before me. I cannot conceive any place so perfectly and wonderfully expressive of its own character; its secret character no less than that which is on its surface; as Paris is. I walked about the streets—in and out, up and down, backwards and forwards —during the two days we were there; and almost every house, and every person

I passed, seemed to be another leaf in the enormous book that stands wide open there. I was perpetually turning over, and never coming any nearer the end. There never was such a place for a description.[†1] If I had only a larger sheet of paper (I have ordered some for next time) I am afraid I should plunge, wildly, into such a lengthened account of those two days as would startle you. This is the sole and solitary sheet in the house this morning (except those on the beds)—which looks providential, and seems to be an interposition in your favor.

Let me explain to you where I am. Do you recollect Byron's old house?[†2] Yes? Well. It isn't that—as they always say on the stage, when the two comic men are sitting in chairs before the lamps—but keeping on, up the hill past Byron's house, you come to another large house at the corner of a lane, with a little tumble-down blackguard old green-grocer's shop at the other corner, on which is painted, if I recollect right, Croce di San Lorenzo. The Governor lives in the large house opposite the Green Grocer's now; and turning down between the Governor's and the Green Grocer's, you go down a long, straggling, very narrow lane until you come to mine: which is on the left hand, with the open Sea before it—a fort close by, on the left—a vineyard sloping down towards the shore—and an old ruined church dedicated to St. John the Baptist (which I dare say Lady Blessington will remember) blotting out just so much of the sea as its walls and tower can hide. It is properly called The Villa di Bella Vista; but I call it the Villa di Bagnerello—that being the name of an amiable but drunken butcher[†3] into whose hands it has fallen, and who, being universally known (in consequence of being carried home from some wine shop or other every night), is a famous address: which the dullest errandboy recognizes immediately.

There is a delicious air here—almost always a sea breeze—and very good bathing. The house is bare of furniture, but especially clean. The Sala is very large, and the bedrooms excellent. As it would never do for a winter residence, however, I have been looking about me, and have concluded an arrangement, I hope, for the Peschiere: entering on the possession of that Palazzo, on the first of October. I have the whole Palace except the Ground Piano. I don't know whether you ever saw the rooms. They are very splendid indeed; and every inch of the walls is painted in fresco. The Gardens also, are beautiful.[†4] The last English resident paid Eight hundred francs a month; but I take the unexpired term of the present occupier (an English Colonel)[†1] who has had it for a year and a half, and got it much cheaper in consequence. My rent will be five hundred, which, as rent goes in Genoa, will be very cheap. I had thought of a Piano in the Solicetti[†2] on the Acqua Sola; but I am doubtful whether it might not be a thought too breezy in the windy weather; to say nothing of an intolerable bell which is always clashing and clanging hard by; or of the hospital,[†3] which is close to the windows.

I have been turning my plans over in my mind; and I think I shall remain quiet until I have done my little Christmas Book—that will be, perhaps, about the middle of October. In November, I think I shall start, with my servant (I have a most admirable and useful fellow—a frenchman) for Verona, Mantua, Milan, Turin, Venice, Florence, Pisa, Leghorn &c. I shall come back here for Christmas, and remain here through January. In February, I think I shall start off again (attended as before) and taking the Steamboat to Civita Vecchia, go to Rome—from Rome to Naples—and from Naples to Mount Ætna, which I very much desire to see. Then I purpose returning to Naples, and coming back here, direct, by Steamer. For Easter Week, I design returning to Rome again; taking Mrs. Dickens and her sister with me, that time; then coming back here, picking up my caravan, starting off to Paris, and remaining there a month or so, before I return to England. What do you think of that?[†4]

Now is it not a pity that Maclise don't come here straightway, and see all this along with me? I feel that it would be of immense service to him; and the delight to me would be, of course, unspeakable. I believe that in his heart he thinks so too; but there never lived a man who had such extraordinary difficulty in making up his mind to anything, as he has. I have observed indecision in many and divers men; but never in any one to one hundredth part of the extent to which it exists in him. Do pour a broadside into him, dear Count D'Orsay. You have great influence with him. Stir him up with a pole as long as that dress cane you once gave me; and let us see if one of the eighteen spare beds in the Peschiere cannot be tenanted by an R.A.[†5]

I am disgusted with the Fine Arts Commission—by the way, the frescoes in the Peschiere were reported to them as among the finest in Italy. I think their putting Maclise anywhere but at the very head and front of the Competitors, abominable. And I think the terms on which their designs are to be sent in, are disgraceful to the Commissioners as gentlemen—disgraceful to the selected artists, as men of talent—and disgraceful to the country in which the paltry, huckstering piece of power is exercised. If I were one of the exhibitors, I would see the New Houses of Parliament blown up higher than ever the old ones were like to have been, before I would coin the smallest corner of my brain for their service.[†1] A word in your ear, my dear Count D'Orsay. Do you think that when they were placing the artists, Rogers had any recollection of—the faintest and dimmest pleasure of memory in—a certain little pen and ink likeness of himself, once published in Frazer's Magazine?[†2] God forgive me. But I shrewdly suspect that too smooth head of his, I swear!

What a sad place Italy is! a country gone to sleep, and without a prospect of waking again! I never shall forget, as long as I live, my first impressions of it, as I drove through the streets of Genoa, after contemplating the splendid View of the town, for a full hour, through a telescope, from the deck of the steamboat. I thought that of all the mouldy, dreary, sleepy, dirty, lagging, halting, Godforgotten towns in the wide world, it surely must be the very uttermost superlative. It seemed as if one had reached the end of all things—as if there were no more progress, motion, advancement, or improvement of any kind beyond; but here the whole scheme had stopped centuries ago, never to move on any more, but just lying down in the sun to bask there, 'till the Day of Judgment.†3

I have [a gre]at†4 interest in it now; and walk about, or ride about, the [town] when I go there, in a dreamy sort of way, which is very comfortable. I seem [to be] thinking, but I don't know what about—I haven't the least idea. I can sit down in a church, or stand at the end of a narrow Vico, zig-zagging uphill like a dirty snake: and not feel the least desire for any further entertainment. Just in the same way, I lie down on the rocks in the evening, staring the blue water out of countenance; or stroll up the narrow lanes, and watch the lizards running up and down the walls (so slight and fast, that they always look like the shadows of something else, passing over the stones)†1 and diving into their holes so suddenly that they leave bits of their tails hanging out, and don't know it. I never knew what it was to be lazy, before.—I should think a dormouse was in very much the same condition before he goes under the wool in his cage—or a tortoise before he buries himself. I feel that I am getting rusty.—I should creak when I tried to think,†2 if it were not for some feeble efforts I am making to acquire the language: each one a tiny drop of oil upon my hinges: and the only oil they ever get.

Were you ever at Lyons? That's the place. It's a great Nightmare—a bad conscience—a fit of indigestion—the recollection of having done a murder. An awful place! I made a good mistake there, at which I used to laugh afterwards; before I had lost the strength of mind which laughing requires. There is a curious clock in the cathedral—I dare say you have seen it. At all events, it is covered at the top with little doors, and when the Sacristan gets inside and sets the works a going, the doors fly open, one after another, and little scriptural images bolt out suddenly, and retire again; while some shrill little bells exert themselves to the utmost. One of these doors flying open, disclosed the Virgin Mary—with a very blunt nose, like the hangman in Punch's Show. She hadn't sat there long when another little door, after trying to open itself a great many times (you know the queer, jerking manner of clockwork) flew wide open all at once, and disclosed a little doll with Wings, who dived out with surpassing suddenness, and at sight of the Virgin instantly dived in again, while its little street-door shut up of itself, with a bang. "Aha!" said I. "Yes, Yes—The Devil, of course. We have very soon settled his business".—"The Devil!" said the Sacristan, looking out of the clock, pale with horror. "The Angel Gabriel Monsieur! The Annunciation Monsieur!" Which it seemed (to my great confusion) had actually been represented.†3

My dear Count D'Orsay, I am afraid this is the rustiest of letters, but blame Italy for it. Not me. I shall look to hear from you, or Lady Blessington, most eagerly. My most cordial and sincere regards to her. She cannot think how sorry she made me, by her heartiness and interest at parting—and yet how very glad, at the same time. Remember me, very cordially, to Miss Power and her sister. And believe me with the sincerest regard

Always Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Le Comte D'Orsay.

What Portraits are you painting? What figures are you modelling?[†4] Has that libellous artist[†1]—I am still strong on that point: feeble as I have become—finished his slander on Miss Power?

P.S. Address to the Poste Restante. The Albaro postman gets drunk—loses letters—and goes down on his knees in sober repentance. Poste Restante, Genoa.

To PIERRE-EDOUARD ALLETZ, 9 AUGUST 1844

Extract in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 237; MS 2 pp.; dated Albaro, 9 Aug 44.

I shall be most happy in meeting a writer of such distinguished and eminent genius as M. Lamartine[†2]—though it is for only a few moments,[†3] and under the unfavorable circumstance of my not being able to speak his language with any degree of correctness or fluency. But I hold myself more than repaid in being able to read it well, since that accomplishment is a source of great delight to me and inspires me with an interest in M. Lamartine which nothing but himself, in his own beautiful productions, could have awakened.[†4]

To T. C. CURRY,[†5] 9 AUGUST 1844†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Thomas Curry Esquire. Albaro. | Ninth August 1844.

My Dear Sir

As I find none of my unfortunate books in the chest which you so kindly forwarded to me yesterday, I write to enquire whether there is anything for me to do in the matter—any application for me to prefer—any promise and vow for me to make—any pledge that I have no intention of reading them aloud to the Friars in the Streets, whether they will or no—or of converting the Genevese, from the true faith, to the Arabian Nights.

[†a]And my stationery—my inkstand—the tools of my trade—I won't write against the Cathedral, or the King, or the Governor, or the Town Gates even; I swear—if I get 'em. But Woe to the Custom House, and the Jesuits who examine the books, if I don't.[†a]

Mrs. Dickens says she will take it as a great favor, if you will buy her, at your leisure and in the course of your own marketings, three pounds of black tea, and a Ham. If blushes could be forwarded in a note, this paper would be red with a consciousness of the trouble it gives you, by the time it comes to hand.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Curry Esquire

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 9 AUGUST 1844

Text from N, I, 614-16 (from text supplied by Comte de Suzannet).

Albaro Near Genoa Friday August Ninth 1844

My Dear Sir,

I find that if I wait to write you a long letter (which has been the cause of my procrastination in fulfilling my part of our agreement), I am likely to wait some time longer. And as I am very anxious to hear from you; not the less so because I hear of you through my brother, who usually sees you once a week in my absence; I take pen in hand, and stop a messenger who is going to Genoa. For my main object being to qualify myself for the receipt of a letter from you, I don't see why a ten line qualification is not as good as one of a hundred lines.

You told me it was possible that you and Mrs. Tagart might wander into these Latitudes in the autumn. I wish you would carry out that infant intention to the utmost. It would afford us the truest delight and pleasure to receive you. If you come in October, you will find us in the Palazzo Peschiere, in Genoa; which is surrounded by a delicious garden, and is a most charming habitation in all respects. If you come in September, you will find us less splendidly lodged, but on the margin of the sea, and in the midst of vineyards. The climate is delightful even now; the heat being not at all oppressive, except in the actual city, which is what the Americans would call considerable fiery, in the middle of the day.

But the sea breezes out here are refreshing and cool, every day; and the bathing in the early morning is something more agreeable than you can easily imagine. The orange trees of the Peschiere shall give you their most fragrant salutation if you come to us at that time; and we have a dozen spare beds in that house that I know of; to say nothing of some vast chambers here and there, with ancient †airon†a chests in them, where Mrs. Tagart might enact Ginevra†1 †ato perfection,†a and never be found out. To prevent which, I will engage to watch her closely if she will only come and see us.

The flies are incredibly numerous just now. The unsightly blot, a little higher up, was occasioned by a very fine one who fell into the inkstand, and came out unexpectedly, on the nib of my pen.

We are all quite well, thank Heaven, and had a very interesting journey here. Of which, as well as of this place, I will not write a word, lest I should take the edge off those agreeable conversations with which we will beguile our walks.

Pray tell me all about the presentation of the plate,†2 and whether Ashton Yates†3 was very slow, or trotted at all, and if so, when. He is an excellent creature, and I respect him very much,†4 so I don't mind smiling when I think of him as he appeared when addressing you, and pointing mildly to the plate, with his head a little on one side, and one of his eyes turned up languidly.

Also, let me know exactly how you are travelling, and when, and all about it: that I may meet you with open arms on the threshold of the city, if, happily, you bend your steps this way. You had better address me, Poste Restante, Genoa, as the Albaro postman gets drunk; and when he has lost letters, and is sober, sheds tears—which is affecting, but hardly satisfactory.

Kate and her sister send their best regards to yourself and Mrs. and Miss Tagart, and all your family. I heartily join them in all kind remembrances and good wishes. As the messenger has just looked in at the door, and shedding on me a balmy gale of onions, has protested against being detained any longer, I will only say (which is not at all necessary) that I am ever faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS] P.S. There is a little to see here, in the church way, I assure you.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10-11 AUGUST 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 334; F, 1872-4, II, v, 113*n*; F, IV, iv, 343, 334-5, 341*n*, 337. Date: first two extracts "seven days" after 3 Aug according to Forster; next three probably same letter, as similar items of news in To Mitton, 12 Aug; final extract not before 11 Aug, since season at Teatro Carlo Felice opened 10 Aug, and presumably same letter.

I have got my paper and inkstand and figures now (the box from Osnaburgh-terrace only came last Thursday), and can think—I have begun to do so every morning—with a business-like air, of the Christmas book.[†1] My paper is arranged, and my pens are spread out, in the usual form. I think you know the form—Don't you? My books have not passed the custom-house yet, and I tremble for some volumes of Voltaire.[†2] . . . I write in the best bedroom. The sun is off the corner window at the side of the house by a very little after twelve; and I can then throw the blinds open, and look up from my paper, at the sea, the mountains, the washed-out villas, the vineyards, at the blistering white-hot fort with a sentry on the drawbridge standing in a bit of shadow no broader than his own musket, and at the sky, as often as I like. It is a very peaceful view, and yet a very cheerful one. Quiet as quiet can be.

A monk was drowned here on Saturday evening.[†3] He was bathing with two other monks, who bolted when he cried out that he was sinking—in consequence, I suppose, of his certainty of going to Heaven.

Everybody wears a dress. Mine extremely theatrical: Masaniello to the life: shall be preserved for your inspection in Devonshire-terrace.[†4] . . . The moustaches are glorious, glorious. I have cut them shorter, and trimmed them a little at the ends to improve the shape. They are charming, charming. Without them, life would be a blank.

He described the blank impossibility of getting native meanings conveyed to his English servants; the spell was first broken by the cook, being really a clever woman, and not entrenching herself in that astonishing pride of ignorance which induces the rest to oppose themselves to the receipt of any information through any channel, and which made A.[†1] careless of looking out of window, in America, even to see the Falls of Niagara. She had so primed herself with the names of all sorts of vegetables, meats, soups, fruits, and kitchen necessaries, that she was able to order whatever was needful of the peasantry that were trotting in and out all day, basketed and barefooted.

Timber has had every hair upon his body cut off because of the fleas, and he looks like the ghost of a drowned dog come out of a pond after a week or so. It is very awful to see him slide into a room. He knows the change upon him, and is always turning round and round to look for himself. I think he'll die of grief.

The first play he saw at the principal theatre[†2] was a version of Balzac's Père Goriot. The domestic Lear I thought at first was going to be very clever. But he was too pitiful—perhaps the Italian reality would be. He was immensely applauded, though. The house was larger than Drury Lane and the arrangements were excellent. Instead of a ticket for the private box he had taken on the first tier, he received the usual key for admission which let him in as if he lived there; and for the whole set-out, quite as comfortable and private as a box at our opera, paid only eight and fourpence English.

To THOMAS MITTON, [12] AUGUST 1844*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 12 Aug was a Monday in 1844; PM 13 Aug 44 confirms. Address: Inghilterra. | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Albaro, Monday afternoon Eleventh August 1844.

My Dear Mitton. As you will desire to know about the taxes, I sit down to answer your letter (received to day) at once. But this will not be posted until tomorrow, as the office would be closed[†3] before I could write and send it into Genoa to day.

The Income Tax, I remember, is not paid. I have no doubt the collector's application is correct, and may be discharged.[†4] I have not my cheque-book here, to make quite sure; but he is an exceedingly respectable man, and I feel quite satisfied it is all right. I am rejoiced to learn that the partnership[†5] proceeds so well; and the success of the two causes at Derby,[†1] I hail as a glorious omen.

We are now in the height of the heat: which is supposed to decline after St. Lorenzo's day—which was on Saturday last.[†2] Walking is wholly out of the question. I feel that deprivation very much; but I have many resources wherever I am; and get on quite happily. The Christmas Book already occupies me, in the preliminary shutting myself up and thinking all the morning; and I shall soon be in full swing with it, I hope. There are so many contrivances for coolness, that within doors it is really much less distressing than on a very hot day in London. It is out of doors—in the Sun—that one feels it; and there it really is, just now, blazing. I turn out before 7 every morning, and plunge into the sea instantly. It is inexpressibly delicious—though the bottom is rocky; and I cut my knees to pieces when the waves are rough. I am learning Italian, which is more difficult than I expected: partly because my book-thoughts interfere with it: and partly because of a preposterous custom the gentry have, of addressing each other—men, observe!—as she, and in the third person. So that instead of saying "how are you?" to a great fellow with a black moustache; you say "Is she quite well?" Charley is learning French of the same gentleman;[†3] and I hope will get on nobly. The cook has picked up more Italian than any of them. She is really a clever woman. The laundress happens to speak good Italian—the Genevese speak nothing Earthly, but a Gibberish of their own—and from her, she has learnt the names of all sorts of meats and vegetables and household articles; so that she can order what is wanted for the house, quite freely. She is the most contented of all the servants too; and although this house is diabolically supplied, in even such small essentials as the commonest saucepans; she gets on just as she would in Devonshire Terrace, somehow or other; and never makes the least complaint. Roche is my right hand still, in all things. And he remains with me, gladly.

I have taken the unexpired term of an English colonel who is going away, in the Palazzo Peschiere (pronounced Peskeeairy): which I enter on the possession of, on the 1st. of October, and hold until the sixteenth of March, at 5 Guineas a week—one more than this place. To remain here in the winter would have been impossible, for there are no fire-places; and the coach-hire into Genoa is very expensive, besides being very damnable, and jolting one to death. The Peschiere is greatly esteemed as being perfectly healthy—in the midst of the most splendid prospects—within the walls of Genoa—in the heart of all the Mountain walks—and surrounded by the most delicious gardens (filled with fountains, orange trees, and all sorts of lovely things) you can conceive: which are not maintained at the expence of the tenant. Within, it is painted: walls and ceilings, every inch: in the most gorgeous manner. There are ten rooms on one floor: few smaller than the largest habitable rooms in Hampton Court Palace: and one quite as long and wide as the Saloon of Drury Lane Theatre; with a great vaulted roof higher than that of the Waterloo Gallery in Windsor Castle—I think again, and can safely add very much higher. It is always let for the winter at £32 per month; but this colonel having taken it for a year and a half certain, got it cheap; and being a great Bozonian, he came to me privately—shewed me the offers he had for it—and said "But if you like to take it, you shall have it before anybody." I caught at it gladly; to the great discomfiture of the other competitors. And the competition for any good place here—there are not four in the whole town—is quite extraordinary.

You will have heard from Fred, I dare say, that poor little Katey has been very ill. She is now recovering, thank Heaven, and goes out every night upon a Donkey. But you would scarcely know her; she is so extremely thin. She would let nobody touch her; in the way of dressing her neck or giving her physic; when she was ill; but her Papa. So I had a pretty tough time of it. But her sweet temper was wonderful to see. I shall be very glad when they can go out for long walks. The time will very soon be here, I trust.

My plans are, to go to Marseilles again, to meet Fred; and to come back by the Cornice Road across the Alps: which I must see, and which will not fit into my other plans. I shall then remain quiet, until I have done my Christmas Book: which will be (I hope) at the end of October, or pretty early in November. I shall then go: taking Roche with me: to Milan, Bologna, Turin, Mantua, Verona, Venice, Florence, and intermediate places. I shall return here, for Christmas, and remain here through January when it is usually very bad weather, and intensely cold. In February, I purpose starting off to Rome—from Rome to Naples—and after seeing Mount Vesuvius, and Herculaneum and Pompeii, away into Sicily, to Mount Etna. Returning to Naples then, I shall come back here by a Steamboat, and remain until the week before Easter, when I shall start off again on a second visit to Rome; that being the time when all sorts of displays take place. Returning here at the End of Easter week, I shall pick up the Caravan, and go straight to Paris: arranging so as to be there, if I can, by the end of April: and remain there, in a lodging, until about the Second week in June. There is no such place for material in my way, as Paris.

These are my present designs, and they seem to be the best; as I shall go into France by the pass of the Great Saint Gotherd (which is the most tremendous pass in the Alps) and by Strasburgh—an entirely new line. Something may occur to change them; but I shall hold to them, if possible.

The novelty having worn off, I think we all like Italian life very well. Fletcher was bit, in this place, beyond all kind of question. But the sea breeze blows away all objections to it. He is known in Genoa (so Roche tells me) as the mad gentleman, and is renowned for believing whatever he is told. You are quite right in your conclusions touching the probable effects of heat upon his addled head. He horrified us the other night, by saying he felt as if it were going to burst; and that he had taken a walk with a lady once, who complained of being similarly affected, and who was escorted to a Madhouse next day. I had some notion of knocking him down with a chair; but he got better.

He always gives a horrible yell, when he first puts his foot in the sea. And to see him; with his very bald head & his very fat body; limping over the sharp rocks in a small, short, tight pair of striped drawers—such as they wear in Masaniello on the stage; which is the dress you are expected to wear here, in bathing—is one of the most ridiculous sights I ever beheld in my life. He is always taken faint, immediately after coming out; and so remains until breakfast is ready: when he goes in, to win, at half a dozen breakfast cups of tea: which he drinks (like Quilp) boiling hot,[†1] and with his eyes standing out, like a lobster's.

The box arrived here, only last Thursday. I have not got my books yet. They are taken out at the Custom House and examined by Priests, before they are allowed to pass. As some Volumes of a French author, Voltaire, are among them, who always wrote against Priests, I fully expect them to be stopped. Though I am not likely to read them to the Genevese, and woo them to their damnation, I am sure.

The other children are all quite well; and they send their loves. The baby is a brilliant fellow. Charley is rather hove down, at times, for want of somebody to play with him. We are too far out of the world here, to get him companions. But wh[en][†2] we move, there is an English Merchant[†3] close by our Palazzo, (who buys all sorts of impossible [things][†4] for us, at wholesale prices) who has a son very like him, and about his own age, with whom he will be able to keep it up.

Give my love to Fred, and ask him to bring—A French Grammar for Charley (we can't get one here in French and English, for Love or Money)—a copy of Overs's book[†5]—and a Unitarian Prayer-Book; which he can buy at one Green's, a bookseller in Newgate Street.[†6] If he can cram two or three packs of playing cards into his trunk, so much the better. Ask him to beg Forster, too, to give him some good little book of general knowledge, out of which the aforesaid Charley may prepare himself to floor his schoolfellows on his return to Ould England. And a copy of Tennyson's Poems, for me.[†7]

I have some difficulty in my mind, about the best way of giving that Guinea to Overs. Let it be, for the present. Many thanks for your rigid discharge of the other commissions—poor dear Mary's[†8] first, and before all. "Private and Confidential" should be at the top of all the acknowledgements of letters received, which you write: to imply that you opened them on those terms.

The fleas here, surpass the bounds of human credulity. They don't touch me. I have had every atom of Timber's hair cut off. But he is so full of them, still, that it is impossible to allow him to come up stairs. I am afraid they will go before Fred comes; but tell him I will keep them for him if I can. Insects of divers sorts abound. The great Sunday amusement, is for whole families to sit outside their doors, on the pavement: picking the lice out of each other's heads.[†1] As we rode through Genoa to church[†2] yesterday, we saw innumerable little pleasure parties, of this description.

Fletcher is so infernally lazy, that he hasn't copied his sketch. I mean to tell him that if he don't, I'll have the tea reduced in strength. After which terrible threat, I dare say I shall get it to send you in my next. Kate and her sister desire to be heartily remembered. Ever faithfully CD.

Tuesday Morning. The books arrived last night—all complete. They never pass Voltaire; but with great politeness, passed it for me. Englishmen and other foreigners are obliged to apply to the Police for a Permission to reside here: renewable every three months; but they exempt me from these forms, and are exceedingly considerate. I had a private box at the Theatre (which is larger than Drury Lane or Covent Garden) on Saturday Night. It was comfortably fitted up with sofas and a mirror: and cost eight and fourpence English. The opera is open there, in the winter. The banker (Coutts's Correspondent) whom we visit,[†3] has a box. He is a bachelor, and never goes: so he means to place it at our disposal. There is another Theatre,[†4] where the performances are in the open air and in the day time—very cool and pleasant. Katey is still improving, rapidly.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20 AUGUST 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 338, 337, 336-7, 338-9. Date: first extract 20 Aug according to Forster; second extract after 11 Aug (see fn), so probably part of same letter; third extract also, since clearly after first visit to marionettes; dinner-party in fourth extract "in the middle of August" according to Forster.

A Spanish duke[†5] has taken the room under me in the Peschiere. The duchess was his mistress many years, and bore him (I think) six daughters. He always promised her that if she gave birth to a son, he would marry her; and when at last the boy arrived, he went into her bedroom, saying—"Duchess, I am charmed to salute you!" And he married her in good earnest, and legitimatized (as by the Spanish law he could) all the other children.

He had seen a version of Dumas' preposterous play of Kean,[†1] in which most of the representatives of English actors wore red hats with steeple crowns, and very loose blouses with broad belts and buckles round their waists. There was a mysterious person called the Prince of Var-lees, the youngest and slimmest man in the company, whose badinage in Kean's dressing-room was irresistible; and the dresser wore top-boots, a Greek skull-cap, a black velvet jacket, and leather breeches. One or two of the actors looked very hard at me to see how I was touched by these English peculiarities—especially when Kean kissed his male friends on both cheeks.

He wrote of the puppets. There are other things,[†2] too solemnly surprising to dwell upon. They must be seen. They must be seen. The enchanter carrying off the bride is not greater than his men brandishing fiery torches and dropping their lighted spirits of wine at every shake. Also the enchanter himself, when, hunted down and overcome, he leaps into the rolling sea, and finds a watery grave. Also the second comic man, aged about 55 and like George the Third in the face, when he gives out the play for the next night. They must all be seen. They can't be told about. Quite impossible.

He had dined with the French consul-general. There was present, among other Genoese, the Marquis di Negri:[†3] a very fat and much older Jerdan,[†4] with the same thickness of speech and size of tongue. He was Byron's friend,[†1] keeps open house here, writes poetry, improvises, and is a very good old Blunderbore;[†2] just the sort of instrument to make an artesian well with, anywhere. Well, sir, after dinner, the consul proposed my health, with a little French conceit to the effect that I had come to Italy to have personal experience of its lovely climate, and that there was this similarity between the Italian sun and its visitor, that the sun shone into the darkest places and made them bright and happy with its benignant influence, and that my books had done the like with the breasts of men, and so forth. Upon which Blunderbore gives his bright-buttoned blue coat a great rap on the breast, turns up his fishy eye, stretches out his arm like the living statue defying the lightning at Astley's, and delivers four impromptu verses in my honour, at which everybody is enchanted, and I more than anybody—perhaps with the best reason, for I didn't understand a word of them. The consul then takes from his breast a roll of paper, and says, "I shall read them!" Blunderbore then says, "Don't!" But the consul does, and Blunderbore beats time to the music of the verse with his knuckles on the table; and perpetually ducks forward to look round the cap of a lady sitting between himself and me, to see what I think of them. I exhibit lively emotion. The verses are in French—short line—on the taking of Tangiers by the Prince de Joinville,[†3] and are received with great applause; especially by a nobleman present who is reported to be unable to read and write. They end in my mind (rapidly translating them into prose) thus,—

The cannon of France
Shake the foundation
Of the wondering sea,
The artillery on the shore
Is put to silence,
Honour to Joinville[†4]
Rendering thanks
To Heaven.
The King
And all the Royal Family
Are bathed
In tears.

And the Brave!
The Great Intelligence
Is borne
Upon the wings of Fame
To Paris.
Her national citizens
Exchange caresses
In the streets!
The temples are crowded
With religious patriots
They call upon the name
Of Joinville!
France also
Weeps, and echoes it.
Joinville is crowned
With Immortality;
And Peace and Joinville,
And the Glory of France,
Diffuse themselves
Conjointly.

If you can figure to yourself the choice absurdity of receiving anything into one's mind in this way, you can imagine the labour I underwent in my attempts to keep the lower part of my face square, and to lift up one eye gently, as with admiring attention. But I am bound to add that this is really pretty literal; for I read them afterwards.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 AUGUST 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 338, 334. Date: 24 Aug according to Forster.

He described the great public tanks in an archway beneath the Acqua Sola, where, at all ordinary times, washerwomen were washing away, thirty or forty together.[†1] Matters were worse at Albaro: the clothes there being washed in a pond, beaten with gourds, and whitened with a preparation of lime so that what between the beating and the burning they fall into holes unexpectedly, and my white trowsers, after six weeks' washing, would make very good fishing-nets. It is such a serious damage that when we get into the Peschiere we mean to wash at home.

He could ask in Italian for whatever he wanted in any shop or coffee-house, and could read it pretty well.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 24 AUGUST 1844†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Inghilterra. | Clarkson Stanfield Esquire. R.A. | Mornington Place | Hampstead Road | London.

Albaro Saturday Night Twenty Fourth August 1844

My Dear Stanfield. I love you so truly, and have such pride and joy of heart in your friendship, that I don't know how to begin writing to you. When I think how you are walking up and down London in that portly surtout, and can't receive proposals from Dick to go to the theatre, I fall into a state between laughing and crying, and want some friendly back to smite.—"Je-im! Aye aye your honor",—is in my ears every time I walk upon the seashore here; and the number of expeditions I make into Cornwall,[†1] in my sleep—the springs of flys I break, the songs I sing, and the bowls of punch I drink—would soften a heart of stone.

We have had weather here since five o'Clock this morning, after your own heart. Suppose yourself the admiral in Black Eyed Susan—after the acquittal of William, and when it was feasible to be on friendly terms with him.—I am T.P.[†2] My trousers are very full at the ankles—my black neck kerchief is tied in the regular style—the name of my ship is painted round my glazed hat.—I have a red waistcoat on—and the seams of my blue jacket are "paid"[†3]—permit me to dig you in the ribs, when I make use of this nautical expression—with white. In my left hand I hold the baccy box, connected with the Story of Sandomingerbilly.[†4] I lift up my eyebrows as far as I can (on the T.P. model) take a quid from the box—screw the lid on again (chewing at the same time, and looking pleasantly at the pit)—brush it with my right elbow—cock up my right leg—scrape my right foot on the ground—hitch up my trousers—and in reply to a question of yours: namely "Indeed! What weather, William?" deliver myself as follows:

Lord love your honor! Weather!! Such weather as would set all hands to the pumps aboard one of your fresh water cockboats, and set the purser to his wits' ends to stow away for the use of the Ship's company, the casks and casks full of blue water as would come powering in over the gunnel! The dirtiest night, your honor, as ever you see 'atween Spithead at Gunfire[†5] and the Bay of Biscay! The wind Sou West, and your Honor dead in the wind's eye; the breakers running high upon the rocky beach—the light 'us no more looming through the fog, than Davey Jones's sarser eye through the blue sky of Heaven in a calm, or the blue toplights of your Honor's lady, cast down in a modest overhauling of her catheads,[†6]—avast!" (whistling) "my dear eyes here am I a goin, head-on, to the breakers!" (bowing)

Admiral (smiling)—"No William! I admire plain-speaking as you know. And so does old England William, and old England's Queen. But you were saying—"

William. "Aye aye your Honor—I", (scratching his head) "I've lost my reckoning. Damme!—I ast pardon—but won't your honor throw a hencoop, or any ould end of towline to a man as is overboard?"

Admiral. (smiling still) "You were saying, William, that the wind—"

William. (again cocking up his leg and slapping the thigh very hard) "Avast heaving your honor! I see your honor's signal fluttering in the breeze, without a glass! As I was a saying, your honor, the wind a blowin from the Sou West—due Sou West your honor: not a pint to Larboard nor a pint to Starboard—the clouds a gatherin in the distance, for all the world like Beachey Head in a fog—the sea a rowling in, in heaps of foam, and running higher than the mainyard arm—the craft a scuddin by, all taught and under storms'els, for the harbor—not a blessed star a twinklin out aloft—aloft, your honor, in the little Cherub's[†1] Native Country—and the spray a flying like the white foam from Jolly's lips, when Poll of Portsea[†2] took him for a tailor!" (laughs)

Admiral (laughing also) "You have described it well, William, and I thank you. But who are these!"

[Enter Supers—in calico jackets to look like cloth—some in brown holland petticoat trousers and big boots, all in belts with very large buckles. Last Super rolls on a cask and pretends to tap it. Other supers apply tin mugs to the bunghole, and drink—previously holding them upside down.][†3]

William (after shaking hands with everybody) "Who are these your Honor! Mess mates as staunch and true as ever broke biscuit. An't you my lads!"

All. "Aye aye William. That we are. That we are!"

Admiral. (much affected) "Oh England! What wonder that—! But I will no longer detain you from your sports my humble friends" [Admiral speaks very loud, and looks hard at the orchestra this being the cue for the dance]—"from your sports my humble friends. Farewell!"

All. Hurrah! Hurrah! [Exit Admiral]

[Voice behind] Suppose the dance, Mr. Stanfield. Are you all ready? Go—then!

My dear Stanfield, how I wish you would come this way, and see me in the Palazzo Peschiere! Was ever man so welcome as I would make you! What a truly gentlemanly action it would be, to bring Mrs. Stanfield—and the baby! and how Kate and her sister would wave pocket handkerchiefs from the Wharf, in joyful welcome! Ah, what a glorious proceeding!

Do you know this place? Of course you do.[†4] I won't bore you with anything about it, for I know Forster reads my letters to you; but what a place it is! The views from the hills here, and the immense variety of prospects of the sea, are as striking, I think, as such Scenery can be. Above all, the approach to Genoa, by sea from Marseilles, constitutes a Picture which you ought to paint; for nobody else can ever do it! Villain! You made that bridge at Avignon, better than it is. Beautiful as it undoubtedly is,[†5] you made it fifty times better. And if I were Morrison,[†6] or one of that school (bless the dear fellows one and all!) I wouldn't stand it, but would insist on having another picture gratis, to atone for the imposition.

The night is like a seaside night in England, towards the end of September.

They say it is the prelude to clear weather. But the wind is roaring now, and the sea is raving, and the rain is driving down, as if they had all set in for a real hearty pic nic, and each had brought its own contribution[†1] to the general festivity. I don't know whether you are acquainted with the Coast Guard men in these parts? They are extremely civil fellows, of a very amiable manner and appearance, but the most innocent men, in matters you would suppose them to be well acquainted with, in virtue of their office: that I ever encountered. One of them asked me, only yesterday, if it would take a Year to get to England in a ship. Which I thought for a Coast Guard man was rather a tidy question.—It would take a long time to catch a ship going there, if he were on board a pursuing cutter though. I think he would scarcely do it in twelve months, indeed.

[†a]Forster told me, in a letter I received from him yesterday, of your mistake at the Parthenon, in respect of that marvellous likeness of Liston.[†2] I laughed immoderately. He gave me an admirable description of the scene; and when I recollected the laborious manner in which I had impressed the fact of the strong resemblance upon you, in that very room—and the courteous, Academical sympathy for my uneducated eye, with which you had conceded—"Well! he is like him Dick"—I grinned from ear to ear.[†a] So you were at Astley's[†3] t'other night! "Now Mr. Stickney Sir! what can I come for to go for to do, for to bring, for to fetch, for to carry for you Sir?"—"He he he! Oh! I say Sir!"—"Well Sir?"—"Miss Woolford knows me Sir. She laughed at me!"—I see him run away after this;—not on his feet, but on his knees and the calves of his legs alternately —and that smell of sawdusty horses, which was never in any other place in the world, salutes my nose with painful distinctness.

What do you think of my suddenly finding myself a Swimmer? But I have really made the discovery; and skim about a little blue bay just below the house here, like a fish in high spirits. I hope to preserve my bathing dress for your inspection and approval—or possibly to enrich your collection of Italian Costumes—on my return. Do you recollect Yarnold[†4] in Massaniello?[†5] I find that I unintentionally "dress at him", before plunging into the sea. I enhanced the likeness very much last Friday Morning, by singing a barcarole on the rocks. I was a trifle too flesh-coloured (the stage knowing no medium between bright salmon, and dirty yellow); but apart from that defect, not badly made up, by any means.

[†b]I see in Galignani, that a Public dinner is to be given to Mr. Bunn.[†6] It is a great mortification to me, not to be in England; that I might have the honor and gratification of enrolling my name in the list of stewards, and humbly testifying by that action and by my poor presence at the Festival, my sympathy with, and admiration for, a public servant, who, as a gentleman, a manager, a man: and considered either as a public or a private Individual; has no parallel in the country which claims him for her son. When I see such honors paid to this distinguished gentleman, whose speech, whose life, and whose every proceeding in every capacity, so justly entitle him to that meed of public approbation which he has so well earned, I feel, indeed that the regeneration of the Drama is at hand; and that its golden age (or it may be, brazen; at this distance the metals resemble each other, very nearly) has not departed from our happy shores. If you think Lord Glengall likely to buy this, for his speech, I will take five guineas for it, and subscribe the Sum to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.[†b]

[†c]When you write to me, my dear Stanny; as I hope you will soon; address, Poste Restante Genoa.[†c] I remain out here until the end of September, and send in for my letters daily. There is a Postman for this place, but he gets drunk and loses the letters; after which he calls to say so, and to fall upon his knees—[†d]which is affecting, but not satisfactory.[†d] About three weeks ago, I caught him at a Wine shop near here; playing bowls in the garden. It was then about five o'Clock in the afternoon; and he had been airing a newspaper addressed to me, since 9 o'Clock in the Morning.

Kate and Georgina unite with me in most cordial remembrances to Mrs. and Miss Stanfield,[†1] and to all the children;[†2] [†e]who I hope are well and thriving.[†e] They particularize all sorts of messages, but I tell them they had better write themselves if they want to send any. Though I don't know that their writing would end in the safe deliverance of those commodities after all; for when I began this letter, I meant to give utterance to all kinds of heartiness, my dear Stanfield; and I come to the end of it without having said anything more than that I am—which is new to you—under every circumstance and everywhere

Your most affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To T. C. CURRY, 31 AUGUST 1844*

MS University of Texas.

Albaro. | Saturday Thirty First | August 1844

My Dear Sir

I should have written to you yesterday, but was not quite sure that I should get so far round the corner as to be myself again,[†1] by tomorrow. In which case, I should have had nothing to say.

What I have now to ask, is, whether you will do the friendly deed of coming to dine with us tomorrow at four, along with your, and Fletcher's, friend?[†2] Mrs. Dickens reports after a careful examination of the kitchen (which is very easily made, as there is hardly anything in it) that there are plates enough for two guests. So will you come, and say Grace before the more hospitable meat of the Peschiere.

With best Regards, in which my ladies join, to all your house

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Currie[†3] Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?31 AUGUST 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 341*n*, 340, 340-1; 335. Date: first extract "three weeks later" than letter of ?10 Aug; second and third extracts clearly after To Stanfield, 24 Aug —and To Curry, 31 Aug, shows that CD had recovered from his attack of illness; fourth extract in a letter which Forster received "before the end of the second week of September".

Timber's hair is growing again, so that you can dimly perceive him to be a dog. The fleas only keep three of his legs off the ground now, and he sometimes moves of his own accord towards some place where they don't want to go.

After the French consul's dinner-party he was invited to a great reception at the Marquis di Negro's on his daughter's birthday.[†4] The grottoes and fanciful walks in the grounds reminded him of old White-conduit-house, except that he would have been well-pleased, on the present occasion, to have discovered a waiter crying, "Give your orders, gents!" it being not easy to him at any time to keep up, the whole night through, on ices and variegated lamps merely. He was amused by the old Marquis himself, who was constantly diving out into dark corners and then among the lattice-work and flower pots, rubbing his hands and going round and round with explosive chuckles in his huge satisfaction with the entertainment. It occurred to him, however, with horror, that four more hours of this kind of entertainment would be too much; that the Genoa gates closed at twelve; and that as the carriage had not been ordered till the dancing was expected to be over and the gates to reopen, he must make a sudden bolt if he would himself get back to Albaro. I had barely time to reach the gate before midnight; and was running as hard as I could go, downhill, over uneven ground, along a new street called the strada Sevra, when I came to a pole fastened straight across the street, nearly breast high, without any light or watchman—quite in the Italian style. I went over it, headlong, with such force that I rolled myself completely white in the dust; but although I tore my clothes to shreds, I hardly scratched myself except in one place on the knee. I had no time to think of it then, for I was up directly and off again to save the gate: but when I got outside the wall, and saw the state I was in, I wondered I had not broken my neck. I "took it easy" after this, and walked home, by lonely ways enough, without meeting a single soul. But there is nothing to be feared, I believe, from midnight walks in this part of Italy. In other places you incur the danger of being stabbed by mistake; whereas the people here are quiet and good-tempered, and very rarely commit any outrage.

There followed a short but sharp attack of illness. It came on with the old unspeakable and agonizing pain in the side and yielded quickly to powerful remedies. But for a few days he had to content himself with the minor sights of Albaro. He sat daily in the shade of the ruined chapel[†1] on the seashore. He looked in at the festa in the small country church,[†2] consisting mainly of a tenor singer, a seraphine, and four priests sitting gaping in a row on one side of the altar, in flowered satin dresses and little cloth caps, looking exactly like the band at a wild-beast-caravan. He was interested in the wine-making, and in seeing the country tenants preparing their annual presents for their landlords, of baskets of grapes and other fruit prettily dressed with flowers. This brought out after dusk strong parties of rats to eat them as they ripened, and so many shooting parties of peasants to get rid of these despoilers, that as he first listened to the uproar of the firing and the echoes he half fancied it a siege of Albaro. The flies mustered strong, too, and the mosquitoes; so that at night he had to lie covered up with gauze, like cold meat in a safe.

The servants are beginning to pick up scraps of Italian; some of them go to a weekly conversazione of servants at the Governor's[†3] every Sunday night, having got over their consternation at the frequent introduction of quadrilles on these occasions; and I think they begin to like their foreigneering life.

September

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 1 SEPTEMBER 1844

MS Professor E. S. Pearson. Address: Inghilterra. | Samuel Rogers Esquire | Saint James's Place | London.

Albaro near Genoa. Sunday First September | 1844.

My Dear Mr. Rogers. We have been greatly concerned to hear, through Mr. Forster, of your having been unwell,[†4] and seriously so. But hearing from the same source that you had recovered, we were, like the town ladies in the Vicar of Wakefield (with a small difference in respect of sincerity) extremely glad again.[†5] And to the end that we may not be made sorry once more, by any flying rumours that may shape their course this way, we entreat you to let us know, under your own hand, that you are in as good health, heart, and spirits, as we would have you. Believe me, dear friend, you need not desire to be in better condition than that.

We are living very quietly out here, close to the Seashore. I have taken a very commodious and spacious apartment in the Palazzo Peschiere for the next six months. Do you know that Palace? It is splendidly situated, in the midst of beautiful gardens, and on the side of a steep hill. The grounds being open to the Public for their recreation, I may say of it: altering three words of yours

> 'Tis in the heart of Genoa (he who comes,
> Should come on foot) and in a place of stir;
> Men on their daily pleasure, early and late,
> Thronging its very threshold.[†1]

I wish you would come, and pluck an Orange from the Tree at Christmas Time. You should walk on the Terrace as early in the morning as you pleased; and there are brave breezy places in the neighbourhood to which you could transfer those stalwart Broadstairs walks of yours, and hear the Sea, too, roaring in your ears. I could shew you an old chest, in a disused room upstairs, where Ginevra's sister[†2] may have hidden—alas she was an only child! But where she might have hidden had she ever lived and died, and left her Memory to you. Come and see it.

A little, patient, revolutionary officer;[†3] exiled in England during many years; comes to and fro three times a week, to read and speak Italian with me. A poor little lame butterfly of a man, fluttering a little bit at one time, and hopping a little bit at another, and getting through life at some disadvantage or other, always. If I question him closely on some idiom which he is not in a condition to explain, he usually shakes his head dolefully, and begins to cry. But this is not what I meant to say just now, when I began to allude to him. He has initiated me in the Promessi Sposi[†4]—the book which Violetta read, that night.[†5] And what a clever book it is! I have not proceeded far into the story,[†6] but I am quite charmed with it. The interviews between the Bridegroom and the Priest, on the Morning of the disappointment[†1]—and between the Bridegroom and the Bride, and her Mother—and the description of poor Renzo's walk to the house of the learned doctor; with the fowls—and the scene between them[†2]—and the whole idea of the character and story of Padre Christoforo are touched, I think, by a most delicate and charming hand. I have just left the good father in Don Rodrigo's boisterous Eating Hall; and am in no little anxiety, I assure you.[†3]

You recollect the Church of the Cappuccini—l'Annunciata?[†4] It is being entirely re-painted and regilded; and a marble portico is building, over the Great Entrance. That part of the interior—some two thirds—the redecoration of which is finished, is the most gorgeous work imaginable. Standing on a bright day before the Great Altar, and looking up into the three Domes, one is made giddy by the flash and glory of the place. The contrast between this Temple and its Ministers is the most singular and complete that the whole World could furnish, surely. But it is a land of contradictions, in everything, this Italy.

Do you know of the Marriage Brokers, among the Genevese? Sometimes they are old women—queer old women who are always presenting themselves mysteriously at unexpected times, like their sisterhood in the Arabian Nights.[†5] But there are men brokers: shrewd, hard, thorough-paced men of business. They keep formal registers of marriageable young gentlemen and marriageable young ladies; and when they find a very good match on their books—or rather when one of these gentry does—he goes to the Young Lady's father, and says, "Signore, you have a daughter to dispose of?"—"I have," says the father. "And you will give her," says the broker, "fifty thousand francs?" "On fair terms," replies the father. "Signore," says the broker, "I know a young gentleman, with fifty thousand francs embarked in business, who will take fifty thousand francs, and the clothes."—"Clothes to what value?" asks the father. "Clothes to the value of five hundred francs," says the broker:—"And a gold watch. She must have a gold watch."—"His terms are too high," says the father. "My daughter hasn't got a gold watch."—"But Signore, she has a cast in her eye," says the broker; "And a cast in the eye is cheap at a gold watch."—"Say clothes worth two hundred and fifty francs," retorts the father, "and a silver bracelet. I admit the cast in the eye, and will throw in the bracelet: though its too much."—"We couldn't do it Signore," says the broker, "under a gold watch. The young gentleman might have done better in his last negociation; but he stood out for a watch. Besides, Signore, as a fair-dealing man, you must make some allowance for the ankles: which," says the broker, referring to his books, "are thick. If I did rigid justice to my employer, Signore, and hadn't a personal regard for you, I should require a hundred and fifty francs, at least, for each leg." On such terms the bargain is discussed and the balance struck; and the young people don't see each other, until it is all settled.

In short it's very like the system of our own dear Dowagers at home; except that the Broker boldly calls himself a Marriage Broker, and has his regular percentage on the fortune.—Which some of our own revered Merchants in such wares wouldn't object to, I dare say. I should like to start somebody I know at Fulham,[†1] in business, on those terms.

My dear Mr. Rogers, if you ever get to the end of this letter, without leaping over the middle, forgive me. If you get to the end by a short cut, remember me not the less kindly; and however you get to the end, believe me that although it is all True, the truest part of the whole is, the assurance that I am always, with great regard, Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Kate and her sister, rebel, at not being mentioned by name. I am pretending to write long messages—which would take another sheet, at least.

To CHARLES KEMBLE, 3 SEPTEMBER 1844*

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Address: Inghilterra | Charles Kemble Esquire | Garrick Club | King Street | Covent Garden | London | To be forwarded.

Albaro, Near Genoa. Tuesday Third September 1844.

My Dear Mr. Kemble.

You recollect our covenant and agreement; made and entered into, on the blank day of blank, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Forty Four; whereby I covenanted and agreed to put you in possession of my plans as soon as I had formed them?

Here they are, then. I shall go away from here, for about Three Weeks, towards the middle of November—certainly not before, being now engaged upon a task: I shall go, then, to Milan, Turin, Mantua, Verona, Florence, Pisa, and Venice. I shall return here for Christmas and January; and burn coal fires and take long walks. Sometime in February, most likely, I shall start for Rome, and remain there, during the Carnival—then go to Naples—Herculaneum—Pompeii—and away to Mount Etna—returning to Rome for the Holy Week; coming back here afterwards; picking up bag and baggage; and going for six weeks or a couple of months to Paris.

My address is, Genoa. On the first of October, we move into the Palazzo Peschiere, within the walls. I have taken a charming apartment there, for six months. There are more beds in it than you could sleep in, if you changed once a week. There will be a welcome there, such as you have long been used to in many places and from many lips; but such, in its cordiality, as cannot be surpassed. I should be unfeignedly and heartily glad to see you. To have and to hold you, until you were tired of me.

Mrs. Dickens says the same, and means it. We beg to be remembered to Mr. and Mrs. Sartoris;[†1] and I shall look to hear from you at your pleasure and convenience.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Kemble Esquire.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 7 SEPTEMBER 1844

MS British Museum. Address: A Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | Poste Restante | Genes.

Hotel Du Paradis Marseilles[†2] | September Seventh 1844

My dearest Kate. We arrived here this morning, about 9; after a very pleasant, though rather rough, passage.[†3] I was perfectly well, and slept in a cool little cabin on deck. The Masters and I kept it up pretty gaily—dined luxuriously—and breakfasted on the same model. A person came from the hotel to the boat, as soon as we entered the Harbor, to announce that Fred[†4] had arrived at 5 o'Clock and was then in bed. By the time of my arrival here, he was just sitting down to breakfast. He does not appear to be at all tired.

He has a Moustache. I have not touched on that delicate subject yet, as I desire it to be seen in the Villa di Bagnerello. But I feel (as the Stage Villains say) that Either he or I must fall. Earth will not hold us both.

I purpose leaving here for Toulon (Roche implores me to see it, on his bended knees) by coach tomorrow night at 9 o'Clock.[†5] This will bring us home, most likely in the course of Friday—it may be, Thursday, but I think not. Do not alter any of the arrangements in the Whitest of Willys[†6] on our account; beyond having something to eat, in the house, in case we should want it.

The Colonel forgot to leave the key[†7] of the press in the drawing room, with Bennett.[†8] He has given it to me; and I have it safe.

Fred sends his best love to you and Georgy and the darlings. In which I join. Likewise his best regards to Fletcher. In which I also unite.[†9]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10 SEPTEMBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iv, 342. Date: Forster gives 9 Sep, but clearly the night of 8 Sep had been spent at Nice: see fn.

We lay last night[†1] at the first halting-place[†2] on this journey, in an inn which is not entitled, as it ought to be, The house of call for fleas and vermin in general, but is entitled The grand hotel of the Post! I hardly know what to compare it to. It seemed something like a house in Somers-town originally built for a wine-vaults and never finished, but grown very old. There was nothing to eat in it and nothing to drink. They had lost the teapot; and when they found it, they couldn't make out what had become of the lid, which, turning up at last and being fixed on to the teapot, couldn't be got off again for the pouring in of more water. Fleas of elephantine dimensions were gambolling boldly in the dirty beds; and the mosquitoes!—But here let me draw a curtain (as I would have done if there had been any). We had scarcely any sleep, and rose up with hands and arms hardly human.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15-16 SEPTEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 342-3, 341, 334. Date: third extract 16 Sep according to Forster; first extract clearly part of same letter, and possibly written on previous day; second extract more likely to belong to this letter than to 23 Sep, as reports of O'Connell would certainly have reached CD.

The morning after their arrival at Albaro, Fred very nearly drowned in the bay. He swam out into too strong a current, and was only narrowly saved by the accident of a fishing-boat preparing to leave harbour at the time. It was a world of horror and anguish, crowded into four or five minutes of dreadful agitation; and, to complete the terror of it, Georgy, Charlotte†4, and the children were on a rock in full view of it all, crying, as you may suppose, like mad creatures.†5 being beleaguered by vanity always. Denman delights me.†1 I am glad to think I have always liked him so well. I am sure that whenever he makes a mistake, it is a mistake; and that no man lives who has a grander and nobler scorn of every mean and dastard action. I would to Heaven it were decorous to pay him some public tribute of respect. . . . O'Connell's speeches are the old thing: fretty, boastful, frothy, waspish at the voices in the crowd, and all that: but with no true greatness. . . . What a relief to turn to that noble letter of Carlyle's,†2 which I think above all praise. My love to him.

I have no faith in O'Connell taking the great position he might upon this:

I wish you could see me without my knowing it, walking about alone here. I am now as bold as a lion in the streets. The audacity with which one begins to speak when there is no help for it, is quite astonishing.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 SEPTEMBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, v, 344; mention in F, IV, v, 348. Date: Forster mentions a "first letter" from the Peschiere (about the commissions) and puts the move in "the last week of September"; probably 23 Sep, the Monday of the dream described in CD's "second letter" dated 30 Sep by Forster. Account of storm during the move and first impression clearly from same letter.

They moved from Albaro into Genoa, with great guns blowing, the lightning incessant, and the rain driving down in a dense thick cloud. But the worst of the storm was over when they reached the Peschiere. As they passed into it along the stately old terraces, flanked on either side with antique sculptured figures, all the seven fountains were playing in its gardens, and the sun was shining brightly on its groves of camelias and orange-trees. Sending commissions in regard to his wife's family.†3

To T. C. CURRY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1844

MS Berg Collection.

Peschiere | Monday Thirtieth September | 1844

My Dear Sir

I send you the Chuzzlewit.

My Brother Frederick will be happy to avail himself of your hospitality, whenever you like between this and Friday. I should be truly glad to do so also, but I find that I cannot very well leave home for that purpose just now.[†1] I shall soon be alone here, with my own household; and then I hope we shall see each other often.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas C. Curry Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 SEPTEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, v, 344-5, 348-9; VI, vii, 552. Date: first extract almost certainly his second letter from the Peschiere; second extract specified as such and dated 30 Sep by Forster; third extract "September from the Peschiere" according to Forster and therefore either 23 or 30 Sep.

Describing the rooms in the Peschiere:[†2] in the centre was the grand sala, fifty feet high,[†3] of an area larger than the dining-room of the Academy, and painted, walls and ceiling, with frescoes three hundred years old, as fresh as if the colours had been laid on yesterday. On the same floor were a drawing-room, and a dining-room, into which we might put your large room—I wish we could!—away in one corner, and dine without knowing it. Out of these opened three other chambers that were turned into sleeping-rooms and nurseries. Adjoining the sala, right and left, were the two best bed-rooms; in size and shape like those at Windsor-castle but greatly higher; both having altars, a range of three windows with stone balconies, floors tesselated in patterns of black and white stone, and walls painted every inch: on the left, nymphs pursued by satyrs as large as life and as wicked; on the right, Phaeton larger than life, with horses bigger than Meux and Co.'s, tumbling headlong down into the best bed. The right-hand room he occupied with his wife, and of the left took possession as a study; writing behind a big screen he had lugged into it, and placed by one of the windows, from which he could see over the city, as he wrote, as far as the lighthouse in its harbour. Distant little over a mile as the crow flew, flashing five times in four minutes, and on dark nights, as if by magic, illuminating brightly the whole palace-front every time it shone, this lighthouse was one of the wonders of Genoa.

Let me tell you of a curious dream I had, last Monday night; and of the fragments of reality I can collect, which helped to make it up. I have had a return of rheumatism in my back, and knotted round my waist like a girdle of pain; and had laid awake nearly all that night under the infliction, when I fell asleep and dreamed this dream. Observe that throughout I was as real, animated, and full of passion as Macready (God bless him!) in the last scene of Macbeth. In an indistinct place, which was quite sublime in its indistinctness, I was visited by a Spirit. I could not make out the face, nor do I recollect that I desired to do so. It wore a blue drapery, as the Madonna might in a picture by Raphael; and bore no resemblance to any one I have known except in stature. I think (but I am not sure) that I recognized the voice. Anyway, I knew it was poor Mary's spirit. I was not at all afraid, but in a great delight, so that I wept very much, and stretching out my arms to it called it "Dear." At this, I thought it recoiled; and I felt immediately, that not being of my gross nature, I ought not to have addressed it so familiarly. "Forgive me!" I said. "We poor living creatures are only able to express ourselves by looks and words. I have used the word most natural to our affections; and you know my heart." It was so full of compassion and sorrow for me—which I knew spiritually, for, as I have said, I didn't perceive its emotions by its face—that it cut me to the heart; and I said, sobbing, "Oh! give me some token that you have really visited me!" "Form a wish," it said. I thought, reasoning with myself: "If I form a selfish wish, it will vanish." So I hastily discarded such hopes and anxieties of my own as came into my mind, and said, "Mrs. Hogarth is surrounded with great distresses"—observe, I never thought of saying "your mother" as to a mortal creature—"will you extricate her?" "Yes." "And her extrication is to be a certainty to me, that this has really happened?" "Yes." "But answer me one other question!" I said, in an agony of entreaty lest it should leave me. "What is the True religion?" As it paused a moment without replying, I said—Good God, in such an agony of haste, lest it should go away!—"You think, as I do, that the Form of religion does not so greatly matter, if we try to do good?—or," I said, observing that it still hesitated, and was moved with the greatest compassion for me, "perhaps the Roman Catholic is the best? perhaps it makes one think of God oftener, and believe in him more steadily?" "For you," said the Spirit, full of such heavenly tenderness for me, that I felt as if my heart would break; "for you, it is the best!" Then I awoke, with the tears running down my face, and myself in exactly the condition of the dream. It was just dawn. I called up Kate, and repeated it three or four times over, that I might not unconsciously make it plainer or stronger afterwards. It was exactly this. Free from all hurry, nonsense, or confusion, whatever. Now, the strings I can gather up, leading to this, were three. The first you know, from the main subject of my last letter. The second was, that there is a great altar in our bedroom, at which some family who once inhabited this palace had mass performed in old time: and I had observed within myself, before going to bed, that there was a mark in the wall, above the sanctuary, where a religious picture used to be; and I had wondered within myself what the subject might have been, and what the face was like. Thirdly, I had been listening to the convent bells (which ring at intervals in the night), and so had thought, no doubt, of Roman Catholic services. And yet, for all this, put the case of that wish being fulfilled by any agency in which I had no hand; and I wonder whether I should regard it as a dream, or an actual Vision![†1]

There has arrived a characteristic letter for Kate from my father. He dates it Manchester, and says he has reason to believe that he will be in town with the pheasants, on or about the first of October. He has been with Fanny in the Isle of Man[†2] for nearly two months: finding there, as he goes on to observe, troops of friends, and every description of continental luxury at a cheap rate.

October

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 OCTOBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, v, 344*n*; IV, iv, 341-2 (aa only F, 1872-4, II, V, III); IV, V, 345-6. Date: first extract 6 Oct according to Forster; second extract almost certainly same letter, as the nearest in date to Robertson's visit (see fn); third extract "only two days" before next, which is more likely to be 8 Oct than 7 Oct (see hn).

Describing the drawing-room and dining-room: Very vast you will say, and very dreary; but it is not so really. The paintings are so fresh, and the proportions so agreeable to the eye, that the effect is not only cheerful but snug. . . . We are a little incommoded by applications from strangers to go over the interior. The paintings were designed by Michael Angelo, and have a great reputation . . . Certain of these frescoes were reported officially to the Fine Arts Commissioners by Wilson[†3] as the best in Italy[†4] . . . I allowed a party of priests to be shown the great hall yesterday . . . It is in perfect repair, and the doors almost shut—which is quite a miraculous circumstance. I wish you could see it, my dear F. Gracious Heavens! if you could only come back with me, wouldn't I soon flash on your astonished sight.

He had a visit from Lord Robertson,[†1] who had received letters about the Burns Festival[†2] giving an awful narrative of Wilson's[†3] speech and of the whole business.[†4] There was one man who spoke a quarter of an hour or so, to the toast of the navy; and could say nothing more than "the—British—navy—always appreciates—" which remarkable sentiment he repeated over and over again for that space of time; and then sat down.[†5] Robertson told me also that Wilson's allusion to, or I should rather say expatiation upon, the "vices" of Burns, excited but one sentiment ([a]of indignation and disgust;([a] and added, very sensibly, "By God!—I want to know what Burns did! I never heard of his doing anything that need be strange or unaccountable to the Professor's mind. ([a]I think he must have mistaken the name, and fancied it a dinner to the sons of Burke"—meaning of course the murderer.([a] In short he fully confirmed Jerrold in all respects.[†6] He had been reading the Story of a Feather. Gauntwolf's sickness and the career of that snuffbox, masterly.[†7] I have been deep in Voyages and Travels,[†1] and in De Foe.[†2] Tennyson I have also been reading, again and again. What a great creature he is! . . . What about the Goldsmith?[†3] Apropos, I am all eagerness to write a story about the length of that most delightful of all stories,[†4] the Vicar of Wakefield.[†5]

About the Christmas Book: Never did I stagger so upon a threshold before. I seem as if I had plucked myself out of my proper soil when I left Devonshire-terrace; and could take root no more until I return to it. . . . Did I tell you how many fountains[†6] we have here? No matter. If they played nectar, they wouldn't please me half so well as the West Middlesex water-works at Devonshire-terrace. Sitting down on the previous morning resolute for work,[†7] though against the grain, his hand being out and everything inviting to idleness, such a peal of chimes[†8] arose from the city as he found to be maddening. All Genoa lay beneath him, and up from it, with some sudden set of the wind, came in one fell sound the clang and clash of all its steeples, pouring into his ears again and again, in a tuneless, grating, discordant, jerking, hideous vibration that made his ideas spin round and round till they lost themselves in a whirl of vexation and giddiness, and dropped down dead.[†9]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 OCTOBER 1844]

Text from F, IV, v, 346. Date: "Only two days later" than last, according to Forster, and almost certainly same day as next, in which "it's a great thing to have my title".

A letter in which not a syllable was written but "We have heard THE CHIMES at midnight, Master Shallow!"[†10]

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, v, 346. Date: 8 Oct according to Forster.

He so missed his long night-walks before beginning that he seemed dumbfounded without them. I can't help thinking of the boy in the school-class whose button was cut off by Walter Scott and his friends.[†1] Put me down on Waterloo-bridge at eight o'clock in the evening, with leave to roam about as long as I like, and I would come home, as you know, panting to go on. I am sadly strange as it is, and can't settle. You will have lots of hasty notes from me while I am at work: but you know your man; and whatever strikes me, I shall let off upon you as if I were in Devonshire-terrace. It's a great thing to have my title, and see my way how to work the bells. Let them clash upon me now from all the churches and convents in Genoa, I see nothing but the old London belfry[†2] I have set them in. In my mind's eye, Horatio. I like more and more my notion of making, in this little book, a great blow for the poor. Something powerful, I think I can do, but I want to be tender too, and cheerful; as like the Carol in that respect as may be, and as unlike it as such a thing can be. The duration of the action will resemble it a little, but I trust to the novelty of the machinery to carry that off; and if my design be anything at all, it has a grip upon the very throat of the time.

To T. YEATS BROWN,[†3] [?OCTOBER 1844]

Mention in To Forster, ?18 Oct. Date: shortly after the Governor's arrival on 5 Oct (see To Forster, 18 Oct and fns).

Excusing himself from the Governor's levee.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, v, 350. Date: one of the "frequent letters while he was fairly in his work".

With my steam very much up, I find it a great trial to be so far off from you, and consequently to have no one (always excepting Kate and Georgy) to whom to expatiate on my day's work. And I want a crowded street to plunge into at night. And I want to be "on the spot" as it were. But apart from such things, he life I lead is favourable to work.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, V, 350. Date: "his next letter" after preceding one according to Forster; "fierce to finish" does not necessarily suggest that he was close to the end, but merely foreseeing it.

I am in regular, ferocious excitement with the Chimes; get up at seven; have a cold bath before breakfast; and blaze away, wrathful and red-hot, until three o'clock or so: when I usually knock off (unless it rains) for the day. . . . I am fierce to finish in a spirit bearing some affinity to those of truth and mercy, and to shame the cruel and the canting. I have not forgotten my catechism. "Yes verily, and with God's help, so I will!"[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13-14 OCTOBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, V, 350, 354-5. Date: first extract "in the middle of October" according to Forster, and "in reply to my mention of what had most attracted myself" in the Life of Dr. Arnold—reviewed by Forster in Examiner, 12 Oct; second extract not later than Mon 14 Oct—To Macready, that day, refers to CD's visit to London, and he had received Forster's reply by the beginning of Nov (see To Forster, ?1-2 Nov).

I respect and reverence his memory, beyond all expression. I must have that book.[†2] Every sentence that you quote from it is the text-book of my faith.[†3]

He planned to come to London.[†4] If I come, I shall put up at Cuttris's,[†5] that I may be close to you. Don't say to anybody, except our immediate friends, that I am coming. Then I shall not be bothered. If I should preserve my present fierce writing humour, in any pass I may run to Venice, Bologna, and Florence, before I turn my face towards Lincoln's-inn-fields; and come to England by Milan and Turin. But this of course depends in a great measure on your reply.

To W. C. MACREADY, 14 OCTOBER 1844

MS Morgan Library.

Palazzo Peschiere. Genoa.
Fourteenth October 1844.

My Very Dear Macready.

My whole heart is with you at home. I have not yet felt so far off, as I do now—when I think of you there[†1]—and cannot fold you in my arms. This is only a shake of the hand. I couldn't say much to you, if I were one to greet you. Nor can I write much, when I think of you, safe and sound, and happy, after all your wanderings.

My dear fellow, God bless you twenty thousand times. [All][†2] happiness and joy be with you! I hope to see you soon. If I should be so unfortunate, as to miss you in London, I will fall upon you, with a swoop of Love, in Paris.[†3] Kate says all kind things in the Language; and means more than are in the Dictionary-Capacity of all the descendants of all the Stone Masons that worked at Babel. Again and again and again, my own true friend, God bless you!

Ever yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. C. CURRY, 17 OCTOBER 1844*

MS New York University Library.

Peschiere | Thursday Evening | October Seventeenth | 1844.

My Dear Sir

I earnestly congratulate you on the happy termination of your anxieties in behalf of Mrs. Curry. May your new child be a new comfort and blessing to you both!

I have to thank you for something that stands on my desk at this moment, and will hold its place there (I hope) for many years.[†4] You could have given me nothing so likely to be my very constant companion. And I shall never look at it, I am sure, in my working hours, without associating it with the grateful recollection of your most considerate kindness and hearty good will.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas C. Curry Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, v, 350-3. Date: 18 Oct according to Forster; accompanied the MS of the First Quarter of The Chimes.

I send you to-day by mail, the first and longest of the four divisions. This is great for the first week,[†1] which is usually up-hill. I have kept a copy in shorthand in case of accidents. I hope to send you a parcel every Monday until the whole is done. I do not wish to influence you, but it has a great hold upon me, and has affected me, in the doing, in divers strong ways, deeply, forcibly. To give you better means of judgment I will sketch for you the general idea, but pray don't read it until you have read this first part of the MS.

The general notion is this. That what happens to poor Trotty in the first part, and what will happen to him in the second (when he takes the letter to a punctual and a great man of business,[†2] who is balancing his books and making up his accounts, and complacently expatiating on the necessity of clearing off every liability and obligation, and turning over a new leaf and starting fresh with the new year), so dispirits him, who can't do this, that he comes to the conclusion that his class and order have no business with a new year, and really are "intruding." And though he will pluck up for an hour or so, at the christening (I think) of a neighbour's child,[†3] that evening: still, when he goes home, Mr. Filer's precepts will come into his mind, and he will say to himself, "we are a long way past the proper average of children, and it has no business to be born:" and will be wretched again. And going home, and sitting there alone, he will take that newspaper out of his pocket, and reading of the crimes and offences of the poor, especially of those whom Alderman Cute is going to put down, will be quite confirmed in his misgiving that they are bad; irredeemably bad.[†4] In this state of mind, he will fancy that the Chimes are calling to him; and saying to himself "God help me. Let me go up to 'em. I feel as if I were going to die in despair—of a broken heart; let me die among the bells that have been a comfort to me!"—will grope his way up into the tower; and fall down in a kind of swoon among them.[†5] Then the third quarter, or in other words the beginning of the second half of the book, will open with the Goblin part of the thing: the bells ringing, and innumerable spirits (the sound or vibration of them) flitting and tearing in and out of the church-steeple, and bearing all sorts of missions and commissions and reminders and reproaches, and comfortable recollections and what not, to all sorts of people and places. Some bearing scourges; and others flowers, and birds, and music; and others pleasant faces in mirrors, and others ugly ones: the bells haunting people in the night (especially the last of the old year) according to their deeds. And the bells themselves, who have a goblin likeness to humanity in the midst of their proper shapes, and who shine in a light of their own, will say (the Great Bell being the chief spokesman)[†1] Who is he that being of the poor doubts the right of poor men to the inheritance which Time reserves for them, and echoes an unmeaning cry against his fellows? Toby, all aghast, will tell him it is he, and why it is.[†2] Then the spirits of the bells will bear him through the air to various scenes, charged with this trust: That they show him how the poor and wretched, at the worst—yes, even in the crimes that aldermen put down, and he has thought so horrible—have some deformed and hunchbacked goodness clinging to them; and how they have their right and share in Time.[†3] Following out the history of Meg the Bells will show her, that marriage broken off and all friends dead, with an infant child; reduced so low, and made so miserable, as to be brought at last to wander out at night. And in Toby's sight, her father's, she will resolve to drown herself and the child together. But before she goes down to the water, Toby will see how she covers it with a part of her own wretched dress, and adjusts its rags so as to make it pretty in its sleep, and hangs over it, and smooths its little limbs, and loves it with the dearest love that God ever gave to mortal creatures;[†4] and when she runs down to the water, Toby will cry "Oh spare her! Chimes, have mercy on her! Stop her!"—and the bells will say, "Why stop her? She is bad at heart—let the bad die." And Toby on his knees will beg and pray for mercy: and in the end the bells will stop her, by their voices, just in time. Toby will see, too, what great things the punctual man has left undone on the close of the old year, and what accounts he has left unsettled: punctual as he is. And he will see a great many things about Richard, once so near being his son-in-law, and about a great many people. And the moral of it all will be, that he has his port on in the new year no less than any other man, and that the poor require a deal of beating out of shape before their human shape is gone; that even in their frantic wickedness there may be good in their hearts triumphantly asserting itself, though all the aldermen alive say "No," as he has learnt from the agony of his own child; and that the truth is Trustfulness in them, not doubt, nor putting down, nor filing them away.[†5] And when at last a great sea rises, and this sea of Time comes sweeping down, bearing the alderman and such mudworms of the earth away to nothing, dashing them to fragments in its fury—Toby will climb a rock and hear the bells (now faded from his sight) pealing out upon the waters. And as he hears them, and looks round for help, he will wake up and find himself with the newspaper lying at his foot; and Meg sitting opposite to him at the table, making up the ribbons for her wedding to-morrow; and the window open, that the sound of the bells ringing the old year out and the new year in may enter. They will just have broken out, joyfully; and Richard will dash in to kiss Meg before Toby, and have the first kiss of the new year (he'll get it too); and the neighbours will crowd round with good wishes; and a band will strike up gaily (Toby knows a Drum in private); and the altered circumstances, and the ringing of the bells, and the jolly musick, will so transport the old fellow that he will lead off a country dance forthwith in an entirely new step, consisting of his old familiar trot. Then quoth the inimitable—Was it a dream of Toby's after all? Or is Toby but a dream? and Meg a dream? and all a dream![†1] In reference to which, and the realities of which dreams are born, the inimitable will be wiser than he can be now, writing for dear life, with the post just going, and the brave C booted. . . . Ah how I hate myself, my dear fellow, for this lame and halting outline of the Vision I have in my mind. But it must go to you. . . . You will say what is best for the frontis-piece.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, V, 346-7. Date: 18 Oct according to Forster, but clearly a distinct letter from preceding one, which concludes at post-time; unlikely that CD would begin that letter with the present extract.

He described how, bent upon his work, he had been disturbed by hearing that he must attend the levee of the Governor[†3] who had unexpectedly arrived in the city, and who, Fletcher told him, would be affronted if he did not go. It was the morning on which I was going to begin, so I wrote round to our consul praying that excuse should be made. Don't bother yourself, he replied, for all the consuls and governors alive; but shut yourself up by all means. So he went next morning in great state and full costume, to present two English gentlemen. "Where's the great poet?" said the Governor. "I want to see the great poet." "The great poet, your excellency," said the consul, "is at work, writing a book, and begged me to make his excuses." "Excuses!" said the Governor, "I wouldn't interfere with such an occupation for all the world. Pray tell him that my house is open to the honour of his presence when it is perfectly convenient for him; but not otherwise. And let no gentleman," said the Governor, a surweyin' of his suite with a majestic eye, "call upon Signor Dickens till he is understood to be disengaged." And he sent somebody with his own cards next day. Now I do seriously call this, real politeness and pleasant consideration—not positively American, but still gentlemanly and polished.[†1] The same spirit pervades the inferior departments; and I have not been required to observe the usual police regulations, or to put myself to the slightest trouble about anything.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?21 OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, V, 353; mention in F, 1872-4, II, V, 91*n*; extract in F, IV, V, 354. Date: first extract "after a week's interval" (from 18 Oct) according to Forster; but 25 Oct hardly possible in view of "eight more days" interval before next letter, and CD intended to send "a parcel every Monday" (see To Forster, 18 Oct); probably same date as letter mentioned by Forster as 21 Oct (a Monday). Final extract "after three Mondays" according to Forster—i.e. the first three Mondays in Oct, and clearly before Sat 26 Oct when the weather changed, and so probably part of same letter, written late on third Monday.

Sending the Second Quarter, and explaining some changes in the plan.[†2] I am still in stout heart with the tale. I think it well-timed and a good thought; and as you know I wouldn't say so to anybody else, I don't mind saying freely thus much. It has great possession of me every moment in the day; and drags me where it will. . . . If you only could have read it all at once!—But you never would have done that, anyway, for I never should have been able to keep it to myself; so that's nonsense. I hope you'll like it. I would give a hundred pounds (and think it cheap) to see you read it. . . . Never mind.

They had had, so far, only four really clear days since they came to Italy.

Weather worse than any November English weather I have ever beheld, or any weather I have had experience of anywhere. So horrible to-day that all power has been rained and gloomed out of me. Yesterday, in pure determination to get the better of it, I walked twelve miles in mountain rain. You never saw it rain. Scotland and America are nothing to it.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, V, 353. Date: with the Third Quarter, "after eight more days" according to Forster. The Fourth Quarter was finished on 3 Nov, and four to five days spent on it seems likely.

This book (whether in the Hajji Baba sense or not I can't say, but certainly in the literal one) has made my face white in a foreign land.[†1] My cheeks, which were beginning to fill out, have sunk again; my eyes have grown immensely large; my hair is very lank; and the head inside the hair is hot and giddy. Read the scene at the end of the third part, twice.[†2] I wouldn't write it twice, for something. . . . You will see that I have substituted the name of Lilian for Jessie. It is prettier in sound, and suits my music better.[†3] I mention this, lest you should wonder who and what I mean by that name. To-morrow I shall begin afresh (starting the next part with a broad grin,[†4] and ending it with the very soul of jollity and happiness); and I hope to finish by next Monday at latest. Perhaps on Saturday. I hope you will like the little book. Since I conceived, at the beginning of the second part, what must happen in the third, I have undergone as much sorrow and agitation as if the thing were real; and have wakened up with it at night. I was obliged to lock myself in when I finished it yesterday, for my face was swollen for the time to twice its proper size, and was hugely ridiculous.[†5] . . . I am going for a long walk, to clear my head. I feel that I am very shakey from work, and throw down my pen for the day. There! (That's where it fell.)[†6]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?31 OCTOBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, v, 354. Date: "two days later" than last according to Forster (353).

The weather changed on Saturday night,[†7] and has been glorious ever since. I am afraid to say more in its favour, lest it should change again.

November

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 OCTOBER-2 NOVEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, V, 354. Date: The several expeditions and outings which Forster combines in a single paragraph must have followed the change in the weather (see last) and preceded the return of the sirocco (see next).

Describing his walks in the mountain wind, lovely, enjoyable, exquisite past expression; mountain walks behind the Peschiere, most beautiful and fresh, among which, and along the beds of dry rivers and torrents, he could pelt away in any dress, without encountering a soul but the contadini. One day he started off after finishing work fifteen miles to dinner—oh my stars! at such an inn!!! Another day there was a dinner-party at their pleasant little banker's at Quinto six miles off, to which, while the ladies drove, he was able to walk in the sun of the middle of the day and to walk home again at night. Another day, an expedition up the mountain on mules. Another day, a memorable tavern-dinner with their merchant friend Mr. Curry, in which there were such successions of surprising dishes of genuine native cookery that they took two hours in the serving, but of the component parts of not one of which was he able to form the remotest conception: the site of the tavern being on the city wall,[†1] its name in Italian sounding very romantic and meaning "the Whistle", and its bill of fare kept for an experiment to which, before another month should be over, he would challenge Forster's cookery in Lincoln's-inn.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1-2 NOVEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, V, 355, 354. Date: first extract before 3 Nov as CD had not yet finished The Chimes, but not earlier than 1 Nov to allow for the arrival of Forster's comments on the First Quarter, despatched by CD 18 Oct; confirmed by Fred Dickens to Maclise, 8 Nov (MS Benoliel), which assumes that Maclise had heard from Forster that "Charles is expected over . . . very shortly". Second extract "just before he sent his last manuscript" according to Forster, therefore clearly same letter.

Notwithstanding what you say, I am still in the same mind about coming to London.[†2] Not because the proofs concern me at all[†3] (I should be an ass as well as a thankless vagabond if they did), but because of that unspeakable restless something which would render it almost as impossible for me to remain here and not see the thing complete, as it would be for a full balloon, left to itself, not to go up. I do not intend coming from here, but by way of Milan and Turin (previously going to Venice), and so, across the wildest pass of the Alps that may be open, to Strasburg. . . . As you dislike the Young England gentleman[†1] I shall knock him out, and replace him by a man (I can dash him in at your rooms in an hour) who recognizes no virtue in anything but the good old times, and talks of them, parrot-like, whatever the matter is. A real good old city tory, in a blue coat and bright buttons and a white cravat, and with a tendency of blood to the head.[†2] File away at Filer, as you please;[†3] but bear in mind that the Westminster Review[†4] considered Scrooge's presentation of the turkey to Bob Cratchit as grossly incompatible with political economy. I don't care at all for the skittle-playing.[†5]

At the close of his letter:

Shall I confess to you, I particularly want Carlyle[†6] above all to see it before the rest of the world, when it is done; and I should like to inflict the little story on him and on dear old gallant Macready with my own lips, and to have Stanny and the other Mac sitting by. Now, if you was a real gent, you'd get up a little circle for me, one wet evening, when I come to town: and would say, "My boy (SIR, will you have the goodness to leave those books alone and to go downstairs—WHAT the Devil are you doing! And mind, sir, I can see nobody—do you hear? Nobody. I am particularly engaged with a gentleman from Asia)—My boy, would you give us that little Christmas book (a little Christmas book of Dickens's Macready, which I'm anxious you should hear); and don't slur it, now, or be too fast, Dickens, please!"—I say, if you was a real gent, something to this effect might happen. I shall be under sailing orders the moment I have finished. And I shall produce myself (please God) in London on the very day you name. For one week: to the hour.

Wind, hail, rain, thunder and lightning. To-day has been November slack-baked,[†1] the sirocco having come back; and to-night it blows great guns with a raging storm.

To JOHN FORSTER, 3 and [4] NOVEMBER 1844

Extract in F, IV, V, 356.

Third of November, 1844. Half-past two, afternoon. Thank God! I have finished the Chimes. This moment. I take up my pen again to-day, to say only that much; and to add that I have had what women call "a real good cry!" Resuming his letter on 4 November. Here is the brave courier measuring bits of maps with a carving-fork, and going up mountains on a tea-spoon. He and I start on Wednesday for Parma, Modena, Bologna, Venice, Verona, Brescia, and Milan.[†2] Milan being within a reasonable journey from here, Kate and Georgy will come to meet me when I arrive there on my way towards England; and will bring me all letters from you. I shall be there on the 18th. . . . Now, you know my punctiwality. Frost, ice, flooded rivers, steamers, horses, passports, and custom-houses may damage it. But my design is, to walk into Cuttris's coffee-room on Sunday the 1st of December, in good time for dinner. I shall look for you at the farther table by the fire—where we generally go. . . . But the party[†3] for the night following? I know you have consented to the party. Let me see. Don't have any one, this particular night, to dinner, but let it be a summons for the special purpose at half-past 6. Carlyle, indispensable, and I should like his wife of all things: her judgment would be invaluable. You will ask Mac, and why not his sister? Stanny and Jerrold I should particularly wish; Edwin Landseer; Blanchard; perhaps Harness;[†4] and what say you to Fonblanque and Fox? I leave it to you. You know the effect I want to try. . . . Think the Chimes a letter,[†5]

my dear fellow, and forgive this. I will not fail to write to you on my travels. Most probably from Venice. And when I meet you (in sound health I hope) oh Heaven! what a week we will have.

To THOMAS MITTON, 5 NOVEMBER 1844

MS Huntington Library.

Peschiere, Genoa. Tuesday November Fifth 1844.

My Dear Mitton.

The cause of my not having written to you, is too obvious to need any explanation. I have worn myself to Death, in the Month I have been at Work. None of my usual reliefs have been at hand; I have not been able to divest myself of the story—have suffered very much in my sleep, in consequence—and am so shaken by such work in this trying climate that I am nervous as a man who is dying of Drink: and as haggard as a Murderer.

I believe I have written a tremendous Book; and knocked the Carol out of the field. It will make a great uproar,[†1] I have no doubt.

I leave here tomorrow, for Venice and many other places; and I shall certainly come to London to see my proofs—coming by new ground all the way: cutting through the Snow in the Valleys of Switzerland: and plunging through the Mountains in the Dead of Winter. I would accept your hearty offer with right good-will; but my visit being one of business and consultation, I see impediments in the way, and insurmountable reasons for not doing so. Therefore I shall go to an Hotel in Covent Garden where they know me very well, and with the landlord of which, I have already communicated. My orders are not upon a mighty scale—extending no further than a Good bedroom and a cold Shower Bath.

[†a]Bradbury and Evans are going at it, Ding Dong,[†1] and are wild with excitement. All news on that subject (and on every other) I must defer 'till I see you. That will be immediately after I arrive, of course. Most likely on Monday 2nd. Dec.[†a]

[†b]I am very anxious to hear your News too. And indeed I have been constantly expecting some long Narrative from you.[†b]

†cKate and her sister (who send their best regards) and all the children, are as well as possible.†c The house is perfect; the servants are as quiet and well-behaved as at home—which very rarely happens here—and Roche is my right hand. There never was such a fellow.

We have now got carpets down—burn fires at night—draw the Curtains—and are quite wintry. We have a box at the opera which is close by (for Nothing) and sit there when we please, as in our own Drawing Room. There have been three fine days in four weeks. On every other, the Water has b[een]†2 falling down in one continued sheet: and it has been [thun]dering and lightening every day and night.

My hand shakes in that feverish and horrible manner, that I can hardly hold a pen. And I have so bad a cold that I can't see.

In haste to save the Post
Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

Charley has a Writing Master every day—and a French Master. He and his sisters are to be waited on, by a Professor of the noble art of Dancing, next Week.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?JULY-NOVEMBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 366*n. Date:* a letter from Genoa, "previous" to 22 Dec according to Forster—therefore before 6 Nov.

Apropos of servants, I must tell you of a child-bearing handmaiden of some friends of ours, a thorough out and outer, who, by way of expiating her sins, caused herself, the other day, to be received into the bosom of the infallible church. She had two marchionesses for her sponsors; and she is heralded in the Genoa newspapers†1 as Miss B____, an English lady, who has repented of her errors and saved her soul alive.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 8 NOVEMBER 1844

MS British Museum. Address: Alla Signa. | Signa. Dickens | Palazzo Peschiere | Genova.

Parma. Albergo Della Posta.†2 Friday November Eighth 1844.

My Dearest Kate. "If Missis could see us to-night, what would she say!"—That was the brave C's remark last night at Midnight; and he had reason. We left Genoa, as you know, soon after 5 on the evening of my departure; and in company with the lady whom you saw, and the Dog whom I don't think you did see—travelled all night at the rate of Four Miles an Hour, over bad roads, without the least refreshment, until Daybreak, when the Brave and myself escaped into a miserable Caffe while they were changing horses, and got a cup of that drink, hot. That same day a few hours afterwards—between 10 and 11, we came to (I hope) the damndest Inn in the world,[†3] where, in a vast chamber, rendered still more desolate by the presence of a most offensive specimen of what D'Israeli calls The Mosaic Arab[†4] (who had a beautiful girl with him) I regaled upon a breakfast, almost as cold and damp and cheerless as myself. Then, in another coach, much smaller than a small fly, I was packed up with an old Padre, a Young Jesuit, a provincial avvocato, a private gentleman with a very red nose and a very wet brown umbrella, and the Brave C; and so went on again, at the same pace through the same Mud and Rain, until Four in the afternoon, when there was a place in the coupee (two indeed) which I took: holding that select compartment in company with a very ugly, but very agreeable Tuscan "Gent", who said "Gia" instead of "Si" and rung some other changes on this changing language, but with whom I got on very well: being extremely conversational. We were bound, as you know,—perhaps,—for Piacenza, but it was discovered that we couldn't get to Piacenza; and about 10 o'Clock at night we halted at a place called Stradella, where the Inn was a series of queer Galleries open to the night, with a great courtyard full of Waggons, and horses, and Veloceferi and what not, in the centre.[†1] It was bitter cold and very wet; and we all walked into a bare room (Mine!) with two immensely broad beds on two deal dining tables—a third great empty table—the usual washing-stand tripod with a slop basin on it—and two chairs. And here we walked up and down for three quarters of an hour or so, while dinner, or supper, or whatever it was, was getting ready. This was set forth (by way of variety) in the old Priest's bedroom, which had two more immensely broad beds on two more deal dining-tables in it. The first dish was a cabbage boiled in a great quantity of rice and hot water: the whole flavored with cheese. I was so cold that I thought it comfortable: and so hungry that a bit of cabbage, when I found such a thing floating my way, charmed me. After that, we had a dish of very little pieces of Pork, fried: with pigs kidneys. After that, a fowl. After that, something very red and stringy, which I think was veal; and after that two tiny little new-born-baby-looking turkeys. Very red and very swollen. Fruit, of course, to wind up. And Garlic in one shape or another with every course. I made three Jokes at supper (to the immense delight of the company) and retired early. The brave brought in a bush or two, and made a fire: and after that, a glass of screeching[†2] hot brandy and water; that bottle of his, being full of brandy. I drank it at my leisure—undressed before the fire—and went into one of the beds. The brave reappeared about an hour afterwards, and went into the other; previously tying a pocket-handkerchief round and round his head in a strange fashion: and giving utterance to the sentiment with which this letter begins. At 5 this morning, we resumed our journey—still through mud and rain—and at about 11, arrived at Piacenza; where we fellow passengers took leave of one another in the most affectionate manner. As there was no coach on, 'till six at night—and as it was a very grim, despondent sort of place—and as I had had enough of Diligences for one while—I posted forward here, in the strangest carriages ever beheld, which we changed, when we changed horses. We arrived here before 6. The hotel is quite French. I have dined, very well, in my own room on the second floor; and it has two beds in it, screened off from the room by drapery. I only use one tonight; and that is already made.[†3]

I purpose posting on to Bologna, if I can arrange it, at 12 tomorrow: seeing the sights here, first. [†a]If there be a Mail from Bologna to Venice, and it serves my time, I will write you again on my arrival at the latter place. You may not have that letter before you leave for Milan. But we will take our chance of it.

My dear Kate, be very careful if no opportunity occur for Susan's[†4] leaving Genoa before you come to Milan, that you set aside every little consideration, and bring her with you. Remember how much we owe to Macready, and to Mrs. Macready too, for their constancy to us when we were in such great anxiety about the Darlings;[†1] and do not let any natural dislike to her inanities, interfere in the slightest degree with an obligation so sacred. You are too easily run away with—and Georgy is too—by the irritation and displeasure of the moment, in such a case. Far[†2] too easily, for the lasting honorable and just remembrance of such a bond; and I was pained to see (as I should have told Georgy before I left if I had had an opportunity) that in such a case as the Messages to Forster (she will know what I mean) she does a glaringly foolish and unnecessary silliness, and places huge means of misrepresentation in very willing hands. I should never forgive myself or you, if the smallest drop of coldness or misunderstanding were created between me and Macready, by means so monstrously absurd. And mind what I say. It will be created—I see it very clearly—unless you are as careful with that girl as if you were treading on hot ploughshares; and unless you are something more tender too. I am sure her presence at the Peschiere during the past month, has worried nobody more than me. I am sure her presence at our short reunion at Milan would be a positive grievance to me. But I do hold hospitality, even when there is no other tie upon it, to be so high a thing, that I spare even Fletcher, when I am tempted to "put him down." And do, for God's sake, look beyond the hour into six or twelve months hence. Say I beg to be remembered kindly to her; and whether she leaves you, or not, have it understood that you intended to bring her to Milan. And observe. I positively object, and say No, to her going to Rome under the protection of any entire stranger. I cannot allow it to be, until I have seen Macready.[†3] I have thought of this, very much.[†a]

It is dull work, this travelling alone. My only comfort is, in Motion. I look forward with a sort of shudder to Sunday, when I shall have a day to myself in Bologna; and I think I must deliver my letters in Venice, in sheer desperation. Never did anybody want a companion after dinner (to say nothing of after supper) so much as I do.

There has been Music on the landing outside my door to night. Two violins and a violincello. One of the violins played a Solo; and the others, struck in, as an orchestra does now and then—very well. Then he came in, with a small tin platter. "Bella Musica!" said I. "Bellissima Musica Signore. Mi piace Multissimo." "Sono Felici Signore!" said he. I gave him a franc. "E multissimo generoso. Tanto generoso Signore!"

It was a joke to laugh at, when I was learning, but I swear that unless I could stagger on, Zoppa-wise,[†4] with the people, I verily believe I sh[ould turn][†5] back, this morning.

In all other respects, I think the entire change has done me ser[vice—] undoubted service, already. I am free of the Book: and am red-faced; [;] and feel marvellously disposed to sleep.

So for all the straggling qualities of this straggling letter, want [of sleep] must be responsible. Give my best love to Georgy, and my paternal blessing to

Mamey
Katey
Charley Walley
and

Chickenstalker.[†1]

Ever My Dearest | Yours with true affection
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Keep things in their places. I can't bear to picture them otherwise.
P.P.S. I think I saw Roche sleeping with his head on the lady's shoulder—in the coach. I couldn't swear it, and the light was deceptive. But I think I did.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 NOVEMBER 1844]

Extracts from fragments of MS of Pictures, Forster Collection, V & A (see Preface, pp. XV-XVI); also in F, IV, vi, 357 and n.[†2] Date: 10 Nov according to Forster. From Ferrara.[†3]

I left my disconsolate wife (who is now living shut up in her palace like a Baron's lady in the time of the Crusades) on Wednesday afternoon last, at 5 o'clock.

If you want an antidote to this[†4] I may observe that I got up this moment, to fasten the window; and the street looked as like some byeway in Whitechapel—or—I look again—like Wych-street, down by the little barber's shop on the same side of the way as Holywell Street[†5]—or—I look again—as like Holywell Street itself—as ever street was like to street, or ever will be, in this world.

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 NOVEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, vi, 357-8 and n. Date: "Tuesday night the 12th of November" according to Forster. From Venice.

I began this letter, my dear friend, with the intention of describing my travels as I went on.[†6] But I have seen so much, and travelled so hard (seldom dining, and being almost always up by candle light), that I must reserve my crayons for the greater leisure of the Peschiere after we have met, and I have again returned to it. As soon as I have fixed a place in my mind, I bolt—at such strange seasons and at such unexpected angles, that the brave C stares again. But in this way, and by insisting on having everything shewn to me whether or no, and against all precedents and orders of proceeding, I get on wonderfully.

I must not anticipate myself. But, my dear fellow, nothing in the world that ever you have heard of Venice,[†1] is equal to the magnificent and stupendous reality. The wildest visions of the Arabian Nights are nothing to the piazza of Saint Mark, and the first impression of the inside of the church. The gorgeous and wonderful reality of Venice is beyond the fancy of the wildest dreamer. Opium couldn't build such a place, and enchantment couldn't shadow it forth in a vision. All that I have heard of it, read of it in truth or fiction, fancied of it, is left thousands of miles behind. You know that I am liable to disappointment in such things from over-expectation, but Venice is above, beyond, out of all reach of coming near, the imagination of a man. It has never been rated high enough. It is a thing you would shed tears to see. When I came on board here last night (after a five miles' row in a gondola; which somehow or other, I wasn't at all prepared for); when, from seeing the city lying, one light, upon the distant water, like a ship, I came plashing through the silent and deserted streets; I felt as if the houses were reality—the water, fever-madness. But when, in the bright, cold, bracing day, I stood upon the piazza this morning, by Heaven the glory of the place was insupportable! And diving down from that into its wickedness and gloom—its awful prisons, deep below the water; its judgment chambers, secret doors, deadly nooks, where the torches you carry with you blink as if they couldn't bear the air in which the frightful scenes were acted; and coming out again into the radiant, unsubstantial Magic of the town; and diving in again, into vast churches, and old tombs—a new sensation, a new memory, a new mind came upon me. Venice is a bit of my brain from this time. My dear Forster, if you could share my transports (as you would if you were here) what would I not give! I feel cruel not to have brought Kate and Georgy; positively cruel and base. Canaletti[†2] and Stanny,[†3] miraculous in their truth. Turner,[†4] very noble. But the reality itself, beyond all pen or pencil. I never saw the thing before that I should be afraid to describe. But to tell what Venice is, I feel to be an impossibility. And here I sit alone, writing it: with nothing to urge me on, or goad me to that estimate, which, speaking of it to anyone I loved, and being spoken to in return, would lead me to form. In the sober solitude of a famous inn; with the great bell of Saint Mark ringing twelve at my elbow; with three arched windows in my room (two stories high) looking down upon the Grand Canal and away, beyond, to where the sun went down to-night in a blaze; and thinking over again those silent speaking faces of Titian and Tintoretto; I swear (uncooled by any humbug I have seen) that Venice is the wonder and the new sensation of the world! If you could be set down in it, never having heard of it, it would still be so. With your foot upon its stones, its pictures before you, and its history in your mind, it is something past all writing of or speaking of—almost past all thinking of. You couldn't talk to me in this room, nor I to you, without shaking hands and saying "Good God my dear fellow, have we lived to see this!"

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 16 NOVEMBER 1844†

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold. Address: Inghilterra. | Douglas Jerrold Esqre. | Care of | Messrs. Bradbury and Evans | Printers | Whitefriars | London.

Cremona | Saturday Night Sixteenth November 1844.

My Dear Jerrold. As half a loaf is better than no bread, so I hope that half a sheet of paper may be better than none at all coming from one who is sincerely anxious to live in your memory and friendship. I should have redeemed the pledge I gave you in this regard, long since; but occupation at one time, and absence from pen and ink at another, have prevented me.

Forster has told you, or will tell you, that I very much wish you to hear my little Christmas Book; and I hope you will meet me, at his bidding, in Lincolns Inn Fields. I have tried to strike a blow upon that part of the brass countenance of Wicked Cant, where such a compliment is sorely needed at this time. And I trust that the result of my training is at least the exhibition of a strong desire to make it a staggerer. If you should think at the end of the four rounds (there are no more) that the said Cant, in the language of Bell's Life, "comes up piping",[†1] I shall be very much the better for it.

I am now on my way to Milan; and from thence (after a day or two's rest) I mean to come to England by the grandest Alpine Pass that the Snow may leave open. You know this place as famous, of yore, for fiddles. I don't see any, here, now. But there is a whole street of coppersmiths not far from this Inn; and they throb so damnably and fitfully, that I thought I had a palpitation of the heart, after dinner just now—and have seldom been more relieved than when I found the noise to be none of mine.[†2]

I was rather shocked, yesterday (I am not strong in geographical details) to find that Romeo was only banished twenty five miles. That is the distance between Mantua and Verona.[†3] The latter is a quaint old place, with great houses in it that are now solitary and shut up—exactly the place it ought to be. The former has a great many apothecaries in it at this moment, who could play that part to the life. For of all the stagnant little ponds I ever beheld, it is the greenest and weediest. I went to see the old Palace of the Capulets, which is still distinguished by their cognizance (a hat) carved in stone on the Courtyard Wall. It is a miserable Inn.[†1] The court was full of crazy coaches, carts, geese, and pigs: and was ankle-deep in mud and dung. The Garden is walled off and built out. There was nothing to connect it with its old inhabitants but a very unsentimental lady at the kitchen-door, who resembled old Capulet in the one particular of being very great indeed, in the "Family" way.[†2] The Montagues used to live, some two or three miles off, in the country. It does not appear quite clear whether they ever inhabited Verona itself. But there is a Village bearing their name to this day, and traditions of the quarrels between the two families are still as nearly alive as anything can be, in [this][†3] drowsy neighbourhood.

It was very hearty and good of you, Jerrold, to make that affectionate mention of the Carol, in Punch;[†4] and I assure you it was not lost upon the distant object of your manly regard, but touched him as you wished and meant it should. I wish we had not lost so much time in improving our personal knowledge of each other. But I have so steadily read you, and so selfishly gratified myself in always expressing the admiration with which your gallant truths inspired me,[†5] that I must not call it lost time, either.

You rather entertained the notion once, of coming to see me at Genoa. I shall return, straight, on the 9th. of December—limiting my stay in town to one week. Now, couldn't you come back with me? The journey, that way, is very cheap: costing little more than Twelve Pounds; and I am sure the gratification to you, would be high. I am lodged in quite a wonderful place, and would put you in a painted room, as big as a church and much more comfortable. There are pens and ink upon the premises; orange trees, gardens, battledores and shuttlecocks, rousing wood-fires for evenings; and a welcome worth having. †aIf you were disposed to give Mrs. Jerrold†6 a Christmas Holiday, I will warrant my Wife to be as gentle a little woman, and as free from affectation or formality of any kind, as ever breathed. And it would delight her very much to have an opportunity of confirming my judgment.†a

Come! Letter from a Gentleman in Italy, to Bradbury and Evans in London. Letter from a gentleman in a country gone to sleep, to a gentleman in a country that would go to sleep too, and never wake again, if some people had their way. You can work in Genoa—the house is used to it—it is exactly a week's Post—Have that portmanteau looked to: and when we meet, say "I am coming".

I have never in my life been so struck by any place as by Venice. It is the wonder of the world. Dreamy, beautiful, inconsistent, impossible, wicked, shadowy, damnable old place. I entered it by night, and the sensation of that night, and the bright morning that followed, is a part of me for the rest of my existence. And oh God the cells below the water, underneath the Bridge of Sighs—the nook where the Monk came at midnight to confess the political offender—the bench where he was strangled—the deadly little vault in which they tied him in a sack—and the stealthy crouching little door through which they hurried him into a boat, and bore him away to sink him where no fisherman dare cast his net—all shewn by torches that blink and wink as if they were ashamed to look upon the gloomy theatre of such horrors: past and gone as they are—these things stir a man's blood, like a great Wrong or Passion of the Instant. And with them in their minds; and with a Museum there, having a chamber full of such frightful instruments of torture, as the Devil in a brain Fever could scarcely invent, there are hundreds of parrots who will declaim to you in speech and print by the hour together, on the degeneracy of the times in which a Railroad is building across the Water to Venice!†1 Instead of going down upon their knees, the drivellers, and thanking Heaven that they live in a time when Iron makes Roads instead of Prison Bars, and engines for driving screws into the skulls of innocent men. Before God!—I could almost turn bloody-minded, and shoot the Parrots†2 of our Island, with as little compunction as Robinson Crusoe shot the parrots in his!—

I have not been in bed, these ten days, after five in the morning; and have been travelling many hours every day. If this be the cause of my inflicting a very stupid and sleepy letter on you, my dear Jerrold, I hope it will be a kind of signal at the same time, of my wish to hail you lovingly, even from this sleepy and unpromising station. And believe me, as I am, always Your friend and admirer.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 and 18 NOVEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, vi, 359, 359-63. Date: all extracts 17 Nov according to Forster, except the last, "next day". From Lodi (17 Nov) and from Milan (18 Nov).

Saying he had been, like Leigh Hunt's pig, up all manner of streets†3 since he left his palazzo; that with one exception he had not on any night given up more than five hours to rest; that all the days except two had been bad, the last two foggy as Blackfriars Bridge on Lord Mayor's Day; and that the cold had been dismal.

I am already brim-full of cant about pictures,[†4] and shall be happy to enlighten you on the subject of the different schools, at any length you please. It seems to me that the preposterous exaggeration in which our countrymen delight in reference to this Italy, hardly extends to the really good things. Perhaps it is in its nature, that there it should fall short. I have never seen any praise of Titian's great picture of the Assumption of the Virgin[†1] at Venice, which soared half as high as the beautiful and amazing reality. It is perfection. Tintoretto's picture too, of the Assembly of the Blest, at Venice also,[†2] with all the lines in it (it is of immense size and the figures are countless) tending majestically and dutifully to Almighty God in the centre, is grand and noble in the extreme. There are some wonderful portraits there, besides; and some confused, and hurried, and slaughterous battle pieces, in which the surprising art that presents the generals to your eye, so that it is almost impossible you can miss them in a crowd though they are in the thick of it, is very pleasant to dwell upon. I have seen some delightful pictures; and some (at Verona and Mantua) really too absurd and ridiculous even to laugh at. Hampton Court is a fool to 'em[†3]—and oh there are some rum 'uns there, my friend. Some werry rum 'uns. . . . Two things are clear to me already. One is, that the rules of art are much too slavishly followed; making it a pain to you, when you go into galleries day after day, to be so very precisely sure where this figure will be turning round, and that figure will be lying down, and that other will have a great lot of drapery twined about him, and so forth.[†4] This becomes a perfect nightmare. The second is, that these great men, who were of necessity very much in the hands of the monks and priests, painted monks and priests a vast deal too often. I constantly see, in pictures of tremendous power, heads quite below the story and the painter; and I invariably observe that those heads are of the convent stamp, and have their counterparts, exactly, in the convent inmates of this hour. I see the portraits of monks I know at Genoa, in all the lame parts of strong paintings: so I have settled with myself that in such cases the lameness was not with the painter, but with the vanity and ignorance of his employers, who would be apostles on canvas at all events.

It is a great thing—quite a matter of course—with English travellers, to decry the Italian inns. Of course you have no comforts that you are used to in England; and travelling alone, you dine in your bedroom always. Which is opposed to our habits. But they are immeasurably better than you would suppose. The attendants are very quick; very punctual; and so obliging, if you speak to them politely, that you would be a beast not to look cheerful, and take everything pleasantly. I am writing this in a room like a room on the two-pair front of an unfinished house in Eaton-square: the very walls make me feel as if I were a bricklayer distinguished by Mr. Cubitt[†1] with the favour of having it to take care of. The windows won't open, and the doors won't shut; and these latter (a cat could get in, between them and the floor) have a windy command of a colonnade which is open to the night, so that my slippers positively blow off my feet, and make little circuits in the room—like leaves. There is a very ashy wood-fire, burning on an immense hearth which has no fender (there is no such thing in Italy); and it only knows two extremes—an agony of heat when wood is put on, and an agony of cold when it has been on two minutes. There is also an uncomfortable stain in the wall, where the fifth door (not being strictly indispensable) was walled up a year or two ago, and never painted over. But the bed is clean; and I have had an excellent dinner; and without being obsequious or servile, which is not at all the characteristic of the people in the North of Italy, the waiters are so amiably disposed to invent little attentions which they suppose to be English, and are so lighthearted and goodnatured, that it is a pleasure to have to do with them. But so it is with all the people. Vetturino-travelling involves a stoppage of two hours in the middle of the day, to bait the horses. At that time I always walk on. If there are many turns in the road, I necessarily have to ask my way, very often: and the men are such gentlemen, and the women such ladies, that it is quite an interchange of courtesies.

The brave C continues to be a prodigy. He puts out my clothes at every inn as if I were going to stay there twelve months; calls me to the instant every morning; lights the fire before I get up; gets hold of roast fowls and produces them in coaches at a distance from all other help, in hungry moments; and is invaluable to me. He is such a good fellow, too, that little rewards don't spoil him. I always give him, after I have dined, a tumbler of Sauterne or Hermitage or whatever I may have; sometimes (as yesterday) when we have come to a public-house at about eleven o'clock, very cold, having started before day-break and had nothing, I make him take his breakfast with me; and this renders him only more anxious than ever, by redoubling attentions, to show me that he thinks he has got a good master. . . . I didn't tell you that the day before I left Genoa, we had a dinner-party—our English consul and his wife;[†2] the banker;[†3]

Sir George Crawford and his wife;[†1] the De la Rues;[†2] Mr. Curry; and some others, fourteen in all. At about nine in the morning, two men in immense paper caps enquired at the door for the brave C, who presently introduced them in triumph as the Governor's cooks, his private friends, who had come to dress the dinner! Jane wouldn't stand this, however; so we were obliged to decline. Then there came, at half-hourly intervals, six gentlemen having the appearance of English clergymen; other private friends who had come to wait. . . . We accepted their services; and you never saw anything so nicely and quietly done. He had asked, as a special distinction, to be allowed the supreme control of the dessert; and he had ices made like fruit, had pieces of crockery turned upside down so as to look like other pieces of crockery non-existent in this part of Europe, and carried a case of tooth-picks in his pocket. Then his delight was, to get behind Kate at one end of the table, to look at me at the other, and to say to Georgy in a low voice whenever he handed her anything, "What does master think of datter 'rangement? Is he content?" . . . If you could see what these fellows of couriers are when their families are not upon the move, you would feel what a prize he is. I can't make out whether he was ever a smuggler, but nothing will induce him to give the custom-house-officers anything: in consequence of which that portmanteau of mine has been unnecessarily opened twenty times. Two of them will come to the coach-door, at the gate of a town. "Is there anything contraband in this carriage, signore?"—"No, no. There's nothing here. I am an Englishman, and this is my servant." "A buono mano signore?" "Roche" (in English), "give him something, and get rid of him." He sits unmoved. "A buono mano signore?" "Go along with you!" says the brave C. "Signore, I am a custom-house-officer!" "Well, then, more shame for you!"—he always makes the same answer. And then he turns to me and says in English: while the custom-house-officer's face is a portrait of anguish framed in the coach-window,[†1] from his intense desire to know what is being told to his disparagement: "Datter chip," shaking his fist at him, "is greatest tief—and you know it you rascal—as never did en-razh me so, that I cannot bear myself!" I suppose chip to mean chap, but it may include the custom-house-officer's father and have some reference to the old block, for anything I distinctly know.

Catherine and Georgina met him next day at Milan, having travelled 80 miles from Genoa. We shall go our several ways on Thursday morning, and I am still bent on appearing at Cuttris's on Sunday the first, as if I had walked thither from Devonshire-terrace. In the meantime I shall not write to you again . . . to enhance the pleasure (if anything can enhance the pleasure) of our meeting. . . . I am opening my arms so wide!

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 20 NOVEMBER 1844†

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Inghilterra | The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington | London.

Milan. Wednesday November Twentieth 1844.

My Dear Lady Blessington. Appearances are against me. Don't believe them. I have written you, in intention, fifty letters. And I can claim no credit for any one of them (though they were the best letters you ever read), for they all originated in my true desire to live in your memory and regard.

Since I heard from Count D'Orsay, I have been beset in I don't know how many ways. First of all, I went to Marseilles, and came back to Genoa by the Cornice Road. Then I moved to the Peschiere. Then some people who had been present at the Scientific Congress here, made a sudden inroad on that Establishment and over-ran it. Then they went away, and I shut myself up for one month, close and tight, over my Christmas Book. All my affections and passions got twined and knotted up in it, and I became as haggard as a Murderer, long before I wrote "The End". When I had done that; like the Man of Thessaly[†2] who having scratched his eyes out in a quickset hedge, plunged into a Bramblebush to scratch them in again, I fled off to Venice, to recover the composure I had disturbed. From thence, I went to Verona and to Mantua. And now I am here. Just come up from underground; and earthy all over, from seeing that extraordinary Tomb[†1] in which the Dead Saint lies in an Alabaster Case, with sparkling Jewels all about him to mock his dusty eyes: and robes of gold and fine linen dressing out his miserable old mummied carcase. Not to mention the Twenty Franc pieces which devout votaries were ringing down upon a sort of skylight in the Cathedral pavement above, as if it were the Counter of his Heavenly Shop.

You know Verona? You know everything in Italy, I know.[†2] [†a]I am not learned in Geography, and it was a great blow to me to find that Romeo was only banished five and twenty miles. It was a greater blow to me, to see the old house of the Capulets, with their cognizance still carved in stone, over the Gateway of the Court Yard. It is a most miserable little Inn, at this time; ankle-deep in dirt; and noisy Vetturini and muddy market carts were disputing possession of the Yard, with a brood of geese—all splashed and bespattered, as if they had their yesterday's white trousers on. There was nothing to connect it with the beautiful story, but a very unsentimental middle-aged lady—the Padrona, I suppose—in the doorway, who resembled old Capulet in the one particular of being very great indeed, in the "Family" way.[†a]

The Roman amphitheatre[†3] there, delighted me beyond expression. I never saw anything so full of such a solemn interest. There are the Four and forty rows of seats, as fresh and perfect as if their Roman occupants had vacated them but yesterday—the entrances, passages, dens, rooms, corridors; the very numbers over some of the arches. An equestrian troop had been there a few days before, and had scooped out a little ring at one end of the arena, and had their performances on that spot. I should like to have seen it, of all things, for its very dreariness. Fancy a handfull of people sprinkled over one corner of the great place (the whole population of Verona wouldn't fill it now) and a clown being funny[†4] to the echoes, and the grass-grown walls! I climbed to the topmost seat, and looked away at the beautiful view for some minutes; and turning round, and looking down into the Theatre again, it had exactly the appearance of an immense straw hat, to which the helmet in the Castle of Otranto was a Baby: the rows of seats representing the different plaits of straw: and the arena, the inside of the crown. [†b]Do shut your eyes and think of it, a moment.

I came through Modena[†5] (I am reminded of it by the mention of the strollers), on a brilliant day. One of those days when the sky is so blue that it hardly seems blue at all, but some other colour.—Lord Castlereagh[†1] might have said it, but it's true. I passed from all this glory into a dark mysterious church, where high mass was performing, feeble tapers were burning, and people were kneeling about in all directions, and before all manner of shrines. Thinking how strange it was to find in every stagnant town, this same heart beating with the same monotonous pulsations; the centre of the same languid, torpid, listless circulation; I came out again by another door, and was scared to Death by the blast of the shrillest trumpet that ever was blown. Forthwith, there came tearing round the corner, an equestrian Company from Paris, marshalling themselves under the very walls of the church: flouting with their horses' heels, the very Griffins and Tigers supporting its pillars. First of all, there came an Austrian Prince without a hat: bearing an enormous banner on which was inscribed "Mazeppa.[†2] Oggi Sera!" Then a Mexican chief, with a great club upon his shoulder, like Hercules. Then six or eight Roman Chariots: each with a beautiful lady in extremely short petticoats, and unnaturally pink silks, erect within: shedding beaming looks upon the crowd, in which there was an unaccountable expression of discomposure and anxiety, until the open back of each chariot presented itself, and one saw the immense difficulty with which the Pink Legs maintained their perpendicular over the uneven stones of the town—which was the drollest thing I ever beheld, and gave me quite a new idea of the ancient Romans and ancient Britons. The procession was brought to a close by some dozen warriors of different Nations, riding two and two; and when it passed on, the people who had come out of the church to look at it, went in again to that spectacle. One old lady kneeling on the pavement near the door, had seen it all, and had been immensely interested—without getting up. Catching my eye when it was all over, she crossed herself devoutly, and went down at full length on her face before a figure in a blue silk petticoat and a gilt crown; which was so like one of the other figures, that I thought her interest in the Circus quite excusable and appropriate.[†b]

I had great expectations of Venice, but they fell immeasurably short of the wonderful reality. The short time I passed there, went by me in a dream. I hardly think it possible to exaggerate its beauties, its sources of interest, its uncommon novelty and freshness. A Thousand and One realizations of the Thousand and One Nights could scarcely captivate and enchant me, more than Venice.

†cPray tell Count D'Orsay, dear Lady Blessington, with my heartiest remembrances, that the receipt of his letter, was a long and deep notch in my then very wooden Calendar at Albaro. He did me but justice in supposing me able to read it without difficulty, as I have long been accustomed to read French almost as easily as English. But its sound is rather strange in my ears. I know it, as I know some men, perfectly well by sight—and therefore I design, Please God, to spend next May and June in Paris,†1 that I may enlarge my acquaintance with it, and encounter it upon easy terms. I have applied very little to the Italian: being lazy at first, and otherwise busy since. But I have great pleasure in what I know of it; and can understand, and be understood, without difficulty.

We like Italy more and more, every day. We are splendidly lodged—have a noble Sala—fifty feet high, and splendidly painted—and beautiful gardens. Mrs. Dickens and the children are as well as possible; our servants (contrary to all predictions) as contented and orderly as at home; and everything else "in a concatination accordingly".†c

Your old house Il Paradiso, is spoken of as yours to this day. What a gallant place it is! I don't know the present Inmate, but I hear that he bought and furnished it not long since, with great splendour, in the French style—and that he wishes to sell it. I wish I were rich, and could buy it. There is a third rate Wine Shop below Byron's house; and the place looks dull and miserable and ruinous enough. Old De Negro†2 is a trifle uglier than when I first arrived. He has periodical parties at the Villetta; at which there are a great many flowerpots and a few ices—no other refreshments. He goes about, constantly charged with extemporaneous poetry, and is always ready, like Tavern Dinners, on the shortest notice and the most reasonable terms. He keeps a Gigantic Harp in his bedroom, together with pen and paper for fixing his ideas as they flow—a kind of profane King David, but very harmless. Very.

†dI am in great hopes that I shall make you cry, bitterly, with my little Book; and that Miss Power and her sister will take it, also, to heart. I dare say you have forgotten that when we parted, I promised myself the pleasure of sending you an early proof to read, but I have not. So in the course of the first week of December, "about this time"—as Moore's almanack says—"a packet may be looked for"—It will be a great pleasure to me to think that you have bestowed an hour upon it.†d

Pray say to Count D'Orsay, everything that is cordial and loving from me. His purse has been of immense service. It has been constantly opened. All Italy seems to yearn to put its hand in it. When I come back to England I shall have it hung up, on a nail, as a trophy. And I think of gashing the brim like the blade of an old sword, and saying to my son and heir, as they do upon the stage—"You see this notch boy? Five hundred francs were laid low on that day, for post horses. Where this gap is, a waiter charged me treble the correct amount—and got it. This end, worn into teeth like a file, is sacred to the Custom Houses, boy—the passports—and the shabby soldiers at town-gates who put an open hand and a coat-cuff into the coach-windows of all Forestieri. Take it, boy. Thy father has nothing else to give."

My desk is cooling itself in a Mail coach, somewhere down at the back of the Cathedral. And the pens and ink in this house (where the Great Mr. Lumley tarries, by the way) are so detestable, that I have no hope of your ever getting to this portion of my letter. But I have the less misery in this state of mind, from knowing that it has nothing in it to repay you for the trouble of perusal, †eand that you do not require its formal close to assure you (or you would not have parted from me with such unaffected and genuine kindness) that I am ever, My Dear Lady Blessington, Faithfully and truly Yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I beg to be remembered to your Nieces. I saw a picture very like Miss Power, at Venice—and again denounced that Frankenstein of an Artist, who had his Easel at Gore House when I left.†e

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 23 NOVEMBER 1844

MS British Museum. Address: Italia | A Madame | Madame Dickens | Palazzo Peschiere | Genova | Italia.

Fribourg. Saturday Night November Twenty Third 1844.

My Dearest Kate. For the first time since I left you, I am sitting in a room of my own hiring, with a fire and a bed, in it. And I am happy to say that I have the best and fullest intentions of sleeping in the bed; having arrived here at half past four this afternoon, without any cessation of travelling, night or day, since I parted from Mrs. Bairr's†1 cheap firewood.

The Alps appeared in sight, very soon after we left Milan—by 8 or 9 o'Clock in the morning; and the Brave C was so far wrong in his calculations, that we began the ascent of the Simplon that same night, while you were travelling (as I would I were) towards the Peschiere. Most favourable state of circumstances for journeying up that tremendous Pass! The brightest moon I ever saw, all night; and daybreak on the summit. The Glory of which: making great wastes of snow, a rosy red: exceeds all telling. We sledged through the snow on the summit, for two hours or so. The weather was perfectly fair and bright; and there was neither difficulty nor danger—except the danger that there always must be in such a place, of a horse stumbling on the brink of an immeasurable precipice. In which case, no piece of the unfortunate traveller would be left, large enough, to tell his story in dumb-show. You may imagine something of the rugged grandeur of such a scene as this great passage of these great mountains; and indeed Glencoe, well-sprinkled with Snow, would be very like the ascent. But the top itself, so wild, and bleak, and lonely, is a thing by itself, and not to be likened to any other sight. The cold was piercing; the north-wind, high and boisterous; and when it came driving in our faces, bringing a sharp shower of little points of snow and piercing it into our very blood, it really was, what it is often said to be, "cutting" —with a very sharp edge too. There are houses of refuge here—bleak, solitary places—for travellers overtaken by the snow, to hurry to, as an escape from death; and one great house, called the Hospital, kept by monks, where wayfarers get supper and bed for nothing. We saw some coming out and pursuing their journey. If all Monks devoted themselves to such uses, I should have little fault to find with them.†2

The cold in Switzerland, since, has been something quite indescribable. My eyes are tingling tonight, as one may suppose cymbals to tingle when they have been lustily played.—It is positive purgatory to me to write. The Great Organ[†1] which I was to have had "pleasure in hearing" don't play on a Saturday at which the Brave is inconsolable. But the town is picturesque and quaint, and worth seeing. And the Inn (with a German bedstead in it, about the size and shape of a baby's linen-basket) is perfectly clean and comfortable. Butter is so cheap hereabouts, that they bring you a great mass, like the squab of a sofa, for tea. And of honey, which is most delicious, they set before you a proportionate allowance. We start tomorrow morning at 6, for Strasburgh; and from that town, or the next halting-place on the Rhine; I will report progress; if it be only in half a dozen words.

I am anxious to hear that you reached Genoa quite comfortably—and shall look forward with impatience to that letter, which you are to indite, with so much care and pains, next Monday. My best love to Georgy. And to Charley, and Mamey, and Katey,[†2] and Walley, and Chickenstalker. I have treated myself to a new travelling-cap tonight (my old one being too thin), and it is rather a prodigious affair I flatter myself.

Swiss towns, and mountains, and the Lake of Geneva, and the famous suspension-Bridge[†3] at this place, and a great many other objects (with a very low thermometer conspicuous among them) are dancing up and down me, strangely. But I am quite collected enough, notwithstanding, to have still a very distinct idea that this Hornpipe travelling is uncomfortable, and that I would gladly start for my Palazzo out of hand, without any previous rest. Stupid as I am, and much as I want it!

Ever my Dear Love Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Charles Dickens. P.S. I hope the Dancing Lessons will be a success. Don't fail to let me know.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 NOVEMBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, vi, 363. Date: "Monday night the 25th" according to Forster. From Strasburg.[†4]

Saying that Forster might look for him one day earlier, so rapid had been his progress. He had been in bed only once, at Friburg for two or three hours, since he left Milan, and he had sledged through the snow on the top of the Simplon in the midst of prodigious cold. I am sitting here in a wood-fire, and drinking brandy and water scalding hot, with a faint idea of coming warm in time. My face is at present tingling with the frost and wind, as I suppose the cymbals may, when that turbaned Turk attached to the Life Guards' band has been newly clashing at them in St. James's-park. I am in hopes it may be the preliminary agony of returning animation.

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 NOVEMBER 1844*

MS Missouri Historical Society. Date: clearly 28 Nov; it is the "Exhibit Marked A" referred to in To Macready, written later the same night.

Hotel Bristol. Place Vendomme[†1] | Thursday Nigh

My Dearest Macready.

I have been travelling for weeks, and have not been five minutes in Paris, on my way to London—after a 50 hours' spell in a horrible coach. Are you at Meurice's? If you are, I shall come and rush into your arms—as soon as I am clean enough—unless you anticipate me by coming here and rushing into mine. I go on to London at 8 tomorrow morning.

Affecy. Ever & Ever

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 28 NOVEMBER 1844

MS British Museum. Address: Italie | A Madame | Madame Dickens | Palazzo Peschiere | Genes | Italie.

Hotel Bristol, Paris. | Thursday Night November 28th. 1844

My Dearest Kate. With an intolerable pen, and no ink, I am going to write a few lines to you, to report progress.

I got to Strasburgh on Monday Night: intending to go down the Rhine. But the weather being foggy, and the Season quite over: they could not insure out getting on, for certain, beyond Mayence: or our not being detained by unpropitious weather. Therefore I resolved (the Malle Poste being full) to take the Diligence hither—next day in the afternoon. I arrived here at halfpast five tonight, after 50 hours of it, in a French coach. I was so beastly dirty when I got to this house, that I had quite lost all sense of my identity, and if anybody had said 'Are you Charles Dickens?' I should have unblushingly answered 'No. I never heard of him.' A good wash, and a good dress, and a good dinner, have revived me, however: and I can report of this house concerning which the Brave was so anxious when we were here before, that it is the best I ever was in. My little apartment—consisting of three rooms, and other conveniences—is a perfect curiosity of completeness. You never saw such a charming little baby-house. It is infinitely smaller than those first rooms we had at Meurice's, but for elegance, compactness, comfort, and quietude, exceeds anything I ever met with at an Inn.[†2]

The moment I arrived here, I enquired, of course, after Macready. They said the English Theatre had not begun yet, but they thought he was at Meurice's, where they knew some members of the company to be. I instantly dispatched the Porter with a note, to say that if he were there, I would come round and hug him, as soon as I was clean. They referred the Porter to the Hotel Brighton. He came back and told me, that the answer, there, was, 'M. Macready's rooms [†a](I feel that I am writing rather like him)[†a] were engaged, but he had not arrived. He was expected tonight.' If we meet tonight, I will add a Postscript. Wouldn't it be odd if we met upon the road between this and Boulonge,[†1] tomorrow?

I mean, as a recompense for my late sufferings, to get a Hackney carriage if I can—and post that journey—starting from here, at 8 tomorrow morning—getting to Boulonge sufficiently early next morning to cross at once, and dining with Forster that same day: to wit, Saturday. I have notions of taking you with me on my next journey (if you would like to go!) and arranging for Georgy to come to us by Steamer—under the protection of the English captain, for instance —to Naples—where I would top and cap all our walks, by taking her up to the crater of Vesuvius with me. But this is dependent on her ability to be perfectly happy for a fortnight or so, in our stately palace, with the children, and such foreign aid as the Simpsons.†2 For I love her too dearly, to think of any project, which would involveher being uncomfortable for that space of time.

You can think this over, and talk it over—and I will join you in doing so, Please God, when I return to our Italian Bowers, which I shall be heartily glad to do. I will write to you again, by Monday's Post, from London. They tell us here, that the Landlord of this house, going to London some week or so ago, was detained at Boulonge two days by a high sea in which the Packets could not put out. So I hope there is the greater chance of no such bedevilment happening to me.

Paris is better than ever. Oh dear how grand it was, when I came through it in that Caravan tonight! I hope we shall be very hearty here—and able to say with Walley "Han't it plassant!"

†bApropos of nothing. The Babbages. My mind sorely misgives me, that the Babbages ought to be at the Reading. I hardly think we have taken as much notice of them as we should have done, or as they have shewn they desired.†b†3

Love to Charley, Mamey, Katey,†4 Walley, and Chickenstalker. The last-named, I take it for granted, is indeed Prodigious.

Best love to Georgy.
Ever my dearest Kate | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Charles Dickens

P.S. I have been round to Macreadys hotel—it is now past 10—and he has not arrived, nor does it seem at all certain that he seriously intended to arrive tonight. So I shall not see him, I take it for granted until my return.

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 NOVEMBER 1844†

MS Morgan Library.

Hotel Bristol, Paris.
Thursday Night November 28th. 1844. | Half Past Ten.

My Dearest Macready.

Since I wrote to you, what would be called in Law Proceedings the Exhibit Marked A, I have been round to the Hotel Brighton, and personally examined, and cross-examined, the attendants. It is painfully clear to me, that I shall not hug you tonight.[†1] Nor until Tuesday the 10th: of December; when, Please God, I shall re-arrive here, on my way to my Italian Bowers. I mean to stay, all the Wednesday, and all the Thursday, in Paris. One night to see you act (my old delight when you little thought of such a Being in existence), and one night to read to you[†2] and Mrs. Macready (if that Scamp of Lincolns Inn Fields have not anticipated me) my little Christmas Book. In which I have endeavoured to plant an indignant right-hander on the eye of certain Wicked Cant that makes my blood boil, which I hope will not only cloud that eye with black and blue, but many a gentler one with chrystal of the purest sort. God forgive me,—but I think there are good things in the little Story!

[†a]I want you, meanwhile, to execute a little commission for me here; and to advertize me in one line, addressed to the Piazza Coffee House Covent Garden London (did you ever dine there?) that you have done so, successfully. Will you, as soon after your arrival as convenient; for the conveyance is in great request; take me Two Places in the Malle Poste to Marseilles, for Friday afternoon the Thirteenth of December—paying the money, or as much as may be necessary, and holding me your Debtor until we meet.

The Malle Poste, observe. And nothing but the Malle Poste. Should it be unfortunately engaged for that day (which, with so long a notice, is not likely) then the day before or the day after. But that is the day I want.[†a]

I took it for granted you were, as your American friends say, "in full blast" here—and meant to have sent a card into your dressing-room with "Mr. G. S. Hancock Muggridge. United States"—upon it. But Paris looks coldly on me, without your eye in its head; and not being able to shake your hand, I shake my own head dolefully. Which is but poor satisfaction.

My love to Mrs. Macready. I will swear to the Death that it is truly hers for her Gallantry in your absence if for nothing else. And to you my Dear Macready I am ever a devoted friend

CHARLES DICKENS

December

To JOHN LEECH, 1 DECEMBER 1844

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech [Esquire][†1] | 9 Powis Place | Great Ormond Street.

Piazza Coffee House | Covent Garden
Sunday December First 1844.

My Dear Leech.

You have done gallantly, for my little book.[†2] And I am greatly pleased with this new token of your talent and interest, believe me.

Will you come and breakfast with me here, tomorrow, at Ten? There is a slight alteration in one of your blocks[†3] (explainable in half a minute) which I want to tell you of.

Always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I beg my compliments to Mrs. Leech.[†4] Mrs. Dickens and her sister, charged me with many kind messages to you both.

To JOHN LEECH, 3 DECEMBER 1844

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire | Powis Place | Great Ormond Street.

Piazza Coffee House Covent Garden | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Leech.

On coming home here, late last night, I found your note. The alteration in respect of the figure of Richard will be quite sufficient; and I assure you that your cheerful readiness to give yourself trouble on my account gratifies me exceedingly. It is a real pleasure to me to say so, and to work with you. I have the greatest diffidence in suggesting any change, however slight, in what you do—you are so ready to make it.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To THE GOVERNORS OF THE ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, [?DECEMBER 1844]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 8 Dec 44. Date: shortly before 8 Dec when CD told Miss Coutts that he had heard from the Governors.

Nominating John Richard Overs, eldest son of John Overs, for a place in the Orphan Working School.[†5]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 2 DECEMBER 1844

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Palazzo Peschiere | Genoa | North Italy.

Piazza Coffee House, Covent Garden.
December Second 1844. Monday.

My Dearest Kate. I received, with great delight, your excellent letter of this morning. Do not regard this, as my answer to it. It is merely to say that I have been at Bradbury and Evans's all day, and have barely time to write more, than that I will write tomorrow. I arrived about 7 on Saturday Evening, and rushed into the arms of Mac and Forster[†1]—Both of whom, send their best loves to you and Georgy. With a heartiness, not to be described.

The little book, is now, so far as I am concerned, all ready. One cut of Doyle's,[†2] and one of Leech's, I found so unlike my idea, that I had them both to breakfast with me this morning, and with that winning manner which you know of, got them with the highest good humour, to do both afresh. They are now hard at it. [Stan]field's[†3] readiness—delight—wonder at my being pleased—in what he has done[†4] is delicious. Mac's frontispiece is charming. The book is quite splendid, —the expences will be very great, I have no doubt.

Anybody who has heard it, has been moved in the most extraordinary manner. Forster read it (for dramatic purposes) to A Beckett[†5]—not a man of very quiet feeling. He cried so much, and so painfully, that Forster didn't know whether to go on or stop; and he called next day to say that any expression of his feeling was beyond his power. But that he believed it, and felt it, to be—I won't say what.

As the reading comes off tomorrow night,[†6] I had better not despatch my letter to you, until Wednesday's Post. I must close to save this (heartily tired I am; and I dine at Gore House today!) so with love to Georgy, Mamey, Katey, Charley, Walley, and Chickenstalker, Ever believe me Yours with true [affec]tion. CD.

P.S. If you had seen Macready last night—undisguisedly sobbing, and crying on the sofa, as I read—you would have felt (as I did) what a thing it is to have Power.
P.P.S. "In[".][†1]

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 6 DECEMBER 1844

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Piazza Coffee House.
Friday Sixth December 1844. | In the greatest haste.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

My proofs have been delayed. I send them to you the moment I receive them. As the book is not published until the Sixteenth,[†2] I need not ask you to keep them "close".

I purpose coming to you on Sunday to say good bye. Meanwhile remember me most cordially to Count D'Orsay, and to the young ladies, and believe me, with earnest regard.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [8 DECEMBER 1844]

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Date: Sunday was 8 Dec and the day of CD's departure (see next).

Covent Garden Sunday Noon

My Dear Lady Blessington.

Business for other people (and by no means of a pleasant kind)[†3] has held me prisoner during two whole days, and will so detain me today, in the very agony of departure, that I shall not even be able to reach Gore House, on which I had set my heart. I cannot bear the thought of going away without some sort of reference to the happy day you gave me last Monday, and the pleasure and delight I had in your earnest greeting. I shall never forget it, believe me. It would be worth going to China—it would be worth going even to America—to come home again and feel as I feel in the friendship of yourself and Count D'Orsay.[†1]

To whom my love—and something as near it to Miss Power and her sister, as it is lawful to send. It will be an unspeakable satisfaction to me, though I am not maliciously disposed, to know under your own hand at Genoa, that my little book made you cry.[†2] I hope to prove a better correspondent on my return to those shores. But better or worse or anyhow, I am ever my Dear Lady Blessington, in no common degree and not with an every-day regard,

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 DECEMBER 1844

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bolton Street | Piccadilly.

Piazza Coffee House, Covent Garden | Sunday December Eighth 1844.

Dear Miss Coutts. I have been in town a very few days; and leave it again, and start for Italy, tonight. I hoped to have seen you as a matter of course; but when I had disposed of the business part of my Christmas Book (which mainly brought me here, and imprisoned me at the Printer's two days) I had some arrangements to make for the extrication of some unhappy people from circumstances of great distress and perplexity, which have occupied my whole time. So that I have seen no one, and gone nowhere.

I had the greatest pleasure some months ago, in the receipt of your interesting letter from Germany. I was going to answer it with some account of my Italian adventures; but as soon as I had any to narrate, the time had come for my sitting down to my little book; and when I got up again, it was to come here. I hope you will like those Chimes, which will be published on the 16th. and though I am not malicious, I am bent on making you cry, or being most horribly disappointed.

The Sanatorium Committee have informed me of your munificent donation[†3] to that Establishment. There is not in England an Institution whose design is more noble, useful, and excellent. I know some little histories connected with that place, and the blessing it has proved in sickness and Death, which are among the most affecting incidents that have ever come within my observation.

You may possibly have seen a Preface I wrote, before leaving England, to a little book by a Working Man; and may have learned from the Newspapers that he is dead:[†1] leaving a destitute wife and six children, of whom one is a Cripple.[†2] I have addressed a letter to the Governors of the Orphan Working School in behalf of the eldest boy: and they tell me he has a good chance of being elected into that Institution in April next.[†3] It has occurred to me that at some time or other you might have an opportunity of presenting one of the Girls to some other School or Charity.[†4] And as I know full well that in such an event you would rather thank than blame me for making a real and strong case known to you, I send you the children's names and ages.

Amelia Overs	11 years old
John Richard	9
Harriett	7
Geraldine	6
Editha	4
John	4 months

They live, at present, at 55 Vauxhall Street Lambeth.

My head quarters in Italy, are at Genoa: where we live in a Palace (the Palazzo Peschiere) something larger than Whitehall multiplied by four; and where Charley and his Giant sisters play among Orange Trees and Fountains all day long. They were particularly anxious when I came away, that I should give their loves to you, and they entrusted me with the Private commission that I should ascertain whether "That Lady" was still in bed upstairs. In pursuing my enquiries on this head, I have received information in reference to that lady, which has quite delighted me, and not at all surprised me.[†5] I hope I may still live in her memory; and that I may venture to send her my regards and congratulations.

I have been to Modena, Parma, Bologna, Ferrara, Cremona, Venice, and a hundred other places. Florence, Rome, Naples, and Palermo lie before me. I never could have believed, and never did imagine, the full splendour and glory of Venice. That wonderful dream! The three days that I passed there, were like a Thousand and One Arabian Nights, wildly exaggerated a thousand and one times. I read Romeo and Juliet in Verona too, and bought some tooth-ache mixture of an Apothecary in Mantua, lean enough and poor enough to "go on" in the Tragedy.[†1] I came to England by the Simplon—sledging through the Snow upon the top—and through Switzerland, which was cool. But beautiful and grand, beyond expression. I shall remain in Paris—at the Hotel Brighton—until Friday Evening next; and if at that place or at any other, you could give me any commission to execute for you, I need not say how happy it would make me.

Mrs. Dickens begged me to present her best regards, if I saw you. I do so with a very ill will, in this miserable substitute for the pleasure I had anticipated in doing so, after so long an interval.

I am Ever Dear Miss Coutts
Yours most faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To T. C. NEWBY, 8 DECEMBER 1844*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Address: Paid. | T.C. Newby Esquire | Publisher | Mortimer Street | Cavendish Square | Private.

Piazza Coffee House, Covent Garden | Sunday Eighth December 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Newby, and begs to say that he thinks it will be best for Mrs. Overs, if Mr. Newby will have the goodness to pay into Messrs. Coutts's Bank, to the account of Mr. Dickens in trust for Mrs. Overs; all the money he has collected. Mr. Dickens (who leaves town again to day) has arranged for its immediate Investment in a Savings Bank in the name of Dr. Elliotson;[†2] as it will then bear some interest, instead of lying idle.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 DECEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, vi, 364. Date: Forster clearly implies that CD wrote on the day he left Paris: confirmed by Macready's reference to performance of Christine (see fn).

I would not recall an inch of the way to or from you, if it had been twenty times as long and twenty thousand times as wintry.[†3] It was worth any travel—anything! With the soil of the road in the very grain of my cheeks, I swear I wouldn't have missed that week, that first night of our meeting, that one evening of the reading at your rooms, aye, and the second reading too, for any easily stated or conceived consideration.

With Macready he had gone two nights before to the Odéon to see Dumas' Christine played by Madame St. George[†1] once Napoleon's mistress; now of an immense size, from dropsy I suppose; and with little weak legs which she can't stand upon. Her age, withal, somewhere about 80 or 90. I never in my life beheld such a sight. Every stage-conventionality she ever picked up (and she has them all) has got the dropsy too, and is swollen and bloated hideously. The other actors never looked at one another, but delivered all their dialogues to the pit, in a manner so egregiously unnatural and preposterous that I couldn't make up my mind whether to take it as a joke or an outrage. You and I, sir, will reform this altogether.[†2] The next night he went to the Italian Opera, where Grisi was singing in Il Pirata[†3] and the passion and fire of a scene between her, Mario, and Fornasari,[†4] was as good and great as it is possible for anything operatic to be. They drew on one another, the two men—not like stage-players, but like Macready himself: and she, rushing in between them; now clinging to this one, now to that, now making a sheath for their naked swords with her arms, now tearing her hair in distraction as they broke away from her and plunged again at each other; was prodigious. Next day[†5] he saw Macready rehearse the scene before the Doge and council in Othello,[†6] not as usual facing the float but arranged on one side, with an effect that seemed to him to heighten the reality of the scene.

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 DECEMBER 1844]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 327*n. Date:* 17 Dec according to Forster. From Marseilles.[†1]

When poor Overs was dying he suddenly asked for a pen and ink and some paper, and made up a little parcel for me which it was his last conscious act to direct. She[†2] told me this and gave it me. I opened it last night. It was a copy of his little book in which he had written my name, "With his devotion." I thought it simple and affecting of the poor fellow.

To W. S. LANDOR, [?13-19 DECEMBER 1844]

Mention in Landor to Rose Paynter, ?26 Dec 44 (letter clearly written just after Christmas), in Letters of Walter Savage Landor, Private and Public, ed. Stephen Wheeler, 1899, pp. 138-9. Date: evidently sent so as to reach Landor for Christmas, but after leaving England.

A delightful letter, saying he had been in England[†3] for a week, and describing his plans for visiting Rome, Naples, and Sicily.

To T. YEATS BROWN, 20 DECEMBER 1844*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Subito Subito | T. Yeates[†4] Brown Esqre | Console Inglese.

Steamer Charlemagne | Genoa Harbor
Friday Morning December Twentieth 1844.

My Dear Sir.

I write to you in great haste and by the first opportunity. I arrived last night.

Through my passport having fallen into the hands of a rival boat at Marseilles, which promised to sail, and didn't,[†5] and still wanted to keep it and me, waiting at that delightful town until Heaven knows when—and through my having only rescued it from those Sharks by main force, in time to leap on board this Vessel—it has not the visa of the Sardinian Minister at Marseilles upon it: which ought to have been obtained. Our Captain advises me (he is now going ashore, with the passports[†1] of the passengers) that I had best write to you, to ask you to send down to the Police to explain the omission—state that I am an undoubted gentleman, resident here without evil intentions—and release me from this scene of sickness and suffering.

I needn't tell you how anxious I am to get home; and I am sure I need not apologize to you for this early and pressing importunity. Ever believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Yeats Brown Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 DECEMBER 1844]

Extracts in F, IV, vi, 365, IV, vii, 366. Date: second extract 22 Dec according to Forster; first extract clearly same letter, the first on his return to Genoa.

He described his departure from Marseilles. As he went up the side of the packet, he saw a strange sensation among the angry travellers whom he had detained so long[†2], heard a voice exclaim "I am blarmed if it ain't DICKENS!" and stood in the centre of a group of Five Americans![†3] But they were all glad to see him; their chief man, who had met him in New York, introduced them all round with the remark, "Personally our countrymen, and you, can fix it friendly sir, I do expectuate",[†4] and through the stormy passage to Genoa they were excellent friends. He had to keep to his cabin, but contrived to get enjoyment out of them. The member of the party who had the travelling dictionary wouldn't part with it, though he was dead sick in the next cabin, and every now and then CD was conscious of his fellow-travellers coming down to him, crying out in varied tones of anxious bewilderment "I say, what's French for a pillow?" "Is there any Italian phrase for a lump of sugar? Just look, will you?" "What the devil does echo mean? The garsong says echo to everything!"[†5] They were excessively curious to know the population of every little town on the Cornice, and all its statistics; perhaps the very last subjects within the capacity of the human intellect that would ever present themselves to an Italian steward's mind. He was a very willing fellow, our steward; and, having some vague idea that they would like a large number, said at hazard fifty thousand, ninety thousand, four hundred thousand, when they asked about the population of a place not larger than Lincoln's-inn-fields. And when they said Non Possible!

(which was the leader's invariable reply), he doubled or trebled the amount; to meet what he supposed to be their views, and make it quite satisfactory.

A letter from Jeffrey[†1] about The Chimes was most energetic and enthusiastic.[†2] Filer sticks in his throat rather, but all the rest is quivering in his heart. He is very much struck by the management of Lilian's story, and cannot help speaking of that; writing of it all indeed with the freshness and ardour of youth, and not like a man whose blue and yellow[†3] has turned grey.

Miss Coutts has sent Charley, with the best of letters to me, a Twelfth Cake[†4] weighing ninety pounds, magnificently decorated;[†5] and only think of the characters, Fairburn's Twelfth Night characters,[†6] being detained at the custom-house for Jesuitical surveillance! But these fellows are ____ Well! never mind. Perhaps you have seen the history of the Dutch minister at Turin,[†7] and of the spiriting away of his daughter by the Jesuits? It is all true; though, like the history of our friend's servant, almost incredible. But their devilry is such that I am assured by our consul that if, while we are in the south, we were to let our children go out with servants on whom we could not implicitly rely, these holy men would trot even their small feet into churches with a view to their ultimate conversion! It is tremendous even to see them in the streets, or slinking about this garden.[†1]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 26 DECEMBER 1844*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | M. Emile De La Rue.

Peschiere December Twenty Sixth 1844.

My Dear Sir

I am truly distressed to hear that Madame De La Rue has had so severe an attack of her sad disorder; but if it has been more than usually trying, I am not without hope that the Mesmerism may have increased it for the moment.[†2]

At Eleven tomorrow, I shall be ready and happy to come to you—equally so, at any other time or season when I can entertain the smallest expectation of rendering Mad. De La Rue the lightest service.

I have the truest interest in her, and her sufferings; and if I could lessen them in any degree, I should derive great happiness from being the fortunate instrument of her relief.

Believe that I reciprocate all your friendly feeling with genuine cordiality, and that I am, with great regard

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I am going out to Quinto at twelve. Do not take the trouble of calling formally. We may eschew all that, I hope.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST-DECEMBER 1844]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 552. Date: from Genoa in 1844 according to Forster; after 28 July if reference is to Sir James Murray.

We are very sorry to lose the benefit of his advice[†3]—or, as my father would say, to be deprived, to a certain extent, of the concomitant advantages, whatever they may be, resulting from his medical skill, such as it is, and his professional attendance, in so far as it may be so considered.

1845

January

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30-31 DECEMBER 1844 and 1 JANUARY 1845]

Extracts in F, v, i, 380; F, 1872-4, II, ix, 179-81;[†1] F, IV, vii, 366. Date: last extract a postscript, dated 1 Jan 45, to a letter written after Christmas and in the week "following" CD's first letter according to Forster's summary; preceding extracts probably 30-31 Dec, since comments on play are in answer to Forster's first letter to Genoa (the second being about his brother's death: see To Forster, 8 Jan 45).

ARE we to have that play???[†2] Have I spoken of it, ever since I came home from London, as a settled thing! I do not know if I have ever told you seriously, but I have often thought, that I should certainly have been as successful on the boards as I have been between them. I assure you, when I was on the stage at Montreal[†3] (not having played for years) I was as much astonished at the reality and ease, to myself, of what I did as if I had been another man. See how oddly things come about! When I was about twenty, and knew three or four successive years of Mathews's At Homes from sitting in the pit to hear them, I wrote to Bartley[†4] who was stage manager at Covent-garden, and told him how young I was, and exactly what I thought I could do; and that I believed I had a strong perception of character and oddity, and a natural power of reproducing in my own person what I observed in others. There must have been something in the letter that struck the authorities, for Bartley wrote to me, almost immediately, to say that they were busy getting up the Hunchback (so they were!) but that they would communicate with me again, in a fortnight. Punctual to the time, another letter came: with an appointment to do anything of Mathews's I pleased, before him and Charles Kemble, on a certain day at the theatre. My sister Fanny was in the secret, and was to go with me to play the songs. I was laid up, when the day came, with a terrible bad cold and an inflammation of the face; the beginning, by the bye, of that annoyance in one ear to which I am subject at this day. I wrote to say so, and added that I would resume my application next season. I made a great splash in the gallery soon afterwards; the Chronicle opened to me; I had a distinction in the little world of the newspaper, which made me like it; began to write; didn't want money; had never thought of the stage, but as a means of getting it; gradually left off turning my thoughts that way; and never resumed the idea. I never told you this, did I? See how near I may have been, to another sort of life.

This was at the time when I was at Doctors' Commons as a shorthand writer for the proctors. And I recollect I wrote the letter from a little office I had there, where the answer came also.[†1] It wasn't a very good living (though not a very bad one), and was wearily uncertain; which made me think of the Theatre in quite a business-like way. I went to some theatre every night, with a very few exceptions, for at least three years: really studying the bills first, and going to where there was the best acting: and always to see Mathews whenever he played. I practised immensely (even such things as walking in and out, and sitting down in a chair): often four, five, six hours a day: shut up in my own room, or walking about in the fields. I prescribed to myself, too, a sort of Hamiltonian system for learning parts;[†2] and learnt a great number. I haven't even lost the habit now, for I knew my Canadian parts immediately, though they were new to me. I must have done a good deal: for, just as Macready found me out,[†3] they used to challenge me at Braham's:[†4] and Yates,[†5] who was knowing enough in those things, wasn't to be parried at all. It was just the same, that day at Keeley's, when they were getting up the Chuzzlewit last June.[†6]

If you think Macready would be interested in this Strange news from the South, tell it him. Fancy Bartley or Charles Kemble now! And how little they suspect me!

He wrote that he and Catherine intended to start for the south of Italy in the middle of January; he dwelt on all he had missed, in that first Italian Christmas, of their old enjoyments of the season in England; and closed with a postscript at midnight:

First of January, 1845. Many many many happy returns of the day! A life of happy years! The Baby is dressed in thunder, lightning, rain, and wind. His birth is most portentous here.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, 7 JANUARY [1845]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1929; MS 2 pp.; dated Genoa, 7 Jan 44— clearly CD's error for 1845.

Introducing a friend and asking him to open the doors of some of the Theatres and suchlike places for him.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 8 JANUARY 1845

Extract in Anderson Auction Co. catalogue, June 1914; MS 1 p.; dated Genoa, 8 Jan 45; marked "Private".

Mentioning Forster and the death of his brother, and asking for the balance of £500;[†2] the estimated expenses of the journey in Carnival and Holy Time,[†3] and among all sorts of damnable Potentates in frogged coats with stars upon them have made my hair stand on end to that extent that I can't get my hat on. Never mind. We will turn it to good account.[†4] Saying they drank healths on the first. Punch's Almanac[†5] is brilliant, but don't your Woodcutters require a leetle remonstrance? . . . Has George Cruikshank[†6] been fined since? Don't mention it to anybody. It's quite in confidence.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 JANUARY 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 367*n*. Date: 8 Jan according to Forster.

I feel the distance between us now, indeed. I would to Heaven, my dearest friend, that I could remind you in a manner more lively and affectionate than this dull sheet of paper can put on, that you have a Brother left.[†7] One bound to you by ties as strong as ever Nature forged. By ties never to be broken, weakened, changed in any way—but to be knotted tighter up, if that be possible, until the same end comes to them as has come to these. That end but the bright beginning of a happier union, I believe; and have never more strongly and religiously believed (and oh! Forster, with what a sore heart I have thanked God for it) than when that shadow has fallen on my own hearth, and made it cold and dark as suddenly as in the home of that poor girl[†1] you tell me of. . . . When you write to me again, the pain of this will have passed. No consolation can be so certain and so lasting to you as that softened and manly sorrow which springs up from the memory of the Dead. I read your heart as easily as if I held it in my hand, this moment. And I know—I know, my dear friend—that before the ground is green above him, you will be content that what was capable of death in him, should lie there. . . . I am glad to think it was so easy, and full of peace. What can we hope for more, when our own time comes!—The day when he visited us in our old house is as fresh to me as if it had been yesterday. I remember him as well as I remember you. . . . I have many things to say, but cannot say them now. Your attached and loving friend for life, and far, I hope, beyond it. C.D.

To [EMILE DE LA RUE], 15 JANUARY [1845]*

MS Berg Collection. Address: clearly to Emile de la Rue:[†2] see fn.

Wednesday January Fifteenth. Having been asleep some twenty minutes, I drew her into a conversation, as follows—occasionally with some little difficulty, and by dint of repeating the same question three or four times. "Well! where are you today? On the Hillside as usual?"—"Yes."—"Quite alone?"—"No."—"Are there many people there?"—"Yes. A good many." "Men, or women?"—"Both." "How they are[†3] dressed?"—"I can't see. I have too many things to look at."—"But you can tell me what they are doing. Can't you?"—"Yes. They are walking about, and talking."—"To you?"—"No. To each other."—"What are they saying?"—"I don't know."—"Try and find out"—"I am too busy."—"But not so busy that you can't listen to them, surely?"—"Yes I am. I have so many things to attend to."—"Are they a crowd?"—"Yes; quite a crowd."

Suddenly, she cried out, in great agitation. "Here's my brother! Here's my brother!"—and she breathed very quickly, and her figure became stiff. "Where?

In the crowd?"—"No. In a room."—"Who is with him?"—"Nobody."—"What is he doing?"—"Leaning against a window: looking out. Oh he is so sad! He is so sad!"—shedding tears as she spoke, and shewing the greatest sympathy. "What Brother? The Brother I know?"[†1]—"No no. Not the Brother you know. Another."—"What is his name?"—"Charles.[†2] Oh how sad he is!"—"What makes him so?"—"I don't know, I don't know. I must try to find out."—"Watch the door, and perhaps somebody will come in"—"Yes yes, I will. I am very busy, looking. I am trying to see."

After a pause, I said:
"Well! Has anybody come in?"—"No. He is still alone."—"Leaning against the window?"—"No. Walking up and down the room."—"Still sad?"—"Oh! Very sad! What can make him so sad!"—"Tell me what you see through the window."—"No. I can't, I can't. I am looking at him."—"Yes. But look at the window too. I'm sure you will if I ask you. What do you see through the window? Fields?"—"No no. The sea."—"How is your brother dressed?"—"In his uniform."—"With a sword?"—"No."—"With a hat?"—"No."—"You will be sure to tell me, if anyone comes in?"—"Yes yes. But I am trying to find out what makes him so sad, poor fellow!"—still crying, and in great distress. After a time, she said, with increased agitation. "He is thinking of me!"—and after another interval, she cried that she had found out the reason of his despondency. That he thought himself forgotten. That the letters had miscarried, and he had not received them. Then she fell back in the chair, like one whose mind was relieved; and said it was gone and she saw him no more.

She said all this, with as much earnestness as if the scene had been actually present to her view; and spoke in the peculiar tone of voice which is natural to a person who watches intently, and is afraid of losing any glimpse of what is passing. She several times brushed her closed eyes with her hands, as if to wipe away her tears, and see him more distinctly.

I do not make any note of the other visions of today, on this paper; as they are incomplete. And I am very curious to see whether she resumes them tomorrow. It is sufficient to remark just now, that she always imagines herself lying on a hill-side with a very blue sky above, green grass about her, and a pleasant air stirring. That the sensation of pain, suggests to her the rolling of stones down this hill, by some unseen people: which she is much distressed in her endeavours to avoid: and which occasionally strike her. There is a man haunting this place—dimly seen, but heard talking sometimes—whom she is afraid of, and "dare not" look at. I connect it with the figure whom she calls her bad spirit; in consequence of her trembling very much, when I once asked her, lying on this imaginary hill, if that phantom were to be seen: when she implored me not to speak of him. She said today that this creature was talking of me; and at my request, she tried hard to overhear what he said. But "she couldn't make it all out", she complained, and suddenly added, "Don't go away upon a Monday.

Be sure not to go away upon a Monday. It's not he who says that. I say it." Immediately afterwards, she complained of being tired, and begged me to awaken her.[†1]

To [EMILE DE LA RUE], [18 JANUARY 1845]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: endorsed by de la Rue: "Plan du Voiage de Dickens 18 Jan. 1845. Gênes".

Leave Genoa on Sunday 19th. January. Arrive at Carrara on Tuesday Evening January 21st. Stop at Carrara on Wednesday 22nd. Leave Carrara on Thursday 23rd. Arrive at Pisa, the same night. To Leghorn on Friday 24th. and sleep there, that night. Leave Leghorn on Saturday 25th. Arrive in Rome on the morning of Thursday 30th.—Leave Rome on Wednesday 5th. February. Arrive in Naples on Friday 7th.

My proceedings in Naples, and the length of my stay there, I shall regulate entirely, by what I hear from you and Madame De La Rue. My present idea is, to return to Rome ten days or a fortnight before the beginning of the Holy Week. But I have no fixed plan upon the subject; and shall be guided solely by your letters. Of course I shall write and let you know my intentions and movements, in any case, from Naples.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 25 JANUARY 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Genova.

Leghorn. Saturday Morning Twenty Fifth January 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

Your most interesting Journal is exactly what I wished to have. Nothing could be more clearly or plainly stated. Having her at a distance from me at all, I think it hardly possible that her state of mind could be more favorable to the preservation of the influence; for the more she accustoms herself to rely on the idea of her anxious Physician, the more prepared she will necessarily be to confide in, and to yield to, the Reality, when it is at hand.

I have read her letter many times since its receipt last night. It is full of interest, patience, the most winning confidence, strong hope, and the best side of the best nature that belongs to a woman.

The impression made on the disorder, generally, is beyond all question very great. But the extent to which her thoughts are directed to, and clustered round, that bad phantom—and the manner in which she watches the effect upon it, and trusts to my influence over it, and refers all her suffering to it—is most remarkable. So remarkable, and so needing to be helped, and tenderly and carefully directed, that if anything should occur (which Heaven forbi[d)][†2] to prevent your coming to Rome together, I cannot too strongly urge you to think of [the] easiest and most expedient way of inducing her to come, in any case. I see, af[ar] off, how essential it is that this Phantom should not regain its power for an instant. And we can hardly expect, yet, that she will very long be able to combat it, successfully, alone.

I have but a few moments this morning, and am forced to be very brief. I will write you at greater length from Rome, where I anxiously expect to hear from you again.[†1] I fear that before that time she may have had a bad attack. It keeps off wonderfully.

We have every reason for Hope, Courage, Confidence, Resolution, and Perseverance. And we will entertain them all, my dear De La Rue, and with God's leave to a right good end, or my name is not

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Don't consider this, a letter—for it's no such thing. Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards. It seems quite unnatural and strange to me, to write to you in anything but Pencil.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 JANUARY 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 367 and n. Date: first and third extracts "five days later" than 20 Jan according to Forster; second extract 25 Jan according to Forster. From La Scala.

Describing the little inn at La Scala, supported on low brick arches like a British haystack, the bed in their room like a mangle, the ceiling without lath or plaster, nothing to speak of available for comfort or decency, and nothing particular to eat or drink. But for all this I have become attached to the country and I don't care who knows it.

They had left Pisa that morning and the day before, Carrara, where Fletcher was staying with an English marble-merchant: A Yorkshireman, who talks Yorkshire Italian with the drollest and pleasantest effect; a jolly, hospitable, excellent fellow; as odd yet kindly a mixture of shrewdness and simplicity as I have ever seen. He is the only Englishman in these parts who has been able to erect an English household out of Italian servants, but he has done it to admiration. It would be a capital country-house at home; and for staying in "first-rate." (I find myself inadvertently quoting Tom Thumb.)[†3] Mr. Walton[†4] is a man of an extraordinarily kind heart, and has a compassionate regard for Fletcher, to whom his house is open as a home, which is half affecting and half ludicrous. He paid the other day a hundred pounds for him, which he knows he will never see a penny of again.[†1]

At Carrara: There is a beautiful little theatre there, built of marble; and they had it illuminated that night, in my honour.[†2] There was really a very fair opera: but it is curious that the chorus has been always, time out of mind, made up of labourers in the quarries, who don't know a note of music, and sing entirely by ear.[†3] It was crammed to excess, and I had a great reception; a deputation waiting upon us in the box, and the orchestra turning out in a body afterwards and serenading us at Mr. Walton's.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 26 JANUARY 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue. | Genova.

Siena.[†4] Sunday Night. | Twenty Sixth January 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

When I halt tomorrow night, I will write you a letter—a real letter—and despatch it by post immediately afterwards. I am anxious to answer your journal day by day; and intended to have sat down for that purpose this evening, when it came into my head to write her a cheerful note instead.[†5]

And the reason was, that I have had a strange and uncommon anxiety upon me, all day, which has amounted to a positively great distress. I cannot help fearing that she must be ill; and silence, with such an apprehension on me, seems to double distance.

I am looking, with the greatest impatience and interest, for your next. The debt I owe you for your last, I will not fail to pay tomorrow. In the meantime, and ever,

Believe me | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I write in great haste; with the last candle going out, and the Lamp gone.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 27 JANUARY 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Genova.

La Scala, No. 2[†1] (for we were in another place of the same name, the night before last.)
Monday January 27th. 1845.

My Dear De La Rue.

Having disposed, in this very lone house, of a much better dinner than any reasonable person could have expected to find in such a place,[†2] I am going to bestow a little tediousness[†3] on you. And I heartily wish you were "crackling"[†4] your very loudest in your own Palazzo, and I were writing it in my accustomed literary station in your drawing-room; instead of sitting (as I am) at the corner of an immense table, much larger than any table on which Billiards were ever[†5] played: with one very sharp corner forcing my centre waistcoat-button into my chest, and stamping[†6] a lively impression of it into my skin. Which is the only position in which I can find the least approach to warmth. In consequence of all the fire going up the chimney; and nothing of it coming into the room except the smoke.

I shall come to the subject which is nearest to my heart (and yours) last. As Hope stepped out of Pandora's box when all its stock of troubles was exhausted, so that topic shall shew itself from the depths of my letter, when other and less interesting matters are disposed of.

They are few enough. You know how gloomy it was, when we left Genoa, and you know how it rained next day. On reflection, I don't think anybody knows that, to the full extent, except myself, my wife, Roche and the Vetturino—and the four horses: I had almost forgotten the horses. Perhaps because they were under water nearly all the way. Something wet and heavy—feeling, to the touch, like the toast out of a jug of toast and water—was put into the carriage by a postilion, after it was dark on that Monday night, and when we were within some four miles from Spezzia. It appeared, on examination, to be a letter from Fletcher, who had got wet through, in crossing the Magra to meet us; and described himself as taking dinner in a blanket while his clothes were drying.

When we reached the Inn we found him in this state; very red and warm; and looking like a perfectly new-born baby, suddenly grown up. He had by that time taken two dinners; and on my ordering our own, he requested that a knife and fork might be placed for him—and so took a third. You recollect the dimensions (in round numbers) of his nose? Well! By the time he had finished this third dinner, his eyes protruded infinitely beyond the tip of that feature.

You never saw such a human Prawn as he looked, in your life. When he retired to bed in a state of insensibility, I had the faintest expectation possible, of ever seeing him again, alive.

But he got through it, somehow or other, and turned up again at breakfast. He was soft and pulpy, all over: and much swollen. This last appearance subsided in course of time, and the Magra subsiding also, we got over it (not, as I thought, without some danger) on Tuesday afternoon. We remained with Mr. Walton until Thursday Morning[†1]—started for Pisa that day (taking him and Fletcher with us)—dined and slept at Pisa that night—climbed up the Leaning Tower next morning—took the Railroad to Leghorn[†2] that afternoon—and dined at Mr. Gower's[†3] that Evening. Next day we started from Pisa, alone—slept at the other La Scala, that night—at Siena last night; where there is a very beautiful Cathedral, a picturesque Piazza, and a very quaint old town—and arrived here this evening, at Six. That is to say, Two Hours ago. It rained rather heavily in the night, last night. But since this day week, the weather has been fine and pleasant: though generally cool, and sometimes very cold.

Before I take up your Diary and read it over for the hundredth time; let me tell you what happened today. And if you think it will interest Madame De la Rue, pray read it to her: giving her, at the same time, something as near my love as you may feel disposed to deliver. I was on the Box of the Carriage; and, as usual, at Eleven by the Genoa time, composed myself for one hour's abstraction, in rigid pursuance of our agreement. Now, it happened that I was not alone, as it is my custom to be then; but that Mrs. Dickens had been hoisted up, to get the air. As I very often sit a long time without saying anything at all—when I am thinking, or when I am thinking I am thinking—and as she is well used to it, I didn't mind her, but sat quite still and quiet. Observe.—I didn't move hand or foot. I engaged myself, in imagination, in mesmerizing our Patient; and my whole Being, for the time, was set upon it, certainly, with the greatest stedfastness. But it was impossible for anybody to know in what I was engaged, otherwise than that I was very intent on some subject. Will you believe me when I tell you that I had not remained thus, more than five or ten minutes, when I was disturbed by Mrs. Dickens' letting her muff fall. And can you believe me when I tell you that looking at her I found her, as I live! in the Mesmeric trance, with her eyelids quivering in a convulsive manner peculiar to some people in that state—her hands and feet suddenly cold—her senses numbed—and that on my rousing her, with some difficulty, and asking her what was the matter, she said she had been magnetized?[†4] She was so discomposed that it was necessary to put her into the carriage immediately; and she had a bad fit of trembling until the influence wore off.

No word had ever passed my lips in reference to my compact with Madame De La Rue. She was as utterly ignorant of it, as she is of any business-secret in your banking house. There is no possibility of any mistake or exaggeration in this. She is quite well, and has been ever since we left Genoa. Within five minutes of my shutting myself up within myself, I had been teaching her some Italian words; and I supposed her to be still engaged in conning them over, when this surprise occurred. It was really quite a fearful thing, and the strongest instance of the strange mysteries that are hidden within this power, that I have ever seen or heard of. Picture to yourself the stupendous difficulty of believing such a statement, if you read it in Print. Even imagine the difficulty of getting anybody to believe it, who knew the parties and could not doubt their veracity. Yet there can be nothing more true. For it is Truth itself. I have purposely stated it in the plainest manner, and have not presented it to you in anything like the remarkable aspect, in which it actually occurred.

Now, with reference to your Journal. Pray do not think you have put down too much, and pray do not depart from that system of writing it, as nothing could be more concise and intelligible. I cannot express to you the delight with which I read it, for with that strong trust in me on the part of Madame de la Rue—that most indubitable token of the strength of our position, and the power of the Magnetism—how can we despair of anything, or fail to hope for everything! Preserving that, and steadily increasing it (which is my desire and expectation) I do hope and believe that with God's leave the worst parts of her disorder will fall down prostrate, and be crushed the soonest, before it. If she were clairvoyant, or (to say the wildest thing I can think of) if she were omniscient, I should not value the wonder more than I do this gentle Trust of hers in my power to help her—I should not care for it, as a bright star of Hope, half so much. It is an assurance to me that the root of that Tree which shall peacefully shelter your Home for years to come, has struck deep into the Earth; and that the relief she has already experienced in her Mind is hardly to be estimated.

But this last assurance I have from herself. Set down in her own words, and not to be read with dry eyes. It is in that letter which you forwarded to me at Leghorn; and from it, I learn that her mental agony has been immensely beyond anything she has ever led you (on whom, she says, she could not bear to bring more sorrow than she could help: having already brought so much) to suppose. She speaks of that, as a thing past. She speaks, with confidence, of her nightly horrors as dreadful trials whose days were numbered—almost as trials already past. It is impossible to imagine the weight of the load she has begun to lay down in this respect, without the affecting knowledge of her grateful heart.

She has now no secret in connexion with the devilish figure; for that chain is utterly broken. That it bound her to the disease, and the disease to her, and that it must have linked her (she says so) in the course of time to Madness, I have no earthly doubt. I cannot yet quite make up my mind, whether the phantom originates in shattered nerves and a system broken by Pain; or whether it is the representative of some great nerve or set of nerves on which her disease has preyed —and begins to loose its hold now, because the disease of those nerves[†1] is itself attacked by the inexplicable agency of the Magnetism. I think upon the whole, I incline to this last opinion; but I could not make up my mind without more observation of, and more conversation with, herself. I should also like to discuss it, at full length, with you.

However this may be, what I want to impress upon you; and what your affection will, I know, readily see, is this. That figure is so closely connected with the secret distresses of her very soul—and the impression made upon it is so entwined with her confidence and trust in me, and her knowledge of the power of the Magnetism—that it must not make head again. From what I know from her, I know there is more danger and delay in one appearance of that figure than in a dozen fits of the severest bodily pain. Believe nothing she says of her capacity of endurance, if the reappearance of that figure should become frequent. Consult that, mainly, and before all other signs. I shudder at the very thought of the precipice on which she has stood, when that Fancy has persecuted her. If you find her beset by it, induce her to be got to me by one means or other; for there the danger lies so deep, that she herself can hardly probe it, even now.

My dear De la Rue, I have written, or have meant to write, very strongly on this point, for I hold her clue now, and am acquainted with its vast importance. This letter will cross your second, which is already, I hope, on its way to Rome. I will write to you, when I have heard from her and you at that place. I have come to the end of my paper, and to bed time, at the same moment. Very many thanks for your kindness to my pet little sister in law. Best remembrances from Mrs. Dickens. All cordial assurances of friendship and regard From Yours Heartily

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 JANUARY 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 368-9, 367-8*n*. Date: second extract 29 Jan according to Forster; first extract clearly same letter, since it describes the journey up to that point. From Ronciglione.

Describing the journey, he said that before Radicofani[†1] was reached there were disturbing rumours of bandits[†2] and even uncomfortable whispers as to their night's lodging-place.[†3] I really began to think we might have an adventure; and as I had brought (like an ass) a bag of napoleons with me from Genoa, I called up all the theatrical ways of letting off pistols that I could call to mind, and was the more disposed to fire them from not having any. The inhabitants of Radicofani, being all of them beggars, had the habit of swooping down, like so many birds of prey,[†1] upon any carriage that approached it. Can you imagine [Samuel Carter Hall][†2] in a very frowsy brown cloak concealing his whole figure, and with very white hair and a very white beard, darting out of this place with a long staff in his hand, and begging? There he was, whether you can or not; out of breath with the rapidity of his dive, and staying with his staff all the Radicofani boys, that he might fight it out with me alone. It was very wet, and so was I: for I had kept, according to custom, my box-seat. It was blowing so hard that I could scarcely stand; and there was a custom-house[†3] on the spot, besides. Over and above all this, I had no small money; and the brave C never has, when I want it for a beggar. When I had excused myself several times, he suddenly drew himself up and said, with a wizard look (fancy the aggravation of [Hall] as a wizard!) "Do you know what you are doing, my lord? Do you mean to go on, to-day?" "Yes," I said, "I do." "My lord," he said, "do you know that your vetturino is unacquainted with this part of the country; that there is a wind raging on the mountain, which will sweep you away; that the courier, the coach, and all the passengers, were blown from the road last year; and that the danger is great and almost certain?" "No," I said, "I don't." "My lord, you don't understand me, I think?" "Yes I do, d___ you!" nettled by this (you feel it? I confess it). "Speak to my servant. It's his business. Not mine"—for he really was too like [Hall] to be borne. If you could have seen him!—"Santa Maria, these English lords! It's not their business, if they're killed! They leave it to their servants!" He drew off the boys; whispered them to keep away from the heretic; and ran up the hill again, almost as fast as he had come down. He stopped at a little distance as we moved on; and pointing to Roche with his long staff cried loudly after me, "It's his business if you're killed, is it, my lord? Ha! ha! ha! whose business is it, when the English lords are born! Ha! ha! ha!" The boys taking it up in a shrill yell, I left the joke and them at this point. But I must confess that I thought he had the best of it. And he had so far reason for what he urged, that when we got on the mountain pass the wind became terrific, so that we were obliged to take Kate out of the carriage lest she should be blown over, carriage and all, and had ourselves to hang on to it, on the windy side, to prevent its going Heaven knows where![†4]

Do you think, in your state room, when the fog makes your white blinds yellow, and the wind howls in the brick and mortar gulf behind that square perspective, with a middle distance of two ladder-tops and a back-ground of Drury-lane sky—when the wind howls, I say,—as if its eldest brother, born in Lincoln's-inn-fields, had gone to sea and was making a fortune on the Atlantic—at such times do you ever think of houseless Dick?[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?31 JANUARY 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 369. Date: probably the day after their arrival at Rome on 30 Jan.

Describing his arrival in Rome,[†2] he said that the cloudy sky, dull cold rain and muddy footways, he was prepared for; but not for the long streets of commonplace shops and houses like Paris or any other capital, the busy people, the equipages, the ordinary walkers up and down. It was no more my Rome, degraded and fallen and lying asleep in the sun among a heap of ruins, than Lincoln's-inn-fields is. So I really went to bed in a very indifferent humour.[†3]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 31 JANUARY 1845*

MS Miss Gladys Storey.

Hotel Meloni,[†4] Rome.
Friday Night Thirty First January | 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

We arrived here last night; and I received your packet safely, this morning. Very many thanks. I hope that before this reaches you, you will have received a couple of missives from me, over and above that sent from Leghorn.

The weather has been, and is, atrocious. We found this Hotel full to the throat —except one apartment. And what do you say to that apartment having been the very one you occupied when you were here? I say there is something Magnetic in it. I didn't know it until just now at dinner, when Roche, my man, came up, red hot, with the intelligence which had transpired in a conversation between himself and Meloni.

We arrived yesterday, just in time for the horse Race. It was very pretty, but uncommonly short. I sneezed as I put my head out of window to look at it; and the whole business was begun and ended during that short convulsion. It was not a strong sneeze either. Quite a mild one.

As to the Masks, of which there were many scores going round and round the Piazza, afoot and in coaches; I must confess that my present impression of their powers is not a very high one. They were marvellously dull and stupid, so far as I could see.[†1] There have been none today, and there will be none tomorrow (when there is a Festa); but I shall correct my judgment on Monday and Tuesday. I have been to St. Peters,[†2] and to the Coliseum. The former struck me of course, immensely. But the latter is the great sensation. And I never can forget it.[†3]

It is lucky for you that I am going to write forthwith to Madame De la Rue—that I may enclose the note in this—or I would have come down upon you with a blaze of description and fancy, worthy of old Di Negro, when he screws his right hand round, and looks out at the corners of those sly old leering Peepers of his, after the manner of the inspired Improvisatori. Heaven send you may never find me in that humour, with opportunity added to it! For I am much longer about it than a Carnival Horse—and am infinitely slower in my pace, I fear.

I don't know the Writings you ask me about. Not at all. I have a kind of sense that I ought to know them. But I don't.

Now to our serious subject.

Madame De la Rue writes cheerfully. But she says in her note (which is very short) "My head is certainly not as cool as when I was mesmerized every day,—once or twice I have had the sensation of Fire burning and raging in my head, to a painful degree."

But it is not so much that passage to which I am anxious to call your attention, as this:—

After speaking of the struggle which, she says, she feels must occur with the Bad Spirit, she adds this:

"Do not think me very foolish in again requesting you not to go to St. Trinita di Monti. Although I am so much better, I cannot yet bring myself to believe all I heard and saw there, was a fevered dream. And without, as yet, being able to explain to myself the reason, I dread your going there, without me. I trust I shall soon be able to tell you what has left so fearful an impression, but as yet I find it impossible. Heaven preserve me from passing another such day and night as I did then!"

I extract this, to shew you that I did not lay great stress on this creature, in my last, without strong reason. There can be no doubt that her position in reference to it is a very critical one; and that she is now in a state most favorable and advantageous to the best influence The Mesmerism could possibly exert upon her.

Therefore I am more than ever anxious for your news from Geneva.[†4] I shall not fail, in writing to her tonight, to urge her again, to have no secret whatever from me, in connexion with this Fancy; and I shall try to shew her how unwise it is, and how opposed to all my earnest wishes, that she should retain one, hidden in her breast. Do not lead in any way to the subject, lest she should think (which she would immediately) that I had given you any hint of this. But how unnecessary it is, that I should caution you who know her so well, and have studied and tended her with such delicate and loving care! My dear De la Rue, forgive me.

My agony is, lest any portion of the existing influence should be lost in prolonged separation—and lest that Devil in torturing her, should establish other secret horrors. In that case, how disheartening it would be to us (though I have no doubt of getting the better of them in time, even then) and what dreadful endurance to her!

Suppose—only suppose—it haunted her, night after night, and threatened her with revenge upon herself and upon me, of some prodigious and inconceivable kind, if she resumed the Mesmerism. And suppose that became a fixed idea! If it were once rooted in her unselfish and enduring nature, that I could bring the Malice of this Fancy on myself, by trying to heal her; I believe she would rather suffer, and would never tell why.

Could anything of this kind have been in her mind, when she was in that strange state we have so often spoken of, at Brown's one night—and so inconsistently and unaccountably proposed to drop the Mesmerism, of which she had then just begun to feel the Relief and Benefit? It may seem a monstrous idea of mine; but I am staggered[†1] by the possibility of such a thing.

Therefore, once again, I am the more anxious for your news from Geneva. And heartily glad I shall be to hear that it is what we could desire, and what we do desire. And if your plans are unfolded in your next letter, and promise to lead you soon this way, it will be one of the most welcome letters I have ever read in my life.

Mrs. Dickens begs to be most cordially and Sincerely remembered to you. I wish, for your sake, I wrote a better hand. But it was a better hand once, before I wrote books. Which must be a great satisfaction to you, no doubt.

Always My Dear de la Rue | Yours most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

M. De la Rue

February

To CHARLES BODENHAM,[†2] 2 FEBRUARY 1845

Text from N, I, 657.

Hotel Meloni | Sunday Afternoon, Second February 1845

My Dear Sir,

I am much indebted to you for your kind recollection of me, this morning. I was in the act of making myself as clerical as possible,[†3] when your note arrived.

Mrs. Dickens had a very good place (though we were rather late); and we saw the sight to great advantage. I regret that we missed you, but in a scene of such magnitude and bewilderment, I scarcely hoped to find you.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 4 FEBRUARY 1845*

MS Miss Gladys Storey. Address (envelope, MS Berg Collection): A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Genova.

Rome Tuesday February Fourth 1845.

My Dear De La Rue. I have read your two notes; this morning received; with a more painful interest than usual. But not with the least surprise.

I am decidedly of opinion that the poor housekeeper's condition and all its attendant anxieties have little or nothing to do, in reality, with Madame De La Rue's gradually altering state. You know that from the first I have had a great fear that the influence so recently established, would gradually wear away—I, the cause of the influence, not being present—before the pressure and returning strength of the disorder represented by the bad figure. I believe the influence to be fading fast. She may not distinguish it, herself, from her faith in me, and may think that as long as the latter exists, the former remains with her. But it is not so. The figure is obtaining the ascendant—and will get it, until I can mesmerize her again; when I shall not be able to take her up, I fear, at the point where I left her, but shall have to work on to it.

It is a great point that she has conquered her horror of breaking confidence with this shadow, and that she has told me, in this last note, all it said when it broke silence in her bedroom. On the other hand, I cannot but observe that her fear of it is greater than her subservience to me. I find this exemplified in a slight incident, but one which shews it as strongly as a greater circumstance could. She had written me that she would leave the Casino Ball, exactly at One: remembering that I had appointed that hour before: and thinking it would please me. She laid great stress on this, and underlined the words. Notwithstanding this promise and her desire to keep it, her dread of the shadow becomes so great that she utterly disregards her voluntary pledge to me, and remains abroad until the morning is far advanced (as I learn from you) to escape it. I see in this, an increasing power on the part of the figure, beyond all kind of question.

As to what she says of her confidence in not requiring the Magnetism (if need were) until my return to Genoa, we can place no reliance on it whatever. It is merely a piece of that strange inconsistency which we know to be, at times, a part of her state. In the very same packet of letters in which you told me that; she expressed to me a perfect pain of Hope that nothing would prevent your bringing her to Rome.

Thank Heaven your good partner[†1] comes, and you will be able to do so! For on the beating down of this Phantom—worst symptom of her disorder, and most alarming evidence of its progress and strong hold upon her; mind and body—all depends. I cannot beat it down, or keep it down, at a distance. Pursuing that Magnetic power, and being near to her and with her, I believe that I can shiver it like Glass.

I am obliged to write to you in great haste, as this packet must go to Torlonia's[†1] before Rome goes mad—which will be soon after Mid-day.[†2] I shall look, with great impatience, for your letters at Naples. I am full of anxiety for her; and would to God the Holy Week were here.

Always My Dear De la Rue | Yours wholly
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 FEBRUARY 1845†

MS Morgan Library.

Rome. Tuesday Fourth February 1845

My Dearest Georgy.

This is a very short note, but time is still shorter. Come by the first boat, by all means. If there be a good one a day or two before it, come by that. [†a]In case of any missing, or unforseen[†3] arrival (which is not likely) we shall be at the Vittoria Hotel, Naples. Write to us (by De la Rue as usual) and let us know; if there be time; exactly on what day and by what boat you leave Genoa.[†a] Don't delay on any account. I am very sorry you are not here. The Carnival is a very remarkable, and beautiful sight. I have been regretting the having left you at home, all the way here.

Kate says will you [†b]bring her a box of toothpowder. Anne knows where it is. Also will you[†b] take counsel with Charlotte about colour (I put in my word, as usual, for brightness) and have the darlings bonnets made at once, by the same artist as before. Kate would have written, but is gone, with Black,[†4] to a day-Performance at the opera, to see Cerito[†1] dance. At two each day, we sally forth in an open Carriage [†c](bearing dear Susan[†2] with us)[†c]—with a large sack of sugar plums and at least five hundred little Nosegays, to pelt people with. I should think we threw away yesterday, a thousand of the latter. We had the Carriage filled with flowers, three or four times. I wish you could have seen me catch a Swell Brigand [†d](Mr. Wood,[†3] exactly)[†d] on the nose with a handfull of very large confetti, every time we met him.[†4] It was the best thing I have ever done. The Chimes are nothing to it.

[†e]Best loves to Mamey, Katey, Charley, Walley, and Chickenstalker (whose name, I beg to observe, is written all in one).[†e]

Anxiously expecting you, I am ever
Dear Georgy | Yours most Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

†fMrs. Charles Gibbs.†5 Yours received this morning, of course.†f

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 10 FEBRUARY 1845*

MS Miss Gladys Storey.

Vittoria Hotel,†6 Naples. Monday Night
February Tenth 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

We were delayed a day longer than I had expected, in Rome; and did not get here, until yesterday Evening.†7 The Steamer which brought me your most welcome Packet arrived at breakfast-time this morning. I saw it coming; and had your letter in my hand, almost as soon as I had shut the telescope, through which I watched it into Port.

I am much concerned that you should think it possible I had the faintest doubt of the true depth, intensity, and earnestness, of your devotion to Madame De la Rue; or of the affectionate and zealous watch you have kept over her in all her sufferings. Believe me, I admire and feel your constancy under such a trial, scarcely less than hers; and that everything I have seen of you, in reference to her (it has been much, though in a short time) has filled me with a sorrowful pleasure, not easy of expression. When I wrote to you, strongly, on the Great and terrible symptom which is hovering about her, and over which—God be thanked for it!—we know we can exercise great power; I wrote as I felt. As I felt, do I say! Not one twentieth part as strongly as I felt, and feel. For the mystery of her mind in connexion with this Phantom, was then just opening to me. And the vast extent of the danger by which I saw she was beset, made me clench the pen as if it were an iron rod—Made me use it too, as clumsily as if it were a poker, when it became the instrument of conveying such a wrong and groundless idea to you.

My full reasons for entertaining this fervid opinion of the necessity of following up the blow that has been struck at this worst symptom of her state, I cannot give you. For she makes a condition with me that I shall not, until—she looks forward, you see, to being quite composed upon the subject, one day—until she gives me leave. Under the impression that with all your anxious care you might not know what she had kept hidden so fearfully in her breast, I wrote as I did. With no other grain of meaning or intention my dear friend, believe me.

I think it possible, even now—I think it probable, indeed—that as the time approaches for your journey to Rome, she may raise objections, and be disinclined to go. The more she shews this state of mind, the greater the danger is, and the more urgent and imperative the necessity for her being brought—I underline the word "brought" to express—by your determination. You feel with me, I know.

Observe, my dear De la Rue. On Sunday the Second, she confesses to you that she feels stronger against the figures, now that the journey is decided on. That night, she sees the Figure, and apparently overcomes it. But before it disappears, it says something, which she does not distinctly hear. On the next day, she vaguely damps the ardour of your preparations for the journey. I strongly incline, with you, to the belief that trying in the interval to put together what scattered words she heard the figure say, she joined and dovetailed them into some threat, having reference to her venturing to undertake the journey. And I think you will always find that her otherwise unaccountable indisposition to go, manifests itself, after an interview with this Phantom. That her own heart is set on going—that her whole being is full of the most earnest hope and expectation of relief that all her wishes tend that way—I know. In this very last letter, received to day, she speaks of it with greater Earnestness than ever. With an earnestness that seems to make her hand tremble as she writes.

In my two last letters—I mean the last of the two from Rome, and that just written from here, and to be enclosed in this—I have battled this point, with the greatest perseverance and doggedness I could use. I have told her that she must set no store whatever, by anything this creature says. That it is in its Nature a false thing—an unreal creation; a lie of her eyes and Ears—and cannot speak the Truth. That if it could speak the Truth, it couldn't be, at all. That if I could call it up, when she and I were together, and could represent it as letting fall the Blade of a Guillotine upon my head, I would do so, and would have her look on immoveably: triumphant in the conviction that it was a powerless shadow. That if she thinks, for a moment, it could hurt me; she cannot have faith and trust in me, and I must magnetize her, 'till I win them in reality—&c&c. Anticipating what may happen.

The Magnetism between us on that Sunday, is especially remarkable—if I can call anything so, which is a part of such a strange and mysterious whole.

The Tuesday, on which she was so restless, was the day on which I last wrote to you, I think. It was the last day of the Carnival in any case; and I was out, in the streets, all the afternoon. I was not very gay, certainly; but I was not unusually gloomy. I am not quite sure whether it was on that night or on Monday, that I woke up suddenly, about one or two o'Clock, in a state of indescribable horror and emotion. Not caused by any dream, for I had not dreamed. And when I say "woke up", I don't express it properly; for I was quite myself when I awoke, and the feeling came on, immediately afterwards, when I was broad awake. It was so intense that I was obliged to get up, and walk about, and light the candles. I could almost swear this happened on the Tuesday Night, but I am not quite sure, and cannot fix it, by any helping circumstance. I thought continually about her, both awake and asleep, on the nights of Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. And it is remarkable that I don't dream of her, in the ordinary sense; but merely have an anxiety about her, and a sense of her being somehow a part of me, as I have when I am awake.—It turns me quite cold to think, with a start, that this may have been on Wednesday! I cannot find out at this moment, but I will do so, and tell you when I am quite certain.

I quite agree with you in your construction of that extraordinary circumstance about the voices in the sick-room. It is a philosophical explanation of many Ghost Stories. Though it is hardly less chilling than a Ghost-Story itself. There is no reasonable doubt that the woman received the impression magnetically from Madame De la Rue.

I shall hope to hear from you again (and shall rely on doing so) by my little Mrs. Gibbs. I will write by the next Steamer after that; and if there be a boat in two or three days from this time, I will write a line to Madame De la Rue, without waiting for Mrs. G's arrival.

A capital apartment (though at the top of the house) secured for us[†1] at Meloni's! I purpose returning there, on the first of March; and leaving here, four days beforehand, at most. The exact day of leaving here, I will tell you in my next. Besides other letters to this place, I shall hear from you, of course, at Rome, before you start, and when you start. Write as often as possible—and do not think you can write at too great length. I shall be glad to arrange with you, for catching Madame de la Rue with a joyful note, upon the road; and also for making a false appointment for meeting you, and coming on her sooner than we agree upon.

Of all the walks and talks we shall have together—and the sights we shall see together—and our merry journey home together—and our weighty conversation

(yours and mine I mean) about our summer plans, and how we can best arrange to pursue the great end before us, steadily, to its end: of which I am constantly thinking—I dare say nothing, now, lest the clocks of Rome and Naples should stand still for a Month to come. But when I think of your coming to Rome, and of Madame de la Rue growing day by day and week by week, better in health, quieter in mind, happier in everything; when I picture her restored to peace and rest, with nothing lingering and cankering in her breast to make her nights hideous and her days weary; I feel such enthusiasm at work within me, that every hour's postponement is an hour of heaviness. Mrs. Clive the actress said of Garrick[†1] (crying at his Lear) that she believed he could act a Gridiron. When I think of all that lies before us, I have a perfect conviction that I could magnetize a Frying-Pan.

I don't know the American Gentleman—God forgive me for putting two such words together!—whose name you mention. I never heard of him. Do you know what the population of the United States is?—I forget the figures myself, but I will answer for it, that every man and boy in the sum total knows me intimately. I never heard of an American, since I was in "our country",[†2] who didn't.

Too much set upon the one subject tonight, my dear De la Rue, to tell you anything about our travels! Except that as we came South, it got colder and colder. That yesterday it was painfully and bitingly cold! That the night before last, the Fleas (at a place called Saint Agata) really overdid the thing, and sowed themselves, like self-acting mustard and cress, in my flannel dressing-gown. That I find myself perpetually stopping in public places to scratch myself, like a Dog. And that when I listen very hard outside my Portmanteau, I think I can distinctly hear them, leaping up inside the lid, and knocking their heads against it.

Ever believe me [†a]though—With them or without them (if I ever should be again)[†a]
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Here is a letter for Charley, and two (English) for the Post.

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 FEBRUARY 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 369-70 and n. Date: first extract 11 February according to Forster; second extract probably same letter, since so placed by Forster. From Naples.

He had found the wonderful aspects of Rome before he left; for loneliness and grandeur of ruin nothing could transcend the southern side of the Campagna. But farther and farther south the weather had become worse; the only bright sky he had seen was just as the sun was coming up across the sea at Terracina. Of which place, a beautiful one, you can get a very good idea by imagining something as totally unlike the scenery in Fra Diavolo[†1] as possible. He thought the bay less striking at Naples than at Genoa, the shape of the latter being more perfect in its beauty, and the smaller size enabling you to see it all at once, and feel it more like an exquisite picture. He disliked the city. The condition of the common people here is abject and shocking. I am afraid the conventional idea of the picturesque is associated with such misery and degradation that a new picturesque will have to be established as the world goes onward. Except Fondi,[†2] there is nothing on earth that I have seen so dirty as Naples. I don't know what to liken the streets to where the mass of the lazzaroni live. You recollect that favourite pigstye of mine near Broadstairs? They are more like streets of such apartments heaped up story on story, and tumbled house on house, than anything else I can think of, at this moment.

In Naples, the burying place of the poor people is a great paved yard with three hundred and sixty-five pits in it: every one covered by a square stone which is fastened down. One of these pits is opened every night in the year; the bodies of the pauper dead are collected in the city; brought out in a cart (like that I told you of at Rome);[†3] and flung in, uncoffined. Some lime is then cast down into the pit; and it is sealed up until a year is past, and its turn again comes round. Every night there is a pit opened; and every night that same pit is sealed up again, for a twelvemonth. The cart has a red lamp attached, and at about ten o'clock at night you see it glaring through the streets of Naples: stopping at the doors of hospitals and prisons, and such places, to increase its freight: and then rattling off again. Attached to the new cemetery (a very pretty one, and well kept: immeasurably better in all respects than Père-la-Chaise) there is another similar yard, but not so large.[†4] . . . About Naples, the dead are borne along the street, uncovered, on an open bier; which is sometimes hoisted on a sort of palanquin, covered with a cloth of scarlet and gold.[†5] This exposure of the deceased is not peculiar to that part of Italy; for about midway between Rome and Genoa we encountered a funeral procession attendant on the body of a woman, which was presented in its usual dress, to my eyes (looking from my elevated seat on the box of a travelling carriage) as if she were alive, and resting on her bed. An attendant priest was chanting lustily—and as badly as the priests invariably do. Their noise is horrible.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 14 FEBRUARY 1845*

MS Berg Collection.

Naples. | Friday Morning February Fourteenth 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

I have but a moment. The Castore[†1] is going suddenly.—My little Pet,[†2] just arrived, and safely.—Your journal full of interest—Madame De la Rue, sliding fast back—Good God, how glad I am, you made your arrangements in good time!

We will see everything when you come—and do everything—and talk about everything. We leave here for Rome (by the Monte Cassino road) on the 24th.[†3] arriving there, on the 1st.—I was desperately mindful of my Patient yesterday and the day before. Intensely so, last night. I half expect some reason for it in your next Journal.

Ever Yours at heart

CD.

To DOUGLAS CHEAPE,[†4] 15 FEBRUARY 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Vittoria Hotel Naples | Saturday Fifteenth February 184

My dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say that we are engaged on Monday—and indeed for every day during the short remainder of our stay here—otherwise it would have afforded both Mrs. Dickens and myself the greatest pleasure to have accepted your kind Invitation.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Cheape Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 and 22 FEBRUARY 1845

Text from MDGH, I, 136-41, with some readings from extracts in unidentified catalogue at Eastgate House, Rochester.

Naples, Monday, February 17th, 1845.

My dear Mitton,

This will be a hasty letter, for I am as badly off in this place as in America—beset by visitors at all times and seasons, and forced to dine out every day.[†1] I have found, however, an excellent man for me—an Englishman, who has lived here many years, and is well acquainted with the people, whom he doctored in the bad time of the cholera, when the priests and everybody else fled in terror.[†2]

Under his auspices, I have got to understand the low life of Naples (among the Fishermen and Idlers) almost as well as I do[†3] the do. do. of my own country; always excepting the language, which is very peculiar and extremely difficult, and would require a year's constant practice at least. It is no more like Italian than English is to Welsh. And as they don't say half of what they mean, but make a wink or a kick stand for a whole sentence, it's a marvel to me how they comprehend each other. At Rome they speak beautiful Italian (I am pretty strong at that, I believe); but they are worse here than in Genoa, which I had previously thought impossible.

It is a fine place, but nothing like so beautiful as people make it out to be. The famous bay is, to my thinking, as a piece of scenery, immeasurably inferior to the Bay of Genoa, which is the most lovely thing I have ever seen. The city, in like manner, will bear no comparison with Genoa. But there is none in Italy that will, except Venice. As to houses, there is no palace like the Peschiere for architecture, situation, gardens, or rooms. It is a great triumph to me, too, to find how cheap it is. At Rome, the English people live in dirty little fourth, fifth, and sixth floors, with not one room as large as your own drawing-room, and pay, commonly, seven or eight pounds a week.

I was a week in Rome on my way here, and saw the Carnival, which is perfectly delirious, and a great scene for a description. All the ancient part of Rome is wonderful and impressive in the extreme, far beyond the possibility of exaggeration. As to the modern part, it might be anywhere or anything—Paris, Nice, Boulogne, Calais, or one of a thousand other places.

The weather is so atrocious (rain, snow, wind, darkness, hail, and cold) that I can't get over into Sicily. But I don't care very much about it, as I have planned out ten days of excursion into the neighbouring country.[†4] One thing of course—the ascent of Vesuvius, Herculaneum and Pompeii, the two cities which were covered by its melted ashes, and dug out in the first instance accidentally, are more full of interest and wonder than it is possible to imagine. I have heard of some ancient tombs (quite unknown to travellers) dug in the bowels of the earth, and extending for some miles underground. They are near a place called Viterbo,[†1] on the way from Rome to Florence. I shall lay in a small stock of torches, etc., and explore them when I leave Rome. I return there on the 1st of March, and shall stay there nearly a month.

Saturday, February 22nd.—Since I left off as above, I have been away on an excursion of three days. Yesterday, leaving[†2] at four o'clock, we began (a small party of six) the ascent of Mount Vesuvius, with six saddle-horses,[†3] an armed soldier for a guard, and twenty-two guides. The latter rendered necessary by the severity of the weather, which is greater than has been known for twenty years, and has covered the precipitous part of the mountain with deep snow, the surface of which is glazed[†4] with one smooth sheet of ice from the top of the cone to the bottom. By starting at that hour I intended to get the sunset about halfway up, and night at the top, where the fire is raging. It was an inexpressibly lovely night without a cloud; and when the day was quite gone, the moon (within a few hours of the full) came proudly up, showing the sea, and the Bay of Naples, and the whole country, in such majesty as no words can express. We rode to the beginning of the snow and then dismounted. Catherine and Georgina were put into two litters, just chairs with poles, like those in use in England on the 5th of November; and a fat Englishman, who was of the party, was hoisted into a third, borne by eight men. I was accommodated with a tough stick, and we began to plough our way up. The ascent was as steep as this line /—very nearly perpendicular.[†5] We were all tumbling at every step; and looking up and seeing the people in advance tumbling over one's very head, and looking down and seeing hundreds of feet of smooth ice below, was, I must confess, anything but agreeable. However, I knew there was little chance of another clear night before I eave this, and gave the word to get up, somehow or other. So on we went, winding a little now and then, or we should not have got on at all. By prodigious exertions we passed the region of snow, and came into that of fire—desolate and awful, you may well suppose. It was like working one's way through a dry waterfall, with every mass of stone burnt and charred into enormous cinders, and smoke and sulphur bursting out of every chink and crevice, so that it was difficult to breathe. High before us, bursting out of a hill at the top of the mountain, shaped like this , the fire was pouring out, reddening the night with flames, blackening it with smoke, and spotting it with red-hot stones and cinders that fell down again in showers.[†6] At every step everybody fell, now into a hot chink, now into a bed of ashes, now over a mass of cindered iron; and the confusion in the darkness (for the smoke obscured the moon in this part), and the quarrelling and shouting and roaring of the guides; and the waiting every now and then for somebody who was not to be found, and was supposed to have tumbled[†1] into some pit or other, made such a scene of it as I can give you no idea of. My ladies were now on foot, of course; but we dragged them on as well as we could (they were thorough game,[†2] and didn't make the least complaint), until we got to the foot of that topmost hill I have drawn so beautifully. Here we all stopped; but the head guide, an English gentleman of the name of Le Gros[†3]—who has been here many years, and has been up the mountain a hundred times—and your humble servant, resolved (like jackasses) to climb that hill to the brink, and look down into the crater itself. You may form some notion of what is going on inside it, when I tell you that it is a hundred feet higher than it was six weeks ago. The sensation of struggling up it, choked with the fire and smoke, and feeling at every step as if the crust of ground between one's feet and the gulf of fire would crumble in and swallow one up (which is the real danger), I shall remember for some little time, I think. But we did it. We looked down into the flaming bowels of the mountain and came back again, alight in half-a-dozen places, and burnt from head to foot. You never saw such devils. And I never saw anything so awful and terrible.

Roche had been tearing his hair like a madman, and crying that we should all three be killed, which made the rest of the company very comfortable, as you may suppose. But we had some wine in a basket, and all swallowed a little of that and a great deal of sulphur before we began to descend. The usual way, after the fiery part is past—you will understand that to be all the flat top of the mountain, in the centre of which, again, rises the little hill I have drawn—is to slide down the ashes, which, slipping from under you, make a gradually increasing ledge under your feet, and prevent your going too fast. But when we came to this steep place last night, we found nothing there but one smooth solid sheet of ice. The only way to get down was for the guides to make a chain, holding by each other's hands, and beat a narrow track in it into the snow below with their sticks. My two unfortunate ladies were taken out of their litters again, with half-a-dozen men hanging on to each, to prevent their falling forward; and we began to descend this way. It was like a tremendous dream. It was impossible to stand, and the only way to prevent oneself from going sheer down the precipice, every time one fell, was to drive one's stick into one of the holes the guides had made, and hold on by that. Nobody could pick one up, or stop one, or render one the least assistance. Now, conceive my horror, when this Mr. Le Gros I have mentioned, being on one side of Georgina and I on the other, suddenly staggers away from the narrow path on to the smooth ice, gives us a jerk, lets go, and plunges headforemost down the smooth ice into the black night, five hundred feet below! Almost at the same instant, a man far behind, carrying a light basket on his head with some of our spare cloaks in it, misses his footing and rolls down in another place; and after him, rolling over and over like a black bundle, goes a boy, shrieking as nobody but an Italian can shriek, until the breath is tumbled out of him.

The Englishman is in bed to-day, terribly bruised but without any broken bones. He was insensible at first and a mere heap of rags; but we got him before the fire, in a little hermitage there is halfway down, and he so far recovered as to be able to take some supper, which was waiting for us there. The boy was brought in with his head tied up in a bloody cloth, about half an hour after the rest of us were assembled. And the man who had had the basket was not found when we left the mountain at midnight. What became of the cloaks (mine was among them) I know as little. My ladies' clothes were so torn off their backs that they would not have been decent, if there could have been any thought of such things at such a time. And when we got down to the guides' house, we found a French surgeon (one of another party who had been up before us) lying on a bed in a stable, with God knows what horrible breakage about him, but suffering acutely and looking like death. A pretty unusual trip for a pleasure expedition,[†1] I think!

I am rather stiff to-day but am quite unhurt, except a slight scrape on my right hand. My clothes are burnt to pieces. My ladies are the wonder of Naples, and everybody is open-mouthed.

Address me as usual. All letters are forwarded. The children well and happy. Best regards.

Ever faithfully

C.D.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 FEBRUARY 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 370, 370*n*. Date: second extract "Naples, 2nd February, 1845" according to Forster—impossible, since CD did not reach Naples until 9 Feb; probably a mistake for 22 Feb, as he would certainly send Forster an account of Vesuvius, and "English letters" already written are mentioned in To de la Rue, 23-25 Feb; first extract "a later letter" than 11 Feb according to Forster; probably same letter as second extract.

What would I give that you should see the lazzaroni as they really are—mere squalid, abject, miserable animals for vermin to batten on; slouching, slinking, ugly, shabby, scavenging scarecrows! And of the raffish counts and more than doubtful countesses, the noodles and the blacklegs,[†2] the good society! And oh the miles of miserable streets and wretched occupants, to which Saffron-hill or the Borough-mint is a kind of small gentility, which are found to be so picturesque by English lords and ladies; to whom the wretchedness left behind at home is lowest of the low, and vilest of the vile, and commonest of all common things.[†1] Well! well! I have often thought that one of the best chances of immortality for a writer is in the Death of his language, when he immediately becomes good company; and I often think here,—What would you say to these people, milady and milord, if they spoke out of the homely dictionary of your own "lower orders."

Thackeray praises the people of Italy for being kind to brutes.[†2] There is probably no country in the world where they are treated with such frightful cruelty. It is universal.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 23 and 25 FEBRUARY 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: M. Emile De la Rue.

Naples. Sunday Twenty Third February 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

We have been away from here for three or four days—at Pæstum. We took Vesuvius on our way back—in the only perfectly clear weather I have seen since we left Genoa, and on the night before that on which the Moon was at the full. We began the ascent at 4 o'Clock in the afternoon, and came down at Midnight. The coming down was extremely difficult and dangerous; the ashes lying deep under Snow and Ice, and the whole side of the Cone being like a smooth sheet of Glass. A Guide was much hurt; and an English Gentleman fell head foremost down the whole side of the Cone. He has been in bed ever since, greatly bruised but in no wise dangerously hurt. A french gentleman, one of a party who were an hour or so in advance of us, was not so fortunate. When we got down to the Guide's house, we found him stretched on a litter in a stable, with some horrible breakage about him, and looking like Death. He could not be moved, or I would have brought him back to Naples in my carriage.

My ladies were perfectly "Game", and covered themselves with Glory. They had need to cover themselves with something, for their clothes were literally torn off their backs, and hanging in Rags about them. The Mountain is blazing away prodigiously; the little crater at the top being one hundred feet higher than it was, six weeks ago. I burnt my clothes off my back by climbing up to the top of it, on the windy side (with the English Gentleman before mentioned and Salvatore the head Guide, while the twenty five assistant Guides were roaring and yelling that we should be killed) and looking down into the flaming Hell below. The red hot ashes were falling in showers; and the noise and fire, and smoke, and sulphur, made me feel as if I were dead drunk. To which effect, the trembling crust of ground below my feet, contributed, no doubt.

It is a tremendous sight. Awful and terrible indeed. Between the stately moon, and the fire, and the black smoke, and the white Snow, and the red going-down of the Sun, there was a combination of Lights and Shadows upon it, such as I could never have imagined. It is more terrible than Niagara: the effect of which (to me at least) is peacefully and gently solemn, as the happy deaths of ten thousand people, without pain or blood, might be.[†1] But the two things are as different in the impression they produce as—in short as fire and water are, which I suppose is the long and the short of it.

The weather has been bad, and very cold. But we have been here and there, and everywhere. Among other places to the Teatro San Carlino,[†2] where there is the most extraordinary acting I ever beheld. As an exact copy of the life out of doors; set before one without much art—not heightened here, and kept out of view there, but presented broadly and plainly as the real thing itself is—it is quite wonderful.

Naples itself, rather—very slightly—disappoints me. I don't think the Bay so beautiful a picture as the Bay of Genoa. Its shape is not so easily made out and understood; and the effect of the hills is dissipated by its great size. Neither is the out-of-door life half so picturesque and uncommon as our travelling wiseacres are fond of making it. Herculaneum and Pompeii have impressed me beyond all description. I couldn't say how much, if I had the power of forty Gaberels[†3] rolled into one.

Your Journal proceeds as I expected it would. I have no doubt the shadows will thicken more and more, until you start. But I hardly imagine they will be very troublesome on the journey; though I have no doubt it will be a trying time for Madame De la Rue. I have not observed the hour from eleven to twelve, for sometime—for twelve days; being curious to see whether she became at all worse at that time, after I left off. I have not told her this, in my note.

I live in the hope that you start on thethird. And I take it for granted that when you write to me, on the road, you will address me at Meloni's, so that I may get the letters straight. I felt last night, between 11 and 12 o'Clock, as if Madame De la Rue were alarmed and uneasy. Very suddenly; as I was writing letters to England; this idea took possession of me. I felt so very uncomfortable, that I shut my desk and went to bed. Where was she, and how was she, I wonder!

On the day you come to Rome, you will start in the morning from Ronciglione, will you not? Let me know where you come from, and at what hour. I will leave Rome on horseback, at about the same hour; and meet you, as near as possible, halfway. When you have made half your distance therefore, look out for a Gallant Figure, apparently possessing an angelic Nature. All others are counterfeits.

I have always forgotten to tell you that I read French as easily as English; and that if it be pleasanter to you to write in that language (though I can hardly think it; you write English so well) it is all one to me. I am afraid I have lost a steamer in being away at Pæstum; and am in a state of irritable impatience to shut this packet up. As if closing it and getting it to you were one and the same thing!

Will you Post these English letters for me; and charge yourself with the small correspondence for the Peschiere?

Madame De la Rue's last letter to me was full of hope and impatience in reference to Rome; but was remarkably incoherent and unconnected. So much so, that I could scarcely make out, here and there, what she really had in her mind. I am very feverishly looking for the next Packet; and have damned it so much that I begin to fear it is going to revenge itself by not coming at all. My mind misgives me that she must have had a bad attack, after this long interval. The tenth of March, the tenth of March, the tenth of March!

Ever My dear De la Rue, Heartily Yours,

CD.

—I won't sign my name at full length, because I haven't room for the Flourish.

Tuesday 25th.—The weather is so very bad, my dear De la Rue; and the boat after 2 postponements, seems still so uncertain in its departure (as the Leopoldo is in its long expected and long-protracted arrival) that I have taken my English letters out of this Packet, and sent them by the Land Post today.

Ever Yours

CD.

To C. E. COTTERELL,[†1] 25 FEBRUARY 1845*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney. Address: Al Sigr. | Sigr. C. E. Cotterell.

Vittoria | Twenty Fifth February 1845

My Dear Sir

I thank you very much for your kind letter, and its enclosures.

I am horrified to find that my Servant has despatched Le Gros' book to Capua in the carriage, along with many other volumes that usually have a place there. I will not fail to return it to you, carefully, by the railroad.

Nor will I forget to make you better acquainted with the principles on which the School we spoke of (Bruce Castle,[†2] Tottenham) is conducted. But I shall not be able to do so, before I reach Genoa.[†3]

Let me assure you that I would infinitely rather be a familiar star to you, than a distantly glorious one; and that I have had sincere pleasure in our frank and unaffected intercourse.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth unite with me in best regards to Mrs. Cotterell, and I am always My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. E. Cotterell Esquire.

March

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 MARCH 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 370-1. Date: CD was back at Rome on Sunday 2 Mar (the expected date) according to Forster, who says, "Sad news from me as to a common and very dear friend[†1] awaited him there"; CD would naturally write at once.

No philosophy will bear these dreadful things, or make a moment's head against them, but the practical one of doing all the good we can, in thought and deed. While we can, God help us! ourselves stray from ourselves so easily; and there are all around us such frightful calamities besetting the world in which we live; nothing else will carry us through it. . . . What a comfort to reflect on what you tell me.[†2] Bulwer Lytton's conduct is that of a generous and noble-minded man,[†3] as I have ever thought him. Our dear good Procter too! And Thackeray—how earnest they have all been! I am very glad to find you making special mention of Charles Lever.[†4] I am glad over every name you write.[†5] It says something for our pursuit, in the midst of all its miserable disputes and jealousies, that the common impulse of its followers, in such an instance as this, is surely and certainly of the noblest.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 MARCH 1845]

Extracts in F, 1872-4, II, v, 91-2*n*; F, IV, vi, 359-60*n*. Date: first extract 9 Mar according to Forster; second extract "four months later" than 17 Nov 44, clearly before CD left Rome c. 25 Mar, and since also concerned with pictures, likely to be same letter.

None of the books are unaffected and true but Simond's, which charms me more and more by its boldness, and its frank exhibition of that rare and admirable quality which enables a man to form opinions for himself without a miserable and slavish reference to the pretended opinions of other people.[†1] His notices of the leading pictures enchant me. They are so perfectly just and faithful, and so whimsically shrewd.[†2]

The most famous of the oil paintings in the Vatican[†3] you know through the medium of the finest line-engravings in the world;[†4] and as to some of them I much doubt, if you had seen them with me, whether you might not think you had lost little in having only known them hitherto in that translation. Where the drawing is poor and meagre, or alloyed by time,—it is so, and it must be, often; though no doubt it is a heresy to hint at such a thing,—the engraving presents the forms and the idea to you, in a simple majesty which such defects impair. Where this is not the case, and all is stately and harmonious, still it is somehow in the very grain and nature of a delicate engraving to suggest to you (I think) the utmost delicacy, finish, and refinement, as belonging to the original. Therefore, though the Picture in this latter case will greatly charm and interest you, it does not take you by surprise. You are quite prepared beforehand for the fullest excellence of which it is capable.[†1] He thought the paintings in private palaces[†2] seen to greater advantage than those in galleries; because in numbers not so large as to distract attention or confuse the eye. There are portraits innumerable by Titian, Rubens, Rembrandt and Vandyke; heads by Guido, and Domenichino, and Carlo Dolci; subjects by Raphael, and Correggio, and Murillo, and Paul Veronese, and Salvator; which it would be difficult indeed to praise too highly, or to praise enough.[†3] It is a happiness to me to think that they cannot be felt, as they should be felt, by the profound connoisseurs who fall into fits upon the longest notice and the most unreasonable terms. Such tenderness and grace, such noble elevation, purity, and beauty, so shine upon me from some well-remembered spots in the walls of these galleries, as to relieve my tortured memory from legions of whining friars and waxy holy families. I forgive, from the bottom of my soul, whole orchestras of earthy angels, and whole groves of St. Sebastians stuck as full of arrows according to pattern as a lying-in pincushion is stuck with pins.[†4] And I am in no humour to quarrel even with that priestly infatuation, or priestly doggedness of purpose, which persists in reducing every mystery of our religion to some literal development in paint and canvas, equally repugnant to the reason and the sentiment of any thinking man.

To MRS MACREADY, 10 MARCH 1845

MS Morgan Library. Address: Inghilterra. | Mrs. Macready. | 5 Clarence Terrace | Regents Park | London.

Rome, Monday Tenth March 1845.

My Dear Mrs. Macready

More in recollection of your two welcome notes, heartily received and blushingly unanswered, than as one labouring under the delusion of having anything to say, I append my Sign-Manual to the highly illegible letter of my worser half.[†5] I was so cold after leaving you and dear Macready in Paris, that I was taken out of the coach at Marseilles (it was sixteen hours behind its time) in a perfectly torpid state, and was at first supposed to be luggage. But the Porter's not being able to find any direction upon me, led to a further examination; and what the newspapers call, "the vital spark", was finally discovered twinkling under a remote corner of the travelling-shawl, which you were pleased to approbate—love the word; it belongs to our dear and enlightened friends the Great American People—in the Hotel Brighton.

After that, I passed three days of waking nightmare at Marseilles. I think it was three. It may have been two, but I crowded into the space, the noisome smells of a patriarchal life. After that, I was so horribly ill on board a steamboat that I should have made my Will if I had had anything to leave—but I had only the basin; and I couldn't leave that, for a moment. That suffering over, I rushed into the arms of my expectant family. Their happiness is more easily conceived than described. You know me; and will paint the Picture for yourself.

I was greatly distressed to hear from you that you had been so unwell in Paris. What can have been the matter with you? I laid down your note, and thought of all manner of possibilities[†1]—My particular love to my Godson.

Sometimes I have a terrible apprehension that Macready, conscience-stricken beyond endurance by the reflection that he has never written a word to me of his triumphs and projects (I have a great desire to know his secret mind upon the latter head)[†2] will play the Roman Fool,[†3] and die upon the Jewelled Dagger the French King gave him.[†4] Adjure him to be of good-cheer. My forgiveness and blessing are enclosed.

How anxiously I look forward to finding myself once again in the dining parlor at Clarence Terrace—just the old, snug, little party of ourselves—I should vainly try to say, though I wrote a quire! But Midsummer, please God, will find us all together—well and happy—and mainly so, in our mutual friendship and attachment.

In any case, as poor Power[†5] used to say I'm mutual. And I am sure you are too—though you Do attack me sometimes.

When Willy has finished his Complete Guide to Paris and its Environs, I shall be happy to edit the Book, and to preface it with some account of the author, founded on a personal correspondence with him in that Capital.[†6] With best regards to Miss Macready, and all the Pets, I am ever My Dear Mrs. Macready Faithfully Your friend CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 MARCH 1845

MS Morgan Library. Address: Inghilterra. | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Rome Eighteenth March 1845.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I am very much afraid that the date of this letter will contrast, to my disadvantage, with the date of Twelfth Night, which you made a proud night for Charley in Genoa, and a happy night to me in the more secret quarter of my own breast, by your kind and generous remembrance. But I have been so constantly and incessantly on the wing since that great finale of the Christmas Holidays; and have been so cold, and so wet, and so muddy, and so everything which is currently supposed to be incompatible with Italy—and have been into such extraordinary places, and have eaten such unaccountable meals, and have slept in such incredible beds, and have led, altogether, such a wildly preposterous life—that I have not had the heart to write to you, lest my letter, partaking in some degree of the character of my existence, should be of too vagabond a nature for delivery at your door.

Before I left Genoa, I had all the knives locked up: fearing that Charley would otherwise, in the excitement of his feelings, lay hands upon a sharp one, and do himself a mischief—I don't mean with any evil design upon his life, but in the endeavour to make a pen wherewith to write a note to you. The intention was so very active within him that I should have allowed him to gratify it, but for his writing being something large for the Foreign Post, which, at his rate of penmanship, would hardly carry more than his name. But I gave him a solemn promise that I would thank you twenty thousand times. That I would report him tolerant of Italian life and manners, but not attached to them: yielding a strong preference to those of his own country. That I would say, he never could forget his ride with you to Hampstead. That I should tell you that such a thing as a Twelfth Cake was never seen in Genoa before; and that when it went to a Swiss Pastry-Cook's in that City, to have the sugar repaired (it was a very little chipped at one corner) it was exhibited to the principal Inhabitants, as a wonder and marvel. That I would give his love and his sisters' loves to "that lady",[†1] and would add that I had at length succeeded in impressing on their minds the great truth that she didn't always live in bed. That I would say, that he looked forward to coming with me to see and thank you, on our return to England. And that I would be sure to tell you a great deal more, which I will not inflict upon you on any account.

The weather has been atrocious, ever since I returned from England at Christmas. I do not think I ever felt it so cold as between this place and Naples, about a Month ago. Between Naples and Paestum too, three weeks ago; with a cold North wind blowing over Mountains covered with Snow; it was quite intolerable. Within the last three days, there have been glimpses of Spring. I will not say more, in the fulness of my heart; for experience has taught me that tomorrow may be deep Winter again. I have certainly seen more Sun in England, between the end of December and the middle of March, than I have seen in Italy in that time. And for violent and sudden changes, there is surely no country in the world, more remarkable than this. When it is fine (as people say) it is very fine—so beautiful, that the really good days blot out the recollection of the bad ones. But I do honestly believe that it is not oftener fine here, than it is elsewhere; and that we are far better off at home in that respect, than anything short of the Rack, would induce most people to confess.

In the mass, I like the common people of Italy, very much—the Neapolitans least of all; the Romans next, for they are fierce and brutal. Not falling on very good specimens of the higher orders, in the beginning, I have not pursued that Enquiry. I have had no leisure to do so, if I had had the inclination, so I have avoided them as much as possible, and have kept the greater part of my letters of introduction in my own desk. Florence I have not yet seen: intending to take it, next week,[†1] on my way back to Genoa. But of all the places I have seen, I like Venice, Genoa, and Verona, most. The Bay of Genoa has charms, in my eyes, which the Bay of Naples wants. The City of Genoa is very picturesque and beautiful. And the house we live in, is really like a Palace in a Fairy Tale.

I cannot remember, to my satisfaction, whether you were ever at Herculaneum and Pompeii. Though my impression is, that I have heard you speak of them. The interest and wonder of those ruined places, far exceeded my utmost expectations. Venice was such a splendid Dream to me, that I can never speak of it,—from sheer inability to describe its effect upon my mind. The ancient parts of Rome, and a portion of the Campagna, are what I meant when I came here; the rest a little below my imaginary mark, and very unlike it. The Coliseum by daylight, moonlight, torchlight, and every sort of light, most stupendous and awful. Saint Peters not so impressive within, as many Cathedrals I have seen at home. The great altar, and the state entrance to the Subterranean Church, might be Rundell and Bridge's[†2] show-room.

And the canopies, hangings, and carpets (of all sorts of reds and greens) now hung up, and put down, for the Holy-Week Ceremonies,[†3] have the effect of an enormous Bon-bon. Before which, and round which, and in and out of which, they are perpetually carrying the poor old Pope about on men's shoulders, like a Gorgeous Guy Faux.[†4]

The drollest thing I have seen, is a daily gathering of Artists' "Models" on the steps of a church near the house (Meloni's Hotel) in which we live: where they dispose themselves in conventionally picturesque attitudes, and wait to be hired as Sitters. The first time I went up there, I could not conceive how their faces were familiar to me—how they seemed to have bored me, for many years, in every variety of action and costume—and to come back upon my sight as perfect nightmares. At last it flashed upon me all at once that we had made acquaintance, and improved it, on the walls of the Royal Academy. So we had indeed. And there is not one among them whom you wouldn't know, at first sight, as well as the Statue at Charing Cross. The most aggravating of the party is a dismal old patriarch, with very long white hair and beard, who carries a great staff in his hand: which staff has been faithfully copied at the Exhibition in all its twists and knots, at least once through the Catalogue. He is the venerable model. Another man in a sheepskin, who always lies asleep in the Sun (when there is any) is the Pastoral Model. Another man in a brown cloak who leans against a wall with his arms folded, is the assassin Model. Another man who looks over his shoulder and always seems to be going away, but never goes, is the haughty model. Several women and children form the family models. And the cream of the whole is, that they are one and all the falsest Rascals in Rome or out of it: being specially made up for their trade, and having no likeness among the whole population. It is a good illustration of the Student life as it is, that young men should go on copying these people elaborately time after time and time out of mind, and find nothing fresh or suggestive in the actual world about them.[†1]

My English papers tell me of the death of Sydney Smith,[†2] whom I deeply regret. I also hear, privately, that Hood, the author, is past all chance of recovery.[†3] He was (I have a sad presentiment that even now I may speak of him as something past) a man of great power—of prodigious force and genius as a poet—and not generally known, perhaps, by his best credentials. Personally, he had a most noble and generous spirit. When he was under the pressure of severe misfortune and illness, and I had never seen him, he went far out of his way to praise me; and wrote (in the Athenæum) a paper on The Curiosity Shop; so full of enthusiasm and high appreciation, and so free from any taint of envy or reluctance to acknowledge me, a young man far more fortunate than himself, that I can hardly bear to think of it.[†4]

I hope to be in Genoa again, before the middle of next month;[†5] and have arranged to leave there and turn homeward, in the middle of June. Whether we may linger on the way in France or Switzerland, I do not yet quite know. But in that case it is probable that I may run over to London for two or three days to preside at a Public Dinner in aid of the Sanatorium.[†6] I shall hope to see you then, at latest, unless (I wish there were any hope of it!) you should be coming Genoaway, and would give me a chance of shewing you the Peschiere orange trees.

In any case, when I am among them again, I shall trouble you with at least one more of Charley's messages, and a few words of my own. For I fear that I may otherwise (not undeservedly) pass out of your remembrance; and believe me dear

Miss Coutts there are not many memories from which it would give me so much pain to fade, as from yours. I rate its worth too highly.

Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Mrs. Dickens begs to unite in best regards to yourself, and "the lady"—who is well, I hope—and happy, I know. I hope you cried when you read the Chimes?

To COUNT ALFRED D'ORSAY, 18 MARCH 1845*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Rome. Tuesday Night. March Eighteenth 1845.

My Dear Count D'Orsay. If I didn't love you as much as I do, and hadn't given my whole heart to Lady Blessington (except the two pieces which belong to the Miss Powers) I never should have the courage to begin this letter. For have I not preserved a dismal silence for three whole Months? Did I not receive the charmingest of charming notes from Lady Blessington, within a fortnight after my return to Genoa, which note is still unanswered? And have I not been actually yearning to write, week after week and month after month; during the whole of which time I have been on the wing, and have scarcely once taken pen in hand?

I hardly know where I have not been, since we parted in that cold weather at Kensington. But I have been at Naples—and don't like it. It disappointed me greatly. The weather was not fine, certainly; was often very bad; but even if it had been better, I should not have liked the place. Its attractions seem to me to have been greatly exaggerated. Nor do the common people there, please me as well as in other parts of Italy. For the Bay—I like the Bay of Genoa better. It can be better seen in one view, and its beauty is not so diffused and wasted. Of all the picturesque abominations in the World, commend me to Fondi. It is the very pink of hideousness and squalid misery.

As to Rome, you know all about that. You know how one goes to see the Coliseum by daylight, moonlight, torchlight, and every sort of light. You know what an awful and tremendous place it is, and what an impression the first sight of it produces. Not that it weakens day by day, or does anything but strengthen. For it has greater claims upon me now, than ever.

The Holy Week is in full force at this time; and hundreds of English people with hundreds of Murray's Guide Books and a corresponding number of Mrs. Starkes'[†1] in their hands are chattering in all the silent places, worrying the professional Ciceroni to death, and doubting the authenticity of everything on the spot—to defend it to the last gasp, when they get home again. The Pope is being perpetually carried up and down Saint Peter's like a glorious Guy Faux; some very long ceremony takes place every day; everybody says that everything is not worth seeing; and everybody goes to see everything else notwithstanding, by day and by night, with unabated vigour.

You know that great flight of steps, which leads from the Piazza di Spagna, to the Church of Trinita del Monte? Perhaps you don't know that it is the place of resort for the Artists' Models—their Bourse, as it were—where they wait to be hired. It has amused me more than anything I have seen in the way of drollery. The first time I went up there, I could not conceive why the faces seemed familiar to me—why they appeared to have bored me, for years, in every possible variety of action and costume—and how it was that they started up before me in the broad day, like so many saddled and bridled nightmares. I soon found that we had made acquaintance (and improved it for several years) on the walls of the Royal Academy. There is one old villain with long white hair and an immense beard, who I am convinced has gone, at least once, through the whole catalogue. This is the venerable or patriarchal model. He carries a long staff: every knot and twist in which staff I have seen faithfully depicted at innumerable exhibitions. There is another man in a blue cloak who always pretends to lie asleep in the Sun (when there is any), and who I needn't say is always very wide awake, and very attentive to the disposition of his legs. This is the dolce far niente Model. There is another man in a brown cloak who leans against a wall with his arms folded in his mantle, and looks out of the corners of his eyes, which are just visible beneath his slouched hat. This is the Assassin Model. There is another man who constantly looks over his own shoulder, and is always going away, but never goes. This is the haughty or scornful model. As to Domestic Happiness and Holy Families, they must come very cheap, for there are lumps of them all up the steps. And the grand thing is that they are all the falsest Rascals in the World; specially made up for the purpose; and having no counterparts in Rome or any other part of the habitable Globe.[†1] It is a good illustration of the Student System that young men should go on, batch after batch, reproducing and reproducing these people: and finding nothing fresh or stirring in the active real world about them. Is it not?

You know all the Pictures and Statues I have seen—and how many of them are really good, and how many really bad. I am guilty of all sorts of heresies in these respects; and when I see a Jolly Young Waterman representing a cherubim, or a Barclay and Perkins's Drayman depicted as an Evangelist, am obliged to confess that it is not exactly my idea of either character. Neither am I partial to angels who play on Genuine Cremonas and brazen bassoons, for the edification of sprawling monks apparently in liquor[†2]—nor to Josephs surveying Nativities, from shiny backgrounds, in a state of considerable mystification—nor to Saint Sebastians, of whom I wouldn't have a specimen on any terms, notwithstanding the extreme rarity of the subject. All this kind of High Art is out of my reach, I acknowledge. Not the less so, because I have the purest and most enduring delight in those achievements of the pencil which are truly great and grand, and worthy of their theme. But there is such an extensive amount of humbug afloat on these matters; and people are so strangely disposed to take what they have heard or read for granted and not use their own intellects and senses, that whenever I go into a Gallery I hang out "No Trust" in legible white letters on a black ground—like an English Turnpike.[†1]

I was enchanted by Herculaneum and Pompeii—with Paestum also, which is wonderfully solemn and dreary. Vesuvius I saw under very remarkable circumstances, with not an ash upon the surface of the cone—nothing but deep snow frozen hard; up which we climbed, with poles, as if we were toiling up an Antedeluvian Twelfth Cake.[†2] There was a great deal of fire pouring out of the crater, and it was in a state of violent agitation. The Moon was at the full; the night intensely cold; the sky without a cloud. First, day; then sunset; then darkness; then the rising of the moon; then the dark night of the black smoke; then the raging of the red fire; then the coming out again into the shining of the moon upon the waste of Snow—it was the finest sight conceivable. There were some accidents, as you may have heard from poor Forster. But happily they befel neither me nor mine. The loneliness and grandeur of the scene, I never can forget.

We intend taking Florence on our way back to Genoa, for which place we start, on Wednesday the Twenty Sixth. We shall remain at the Peschiere until the middle of June, as I at present purpose; and may linger for a month or so, in France or Switzerland, on our way home. I look forward to seeing you again my dear Count D'Orsay, with the greatest impatience and delight; and project dinners in Devonshire Terrace of the most glorious description.

Will you tell Lady Blessington with my best regards and most affectionate and earnest remembrances, that I will not fail to write to her, as soon as I set foot in my Genoa Palazzo. Ten thousand thanks to her for her little piece of Fiction in the Court Journal.[†3] The real subscription was much larger than any there has ever been to any of my books; and the Sale has gone on nobly. But all this, she knows, I dare say, better than I. It has given me great pain to read in the newspapers of the death of Sydney Smith, and of the wife of my good friend Tracey[†4]—greater to hear from Forster that there are no hopes of Hood's recovery. He was a man of extraordinary power as a writer: and personally had a most generous and noble spirit. At a time when I had never set eyes upon him, and when he was sick and in circumstances of great distress, he went far out of his way to write a gallant and enthusiastic paper on my Curiosity Shop, in the Athenæum. Nor had he, I sincerely believe, one atom of base envy in his nature. I speak of him in the past tense, for I fear he has by this time ceased to be.

The weather has been something too preposterous to write about, ever since I returned. There are glimpses of Spring now, but I am afraid to say more lest I should find myself in winter again, before the conclusion of the sentence. The last day and evening of the Carnival quite charmed me. I returned hither from Naples by the Monte Cassino Road; where there are no Post Horses, and where there are such Inns, that travelling in that direction is quite a practical joke. It is a beautiful country. In the Convent of Monte Cassino, high up in the clouds, I found a Ra[ven][†1] speaking the lingua Toscana admirably, and expressing in all his looks and gestures that the system of convents in general was perfectly understood between himself and the Friars.[†2]

Poor Forster, what a Martyr he is![†3] I wish to God he would marry somebody and not be ill by himself in that howling Mansion, with dear old Landor's Lion[†4] looking down upon him in a state of absurd grimness which renders that Picture quite unique. I greatly lament that I am not in London to carry him up, bodily, to my own home. Which I wanted to do when he was last ill.[†5]

And poor Blanchard. What a tremendous history is that! I never was more shocked and horrified. I see in the Examiner, accounts of a bad murder in one of my daily walks near Hampstead.[†6] Which, as a mere matter of dirty speculation —a mercantile venture for a trifle of money—is one of the worst murders I ever read of.

When you write to me, address at the Peschiere. Tell me what you have been painting[†7] since I was at Gore House—and whether you have seen Maclise's Cartoon—and what you think of it. I am particularly anxious to know. All scraps of intelligence of any kind will be thankfully received. I am truly sorry to hear that the Miss Powers have lost a near relative.[†8] Remember me to them, with all sincerity and cordiality.

And think of me sometimes, for I think of you often. Being as truly attached to you as to any man alive.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES BLACK, [?21 MARCH 1845]

MS Dickens House. Date: a "Pilgrims' Banquet" took place on Good Friday, 21 Mar.

Hotel Meloni | Friday Evening | 10 'Clock[†1]

My Dear Sir

I am truly sorry to have missed you—the more so, as I fancy you can scarcely have left here, ten minutes before our return from the Pilgrims' Banquet.[†2] We propose 7 sharp, tomorrow; and to come straight to the top of your street—Ladies to start at half after 9. We also propose (not to cram too much into a little time), "cutting" the Mountain, and strolling round the Lake.[†3]

I send this in haste, that you may not think me indifferent to a trip from which I anticipate a great deal of pleasure.

With best Regards, | Believe me | always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Black Esquire

To CHARLES BODENHAM, [24 MARCH] 1845

Text from N, I, 667. Date: Easter Monday was 24 Mar in 1845.

Hotel Meloni | Easter Monday 1845

My Dear Sir,

In case I should not have the pleasure of finding you at home this morning when I call with the accompanying books, I write this note to thank you for the pleasure I have derived from them; and for the interest I have had in your own notes especially.

We have not seen the alabaster columns![†4] The lady who is with us, being a sad invalid,[†5] has been ill three days and on every one of those days we had deliberately projected availing ourselves of your kindness. Once I had actually taken pen in hand to propose to call for you.

Believe me that I am not the less indebted to you for your good offices. I shall carry away with me from Rome tomorrow, a living recollection of the pleasant Sunday walk we had together towards the Metella Tomb:[†1] and shall deem myself fortunate if I have (as I hope I may) some future opportunity of renewing our acquaintance in England.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg to unite in compliments to yourself and Mrs. Bodenham. And I am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS ELISABETH JESSER REID,[†2] 25 MARCH 1845*

MS Bedford College, London.

Hotel Meloni, Rome.
Tuesday Morning | Twenty Fifth March 1845.

My Dear Mrs. Reid.

I was coming over to see you this morning (having at last hunted down the whole preserve of Roman Lions); but they tell me you will not be up, before we are some miles on the road. Therefore I send you this small representative to wish you health and happiness until we meet again, and then, and always afterwards; and to assure you that I am ever, with Sincerity,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Reid.

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 26 MARCH 1845*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Al Sig: | Il Sig. Angelo Fletcher | Scultore | Carrara.

Narni.[†1] | Wednesday Night | March Twenty Sixth 1845.

My Dear Fletcher. If I wait to write you a letter with anything in it, I shall never write at all, I clearly see. So here is one with nothing at all.

If I ever said, I should be in Carrara by the first of April, it must have been after innumerable fiaschi of Carrara Wine. For no such idea ever entered my rational head, or my rational pocket-book, wherein I find myself entered as due to leave Florence either on Friday the fourth or Saturday the Fifth of April. To that purpose I still hold, with a bulldog tenacity. So write me a note, addressed Poste Restante Florence, telling me whether Walton is base enough to go to England in the meantime, and where you would have us come, with a view of passing One Day in and about some quarries or other. On receipt of that letter, I will, from Florence, tell you exactly when we leave; and will furthermore charge you with an exact statement of our wants and wishes in the way of Inn-accommodation at Massa or wherever else you summon us.[†2]

We are exceedingly happy, and don't fight much. If I could be supposed to express myself disinterestedly on such a theme, I should say we were facetious.[†3] I should also say that the Holy Week is unmitigated hum[bug—except][†4] the Benediction[†5] (as a bright spectacle) and the Illumination of St. Peters[†6]—which is glorious. The Coliseum[†7] enchanted me—I went there continually, and never could see enough of it. The Open Campagna[†8] also, beyond the tomb of Cecilia Metella (some two miles beyond, and thence to Albano: I have walked it all) is sublime. The first time I saw it from that spot, was when the Sun was going down; and it seemed to set on such a Ruined World, that I could have almost fancied it had done its work and would never rise again.[†9,†10]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 MARCH 1845]

Mention in F, IV, iii, 327*n*. Date: According to Forster, CD wrote to him from Montevarchi,[†1] 30 Mar 45; but the extract he quotes cannot have been written before 10 Apr (see To Forster, that day).

April

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2-4 APRIL 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 371-2, 371*n* (two extracts), 372. Date: second extract 2 Apr according to Forster; first extract also from Florence, so probably same letter; third extract placed here by Forster; fourth extract "Before he left Florence (on the 4th of April)" according to Forster.

There are some places[†2] here,—oh Heaven how fine! I wish you could see the tower of the Palazzo Vecchio as it lies before me at this moment, on the opposite bank of the Arno! But I will tell you more about it, and about all Florence, from my shady arm-chair up among the Peschiere oranges. I shall not be sorry to sit down in it again. . . . Poor Hood, poor Hood! I still look for his death, and he still lingers on.

And Sydney Smith's brother[†3] gone after poor dear Sydney himself! Maltby[†4] will wither when he reads it; and poor old Rogers[†5] will contradict some young man at dinner, every day for three weeks.

He drove out from Florence to see Landor's villa and asked his coachman which it was.[†6] He was a dull dog, and pointed to Boccaccio's.[†7] I didn't believe him. He was so deuced ready that I knew he lied. I went up to the convent, which is on a height, and was leaning over a dwarf wall basking in the noble view over a vast range of hill and valley, when a little peasant girl came up and began to point out the localities. Ecco la villa Landora![†8] was one of the first half-dozen sentences she spoke. My heart swelled[†1] as Landor's would have done when I looked down upon it, nestling among its olive-trees and vines, and with its upper windows (there are five above the door) open to the setting sun. Over the centre of these there is another story, set upon the housetop like a tower; and all Italy, except its sea, is melted down into the glowing landscape it commands. I plucked a leaf of ivy[†2] from the convent-garden as I looked; and here it is. For Landor. With my love.

You know that in the streets and corners of roads, there are all sorts of crosses and similar memorials to be seen in Italy. The most curious are, I think, in Tuscany.[†3] There is very seldom a figure on the cross, though there is sometimes a face; but they are remarkable for being garnished with little models in wood of every possible object that can be connected with the Saviour's death. The cock that crowed when Peter had denied his master thrice, is generally perched on the tip-top; and an ornithological phenomenon he always is. Under him is the inscription. Then, hung on to the cross-beam, are the spear, the reed with the sponge of vinegar and water at the end, the coat without seam for which the soldiers cast lots, the dice-box with which they threw for it, the hammer that drove in the nails, the pincers that pulled them out, the ladder which was set against the cross, the crown of thorns, the instrument of flagellation, the lantern with which Mary went to the tomb—I suppose; I can think of no other—and the sword with which Peter smote the high priest's servant. A perfect toyshop of little objects; repeated at every four or five miles all along the highway.

Describing a very pleasant and very merry day at Lord Holland's.[†4]

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, [10 APRIL 1845]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: 10 Apr was Thursday, and the date, not the day, is correct, since written the day after his return to Genoa on 9 Apr (see next and To Mitton, 14 Apr). Address: Inghilterra | Thomas Chapman Esquire | 14 Montague Place | Bryanstone Square | London.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa | Wednesday, April Tenth 1845.

My dear Sir.

As I have rather altered my arrangements in reference to my return home, I deem it best to write to you in reference to the Sanatorium dinner. And I do not delay a single day, for I returned hither from Rome and Naples and Heaven knows where else, only yesterday.[†1]

The nature of my agreement for this place (I wish you could see it, by the way, for I really believe it is the most beautiful in Italy)—coupled with some other domestic considerations[†2]—has determined me to remain here until about the Tenth or Twelfth of June. I could not, therefore, safely pledge myself to preside at a dinner in London, before the expiration of the First Week in July. But I would arrange to return in good time for Saturday the Fifth of that month, or Monday the Seventh, or any day afterwards. And I can warrant myself in all things, as punctual as the clock at the Horse-Guards.

Now, what I wish you and the committee to do is, to balance the possible disadvantages of dining so late in the season, against the possible advantages of your humble servant's first appearance after a Year's absence—of which you are welcome to make any use you please. And I beg you, most hear[tily][†3] and unaffectedly, to consider nothing but the welfare of that excellent Institution in which we are all so warmly interested. Though I had ad[hered] to my original intention of leaving here this month, I should still have written to you to say that if any other President would have served your turn better than I, I should count on your appointing him, and using me in any other way in which I could be useful to our common object. And I should take it ill, if, in coming to a conclusion on the doubt I present to you now, you considered me in the least, or supposed me to have any feeling on the subject which could, by possibility, differ from your own.

As soon as you have decided, I shall be glad to hear from you, as I shall not settle my homeward route until I know your determination. In the event of the Committee deciding to wait until July, I hold myself bound, of course, to any of the days I have named.[†4]

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best remembrances to yourself and Mrs. Chapman. The children are all well and rosy: and I find my waistcoat-buttons flying off occasionally, with great violence. From which I conclude that I am growing stouter.

Believe me always, and with great sincerity,

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

To MRS JOHN OVERS, 10 APRIL 1845*

MS in the Selbourne Collection, now deposited in Birmingham University Library. Address: Inghilterra | Mrs. Overs | 16 Carthusian Street | Charter-House Square | London.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa. | Thursday Tenth April 1845.

Dear Mrs. Overs.

Yours of the sixteenth of last month has just reached me. I have been travelling in many parts of Italy, and only returned here yesterday.

I really do not know what Mr. Forster has in hand for you. I think he wrote me word, but I do not remember—and I deem it best not to keep you in a state of expectation, while I search out that fragment from an extensive correspondence. But if you will send him this letter, he will take it as an authority to pay to you whatever he may have.

I trust in God you will succeed in your undertaking.[†1] Your account of Miss Coutts's kindness is very gratifying to me. But it does not surprise me, for she is always kind and good to those who need her help.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Overs.

To AMÉDÉE PICHOT,[†1] 10 APRIL 1845

Extract in Le Neveu de ma Tante, traduit et précédée d'une Notice Biographique et Littéraire, par Amédée Pichot, Paris, 1851, I, viii; dated Genoa, 10 Apr 45.

Après quelques observations sur la traduction des Carillons de Nöel.[†2] Je suis né à Portsmouth, dans le comté de Hampshire, en Angleterre, le 7 février 1812. Ce serait un plaisir pour moi de vous donner quelques détails sur ma vie, comme vous le désirez, n'était que j'ai formé le dessein, il y a longtemps, de l'écrire moi-même[†3] . . . cela vous amusera peut-être de savoir que j'ai lu maintes fois ma biographie, et que j'y ai trouvé toujours quelque nouveau et bizarre incident qui m'était révélé à moi-même;[†4] mais la plus bizarre et la plus neuve peut-être de toutes ces histoires a été écrite en français.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10-11 APRIL 1845]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 327*n. Date:* wrongly given as 30 Mar 45 by Forster (see that day): To Mrs Overs, 10 Apr shows that he had only just heard the news.

Mrs. Overs tells me that Miss Coutts has sent her, at different times, sixteen pounds, has sent a doctor to her children, and has got one of the girls into the Orphan School. When I wrote her a word in the poor woman's behalf,[†6] she wrote me back to the effect that it was a kindness to herself to have done so, "for what is the use of my means but to try and do some good with them?"

To CHARLES BLACK, 12 APRIL 1845†

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor. Address: Al Sigr. | Il Sigr Carlo Black | 13 Via Gregoriana | Roma.

Peschiere, Genoa. April Twelfth 1845.

My Dear Black.

As you were kind enough to mediate between Mr. Scott[†7] and me; and furthermore as I don't know Mr. Scott's address; I trouble you with a Bill on Torlonias for the price of the Merry Boy.[†1] It will be necessary for Mr. Scott to write his name across the back, under that of our distinguished countryman, the author of A Christmas Carol in prose and other works. Pray convey to Mr. Scott my best regards and thanks; and couple Mrs. Dickens's name with mine when you call me to the recollection of his good wife.

It was my intention, as you may remember, to have sent you this from Florence; but on enquiry at that place (what a charming place it is!) I found it would be easier to make the remittance from Genoa. That last-mentioned city stands pretty much where it did. The De la Rues are very anxious that I should impress upon you how much they hope to see you, if, on your return you come this way. You will find them at the top of the Palazzo Brignole Rosso in an apartment which is a very charming one when you get up to it.

I heard last from Forster a few days ago. He is better and able to take a carriage airing now and then. But he is still very ill.[†2] I have strenuously urged him to come over here, and return with us through Switzerland. Macready is making one vast Tom Tidler's[†3] ground of the provinces in general, and picking up gold and silver in great quantities.[†4] Mrs. Macready is full of compassion for him in consequence; and writes piously.

We found the children well and happy; and the house very comfortable after all our wanderings. Gwilt's Architecture[†5] looms large and grim from a table in the Sala. I will exert myself to the utmost to find somebody coming to Rome who will take charge of it. And if my blushes for having twice left it behind, should have any effect upon the cover, you will find it neatly bound in Red, by the time it reaches you.

I hope you have seen Parke's address to the Murderous Quaker, in passing sentence. Also Fonblanque's article on the probability of that miserable culprit having imitated Belaney. [†a]I thought the first quite magnificent in its stern and just indignation, after the dispassionate charge (it is vigorous English too; witness the use of the word 'tearing'); and the second quite unanswerable in all its wise positions.[†a†6]

If you can find time in the midst of the Stations,[†1] to acknowledge the safe receipt of the Bill, I shall be glad to know that it has not fallen into the possession of a nefarious Roman. Kate and Georgy send their best loves to Mrs. Black and Miss Elderton.[†2] I beg to forward the next thing to it. And uniting with them in all cordial regards to yourself, am always

Faithfully Yours

Charles Black Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 APRIL 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 372. Date: 13 Apr according to Forster.

Seriously, it is a great pleasure to me to find that you are really pleased with these shadows in the water,[†3] and think them worth the looking at.[†4] Writing at such odd places, and in such odd seasons, I have been half savage with myself, very often, for not doing better. But d'Orsay, from whom I had a charming letter three days since, seems to think as you do of what he has read in those shown to him,[†5] and says they remind him vividly of the real aspect of these scenes. . . . Well, if we should determine, after we have sat in council, that the experiences they relate are to be used, we will call B. and E. to their share and voice in the matter.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?9-14 APRIL 1845]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 14 APRIL 1845†

MS Huntington Library.

Peschiere, Genoa. Monday April Fourteenth 1845

My Dear Mitton. I arrived here last Wednesday, well and flourishing: and found the children looking beautiful. You shall see Mamey and Charley dance the Polka,[†1] when we return—which you will really consider a very brilliant performance. Master Frank is a prodigious blade, and more full of queer tricks than any of his predecessors have been at his time of life. Katey has been quite lamed by chilblains, but she is now hobbling about again. They have not affected her rosy looks.

I have decided to remain here, until about the Tenth of June, and to come home by Switzerland. I hope to pass the Alps over the Great St. Gothard; and in that case shall have taken its two finest passages. This arrangement will probably shut out Paris; but I can run over there, at any time; whereas the country I propose to traverse is not so easy of access from England. This house is as faultless as it always has been. There are very few houses in Italy, I do believe, where the children could have kept their health in such an extraordinary year.

It would be easier to tell you what I haven't seen, than what I have. I have been upon the Wing, now, full six months on end; and have crowded such an immense number of objects into that time, that it makes me weary to think of them.

Bradbury and Evans have sent me an account of the Chimes.[†2] They make the Profit on the first 20,000, from fourteen to fifteen hundred pounds. And they add that if they had charged only their own small commission, and had not been obliged to employ Chapman and Hall, the profit wod. have been from £150 to £200 more. C and H's accounts make a profit of £726 only, on a sale of 15,000 of the Carol.[†3] So that supposing it had sold 20,000, the gross profit would have been about £1,000. This is a slight difference! Think of the difference too, in the appearance and production[†4] of the two books—and I think you will agree with me that Bradbury and Evans are the Men for me to work with.[†5]

They were very anxious to know what I thought of their management in general, under the disadvantageous circumstance of having C and H in the business at all. I wrote and told them that I was greatly pleased, and that I was quite certain it couldn't have been better done. As I am.

Chapman and Hall's account has been rendered to Forster and settled. Before I left, I settled all the profits of the different books up to April and credited myself with the estimated amount of my share of the Chuzzlewit profits up to the time of the subscription, and exclusive of it. I also paid them £81..9..8 for my purchase of my share of the Stock of Pickwick.[†1]

The account of my Profits with C and H from April to the close of the Year/44 stands thus:

	£ .	S .	D
Chuzzlewit	611..	12..	4
Humphrey's Clock	21..	2..	3
Pickwick	50..	2..	4
Carol	189..	11.	5
Oliver Twist	54..	0..	10
German Bookseller, for proofs[†2]	5..	10..	0
	£934..19..2

— which they have received directions from Lincoln's Inn Fields, to pay into Coutts's. This is "not so bad" either?[†3]

When I thought you might have a balance in my favor, I forgot the taxes, and took the gross receipt for rent for the whole Year. You were quite right in not paying anything in. I hope the balance will turn on my side, the next time the old lady pays.

This reminds me. The moment she turns out, will you set your man to work to paint the outside of the house? I should like all the doors and railings in the garden to be a nice bright cheerful green, except the little staircases from the windows, which I should prefer being painted white, as they are now. I should like to have the hall and staircase painted inside, to the top of the house—a good green: not too decided, of course, to spoil the effect of the prints—The little skirting-board there is, wainscoat.[†4] The ceiling, white. The outside of the street door, wainscoat—if you see no reason for any other colour—a letter box made in it, with a glass back; so that John may see when there are letters in the inside. I will pay him ready money, so please to make him produce an Estimate for all this, beforehand. I will not new-point the house; really not caring about it.

I know you will take care, better than anybody else could, that it is done on reasonable terms. Therefore he may go to work on all this, without your consulting me upon his Estimate.

But there is another job I should like to do, which I must know the expence of, before I decide. I should like to new-paper the drawing-room; taking away the ugly hand rail, and bringing the paper down to the skirting board. I should like the skirting board to be painted in imitation of Satin-Wood—the ceiling to have a faint pink blush in it—and a little wreath of flowers to be painted round the lamp. The paper must be blue and gold or purple and gold—to agree with the furniture and curtains; and I should wish it to be cheerful and gay. I can safely trust to your taste, if you will choose it. I have sd. nothing about this to Mrs. D: wishing it to be a surprise, if I do it at all.—Gold moulding round the paper.

If the old lady would allow the man to go up one morning before she is out of bed; and see the room,—he might make his Estimate: then you could send it to m[e†1 here. If I] decided on this improvement, he [could begin] on all his work at on[ce as soon as Mrs. Onslow] was out of the house. Will you [let me know] what you do in this [matter, as it will be] necessary to set him to work on [the painti]ng, as soon as she vacates [the house, as I fear the] smell would damage the children['s health. The] long travelling in the air†2 [ ].

I don't think we [shall stop] upon the way except to r[est, unless we stay at] the coast for bathing. But I d[on't think] it likely.

Write me about [your affair]s when you have leisure†2 [ ] have by this time: Elliotson ha[s probably] set your poor facto[tum†3 on his unsteady legs] again. I wonder you got over su[ch a wet sta]te, without Rheumati[sm; that is something] gained, at all events.

I begin to be anxious to get home, a [ ] with Bradbury and Evans,†4 for the Campaign which [ ].

Here is a World of trouble for you!†5—[ ] whenever you can serve me, so I will say nothing [ ].

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth as[k me to send you their kindest] remembrances. In all its travelling, the Carria[ge†6] of iron the size of a toothpick. Roche says†6 [ ] with.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?APRIL 1845]

Extract in F, IV, V, 345. Date: "one Spring day" according to Forster; probably April.

Beyond the town is the wide expanse of the Mediterranean, as blue, at this moment, as the most pure and vivid prussian blue on Mac's palette†7 when it is newly set; and on the horizon there is a red flush, seen nowhere as it is here. Immediately below the windows are the gardens of the house, with gold fish swimming and diving in the fountains; and below them, at the foot of a steep slope, the public garden and drive, where the walks are marked out by hedges of pink roses, which blush and shine through the green trees and vines, close up to the balconies of these windows. No custom can impair, and no description enhance, the beauty of the scene.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-APRIL 1845]

Extract in F, IV, iv, 335*n*. Date: "a couple of months before he left the country" according to Forster.

We are living very quietly; and I am now more than ever glad that I have kept myself aloof from the "receiving" natives always, and delivered scarcely any of my letters of introduction. If I had, I should have seen nothing and known less. I have observed that the English women who have married foreigners are invariably the most audacious in the license they assume.[†1] Think of one lady married to a royal chamberlain (not here) who said at dinner to the master of the house at a place where I was dining—that she had brought back his Satirist,[†2] but didn't think there was quite so much "fun" in it as there used to be. I looked at the paper afterwards, and found it crammed with such vile obscenity as positively made one's hair stand on end.

To JOHN FORSTER, [27 APRIL 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 372-3. Date: 27 Apr according to Forster.

Since our return we have had charming spring days.[†3] The garden is one grove of roses;[†4] we have left off fires; and we breakfast and dine again in the great hall, with the windows open. To-day we have rain, but rain was rather wanted I believe, so it gives offence to nobody. As far as I have had an opportunity of judging yet, the spring is the most delightful time in this country. But for all that I am looking with eagerness to the tenth of June, impatient to renew our happy old walks and old talks in dear old home.

To LORD ROBERTSON, 28 APRIL 1845*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Peschiere, Genoa. Twenty Eighth April 1845.

My Dear Lord Robertson.

Don't think me unmindful of the pleasant day we passed together here last autumn—or of your no less pleasant letter, afterwards received—or of anything connected with your pleasant Self; because I am a Beast in appearance (correspondentially speaking), and have never wafted a half sheet of paper to Edinburgh. I have been travelling hither and thither, ever since; with the exception of one month, when I was hard at work. And this is my excuse.

I saw the friend to whom you introduced me—at Naples.[†1] He was on the eve of departing for Sicily, so I only saw him once. He prepossessed me most agreeably; and I should have been well pleased to have known him better.

Your friends the Puppets gave their last performance, last Friday.[†2] I attended, of course. The Piece (of a pathetic character) was entitled St. Helena, or the Death of Napoleon; and opened by a Valet coming into Napoleon's room, with this obscure announcement:

"Sir Yew ud se on Low! (the "ow" as in cow)

Sir Hudson was represented as an Ogre—and wore a suit of regimentals which I wish you could have seen. There was no mistake about his being an Englishman, for at the end of every long Italian Speech he delivered, he said "Yes"—in English—which never failed to bring down thunders of a[pplause. His] brutality to Napoleon awakened one general sentiment of execration in the breasts of [the audience]: and so affected the Emperor himself, that once he fainted away on the spot, and [was carried out by two] other Puppets. He never recovered the shock, for he was next seen in a clea[n shirt (with an i]mmense collar to it) in a bed with red and white drapery, where he made a decent [end; the last] word on his lips being "Vatterloo".

It was very ludicrous [and absurd,] Napoleon's boots being particularly unmanageable—[getting under ta]bles—and doubling up [themselves]—and quivering in the air—and sometimes skaiting [away with him,] out of all human [sight. Then][†3] he had to stand at a table, reading a book. And to [see his bo]dy bent over the Volume like a [boot-jack,] with his mournful eyes (his face expressed a [sett]led melancholy) glaring o[ut into the] Pit, was the finest spectacle I ever beheld.

Kate says you have h[ad another] daughter married,[†4] if Galignani tells the Truth, and that she congratulates you, and w[ishes her] joy and happiness. Do you remember our Highland engagement? I fear it will not come [off this au]tumn, for a coming event, which I hadn't reckoned on, is casting its shadow before Mrs. [Dickens in] a very disconcerting manner.[†1]

She sends her best regards to you, however, and so does her sister. We are dying to know what that book[†2] is, to which we see your name attached in newspaper announcements. I expect to reach my English Home, at the end of June. If I don't find a copy of said book then and there, with your hand-writing on the title page, I shall run over to Edinburgh about September or so, I think, to denounce you in person. And if I do find it—to thank you.

Have you ever been into a church since you were at Rome? I haven't. I took the Valet de place by the throat on the Tenth day of churches, and on the steps of the Eighty Second church;[†3] and swore I would strangle him if he shewed me another. He resigned next [mor]ning.

Ever My Dear Lord Robertson | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

[Remem]ber us all, cordially, to [Lady R.][†4]

P.P.S. In the Holy Week[†5] at Rome [while the Pope was] waiting at table on the 12 [apostles & Judas,[†6] there] were two Englishmen behind me—[in an] immense crowd, and we were all struggling and standing on tiptoe to see—whose whole interest in the scene seemed to have resolved itself into a desire to see what there was to eat. "There are two decanters to the right there!" sd. one of them. "I distinctly see white wine! I think I perceive red, but I'll swear to white!"—"Mustard by G—!" cried the second gentleman in great excitement. "Will any gentleman in front be kind enough to inform me whether he sees any Pepper anywhere! I distinctly saw the Mustard Pot a moment ago!"[†7]

May

To EMILE DE LA RUE, [2 MAY 1845]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: endorsed by de la Rue, "2 mai", and clearly the Friday just before the execution: see To Maclise, 9 May.

Peschiere | Friday Evening

My Dear De La Rue.

Many thanks for your notice. I think, however, I will leave the two wretched creatures to their fate; and take their behaviour on your report of it.[†8]

I have taken an Eight mile walk this Evening: and am all the better for it—Slept badly last night.

Best regards to Madame. At Eleven tomorrow, I will present myself.

Faithfully Ever CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?4 MAY 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 373. Date: shortly after To de la Rue, ?2 May, and presumably in his usual week-end letter.

Saying that two men had been hanged in the city, and describing how two ladies of quality agreed to keep up for a time a prayer for the souls of these two miserable creatures so incessant that Heaven should never for a moment be left alone, and they relieved each other so that, for the whole of the stated time, one of them was always on her knees in the cathedral church of San Lorenzo. From which he inferred that a morbid sympathy for criminals is not wholly peculiar to England, though it affects more people in that country perhaps than in any other.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 9 MAY 1845†

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Inghilterra. | The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington | London.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa. | Ninth May 1845.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

Once more in my old quarters; and, [†a]unlike the Dove of the Ark,[†a] with rather a tired sole to my foot, from having found such an immense number of different resting-places for it since I went away; I write you my last Italian letter for this bout—designing to leave here, please God, on the Ninth of next month, and to be in London again, by the end of June. I am looking forward, with great delight, to the pleasure of seeing you once more: and mean to come on Gore House with such a swoop as shall astonish the Poodle, if, after being accustomed to his own size and sense, he retain the power of being astonished at anything in the wide world.

You know where I have been, and every inch of ground I have travelled over, and every object I have seen.[†1] It is next to impossible, surely, to exaggerate the interest of Rome: though I think it is very possible to find the main source of interest in the wrong things—[†b]and very often done, moreover.[†b] Naples disappointed me, greatly. The weather was bad during a great part of my stay there, [†c]to be sure.[†c] But if I had not had mud, I should have had dust. And though I had had Sun, I must still have had the Lazzaroni; and they are so ragged, so dirty, so abject, so full of degradation, so sunk and steeped in utter hopelessness of better things, that they would make Heaven uncomfortable, if they could ever get there. I didn't expect to see a handsome City, but I expected something better than that long dull line of squalid houses which stretches from the Chiaja to the Quarter of the Porta Capuana;[†1] and while I was quite prepared for a miserable populace, I had some dim belief that there were bright rags among them, and dancing legs, and shining sun-browned faces. Whereas the honest truth is, that connected with Naples itself, I have not one solitary pleasant recollection. The country round it, charmed me, I need not say. Who can forget Herculaneum and Pompeii? As to Vesuvius, it burns away, in my thoughts, beside the roaring waters of Niagara; and not a splash of the water extinguishes a spark of the fire; but there they go on tumbling and flaming, night and day, each in its fullest glory.

I have seen so many wonders, and each of them has such a voice of its own, that I sit all day listening to the roar they make, as if it were in a seashell; and have fallen into an idleness so complete, that I can't rouse myself sufficiently, to go to Pisa on the Twenty Fifth,[†2] when the triennial illumination of the Cathedral and Leaning Tower, and Bridges, and what not, takes place. But I have already been there once; and it cannot beat St. Peters, I suppose. So I don't think I shall pluck myself up by the roots, and go aboard a Steamer for Leghorn.

[†d]There were some wonderful people in Rome for the Holy week, of course; both French and English. The latter especially. There was one Mrs. Davis[†3] —I know her name from her being always in great request among her party, and her party being everywhere—who was in every part of every scene of every ceremony; and who for a fortnight before, had been in every tomb, and every Church, and every Ruin, and every Picture Gallery: and who never for one instant held her tongue. Deep underground, high up in St. Peters, out on the Campagna, and in the Jews Quarter, Mrs. Davis turned up all the same. I don't think she saw anything or ever looked at anything; and she had always lost something out of a straw hand-basket, and was trying to find it with all her might and main, among an immense quantity of English halfpence which lay, like sands upon the seashore, at the bottom of it. There was a Cicerone always attached to the party (which had been brought over from London, some fifteen or twenty strong, by contract I believe);[†4] and if he so much as looked at Mrs. Davis, she invariably cut him short by saying, "there! God bless the man, don't worrit me: I don't understand a word you say, and shouldn't if you was to talk 'till you was black in the face!"[†5] Mr. Davis always had a snuff-colored great coat on, and an umbrella in his hand: and had a sort of slow curiosity always devouring him: which prompted him to do extraordinary things, such as taking the covers off Urns, and looking in at the ashes as if they were Pickles—and tracing out Inscriptions with his umbrella, and saying with intense thoughtfulness, "here's a B, you see—and a R—And this is the way we goes on in!" His antiquarian habits occasioned his being frequently in the rear of the rest; and one of the agonies of Mrs. Davis and the party in general, was, an ever-present fear that Davis would be lost: causing them to scream for him in the strangest places and at the most improper seasons. And when he came slowly emerging out of some Sepulchre or other, like a peaceful Ghoul, saying "Here I am!"—Mrs. Davis invariably replied "You'll be buried alive in a foreign country Davis; and it's no use trying to prevent you!"

It would be idle to endeavour to thank you my dear Lady Blessington, for all your enthusiasm and friendship in behalf of the Chimes. Trust me, I am deeply and truly sensible of it; and that is far from being the least of the pleasures which that book has yielded me. Forster will have told you of its prodigious success; and how, from the time of the subscription to this hour, it has, in its results to me, left its Predecessors far behind.[†d]

Let me thank you, heartily, for the Keepsake and the Book of Beauty. They reached me a week or two ago. I have been very much struck by two papers in them. One, Landor's conversation; among the most charming, profound, and delicate productions I have ever read. The other, Your lines on Byron's Room at Venice.[†1] I am as sure that you wrote them from your heart, as I am that they found their way, immediately, to Mine. [†e]They are as full of Strength, and Truth, and Feeling, as anything can be. I cannot say how much they moved me.

Poor Forster must have had a sad winter of it, but I hope to find him quite well, when I return. He tells me in his last letter, that you had Lord Robertson with you the other day. He is a good creature, and (out of Edinburgh where they spoil him) very humourous. We had a happy day together here, last Autumn, when he passed through Genoa on his way home.—[†e]

It delights me to receive such accounts of Maclise's fresco.[†2] If he will only give his magnificent Genius fair play, there is not enough of Cant and Dulness even in Criticism—the Criticism of Art; from which Sterne prayed kind Heaven to defend him, as 'the worst of all the Cants continually canted in this Canting World'[†1]—to keep the Giant down, an hour.

[†f]Do you recollect a Picture by Vandyke in the Durazzo Palace here, commonly known as The Boy in White Satin?—a picture of a child standing near an old chair. It is a noble painting, and is such a curious accidental likeness of my Son and Heir that I have written to Paris (where I understand a good one is to be had) for a Copy.[†2] Old Di Negro is gone to his country house. For which I am very grateful . . He wanted to improvise here, one night; but I couldn't stand it. I respect the old man for his goodness to the poor followers of the Muses here (despised of Genoa Nobles, whose Nature and cultivation you know) but I could not bear it.[†f]

Poor Tracey[†3] has lost his wife, I am sorry to hear, since you and I spoke of his pleasant face. And Blanchard—what a terrible history that was! Forster did himself enduring honor by his manly and zealous devotion to the interests of that Orphan Family, in the midst of all his pains and troubles. It was very good of him.

Do not let your Nieces forget me, if you can help it. And give my love to Count D'Orsay, with many thanks to him for his charming letter. I was greatly amused by his account of Bulwer.[†3] There was a "cold shade of aristocracy"[†4] about it, and a dampness of cold water; which entertained me, beyond measure.

[†g]Everybody in England is mad, it seems to me, about Maynooth. And long memories are shaking off their slumbers, I see, and besetting D'Israeli: a little.[†5] He has certainly done his best to be attacked—and done it well too.

Has the Sybil[†6] spoken yet?

Believe me always My Dear Lady Blessington
With the truest Regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Do you know Mr. Temple, the Minister at Naples?[†7] I like him exceedingly.[†g]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 9 MAY 1845

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Inghilterra. | Daniel Maclise Esquire. R.A. | 14 Russell Place | Fitzroy Square | London.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa. Ninth May 1845.

My Very Dear Mac. I should be ashamed of having observed this long silence towards such a correspondent as you,[†1] if I were not comforted by the belief that you hear of all our proceedings from Forster—hear, sometimes, more than you could desire, perhaps, of the prolix Dick—and that you have us as fully in that astonishing eye of yours ("and Good God, my dear Mac, what an Eye you have!")[†2] as if you saw us all bodily, in No. 1 Devonshire Terrace, which please God, old fellow, you will shortly do, again and again; for on Monday, the Ninth of next month we turn homewards. The main object of my letter—its sole object—is to say that I can't say how happy I am in the hope of speedily seeing you again, my dear friend, and holding all manner of glorious jollifications in your beloved company.

Would you like to know a piece of domestic news that Forster don't know? Would you permit me to put you in the position of crushing him? I will do so. Forthwith. You recollect our Cook, our nice Cook, our good-looking Cook; the best Servant as ever trod (excuse my being nautical) 'twixt stem and stern your Honor? Yesterday she came up to her Mistress, and announced that she was not going to return to England, but intended to be married, and to settle here! ! ![†3]

The Bridegroom is the Governor's Cook: who has been visiting in the kitchen ever since our first arrival. The Governor's servants have a weekly ball in the Summer, and there they first met—'twas in a Crowd,[†4] I believe. He is a Frenchman by birth, but has been here a long time. They have courted in Italian, as he knows no English, and she no French. They are to be married as soon as her Baptism Certificate can arrive from England (at Leghorn; they must go there, for the purpose; it is not legal here: she being a Protestant)—and intend opening a Restaurant in Genoa. It is a great venture on her part, for she is well brought-up: quite delicate in her ideas: full of English notions of comfort and cleanliness and decency—and must, for some time at all events, live in some miserable rooms in some miserable neighbourhood, of which you can form no idea, without seeing the ordinary residences of an Italian Town. I do not remember a single English person of her own station who will be here, after we have left. But she is resolved. And [all][†1] I can do, is to take care that the Marriage is lawfully and properly solemnized before we depart.

This is the second of them who has found a lover here; the Nurse, Charlotte,[†2] having "provi[ded][†1] herself" with that commodity the other day. I am in daily expectation of finding that Anne is secretly married to Roche and has a young family. I have interrogated Charley in private, but I believe he is still free, also his sisters. Chickenstalker (whom I think you will like—you always predicted well of him) is still heartwhole, I believe.

The greatest public news of this place, is, that Two Men were hanged here the other day. It was the first public execution for many years, and made an immense sensation. They had broken into and robbed a Priest's house (the Priest was the uncle of one of them) in broad day, in the most crowded part of the town: and had murdered the Woman Servant who had opened the door to them, by throttling her with their hands, that there might be no Weapon, and no Blood. They suffered on the Outer Mole of the Harbor—a stone wall, out in the broad blue sea—and the great crowd were gathered together in Boats. On their way to the Scaffold, they had the Sacrament given them, I am told, no fewer than Seven times, at the doors of seven different Churches. I was afraid to go, for I know how they manage things here: and knew I should be horrified. It was very dreadful, I understand: one man standing by, while the other was hanged: and Jack Ketch dangling with his arms on the cross beam, and dancing on the quivering body! Roche went—and could eat nothing for a long time afterwards. Ketch came from Turin, express. He used to live here. But it being accidentally discovered that he prowled about the town after nightfall, wrapped up in a great cloak, attending the poor people as a Physician (!), he was ordered off, a few years ago.

I ought to have filled this Half sheet with a little critical talk about the Farnese Hercules, and the Do. Bull, and the Venuses (all bad by the bye, and like anything but women—they may be like Goddesses: I don't know about that), and the Apollo, and Laöcoon, and other Novelties. But I can think of no Art but your Cartoon, of which Forster gives me such a tremendous and rapturous account. So we will be critical in our walks home at night. And there is no chance of our disagreeing, I know. For is not our motto Truth for ever, and cant[†3] be damned?

Goodbye my dear Mac. I am looking forward, with perfect enthusiasm, to shaking you by the hand. So are Kate and Georgy (who send loves); so are all the children! Ever and Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Best remembrances to your Good Sister.[†4]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 9 MAY 1845*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Inghilterra. | Clarkson Stanfield Esquire. R.A. | Mornington Place | Hampstead Road | London.

Palazzo Peschiere Genoa. Maggio 9 1845.

Carissimo Amico Mio!

Siete stato in Italia e capite ben'la lingua.[†1]

Perche non vi ho scritto tre, quattro, cinqui mesi fa! Perche non ho mandato mai, una piccola lettera al pittore famosissimo; al figlio del Mare; al Meglio di camaradi; al meglio d'amici; al meglio di Uomini—in una parola, a Stanny! Non c'e che—un Stanny nel mondo. Lo se chiama, generalmente vecchio Stanny. Non importa. E un Giovane.

Amico mio, vi sono, quasi, sei mesi che son stato in cammino qua e la. Son stato a Roma, a Napoli, a Firenze,—ad ogni parte d'Italia. Non vi sono che tre settimane—circa—che son' venuto ancora, a mia casa. Ecco la mia scusa! Ma in tutti questi viaggii, caro mio, ho pensato costantamente degli amici chi lasciai in Inghilterra, in Decembre del' anno passato. E Stanny e stato sempre, nel mio cuore di cuori.

Domanderete "che si dice di nuovo in Genova?" Niente. Veramente, Niente. L'intelligenza la piu interressante a mi (e, spero, a [te][†2] anche) e, che partiremo fra, li otto di Giugno, per ritornare al nos[tro][†2] paese ben' amate; ed ai nostri amici.

Lesi, l'altro jeri, in Galignani, che foste partito per America, per pingere un prodigioso quadro nella Sala di Congresso.[†3] Questa Intelligenza mi fece molto tristo. Ma, quando ne lesi (poi a pochi giorni) il contraddizione, scoppiai dalle risa, e fu ben' contento!

Si! Spero passare molti felici giorni con voi, e caro Forster, e Maclise, in Inghilterra! Spero che pranzeremo, molte volte, al Castello di Giovanni Straw—a Greenwich—a tutti gl'antichi luogi. Spero che faremo (quando arrivera la stagione d'Autumno) un altro buon' viaggio come quello alle Mine di Cornwall! Bisogna avere pazienza, come se dice; ma, son' tutto pieno d'impazienza a rivedervi,[†4] ed abbracciarvi!

Mia moglie, e mia cognata, e tutti i piccolini, stanno bene. Bacciano le mani della Signora vostra sposa, e della bella Maria, e di tutta la vostra famiglia.

Via Saro sempre vostro amico

Dick.

Al Sigr. | Il Sigr. Clarkson Stanfield | Membro dell Accademia Reale.

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 MAY 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, iv, 335*n*, 342*n*. Date: 12 May according to Forster.

About the cook: She will have to go to Florence, I find, to be married in Lord Holland's house: and even then is only married according to the English law: having no legal rights from such a marriage, either in France or Italy. The man hasn't a penny. If there were an opening for a nice clean restaurant in Genoa—which I don't believe there is, for the Genoese have a natural enjoyment of dirt, garlic, and oil—it would still be a very hazardous venture; as the priests will certainly damage the man, if they can, for marrying a Protestant woman. However, the utmost I can do is to take care, if such a crisis should arrive, that she shall not want the means of getting home to England. As my father would observe, she has sown and must reap.

I wish you would suggest to Jerrold for me as a Caudle[†1] subject (if he pursue that idea), "Mr. Caudle has incidentally remarked that the housemaid is good-looking."

To T. C. CURRY, 13 MAY 1845

Text from N, I, 676.

Peschiere, Genoa | Tuesday, Thirteenth May, 1845

My Dear Sir,

As there is some mystery in the artful packing of the smaller boxes (which contain some little ornaments that are liable to duty) I think it will be best for them not to pass the London Custom House until Roche arrives in town, which will be without doubt the end of June. I will immediately send him to Messrs. Pickernell Brothers.[†2] The large box had better stand over too, that they may all be cleared at the same time. It contains wearing apparel and books belonging to me in England, and brought out here in the Musica.

Always faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES BLACK, 14 MAY 1845*

MS Mrs E. M. Biden. Address: Charles Black Esquire | 13 Via Gregoriana | Roma.[†3]

Genoa. | Wednesday Fourteenth May 1845.

My Dear Black

I write in great haste, to get this off by today's post, lest I should play the very

Capital D—with your arrangements. I have been waiting for a letter from Carrara, before I could decide on the feasibility of meeting you at Pisa on the Twenty Fifth. It has now arrived; and as I shall most probably have a gentleman from the same place staying here at that time on his way to England (from whom we received the greatest attention in our Progress:)[†1] I am obliged to deny myself the pleasure—it would have been a real pleasure to me—of seeing you.

Forlorn and wretched Gwilt! If no means of conveyance present themselves before we quit this place, I will leave him at Gibbs's the English Banker's office in the Strada Nuova, under cover for you.

Kate and her sister join with me in all sorts of loves to Mrs. Black and Miss Elderton and the olive branches. Katey is cut to the heart by your son's devotion —the penknife has penetrated into her soul.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Black Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12-17 MAY 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 373*n*. Date: The letter from Felton about his wife's death (clearly forwarded by Forster) would not reach CD before about 12 May.

Give my love to Colden, and tell him if he leaves London before I return[†2] I will evermore address him and speak of him as Colonel Colden.[†3] Kate sends her love to him also, and we both entreat him to say all the affectionate things he can spare for third parties—using so many himself—when he writes to Mrs. Colden: whom you ought to know, for she, as I have often told you, is BRILLIANT.[†4] I would go five hundred miles to see her for five minutes. I am deeply grieved by poor Felton's loss.[†5] His letter is manly, and of a most rare kind in the dignified composure and silence of his sorrow.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17-18 MAY 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 373. Date: According to Forster "his next letter" after this was 24 May.

A gentleman of Fletcher's acquaintance living four miles from Genoa had lost his wife; and no attendance on the dead beyond the city gate, nor even any decent conveyance, was practicable. Fletcher nevertheless promised him the sad satisfaction of an English funeral, which he had meanwhile taken enormous secret pains to arrange with a small Genoese upholsterer. The mourner was waited upon, on the appointed morning, by a very bright yellow hackney-coach-and-pair driven by a coachman in yet brighter scarlet knee-breeches and waistcoat, who wanted to put the husband and the body inside together. They were obliged to leave one of the coach-doors open for the accommodation even of the coffin; the widower walked beside the carriage to the protestant cemetery; and Fletcher followed on a big grey horse.[†1]

To THOMAS BEARD, 20 MAY 1845

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Inghilterra. | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa. Twentieth May 1845.

My Dear Bardolph.

This is to give you notice and require you, from and after the end of this next coming month of June, to be and hold yourself in readiness to eat and drink a Sunday Dinner at No. 1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park London; on the receipt of a brief and hasty slip of paper, signed sealed and delivered by the Writer hereof. Said Writer purporting to leave the Sunny clime of Italy (respecting which clime, much Gammon is afloat among the subjects of her Britannic Majesty) very early in June next; and to return to his native and admiring country, by the Pass of the Great St. Gothard, and the river of the Rhine.

I take it for granted, my dear Beard, that you have occasionally declaimed, with mingled vehemence and misgiving, against the apparently oblivious memory of the humble Individual who has now the honor to &c. But the life I have led—roaming from place to place, and scene to scene—the objects I have crammed and crowded into my inimitable mind—the gentlemanly vagabond I have been, for the last six or eight months—the extraordinary beds I have slept in—and the bewildering amount of fleas, mosquitoes, bugs, and other Insects I have unwillingly bepastured—these things have hardly left me any leisure in my holiday, until within the last four or five weeks. During the whole of which time I have been employed, chiefly, in lying on my back on sofas, and leaning out of windows and over balconies, in a sort of mild intoxication.

Some of the many things I have seen, and many delights I have had (Venice at their head: and the mournful Roman Campagna shining like moonlight through them all) shall be yours over a glass of average good claret and a "light Cigar" [On reflection, I think that if I mean that for a quotation, it ought to be "Guitar," but never mind.].[†2] I wish you could smoke one with me here. The house is considerably larger than Whitehall; and the great room is fifty feet high, and painted all over. It stands in the midst of Terrace Gardens—overlooks the towers and steeples of the town—and comprehends, beyond them, the whole blue range of the Mediterranean. There is a perfect forest of orange trees below the windows: which are now in blossom; and the air is sleepy with their fragrance.

Moreover there is a marble bath below stairs, from which in all weathers, cold or warm, wet or dry, the heels of the Inimitable B may be beheld protruding, as the clock strikes 8 every morning.

But I don't intend to be descriptive. I reserve myself. So do Charley and his two sisters; who will rather astonish you, I think, with sundry Polka, Mazurka, and other fierce performances. The last one (boy, I mean) is decidedly a success —a perpetual grin is on his face; and in the spoon exercise he is amazing.

Kate and her sister send their loves to your sister,[†1] and add that they are overjoyed with the expectation of soon seeing her again. They also send their heartiest remembrances to you. Mine wait on all your house—and I am always my Dear Beard—now as ever—in Italy or England—Palaces or postchaises—as a tourist for a twelvemonth, or a mere Pashanger Marjit—

Cordially and faithfully your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

PS You will be glad to hear that The Chimes has been a most sweeping success
PPS. I thought I saw Conway Lingham[†2] in the Ruins of the Coliseum—but I couldn't swear it.

To THOMAS MITTON, 20 MAY 1845†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Inghilterra | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa. Tuesday Twentieth May | 1845

My Dear Mitton. I received your letter yesterday. I had expected to hear from you sooner; but when I found, day after day, that nothing arrived from Southampton Buildings, I felt sure you were delayed by some cause independent of yourself: and immediately booked the old lady as its head and front.

Kate thinks with you, that Green for the hall and staircase is quite out of the question. I merely mentioned the color without much reflection, as one for which I have a natural partiality. So let it be whatever you and the Decorator think best—not so cold as to be dull, and not so warm as to suffocate the prints.

The Drawing-room Estimate is what Mr. Swiveller calls, a Staggerer.[†3] I had no idea it would mount so high. It really should be done; for as it is, it is very poor and mean in comparison with the house—and I have been "going" to do it these five years. But before I quite decide, will you let me know in one line, by return, about the cost of the other repairs in the lump. I will write to you by return again, and if I say "yes", there will be abundant time to get the job done before we arrive, and to get the smell of the paint (in that instance confined to one room) well out of the house. All the work except the drawing-room, will be in hand, I take it for granted, as soon as the old lady turns out.

I don't think you quite do justice to B and E. I don't think you quite understand that the little book is in a very expensive form—that you remember it is not sold at five shillings[†1]—or that you sufficiently consider the enormous difference between its [total][†2] Profit, and the Carol's.[†3] I say nothing about feeling bound to give men some credit for[†4] [intending to give so] much to me in the very wide confidence of their agreement.

Every day has shewn me the prudence of my alteration in my [travelling plans. I] could know no more of Paris than I do now—having its general characteristics [already clear in my] mind—unless I resided there, at least a month or two. If I went there now [I could not possibly] prevail upon myself to remain that time: as I am growing anxious to arran[†5][ge If I had] gone there straight, in April, I should have been immediately involved in a [(and] I dare say from the King downwards) of which you can hardly form an idea. [And besides this, all the] materials of my greatest trip into the South, would have been sh[uffled together and] brought home in dire confusion: for my whole time would have been a [But now I have] elaborately painted at least three fourths of it:[†6] and all the most difficul[t part is already done.] So that if I should determine to use these experiences, they are almost rea[dy now and I shall] be hard at work tomorrow. Add to this, that going to Paris I must have tak[en the route that I] have already travelled; whereas I cross, now, the Great St. Gotherd[†7]—the m[ost tremendous pass in] the Alps—and coming down the Rhine (a trip in itself) see some of [ ] curious towns in Germany.

I suppose Letitia really has had a Miscarriage?[†8] She ha[d one before that] existed only in my Mother's brain, and led to the dilution of more gu[shing floods of] tears, than any failure of that kind, being real, has probably ever do[ne in the whole history of] the World.

Topping and Co. had better go into the house to take charge of it [and you had better] have Rudkin[†9] the Carpenter to take up the carpets: beat them: and p[ut all of them] down in the course of the last week in June. He does this job annually [and knows all about] them and their fittings. Also will you tell him to have "Josephine" ([who is to be heard] of at Mr. Brown's our Grocer's in Paddington Street)[†1] to clean the house fro[m top to bottom including] paint and wainscoatting. This lady is also employed once a year, and also knows all about it. The process usually occupies eight or ten days. Of course she will not begin until the workmen have finished, or until our arrival is so near, as that we may find her work all fresh and bright. Further, will you tell Topping to lay on the Gardener (he knows where he lives) to come and put the garden into perfect order, and afterwards to attend once a week as usual. I think there should be a coat of gravel on the walks; and if he [wants to put any plant]s in—he may. But I should wish this head of expence, certainly not to exceed [£ including the fi]lling of the boxes for the Drawing-room windows, with the Stocks and other things [that he knows about. Sn]oxell[†2] in Chancery Lane may be sent to take down all the blinds, and clean, and [put them back. He] also is acquainted with his duties, and experienced in their discharge.

[All this app]ears, on paper, to be the Devil's own quantity of trouble: and I am afraid it will [be a world of trouble of]f paper. I shall be truly pleased to see you once more; and have pretty strong [hopes that you will find the] Caravan in blooming order. I was afraid we should lose our Cook, who was going to [be married but his religion] is in the way of a lawful and binding performance of the Ceremony with a Protestant, [so we are still] in hopes that she will return. Not only on her own account (for she would certainly be [unhappy) but because sh]e is a most capital Servant. I have some misgivings that she speaks Italian better than [I do, or at least mo]re fluently. Ever Faithfully CD.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, [22 MAY 1845]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: endorsed by de la Rue "Fête Dieu Juin 1845"; Corpus Christi fell on 22 May in 1845, and "Juin" is obviously de la Rue's error.

Just out of the Bath | Thursday Morning

My Dear De la Rue

Roche will see to the carriage. We will come to the Show in good time. Many thanks for your note.

Ever Yours

CD.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 24 MAY 1845

MS Mr S. A. Rochlin.

Saturday Twenty Fourth May | 1845

My Dear De la Rue.

Mr. Walton has glimmerings of business engagements with Mr. Curry tomorrow morning; so I think it best to send you timely notice that we will not walk. Unless you have other plans for yourself and tell me so at the opera[†3] tonight: perhaps you might as well make your magnetic start,[†1] tomorrow instead of Monday. But all times are alike to me.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

à Monsieur M. De la Rue

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 MAY 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 374. Date: 24 May according to Forster.

He wrote of two English travellers who had taken a portion of the ground floor of the Peschiere. They had with them a meek English footman who immediately confided to CD's servants that he was made to do everything, even cooking, in crimson breeches; which in a hot climate, he protested, was "a grinding of him down." He is a poor soft country fellow; and his master locks him up at night, in a basement room with iron bars to the window. Between which our servants poke wine in, at midnight. His master and mistress buy old boxes at the curiosity shops, and pass their lives in lining 'em with bits of parti-coloured velvet. A droll existence, is it not? We are lucky to have had the palace to ourselves until now, but it is so large that we never see or hear these people; and I should not have known even, if they had not called upon us, that another portion of the ground floor had been taken by some friends of old Lady Holland[†2]—whom I seem to see again, crying about dear Sydney Smith, behind that green screen as we last saw her together.[†3]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [?11 APRIL-30 MAY 1845]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: endorsed by Georgina "First two letters I receive from C.D. | Genoa 1845" (for the first see 4 Feb 45); the latest possible Friday is 30 May. Address: Miss Hogarth.

Peschiere | Friday Evening

My Dear Georgy

Unless there should be some reason beyond my comprehension, for your staying where you are, I really think you had best come home to dinner. Do as you will.

Affecy. CD.

June

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 and 2 JUNE 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 374-5; F, 1872-4, II, v, 89*n*; F, IV, vii, 375. Date: according to Forster, first extract 1 June; second extract 2 June; third extract, ending of same letter as first extract.

He began by saying that his letter had been twice begun and twice flung into the basket, so great was his indisposition to write as the time for departure came.

He described how an English ship of war, the Fantôme, appeared in the harbour; and from her commander, Sir Frederick Nicolson,[†1] he received, among attentions very pleasant to him, an invitation to lunch on board and bring his wife, for whom, at a time appointed, a boat was to be sent to the Ponte Reale. But no boat being there at the time, CD sent off his servant in another boat to the ship to say he feared some mistake. While we were walking up and down a neighbouring piazza in his absence, a brilliant fellow in a dark blue shirt with a white hem to it all round the collar, regular corkscrew curls, and a face as brown as a berry, comes up to me and says, "Beg your pardon sir—Mr. Dickens?" "Yes." "Beg your pardon sir, but I'm one of the ship's company of the Phantom sir, cox'en of the cap'en's gig sir, she's a lying off the pint sir—been there half an hour." "Well but my good fellow," I said, "you're at the wrong place!" "Beg your pardon sir, I was afeerd it was the wrong place sir, but I've asked them Genoese here sir, twenty times if it was Port Real; and they knows no more than a dead jackass!"—Isn't it a good thing to have made a regular Portsmouth name of it?

I saw last night an old palazzo of the Doria,[†2] six miles from here, upon the sea, which De la Rue urged Fletcher to take for us, when he was bent on that detestable villa Bagnerello; which villa the Genoese have hired, time out of mind, for one fourth of what I paid, as they told him again and again before he made the agreement. This is one of the strangest old palaces in Italy, surrounded by beautiful woods of great trees (an immense rarity here) some miles in extent: and has upon the terrace a high tower, formerly a prison for offenders against the family, and a defence against the pirates. The present Doria lets it as it stands for £40 English—for the year . . . And the grounds are no expense; being proudly maintained by the Doria, who spends this rent, when he gets it, in repairing the roof and windows. It is a wonderful house;[†3] full of the most unaccountable pictures and most incredible furniture: every room in it like the most quaint and fanciful of Cattermole's pictures; and how many rooms I am afraid to say.

The fire-flies at night now, are miraculously splendid; making another firmament among the rocks on the sea-shore, and the vines inland. They get into the bedrooms, and fly about, all night, like beautiful little lamps. . . . I have surrendered much I had fixed my heart upon, as you know, admitting you have had reason for not coming to us here: but I stand by the hope that you and Mac will come and meet us at Brussels; it being so very easy. A day or two there, and at Antwerp, would be very happy for us;[†1] and we could still dine in Lincoln's-inn-fields on the day of arrival.

To T. YEATS BROWN, 3 JUNE 1845

MS Mrs R. E. Yeats Brown.

Peschiere | Tuesday Evening June Third 1845

My Dear Sir

I must beg you—with the greatest reluctance—to excuse me this Evening.[†2]

It has only this moment come to my knowledge that you expect guests whom I have never seen or heard of in my life. If I knew them I have no doubt I should be as happy to read to them as I should be to read to you; but I do not know them; and I have an invincible repugnance to that kind of exhibition which an otherwise pleasant recreation becomes under such circumstances. It may be a natural and rational dislike or it may be very much beside the mark. But I have it.

I am truly sorry that I did not explain this general objection of mine more explicitly to you, some days ago. But I thought in the first instance that you would perhaps infer it from my dislike to reading out of my own house. And I felt sure you were in full possession of it, when Mrs. Browne[†3] proposed to make a special exception in the case of Lady Pellew and her daughter. To which I was unfeignedly glad to assent.

It is no fault of mine, but rests solely with Mrs. Dickens, that I write to you at so late a moment. It is not ten minutes since she told me what you told her of your arrangements, last Sunday.[†4]

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. Yeats Brown Esquire

To MADAME DE LA RUE, [?16 APRIL-4 JUNE 1845]†

MS University of Texas. Date: 1845, after his return to Genoa—since the visitor was someone CD had met at Naples. Address: Madame De la Rue.

Peschiere. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Madame De la Rue.

I have a man from Naples—come, and going, by the Mongibello—here, to whom I am forced to pay some attention in the way of shewing him the town. Consequently; and with a bad grace, I assure you; I am obliged to deny myself the pleasure of coming to you this Morning.

Kate and Georgy will leave here at a quarter before 2, and will come straight to you.

Ever Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Madame De la Rue.

†[a]Since sealing this, your note has come. Mrs. D will change her time accordingly.†[a]

To CHARLES RIDGWAY,†[1] 5 JUNE 1845*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Palazzo Peschiere, Genoa. | Thursday June 5th 1845.

My Dear Sir

As we cannot possibly think of invading you in our ruthless numbers, I make up the parcel containing your books, today. We leave here on Monday next; and you will receive this by the trustiest hands I can find, when we are passing near to your retreat. When it reaches you, we shall be upon our road to the Mountain.

We are all quite well. Not forgetful in any degree of your kind hospitality at Naples: and anticipating the pleasure of seeing you in England.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite in kindest regards.

I am Ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Ridgway Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 JUNE 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 375-6, 372. Date: both extracts 7 June according to Forster, who calls it "his last letter from Genoa".

They are all at sixes and sevens up at the Peschiere,[†1] as you may suppose; and Roche is in a condition of tremendous excitement, engaged in settling the inventory with the house-agent, who has just told me he is the devil himself. I had been appealed to, and had contented myself with this expression of opinion, "Signor Noli, you are an old impostor!"[†2] "Illustrissimo," said Signor Noli in reply, "your servant is the devil himself: sent on earth to torture me." I look occasionally towards the Peschiere (it is visible from this room), expecting to see one of them flying out of a window. Another great cause of commotion is, that they have been paving the lane by which the house is approached, ever since we returned from Rome. We have not been able to get the carriage up since that time, in consequence; and unless they finish to-night, it can't be packed in the garden, but the things will have to be brought down in baskets, piecemeal, and packed in the street. To avoid this inconvenient necessity, the Brave made proposals of bribery to the paviours last night, and induced them to pledge themselves that the carriage should come up at seven this evening. The manner of doing that sort of paving work here, is to take a pick or two with an axe, and then lie down to sleep for an hour. When I came out, the Brave had issued forth to examine the ground; and was standing alone in the sun among a heap of prostrate figures: with a Great Despair depicted in his face, which it would be hard to surpass. It was like a picture—"After the Battle—Napoleon by the Brave: Bodies by the Paviours."

I am in as great doubt as you about the letters I have written you with these Italian experiences. I cannot for the life of me devise any plan of using them to my own satisfaction, and yet think entirely with you that in some form I ought to use them.[†3]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 8 JUNE 1845*

MS Miss Gladys Storey.

Sunday June Eighth 1845.

She called out to me suddenly, today, that I, being in England, must be mindful to magnetize her on the 23rd. of December[†4] at 11 in the forenoon for a quarter of an hour; and must on no account omit or forget it! It seems so odd, that it may be worth preserving. I write it down, in order that there may be no possibility of her overhearing the least allusion to the subject.

CD

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 8 JUNE 1845

Extract in George D. Smith catalogue, 1901; mention in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 84; MS 2 pp.; dated 8 June 45.

In all the hustle and bustle of this most momentous of moments with everybody everywhere and yet nowhere—and the Carriage packing at the Door for 8 o'clock to-morrow morning. I scratch a line to you to send the loves of my ladies and babbies and the parting regard of my inimitable self.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 JUNE 1845]

Extracts in F, IV, vii, 376-7, 381. Date: For the first extract Forster gives 14 June, but the reference to reaching Altdorf "yesterday afternoon" (see below) shows that 15 June is correct; CD probably wrote "14 June" in error (see next). Second extract called "the letter from Lucerne", clearly the same. From Lucerne.

We came over the St. Gothard,[†1] which has been open only eight days.[†2] The road is cut through the snow, and the carriage winds along a narrow path between two massive snow walls, twenty feet high or more. Vast plains of snow range up the mountain-sides above the road, itself seven thousand feet above the sea; and tremendous waterfalls, hewing out arches for themselves in the vast drifts, go thundering down from precipices into deep chasms, here and there and everywhere: the blue water tearing through the white snow with an awful beauty that is most sublime. The pass itself, the mere pass over the top, is not so fine, I think, as the Simplon; and there is no plain upon the summit,[†3] for the moment it is reached the descent begins. So that the loneliness and wildness of the Simplon are not equalled there. But being much higher, the ascent and the descent range over a much greater space of country; and on both sides there are places of terrible grandeur, unsurpassable, I should imagine, in the world. The Devil's Bridge, terrific! The whole descent between Andermatt (where we slept on Friday night)[†1] and Altdorf, William Tell's town,[†2] which we passed through yesterday afternoon, is the highest sublimation of all you can imagine in the way of Swiss scenery.[†3] Oh God! what a beautiful country it is![†4] How poor and shrunken, beside it, is Italy in its brightest aspect!

I look upon the coming down from the Great St. Gothard with a carriage and four horses and only one postilion, as the most dangerous thing that a carriage and horses can do. We had two great wooden logs for drags, and snapped them both like matches. The road is like a geometrical staircase,[†5] with horrible depths beneath it; and at every turn it is a toss-up, or seems to be, whether the leaders shall go round or over. The lives of the whole party may depend upon a strap in the harness; and if we broke our rotten harness once yesterday, we broke it at least a dozen times. The difficulty of keeping the horses together in the continual and steep circle, is immense. They slip and slide, and get their legs over the traces, and are dragged up against the rocks; carriage, horses, harness, all a confused heap. The Brave, and I, and the postilion, were constantly at work, in extricating the whole concern from a tangle, like a skein of thread. We broke two thick iron chains, and crushed the box of a wheel, as it was; and the carriage is now undergoing repair, under the window, on the margin of the lake: where a woman in short petticoats, a stomacher, and two immensely long tails of black hair hanging down her back very nearly to her heels, is looking on—apparently dressed for a melodrama, but in reality a waitress at this establishment.

If the Swiss villages[†6] looked beautiful to me in winter, their summer aspect is most charming: most fascinating: most delicious. Shut in by high mountains capped with perpetual snow; and dotting a rich carpet of the softest turf, overshadowed by great trees; they seem so many little havens of refuge from the roubles and miseries of great towns. The cleanliness of the little baby-houses of tnns is wonderful to those who come from Italy. But the beautiful Italian imanners, the sweet language, the quick recognition of a pleasant look or cheerful word; the captivating expression of a desire to oblige in everything; are left behind the Alps. Remembering them, I sigh for the dirt again: the brick floors, bare walls, unplaistered ceilings, and broken windows.

Did I ever tell you the details of my theatrical idea,[†1] before? Strange, that I should have quite forgotten it. I had an odd fancy, when I was reading the unfortunate little farce[†2] at Covent-garden, that Bartley looked as if some struggling recollection and connection were stirring up within him—but it may only have been his doubts of that humorous composition.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, [16 JUNE 1845]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: Monday was 16 June in 1845; PM, 17 June 45, confirms. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genes | Italie.

My Dear De la Rue. I have written as cheerfully as I can.[†3] I am very anxious to hear from you, and to know exactly how she is. Therefore I am growing weary for Brussels. I hope to write you at greater length then; but from my own home, certainly. I think of you always. The best part of me is in Genoa shaking hands with you. I have only the dregs here.

Ever Faithfully

CD

Zurich | Monday Night 15th. June

Late. All well, and all asleep.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16-21 JUNE 1845]

Extract in F, IV, vii, 375*n*. Date: "During his travel home" according to Forster; probably not before 16 June, as CD had received Forster's reply to his letter of ?1-2 June (see fn), and unlikely to be after 21 June since they were meeting a few days later.

Odd enough that remark of yours.[†4] I had been wondering at Rome that Juvenal[†5] (which I have been always lugging out of a bag, on all occasions) never used the fire-flies for an illustration. But even now, they are only partially seen; and nowhere I believe in such enormous numbers as on the Mediterranean coast-road, between Genoa and Spezzia.[†6] I will ascertain for curiosity's sake, whether there are any at this time in Rome, or between it and the country-house of Mæcenas[†1]—on the ground of Horace's journey.[†2] I know there is a place on the French side of Genoa, where they begin at a particular boundary-line, and are never seen beyond it. . . . All wild to see you at Brussels! What a meeting we will have, please God!

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 29 JUNE 1845*

MS Miss Gladys Storey. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile de la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres, | Genes | Italie.

Hotel de l'Europe, Brussels. | Sunday June Twenty Ninth 1845.

My Dear De la Rue. I safely received your kind notes and enclosures, both at Mayence and Cologne. The last, as you surmised, was from Fletcher. Poor fellow! He seemed so heavy in his mind, that the Post Office might have charged it as a double letter. The other was from a gentleman unknown, who has written a Poem called Job—and the Reader, in the perusal, represents Job in a very lively manner.

I am responsible for that opinion of which you find yourself possessed, in reference to Madame De la Rue's condition. It is, on the whole, quite as favorable as I have ever expected. And I have strong reason, I think, for holding that whenever I mesmerize her again, I shall find the power of the Agency which has, God be thanked!, done her so much good—greatly increased and intensified. I have little doubt of that; if any. With a lightened spirit, I find too, from her letter, that the moral influence gained over the Shadows, exceeds even my previous knowledge of it. I compare her present feeling on that subject, with her feeling when I first went to Rome; and regard the change as only short of miraculous. I believe it impossible to exaggerate the alteration of her Mind—where incalculably the greatest torment and greatest danger used to lie. She tells me that she has seen a Shadow for an instant—the Shadow of the Bad Shadow—passing in a great hurry: escaping observation; hanging its head; and nearly worn away. I like that even better than I should have liked her not seeing anything. If it should return, we know she is to be cured, with God's leave, beyond all question.

I feel how natural it is, that you should be grieved at not being able to exert the influence. But it dwells with this person and does not dwell with that person, unaccountably; and we must forget that source of regret, in the gratification of knowing (you and I) that she can be affected by somebody—that she has been rescued from great suffering, and still greater danger—and that if the disease should return (I hope otherwise, however) the World may be a wide one, but is not so wide still, as to keep us hopelessly asunder. Believe me, and understand it once for all, that no occupation of any sort or kind can change or affect the intensity of my desire to do her good. And if, at any future time my Dear De la Rue, you ever say to me that you have a grain of doubt or delicacy in demanding of me such help as I can render, I will blot you out from all possibility of forgiveness or kind construction, and will say within myself that I have utterly mistaken you, and you are the most notable Humbug, Imposter,[†1] and Hypocrite I have ever known or heard of. And to speak more seriously on this most serious theme, I should, in my serious breast, think ill of you, and consider that you thought all this of me, if you should ever falter, for an instant, in putting me to the proof, or in believing with fullest confidence that I should respond with Great Joy of Heart. Ours is not a common knowledge of each other. Let us always remember it; and act as if we did.[†2]

It is clear to me that Miss Holdscamp[†3] does not love her lover. I am slow to come to the conclusion, for I should have liked her to love him; but in such a case a woman's observation is invariably right—hardly seems to possess the faculty of being wrong; Nature having ordered it otherwise. And you may rely upon it—Madame De la Rue's suspicion in that wise, is the true one. I have no more doubt about it, than I have that I am not standing on my head at this moment—and I distinctly see my boots on the carpet, I assure you.

Mr. Forster is here, and Mr. Maclise; and another Gentleman named Jerrold,[†4] who is a clever author as perhaps you know. Forster is quite well. He looks thinner, and roars out sometimes, without any notice, in consequence of rheumatic twinges in one of his knees. But I hope he is quite right, notwithstanding. He is highly complimentary (of course) to Peel. Whom we have been anathematizing with extreme good will, for two days.[†5] We are going to Ghent tomorrow —to Bruges next day—to Ostend next day—and across, and home, on Thursday. I will begin to send you the Examiner on the following Monday: and will write to you again soon. They are all gone to Antwerp today. I stayed here, to write to Madame De la Rue and you, and read your letters in peace. I had no heart to go with them, for I can't forget our Italian wanderings, or dear old Genoa. I never shall.

Well! You must come to England. That's clear. And I must come back to Genoa too. I shall think of both arrangements, and try to establish myself in a gayer mood in my own room. Don't say anything about it—but if I can find anybody to make a good little sketch in water colors of that mysterious chamber, with the Inimitable B at his usual little table, I shall have it done, when I get home, that some friends of mine in a Red Palace may know how I am lodged on working days.

I can't forget Rome—and Albano—and Florence—and Perugia—and the walks uphill—and you alone, inside the big carriage, with great books dashing out your brains[†1]—and Michele and Roche swearing eternal hostility on Monday, and Eternal Friendship on Tuesday—and the queer Inns—and our happy company. I can't forget anything connected with it. I live in the Past now, in sober sadness.

Ever My Dear De la Rue, notwithstanding, | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I take it for granted that you did hear from me at Zurich, after the date of your last?

July

To GEORGE SCOTT, [?JULY 1845]

Mention in W. T. Spencer catalogue, undated, in Fitzgerald Collection at Eastgate House, Rochester. "Date torn off" according to catalogue. From Devonshire Terrace; addressed to Scott at Rome. Date: possibly soon after return to England.

Speaks of Mr. Black and asks if he is to be made a cardinal.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 5 JULY 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning | Fifth July 1845.

My Dear Sirs

Will you have the goodness to give the Bearer a Proof of my Portrait by Mr. Maclise? I have promised to send as good a one as I could get, to a friend abroad.[†2]

I don't know whether you may happen to have any impressions of that earlier head by Mr. Lawrence.[†3] If you should possess any, will you also send me one of those?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 5 JULY 1845*

MS Comte de Gramont. Date: PM 5 July 45.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

Once more in my own house!—If that can be called mine, which is such a heap of hideous confusion, and chaos of boxes.

I am going into the country tomorrow,[†1] but promise myself the long-expected pleasure of seeing you and Lady Blessington on Monday morning. In the meanwhile, as you have been so kind as to demand personal inspection of my gem of Couriers I will send him to Gore House tomorrow (Sunday) at Twelve o'Clock, with my card in his hand.

He can do anything; and is willing at all times and seasons to do everything. I really believe him to be one of the most honest and excellent servants in the World. His face is a good letter of recommendation, but it leaves the man himself at an immense distance behind. If I could afford to keep him, and had duties for an upper servant to discharge, I wouldn't part with him for the weight of his head (though its[†2] a large one) in refined Gold.[†3]

With best regards to Lady Blessington, and the Miss Powers,

Ever believe me | Most Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Le Comte D'Orsay.

To DAVID COLDEN, 6 JULY 1845

Extract in Merwin-Clayton sales catalogue, Oct 1906; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 July 45.

I am unwilling[ly][†4] obliged to defer our engagement until we shall have an opportunity of concerting another appointment that may suit your engagements. I am obliged to go out this morning on business, and the interval between would be hardly long enough for our purpose. What say you to Tuesday at 12? I will come to you then, if you say yes.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 7 JULY 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Seventh July 1845.

My Dear Bradbury and Evans.

Mr. Forster is not sure whether he has or has not spoken to you about a certain young man[†5] whom I begged him (writing from Genoa) to recommend to you, in case you wanted a trustworthy person of good appearance and manners in any of the new arrangements.

He is going to marry one of our nurses, who has been with us six years. He has been servant to Sir George Crawford, whom I know, and who gives him the very best of characters. He has lived with that gentleman nine years, and quits his service, on account of this Matrimonial speculation. He comes of very respectable people—can read and write, and so forth very well—and understands Italian, and I think French, to boot, if that be any additional recommendation.

He will be in town in a few days: both his late Master and I have it very much at heart to get him some occupation which will enable the young couple to make a tolerably fair start. I can think of nothing better than writing to you; but do not take the trouble to write again, as I shall see you on Thursday.

I needn't add that I know enough both of him and his intended, to be sure of their being worthy of all trust and recommendation; and that I have the greatest interest in their well-doing.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 7 JULY 1845*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning Seventh July | 1845.

Dear Sirs

I am very much obliged to you for the offer of your own Impression of Mr. Lawrence's portrait. But I really do not so much care to send that particular print to my friend, that I need deprive you of it. I do not thank you the less.

We are all quite well.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, [7 JULY 1845]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: endorsed in unknown hand 7 July 1845, and clearly just after D'Orsay had seen Roche.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

A Hundred Thousand thanks to you. I will send the Unexceptionable to 9 Grosvenor Place[†1] tomorrow Morning, and will tell you the result as soon as I know it.

Ever Believe me | Cordially Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Le Comte D'Orsay.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY JULY 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 378-9. Date: "his first letter" after his return according to Forster; probably in the first week.

I really think I have an idea, and not a bad one, for the periodical.[†2] I have turned it over, the last two days, very much in my mind: and think it positively good. I incline still to weekly; price three halfpence, if possible; partly original partly select; notices of books, notices of theatres, notices of all good things, notices of all bad ones; Carol philosophy, cheerful views, sharp anatomization of humbug, jolly good temper; papers always in season, pat to the time of year; and a vein of glowing, hearty, generous, mirthful, beaming reference in everything to Home, and Fireside. And I would call it, sir,—

THE CRICKET

A cheerful creature that chirrups on the hearth.

Natural History.

Now, don't decide hastily till you've heard what I would do. I would come out, sir, with a prospectus on the subject of the Cricket that should put everybody in a good temper, and make such a dash at people's fenders and arm-chairs as hasn't been made for many a long day. I could approach them in a different mode under this name, and in a more winning and immediate way, than under any other. I would at once sit down upon their very hobs; and take a personal and confidential position with them which should separate me, instantly, from all other periodicals periodically published, and supply a distinct and sufficient reason for my coming into existence. And I would chirp, chirp, chirp away in every number until I chirped it up to ____ well, you shall say how many hundred thousand! . . . Seriously, I feel a capacity in this name and notion which appears to give us a tangible starting-point, and a real, defined, strong, genial drift and purpose. I seem to feel that it is an aim and name which people would readily and pleasantly connect with me; and that, for a good course and a clear one, instead of making circles pigeon-like at starting, here we should be safe. I think the general recognition would be likely to leap at it; and of the helpful associations that could be clustered round the idea at starting, and the pleasant tone of which the working of it is susceptible, I have not the smallest doubt. . . . But you shall determine. What do you think? And what do you say? The chances are, that it will either strike you instantly, or not strike you at all. Which is it, my dear fellow? You know I am not bigoted to the first suggestions of my own fancy; but you know also exactly how I should use such a lever, and how much power I should find in it. Which is it? What do you say?—I have not myself said half enough.[†1] Indeed I have said next to nothing; but like the parrot in the negro-story, I "think a dam deal."[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 JULY 1845]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: 1845 on handwriting, and after June since from Devonshire Terrace. Reference to "cleaning" (see To Mitton, 20 May 45) suggests shortly after CD's return.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Forster.

The "cleaning" &c &c is in that advanced stage of damnability, that I find, on consultation, it will be best to dine out today—more especially as the children are not at home to Polk. Will you let our engagement for today—having reference to this dining-room—stand over until tomorrow? And shall we dine together somewhere else, today? Yes, of course. Well. Where shall I meet you? Name your ground, and I will bring Mac.

Ever and Ever

CD.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 9 JULY 1845*

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth July 1845.

My Dear Jerrold

Here is the letter I spoke to you about.[†1] I am charmed with your comedy[†2] —so much so, that I do not think I shall go to see it badly played.[†3] I am greatly struck by the whole idea of the piece.[†4] The elopement in the beginning, and the consequences that flow from it, and their delicate and masterly exposition, are of the freshest, truest, and most vigorous kind—the characters (especially the Governess)[†5] among the best I know—and the wit and the wisdom of it are never asunder. I could almost find it in my heart to sit down and write you a long letter on the subject of this Play. But I won't. I will only thank you for it, heartily; and add that I agree with you in thinking it incomparably the best of your dramatic writings.

I don't know that I could express my feeling better, even if I tried, than by saying that if you didn't read it yourself to the actors (damn 'em) I feel as if I should have liked to do it, and to have belaboured them, sledge-hammer wise, with the whole five acts, so that they should have been bruised into some understanding of it.

We dine at 5 on Sunday, remember.

Ever My Dear Jerrold
Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esquire

To CHARLES WHITEHEAD,[†1] 9 JULY 1845

Text from photograph, Mr W. G. Southwell.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Ninth July 1845.

Sir.

I have been much gratified by the receipt of your letter, which I found awaiting me on my return from Italy a few days since, after a year's absence. It is a great happiness to me (remembering the circumstances under which you wrote to me on a former occasion) to learn that you are doing so well.

I am unwilling to damp your ardor by suggesting that Poetry is a dangerous pursuit better laid aside than encouraged in the position you occupy, of all others most unlikely ever to lead you to fame, happiness, or profit. But this is a grave truth; and one, believe me, which you will do well to consider.

Regard me, nevertheless, as a Subscriber to your book,[†2] but have the goodness not to insert my name in your list.

Assuring you once again, that the receipt of your letter has given me great satisfaction I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ELIZA ACTON,[†3] 11 JULY 1845

Text from N, I, 686.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park
Eleventh July 1845

Dear Madam,

I beg to thank you cordially for your very satisfying and welcome note of the tenth of January last; and for the book that accompanied it.[†4] Believe me, I am far too sensible of the value of a communication so spontaneous and unaffected, to regard it with the least approach to indifference or neglect—I should have been proud to acknowledge it long since, but I have been abroad in Italy.

Dear Madam, | Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 12 JULY 1845*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Morning Twelfth July | 1845.

My Dear Thompson

I had a delicacy in alluding last night—even before Fred—to the subject[†5] which occupies your thoughts, I know, just now: and in which I take, as you know, a lively and fervent interest. If you had originated it, I should have had no hesitation in pursuing the theme; but as you did not, I held my peace. I should not have done so, had we been alone. You trust Fred, I believe; and I know him worthy of all trust. But I did not feel certain that I had a right to act on that belief, without your leading.

If it be any satisfaction to you to confide in me freely, as you did in the beginning of your love, pray do so. I can scarcely hope that I shall have the good fortune to assist you; but I am unfeignedly and heartily your friend and hers; and you can tell me nothing which will not have my warm heart.

I am at home every morning, and have a ready ear and an open hand for you. Being in all sincerity

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To F. O. WARD, 12 JULY 1845*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twelfth July 1845

Dear Sir.

In reply to your favor of Thursday last, I beg to assure you that you are at full liberty to use my name, if you should desire to do so, as a Member of the Committee of the Hood Fund.[†1] May all success attend it!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. O. Ward Esquire.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 14 JULY 1845*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth July 1845.

My Dear Count D'Orsay

I told you yesterday that Maclise had been offered a thousand pounds for his Cartoon. I swear Forster told me so, at Brussels. He swears he didn't, but that I must have misunderstood something that fell from him in the ravaging torrent of News they were all pouring out at once. However this may be, I write to prevent your having a wrong impression of the fact also. The patriotic ma reserved by Providence to offer that tribute to Maclise's genius, has not appeared yet. The Hour is come, but the Man is, as yet, out of town.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 15 JULY 1845†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth July 1845.

My Dear Stanny.

As I write to you now, not as a Private Friend, but as a Stage Manager, I have half a mind to damn your eyes by way of beginning.

Our Play Sir. Our play—

Every Man in his Humour,[†1] and the Mayor of Garratt.[†2] The Prompt book is Cumberland's Edition[†3] in both cases. They are both cast,[†4] and really very well. I should say, the St. James's Theatre[†1] when we are quite ready, [†a]as there is no doubt of our being able to keep that as Private as a Drawing Room.[†a] In the meantime, merry rehearsals innumerable. [†b]The first, here on Wednesday the 23rd. at a quarter before 7 for 7 exactly.[†b]

You will find Downright (your part in Every Man in his Humour) very much in the Sir Anthony Absolute line. And as your best business is with me (I am Bobadil) we will make it out brilliantly. Take also, Sir Jacob Jollop[†2] in the Farce; [†c]and I am confident that both pieces will be very well done.[†c]

Stick to us nobly. My steam is up!

Ever affectionately

CD.

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

To LADY HOLLAND, 16 JULY 1845*

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Sixteenth July 1845.

My Dear Lady Holland

I find it quite out of the question to think of availing myself, today, of the kindness of the Duchess of Bedford.[†3] I am obliged to dine, if by any reasonable exertion I can do so, with a party at Greenwich in the evening;[†4] the engagement being an old one, and the dinner mainly planned for me. My throat is worse instead of better: and I have such a villainous cold, that I am continually weeping, and feel as uncomfortable and heavy as if I had done some evil deed. So I am taking your remedy, and going round and round my garden in a great coat, in desperate training for tonight.

After your kind interest on Monday Evening,[†5] I could not stay away from her Grace's breakfast[†6] without writing you a line. I shall of course make a point of calling there before the week is out; and I will soon report to you, as in duty bound.

Always Dear Lady Holland | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Lady Holland.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 18 JULY 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | M. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genoa | North Italy.

Devonshire Terrace. 18th. July/45. Friday

My Dear De la Rue. Your letter received this morning as I was writing to Madame. I will write to you by Monday's Post.

Ever and Ever Yours CD

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 18 JULY 1845*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Eighteenth July 1845.

My Dear Stanny.

Your hearty note, shews me (as I knew before) that you are the boy for Downright! The gentlemen of the company beg me to postpone the first Rehearsal, that they may be easier in their words before it comes off. I therefore suggest Thursday the 31st. Can you start for Chatham on Tuesday the 29th? If so, let our engagement stand on those terms; and we will come back, merrily, to the Rehearsal.

I anticipate great amusement from the Play, and am quite full of it.

Kate (who was at the opera last night,[†1] and is not up yet, or she would write) begs me to give her love to Mrs. Stanfield, and to ask if she and you will come and dine with us on Sunday, at 6 sharp. We shall be quite alone, with the exception of Mac and Forster, and Mr. Colden from New York: whom you know. We earnestly hope that you have no engagement to deprive us of this pleasure.

Ever Believe me

My Dear Stanfield | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 21 JULY 1845*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First July 1845

I would if I could, Dear Milnes. But I can't. So I won't.

Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 or 23 JULY 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 382. Date: 22 or 23 July—the only days during the run of the Gamester when CD could have dined with Macready: see fns.

Man of the House. Gamester! By the foot of Pharaoh,[†2] I will not see the Gamester. Man shall not force, nor horses drag, this poor gentleman-like carcass[†3] into the presence of the Gamester.[†4] I have said it. . . . The player Mac hath bidden me to eat and likewise drink with him,[†1] thyself, and short-necked Fox[†2] to-night. An' I go not, I am a hog, and not a soldier. But an' thou goest not—Beware citizen![†3] Look to it. . . . Thine as thou meritest. BOBADIL (Captain). Unto Master Kitely. These.

To EDWIN LANDSEER, 23 JULY 1845

MS Mr Noel C. Peyrouton. Address: Edwin Landseer Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Twenty Third July 1845.

My Dear Landseer

I would if I could—but I am tied by the heels—both heels—having engagements and occupations from which I can no more cast myself off today, than I can cast myself to the top of the Church Weathercock. Which I think I would do, if I could: to get out of the way.

Best Regards. My affectionate protection to the Eagle and Raven.[†4] They sound like the sign of a Public House.

Ever Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD DUDLEY COUTTS STUART, 24 JULY 1845

MS Mr Wyndham Payne.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fourth July 1845.

My Dear Lord Dudley.

Behold Sanvanero's little Bottle of Wine![†5] His whole heart is in it, I am certain.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Dudley Stuart

To THOMAS MITTON, 25 JULY 1845*

MS Mrs Humphry House. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth July 1845.

My Dear Mitton. I suppose he[†1] must have it? Am I right?—As the Wizard of the North[†2] used to say.

Roche is out, and I can't find the Cigars. I will send them on Monday, and see you myself, either on that day or Tuesday.

Bradbury and Evans have perfectly amazed me with another new notion—Capital, down and ready, fifty Thousand Pounds![†3]

Ever Yours
CD.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 26 JULY 1845*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth July 1845.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

The upshot of the business between Mr. Dods[†4] and the Brave Courier is, that Mr. D engages him for Three Months from the latter end of next month: on the understanding that this is the real length of the Engagement, and tha said D does not design to travel for any longer period. And D aforesaid adds (handsomely and properly, I think) that if said Brave C should find a better place in the interval between this and the period of the proposed commencement of his engagement, it shall be understood between them that he is at full liberty to take it.[†1]

My affectionate regards to Lady Blessington, whose sister, I fear, is now in great distress.[†2]

Ever My Dear Count | Wholly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26 JULY 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 379-80. Date: "about half way through the summer" according to Forster; reference to D'Orsay and Roche suggests 26 July.

Mentioning the success of D'Orsay's kind exertions on behalf of Roche.

What do you think of a notion that has occurred to me in connection with our abandoned little weekly? It would be a delicate and beautiful fancy for a Christmas book, making the Cricket a little household god—silent in the wrong and sorrow of the tale, and loud again when all went well and happy.[†3]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 28 JULY 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: North Italy | A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genova.

Devonshire Terrace. Monday Twenty Eighth July 1845.

My Dear De la Rue.

My left ear has been burning a good deal since last Monday, when I didn't write to you; and as I sit with the right side of my face towards Genoa, I am inclined to think you must have been anathematizing me, pretty considerably, for not keeping my promise. Though it has been owing to little fault of mine, believe me.

The weather here, has been truly damnable. I have no milder word for the due expression of its merits. As somebody once said to somebody else, somewhere or other, "the Summer has set in with its usual severity."[†4] It has been perfectly dark for a whole week. The sky, a dull slate color. The air, by turns intensely close, and insufferably cold. The dust, doing the strangest things: getting up in clouds without any wind to stir it; flying into the sky to meet the fog; dancing on an imaginary tight rope, all down the longest streets and roads. Today the sun is shining. People don't know what to make of it. One man called here, this morning, quite alarmed at the sight, and thought it attributable (he said) to the comet.[†1]

There is nothing new in London. Parliament is just getting up; and everybody is hurrying out of town, as fast as Railroads will carry them. Walton was here yesterday—dined here. I thought he didn't seem quite at his ease, though we had no party: only three or four of my familiars. To be sure there was no dancing. Gracious Heaven, do you remember a mad attempt at the light fantastic toe, that took place in the Town of Carrara,[†2] one Sunday night, at about the Deadest Watch of the Night! The deep dejection of that hour, will never be obliterated from my memory. The Count whats-his-name!—I see him waltzing now, with the niece of that hoary old ruffian, the Swedish Professore. On whose beard, Baldness fall for evermore, Amen!

I don't know whether Roche will come your way, in the course of a short trip of three months he is about to take with one Mr. Dods, MP. But I have exhorted him to see you, if he should: and to bring me something or other out of the drawing-room, given him by Madame De la Rue's own hand. I hope to get him a longer engagement at the end of that term; and if I succeed, you will see him then, certainly. I shall amuse Madame De la Rue in my next letter (tell her so, with my love) by telling her all about the Master and Mistress[†3] for whom I design him. I think I told her something about them, on that memorable night when you went to Torlonia's, and she and I laughed so immoderately at Meloni's.

I hope and trust she is still going on well. I hardly dare to hope that the good effects of the Mesmerism of Three Months will be lasting on her physique, but I have great hopes indeed, that they will be so durable in respect of her morale, as to sustain it until we meet again, which, please God, shall be, at latest, within One Year of my most unhappy departure from Genoa. I shall receive every account you give me of her with unceasing interest—if possible with new and higher interest than ever.

On the very day after I wrote to her, last: Miss Holdskamp (I hope I spell her name correctly, but I'm doubtful) came. I was not at home. I think Kate was not at home either, but I am not sure. Anyhow, she left a card with her address upon it; and Kate and Georgy went soon afterwards to call upon her. They found her in Somers Town—a little house, they said—not very comfortable—but it didn't appear to have made any unusual impression upon them, or to have had any cause of embarrassment to either side, in it. They saw a sister,[†4] whom they describe as very pretty, though of a different kind of beauty altogether, to Miss H. The sister said she had been rallying her, on having left her Heart in Genoa: and there was some little cross-firing on that subject. Georgy (you may remember a small Virgin of that name) suggested that it might have been left with a gentleman named "Grannet"—but the sister said "Oh dear no!" and appeared surprised: observing that she often talked of him.

You can put on this, whatever construction your wisdom suggests. It is just a toss-up, I think, whether the sister, on these premises, was right or wrong. But I tell you exactly what they told me, when they came home. I am anxious to know what has passed, in reference to your Brother-in-law. Give my love to him. I shall be truly sorry to hear that this, or anything else, in which he has a real interest: looks unpromising or goes wrong.[†1]

The box was gone before I received your letter about Brewster, and the Philosophy of apparitions.[†2] If the steamer repeat her voyage regularly (she is now absent on her first trip) I will not fail to send them to you by that conveyance. The thought occurred to me more than once, that I might have put them in the box. But the Binder made it, and didn't like to be interfered with; for when I suggested to him that I might have some other things for him to pack, he addressed me in these terms. "That 'ere box, Mr. Dickens, is at present dewoted, en-tirely to your works Sir. Them works is intended, if I understand the subject, as a present, Mr. Dickens, toe a lady. That box and them works, Mr. Dickens, is now a complete thing, which the lady will perceive Sir, if she is the lady that no doubt she is, when you sends your works in a gift so far Sir. Wery good Sir. Now Sir, the Pint is this. Wotever you orders me to pack along with them works, Sir, I packs and willing. No man more so. But if you introdooses into that 'ere box, a single blessed work as an't your own Sir, the completeness of that 'ere box is gone, and I don't care no more for it, myself, than if it wos a Tea Kittle."

I was so much affected by this reasoning, that I begged him to nail the lid on instantly. Being called away, I must nail the lid on this letter much sooner than I intended. And as there is nothing in it, my dear De la Rue, only think of it as a squeeze of the hand forwarded by Post—just such a squeeze as I used to give you when we parted at the corner opposite the Post Office, and were going to take a walk again—at night.

Ah!

Ever Yours sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Emile De la Rue.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 28 JULY 1845

MS British Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Eighth July 1845

My Dear Sir

As my note is to bear reference to business, I will make it as short and plain as I can.

You want me to write a paper for you.[†1] I think I could write you a pretty-good, and a well-timed[†2] article on the Punishment of Death, and sympathy with Great Criminals: instancing the gross and depraved curiosity that exists in reference to them, by some of the outrageous things that were written, done, and said, in recent cases.

But as I am not sure that my views would be yours; and as their statement would be quite inseparable from such a paper; I will briefly set down their purpose, that you may decide for yourself.

Society having arrived at that state, in which it spares bodily torture to the worst criminal: and having agreed, if criminals be put to Death at all, to kill them in the speediest way: I consider the question with reference to society, and not at all with reference to the criminal. Holding that in a case of cruel and deliberate murder, he is already mercifully and sparingly treated.

But, as a question for the deliberate consideration of all reflective persons, I put this view of the case.—With such very repulsive and odious details before us, may it not be well to enquire whether the Punishment of Death be beneficial to Society. I believe it to have a horrible fascination for many of those persons who render themselves liable to it, impelling them onward to the acquisition of a frightful notoriety; and (setting aside the strong confirmation of this idea, afforded in individual instances) I presume this to be the case in very badly regulated minds, when I observe the strange fascination which everything connected with this Punishment or the object of it, possesses for tens of thousands of decent, virtuous, well-conducted people, who are quite unable to resist the published portraits, letters, anecdotes, smilings, snuff-takings &c &c &c of the bloodiest and most unnatural scoundrel with the Gallows before him. I observe that this strange interest does not prevail to anything like the same degree, where Death is not the Penalty. Therefore I connect it with the Dread and Mystery surrounding Death in any shape, but especially in this avenging form; and am disposed to come to the conclusion that it produces crime in the criminally disposed and engenders a diseased sympathy—morbid and bad, but natural and often irresistible—among the well-conducted and gentle.

Regarding it as doing harm to both these classes, it may even then be right to enquire whether it has any salutary influence on those small knots and specks of people, mere bubbles in the living ocean, who actually behold its infliction with their eyes. On this head, it is scarcely possible to entertain a doubt; for we know that robbery and obscenity and callous indifference are of no commoner occurrence anywhere, than at the foot of the Scaffold. Furthermore, we know that all exhibitions of agony and Death have a tendency to brutalize and harden the feelings of men, and have always been the most rife, among the fiercest people. Again, it is a great question whether ignorant and dissolute persons (ever the great body of spectators, as few others will attend), seeing that murder done, and not having seen the other, will not, almost of necessity sympathize with the man who dies before them; especially as he is shewn, a Martyr to their fancy—tied and bound—alone among scores—with every kind of odds against him.

I should take all these threads up, at the end, by a vivid little sketch of the origin and progress of such a crime as Hocker's—stating a somewhat parallel case, but an imaginary one—pursuing its hero to his Death, and shewing what enormous harm he does, after the crime for which he suffers. I should state none of these positions in a positive sledge-hammer way, but tempt and lure the reader into the discussion of them in his own mind; and so we come to this at last—whether it be for the benefit of society to elevate even this crime to the awful dignity and notoriety of Death; and whether it would not be much more to its advantage to substitute a mean and shameful punishment, degrading the deed, and the committer of the deed, and leaving the general compassion to expend itself upon the only theme at present quite forgotten in the history; that is to say, the murdered person.

I do not give you this as an outline of the paper: which I think I could make attractive.[†1] It is merely an exposition of the inferences to which it's[†2] whole philosophy must tend.[†3]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 28 JULY 1845*

Text from copy in the possession of Mrs Gladys Ahern.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Eighth July 1845

My Dear Stanny

The Chatham Excursion is to decide on keeping themselves to themselves on Wednesday; and to take advantage of that day for doing work which might otherwise interfere with the ultimate carrying-out of that much postponed and Stanfield slaughtered design.

Will you come to me after Lord Lansdowne has left you? I propose your coming here, because the garden is convenient. I will read your part with you, in anticipation of Thursday, to the best of my idea of it: and I think put you out of the reach of all misgiving or discomfort. After that, there is sure to be a joint on the premises. And after that, we can walk in half-price, somewhere or other if so "dispoged."

Ever Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 28 JULY 1845

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth July 1845

My Dear Thompson

I hope, if you have no decided objection, you will do Wellbred in the Comedy[†1] —if for no other reason, to oblige me, as I should very much like you to be in it. You will find the "company" perfectly good-natured and most agreeable. I never saw men go to anything in such a hearty spirit.

Write me a word, and let it be Yes. The first Rehearsal comes off here on Thursday at ¼ before 7.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK,[†1] 30 JULY 1845*

MS Columbia University Libraries.

1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park.
Thirtieth July 1845

My Dear Clarke.[†2]

This may seem a tardy answer to your kind remembrance of me dated the Fourth of last November. But I have passed a happy year in Italy; and am but newly come back to my Household Gods.

Thank you for your brother's book.[†3] I will read it in my most quiet hours. I am prepared, as you know, to approach it in the right spirit.

Mrs. Clarke[†4] is long since out of that trouble, you tell me of: no doubt. A coming event of the same character is casting its shadow over this house. But we are not so near the substance as you appear to have been when you wrote your note.

I take it for granted that Mr. Inman[†5] has come and gone again, since those remote times. The remembrance of him lives with me very pleasantly. It would have gratified me to have seen him in these parts.

Knickerbocker is looking upward, I hope? Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial remembrances to your other half and all your house. And I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

L. Gaylord Clark Esquire

To A. C. M. PARISOT,[†6] 30 JULY 1845*

MS Mr H. E. Quick. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. A. C. M. Parisot | 1 Rue du Pont Louis Philippe | a Paris.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
Thirtieth July 1845.

Dear Sir.

In the hope that you read English, I answer your letter in my own language. And I beg to assure you that I should have answered it long ago, but that I have only very recently returned to England from Italy. On my arrival here, I found your letter among many others; within this fortnight only.

I am not quite sure (for your Journal, the "Réaction",[†7] has not reached me: having been, I suppose, mislaid, on its way)—I am not quite sure that I perfectly understand the nature of your request. But if the association to which it refers, be "The London Association for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals",[†1] and you desire to know such points connected with its management as may assist you in the formation of a similar society, I would recommend you to address a letter to the Secretary[†2] of that Society, through the Post Office. I have no doubt he will be happy to give you any information in his power.

I would willingly seek it for you, though I do not belong to the association;[†3] but that I feel sure the gentlemen connected with its management would be proud to render you their direct assistance. I cannot say that I have any practical knowledge on the subject. If I saw a man grossly ill-using any animal in the streets, I could, and certainly should, summon him before a Magistrate, who would fine him according to the extent of his offence. Any citizen can do this, in England, without belonging to the Society. And as I cannot belong to all the excellent Societies of whose objects I approve, this would be my course in such a case as I have supposed.

Accept my thanks, dear Sir, for your courteous consideration, and believe me, with a strong sympathy in your benevolent objects,

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

à | Monsieur A. C. M. Parisot.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 30 JULY 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth July 1845.

My Dear Mac. Stanny is here, and we talk of going halfprice somewhere tonight. Will you come round, at your leisure?

Ever Yours

CD.

To JOHN MITCHELL,[†4] [?LATE JULY 1845]

Mention in To Miss Kelly, 7 Aug 45. Date: after 15 July (To Stanfield, that day) when CD suggested the St James's, and some days before 6 Aug, since by then, as he told Miss Kelly next day, he had Mitchell's reply.

Asking if the amateurs might hire the St James's Theatre.

August

To WILLIAM OLIVER,[†1] 1 AUGUST 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace First August 1845

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Oliver, and begs to than, him for the gratification he has had in looking over the contents of the accompanying Portfolio. Mr. Dickens is no stranger to the taste and elegance of Mr. Oliver's pencil: and is happy to have seen, however cursorily, so many tokens of its worthy employment.

Mr. Dickens begs to add (as a reason for his not having expected Mr. Oliver this morning, and not being able to remain at home for his second visit) that he saw Mr. Hogarth yesterday, and explained to him that he could not have the pleasure of connecting himself with the proposed work.[†2] Not because (as it is scarcely necessary to say) he has the least doubt of the execution of Mr. Oliver's share in it, but because he really is not open to any offer of the kind.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 1 AUGUST 1845

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | First August 1845.

My Dear Thompson.

I hope you will have no more misgivings.[†3] I assure you, on my word, that your ease and self-possession were the subject of general commendation last night, among the whole Dram: Pers: You could not have done better.

What do you mean to do on Sunday? Will you dine here at half past 5? No Party.

Faithfully Ever

CD

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To THOMAS POWELL, 2 AUGUST 1845

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | August Second 1845.

My Dear Powell.

I intend handing this to Augustus (whom I expect to see here, tomorrow) to bring to you. But he is quite innocent of its subject or contents.

I have thought several times of what you said to me in Broad Street,[†1] and am disposed (subject always to your corrective judgment) to leave the matter where it is. I will tell you why.

In the first place, I think any grave notice of such a thing to a youth of Augustus's years, very likely to invest it with an importance not otherwise attaching to it in his eyes. In the second, I am relieved from any oppressive anxiety touching the young Lady's[†2] designs upon him, by the knowledge that he has no possessions of any sort or kind. In the third, I contemplate the great possibility of there being nothing at all in it, but a means of getting rid of spare time pleasantly. In the fourth, and at the worst, I am not at all sure but it may keep him out of other harm's way.

I broke my heart into the smallest pieces, many times between thirteen and three[†3] and twenty. Twice, I was very horribly in earnest;[†4] and once I really set upon the cast for six or seven long years,[†5] all the energy and determination of which I am owner. But it went the way of nearly all such things at last, though I think it kept me steadier than the working of my nature was, to many good things for the time. If anyone had interfered with my very small Cupid, I don't know what absurdity I might not have committed in assertion of his proper liberty; but having plenty of rope he hanged himself, beyond all chance of restoration.

I have asked no questions of my father or mother, for though I am dutiful, I am not altogether disposed to trust to their discretion in such a case. But I have sounded my brother Fred; and he seems to think the Virgin may be "only joking". She may be a Platonic Virgin, perhaps. Who knows!

In any case, without further communication with you, I am unwilling to seem to recognize the possibility of there being any danger either of contract or contact between Augustus and the Damsel. And this is not a hasty opinion, I assure you.

Now, what do you say?

Ever Yours Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Powell Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 6 AUGUST 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth August 1845.

My Dear Beard

Here is a point at issue. And I am determined to be right!

Will you tell me (in the strictest confidence, of course) what is the gross expence of the Foreign Department of the Herald: Expresses, Correspondents' Salaries, and Everything included: for any given period that may be fairly taken as representing a portion of the round year. And will you tell me, over and above, how much more you may suppose it to be in amount than the similar expences of our friend the Great Baronet.[†1]

It seems an odd question, but I will tell you bye and bye how it came about.[†2]

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 6 AUGUST 1845

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth August 1845.

My Dear Lemon

Forster tells me you have some doubts about the Farce.[†3] I have many, also. Now let me suggest a substitute to you; and do you think of it, before to-night.

I played twice in Canada, in a version (by Mrs. Gore) of that Two o'Clock in the Morning. I bought it somewhere in America, but I don't recollect what it was called (I gave it, in the Bills, its London name).

It was a most prodigious success; and went, with a roar, all through. The characters are rather better expressed in it, as I remember, than in Charles Mathews' version.[†4]

I played Keeley's part. Charles Mathews' was acted by a tall, big, English officer[†5]—a kind of person who expresses the remorseless intruder into the bedroom, much better than a figure like Mathews. It is an admirable part. Now if you would play that, I would play the other.[†6] And there, we have the afterpiece. You and I could get it up, splendidly, between us. We want no rehearsal with the rest; we shall have no need to prolong the already very long rehearsals of Every Man in His Humour—can choose different days and times—and without dependence on anybody whomsoever, can get it so glib and pat, that it shall go like a Firework.

If you think the others do not care to play in the Farce (I am inclined to think it would bother them, most ruefully), I wish you would propose this, and see what they say to it. We should only want a wait of five minutes between the comedy and the second overture; and could carry the little piece off, in a "blaze of triumph" (I know its effect) in five and thirty minutes.

I send four foils, by the Bearer.[†1]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 AUGUST 1845*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh August 1845

My Dear Macready.

Will Monday the fifteenth of September (at Miss Kelly's Theatre) suit you for the conveyance of your critical eye, into the Atmosphere of Amateurs.[†2]

Reply, Reply, Reply![†3]
Between ourselves, I think the company "damned bad"—no other phrase will express the sentiment, at present. This is confidential.

We do Two o'Clock in the Morning, for the last piece.

Loves from all to all.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY,[†4] 7 AUGUST 1845†

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventh August 1845.

Dear Miss Kelly.

Mr. Stanfield and I met the other gentlemen concerned in our Play (most of them more or less known to you, I believe) last night; and we impressed upon them the ease and privacy of your little Theatre, as compared with the Saint James's: which some of them were very anxious to secure—so much so, that I had already written to Mr. Mitchell on the subject, and received the assurance of his desire to do everything for us, and to place it at our disposal. In the end, they very willingly agreed to come to Dean Street. And we purpose playing there, on Monday the fifteenth of next month—unless I should hear from Mr. Macready (who is very anxious to come, and to whom I have written this morning) that he has any engagement for that night. In which case, but in no other, we shall change the day.

We purpose rehearsing on the Stage, on Monday evening next, at a quarter before seven o'Clock, when we wish to have the float lighted, if you will have the goodness to give directions to that effect. As my Servant knows the whole party, I will send him down beforehand, if you will allow me, to attend to the door.

[†a]Believe me that I had great pleasure yesterday in becoming personally known to one whose truthful observation of nature and uncommon art in portraying it, have often afforded me the highest delight. I address you in the least ceremonious form, because I have known you in your best Spirit for some years; and I feel, somehow or other, like an old acquaintance.[†a]

I am always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly

To MACVEY NAPIER, 7 AUGUST 1845

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh August 1845.

My Dear Sir

Pray do not have the least regard to the exclusion of my paper from the next number. I will write it at my leisure; and you shall have it in good time. Rely upon me, certainly, for the January number.

Mandeville, I know. The short report, I do not. But I will make myself master of it, before I begin.[†1]

I am happy to say, that the whole of my rather formidable travelling Caravan, have returned in the best preservation. Mrs. Dickens sends her best regards to you. If you should see Lord Jeffrey, pray give him my love.

And Believe me always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier.

To JOHN WILLMOTT,[†2] 7 AUGUST 1845†

MS The Governors of the Royal Shakespeare Theatre.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventh August 1845

My Dear Willmot.[†3]

Mayhap you may have heard how that some friends of yours are going to have a Private Play at Miss Kelly's Theatre—how that Clarkson Stanfield Esquire is not innocent of the fact—how that John Forster Esquire has been spoken of for Kitely—and how that Charles Dickens Esquire is connected, in whispers, with Bobadil.[†1]

It will not come off until the fifteenth of next month. But I and some others want our dresses made at once, in order that we may be easy in them, as well as in the words. It has occurred to me that nobody can tell us so well as you, where we can get them well and not ruinously made. [†a]Perhaps the English Opera House tailor[†2] might be recommended for the Job? They are to be marvellously correct; and great councils must be holden before the Shears are used.

So I want to see you. Now, shall I come to the Theatre, or will you come here?[†a] If you will take a Chop with me, either on Saturday or on Tuesday, you shall have it at your own hour.[†3] What do you say to Saturday? You shall be producible behind that fat silver watch you used to hang up in your box at Drury Lane, at any minute you choose.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Willmot Esquire.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 8 AUGUST 1845

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Eighth August 1845

My Dear Thompson. I went to see Miss Kelly and her Theatre, the other day. I became a convert, immediately. The Stage is much wider than I had supposed —the audience part very good—the whole perfectly genteel and private—and the space sufficient for our actors, or the Devil's in it. We therefore decide (on my Stage-Managerial recommendation) to play there. We rehearse on the Stage next Monday Evening, at a quarter before 7. Will you take pot-luck with me that day, at half past four?[†4]

I want to speak to you about your Dress. We purpose playing on Monday the 15th. of next Month. The farce is altered. Two o'Clock in the Morning is now the Dodge.[†5]

Old W.[†6] wrote to me last night, for a personal recommendation to the committee of the Liverpool Exchange Rooms.[†7] I tipped them raythe a special one.

Always heartily Yours

Bobadil

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To G. F. BAKER,[†1] 10 AUGUST 1845*

MS Mr D. E. D. Lawson. Address: Paid. | Frederick Baker Esquire | Church Row | Limehouse.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Tenth August 1845.

My Dear Sir

I am truly indebted to you for your great kindness in sending me so correct and beautiful a reminder of a place whither my heart wanders very often.[†2] I shall prize it highly, always. You could not have devised any token of good-will that would have pleased me better, or gratified me more.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Baker Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10 AUGUST 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 381-2. Date: CD visited Miss Kelly 6 and 10 Aug; this letter almost certainly refers to the second meeting (and see To Miss Kelly, 14 Aug, in which he reassures her). Forster's date of 22 July is clearly impossible.

Heavens! Such a scene as I have had with Miss Kelly here, this morning! She wanted us put off until the theatre should be cleaned and brushed up a bit, and she would and she would not, for she is eager to have us and alarmed when she thinks of us. By the foot of Pharaoh, it was a great scene! Especially when she choked, and had the glass of water brought. She exaggerates the importance of our occupation, dreads the least prejudice against the establishment in the minds of any of our company, says the place already has quite ruined her, and with tears in her eyes protests that any jokes at her additional expense in print would drive her mad.[†3] By the body of Cæsar,[†4] the scene was incredible! It's like a preposterous dream.

To JOHN LEECH, 10 AUGUST 1845

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Paid. | John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Tenth August 1845.

My Dear Leech.

Can you come here tomorrow (Monday) afternoon, by a quarter before 6, and not later? I have appointed the English Opera House Tailor to come at that time; and I have found a picture, I think, which is the very thing for your dress.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 11 AUGUST 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday August Eleventh 1845.

My Dear B and E. I have always omitted to ask you in our conversations (though I have always had it in my mind to do so) how Johnson whom you so kindly took on my recommendation, goes on. He is full of satisfaction and a sincere desire to please you, in all he tell me. I thought to have mentioned to you the other day, that if in the arrangement of the multifarious establishments; you should want a couple to keep house (having no older servant with a prior claim) I think he and his Intended would suit your purpose excellently well. She is a most respectable young woman, of a very nice appearance and good manner. As we have always other things to speak of when we meet, I write thus much, lest I should forget it again.

Rather a good notion in connexion with the Cricket,[†2] has occurred to me this morning. A decided chirp!

Ever Yours
CD

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To MR LAKE,[†3] 11 AUGUST 1845

Summary in Quaritch catalogue, No. 541 (1937); MS 2 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 11 Aug 45.

A formal note apologizing for not being able to see Mr. Lake and at the same time stating that he could not consider the proposal that Mr. Lake had in mind.

To THE REV. DAVID LAING, [12 AUGUST 1845]

MS (envelope only) Mrs D. Harmer. Address: The Reverend David Laing | 1 Cambridge Terrace | Regents Park. Date: PM 12 Aug 45.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 13 AUGUST 1845*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth August 1845.

My Dear George. I am very sorry to say that I see no prospect of serving your unfortunate friend:[†1] whose memoranda I return. But if occasion should present itself, rely upon me, I will seize it promptly.

I hope to see you at Margate, on Monday or so. Meantime and always
Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire
Kate and her sister unite in Loves to Mrs. Cruikshank.

To MR HEAD,[†2] 13 AUGUST 1845

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Thirteenth August | 1845.

Mr. Head. I send you, on the other side, the names of the three other gentlemen who have decided to have their dresses made by you. And against their names, I have written their addresses, and the best time for measuring them. Be very careful that the colors are bright; and that they will shew well by Lamplight.

I enclose you three sketches, which express the figure of Bobadil, as I wish to make up. The sword I have; and I do not want spurs. But I wish the tops of the boots, and the gauntlets, and the hat-brim, to be very large. And I want the boots, gauntlets, and hat, first—and as soon as convenient to you. Do not forget the sword-belt. I want that to come home at the same time as the boots and gauntlets.

I wish particularly to see the red, of which you propose to make Bobadil's breeches and hat. I want it to be a very gay, fierce, bright color.

You can send to me, either between 10 and 11 tomorrow morning, or between 6 and 8 tomorrow evening. But it must be tomorrow, as I am going out of town next day for four or five days. Send a pattern of the red, at the same time. I will give an old pair of gloves to the person whom you send, that you may know the size of my hands for the gauntlets.

If you do these dresses well, as I have no doubt you will, I think it will throw some good jobs into your way, another time. If you want your Messenger to see any of the other prints to refresh your memory, I will shew them to him.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Take care of the sketches.

Over

Wellbred. Mr. Thompson, 35 Gloucester Road, Hyde Park Gardens. Best time for measuring this gentleman, I should think tomorrow before 12.

Cash. Mr. Augustus Dickens. This gentleman will call on you at the Theatre, between 4 and 5 on Friday afternoon, to be measured. His dress to be of cloth.

Young Knowell. Mr. Frederick Dickens. This gentleman will write you a note, on Monday, and tell you when he will call at the Theatre for the same purpose

---

Master Mathew. Mr. Leech, Brook Green Hammersmith. This gentleman can be measured at his house on Friday Morning

---

To T. J. THOMPSON, 13 AUGUST 1845

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth August 1845.

My Dear Thompson. Estimate of your dress about five guineas. Shoes from 7/6 to 10/- Boots from 20/- to 30/- Beaver hat 14/- I don't think, to be safe, you can do better than employ Head. I have written him that I believe the best time for measuring you will be before 12 tomorrow Morning.[†1] I have given him your address. I enclose your proposed color, as he sends it to me. Alter it, by instruction to the Measurer, if you see fit.

Au revoir in the sequestered Glades of Margate![†2]

Ever Yours
CD

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 14 AUGUST 1845

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth August 1845.

My Dear Fred. I wish you had written, as we arranged; for Mrs. Smithson[†3] says no word of terms in her letter (which is a preposterous omission, as we are no wiser than before); neither do I know whether Ballard[†4] expects us tomorrow afternoon. I have thought it best, therefore, to arrange that the children shall come down on Saturday by the Margate Boat.[†1] Kate, Georgy, and I, come down tomorrow by the Ramsgate boat from London Bridge at half past 9: trusting to our good fortune for a boat coming off from Broadstairs. Affecy. always

CD

Over

Frederick Dickens Esquire If you have not already prepared Ballard, pray do.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 14 AUGUST 1845†

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fourteenth August 1845.

Dear Miss Kelly.

[†a]As I did not happen to see, immediately before coming away the other night, the gentleman to whom you introduced me (who was most attentive and obliging); and as I am going down to Broadstairs in the interval between this and next Wednesday;[†a] I think it best to let you know that we have appointed our next Rehearsal for that evening at a quarter before 6. I will then appoint an early day with Mr. Stanfield for looking at the Scenery, and will communicate it to you before we leave the Theatre, as we shall want a carpenter or two to get it down for us.

I know you will be glad to receive my assurance that there was the very best disposition on the part of all the gentlemen concerned, the other night, to be well pleased with the little Theatre and everything belonging to it. [†b]I was extremely glad (remembering our conversation on Sunday) to observe their good nature.[†b]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To F. O. WARD, 14 AUGUST 1845

Text from N, I, 694.

Devonshire Terrace | August Fourteenth 1845

Dear Sir,

My impression decidedly is, that all that can be done has been done in the matter of Mrs. Hood's Subscription.[†2] The appeal as a general claim on public sympathy is greatly weakened by the existence of the pension and I do not think that more money is to be got.

In the case of the Elton Fund we received two thousand three or four hundred pounds. But it was a very peculiar case. There were six children, all females and without a mother. It was a particularly distressing accident in which Elton lost his life, and one to which public attention was very strongly attracted. Moreover the managers of theatres and the actors in theatres, had a lively interest in the catastrophe, and the endeavour to mitigate the severity of its pressure on the unfortunate children; and free benefits were held in divers parts of the kingdom, from which a good deal of the money came.

Such practical knowledge as I have of these matters leads me distinctly to the conclusion that it is not advisable to press Mrs. Hood's appeal to any greater extent. I think it would be useless to her, and would be tortured into an unpleasant association with the memory of our deceased friend. I express this merely as my own individual opinion, of course, and am not expecting you to attach any greater weight to it than as it may seem to you on consideration to be reasonable and well founded. My estimate of the great genius of poor Hood is as huge as it is possible for man to form, and always has been, consequently I set her claim on very lofty grounds indeed. But in turning the question in my mind, I separate myself, or you, from the crowd who are addressed.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 17 AUGUST 1845†

MS Morgan Library.

Albion Hotel Broadstairs
Sunday August Seventeenth 1845

My Dear Macready.

[†a]I have been obliged to communicate with the Punch men, in reference to Saturday the 20th; as that day of the week is usually their business-dinner-day;[†1] and I was not quite sure that it could be conveniently altered.

Jerrold now assures me that it can, for such a purpose—and that it shall—and therefore consider the Play, as being arranged to come off, on Saturday the 20th: of next month.

I don't know whether I told you that we have changed the Farce; and now mean to act Two o'Clock in the Morning, as performed by the Inimitable B at Montreal.[†a]

In reference to Bruce Castle School,[†2] I think the question set at rest most probably, by the fact of there being no vacancy (it is always full) until Christmas; when Howitt's two boys,[†1] and Jerrold's one,[†2] go in, and fill it up again. But, after going carefully through the School, a question would arise in my mind whether the system—a perfectly admirable one; the only recognition of education as a broad system of moral and intellectual philosophy, that I have ever seen in practice—do not require so much preparation and progress in the mind of the boy, as that as[†3] he shall have come there, younger and less advanced than Willy: or at all events without that very different sort of school experience which he must have acquired at Brighton.[†4] I have no warrant for this doubt, beyond a vague uneasiness suggesting a suspicion of its great probability. On such slight ground, I would not hint it to anyone but you; who I know will give it its due weight—and no more—and no less.

I have the paper setting forth the nature of the higher classical studies, and the books they read. It is the usual course, and includes the great books in Greek and Latin. They have a Miscellaneous Library—under the Management of the boys themselves—of some five or six thousand volumes, and every means of study and recreation, and every inducement to self-reliance and self exertion, that can easily be imagined. As there is no room just now, you can turn it over in your mind again. And if you would like to see the place yourself, when you return to town, I shall be delighted to go there with you.

I come home on Wednesday. [†b]It is our rehearsal night; and of course the active and enterprising stage-manager must be at his Post.[†b]

Ever My Dear Macready | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 18 AUGUST 1845*

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighteenth August 1845

My Dear Talfourd.

I have had all sorts of communications from the Manchester people, touching your Presidency in October next;[†5] of which, as is natural and right and proper, they are very proud. It happens at an awkward time for me, as I shall be anxious about that period in behalf of my other moiety, who, in the ordinary rustic phrase, is likely to be worse before she is better. Still, I cannot deny myself the gratification of sharing your triumph, and holding up your train with my poor hand, in right of my old dedication[†6] and older regard.

They tell me you and Mrs. Talfourd are to stay with Mr. Atherton.[†1] I want to know, have you quite made up your mind to do so, as upon that, depends my own acceptance of his invitation. I have a very great dislike, I confess, to staying in peoples' houses, unless I know them very well—as it necessarily involves some tie and restraint. And we might be prodigiously comfortable at a good Inn!—

I am coming to town on Wednesday night: leaving the children here for a month or so, but returning home then, with Kate and her sister. Will you write me a line to Devonshire Terrace; telling me, at the same time, when you will be at leisure at chambers (or at leisure for a ride, like one of our old expeditions), as I want to speak to you about that Elton Fund, in pursuance of an uneasy request from Coutts's.[†2]

With best regards to Mrs. Talfourd and Miss Ely[†3]—Frank[†4] (if he be at home)—and all the children.

I am Ever My Dear Talfourd | affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd.

To JOHN FORSTER, [19 AUGUST 1845]

Extracts in F, V, i, 384-5*n*. Date: first extract 19 Aug 45 according to Forster; second extract must be same letter. From Broadstairs.

Perhaps it is a fair specimen of the odd adventures which befall the inimitable, that the cab in which the children and the luggage were (I and my womankind being in the other) got its shafts broken in the city, last Friday morning,[†5] through the horse stumbling on the greasy pavement; and was drawn to the wharf (about a mile) by a stout man, amid such frightful howlings and derisive yellings on the part of an infuriated populace, as I never heard before. Conceive the man in the broken shafts with his back towards the cab; all the children looking out of the windows; and the muddy portmanteaus and so forth (which were all tumbled down when the horse fell) tottering and nodding on the box! The best of it was, that our cabman, being an intimate friend of the damaged cabman, insisted on keeping him company; and proceeded at a solemn walk, in front of the procession; thereby securing to me a liberal share of the popular curiosity and congratulation. . . . Everything here at Broadstairs is the same as of old. I have walked 20 miles a day since I came down, and I went to a circus at Ramsgate on Saturday night, where Mazeppa was played in three long acts without an H in it: as if for a wager. Evven, and edds, and orrors, and ands, were as plentiful as blackberries; but the letter H was neither whispered in Evven[[sic]], nor muttered in Ell,[†1] nor permitted to dwell in any form on the confines of the sawdust.

Describing how he saw a Giant played by a village comedian with a quite Gargantuesque felicity; he had a fine manner of sitting down to a hot supper (of children), with the self-lauding exalting remark, by way of grace, "How pleasant is a quiet conscience and an approving mind!"

To JOHN THOMPSON, 19 AUGUST 1845

Text from Sotheby's catalogue, June 1930; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 19 Aug 45.

John,

We shall come to London tomorrow by the steamboat which leaves Margate at 10 o'clock. I think she will be at London Bridge Wharf, at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Be there waiting for us, in good time.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 AUGUST 1845

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First August 1845

Dear Miss Coutts. It is most extraordinary. There seems to be a fatality in my not seeing you.

I was at Broadstairs, when your last kind note arrived. It was past ten before I returned home last night, and found your hand-writing on my table. Mrs. Dickens was with me. And Charley and his sisters we have left behind, on the Seashore, for a month.

Under more fortunate circumstances, we should have been delighted to have come to you last night. I cannot tell you how much I have wished to see you.

I hope you are not going so far, or intend being absent so long, that you will be out of town on Saturday the 20th. of September. I am Stage Manager of a Company of Amateurs who are going to have a Play at Miss Kelly's little Theatre that night. And I don't know what I shall do, if you are not "in front"—as we say, professionally. Mr. Stanfield makes his first appearance on any stage, that night. Mr. Stone, the artist, also. And some of the "Punch" people[†2] are also to appear before an admiring and delighted audience. The Comedy is Every Man in his Humour. There will be one man very much out of humour, if you are out of town.

To ease my mind on this head, I have marked this letter to be forwarded.

If I should hear in reply that you will not be in town that night—and further that Mrs. Brown will be away likewise—I shall take to drinking, immediately.

Ever Believe me with great regard

Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To CAPTAIN ARTHUR CUNYNGHAM,[†1] 21 AUGUST 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Captain Arthur Cunyngham | Messrs. Cox and Co. | Charing Cross.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park.
Twenty First August 1845

My Dear Sir. I have had very great pleasure in the receipt of your letter. I am a bad correspondent: writing more letters, of necessity, in a week, than all the clerks in the Home Secretary's office. But I am happy to have the opportunity of acknowledging a note from you, and assuring you of the gratification I shall have in hearing from, or seeing you, at all times.

I envy you, your Spanish Trip. I envy you, your having seen Irving,[†2] for whom I have a very high regard and admiration. He is coming home, I hear; having been recalled by the New President,[†3] who is what they call in America "a blue-nosed[†4] Presbyterian". I have hopes that he will take London in his way; and that I shall shake hands with him, once more.[†5]

We left Genoa on the Ninth of June, and went, by way of Milan to Como. I wished to make the passage of the St. Gothard: having crossed the Simplon in the winter. It was open, and quite easy. The descent on the Swiss side, after Andermatt, I thought the most wonderful and glorious thing imaginable. But the whole of Switzerland delighted me beyond expression. We came to Frankfort, and so down the Rhine to Cologne, and thence to Brussels. Being joined by some friends from England at that place (who had come across to welcome us home) we went to Bruges and Ghent at our leisure; and embarking at Ostend, got home within the month after our departure from the Peschiere. I regret that Palace and that City very much; and am full of hopes and plans for seeing Italy again, one day.

London is as flat as it can be. There is nothing to talk about, but Railroad shares.[†1] And as I am not a Capitalist, I don't find anything very interesting in that. The Gin Punch shall be yours in the snowy time (I hope) of Christmas; and it shall be preceded by a glass of rather better wine than one can get in the City of Palaces.

I am hot in the preparation of some Private Theatricals just now, which are to come off on the Twentieth of next Month. Mrs. Dickens and her sister send you their best regards. And I am ever Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FOWLER, 21 AUGUST 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: John Fowler Esquire | Mechanics' Institute | Sheffield.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty First August 1845.

Sir.

I have been in Kent for a few days, or I should have answered your letter sooner.

It is with great reluctance that I, for the second time, feel bound to decline the Invitation with which the Directors of the Sheffield Mechanics' Institute have honored me. But at the time you mention, it would be quite impossible for me (having regard to other Engagements) to preside at the proposed Meeting. I have just now arranged to go to Manchester for a similar purpose, as a guest, on the 23rd. of October. In the interval, I am quite unable to leave town on any new invitation: having many visits to pay, and much to do, after a year's absence from England.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

John Fowler Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?22 AUGUST 1845]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: Friday was 22 Aug, and the day, not the date, is correct (see next). The letter was evidently not posted till the next day: see To Cruikshank, 27 Aug.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night August 23rd. 1845.

My Dear George.

You have heard of our intended Play. I want you to take a part in it—a good part, which would not cost you much trouble, and which you would do, admirably.

First let me tell you how it comes to be vacant.

We arranged this Play one day at a country-dinner—quite offhand—and have taken nobody in, since, but two walking gentlemen. We have often wanted, among ourselves, to get you in, but have never had a reasonably good part to offer you.

The one I propose now, is Downright in the enclosed Comedy. It begins in the first Scene of the Second act. Until within an hour ago, it was Stanfield's, but he is so much bothered, and has so much to do with his other duties of Stage Director and Manager of the Scenery and Carpenters that he has come to me and said he will be glad to resign it, if you will take it. Now, do take it; and make one in as pleasant a party as was ever got together for such a purpose.

We have Miss Kelly's little Theatre—which is strictly and perfectly private. We play on Saturday the 20th. of next month—a month hence. We rehearse, on the stage, generally once a week; and the next Rehearsal is on Tuesday Evening at a quarter before Seven. If you join us, and would come up to it,[†1] I can give you a Bed. No names will be printed in our Bills, but the names of the characters. It will be done with every possible appliance in the way of arrangement, correct costume, and so forth. The admissions will be by a printed card of Invitation, addressed to the person invited by all concerned, as if it were a party. And no man can have any visitor (being obliged to make the names of his list known to the rest beforehand) to whom anyone else objects. I think it will be as brilliant an audience, and as good an amateur Play, as was ever seen. The expence to each, exclusive of the dress, (which every man finds for himself) will not exceed Two Guineas.

I almost rely upon you from this moment, as one of the party. Write me by Sunday nights post, or at the latest by Mondays, a definite answer. Every actor will have the privilege of inviting about five and thirty friends. The names of the actors, I have written below.[†2] Don't mind any pen and ink marks you find in the book, as they were made for my private edification.

With best regards to Mrs. C.

Ever Yours heartily

CD.

Kitely	Forster	Captain Bobadil	Myself
Old Knowell	Mayhew[†3]	Cash	Augustus Dickens
Young Knowell	F. Dickens	Formal	Evans[†4]
Wellbred	Thompson	Cob	Leigh[†5]
Master Stephen	Jerrold	Brainworm	Lemon

Master Mathew	Leech	Mrs. Kitely	Miss Fortescue[†1]
Justice Clement	Stone	Bridget	Miss Jackson
Downright (I hope)	You	Tib	Miss M. Jackson[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 AUGUST 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 382*n*. Date: 22 Aug according to Forster.

Look here! Enclosed are two packets—a large one and a small one. The small one, read first. It contains Stanny's renunciation as an actor!!! After receiving it, at dinner-time to-day, I gave my brains a shake, and thought of George Cruikshank. After much shaking, I made up the big packet, wherein I have put the case in the artfullest manner. "R-r-r-r-ead it!" as a certain Captain[†3] whom you know observes.

To MRS M'IAN, 23 AUGUST 1845

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third August 1845.

My Dear Mrs. Mc Ian.

I went to Whitelands[†4] yesterday. Mrs. Field was absent in the country for her health, but I saw the Second in Command,[†5] and had a long talk with her.

I pressed her closely—don't be alarmed; I am not going to say to my beating heart—I pressed her closely with the question whether the school near Canterbury was still open to Esther if she chose to take it. She said, distinctly, 'Yes'. I then asked her why the Chester School had been suggested. She replied because they thought the future patronage of Lady Westminster[†6] might prove most advantageous to Esther—and because there is another Virgin in the School who is equal to the Canterbury business, whereas they have nobody at present, but Esther, who is up to the Chester Mark. I said that that was unfortunate, certainly; but that Esther had always sustained herself with the hope of having her little sisters with her in the holidays. That this would be practicable at Canterbury, but would be impracticable at Chester. That she stood almost in the relation of a Mother to them. And that I could not find it in my heart to do more than place before her the comparative advantages of the two Schools, and leave her to her own selection. I said that I thought the other gentlemen interested in her, would be of the same mind.

Number Two then observed that she felt the kindness and propriety of this suggested course of proceeding but that she would like to communicate it to Mrs. Field, if I would allow her, before I spoke to Esther. She could write to Mrs. Field, she said, by that day's post; and write to me on Monday: receiving that Lady's answer in the meanwhile. In the interval, she would be glad if I would not mention my sentiments to Esther.

To this, I acceded. So I saw Esther, and told her I should like to consider for a day or two before I gave her any advice on the subject—but as she looked rather depressed and anxious, I added that it would be only advice, and I would leave her to decide for herself. At this she brightened up (a most excellent girl she is, and they greatly extol her); and I left her with the promise that I would see her again, on Monday or Tuesday.

Ever believe me | Dear Mrs. Mc Ian | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Mc Ian.

To ROBERT KEELEY, 25 AUGUST 1845

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Fifth August | 1845.

My Dear Sir

We are going to have a tiny pair of flats painted for that most tremendous play of ours, under our friend Stanfield's direction. As there is no very good place at Miss Kelly's for the purpose, Stanfield and I have thought of your Painting Room, at the Lyceum; and I write to beg the favor of your allowing them to be painted there.

I know you are very much engaged. Pray don't take the trouble of answering this, unless you desire to say 'No'. I shall take your silence as 'Yes'.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Keeley Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 27 AUGUST 1845

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

At Forster's | Wednesday 27th. August

My Dear George.

Have you received a letter I wrote you, last Saturday, and sent by the Day Mail to Margate?[†1] It contained a request to you to act in our projected play—the part of one Downright in Every Man in his Humour. So many days have elapsed since I wrote to you (in the meantime we have asked nobody of course) that we are fast approaching to a most intensely considerable fix. I shall be at home by 5 o'clock. In any case, pray let me see or hear from you, this evening.[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE,[†2] 27 AUGUST 1845

MS Berg Collection. Date: Forster's letter (see fn) is dated 27 Aug.

My Dear George. I add a line to Forster's "other side",[†3] to tell you what the project is. A little party of us have taken Miss Kelly's Theatre for the Night of the 20th of next month; and are going to act a play there, with correct and pretty costume—good orchestra—&c &c. The affair is strictly private. The admission will be by cards of Invitation—every man will have from 30 to 35—nobody can ask any person without the knowledge and sanction of the rest; any objection being final—and the expence to each (exclusive of the dress: which every man finds for himself) will not exceed two guineas. Forster plays. And I play. And Stone plays. And some of the Punch people play. Stanfield, having the Scenery and Carpenters to attend to, cannot manage his part also. It is "Downright" in Every Man in His Humour—not at all long, but very good[†4]—he wants you to take it. And so do we. We shall have a brilliant audience. The uphill part of the thing is already done—our next Rehearsal is next Tuesday—and if you will come in, you will find everything ready to your hand—and all very merry and pleasant.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FOWLER, 28 AUGUST 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: John Fowler Esquire | Mechanics' Institute | Sheffield.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thursday Twenty Eighth August | 1845.

Dear Sir.

I have deliberated for a few days on the subject of your letter: most sincerely wishing to give the Sheffield Mechanics' Institute the benefit of my poor assistance, if I could possibly arrange to visit the town at the time you propose. But though I should be so very near it on the twenty third of October, I cannot pledge myself with any degree of certainty—certainly not with the requisite degree of certainty—to come to you. Domestic reasons will oblige me to return home from Manchester with all possible dispatch; and will render my flying-visit even there, an anxious one.

Under other circumstances, I should have been truly glad of so favorable an opportunity of complying with the request of the Directors.

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

John Fowler Esquire

To JAMES MONTGOMERY,[†1] 28 AUGUST 1845*

MS Dickens House. Address: J. Montgomery Esquire | "The Mount" | near | Sheffield.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park
Twenty Eighth August 1845.

My Dear Sir.

I have had great pleasure, I assure you, in the receipt of your letter. It would have been a greater pleasure to me, if I could have hoped it would lead to a personal acquaintance between us at the time to which it refers. But, (as I have written Mr. Fowler to day) I cannot decide to come on to Sheffield from Manchester at that particular period; having special reasons for anxiety at home; and for making a rather ill-timed absence from it, as brief as possible.

If I had been wavering in my inclination to come, your persuasion—much weightier with me than the feather of the largest bird that flies—would have brought the scale down, heavily. But I am really disposed to make the visit; and would not hesitate a moment, on any lighter grounds than those which oblige me to deny myself that pleasure.[†2]

Believe me Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

J. Montgomery Esquire.

To T. J. SERLE, 29 AUGUST 1845

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Ninth August 1845.

My Dear Serle.

I set great store by your plain-spoken letter; which comes from the Man I know you to be: and is not addressed to an inconsiderate or regardless person, believe me.

Something seemed to lead me the other night, when I was with you, to a suspicion of the Truth. But having been away so long, I had no idea that anything of an unpleasant nature had arisen between you and Macready.[†1] I purposely alluded to him, to ascertain if my misgiving were well-founded.

I am quite concerned that I should have been a party to the request,[†2] under such circumstances. But your letter assures me that you absolve me from all blame. Therefore I merely state the fact of my entire ignorance to you, as a satisfaction to myself.

Ever My Dear Serle | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To FRANK STONE,[†3] 29 AUGUST 1845*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth August 1845 | Friday

My Dear Stone.

I don't know whether you will return to town before next Tuesday; but in case you should arrive in the interval, I deem it best to let you know that we rehearse that night, and previously dine at the Bedford[†4] at 4 o'Clock; when everybody brings his list of proposed Invitations, to the number of 2 or 3 and thirty each; and when the bills and cards of Invitation will be given out.

We have changed the night of acting, to Saturday the 20th. as Macready plays in Liverpool on the 15th. and begged hard for that much postponement.

Ever Yours
Bobadil

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [31 AUGUST 1845]

MS British Museum. Date: PM 31 Aug 45. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Broadstairs | Sunday Afternoon

My Dear Kate.

I found the darlings all well and happy—looking very brown, and in the most robust health. Chickenstalker is beyond all question a size larger. The sea was so very rough, that the Boat couldn't come off; and we were carried on to Ramsgate. As we entered Broadstairs in a Fly, we came upon the Babbies in a cornfield, plucking wheat. They have been to Ramsgate with us today: and returned in a carriage. They are coming to dessert, immediately.

We had a most abominable passage—the boat a mass of sour sickness from the head to the stern. I didn't come to that pass myself, but Maclise was extremely ill. It was[†1] intolerable. We have taken our places by coach to Dover, tomorrow Morning. I have no doubt, at present, that we shall return to town by the train at 6 from Dover. But in case we should not, and you should not see me until Tuesday Morning, take it for granted that we have decided, for some reason or other, to pass the night there.

We have seen nothing of Frederick[†2] or Thompson.[†3] I suppose they have not come down. Maclise sends his love to you and Georgy; and all the children add theirs.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I have my latch-key in my pocket. I have written in great haste, as I have been with the children all day, and had almost missed the Post. Best love to Georgy.

To DUDLEY COSTELLO, [LATE AUGUST 1845]

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, III (1917-18), 83. Date: presumably end of Aug, after Cattermole's refusal, and in time for the next rehearsal on 2 Sep; since accompanied "by a Note admitting him", clearly for the first rehearsal that Costello attended, when he would not yet be known at the theatre.

Inviting him to come to a rehearsal.

September

To W. C. MACREADY,[†4] 2 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second September 1845

My Dear Macready.

Do you think Bobadil is humble before the Justice,[†5] or still carrying it off in his swaggering way? Forster and I can't agree about it. I say, swagger before the Justice. He says, be completely hove down before the Legal presence. Now, what do you say?

Between you and me, and that Post which is in everybody's confidence, I don't think its a very good part, and I think the comedy anything but a very good play. It is such a damned thing to have all the people perpetually coming on to say their part, without any action to bring 'em in, or take 'em out, or keep 'em going.

Affectionately Ever

CD

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 2 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: With Two Books. | Dr. Southwood Smith | 38 Finsbury Square.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Second September 1845.

My Dear Dr. Smith

I have been to Broadstairs to see my children (who are staying there, a few weeks, with their nurses) or I should not have left your kind note so long unanswered.

It vexes me very much that I am engaged on Thursday. Otherwise, I need not say that it would have delighted me to come to you.

I shall send you—most likely tomorrow—an Invitation to some Private Theatricals on the 20th. I hope you will be able to accept it. They may amuse you, perhaps.

I forward you with this, two Transportation reports, at the request of our friend Mr. Chesterton.[†1] Very terrible books they are.[†2]

We are all quite well. Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their best regards to you. And I am Ever

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To THOMAS BEARD, 4 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Fourth September 1845.

My Dear Beard.

This will be presented to you by Mr. Sidney Blanchard—a son of poor Blanchard whom you knew; and to whose melancholy history you are no stranger.

He is anxious (as you may have already heard from Hazlitt, who is much interested in his behalf) to obtain an Engagement on the Herald, in some reporting capacity. He is not untried: having attended Railway Committees for the Globe in the course of last Session: and having given, as I am assured, every satisfaction.†1

You know how very much interested I am, my Dear Beard, in all that relates to this family—and if you can tender them any service in this regard, it will be the very greatest satisfaction to me. I need say no more; for I am sure it would be a satisfaction to yourself also.

I sent you a prodigiously formal and unique document†2 to Portland Place this morning.

Always My Dear Beard | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To WILLIAM HAZLITT,†3 4 SEPTEMBER 1845

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue Feb 1922; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 Sep 45.

I have given your young friend, a note to Beard: which I will back by the strongest personal recommendation. . . . It is very kind of you to interest yourself so actively in the matter.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 4 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fourth September

My Dear Fred

I will take of you—First Circle of Boxes Nos. 49, 50, 51, and 52. And I give you instead, in the same circle, Nos. 72 110, 111 and 112.

Affectionately always

CD

PS. I want, after the next Rehearsal, to go over your part with you, in your dress, almost every day. It strikes me you are still more at sea than you ought to be. What do you do with my names on your list? Have you sent out those cards?

Or do you leave them to me to send. I want exceedingly to know this, or I shall get into all sorts of difficulties.[†1]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 4 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fourth September

My Dear Mac.

I wish, if you can, you would come and dine with us again tomorrow at half past 5.[†2] Head the tailor is coming, and I want to have the benefit of your presence when I instruct him about the Cloak.

Ever Yours

CD

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 4 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth September 1845.

My Dear Tracey. The Bearer of this, is my Father. He is much interested in a curious case of Mysterious Disappearance[†3] which has occurred lately. So am I, from its singularity, though I don't know the party. He is anxious (I mean my father is) to have the benefit of your opinion. Will you kindly give it to him: being so competent to render valuable counsel in such a case?

Ever Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick[†4] Tracey Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 6 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth September 1845.

Dear Miss Kelly

I send you a bill[†5] and card[†6]—not because you will have any need of them, but in order that you may see that we have set forth your Theatre in due state, on each.

We shall want the Gas on, in the dressing-rooms on Tuesday Night, if you please. Also that trap-door opened, which admits of a communication below, between both sides of the stage.

Faithfully Yours

CD

Miss Kelly.

To ALFRED DICKENS, 8 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighth September 1845.

My Dear Alfred. It is some time since I received your letter dated Scarborough;[†1] but I have been very much engaged, in many ways; and am indeed at the best of times but a bad correspondent: having rather more letters to write, that must be written, than the Home Secretary.

There is no news in town of any sort or kind, except that the children are at Broadstairs, and that Fred seems to find a sort of dismal fascination in a windy spot called Mutrix Farm near Margate, where Mrs. Smithson has lodgings, and where he makes himself drowsy with bottled beer and great masses of meat, by the week together. Thompson was about to be married in a great hurry, but Mrs. Weller's mother (an ancient Lady, known in the family by the name of "Gran") threatens to die; and in that case, there will be a postponement of the Nuptials.[†2] With his usual odd frostiness of manner, he seems to me to be rather glad of it, than otherwise.[†3]

Supernatural exertions are being made for the Great Play which is to come off on the Twentieth. We have Scene Painters at work, touching up all the Scenery; and the dresses will really be very brilliant indeed. The actors rather disappoint me, so far. But they will improve perhaps, and come out better than I expect. If you should run up to London on this great occasion, I shall be happy to give you house-room.

Nothing whatever has been heard of young Birkenshaw;[†4] for whose mother I am sincerely sorry. Father goes about, identifying all the Male Bodies that turn up; and bearing enormous handbills in his pocket: together with a tremendously long document called a Statement of the Facts. Which he reads to Everybody. He is a sort of Private Coroner—sitting upon all the Fatal Accidents that happen, and cross-examining his witnesses (he summons all manner of Servant-girls and Policemen) with the greatest closeness.

Kate and Georgy send their loves. Always affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Alfred Dickens Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 8 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening 8th Septr. | 1845.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

No, no.—No audience tomorrow night. I am afraid my hand-writing has led you into a mistake. I do not want the Drawing-Room lighted by any means. The Dressing-Rooms are what I wrote about.

We will find time to speak together, tomorrow evening.

This Paper is no larger than yours.†1

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Tenth September | 1845.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I am deeply sensible, believe me, of your kind interest in my dear boy. I feel it as much as it is possible to feel anything. Far too much to thank you in written words like these. I am so painfully happy in your thoughtful remembrance of him, that I can only thank you from my inmost heart; and say that I am proud to place my trust in your considerate friendship.

I could do nothing better for him than to accept—I could do nothing half so good for him as to accept—your generous offer. My object is, to make him a good man and a wise one; and to place him in the best position I can help him to, for the exercise of his abilities and acquirements. Your help towards such an end is priceless to me, and to him. You could not (but you know it, I am sure) have done a more tender service.

He will be nine years old, next Twelfth Day. He had a Governess at home originally, and used to go to school, for half a year before we went to Italy, at a Mr. King's†2 at St. John's Wood. The gentleman is a good scholar, and has sons of Macready†1 and some other friends of ours.†2 Charley has returned to him, as a Day Boarder, since we came home; and while we were abroad, he had lessons at home in English and French, and so forth. I should not say that in small scholarship, he is very far advanced as yet, for I have been more solicitous, in the first instance, about his health than his study. But he is a child of a very uncommon capacity indeed; and I have no doubt (neither has his present Master) of his rapidly winning his way upward, in any school whatever. His natural talent is quite remarkable.

If you will let me know at what age he is presentable at Marlborough,[†3] and whether it is desirable that his attention should be directed in the meantime to any particular books or branches of learning—or if you can put me in the way of ascertaining these things from the Head Master by going down there, myself—or if you can, at your leisure, tell me anything that it is advisable or necessary to do—I need not say how vigilantly I shall set about it. But do not trouble yourself to write to me, unnecessarily. I shall be quite easy until I hear from you.

I was both surprised and grieved to find, by your preceding letter, that you were at all an Invalid; of which I had not the least idea. I hope that the repose and freshness of the Devonshire Coast, have done you good, already; and that your eyes have found many beautiful objects to refresh them.

When your letter reached me yesterday, I was on the point of writing to tell you (for I knew you would be gratified to hear) that Esther Elton, the eldest, in her training at the Normal School has uniformly conducted herself in a manner for which no praise could be too high; and has now the choice of two large schools in the Country—to one of which she will go, as Mistress, early in the Spring. I never in my life saw such gentle perserverance[†4] and steady goodness as this girl has displayed, from the first. Going into the establishment, a woman grown—with her character already formed, and her habits adapted, as one would have thought, to the easy kind of life she had led, as her poor father's poor housekeeper—she settled herself at once, resolutely, to the discipline and hardwork of the place; and has never turned from it, for one moment, though it has involved her separation from her little sisters, to whom she feels as a mother—her resignation of all her old society—her self-denial in a hundred ways, in all the ways of her previous life. I regard it really as an instance of patient womanly devotion; a little piece of quiet, unpretending, domestic heroism; of a most affecting and interesting kind. And if you could see her, with her pleasant face, and her neat, composed, agreeable manner, you would recollect that time when you gave me a commission in behalf of herself and the others, with such an emotion as very few people can ever know.[†1]

My Dear Miss Coutts I will not thank you again, nor will I say for Charley's Mama, all that she wants me to say. No one can imagine it, better than you.

Believe me Ever | Yours most faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I beg my best regards to Miss Meredith—by which name I always call her, whether I will or no. I am quite sorry you and she are not in town to see the Play on Saturday Week; being pretty sure it would have amused you.

To JOHN LEECH, 10 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith. Date: PM 10 Sep 45.

REHEARSAL CALLS.

Tuesday 16th. at ¼ before 7

Not Dress

_____

Thursday 18th. at 6 (To allow time for dressing)

Dress

_____

Friday 19th. at ¼ before 7

Not Dress

_____

John Leech Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 10 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Huntington Library.

REHEARSAL CALLS.

Tuesday 16th. at ¼ before 7

Not Dress

_____

Thursday 18th. at 6 (To allow time for dressing)

Dress

_____

Friday 19th. at ¼ before 7

Not Dress

_____

T. J. Thompson Esqre.

(Over)

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth Septr. 1845

My Dear Thompson. I will send for your table next Tuesday Morning. I shall want Wallace[†1] to be in attendance, if you please, at 6 on the Friday Evening (the night before the Play) to receive his instructions and be shewn the seats.

Ever Yours

CD

To JOHN WILLMOTT, [?10 SEPTEMBER 1845]

Text from Birmingham Gazette and Express, 30 Apr 1904, taken from MS Memorial Library, Stratford (since mislaid). Date: clearly the week before the dress-rehearsal; probably when collecting properties, as in To Thompson, 10 Sep.

I want a couple of stage cudgels made. I don't know the technical name for them (or I have forgotten it),[†2] but you know what I mean—a sort of flexible sausage to beat a man with, that seems to hurt him very much but doesn't. I have no doubt there is some genius at your elbow who will manufacture them in no time. Will you give him the commission and tell him to let me have them this week with a note of his charge for them? So may you prosper and flourish for ever!

Some of my company say that as the night approaches they begin to feel like used-up cab horses—going perceptibly at the knees. One of them has gone on the cold water system to make himself courageous.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S.—Good long cudgels, as long as walking-sticks.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 11 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Eleventh September | 1845.

My Dear Mac.

Many thanks! The hat is gone to be altered; and the belt to be buckled. I fear spurs: having a great dread of their coming in my way. But I will think of them.

I do not so clearly see how to adopt your suggestion in reference to the trousers. Which I find, on looking to the books, are perfectly correct "Spanish slops".[†1] But you shall shew me practically, if you will, next Sunday.

What a man Stone is! ! ! I went through some of my books of Authority[†2] last night, because I was confident that I knew at least as well as he; and that he had made preposterous objections, without a shadow of reason. He pulled up Frederick's boots, like Wellington's. They were worn so low at the exact period of this Play, that they are described in the Gull's Horn Book,[†3] as often having the fringe of the part turned over, trailing on the ground. He objected to gloves with large gauntlet tops—"There was no such thing at that day. Nothing of the sort".—The tops of the gloves were made so large and wide, that it was a common practice to carry letters and such small papers in them. Why, isn't it a lamentable thing, Grandsire,[†4] that a man should bore one so, and be wrong all the time?

I will very likely give you a call sometime this morning.

Ever Yours
CD

To LADY HOLLAND, [?10-15 SEPTEMBER 1845]*

Extract from copy[†5] in Holland House Dinner Book (MS British Museum), followed by "The above is Mr Dickens's account of them, which he wrote to My Lady". Date: between 10 and 15 Sep, since Lady Holland gave her son many of these particulars in a letter of 15 Sep (MS BM), but did not mention the theatricals on 9 Sep.

Every Man In His Humour

Old Knowell. Mr. Mayhew. Punch Writer

Edward Knowell. Frederick Dickens

Brainworm. Mark Lemon. Punch writer

George Downright. Dudley Costello (an author)

Wellbred. Thompson (a private Gentleman)

Kitely. Forster[†6]

Captain Bobadil. Charles Dickens

Master Stephen. Douglas Jerrold. Punch Writer of "Mrs. Caudle" Punch's

Letters to his Son &c. &c. &c.

Master Mathew—Leech Punch Caricaturist He has done all their famous things—Lord Brougham as Clown; and so forth.

Thomas Cash—Augustus Dickens

Oliver Cob. Leigh. Punch Writer

Justice Clement. Frank Stone. Artist

Roger Formal. Evans. My Printer.

William—A'Becket.[†1] Punch Writer The Comic Blackstone &c &c

James—Mr. Jerrold's son

Dame Kitely—Miss Fortescue (from the Haymarket)

The two other Ladies, two of Miss Kelly's pupils.

A Good Night's Rest.

Mr. Snobbington—Mr. C. Dickens

The Stranger—Mr. Lemon again

The Company includes all the Punch corps with the exception of one gentleman. We chose them because they are so well accustomed to act in concert good humouredly.—

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 15 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Fifteenth September 1845.

My Dear Sir

I called in Great Russell Street to day, to ask, under the seal of Literary-Fund-confidence, if you know anything of Mr. Frederick Tolfrey,[†2] who has published two books, the Sportsman in France and the Sportsman in Canada; and who has written in several of the Magazines.[†3] I am deputed to make enquiry about this gentleman privately, if I possibly can, by one to whom he has written for some temporary assistance, and I really don't know how to do it; so I catch at the possibility of your knowing something of him.

My Dear Sir Faithfully | Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 15 SEPTEMBER 1845

Mention in Morris Book Shop Inc. catalogue, n.d.; MS 1 p.; dated 15 Sep 45.

Acknowledging receipt of payments.[†1]

To T. J. SERLE, 16 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS[†2] Mr Peter Brandt.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Sept. 16th. 1845.

My dear Serle,

There will probably be many carriages in Dean Street on Saturday night; and the half hour mentioned in the bill as the time for sitting down is so very short, that the door will be opened at half past 6, instead of seven.[†3] I think it best to tell you, that if you can manage to be there before seven, you will certainly enter more comfortably.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth September 1845.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Immediately on the receipt of your letter, I set about enquiring into the reputation of Mr. Tolfrey. And as I knew nothing of him myself, and was even unacquainted with his name, I went away to the office of the Literary Fund (I am one of its Managing Committee); where I knew I should hear the Truth about him, if he had ever applied for assistance there; and where I knew my enquiry, in any case, would be strictly confidential; secrecy being one of the main principles of the Establishment.

I found, to my disappointment, that it being Vacation time, the Secretary (an excellent and charitable gentleman) was out of town. But I wrote to him straightway; and here is his letter in reply. I should decidedly say, on such evidence, that Mr. Tolfrey is not a fit subject for your generous aid. If his story be true, his bookseller will certainly purchase a Second Edition of his book from him. If his story be untrue, a Second Edition (supposing him to apply the money, if he got it from you, in its publication) would be mere waste paper.[†1] The Second Edition being all sold, would, certainly, be much more profitable to him if he published it on his own account, than if he made a bargain with Bentley, Colburn, or any other Shark of those Waters. But I can hear nothing of the book. And I do not believe its success warrants any such presumption.

A slight thing may turn the scale when the balance is going very plainly one way. I did not like his mention of his "revered and lamented father", and his "beloved mother" in his letter to you. A man who is quite in earnest, can afford to leave his estimation of his parents, I think, to the understanding of his reader.

At the same time, if you be inclined to advance him the money, I need not say that I will give it him with the greatest caution, and in the most considerate manner. All I wish to say against it, is, that I think I would not give it him, if I were you.

With a smaller sum, my dear Miss Coutts, I think I can do, on your behalf, an infinitely greater service. George Cruikshank came to me some weeks ago, and told me the facts of the melancholy little history I am going to state to you. He asked me if I thought I could influence any rich friend in the sufferer's behalf. You were not in the way. I do not know that I should have had the courage to come to you, if you had been. And I told him No; I could not then; but if I ever could, I would. I should premise that Cruikshank is one of the best creatures in the World, in his own odd way (he is a live Caricature himself); and that to the extent of his means, he has rendered assistance here, already, from his own purse.

I don't know if you ever saw a book called "Mornings at Bow Street". It is a collection of Bow Street reports that appeared, years and years ago, in the Morning Herald; and did the paper immense service at that time. The writer is a Mr. White,[†2] who from that time, until very recently, has been connected with the Herald as one of its Sub-Editors. The paper changed hands[†3] within this Year and a Half, or so—he was not wanted in the new arrangements—and at 60 years of age was suddenly discharged, with a month's Salary, from the Establishment that had not only been his income but his whole prospect; for he thought himself (quite naturally) a leaf of the tree, and believed he would never be shaken off until he died. He had lived upon his salary, but had done no more—I really don't see how he could have done more—and this was a blow, as if his Bank had failed, or he had become paralyzed.

His daughter had been engaged to be married, Fourteen Years. Her lover was not rich—was fighting his way, very slowly, to the Bar—and they had always said they would be married, when he was 'called'. After all these many years, he was called, at last; and her wedding clothes were being made, when one night (just at the time of his discharge), after they had been to the opera together, he went home to his chambers and was seized with congestion of the Brain.

In a very few hours she was sent for. If she wished to see him before he died, the Message said, she must come without delay. She was taken down to the Adelphi (where the chambers were) by her mother; and they arrived in the Bedroom, just in time to see him die. Quite frantic, she ran out of the chamber; opened a window, four tall stories high; and plunged herself, head-foremost, from it! By a kind of miracle, she fell into a tank of water at the back of one of the neighbouring houses; and was taken out, insensible, but unhurt. Since that time, she has been watched, day and night. Her mother has never been told the Truth, but the father knows it. The poor girl sits all day in a sort of dream, repeating little scraps of comfort from the Bible. She has never shed a tear.

The wretched father is oppressed with some small debts. But they are very small; and if he could release his plate, which he has pawned for Thirty Pounds, I have no doubt Cruikshank could compound for every one of them with the produce of its Sale; and then he could, with an easier mind, seek some employment: or at the worst, go away to live with his son[†1] who is a poor Curate[†2]—I think—in Wales. My dear Miss Coutts, these are all miserable facts within my knowledge. Thirty Pounds here, will be like Help from Heaven. There is no possibility of imposition; Cruikshank has known the parties twenty years[†3] at least; and the circumstances surely are peculiarly affecting and distressful.

My letter is so long already that I will tell you of the other Eltons in my next. We have never had the least trouble with them; and they are all as well, as happy, and as full of promise—thank God for it!—as we could possibly desire.

With best regards to Miss Meredith

Believe me Dear Miss Coutts Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 17 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace

Wednesday Evening | Seventeenth September 1845.

My Dear Stanny

You will have seen Rainey[†4] (as I have understood from him) before this reaches you. I have a suggestion to make, for getting out of the supper business much more simply and safely. For this purpose, I will drive to you tomorrow Morning at half past 11, when perhaps you can ride down with me to Lemon, and discuss it.

Ever Yours

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 18 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Eighteenth September 1845.

My Dear Macready. We hold a little supper Sir, after the Farce, at No. 9 Powis Place Great Ormond Street, in an empty house belonging to one of the company.[†1] There, I am requested by my fellows to beg the favor of thy company, and that of Mrs. Macready. The guests are limited to the actors and their ladies,—with the exception of yourselves, and D'Orsay, and George Cattermole,[†2] "or so"—that sounds like Bobadil a little.[†3]

I am going to adopt your reading of the Fifth Act, with the worst grace in the World.[†4] It seems to me that you don't allow enough for Bobadil having been frequently beaten before—as I have no doubt he had been. The part goes down, hideously, on this construction; and the end is mere lees. But never mind Sir. I intend bringing you up with the Farce, in the most brilliant manner.

Ever Yours affectionately

CD

N.B. Observe. I think of changing my present mode of life, and am open to an engagement.

NB. No. 2. I will undertake not to play Tragedy, though Passion is my strength.

(over)

N.B. No. 3. I consider myself a chained lion.[†5]

To MISS MACREADY,[†6] 18 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth September 1845.

My Dear Miss Macready.

Macready's Box will hold—let me see—Miss Kelly would say, Forty, but I should really think Six. It is the best, for seeing, in the house, of course. And in case any of the Six should prove to be at a disadvantage in that respect, there is standing-room behind the First Circle of Boxes, which is really the best place in the little Theatre.

I am half dead with Managerial work—and with actual work in shirt sleeves; with a dirty face, a hammer, and a bag of Nails. I never in my life saw a place in such a state, or had to do with such an utterly careless and unbusiness-like set of dogs (with the exception of Stanfield and Brainworm) as my fellow actors. I don't except Forster:[†1] for so far as he is concerned, there is nothing in the World but Kitely[†2]—there is no World at all; only a something in its place that begins with a "K" and ends with a "Y".

I enclose a note for Macready when he arrives. Ever My Dear Miss Macready

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS MACREADY, [?18 SEPTEMBER 1845]

MS Auckland Public Library. Date: evidently later on same day as last.

Devonshire T | Thursday

My Dear Miss Macready

It is rather difficult—adjoining each other, I fear it can't be done. But anything connected with the House of Macready is quite a special thing; and if you will send me the names of the parties[†3] (soon:—I am going out to the Theatre in an hour) I will make such prodigious efforts as become an energetic Stage Manager. And you shall hear from me, tomorrow Morning.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Some of the actors say that as the Night draws on, they feel themselves going at the knees![†1]

To RICHARD LANE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1845

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1933; MS 1 p.; dated 19 Sep 45; probably the same as mention and summary in Sotheran's Price Current of Literature, No. 822 (1931) of letter to "N. I. Lane" from Devonshire Terrace.

Stating that he is sending him an invitation card.

To SYDNEY WILLIAMS,[†2] 19 SEPTEMBER 1845

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 451 (1924); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Sep 45.

Arranging for Williams to visit him. Mr. Dickens will not be enabled at that time to conclude any negotiations with Mr. Williams; but he will be happy to understand the nature of Mr. Williams' proposal.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 22 SEPTEMBER 1845†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean St.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Twenty Second September | 1845.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

If you will have the kindness to get us a note of our expences for Carpenters and Gas &c, and to send it by post to Mr. Stanfield, we shall be happy to square accounts immediately. [†a]I am desirous to settle them without delay.[†a]

I hope you are none the worse for your anxiety and your exertions. They were both very great, I am afraid, [†b]at last.[†b†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [24 SEPTEMBER 1845]

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed "24/9/1845", which is consistent with To Miss Coutts, 17 Sep 45.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday

My Dear Miss Coutts. I return you Mr. Tolfrey's letter.

A thousand thanks on behalf of Mr. White. I have rigidly observed your injunctions; and will write you fully about that poor girl, when I have settled the adjustment of the Fifty Pounds.[†2] Suffice it to say at this moment that I hope to be able to make such lasting use of it, as will delight your generous Heart. She is much better.

Where shall I write to you? I shall be glad to know at your perfect leisure.

Ever believe me
With the truest regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To T. J. SERLE, 24 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth September 1845.

My Dear Serle

I was in Managerial agonies at the Theatre, all day on Saturday; and did not receive your letter until a very short time before the Curtain rose. I am extremely sorry you were not there, as I really counted on your worship's presence: setting a high value on your opinion.

I waited and waited on behalf of Mr. Novello,[†3] thinking it certain that out of more than five hundred people, some would send their tickets back, at the last moment. But it never came to pass. And I was powerless.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To ALEXANDER SMART,[†1] 24 SEPTEMBER 1845*

MS Yale University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth September 1845.

Dear Sir

I have had the truest pleasure in the perusal of your gentle little book; so feelingly and well described by my dear friend Lord Jeffrey.[†2]

I thank you cordially, for your remembrance of me—enhanced in value by the kind expressions in your note; by which I set great store.

I am Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Alexander Smart Esquire

To DR J. A. WILSON,[†3] 24 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Mrs Humphry House.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth September 1845.

Dear Sir

I perfectly recollect your obliging communication some years ago.

If we should repeat Every Man in his Humour to a Private audience, I shall be happy to send you an Invitation. But we have no plan or idea of doing so, at this time, that I know of. And I should certainly, in my managerial capacity, have early knowledge of any such intention.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 26 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS New York Public Library): A Monsieur | M. Le Comte D'Orsay | Gore House | Kensington.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth September 1845.

My Dear Count D'Orsay

Can you, and will you, come to dine with me on Wednesday next at 6 o'Clock? I have a Mr. Ridgway coming, who is a great man at Naples now-a-days, and is the Receiver General of all distinguished travellers, both there, and at the Lake of Como, where he has a beautiful Villa. He is a bit of a Bore, but can be swamped, easily.

I am under orders for Rosherville,[†1] remember, and shall be punctual to any summons you give me.[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
Bobadil

To LORD DUDLEY COUTTS STUART, [?26 SEPTEMBER 1845]*

MS The Earl of Harrowby. Date: endorsed "1845—Autumn"; handwriting supports; Oct ruled out by other engagements and Catherine's health; 26 Sep the most likely Sep date.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Lord Dudley

It will be the greatest pleasure to Mrs. Dickens and myself, if you will come and join our Family Dinner next Sunday at Six. Will you?

If this should find you otherwise engaged or out of town, I shall retire into the Wilderness: bereft of all hope of ever setting eyes on you again.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Dudley Stuart

To MADAME DE LA RUE, 27 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: North Italy. | A Madame: | Madame Emile De la Rue | Monsieur Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genoa | North Italy.

Devonshire Terrace, Saturday Twenty Seventh September 1845.

My Dearest Madame De la Rue. I received your letter last Monday Morning, when I was still in a whirl from the uproar of Saturday Night. But I expected it fully—had half expected it, indeed, on Saturday—and went down to the Theatre after post-time on Saturday Morning, a little disappointed by its non-arrival. So you see that occupation only makes this difference in me—I am rather damped for the time being, if you are not, in some sort, a sharer in it.

Good Heaven how I wish you could have been there! It really was a brilliant sight. The audience so distinguished for one thing or another—every one so elegantly dressed—all in such a state of excitement and expectation.[†1] As to the acting, modesty forbids me to say more than that it has been the town talk ever since.[†2] I have known nothing short of a Murder, to make such a noise before. We are overwhelmed with invitations, applications, petitions, and Memorials, for a repetition of the Performance; and on the night it was as much as we could do, with a strong body of Police, to keep the doors from being carried by force. It got into the Papers, notwithstanding all our precautions;[†3] and I sent you a Times[†4] the other day, with some account of the proceedings. I hope it reached you safely.

We numbered every seat in the House; and assigned each by lot. I am afraid Miss Holskamp[†5] (whose brother and sister I invited also) had a bad place; for it was in the upper boxes, and looked down, rather awkwardly, upon the stage. I have not seen her since, but I hope she either has given, or will give you, some account of the Evening. The Duke of Devonshire travelled a couple of hundred miles, in one direction, to be present; and Alfred Tennyson (our friend) travelled a couple of hundred miles in another.[†1] So the attraction spread itself to all sorts and conditions of men. We newly painted all the scenery; newly-carpentered all the Machinery; had the dresses (they were bright colors you may be sure, to please my Managerial eye) made expressly, from old pictures; and worked away at it, rehearsing and rehearsing, night after night, and day after day, as if it were the whole business of our lives. But I have always had a misgiving,[†2] in my inmost heart, that I was born to be the Manager of a Theatre. And now, I am quite sure of it. I send you a bill, as a little Curiosity. There are whispers of Gold snuff-boxes for the indefatigable Manager, from the Performers—Hem!

And Gaberel is going to be married at last!!! I am glad of it. Though I find that native obstinacy of yours, in full force on the subject, still! I don't think he is exactly the man to fall in love with—I agree with you, there. But there is a vulgar saying in England "Wot's the odds so long as you're happy!" And perhaps the Bride elect starts from that point, and adopts that line of argument. When I think of the possible consequences—of little gaspers like Papa—or apple-faced Maniacs like Grandpapa—a chill runs through my blood. It is a dreadful thought.

Ridgway came in the other night (last Thursday) with his hair still crisp with yolk of egg, and his tongue still glib on the theme of certain Counts and Countesses who have been visiting his Cook—himself I should say—at the Lake of Como. He dines here, next Wednesday; and contemplates a three weeks' stay in London. I heard from Walton the other day (do you remember an evening of intoxicating and rapturous excitement, we once passed at Carrara?) who tells me he has been nearly married, and "is not out of danger yet". Una bellissima Signora, he adds—and underlines it, a great many times.

If the Champion[†3] has the benefit of my good wishes, you will never get that box; for she will certainly go down in some deep water. Confound her tardy, lagging, miserable pace! I never was so vexed as by the loss of that first Steamer; for your impatience to receive the box, is nothing to that with which I burn to know that you have got it. Tell De la Rue that I will write to him immediately after the receipt of that mysterious package, which I will open in this Study of mine, with my own careful hands. You have made me desperately anxious to know what on earth it can contain. Whatever it be, as a remembrance from him, it will be very precious to me.

As to the Examiner, I have risen into the Seventh Heaven of indignant wonder, since I learnt from you, that it has ever miscarried. It has always been sent. Do not fail to let me know, if it should ever fail again. For in that case I will bestow a little of my superfluous indignation on the General Post office. The Examiner reminds me of Forster, who is quite well, and played admirably the other night—though he imitated Macready too much. I suspect Macready thought so; and would have been better pleased, if the resemblance had been less near.[†1] Talking of him, reminds me of Maclise, who is exactly in his old state; from which he has in nothing, made any departure, except in being so nervous when the Overture to the Comedy was playing, the other night, that he turned a deadly white, and had nearly fainted away. Georgy is very well, and takes long country walks with me.—She is quite happy, I think. And I have left that matter where it was; trusting to its wearing itself out, on her part, in due course.[†2]

The affair at Manchester is on the Twenty Third of October. I suppose there will be an audience of some Two Thousand people. I will look into the local papers, and send you the best report I see. I have been much solicited to go to Sheffield at the same time, and to Birmingham; and have had other public receptions tendered to me, both in the Country and in London. But I have declined them; firstly, because I would rather be quiet; and secondly because I am now composing myself to write my little Christmas book. I shall be actually at work upon it, I hope, when you receive this; and for a month afterwards, most likely. Christmas turned, you will see me, in the bloom of Print again, pretty often.[†3]

I have forgotten to say in its right place that I took the glass you gave me, to the Theatre, in my Portmanteau of Costumes; and drank a bottle of old Sherry from it, in my dressing-Room, at divers fatiguing periods of the Evening. And I drank to you, in a great black wig, and with a peaked beard and black moustache —all stuck on, singly, by the individual hair! I had a dresser from one of the large Theatres to do it; and I never was so much astonished in my life as at the time it took. After I was beaten, I had all this taken off (an idea of my own) and put on lank and straight—the moustache, which had curled up towards the eyes, turned drooping down—and every hair dishevelled. You never saw such a Devil. But I wore real armour on my throat and breast; and most enormous boots and spurs—and looked like an old Spanish Portrait, I assure you. Maclise is going to paint the figure, as an ideal one; and I have sat to him already, in the Dress.[†1] I am constantly reverting to this Play, I find; but only because I know you will like to hear whatever I happen to remember about it. It is not unlikely we may act again—some other play—at Christmas. Mr. Lemon, the Editor of Punch, who played Brainworm in the Comedy, and acted with me in the Farce, is an excellent actor. But everybody's understanding of what he was about, and what the author meant, was truly interesting in a very high degree.

Dear Madame De la Rue, I didn't wear the slippers! I couldn't find it in my heart to drag them through the dirt and destruction of a Theatre. Here they are, every morning on the rug—giving me as great a start, sometimes, when they catch my eye, as the footprint on the sand caused Robinson Crusoe—and carrying me back to Genoa at a greater pace than ever seven-league boots went. I have a new picture of the Peschiere; painted by a friend of my brother's[†2] who came to see us there; and very well done. It hangs upon the staircase, just outside my bedroom door. The last thing at night, and the first thing in the morning, I see the Peschiere—and all day long, besides; for there is another in my room here. What would I give to see you, too? I carry you about with me in the shape of a Purse; and though that pocket is in a very tender place—breast pocket—left hand side—I carry you about in tenderer places still, in your own image which will never fade or change to me, come what may. Ever Yours affecy. CD. P.S. Children at home and thriving. All well. Kate and Georgy send their loves. Both "going" to write.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 27 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS University of Kentucky.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh September 1845.

My Dear Stanny

I return you the Pipe,[†3] with many thanks.

You recollect that we meet at Forster's to day, at 3, to settle the accounts. A chop afterwards, I suppose, and some illegitimate Theatricals?

Have you received the statement of the Gas? If you have not, I will send down to Miss Kelly, myself, on receiving a word from you to that effect.

Ever Faithfully

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 29 SEPTEMBER 1845†

MS Clark Memorial Library, University of California. Address: Messrs. Bradbury and Evans | Whitefriars | Fleet Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Ninth September 1845.

My Dear B and E.

I think it is time we determined how the Xmas book†1 shall be illustrated. If you deem it advisable to have it done as expensively as the Chimes, it may be as well to communicate with Messrs. Leech and Doyle, and prepare them for what they will have to do. I have already given Mr. Maclise to understand that he must let me know, this week, whether he will do the Frontispiece.†2

†aAs soon as you have done those Chimes accounts, I shall be glad to swell my balance with the result.†3 When we settle them, I have to credit you with a small amount in right of the Carol. I have C and H's accounts, in a great deal of red and black ink, all duly ruled and rendered.†a†4

I have seen George Cruikshank in reference to the Oliver Twist cover,†5 which he is more than ready to do. It is clear it would never have done to have handed it on to anybody else. †bIt may be a wholesome reminder to send him a Block in the course of the next few days.†b

I am in the preliminary seclusion and ill-temper of the Xmas book. You will find me at home, any morning.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans

To THOMAS POWELL, 29 SEPTEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth September 1845.

My Dear Powell.

I have no doubt whatever, from the botheration I daily undergo on the subject of more performances, that the Theatre could be immediately filled at a Guinea a head, for the repetition of Every Man In His Humour. But I have a great doubt whether the Company in general would like to play to that kind of audience; and I am not at all clear that I should like it myself. I acted to a General audience in Canada, once—But that is far away, and quite another thing.

In case you should not, in the fulness of time, hear anything more from me on this subject, you may conclude that it is not feasible. Every one concerned, however, has, I do really believe, the strongest possible interest in behalf of the Sanatorium.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Powell Esquire

P.S. I think a letter from Southwood Smith, or from some of the Committee addressed to me as Manager would be the best mode of bringing it before the Body of Amateurs, if you really desire that they should consider it in a business-like way.

To MR ELLIS,[†1] 30 SEPTEMBER 1845†

MS Mr Alan G. Thomas.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate Regents Park
Thirtieth September 1845.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ellis, and begs, on behalf of the gentlemen engaged in the Amateur Performance at Miss Kelly's Theatre, to enclose him a cheque for Eight Guineas. [†a]He will be glad to learn that it is a sufficient remuneration to Mr. Ellis for his time and trouble.[†a]

To W. S. LANDOR, 30 SEPTEMBER 1845

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 9 Feb 1901; MS 2 pp.; dated 30 Sep 45.

Your Godson[†2] flourishes. My ladies say they don't object to receive any amount of love you may forward but they question whether you have much to send.

October

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 1 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | First October 1845.

My Dear George. Don't let me take away your breath with too sudden a question—but can you come and dine with me today[†3] at 6?

I have made up a small table, suddenly, for an Englishman from Naples,[†4] who keeps great state there, and shewed me extreme attention. Count D'Orsay is coming, who wishes very much to know you better. Stanfield, Maclise, and ourselves are the rest of the party.

Ever Yours
CD.

Stretch a point if needful and say Yes.

To FRANK STONE, 1 OCTOBER 1845*

MS[†1] Benoliel Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | October 1st. 1845

My Dear Stone

I beg to inform you that the whole of the Accounts arising out of the Play, have been got in and paid; and that your share of the gross expences (including the supper and every incidental charge) amounts to £10..4..0 which you can forward to me, if you please, at your convenience.

The cost of a repetition of the Comedy and Farce, would be about £3 to each of us.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 1 OCTOBER 1845

MS[†2] Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | October 1st. 1845

My Dear Thompson

I beg to inform you that the whole of the accounts arising out of the Play, have been got in and paid; and that your share of the gross expences (including the supper and every incidental charge) amounts to £10..4..0 which you can forward to me, if you please, at your convenience.

The cost of a repetition of the Comedy and Farce, would be about £3 to each of us.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

Wilson the Hair dresser[†3] (nearly opposite Chapman and Hall's in the Strand) has got your great coat and cigar case.

To CHARLES EATON,[†1] 1 OCTOBER 1845

MS[†2] Benoliel Collection. Address: Charles Eaton Esquire.

1 Devonshire Terrace | October 1st. 1845

My Dear Sir

I beg to inform you that the whole of the accounts arising out of the Play, have been got in and paid; and that your share of the gross expences (including the supper and every incidental charge) amounts to £3..14..0 which you can forward to me, if you please, at your convenience.

The cost of a repetition of the Comedy and Farce, would be about £3 to each of us.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Eaton Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 1 and 2 OCTOBER 1845

MS[†3] Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

1 Devonshire Terrace | October 1st. 1845

My Dear Leech

I beg to inform you that the whole of the accounts arising out of the Play, have been got in and paid; and that your share of the gross expences (including the supper and every incidental charge) amounts to £10..4..0 which you can forward to me, if you please, at your convenience.

The cost of a repetition of the Comedy and Farce, would be about £3 to each of us.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

Devonshire Terrace | Second October 1845.

My Dear Leech.

To my business note to you, and enclosure for your brother in law, I add a line to say that I hope I may again count on your assistance in my little Christmas Book. I am now settling myself to work; and hope in ten days or so, to be in a condition to wind you up and set you going.

If you are in the mood, therefore, to illustrate my poor fancies, we will hold discourse together on the subject, in about that time. We intend publishing earlier than usual, this Year.[†4]

Ever Yours
CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 2 OCTOBER 1845

Text from MDGH, I, 144-5.

Devonshire Terrace, October 2nd, 1845.

My dear Stanny,

I send you the claret jug.[†1] But for a mistake, you would have received the little remembrance almost immediately after my return from abroad.

I need not say how much I should value another little sketch[†2] from your extraordinary hand in this year's small volume, to which Mac again does the frontispiece. But I cannot hear of it, and will not have it (though the gratification of such aid, to me, is really beyond all expression), unless you will so far consent to make it a matter of business as to receive, without asking any questions, a cheque in return from the publishers. Do not misunderstand me—though I am not afraid there is much danger of your doing so, for between us misunderstanding is, I hope, not easy. I know perfectly well that nothing can pay you for the devotion of any portion of your time to such a use of your art. I know perfectly well that no terms would induce you to go out of your way, in such a regard, for perhaps anybody else. I cannot, nor do I desire to, vanquish the friendly obligation which help from you imposes on me. But I am not the sole proprietor of these little books; and it would be monstrous in you if you were to dream of putting a scratch into a second one without some shadowy reference to the other partners, ten thousand times more monstrous in me if any consideration on earth could induce me to permit it, which nothing will or shall.

So, see what it comes to. If you will do me a favour on my terms it will be more acceptable to me, my dear Stanfield, than I can possibly tell you. If you will not be so generous, you deprive me of the satisfaction of receiving it at your hands, and shut me out from that possibility altogether. What a stony-hearted ruffian you must be in such a case!

Ever affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†3] 4 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Mr H. W. Woodward.

Devonshire Terrace. London | Saturday Fourth October | 1845.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ellis, and begs to say that himself and Mr. Forster are coming down to Brighton tomorrow, to remain at the Bedford until Monday; and that they will be obliged to Mr. Ellis if he will order two comfortable bedrooms to be reserved for them.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 4 OCTOBER 1845*

MS University of Texas. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire | 14 Russell Place.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth October 1845.

My Dear Mac.

A Thousand Thanks for your kind remembrance of that dinner-table promise.[†1] Nothing could be more brilliant than the knife and fork you sent. I wouldn't change them on any account.

There is an old superstition about knives—Nothing in it, I dare say—but I send you a halfpenny in payment.

Do not think so nonsensically[†2] about the value of your frontispiece.[†3] I can hardly believe you to be serious, when I know so much better, and so far above all possibility of dispute, what its value is.

I have had quite a noble note from Stanny: who, also, illustrates again. I will explain my idea to you, as soon as I have shaped it quite distinctly. You will find it a good subject, I think.

Has Forster told you that he and I are going to Brighton tomorrow—returning next day? You mean to bear us company, I hope? It is only a two hours' journey, now.

Affectionately Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Danial Maclise Esquire.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 4 OCTOBER 1845†

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Fourth October 1845.

My Dear Stanny.

[†a]I am touched to the quick by the kind heartiness of your letter. Heaven forbid that there should be any of that same dirty metal in the leaven of our friendship, ever![†a] The few grains I insist upon, are really not mine. From myself, I offer you nothing but Thanks.

As to the value and importance of your help—all I say on that score is, that you are a Pernicious old Humbug.

[†b]I shall hope, in a fortnight or so, to shew you something of the Tale. I am thinking still; but have not yet begun.[†b]

I should have made a point of coming to Liston's[†4] last night, had I not been engaged all day in some painful business of my friend Wellbred's; who, on the very eve of his marriage with a very beautiful girl—the ring purchased, wedding dresses made, and so forth—finds the whole contract shattered like Glass, in an instant, under the most inexplicable circumstances that ever distracted the head of "a mutual friend".

If you could have seen me yesterday, as the Acting Manager of this Drama (a domestic tragedy) you would have said Miss Kelly's was nothing to it. I am still up to the eyes in the miserable affair, but with no hope of a good end.[†1]

Ever Affectionately Yours | Dear Stanny
CHARLES DICKENS

Kate was very queer indeed, all night on Thursday. I thought of the Doctor several times. I was more than ever sorry to have left you so soon, when I heard from Toby[†2] and Mac, that Mrs. Stanfield sang in the most charming manner.[†3]

To [JOSEPH ELLIS], [6 OCTOBER 1845]*

MS Bodleian Library. Date: endorsed "6 October 1845" in unknown hand; clearly the day of their return. Address: from a collection of letters to Joseph Ellis.

Bedford Hotel Brighton | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your note, and at the same time to express my regret that we are off and away again, at too early an hour this morning, to admit of our accepting your kind Invitation.

Mr. Forster begs me to convey his compliments to you. And I am always
Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Night Sixth October | 1845.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I cannot but think that a letter of mine must have been overlooked at your house. The impression on my mind—an impression so very strong, that it amounts to everything but a moral certainty—is, that some days ago, I wrote to Stratton Street, acknowledging the safe receipt of the money, and telling you that I would write again and gratify you (I hoped) by saying how we had disposed of it—as soon as I had quite completed the business. I said in the same letter that the poor young lady was very greatly better—composed, and mentally resigned: placing her trust in a better World, and relying on a meeting there, in God's good time, with her lover. Nothing, surely, could induce me to believe that I wrote this letter, unless I had actually done so.[†1] I feel quite sure that I dispatched it to your house in town. The more I think of it; being usually very exact in such things; the more persuaded I am, that I wrote and sent it.

I will not fail to redeem that pledge of telling you the end of your benevolence, so far as it can now be ascertained, as soon as I know it myself.

I write in great haste, lest you should miss the second letter. Ever Dear Miss Coutts Yours most faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS COOPER,[†2] 7 OCTOBER 1845†

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh October 1845.

Dear Sir

I am sorry to say that I am not yet prepared to report to you upon your MS.[†3] I have been engaged for some days, in the endeavour to arrange some affairs of a distressing nature for a friend; and this business has left me no leisure whatever.

You can have access to your papers at any time you please, for the purpose of taking out the Verses. [†a]If you desire it, I can very easily send them to you. Let me know which you will prefer. I should have answered your letter without delay, but for my having been at Brighton.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Cooper Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 7 OCTOBER 1845

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 399 (1920); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 7 Oct 45. Address (envelope, MS Mr L. C. Staples): Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

By all means. If I do not see you here tomorrow between half past 2 and 3, I will call on you at ten minutes after the last-named hour.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 7 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Fitzwilliam Museum.

Devonshire Terrace.
Wednesday Evening | Seventh October 1845.

My Dear Fred.

I claim no right whatever to oppose your wishes. You ask me for my counsel: and I give it you. I do not expect you to take it, nor shall I be in the least offended if you do not. But I would earnestly advise you not to be hasty in rejecting it.

So far as I know myself, I think I have some reason to suppose that I am not accustomed to take "stern" views of any subject. That it is not my nature in any case. And that if I had a tendency that way it would be very unlikely to beset me in reference to any matter nearly concerning you.

Marriage, with your income, is a very serious affair.[†1] Something on the lady's part, would certainly be desirable. But failing that, (on which I do not lay extraordinary stress, as the affections are not commonly regulated by the pocket) I do hold it very essential that the family with which you connect yourself should seem, in what one knows of them, to give you some sort of warrant for trusting in them as good, straight-forward, agreeable persons—pleasant to associate with, when their freshness has gone off—commonly discreet and rational in ordinary life—and such good governors of themselves in their sentiments, sympathies, antipathies, and what not, as to render them reasonably likely to stand the wear and tear of Home-test; which brings all metal to the proof in a very searching manner.

I do not think the Wellers are this kind of people. I want odd phrases to express my meaning when I think of them. Perhaps I cannot express myself better than by saying they are, in my opinion, an "impracticable family." They don't seem to me to have any ballast. They are very amiable, but especially uncomfortable. They are feverish, restless, flighty, excitable, uncontrollable, wrong-headed; under no sort of wholesome self-restraint; and bred to think the absence of it a very intellectual and brilliant thing. The presence of this flutter and fever in anybody's house—but especially in a poor man's, with the world before him—is not the presence that would make it comfortable, rich, or happy.

Anna is very young—surely very young.[†1] I grant her good looks. I grant her cleverness (I think very highly of it); but I doubt her quiet wisdom in the quiet life to which you must inevitably retreat. I doubt whether that "Soul" of which the family make such frequent mention, may not be something too expansive for a domestic parlor—a little too vague for the defined and marked-out tenor of your way. I doubt whether she be in a condition to know her own mind, or your mind, or anything else, with any sort of distinctness, or with any enduring perception. The world about her seems to be a Great Electrifying Machine, from which she gets all sorts of unaccountable shocks and knocks and starts; and it seems to me to be an open question whether she will ever be shocked and knocked and started into a reasonable woman.

You will say, very naturally and with good reason, that I may be wrong in this, and how do I know it? But I may say, at least as naturally and with no less reason, that you may be wrong in your estimate, and how do you know better. When I went away to Italy, she was a mere child. Consider. Have your opportunities been so very numerous or good, that you can pronounce with any sort of clearness, on the dawning character half developed in her, since. These things of which I speak, are on the surface: broadly open to all observers. Have you been able to see so far below it, as to find the quiet source of all these eddies and currents?

The change in Thompson's affairs has, very naturally, hurried you on, it seems to me. For it has disturbed you in your opportunities of intercourse with her,[†2] and driven you into the devising of some new occasions. But do you believe you are so much attached to her, that you cannot withdraw now, if you will? And do you believe that your Heart is already shut up against all other comers? I have nothing in my mind but your Happiness. If I thought your Happiness would be secured by this pursuit, I would encourage you at all hazards. But the little foibles of the Wellers seem to me as dangerous to domestic peace as many graver—infinitely graver—faults would be. And I should be wanting in that affection for which you give me credit (not, I can sincerely say, without as good reason as ever a Brother had; for my love for you has always been a strong and true and tender one) if I did not entreat you to be cautious—to avoid all rash conclusion—and to look steadily along the far perspective of weary years to which one hasty moment may conduct you: shutting out retreat.

I have assumed that Anna may reciprocate your attachment—that the father may approve of it—that the weakness of the mother may happen to stagger into your side of the balance—that the commercial arithmetic of Mr. Shaw may find no flaw in your proposals—that nobody's Soul may make your probation a wretched and uncertain one—but think of all these chances my dear Fred. And whatever you resolve on (for I see the resolution lies with you at last) come and tell me what it is. If I cannot dissuade you from your purpose, I may guide you in its execution.

Ever Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 9 OCTOBER 1845

Text from Walter T. Spencer catalogue No. 104 (1901).

Devonshire Terrace, | Thursday, October Ninth, 1845.

My dear Dr. Smith,

I have appointed them to meet at Mr. Forster's room on Saturday, at half after Three. I believe Mr. Jerrold has a strong objection to playing to an audience who pay for their seats.[†1]

Ever yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 11 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Miss Doris Minards.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 11th. October 1845.

My Dear Fred.

I think you have an undoubted right to go to Weller's if you please; and that you are in no way compromised by the position of Thompson's affairs in reference to the family. But you must always remember that you are there, distinctly on your honor; and that you can carry no word, or letter, or communication of any kind, between the parties. This may become your difficulty.

Shall we see you tomorrow?

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To [W. C. MACREADY], 11 OCTOBER [1845]

Text from MDGH, I, 195. Date: 1845 was the only year when CD was acting in Every Man in his Humour and Macready playing Shakespeare in London. Address: clearly to Macready; headed "Another 'Bobadil' note" by MDGH and placed immediately after a letter to him in May 1848 in similar style. Reference to "twenty-first" confirms: see fn.

At Cobb's, a water-bearer, | October 11th.

I must tell you this, sir, I am no general man; but for William Shakespeare's sake[†2] (you may embrace it at what height of favour you please) I will communicate with you on the twenty-first,[†1] and do esteem you to be a gentleman of some parts—of a good many parts in truth. I love few words.[†2]

Bobadil[†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 11 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Cheltenham Ladies' College.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh October 1845.

My Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the Receipt of your kind letter. I have written an authority to the Bookseller, to receive the Copies of Eugene Aram from your Publisher;[†4] and will let you know what has been done with them, as soon as the business is arranged.

Faithfully Yours Dear Sir
CHARLES DICKENS

[ ][†5]

To JAMES EDWARDS,[†6] 12 OCTOBER 1845

Mention in American Art Association and Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 3854; MS 2 pp.; dated London, 12 Oct 45.

Concerning proposed visit to Manchester.

To THOMAS BEARD, [13] OCTOBER 1845

MS Dickens House. Date: Monday was 13 Oct. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twelfth October | 1845.

My Dear Beard. I have a confidential question to ask you. One that may rather amaze you.[†1] If you can come round to me tonight—do. If not—tomorrow Morning.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 17 OCTOBER 1845

Mention in N, I, 708; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 17 Oct 45, "enclosing £40 for investment".[†2] Probably belongs with envelope (MS Benoliel Collection), PM 18 Oct 45, addressed "George Cruikshank Esquire | Amwell Street | Pentonville".

To JOHN LEECH, 17 OCTOBER 1845

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth October 1845.

My Dear Leech. James Heywood[†3] is a man of great consideration in Manchester, and of great attainments. You must regard his invitation (Manchesterially speaking) as a great compliment. I have refused it: simply because I am beaten almost out of heart by all manner of occupations, and wouldn't be a Provincial Lion at this time, in a private way, for I don't know how many shares in the Great Grimsby Junction. No Master Mathew! Refuse James Heywood, and repair to an honest Inn with honest Gentlemen. Jerrold and I (and you) will start on Wednesday Morning somewhere about 9. I will tell you the exact hour when we meet at Macreadys on Tuesday.

Ever Heartily Yours
Bobadil

To THE DIRECTORS OF THE ATHENAEUM, MANCHESTER, 17 OCTOBER 1845

MS Chas J. Sawyer.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Night | Seventeenth October 1845.

Dear Sirs.

M. Eugene Sue[†4] has begged me to write to you, and acknowledge with many heartfelt thanks the receipt of your flattering Invitation.[†1] He requests me to assure you of his high and unfeigned sense of the honor you have done him; and earnestly entreats me to add that he is gratified by your recognition of him, a French Writer, in England—certainly beyond his power of expression in a foreign language, and to an extent not at all easy of expression in his own.

His state of health, however, does not admit of his attending the soirée at Manchester. He has been very unwell; and is enjoined to seek repose; in pursuance of which advice, he has already left Paris in search of temporary change and quiet.[†2]

If I could convey to you an adequate idea of M. Eugene Sue's anxiety that I should do my very best to thank you on his behalf, and to find "strong words" for that purpose, you would feel with me that your remembrance of him has met with a sincere and quick response.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Directors of The Athenaeum | Manchester.

To MACVEY NAPIER, 17 OCTOBER 1845

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth October 1845.

My Dear Sir

I must ask you for as broad a licence in respect of Time, as you can possibly allow me.[†3] I have been forced by a perfect multitude of unexpected distractions, both business and domestic, to postpone the beginning of my little Xmas book until within these few days; and it will occupy me (allowing for such interruptions as I cannot ward off) until late in November.

Never having written in the review, I find it difficult to speak precisely about Length. I should say 16 or 20 pages. Certainly not less I should imagine.

How late can you afford to let me be? I have a great desire to know.

Your opinion about Rape, coincides with Lord John Russell's, I believe.[†4]

I cannot bring myself to believe that any crime affects the broad philosophy of the question: still less a crime so very difficult of proof; so very easy to be charged: so perplexing of disentanglement from chances of palliation in the previous conduct of the woman—in her very looks and gestures. But I espy a way, I think, of not compromising you on this head. And you may rely on my being gentle and discreet.

Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier

To W. C. MACREADY, 17 OCTOBER 1845

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace

Friday Evening | Seventeenth October 1845.

My Dear Macready.

You once (only once) gave the World assurance of a Waistcoat. You wore it Sir—I think in "Money".[†1] It was a remarkable and precious Waistcoat wherein certain broad stripes of blue or purple, disported themselves as by a combination of extraordinary circumstances, too happy to occur again. I have seen it on your Manly chest in Private Life. I saw it, Sir, (I think) the other day, in the cold light of morning—with feelings easier to be imagined than described. Mr. Macready, Sir! Are you a father?[†2] If so, lend me that Waistcoat for five minutes. I am bidden to a wedding[†3] (where fathers are made); and my artist cannot, I find (how should he?) imagine such a waistcoat. Let me shew it to him as a sample of my tastes and wishes; and—ha ha ha ha!—Eclipse[†4] the Bridegroom!

I will send a trusty Messenger at halfpast 9 precisely—in the Morning—He is sworn to secrecy—He durst not for his life betray us—or Swells in ambuscade would have the Waistcoat at the cost of his Heart's blood.

Thine

The Unwaistcoated One.

To SIGNOR NOLI,[†1] [?17 OCTOBER 1845]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day as next.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 17 OCTOBER 1845

Text from MDGH, 1882, III, 81-2.

Devonshire Terrace, 17th October, 1845.

My dear Thompson,

Roche has not returned;[†2] and from what I hear of your movements,[†3] I fear I cannot answer for his being here in time for you.

I enclose you, lest I should forget it, the letter to the Peschiere agent.[†4] He is the Marquis Pallavicini's[†5] man of business, and speaks the most abominable Genoese ever heard. He is a rascal of course; but a more reliable villain, in his way, than the rest of his kind.

You recollect what I told you of the Swiss banker's wife, the English lady? If you would like Christiana to have a friend at Genoa in the person of a most affectionate and excellent little woman, and if you would like to have a resource in the most elegant and comfortable family there, I need not say that I shall be delighted to give you a letter to those who would die to serve me.[†6]

Always yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, [17 OCTOBER 1845]

MS Dickens House. Date: the day before CD went to Chatsworth (18 Oct). Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear Beard. On five minutes notice, I am obliged to go into Derbyshire,[†7] on matters of great moment connected with my scheme. You know my punctuality, and that nothing of light import would induce me to postpone anything—much less, a dinner with you. Forgive me, my dear fellow, for putting it off until my return. I expect to be back on Sunday night (I leave Kate in a most critical condition, so strong is my necessity)—and immediately on my return, I will write to you.

Ever Yours affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 20 OCTOBER 1845

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth October 1845.

My Dear Beard. If I don't hear from you to the contrary, I shall take it for granted that you will dine with me at the Parthenon (that will be best, I think; Kate being in a state of tribulation) on Wednesday next,[†1] at a quarter past 6. There is some rather choice Claret in that Establishment just now.

Ever Yours affecy.
CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To EMILE DE LA RUE [?OCTOBER 1845]

Mention in To de la Rue, 20 Oct 45. Date: between 17 Oct (see To Thompson, that day) and 20 Oct.

A note of introduction.[†2]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 20 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur: | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genoa | North Italy.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twentieth October 1845.

My Dear De la Rue. I received your kind present, yesterday—not 'till yesterday, in consequence of unheard of delays on the part of the Agent, whom I have liberally anathematized for his pains. I cannot tell you how much I thank you for a remembrance so valuable and dear to me, or how sensible I am of the thoughtful kindness that turned your fancy in this direction, when we parted at Genoa. You know you could have sent me nothing, I should have received with half the pleasure I have felt, and shall always feel, in this memorial. And what folly it is in me, therefore, to talk of it, when you know what I would say, so much better than I can say it! Here it is, in my sanctum sanctorum; and here it will remain, until the principal Figure in the said Sanctum is removed from it, and laid low in a smaller and more private one.

All the little news I have, I have told Madame De la Rue. Ask her for an exact account of a man, who will come to Genoa one of these days, laden with a note of introduction to you, from the Inimitable B. Ask her for a dark hint of a mighty scheme in which I am engaged. Ask her for some faint and shadowy allusion to a hope I have of travelling a little way in some short time. Ask her whether I am idle or busy: full of plans, or full of leisure.

So they stop the Examiner on that Frontier! Heaven and Earth, what blunder-headed dolts they must be! And here have I been complacently folding it up, and sending it off, week after week; feeling, each time, as if I had written to you, and were the most regular Correspondent in the World! I could have sworn in vexation (perhaps I did), when I pictured these same Newspapers lying, four deep, in the accursed drawer of some Humbug at Turin—you, all the time, imagining the Inimitable B oblivious of his promise and his friends! Well! If I ever do write about Italy, I will give the Turin people something worth the trouble of stopping, in return for this; or I'm a Dutchman!

You know that all the World is raving mad, here, about Railroad speculations. There has been a great check since Saturday; and people with faces whose length is quite out of proportion to their bodies, are walking up and down in all the streets, with their hands in apparently empty pockets.[†1] As I was writing those words, Ridgway came in to take leave. He stayed five minutes, and went away, after telling me how Gibbs wouldn't wash himself, at the Lake,[†2] notwithstanding the abundance of water in it—and how he wanted to sit at table in a complete suit of dirty fustian. And how it couldn't be allowed, on any terms.

Madame De la Rue says nothing in her last note, about Gaberel. I suppose it's all right, and that the young lady (poor Maniac!) has had no interval of sanity, to the destruction of the Reverend's hopes? What has become of Butler?[†3] Has he returned to that weeping mother and young pledge of affection, on the Acqua Sola? Is the British Consul, green, yellow, grey, mottled, or plaid?[†4] Is Noli hanged? Has Palaviccini (my Marquess) been afflicted with any gleam of reason, since I left?[†1] Is the old Governor[†2] really angry (as I hear from travellers he is) because I never forced myself upon him? Is that dear young Dragoon who drove the Dog-Cart with the red wheels, shut up in Prison by a jealous Government, because of his too great wit? Is the Peschiere full of English, who would have waylaid me, had I been there, and tortured me?

How does the Idiot? How are all my old walks? How is that wicker-work fowl—that live basket—whom we once met in the street of the Madhouse? Does what's his name the Vetturino sit upon a form all day, at his own door in the Strada Nuova, still? Is there an old man with a broom, always doing nothing on the staircase of your Palace? Was I ever an idle man in a plaid coat, basking, day after day, on the box of a travelling carriage with a happy little party? Or is it all a Dream, and did I never magnetize a little Somebody; with all my heart in her recovery and happiness?

Adieu dear De la Rue! A hundred times God bless you!

Ever Yours

CD.

To C. R. LESLIE,[†3] 20 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Mr Clem D. Johnston.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twentieth October 1845.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note. I will come up to you, in a fortnight or three weeks, then; (when I shall either have finished, or nearly finished, my little book) to arrange our sittings.[†4]

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. R. Leslie Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 20 OCTOBER 1845

Text from Daily News, 14 Dec 1915.

Devonshire-terrace | Twentieth October 1845

My Dear Mitton. I went down to Chatsworth myself, on Saturday—left here at 12 noon—got there at ½ past 9 at night—left there again at 3 o'clock next morning —and reached home at half past one yesterday afternoon. H.[†5] is with us in influence though not as a proprietor.[†1] Paxton[†2] has command of every railway and railway influence in England and abroad except the Great Western;[†3] and he is in it, heart and purse. One other large shareholder is to come in; and that is to be a house which has the power of bringing a whole volley of advertisements to bear upon the paper always. The commercial influence that will come down upon it with the whole weight of its aid and energy; not only in the City of London, but in Liverpool, Manchester, Bristol, and Yorkshire, is quite stunning. I am trying to engage the best people,[†4] right and left; and mean to go abroad, myself, to establish that system, when I shall have finished my little book. The venture is quite decided on; and I have made the Plunge.[†1]

— IV - 411 —

— IV - 412 —

The book has proceeded slowly, of course. I have not had two unbroken days together at it yet . . .[†2]

Always faithfully,

CD.

To PETER BERLYN,[†3] 22 OCTOBER 1845

MS Manchester Central Library. Address: Peter Berlyn Esquire | The Athenaeum | Manchester.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Second October 1845.

My Dear Sir

I am obliged, most reluctantly, to excuse myself from attending the Meeting tomorrow night. The state of Mrs. Dickens'[†4] health at this moment, would render my absence from home a matter of such great anxiety to me, and of such distress to her, that I have no alternative but to abandon my intention of coming to Manchester.

If it were needful for me to assure you of my interest in all that relates to the Athenaeum, or of the great pleasure I had anticipated in meeting its Members and Friends once more, I should have found it very difficult to write to you to this effect. As it is, I trust the reason that I have for being absent, and the statement of my most unfeigned disappointment, are sufficient both for text and comment.

Will you do me the favor to convey to the Directors of the Athenaeum, the assurance of my regret and my esteem?[†5] And if I may venture to congratutate them on the President they have this Year, I must acknowledge the influence of some selfish feeling, as I cannot do so without congratulating myself on possessing in him one of my dearest and most valued friends.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Berlyn Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 22 OCTOBER 1845

Text from N, I, 709.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Twenty-Second October 1845

My Dear Talfourd,

My other half remains in such a doubtful state, that I cannot win any cheerful consent from her to my being absent from home. Apart from my own anxieties, it would be cruel, therefore, to attempt the Manchester flight. And I have been most reluctantly obliged to write by this post to the Athenæum people, excusing myself. Like Tony Lumpkin I shouldn't so much have minded disappointing them, but I can't abide to disappoint myself;[†1] and had set my hopes on being by your side.[†2]

So much for myself. A little more for business.

Stone, the painter (whom you know) will be present, as one of the Invited guests.[†3] He is a Manchester Man; and this is the first occasion on which he will have met his fellow townsmen, since he left the place an unknown student.[†4] I have reason to suppose that he is desperately anxious to be called up—and I found the supposition on the slight incidents of his having implored me to write him a short speech, and on my having done so.[†5]

Verbum sap:

I saw Jerrold last night; and told him that if, in alluding to you, he could establish the presence of mind to advert to your old connection with the Press when you were a younger man, I believed it would not be distasteful to you.[†6]

He said he was no speaker (which is true) but he thought he could do that much easily and plainly. I thought it best to give him this hint: remembering a conversation I had with Forster some weeks ago.

There are two or three very good reporters in Manchester—I think the best one is on The Guardian.[†1] Will you have an eye on the local papers, and tell me when you come back (when I will tell you my reason for wishing to know)[†2] where your speech is best done, and whether it is anywhere well done?

With best remembrances to Mrs. Talfourd and Miss Ely

I am always | My Dear Talfourd affectionately yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS LEWIS,[†3] 26 OCTOBER 1845

MS Mr Robert H. Taylor.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Twenty Sixth October 1845.

Dear Miss Lewis.

If I had forgotten you, I must have greatly changed, and so must you. If I could come to Wiltshire, I should be an idle man, and you (I hope) would like me none the better on that account. If you lengthen out that "train of persecution" of which you tell me in your letter, I will bear it like a Christian Gentleman, believe me.

I thank your Papa very heartily for his kind and acceptable remembrance of me—It was very tender—in the eating.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth send their best regards. And I am

Always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Lewis

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 26 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Mr Edward S. Moore III.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Sixth October 1845.

My Dear Kittenmoles. Wellbred is married, and gone abroad. Play Wellbred, I adjure you![†4] The Comedy comes off twice—both times privately. Once on Saturday the 15th. November, when Prince Albert has officially written to say (we got the letter only last night) he will attend, at 7 to the moment. The other time, on the last Saturday in November, for the benefit of Miss Kelly. There is no expence but your Dress, in either case. Take this vacant part, like a Pupil of Johnny Britton,[†1] as you are—and come or send to me tomorrow, as I can afford to lose no time!!!

Ever Yours

CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 26 OCTOBER 1845

MS Mr Jacob Christensen.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Sixth October 1845.

My Dear Stanny

Here is the Devil to pay. Prince Albert[†2] has written to say that he dies to see the Amateur Performance on behalf of the Sanatorium, and can it be done on the fifteenth! Lord and Lady Lansdowne and the 'Tarnal Smash knows who, have taken Boxes. And on the fifteenth (three weeks from yesterday) it must come off.[†3] Write and tell me, by Bearer, that you have no unlucky engagement that night—for it can't be done; and I'm a Dutchman if I do it; without you.

Ever Faithfully

Bob

To THOMAS BEARD, [26 OCTOBER 1845]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 27 Oct 45; 26 Oct was Sunday in 1845. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night

My Dear Muster Beard

Resolve this question.—Those small correspondents at Madras, Ceylon, and Aden—do they make separate parcels of their newspapers, addressed to the agent at Malta; or do they open the parcel on its way from Calcutta, and put them in it? If so, how is the parcel addressed when it leaves Calcutta?—To the Agent at the next place? This seems to me to be a query essential to the right working of things.

Here's a pretty kettle of Fish! Prince Albert is coming to our next performance. And it will be at the St. James's Theatre on the 15th. of next Month.

Mrs. Dickens in statu quo. I call her Joanna Southcote.[†1]

The freshness of my mental faculties on the Day after the Claret, exceeds description. That must be done again, my friend.

Ever Affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Forster is already getting deep dents in his nose, by reason of the workings of the coming Kitely.

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?27 OCTOBER 1845]

Extract in MDGH, I, 143; given as final sentence of To Cattermole, 27 Aug 45. Date: perhaps sent as part of reminder when Cattermole did not immediately reply to letter of 26 Oct.

Let me know what you decide, like a Kittenmolian Trojan. And with love from all here to all there,

Believe me, ever, | Heartily yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 27 OCTOBER 1845

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1912; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 27 Oct 45.

I am sorry to say that for the Sanatorium representation we shall be obliged to go to the St. James's Theatre. Prince Albert is coming; and they have already exceeded your means of accommodation.

To ANDREW McKEAN,[†2] 27 OCTOBER 1845*

MS The Hon. Sir David Croom-Johnson.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Seventh October 1845.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. McKean, and begs to say, in reply to his letter, that the Proprietress of the Mangle is certainly not the original Mrs. Mantalini, or (lawfully speaking) any Mrs. Mantalini at all.[†3]

To FRANK STONE, 27 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh October 1845.

My Dear Stone.

Prince Albert is coming to the Private Performance for the benefit of the Sanatorium, with a long list of Lords and Ladies. At his entreaty we have changed the day to Saturday the 15th. of next Month; and we play at the St. Jame's Theatre.

There will be three Rehearsals, of which I will give you ample notice.

Always Faithfully Yours
CD

I hear from Talfourd that you were brilliant at Manchester.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 28 OCTOBER 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth October 1845.

My Dear B and E. I am sorry to say that I have made appointments for this Evening, both with Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Maclise, with a view to the Christmas Book. And on such hasty notice (I have only received your note this morning), I do not like to put them off.

I think it necessary that I should see you today; for the question of the Reporters is becoming very serious. I will come down to Fleet Street[†1] sometime between 12 and 2 (perhaps you will tell my father[†2] so); and send round for you if I do not find you there.

Do not print any of the few white Satin Play Bills for the Prince, until I give instructions for them. It occurs to me that those ought to have the actors' names.

I really think it very necessary (let me say so while I think of it) that you should privately represent to Mr. Paxton the serious consequences that may come from such a loose, flurried way of proceeding as in the case of that Sir George Larpent[†3] the other day. To whom the whole thing has been prematurely broached, at a disadvantage, without a point the size of a Pin's head being gained. It would be injurious to anything, but to a newspaper it is Death.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To WILLIAM CHALLENOR,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1845*

Transcript by Mr J. Challenor Smith, owner of MS in 1926. Address: W. Challenor Esquire | 11 Godliman Street | Doctors Commons.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth October 1845

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Challenor and regrets to inform him that the only two occasions on which the Performance to which he refers can be repeated are already arranged. Both repetitions are for Private Benefits.[†2] Mr. Dickens is sorry to add that he is so constantly and closely engaged that he really has no leisure to devote to the consideration of Mrs. Seymour's case.[†3] He had great pleasure in drawing up the little statement for that lady to which Mr. Challenor refers[†4] but he fears it is not in his power to be of any further service to her.

To MRS MILNER GIBSON, 28 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Mr Robert B. Riss.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Eighth October 1845.

My Dear Mrs. Milner Gibson.

I did not answer your note by your own Messenger this Morning, because Kate was then in the midst of her troubles; and I knew you would rather hear of her, out of them. I am happy to tell you that she has a boy;[†5] and is wonderfully well. Though she suffered very much.

I care for nothing but girls by the bye; but never mind me.

I shall be delighted to come to La Scuôla Italiana on the 10th.[†6] provided it is not one of our Rehearsal Nights.[†1] We are going to repeat our Play for the edification of Prince Albert; and it is possible (but not probable, I hope) that my Managerial duties may rule me with an Iron Rod.

On Thursday, I grieve to say, I am far less pleasantly engaged—but irretrievably engaged nevertheless.

May I charge you with my compliments to Mr. Mariotti, and my hopeful answer to the Committee of the school?

Always Believe me | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Milner Gibson.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [28 OCTOBER 1845]

MS University of Kentucky. Date: Handwriting shows that the birth this refers to was Alfred's (28 Oct 45).

My Dear Stanny. Yes—at the Gray's Inn Coffee House with Mac and Tony.[†2] But come here, about 5, or a quarter before. We can have a Cab down.—I believe you are the Gent which is partial to Cabs?

If not a ill-conwenience, bring the Scrip.

Kate confined, Thank God, at half past ten this morning with what is usually called (I don't know why) a chopping[†3] Boy. I am partial to girls, and had set my heart on one—but never mind me.

She sends her love to Mrs. Stanfield.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FRANK STONE, [LATE OCTOBER 1845]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: after 27 Oct, but allowing "ample notice" for 5 Nov (see To Stone, 27 Oct 45).

Rehearsal Calls

———

St. James's Theatre—Stage Door

Mr. Stone

———

Wednesday 5th. Novr. ¼ before 7

Wednesday 12th. Novr. Same Hour

———

Attention and punctuality, indispensable, as it is doubtful whether the Theatre can be spared on any other occasion.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?29 OCTOBER 1845]

MS Dickens House. Date: probably about the Sanatorium performance, rather than the one at Miss Kelly's, and if so almost certainly 29 Oct, to allow time for invitations to be issued.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday

My Dear B and E. Don't do anything final with the Theatre ticket or Bill, without sending me Proofs first. It is hardly necessary to say so, perhaps; but as I didn't mention it to Formal,[†1] I do it.

Ever Yours

CD

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 30 OCTOBER 1845*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Thirtieth October | 1845

My Dear Lady Blessington

More thanks than I can pay you, or than you would care to receive, for your inestimably useful kindness!

Will you tell me where the Baboo[†2] is to be found? I will leave a card at his Hotel,[†3] straightway.

Shall I speak to Dr. Southwood Smith, who is Manager of the Sanatorium Committee arrangements, about a good box for you on the 15th. Otherwise I fear they will all be gone. For how many, do you wish it?

I am very sorry I had gone out for a walk when you called yesterday. It would have delighted me to have installed you into my Sanctum.

Mrs. Dickens, I am glad to say, is going on quite brilliantly. I wish I could say as much for myself, but in the distraction of these great Newspaper arrangements, I find the little book trots slowly—sometimes walks indeed—and sometimes stops altogether.

Dear Lady Blessington | Ever Yours Most Cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, [31 OCTOBER 1845]

Mention in next.

About Lady Blessington's box for the performance in aid of the Sanatorium.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 31 OCTOBER 1845

Text from City Book Auction catalogue No. 523; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 31 Oct 45.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

Here is Lord Auckland's[†1] letter, which you wished me to return. I saw the Baboo yesterday, and thanked him heartily.[†2] I have written to Dr. Southwood Smith, about your box. Enclosed is a note for Count D'Orsay, if you will have the kindness to give it him.

My dear Lady Blessington. | Yours affectionately and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 31 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First October 1845.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I saw the Baboo yesterday, and engaged him to dine here[†3] on Sunday fortnight, the 16th. November at Half past Six. Will you book yourself as Mine for that day and hour? The B (I am afraid to write Baboo again, for I am always going to put an N after it) wants to hear all about the Paper; and I told him I would ask the Gentleman who is going to India,[†1] and two of the Proprietors—my printers.

Were you ever a Godfather? I mean to call my new boy after you, whether you like it or not. But if you will let me do it with your consent, you will gratify me very much, and delight my other half most heartily.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Count D'Orsay

To JOHN FORSTER, [31 OCTOBER 1845]

Extracts in F, V, i, 385. Date: 31 Oct according to Forster.

The older and more gifted of his ravens having indulged the same illicit taste for putty and paint which had been fatal to his predecessor,[†2] died unexpectedly before the kitchen-fire. He kept his eye to the last upon the meat as it roasted, and suddenly turned over on his back with a sepulchral cry of Cuckoo!

He was at a dead lock in his Christmas story. Sick, bothered and depressed. Visions of Brighton come upon me; and I have a great mind to go there to finish my second part,[†3] or to Hampstead. I have a desperate thought of Jack Straw's. I never was in such bad writing cue as I am this week, in all my life.[†4]

November

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [1 NOVEMBER 1845]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: clearly after Cattermole had accepted the part, and before the first regular rehearsal on Wed 5 Nov; therefore Sat 1 Nov. (Wrongly dated April 1848 in N, II, 84.)

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday

My Dear Fred. I want you to dine here tomorrow. At all events you must produce yourself here somehow, by hook or by crook, for George Cattermole plays Wellbred on a short notice, and I have pledged myself to produce you for his benefit[†5]—Do not fail me.

Ever affecy.

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 NOVEMBER 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 385-6. Date: "the morning after the last" according to Forster.

I have been so very unwell this morning, with giddiness, and headache, and botheration of one sort or other, that I didn't get up till noon: and, shunning Fleet-street, am now going for a country walk, in the course of which you will find me, if you feel disposed to come away in the carriage that goes to you with this. It is to call for a pull of the first part of the Cricket, and will bring you, is you like, by way of Hampstead to me, and subsequently to dinner. There if much I should like to discuss, if you can manage it. It's the loss of my walks, I suppose; but I am as giddy as if I were drunk, and can hardly see.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 or 2 NOVEMBER 1845]

Extract in F, V, i, 386. Date: answering Forster's reply to his last; clearly not 3 Nov, as he called at Forster's that day.

Many thanks for your affectionate letter, which is full of generous truth. These considerations weigh with me, heavily: but I think I descry in these times greater stimulants to such an effort; greater chance of some fair recognition of it; greater means of persevering in it, or retiring from it unscratched by any weapon one should care for; than at any other period. And most of all I have, sometimes, that possibility of failing health or fading popularity before me, which beckons me to such a venture when it comes within my reach. At the worst, I have written to little purpose, if I cannot write myself right in people's minds, in such a case as this.[†1]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 3 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House. Address: Favored by John Forster Esquire. | Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

Devonshire Terrace
—I mean, at Mr. Forster's.
Monday Third November 1845.

My Dear Bradbury and Evans.

I have given my best consideration to the subject we discussed yesterday; and in this letter, you have my conclusions in reference to the Newspaper.

I will take that Post of Editor which is marked in the little statement[†2] as having a Salary of a Thousand Pounds attached to it—for double that Salary.[†3]

In which I include the Publication of the Series of the Italian letters, with my name—my frequently writing for the Paper, from day to day—my constantly exercising an active and vigilant superintendence over the whole Machine. When I am not there, or after I have left the office, I shall (as the custom is) have a Sub Editor[†1] to whom I can, with perfect confidence, hand over the practical management for the time being. The head and leading principle of the thing, I am willing to become on these terms.

I will not disguise from you—for I am pretty sure you will feel—that I think they are far from high for one in my position. And therefore I make my share in the paper[†2] an object of importance. But it is quite impossible that I can say what, in my opinion, that share should be, without your first shewing me, out of what proportion of the whole it is to come.[†3]

If you feel disposed to do so, on this short statement of the compensation I aim at, you can give this information to Mr. Forster, and arrange that point, as well as every other, with him. I am fully prepared to abide by any arrangement you agree upon.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To THOMAS BEARD, 4 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Fourth November | 1845.

My Dear Beard. There was a failure of a Great Broker in the City last night,[†4] which so affects two of my principal people[†5] that the Paper cannot be, on any proper footing. You may conceive that after laying aside all my usual and dear pursuits for this object, I have been a little shaken for half an hour. But never say die is the Inimitable's motto; and I have already pumped up as much courage as will set me going on my old track, please God, in four and twenty hours.

They will have to pay some five or Six Thousands[†1] Pounds for engagements made. I shall take nothing, but my leave.

Ever affectionately

CD

To GEORGE JULIAN HARNEY,[†2] 4 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Mrs Renee Metivier Black.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Fourth November 1845

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Harney, and begs to inform that gentleman that he has no intention of connecting himself with any Newspaper. He is not the less indebted to Mr. Harney for his obliging note.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 4 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Fourth November 1845.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I would have 500 announcements such as I have written on the other side, printed (if I were you) each on a sheet of Note Paper, and laid upon the seats all over the house, wherever our Bills are laid, on the night of the 15th. Do you come down yourself, and see to their distribution; and I will take care that they are not removed.

To the Private Boxes, I would send the same announcement, enclosed in an envelope with a short note from yourself, to the effect that you ventured to take the liberty of begging attention to it. I would seal each of these, and direct it, personally, to the occupier of the Box, by name. Our box list shall be at your disposal on the previous Monday.

Will this do for you?

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

MISS KELLY

Begs leave to announce that the Gentlemen who perform this evening, have kindly consented, as a mark of their regard for an old Servant of the Public, who has struggled with some difficulties,

TO REPEAT THESE PERFORMANCES
FOR THE LAST TIME
AND FOR HER BENEFIT.
AT HER THEATRE IN DEAN STREET ON EVENING THE

— IV - 426 —

With the addition of the Farce of GRETNA GREEN[†1] in which Miss Kelly will appear in her old Part of Betty Finnikin.[†2] The other characters by the amateurs.

Applications for Tickets to be made to Miss Kelly 73 Dean Street Soho. Saturday 15th. November 1845.

To H. P. SMITH, 4 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth November 1845

My Dear Smith

My chickens and their little aunt will be delighted to do honor to the Lord Mayor on the Ninth.[†3] So should I be,—but I am hard at it: grinding my teeth.

I came down with Thompson[†4] the other day, hoping to see you. You were keeping it up, however, in some holiday region; and your glass-case looked like a large pantry, out of which some Giant had stolen the Meat.

Best regards to Mrs. Smith from all of us. Kate quite hearty, and the Baby, like Goldsmith's Bear, "in a concatenation accordingly".

Always My Dear Smith | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 6 NOVEMBER 1845.

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday November Sixth 1845.

My Dear Bradbury and Evans.

Mr. Forster will have told you this morning, at what conclusion I arrived last night. Such new consideration as I have been enabled to give the subject since then, strengthens and fortifies me in that view of the case. I leave you to judge how strongly it has impressed itself upon me, when it outweighs your new desire to proceed, and all the painful considerations that arise out of my own position, as well as the disgraceful circumstances in which I have unfortunately placed my father.

So far as I am personally concerned, the heart of the enterprize is broken and dead. If I could do such violence to myself, as to resume it tomorrow, I should have no faith in it. It would always oppress me as a doomed thing; and every new engagement we might make, would fill me with new fear and wretchedness.

So far as the project, as a scheme apart from myself, is involved, I think it has received a blow from which it cannot recover. You do not know how different the little world of newspapers is, from every other—how quickly intelligence of this sort is dispersed through it—and how lingering its effect must necessarily be. The difficulty of getting the gentlemen indispensably necessary to the carrying on of the paper, now,[†1] I cannot, I declare to you, sufficiently estimate in my own mind. Supposing that patched up, and poorly overcome by the substitution of inferior ability in the most important departments of a Newspaper, for the ability at which we have been aiming; then, the dread of this Venture among the other papers[†2] (which was very great) is still gone, past all restoration. The notion that undoubtedly existed among them of there being a powerful combination of energy, experience, and money, on the side of this new Journal is shattered to atoms by your own abandonment of it. And all the prestige, and vague impression of success which surrounded this idea while it was still in the clouds, and which would have served it immensely in its first struggles, serves it no more.

Again. The advertizing power that was to be brought to bear upon it, is no longer available. If Mr. Paxton still promised to move Heaven and Earth, and still felt really disposed to do so (which I doubt) could you, in reason, set the least store by such wild and ill-considered pledges? I have rated them at less than nothing since his introduction of you to that City-House. And I distinctly believe that he has had a foreknowledge of this break-down, for many days; and that it stared him in the face (and looked out of his face too) when we met in Fleet Street the other day.[†3]

If you feel so far committed, and liable to such heavy loss,[†4] that you must go on with this Paper (not being able to contemplate the consequences of its abandonment) I will give you every advice and assistance in my power. But I cannot connect myself with it, as I originally designed. Nor can I conceal from you that I believe in my Soul it would end in your Ruin.

On the other hand, if you can look the utmost present loss, steadily in the face; and can meet it; and pay the utmost of the money; and turn the leaf down on which the amount is written, and look at it no more; I do believe that with your advantages and opportunities, and turning our connexion to the best account, you will be able, easily, to recover the ground you have lost. That you will be much happier than you ever could be with the maimed hands of this wounded Newspaper dragging at you, night and day, I am sure.

I told Mr. Forster when he came to me with the overwhelming news of the day before yesterday, that you could not have considered, I was certain, to what extent you were already bound. And when I heard that there were flying calculations of a Thousand Pounds as a round Sum to lose,[†1] I swear it stunned me—I was so amazed.

The ever having gone on such a Gigantic forgetfulness of the condition in which these gentlemen are placed (of whom some have resigned the certain Income of a whole life, for the chances of this Paper) renders it the more difficult, I know, to meet the real Truth at once, and encounter the whole force of its shock. But I would do it, if the Money and the mistake were mine. I am so certain I would, that I give you that counsel without the least misgiving or hesitation.[†2]

At the same time, I think it right to enclose you a note I received from Mr. Beard[†3] last night, in acknowledgement of one I had written him, to let him know the Paper was abandoned.

I have only to entreat you to read or shew this letter of mine, both to Jerrold and to Lemon; as I have a sincere regard for them both, and should be deeply hurt if they misunderstood the part I take, in any degree. And lastly, let me say that my confidence in the Paper and my confidence in you, are as distinct and separate things as Heaven and Earth; and that while the first is gone utterly—the second is not affected by a hair's-breadth or a feather's weight.

Always My Dear Bradbury and Evans | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 6 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixth November 1845.

My Dear Kittenmowls

What a fellow you are! You couldn't have done better. Heaven!—If you had seen the other men, when they began!

The impression of everybody who spoke to me on the Stage last night, was, that you were as cool as a Cucumber, and safer than the Bank.—I am quite serious, believe me.

I have written to Costello at Brighton, today. Frederick I will drag to Miss Kelly's by the hair of his head. And we will go at your scenes[†4] on Monday, over and over again—as often as you like. You can't tire me.

What an extraordinary constitution you must have! Upon my Soul of honor, I don't understand it, and can hardly believe you serious.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To DUDLEY COSTELLO, 6 NOVEMBER 1845

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 893; MS 1 p; dated 6 Nov 45. Address: Dudley Costello, according to Hodgson's catalogue, 2 Nov 1904.

Cattermole is so hideously nervous, and so very much behind-hand, that we have appointed a rehearsal[†1] at Miss Kelly's Theatre.

To MR ELLIS, 6 NOVEMBER 1845*

MS Guildhall Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth November 1845

Dear Mr. Ellis.

Will you have the goodness, when you have corrected and copied the two Property Lists, to send them to me? I wish particularly to have them tomorrow, as I promised the Property Man at the St James's to put him in possession of them immediately, in order that he may get what is wanted.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [7 NOVEMBER 1845]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly same day as next.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Lady Blessington.

A Thousand thanks for your kind note. Fifty thousand Pounds were laid down yesterday; and I assure you Forster and I passed an anxious day in discussing the expediency of renewing the Project.[†2] But I resolved last night to turn my back upon it; and as it had had a shock, to know it no more.

So I have whistled it off, and am as merry again as my own Cricket—which, by the bye, has been a good deal slighted in all these distractions. I must work away, therefore, tooth and nail.

My hearty regards to Count D'Orsay, and all kind remembrances to your fair Nieces. George Cattermole is going to play Wellbred, on the 15th. the original having married and gone abroad.

Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Most Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 7 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace
Friday Morning | November Seventh 1845.

My Dear Bradbury and Evans.

My opinion remains unchanged. It has been strongly and finally confirmed since I saw you yesterday.

When you had gone, Mr. Forster and I discussed the subject again; and then we resolved to send for Mr. Beard, and be guided by his advice. He came here in the Evening; and we saw him together. We merely stated to him how the matter stood; and asked him whether he deemed it advisable to proceed. He considered for a little time, and then replied that he believed it impossible to complete the formation of such an Establishment as we should require, after the shock the project had received—that he believed it to be utterly out of the question that we could get "one first-rate hand" to join the Paper: all confidence in it, having been destroyed within the last two days.

He pointed out, very plainly, that when he wrote me the letter you have read, the Reporters had not been communicated with, or the design of abandoning the Paper made known. Since that time he has seen, he thinks, all the gentlemen engaged, whom you have seen. He said that even in the first bitterness of their disappointment, they uttered no word to your disparagement or mine (even spoke of your honorable and candid manner to them in high terms) but intimated in so many words that there were evidently other parties in the background who had had the power of overthrowing a scheme full of promise, at a moment's notice: and that they never could feel themselves secure from a repetition of that proceeding. Some of them have already, with the view of releasing you, written to Easthope proposing to return. Others have made application to the Herald; others to the Times. In the little newspaper World our project is understood to have gone by the Board; and to make head against that impression, he considers hopeless.

Remember how strongly I urged this same consideration to you to day;[†1] and how I laboured to shew you that you were hardly Judges of its real force.

Mr. Beard spoke very cheerfully and confidently, of your means of arranging these engagements, as some of the gentlemen fall (as he has no doubt they will) into new situations. He had believed them to be more numerous; and he knew, he said, that your exhibition of a liberal and manly spirit in the matter, had already met, and would meet with the most sensitive and quick response. He stated the probable loss at a very small sum, compared with its apparent extent; and had no doubt of your ability to retire at no enormous sacrifice, and leave the pleasantest impression on the minds of these gentlemen. But everything brought him back to this—that to go on was desperate.

He said all this, in spite of a strong belief that the Paper had, before these circumstances, a great course open to it. Which he coupled with the certain knowledge that it had filled the Times people with dismay, and had been the cause of all sorts of councils and discussions in Printing-House Square.[†1]

My Dear Bradbury and Evans, in a truly earnest and affectionate Spirit, I assure you from my heart that I esteem and honor you the more, for what I have known of you since these occurrences. I hope and believe that a long course of mutual confidence and friendship, and mutual usefulness, is open to us. And I am lighter in my mind for you—who have occupied my thoughts in all this matter, quite as much as any personal considerations—when I turn my face upon this blighted scheme, as I do now, for the last time;[†2] and look to brighter plans in which we are to work together.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 7 NOVEMBER 1845

Extracts in Quaritch's catalogues Nos 898 and 931; MS 2 ½ pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate Regents Park, 7 Nov 45.

The Performance on the Fifteenth is not gratuitous, though Private. Being for the benefit of an Institution called the Sanatorium, the tickets are a Guinea each . . . I shall be glad to receive Longfellow's book and letter,[†3] when you find them. In the meantime I hope you are deriving some pleasure and amusement from the Sea change you have suffered.

To THOMAS BEARD, 8 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 8 Nov 45. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday.

My Dear Beard.

I wish you would look at the enclosed letter,[†1] and give me your opinion of it when we meet tomorrow. This is the case (there are two such) of a man taken from the Chronicle, on an engagement for Three Years at 8 Guineas pr. week. I am curious to know what you think they expect in such instances: being able to get another engagement—£200?

Ever affecy.
CD

P.S. Don't forget to bring the letter with you.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [8 NOVEMBER 1845]

Envelope only, MS Benoliel Collection. Address: George Cruikshank Esq | 23 Amwell Street | Pentonville. PM 8 Nov 45.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 10 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth November 1845.

My Dear B and E

It is nearly, if not quite, a fortnight ago, since I arranged with Mr. Leech for the little design for the cover.[†2]

I have sent to Mr. Forster this morning—returning him Mr. Wilson's letter to you, and telling him what Mr. Beard communicated to me, yesterday. You had best see him immediately—but I think it likely you will have done so, before you get this note.

Faithfully Always

CD

To MACVEY NAPIER, 10 NOVEMBER 1845

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth November 1845.

My Dear Sir

I write to you in great haste. I most bitterly regret the being obliged to disappoint and inconvenience you (as I fear I shall do, greatly), but I find it will be impossible[†1] for me to write the Paper on Capital Punishment, properly, for your next Number. The fault is really not mine. I have been involved for the last fortnight in one maze of distractions which nothing could have enabled me to anticipate or prevent. Everything I have had to do, has been interfered with, and cast aside. I have never in my life had so many insuperable obstacles crowded into the way of my pursuits. It is as little my fault, believe me, as though I were ill and wrote to you from my bed. And pray bear as gently as you can with the vexation I occasion you, when I tell you how very heavily it falls upon myself.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Napier

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 12 NOVEMBER 1845

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1920; MS 3/4 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 12 Nov 45.

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 13 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth November 1845.

My Dear Sir

I was going to write to you this morning, to tell you that the gentlemen in general are so incensed at the manner in which they have been treated during the whole of the arrangements for the Play—and were so especially indignant last night[†2]—that I have made no mention to them of the proposed dinner: being perfectly certain that they would accept no courtesy whatever, at the hands of the committee.

When I had the pen in my hand, Augustus came to tell me of the proposal to set chairs upon the Stage. I think it right to let you know without delay, that if there is a single person introduced upon the Stage, or into the Orchestra, or behind the Scenes, there is not one of the Company who will act—not one. And in such a case I would, most certainly, as having brought them into these unpleasant circumstances, be the first to leave the Theatre, though the overture were played, and the Queen and the whole Court present.

I know you are in no way responsible for the arrangements. But I am so confident that if you do not interfere promptly, this Play will not be acted, that I feel bound to express the sentiments of the rest to you—not so strongly as they expressed them last night, but with as much plainness as I have been able to get into this hasty letter.

Believe me always, My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
Thomas Chapman Esquire
(over)

I am not at all clear that Mr. Jerrold, who is most important to the Comedy, will play as it is. I could get him to do nothing last night, and could reduce him to no terms whatever.

To C. E. COTTERELL, 14 NOVEMBER 1845†

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourteenth November 1845.

My Dear Sir

[†a] I hope you are not making a flying visit to England,—or at all events that you will be in London on Sunday Week the 23rd. when pray dine with me, unceremoniously, at Half Past Five o'Clock.[†a] My reason for placing a week's interval between your return and my appointment, is, that I have arranged to leave town on Monday Morning to finish a little Book in peace and quietness; and I do not think it likely I shall be here again, until the day on which I hope to see you.[†1]

Always Believe me | Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. E. Cotterell Esquire.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?14 NOVEMBER 1845]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly the Friday before To Bradbury & Evans, ?17 Nov 45.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear B and E. I have got hold of Mr. Barrow[†2]—the gentleman I spoke of, for India—and propounded the Journey to him; making it a condition of his going, that he shall come on the Paper when he returns, as a Reporter for one turn a night.—He had previously declined that, but would be quite invaluable—; and that he shall have the French and Italian Papers and so forth (he is an excellent scholar) to translate. I thought it as well, if we nailed him in one place, to nail him in another. He is to give me his reply, and suggest his terms, by letter, at 90 Fleet Street at 3 tomorrow, where I shall wish to see you. I think he will go;[†3] and I know there is not in London a man who could do the business better. He was the great Times man in the Days of the Queen's Trial; and is as well acquainted with Indian affairs, as you are with Railroads.

It seems to me that Mr. Paxton's City Man has broken down dead, in the very outset,[†1] if the assistance we got this morning be any criterion. Never mind. We must get our letters elsewhere, written and ready by Monday Night,[†2] somehow or other.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 17 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventeenth November 1845.

Dear Sir

The Gentlemen engaged in the Amateur Performance at the Saint James's Theatre on Saturday Evening last,[†3] unanimously requested me to write to you; and on their behalf, no less than on my own, to thank you, most earnestly, for the great assistance you have rendered them in many ways.

They have an unaffected desire to acknowledge your generous courtesy in the warmest terms; and if my form of doing so be a brief one, it is because I should find it difficult to say to you, in any words, how highly we estimate both the matter and the manner of your help.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [17 NOVEMBER 1845]*

MS The Proprietors of Punch. Date: the Monday before Wednesday 19 Nov when Landseer's block was sent to Leech.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My Dear B and E

I would give Mr. Barrow as little more, in the way of a Prospectus,[†1] than the name of the Newspaper, as possible. I have not a pull of the last Prospectus by me. If you leave[†2] of it for Indian purposes, the business part; the general plain description of the paper, without any of the flourishes; I do not think we can do better. This would reduce it to one half or one third of its present length; and I think that will be quite enough for this object. If you will bring it to me, so altered tomorrow, between half past 4 and half half[†3] past 5 I will correct the Proof immediately, and settle any point you may have a suggestion to offer on. I am not at all sure that Mr. Barrow, having the name and his credentials, has not, already, quite enough to go upon.

Now, with reference to the Cricket. There is a Dog in the story; and I have got Mr. Edwin Landseer to draw it on the wood for us. He is not sure whether he will make a Vignette of the Dog alone, or whether he will make it a larger subject.[†4] Will you, therefore, immediately[†5] send him (his address is No. 1 St. Johns Wood Road) two blocks; one for a mere Vignette; the other as large as one of Mr. Stanfield's in the Chimes. He has promised to let me have one or other on Wednesday.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LEECH, 18 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Evening | Eighteenth November 1845.

My Dear Leech

Edwin Landseer pledges himself to forward Boxer[†1] tomorrow. I will send him to you as soon as he comes to hand.

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 19 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House. Address: Messrs. Bradbury and Evans | Whitefriars.

Nineteenth November 1845

My Dear B & E

I expect a block from Mr. Doyle today.[†2] Leech is waiting to see Edwin Landseer's dog, which I hope to send him tonight.

Ever Yours
CD

I wish you would send and see if Mr. Maclise is nearly ready.[†3] Send to them all, perpetually, until we have got everything. Looking after them, delays me. I wish you would see to the furnishing of those two rooms in Fleet Street. The moment I have finished the Book, I shall come down there, every day.[†4] They are not very business-looking chambers for appointments in their present condition—and are certainly not over-comfortable.

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 19 NOVEMBER 1845

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth November 1845.

My Dear Hogarth

I shall be delighted to put you on for Music and a general liability to Theatres, at five Guineas a week. I consider that done.

But I confess I feel a greater difficulty about the time and manner of your leaving the Chronicle (after your recent return) than you seem to entertain. I have a doubt whether it might not be best to leave the matter as it stands, at all events until Easthope and the Chronicle people generally, shall have seen the announcement of the New Paper—which will be out in a day or two.[†1] Surely it would be more agreeable, now, if you could bring them by such means to originate the idea of your leaving them.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hogarth Esquire.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 19 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Mr A. G. Schaw Miller.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth November 1845.

My Dear Mr. Smith

I enclose you a very generous note from Horace Twiss.[†2] I have acknowledged its receipt, and referred him to you.

On the other side is a list of all the charges on the Stage. Which I have paid. If you will pay the amount to my account at Coutts's in the Strand, it will be the most convenient course to me.[†3] Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

	£..	S..	D
Drink for all the Men. Performance and Rehearsals.	2..	0..	0
Hire of Furnitute, Carriage of Do. and "Property Man"—	2..	[†4]..	0
Dressing Room Women. And Candles	—..	10..	—
Alteration of Scenery, & Repainting	11..	15..	0
Carpenters & Master Carpenter	5..	10..	0
Male Dresses, and Barber	1..	6..	0
Orchestra	14..	3..	0
Stage-Door Keeper	—..	10..	6
	£37..	14..	6

To HORACE TWISS, [?19 NOVEMBER 1845]

Mention in To Southwood Smith, 19 Nov 45.

To JOHN LEECH, [19 NOVEMBER 1845]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: clearly the same day as To Bradbury & Evans, 19 Nov. Address: John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Night

My Dear Leech

Here is Boxer, on Box. Everything in a concatination accordingly.

Will you send him on to B and E, tomorrow Morning?

Ever Yours

CD

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 21 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Mr Jacob Christensen.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First November | 1845.

My Dear Stanny. I am heartily indebted and bounden to you for thinking of me under such circumstances. I hadn't the heart to come near you, lest you should think I wanted to bore you for these drawings.[†1] Than which, nothing in the World was more distant from my thoughts.

I have no doubt they can be easily copied on the blocks; and I will send them down to Bradbury's directly. I am delighted to hear from George[†2] that you are so much better.

Ever affectionately

CD

To H. P. SMITH, 24 NOVEMBER 1845*

MS Library of the Royal College of Surgeons.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth November 1845

My Dear Smith.

Your friend[†3] is right in his Information. I have made a memorandum of the name and application, and will communicate with the gentleman very shortly. But I fear there is no chance of any Vacancy in the Department he speaks of.

Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To MRS TALFOURD, 25 NOVEMBER 1845

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1975; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 25 Nov 45.

Accepting an invitation to dine with her on Saturday.

To AMEDÉE PICHOT, 27 NOVEMBER 1845*

MS Mr George Potts. Address: A Monsieur. | Monsr. Amedée Pichot | Revue Britannique | 1 Rue Grange Bateliere | Paris.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Thursday Twenty Seventh November 1845.

My Dear Sir

I write (in great haste to save the Post) to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the Nineteenth; and to say that I should be happy to supply you with some sheets of the Cricket, in advance of the Publication, if it were compatible with our business arrangements. But as it is not, I cannot have that pleasure.

There is no reference in the Chimes to the Mug of a Bell.[†1] Nothing of the kind. You must have made some mistake.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsr. Amedée Pichot

To WILLIAM EMPSON,[†2] 28 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth November 1845.

My Dear Empson—That seems to me to be the shortest cut through your difficulty.

A thousand thanks for your warm-hearted letter, which came upon me in the pleasantest way, as I was rounding off the few last chirpings of The Cricket on the Hearth. It made me feel the Cricket a hundred times more real than ever.

We play once more—for the benefit of Miss Kelly; and the tickets will be a Guinea each. We have not yet decided when it shall be, what it shall be, or where it shall be. But as soon as these precious morsels of intelligence become known to me (probably next week) I will write to you again.

I had a most affectionate and delightful letter from Lord Jeffrey not long ago.[†1] There are very few things that are so charming to me as the way in which he has lived through all that Blue and Yellow, and remained so tender, true, and earnest. He is the freshest of friends and readers. And God send he may continue so, for as many years as you and I desire!

Kate is quite well, and begs to be kindly remembered to Mrs. Empson and yourself and all the children. Dolly lives in my memory brightly; but she must be quite another Dolly by this time.[†2]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Empson Esquire

To VISCOUNT MORPETH,[†3] 28 NOVEMBER 1845†

MS Mr George Howard.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth November 1845.

My Dear Lord Morpeth.

†a I am greatly indebted to you for your kind recollection of the Alchemist.†a†4 I have delayed writing to you until now: hoping I might have been able to tell you of our dramatic plans, and of the day on which we purpose playing. But as these matters are still in abeyance, I will give you that precious information when I come into the receipt of it myself.

And let me heartily assure you that I had at least as much pleasure in seeing you the other day,†5 as you can possibly have had in seeing me; and that I shall consider all opportunities of becoming better known to you, among the most fortunate and desirable occasions of my life.

And that I am, with your conviction about the probability of our liking each other; and as Lord Lyndhurst†6 might say, "with something more,"

Ever faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Viscount Morpeth.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 28 NOVEMBER 1845

MS Mr Jacob Christensen.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth November 1845.

My Dear Stanny

As George told me he would let me know when you became visible, I have not called at your house: fearing to worry you.

I will answer Albert Smith.†1

And I will also insert a full-sized Blue Bottle in the ear of the Printer for not having sent you the Third Chirp. Which shall come to you today, my Boy.†2

Ever affectionately & heartily
CD.

To JOHN LEECH, [?29 NOVEMBER 1845]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Reference to "the last block" makes 29 Nov more likely than 22 Nov. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night

My Dear Leech. If I could urge anything against the last block, it would be, that my good friend the Carrier, is hardly handsome enough.[†3] I have not seen the others, but have no doubt Jones[†4] acted wisely, to save time.

Cordially Yours

CD

December

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 DECEMBER 1845

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | First December 1845.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have delayed answering your last kind note until now, because I wished, previously, to have a long talk with Charley's Mama on the subject to which it refers; and I could not very well do that, until she was quite well and downstairs again.

We have no reason to think that Charley has anything but a vigorous constitution, and good sound health. But when he is in full school employment, there is a strange kind of fading comes over him sometimes: the like of which, I don't think I ever saw. Whether the child is anxious at his book, or excited at his Play, or what, I cannot make out. But I see it occasionally, in a very remarkable degree—more plainly, I think, than his mother does, although I am by no means open to such impressions in general, and am not at all fearful for him, except as I know him to be very quick and sensitive.

But I fear if it were to continue, and he were at school at a distance from home, I should have real cause for anxiety; and as you leave the choice to me, I would, solely on this account, prefer King's College,[†1] if you think well of it too. I have taken a long time to think of this, because I feel that such a kindness as yours should be thought of and deliberated upon. And I have come to the conclusion that this is the best course for him.

Bertha White is quite restored. She is depressed of course, but perfectly rational, composed, and resigned. I am trying to keep back a part of your gift for her own sole use in after-life. Whether the necessities of her father will admit of this, I cannot, as yet, say. But I hope they may. She is living with him just now in Wales, and is endeavouring to obtain a situation as companion to a Lady.

I have just finished my little Christmas Book, which I hope will please you. It is very quiet and domestic. I trust it is interesting and pretty. At all events I think so. If you have any fancy for reading a book before it is published, I shall be more than delighted to send you the Proofs by post, if you will let me know in one line that you are still at the place whither I address this letter.

Mrs. Overs succeeded the other day in getting one of her children into the Orphan School.[†2] It is a great thing for her.

I cannot help wondering when I shall see you again: remembering how long it is since I had that pleasure. I shall be at Liverpool for a day or two towards the end of next week; and at Paris for a week or two, immediately after Christmas Day. If there be anything I can do for you in either place (especially the last) I need not tell you how glad I shall be, to do it.

Charley sends his love, and his sisters beg to add their small remembrances. Mrs. Dickens again adds messages which I do not send: and I have a very touching letter from Miss White, in which she expresses her gratitude to an unknown person, with as much sincerity and earnestness as ever I saw expressed in words, in my life.

Kindly keep me in "Miss Meredith's" recollection. And ever believe me Dear Miss Coutts,

Your most obliged and faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To MR FRY,[†3] 1 DECEMBER 1845

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1912; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 1 Dec 45.

Concerning a vacancy on the staff of the Daily News.

To JOSEPH PAXTON, 1 DECEMBER 1845†

MS Office of the Daily News Ltd.

90 Fleet Street | Monday First December | 1845.

My Dear Sir.

I intend going to Liverpool myself,[†1] in a week or so, to blow vague Trumpets for the Daily News. [†a]As it will be a part of my mission to appoint the Agent,[†2] I will send for the gentleman you recommend, immediately on my arrival there. We have several previous offers; but this appears to be full of promise.[†a]

I am regularly in harness now;[†3] and we are getting on, vigorously and steadily. Mr. Powell[†4] comes to me today, when I hope to nail him tight. And for the second Sub-Editor I have received a proposal which is likely to drive Easthope (when he knows it) raving mad.[†5]

Our man in Paris[†6]—[†b]most important to our success[†b]—has distinguished himself already: being as familiar with the most secret moves upon the road, on the part of the other papers, as if he had done nothing else but receive their unlimited confidence, from his Cradle.

[†c]You will see that the advertisement is out today.[†c†7]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Paxton Esquire

To THOMAS HODGSKIN,[†1] 2 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

90 Fleet Street. | Second December 1845.

My Dear Sir

I have great pleasure in concluding your engagement with the Daily News, on the terms you mentioned to me this morning. My father will be happy to receive your signature to the agreement, as soon as you can conveniently call here: and to give you a counterpart, signed on behalf of the Proprietors.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hodgskin Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 3 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Third December 1845.

Dear Miss Kelly.

Yesterday was the first opportunity the Principals in our little Corps have had, of meeting together.

We find from the nature of our various engagements, that it would be most unsafe and inexpedient to postpone the Play for your benefit until January. We could not do so, with any reasonable prospect of fulfilling our promise. And therefore we have decided to act on Saturday the 27th. of this Month. You may proceed accordingly, in the full confidence of that being the Night.

In case you wish us to act at any Theatre but your own, it must not be larger than the Saint James's.

We will communicate with you again, in a very few days, and tell you what Play and afterpiece we shall then have decided on, and what we shall ask you to act. But the Night is subject to no change or discussion.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To J. H. STOCQUELER,[†1] [?1-4 DECEMBER 1845]

MS[†2] The Daily News Ltd. Date: after the appearance of the advertisement on 1 Dec, and before the leader in the English Gentleman on 6 Dec (see fn).

OFFICE OF THE DAILY NEWS
90, Fleet Street, and Whitefriars.

Dear Sir,

I really do not know that I can possess you with an idea of the designs & intentions of the paper, which will be more explicit than that which you may have already derived from the announcement in the Daily Journals. Its politics will be decidedly liberal and all measures tending to the improvement and happiness of the people, their education and advancement and civil & religious liberty will have its decided sympathy & support. It is intended to be an accurate and reliable business paper and its reports of all kinds of proceedings will be as full and good as possible. I have every reason to believe (knowing what pens will be at work) that it will be extremely well written: and, besides being what a first-rate daily newspaper now is, will be something that it is not. Great attention will be paid to foreign matters and we are particularly anxious to shine in reference to India.

So much for the "Daily News" which I hope will speak more emphatically for itself.

Personally I can hardly tell you how much I am indebted to you for your obliging letter and also for those previous passages[†3] to which you refer, which I assure you did not escape my recognition at the time.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Stocqueler Esquire

To R. H. HORNE, [?EARLY DECEMBER 1845]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: clearly in the period when CD was completing his establishment.

OFFICE OF THE DAILY NEWS
90, Fleet Street, and Whitefriars[†1]

My Dear Horne

What do you think of Eight Guineas pr. week and travelling expences—as a point to start from?[†2] Let me see you here one day, between 12 and 2, and I will then answer your other question.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To JOHN ALLCARD,[†3] 5 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

90 Fleet Street. | Fifth December 1845.

My Dear Sir.

Thinking that while we are in search of the Money Man,[†4] it might be worth while to take the enclosed note into consideration (though I have no reason to attach any weight to it) I venture to enclose it to you, and to ask whether you happen to know anything about the Writer.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Allcard Esquire

To BENJAMIN HAWES,[†1] 6 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Mr Colin Richardson; Benjamin Hawes Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth December 1845.

My Dear Sir

Our friend Fonblanque has made a suggestion to me in reference to the New Morning Paper with which I am (as you are perhaps aware) intimately connected; on which I should greatly like to have a few minutes conversation with you, if you will kindly inform me what time is most convenient to you for the purpose.

It relates to the engagement of a gentleman, for commercial treatises and so forth, whom Fonblanque says you know well, and who would be of great service to such a design.[†2]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Hawes Esquire. MP.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 7 DECEMBER 1845†

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventh December 1845.

Dear Miss Kelly

[†a]We have decided on acting an altered version of The Elder Brother, a very remarkable play by Beaumont and Fletcher[†a†3]—and Comfortable Lodgings;[†4] in which latter piece, we hope you will do Madame Pelagie yourself, and give Antoinette to whomsoever you please.[†5]

[†b]We shall have the Parts in the Elder Brother, on Wednesday, and we purpose coming to your Theatre,[†b] if you will have the float lighted, to compare them,[†1] at 6 precisely. There will be a little part for Miss Hinton.[†2] Will you have the goodness to ask her to be there: and also the young Lady who will play in the farce?

As the time is so short, we must be very punctual and particular in the Rehearsals.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W[ILLIAM] CARPENTER[†3] and CHARLES [R.] CARTER,[†4] [8 DECEMBER 1845]*

Envelope only, MS Private. Date: PM 8 Dec 45. Address: W. Carpenter Esquire | Charles M. Carter Esquire | London Mechanics' Institution.[†5]

To BENJAMIN HAWES, 8 DECEMBER 1845

Extract in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 174; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 8 Dec 45. Address: Catalogue has "Howes" in error.

I am sorry that I had appointments[†6] at both the times you suggested to me in your kind note of Saturday. I will take the chance of catching you for a moment before you leave home tomorrow morning. But pray do not depart in the least from your usual order of proceedings on my account.

I am My Dear Sir | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Hawes Esq., Junior

To LORD NUGENT,[†1] 10 DECEMBER 1845

Mention in Dutton's catalogue, c. 1931-8; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 10 Dec 45.

Referring to Lord Johnny.[†2]

To THE EDITOR OF THE OXFORD & CAMBRIDGE REVIEW,[†3] 10 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Benoliel Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Tenth December 1845.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Editor of the Oxford and Cambridge Review, and begs to say that he would feel the greatest pleasure in complying with his request, but that he has always instructed his Publishers to shew no preference in any such case, but to send out their presentation copies to all the Magazines and Reviews on the same day.[†4] He feels that reasonable ground of complaint might exist, if he ever departed from this rule; and he is confident that the Editor of the Oxford and Cambridge Review will take no umbrage at this reply to his note, when he assures that gentleman that no personal friendship or regard has ever, in any case, led to its infringement.

To H. G. ADAMS,[†5] 11 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh December 1845

Dear Sir

I regret to say, that I have private reasons for declining to interfere in the Election you mention. I have great faith, however, in the good intentions and sincerity of the Managers of the Athenaeum; and I really believe that the applications will be fairly judged on their own merits.[†1]

I am much indebted to you for your notice of my book;[†2] to which Captain Johns[†3] had previously directed my attention. I begged him to say thus much to you, if he should ever have an opportunity of doing so.

The New Paper, I fear (having a very large and expensive Establishment already completed) does not offer any vacancy to which I could recommend you. Nor do I feel justified: knowing the extent of correspondence already arranged: in holding out a hope that there is likely to be one.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To THOMAS COOPER, 11 DECEMBER 1845

MS Mrs Renee Metivier Black.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh December 1845.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say that there is no chance of my being useful to your friend in the manner you suggest; for a very large Establishment has been formed for the New Paper in every one of its working departments: and there is no Vacancy whatever, to which I could recommend him.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Cooper Esquire

To FRANK STONE, [17 DECEMBER 1845]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly 17 Dec 45 as CD had just returned from Liverpool.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Afternoon

My Dear Stone. I write to you in great haste; having just returned from Liverpool; and having to dress and go out to dinner.

We are obliged to act for Miss Kelly on Saturday the 3rd. of January—short notice! We act Fletcher's Play (altered for the purpose) of The Elder Brother, in which there is no character for you. But send for "Comfortable Lodgings"

(No. 215 of Cumberland's Acting Plays) and study "Mr. Bonassus"[†1] at Railroad speed. That is the farce; and the part is a good one.

We rehearse both play and Farce on Friday Evening at Miss Kellys. We take the Play first, and begin at 6.

Ever Yours
CD.

To THOMAS FRASER,[†2] 19 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Yale University Library.

90 Fleet Street | Nineteenth December 1845.

My Dear Sir

I quite concur in everything you say in your note of yesterday. We are not likely to differ on such topics, I am very sure.

I am obliged to run away this morning for an hour or two, to save myself from being more direfully slaughtered than is absolutely necessary, at the English Opera House.[†3] But I shall be back again between 2 and 3, when I shall hope to see you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM DAVIDGE,[†4] 22 DECEMBER 1845

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Second December 1845.

Sir.

I beg to thank you for your obliging note and its enclosure, which shall be disposed of as you desire and as it deserves.

Let me assure you that I fully appreciate the honor you do me: not only in making my books the subject of your lectures,[†5] but in entering into your theme with so much warmth and earnestness.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Davidge Esquire

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 22 DECEMBER 1845

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second December 1845.

My Dear Sir

I am very much pleased by your interest in the Cricket. I had great satisfaction in the writing of it, and have an uncommonly strong belief in it.

I hadn't the courage to go to the English Opera House on Saturday, but they tell me it is very well played there.[†1] I took great pains with the "getting up" of the little piece: to the end that I might be slaughtered as gently as possible. And from what I saw of the Rehearsals, I really believe it is better done than anything of the kind has yet been.

I walk to Harrow still—was nearly blown away, yesterday, on Hampstead Heath—went to Finchley the other day in the pouring rain—take a cold Shower Bath every morning—and oil the Machinery of the Daily News, 'till the afternoon.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all your house. When shall I see the Palazzo Peschiere again, I wonder!

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Edward Tagart.

We are going to act, for the last time, for Miss Kelly's Benefit, on Saturday the 3rd. of January. Fletcher's play of the Elder Brother, and Peake's farce of Comfortable Lodgings.

To T. J. SERLE, 23 DECEMBER 1845

MS Princeton University Library. Address: T. J. Serle Esquire | Uxbridge Gardens | Bayswater.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third December 1845.

My Dear Serle.

We have got to play once more (for our sins) for Miss Kelly's benefit. And I am playing a harder game than that, every day, to boot. When the first of these projects has come off, I will see you about the Eltons. I fancy we shall be the committee in the end, whomsoever we summon.

Of course there is no question, and can be none, about all we have done.

I honor Esther very much. Her conduct has been gallant and true, throughout.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire.

To GEORGE HODDER, DECEMBER 1845*

MS[†1] Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: probably in latter half of Dec, near in date to John Dickens's other inquiries: see fn.

OFFICE OF THE DAILY NEWS | 90 FLEET STREET
December 1845

Sir

Having been informed by Mr. John Dickens that you have undertaken the duty of reporting the proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas, specially for the Daily News at an Annual Salary of Three Guineas per Week, I shall be glad if you will do me the favor (as a matter of form) to apprize me under your own hand, of your acceptance of the office.[†2]

Perhaps I may be permitted to point out to you the urgent necessity there will be for your Reports being supplied at the earliest possible moment after the rising of your Court. Any unnecessary delay on this head cannot but be productive of most serious inconvenience to the Paper, and this is therefore pressed upon you as a matter of paramount importance.

The Salary attached to the duties you are so good as to undertake will commence one week before the publication of the first number of the Paper. I shall have the pleasure of informing you, in due course, on what precise day it will begin to be payable: and on what Evening your first report will be expected at the Office.†3

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hodder Esqr.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 25 DECEMBER 1845†

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1845.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

†aIn addition to my other tickets, will you book (as friends of mine: for good places—a second row in the best boxes would do well for these two) Mr. and Mrs. Powell.†a†1

Will you instruct Charles when he comes on Saturday Night, to look, between that time and the Play, to all the Grooves and so forth, that everything may run smoothly and well? †bThe Gasman, too, should see to the Border battens.†b Will you also take care, in good time, that the orchestra does us credit? Moreover will you exert yourself about the Properties: and also about an intelligent boy to take care of them, and to act as Callboy too?

†cThe Butler in the play—who, in the fourth act says one speech as "Servant". Will you secure the man you spoke of for this—give him his part—and tell him to go to Nathan, and be measured for his dress? He should be called for Saturday.†c

I want everything to be well done; and, the time being short, am getting very nervous.

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly

To J. LUNN,†2 25 DECEMBER 1845

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue n.d.; MS 1 p.; dated "Christmas Day" 1845.

Thanking Lunn for his kind note.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 25 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1845

A Merry Christmas and a happy New Year, and many of 'em![†3]

My Dear Stanny

Do you think you will be well enough to take care of our Stage and Scenery for us, on Saturday Week? And shall I (if I don't see you next Saturday, when we rehearse all the Evening) let you know what the Rehearsal Nights are, in next week? I am in great tribulation for the want of you. They are so horribly imperfect,[†4] that I have no leisure to see after the Carpentering part of it: and leaden weights are on my mind, in consequence.

I met your turkey in Tottenham Court Road last night. He was looking very well,—and so was Drury.[†1]

Affectionately Yours always

CD.

To MRS BALL WILSON,[†2] 25 DECEMBER 1845†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1845.

My Dear Rebecca

[†a]I would counsel your friend, by all means, to have patience with the book-seller, and wait the publication of the MS at the bookseller's time. It is easy to preach thus, you may say. But I have practised the doctrine in my young day: very much against my will.[†a]

As regards any influence of mine, I am quite powerless to assist this author.[†3] When I tell you that requests similar to yours are made to me, by scores, every week of my life, you will not be surprised at my having long ago released my Publishers from any obligation of attending to a recommendation of mine. It would be a mere form: and so recognised by them, immediately.

Kate and the children are all well, and send their loves. With divers Merry Christmases and Happy New Years; in which[†4]

[ ]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

Mrs. Ball Wilson.

To J. T. DANSON, 26 DECEMBER 1845

MS Lieut.-Col. J. R. Danson.

90 Fleet Street. | Twenty Sixth December 1845

My Dear Sir

You mentioned to me once that you might probably want, in your department of the Daily News, some one to transcribe Parliamentary Papers and so forth, under your direction. The object of this note (which does not require an answer) is, to say, that in case you should not desire to recommend particularly any person with whom you are acquainted, I have an application for such a Post, to which I should be most desirous—having the opportunity—to extend a favourable consideration.[†5]

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. T. Danson Esquire

To JOSEPH PAXTON, 27 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

90 Fleet Street. | Saturday 27th. December | 1845.

My Dear Sir.

I will send our Secretary[†1] to Manchester, in due course, to complete the arrangement with the Guardian[†2] People. I do not (this is between you and me) very much like their letter which is rather conceited. Mr. Tootal's[†3] estimate of a Manchester Reporter too, is blissfully in the clouds. But nothing of this, affects the value of the Correspondents.[†4]

We are full of activity in these regions: and bent on nothing but winning. It is war to the knife, now, with the Times.[†5] And if they don't repent the day that ever we started in the field against them, my name is not

CHARLES DICKENS
And I rather think it is.
Joseph Paxton Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 28 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace

Sunday Night | December Twenty Eighth 1845.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I send you, on the other side, the Prologue.[†1] It has the two merits of being short and modest. I hope you may like it.

I also enclose the list of Properties for the Farce, in order that you may adapt it to the calls, in reference to those properties which are taken on.

At 6 tomorrow, I shall be at the Theatre.

Faithfully Yours always

CD

To THOMAS BEARD, [?29 DECEMBER 1845]

MS Dickens House. Date: CD arranged to meet Beard on 28 Dec (John Dickens to Beard, 27 Dec 45, MS Suzannet); reference to Overland Express also fits 29 Dec 45 (see fn). Address: Private | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

90 Fleet Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Beard

Although I mentioned A'Beckett's engagement at the Times yesterday, it didn't occur to me to mention a very distinct and unmistakeable way of putting the case to the fierce Doctor.[†2] We stand, with reference to the Punch men, in exactly the same position as the Times and Chronicle. Jerrold is engaged with us—Thackeray is engaged by the Chronicle[†1]—A'Beckett by the Times.[†2] We have no other association with Punch of any kind of sort.—To which I may add that the interests and doings of more than one of the Proprietors of the D.N. have been, on more than one occasion, very distinctly and plainly attacked in it.

So much to use[†3] as you will.

Ever Faithfully

CD

I see your Overland Express triumphant this morning.[†4]

To MRS HANNAH BROWN, 29 DECEMBER [1845]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 29 Dec was a Monday in 1845, and letter is endorsed "1845".

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning December 29th.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I am much indebted to you (and no less to Miss Coutts) for your kind note. I have happily been enabled to send to Paris, instead of going myself; and will take the chance of finding you or Miss Coutts in Stratton Street, tomorrow (Tuesday) about 3 o'Clock.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown

To MRS HANNAH BROWN, [30 DECEMBER 1845]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the day after last.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I shall be more than delighted to dine with Miss Coutts today. And as I shall have that pleasure, I will not trouble her at 3 o'clock.

I am glad you like the Cricket. Its sale is quite enormous.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown

To JOSEPH PAXTON, 30 DECEMBER 1845

Text from Daily News, 14 Dec 1915.

90 Fleet-street | Tuesday Thirtieth December | 1845.

My Dear Sir

I have most special and urgent reason[†1] (in which participate)[†2] for wishing to see you here, with as little delay as possible, though only for a few hours. Pray order your Carpet Bag, and get into the train INSTANTLY.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Paxton Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 DECEMBER 1845

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, VI, 51; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 90 Fleet Street, 31 Dec 45.

Stating that there is no vacancy on the Daily News.

To JOHN WILLMOTT, [?31 DECEMBER 1845]*

MS The Governors of the Royal Shakespeare Theatre. Date: Handwriting suggests Dec 45 or early 46. The Pantomime at the Pavilion ran from 26 Dec to 31 Jan; the only likely Wed in Jan is 14 Jan, and it seems improbable that Catherine would delay so long before seeing the Cricket.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Willmott

Mrs. Dickens will be very much obliged to you, if you can let her have a Box for tonight.[†3]

It is really worth your while to send somebody to see the Columbine at the Pavilion. I don't even know her name;[†4] but I strolled in there by chance, the other night, and never saw a performance of that sort so light-hearted, graceful, pleasant, and agreeable. She is, moreover, young and very pretty; and would do you good service, I think, at the Lyceum.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [1845]

Extract in F, I, iv, 61. Date: 1845 according to Forster: presumably in relation to plans for the Daily News.

There never was anybody connected with newspapers who, in the same space of time, had so much express and post-chaise experience as I. And what gentlemen they were to serve, in such things, at the old Morning Chronicle![†1] Great or small it did not matter. I have had to charge for half-a-dozen break-downs in half-a-dozen times as many miles. I have had to charge for the damage of a great-coat from the drippings of a blazing wax-candle, in writing through the smallest hours of the night in a swift-flying carriage and pair. I have had to charge for all sorts of breakages fifty times in a journey without question, such being the ordinary results of the pace which we went at. I have charged for broken hats, broken luggage, broken chaises, broken harness—everything but a broken head, which is the only thing they would have grumbled to pay for.

To MRS HOOD, [?AUGUST-DECEMBER 1845]

Extract in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1128; Date: presumably after the closing of the Fund, and before the publication of Moxon's edn of Hood's Poems (preface dated Dec 45).

Declining to allow her to dedicate a book to him.[†2] I cannot honorably encourage you in the mistaken idea that such an association of my name "with any work would be a guarantee of success".

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?JULY-DECEMBER 1845]*

MS Francis Edwards. Date: Handwriting suggests 1845: July-Sep or Dec most probable, as Catherine was not going out in Oct-Nov.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning

My Dear Maclise

Kate is very much obliged to you, but will not interfere with the chance of your bestowing the enclosed elsewhere.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire

1846

January

To GEORGE BEADNELL,[†3] 1 JANUARY 1846

MS Myers & Co. Address (envelope, MS Professor Harry Stone): Immediate | George Beadnell Esquire | Messrs. Smith Payne & Co. | 2 Lombard Street

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning | New Year's Day 1846

My Dear Sir

I apprehend you will find no difficulty whatever, in getting good places of Miss Kelly No. 73 Dean Street Soho. The tickets (it is for her benefit, or I should have been delighted to send you some) are a guinea each. I would recommend you to send to her for as many as you want, in the course of today if convenient. I shall see her this morning, and will mention your name to her beforehand.

With all earnest wishes for you and yours in the years to come—for the love and remembrance of the years that are gone,[†1]

I am Ever | My Dear sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 JANUARY 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

90 Fleet Street. | New Year's Day 1846.

My Dear Bardolph.

The same to you—many on 'em—and a long life to both of us, and our jolly old friendship!

They are printing the book:[†2] and no copies are to be had until Saturday, when they will be in the Theatre. I would send you mine, but it has only my part in it; and the exquisite unintelligibility of such a document to all but the Initiated, would (I am afraid) drive Mr. Hastings mad.[†3]

Enclosed is your private ticket. Kate will leave Devonshire Terrace at ¼ before 7. If you don't appear, they will look for you at the Theatre. She, Georgy, you, Mac, and his sister, sit together.

When I am bullied through those Four Acts,[†1]—always regard me as being ready (in serious earnest) to stab Forster to the heart. It makes me so damned savage that I could rend him limb from limb.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD

To R. W. JELF,[†3] [?1 JANUARY 1846]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 JANUARY 1846*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | New Years Day 1846

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Very many happy years to you, and all who are dear to you!

I have written to Dr. Jelf (in answer to his kind note) that I will call on him next Tuesday Morning. When I have primed myself with all needful particulars, I will endeavour to find you at home, and will bring Charley with me.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. The Nomination Papers[†4] really are enclosed, this time.

To C. C. FELTON, 1 JANUARY 1846†

MS Harvard College Library. Address: By Cunard Mail Steam Packet. | Professor Felton | Cambridge | Massachusetts.

Office of the Daily News. | First January 1846.

My Dear Felton.

I am going to write a very short answer to your generous note. Read it in its spirit, my dear fellow, and not in its length.

Try the letters. There is a Commercial Correspondent at New York.[†1] So try them. Your politics are mine. I do not think you will write the worse for not being too intimate with the party leaders, or too near the roar of Washington. So try them, my dear Felton, and see how you like it. Write your first, by the Packet which leaves Boston in the beginning of February,[†2] and address it to the London Daily News, Care of Mr. Whitty Journal office, Liverpool. He will get it out of the Mail Bag (being our agent) with all speed. The American Newspapers are already provided for, on this side.

[†a]A general view (such as you would naturally take if you were writing to a friend) of Politics and News, will be excellent, I am sure. And the only way of ascertaining how you relish it will be by trying it. So I shall depend upon you.

We start on the 21st. of this Month,[†3] and are proceeding vigorously. The Times has done us enormous service by attacking me, in its jealousy of the Paper.[†4] It has brought all sorts and conditions of men, rallying round us gallantly.[†a]

The Cricket is a most tremendous success.[†5] It has beaten my two other Carols out of the field, and is going still, like Wildfire. [†b]Best regards from Kate. And loves from my little girls to yours. Ever My Dear Felton, Your Affectionate friend[†b]

CD.

Professor Felton

To MRS MACREADY, [?2 JANUARY 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting suggests early 1846; possibly the Friday after To Paxton, ?30 Dec, asking him to come to London immediately on urgent business.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening

My Dear Mrs. Macready. More thanks than I can pay, for your kind note of this morning. More blushes than my face will hold, for its still being unanswered.

I have been obliged to make an indefinite appointment with a gentleman to call here today (on the most urgent business) at his own leisure between 12 at Noon and 12 at Night. I have been looking for him all day. He has not come; and I dare not go out.

Let me claim your kind promise another time. And ever believe me

Faithfully Your friend | (Not Your Enemy and Hater)

CHARLES DICKENS

To LUIGI MARIOTTI, 2 JANUARY 1846

Mention in Catalogue of the Dreer Collection, 1890; dated 2 Jan 46.

To NICHOLAS TRÜBNER,[†1] 5 JANUARY [1846]

Extract in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1436; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 5 Jan 45—CD's error for 1846: see fn.

Thanking him for a volume. I assure you that it will afford me very great pleasure to call attention (so far as I can) to the Flemish Tales.[†2]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 6 JANUARY 1846

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Devonshire Terrace.

Fleet Street | Twelfth Day | 1846

My Dear Kate

The weather is so very bad, that I really think you had better send down to Edginton's in Piccadilly,[†3] and see if they can't, at a reasonable charge, put up an awning from the street-door to the Curb-Stone. They do such things every day. It is really too far for Ladies to go in the wet.

Affecy. always

CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 6 JANUARY [1846]*

MS New York University Library. Date: clearly 1846 since referring to Cricket.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth January 1845.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your attention in sending me the enclosed

Card.[†1] But as we have an annual Engagement[†2] for tonight, I return it, in case you should be able to make another use of it. Mrs. Dickens will be very thankful to you if you can kindly bestow another Box on her, any "Cricket" night, this week.

I am | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 JANUARY 1846

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh January 1846

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am sure I need not say to you that it would give me the truest pleasure to be of the least help to anyone in whom you have an interest; and that I should esteem myself most fortunate in having the power. But the Courier rumour has not the least foundation. The man who served me in that capacity abroad (one of the best Servants in the World) I recommended to some employment only the other day. He is constantly backwards and forwards here, to play with the children: who are his most intimate friends. And if I were to want any other courier, I think it would break his heart. I cannot conceive how your man got such information—unless he derived it from a newspaper. I see almost daily, in those sources of intelligence, the most prodigious accounts of my occupations, intentions, &c. &c., which are all so new to me that they make my hair stand on end.†3

I saw Dr. Jelf the other morning, (yesterday morning) and received the greatest courtesy and attention from him. As he thinks I had best see Dr. Major, who is the Head Master of the School,†4 I contemplate an inroad on that gentleman tomorrow Morning. When I have seen him, and know all that is to be done, I will bring my large Son to Stratton Street. He has been writing a Play lately. There are four acts in it; two scenes in each; and about twelve words in each scene. The Hero of the piece is a certain "Boy" (it is a nautical subject) who, by reason of his always having to introduce the other characters by asking them where they come from, and having to get them off by proposing to "come along" (which he invariably does, at the end of every scene) has a part, in proportion, longer than Hamlet.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To LEIGH HUNT, 7 JANUARY 1846

Extract in P. J. Dobell catalogue No. 24 (1923); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 7 Jan 46.

I hardly know how it came about, but I was not glad to receive your letter. It affected me at first, with a sensation of pain to find that you should have so carefully remembered what I had so utterly forgotten.†1

To C. CLAXTON,†2 8 JANUARY [1846]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: clearly 1846 since referring to Cricket and Daily News.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Eighth January 1845.

Dear Sir

I am glad to hear you have been crying over the Cricket. I hope you may come to Spectacles over the Newspaper, which will begin its career on the Twenty First.

The Times has done us a great deal of service.

I cannot forward the enclosed Paper to any of the Punch Writers, because I have taken a pledge (to myself) of Total Abstinence in all such cases; otherwise, so numerous are the MSS sent to me, it would be a misfortune and grievous calamity to any Public Writer, to know me. But, if you send it in a blank cover to the Punch office, I have no doubt it will be opened and read by the gentleman, whoever he be, whose duty it is to dispose of such communications.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Claxton Esquire.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†3] 8 JANUARY 1846

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 2 June 1911; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 8 Jan 46.

I shall be happy to receive the deputation who propose doing me the honor of waiting on me.[†4]

To THOMAS BEARD, 9 JANUARY 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Thomas Beard Esquire.

90 Fleet Street | Ninth January 1846

My Dear Beard.

If you be at leisure to see my Secretary Mr. Wills[†1] who bears this, for a minute or two, will you kindly do so? I have charged him with a business enquiry.

He is a very good fellow, and late Editor of Chambers's Journal.

About the dinner to our friend[†2] (who I thought spoke very manfully and honestly, yesterday). What would you recommend? Shall I write and ask him at once: giving him a week's notice?

Ever Yours
CD

To JOHN CATTERMOLE,[†3] 9 JANUARY 1846*

MS The Press Club, London.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth January 1846.

Sir.

I beg, in reply to your note, to express my regret that the Daily News cannot avail itself of your proffered services. The arrangements of the Paper are completed, I understand, in every Department.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Cattermole Esquire

To JAMES DAVIDSON,[†4] 9 JANUARY 1846

MS Mr Noel C. Peyrouton.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth January 1846

Dear Sir

I shall be happy to do you any service in my power at the Garrick (though I should think you would need none); but the Election rests, as perhaps you know, with the Committee, and not with the Members.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Davidson Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?12 JANUARY 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: The "Proprietor" must have been Joseph Paxton, who returned to London in the week beginning Mon 12 Jan; reference to injured hand confirms (see next). Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

My Dear Miss Coutts. I waited until the arrival of the Post this morning, before answering your kind note, as I had a half-appointment for this evening, with a gentleman resident in the Country, who is one of the Proprietors in my new Undertaking; and there was a chance of his not coming to town.[†1] I have now, however, heard that he is coming for this special purpose; and I am sorry to say he will deprive me of the pleasure of dining with you.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have hurt my right hand, and write illegibly.

To H. P. SMITH, 12 JANUARY 1846*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Office of the Daily News
12 January 1846

My dear Smith

Forster having done his best towards an amputation of my right hand middle finger, I dictate this note[†2] to thank you heartily for your remembrance of the Daily News & for your cordial and earnest manner of remembering it.

Faithfully Your's | My dear Smith,
CHARLES DICKENS

H. B.[†3] Smith Esquire

To C. R. LESLIE, 15 JANUARY 1846*

MS Mr Thomas L. Twidell.

Devonshire Terrace
Fourteenth—I mean Fifteenth | January 1846

My Dear Sir

If Saturday Week will suit you for a beginning, I shall be happy to sit to you in full costume,[†4] and as hirsute as I was originally, all day long. Let me know whether this will do or not.

I am very glad you passed so pleasant an Evening on Twelfth Night. It gave us the greatest pleasure I assure you to have your family among our guests.[†1]

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 16 JANUARY 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS[†2]
Sixteenth January 1846

My Dear Beard.

—Two points for you to mention to Mr. Baldwin;[†3] who I hope is better of that accursed rheumatism.

There is a Meeting at Norwich on Tuesday Night—a free trade Meeting—which has this novelty that Wodehouse[†4] (I think that's the way to spell his name; it looks like a Saxon God's) has challenged Cobden[†5] to a discussion, and they will go at it like a couple of Crichtons.[†6] We are all powerful on that Railway, and mean, if possible to have a special train in which our man or men can come up long before the Mail—write out, on the way—and give us his or their couple of Columns or so, in time for the first Edition. I don't think we should do this, but for a preliminary splash;[†7] and it is possible, therefore, that you may not think it worth while to join.[†8] But in the Spirit of the Alliance, I think it right to tell you exactly what we mean to do.

About the Queen's Speech.[†1]—Can you help us to any outline? I merely ask the question, as your information may be uncommunicable. The Times will have it, I hear; and there are prophets who foretell its imparting the same to the drowsy but comparatively virtuous old Chronicle.

Ever My Dear Beard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 16 JANUARY 1846*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Sixteenth January 1846.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I have been wanting to write to you every day since I last saw you, but have had no hand to do it with until now.

We know each other so well, and you have shown me your nature so frankly and generously, that I have no hesitation in asking you to consider whether you can reconcile it with your other engagements to let me have for the Daily News (in the strictest confidence) any sort of intelligence you may like to communicate of the sayings, doings, rumours, and movements, in that World which you know all about. Such communications from you, would be of inestimable service to the Paper; and if you will tell me how many Hundreds a Year the Paper may pay you in return, I will answer for its being as delighted as a Paper can be, to have the opportunity.[†2]

I feel, my dear Lady Blessington, that I should be but a poor fellow if I had any delicacy in approaching that part of the subject; and that I should pay you but a slight compliment if I avoided it in the least. My personal recognition of your assistance, as my dear friend, it is idle to speak of; for that is far removed from any such considerations. But in my very different capacity as the representative of a body of Proprietors, I hold myself as much bound to recognize it plainly, as I feel pretty sure you will.—Just as I have a very distinct recognition indeed, of my own remuneration.

I shall be very glad to hear a few words from you. Meantime with love to Count D'Orsay, I am Ever

My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington

To R. S. HOBBES,[†1] 16 JANUARY 1846

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth January 1846

Sir

I am extremely sorry to say that it is not in my power to be of any service to you. The Establishment of the Daily News is quite completed, as I understand, in all its Departments; and I know of at least a score of gentlemen who are candidates for the first vacant post in connexion with it, that may offer.

Nor have I the least idea who is the Editor of Bentley's Miscellany.[†2] My knowledge of that Magazine ceased with my own Editorship, seven or eight years ago.

I write to you in great haste, being much pressed for time. But I beg you to believe that I am not indifferent to your note, and that I wish I could return a more encouraging reply to it.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. S. Hobbes Esquire

To JOSEPH PAXTON, 16 JANUARY 1846*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Sixteenth January 1846

My Dear Sir

By all means let us have the order from Mr. Hudson,[†3] for a Special Engine, if it can possibly be managed. It will enable us to make a hit in our very first Number.

I should like to know when and where we can get it from you in town here (if you get it) on Monday Night, as a Reporter will be in waiting to start off immediately on its receipt.

Captain Taylor[†4] writes from Paris this Morning, that his Petition was received with the greatest interest by the Count St. Aulaire,[†5] and that the idea excited him extremely, as one of most uncommon importance. The Lords of the Admiralty have granted the permission on this side of the Water.

I hope we shall derive great reputation from the trial.[†1]

Everything looks well for our Start. I can't sleep; and if I fall into a doze I dream of first numbers till my head swims.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Paxton Esquire

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 17 JANUARY 1846*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Seventeenth January 1846

My Dear Lady Blessington

I am quite delighted with your letter. It occurs to me that you must have some figures in your mind, as what you would think fair. Will you tell me what they are? Without committing you at all, I will then sound the Money-Managers without the least delay, and write to you again before the Evening.

The agreement will be decidedly, for a year; and it could be stated on the face of it, that if renewed at the expiration of that time, it should be at a higher rate. I would propose for your satisfaction that you and the Money-Managers aforesaid, should interchange the form of agreement which is entered into with the Leader-Writers, who are all treated with in strict confidence.

Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington

To DR EPPS,[†2] 17 JANUARY 1846

Mention in Hodgson's catalogue, Dec 1921; dated 17 Jan 46.

To LORD ROBERTSON, 17 JANUARY 1846*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth January 1846

My Dear Lord Robertson.

The quotation is an admirable one. But you will be glad to hear that there have been some fifteen or twenty Editions[†1] of the Cricket, already printed. It has done more than either of its predecessors: and has been a most prodigious success.

The new calling shall not long supersede the old one. I should be glad to establish the Paper well, if I could. My share of it would then be a fine property.

Do not charge me with not thinking of you. I do so, very often. I go to the Puppets with you, never less than once a week: and see you, perpetually, in that Lemonade Shop perplexed with a handful of tin riches, bestowed upon you by the Landlord.

Also your travelling-hat is enshrined in my dearest recollection.

So are you, and always shall be.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Robertson.

To THOMAS BEARD, [?MID-JANUARY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: after 9 Jan, when CD was still writing from 90 Fleet St, and probably shortly before the first number. Address: Wait | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Saturday Evening

My Dear Beard

I have altered the plan[†2] very much, and made it one that is more likely, I think, to suit you—I can't come over, but before you see your Governor[†3] tonight, will you give me a call in Devonshire Terrace? It's important.

Ever
CD.

To T. N. TALFOURD, [?MID-JANUARY 1846]†

MS Mr Arnold Ziegler. Date: possibly connected with last.

Whitefriars | Saturday Night

My Dear Talfourd.

We of the Daily News Proprietorship, wish, in a case of sudden emergency (only Bradbury and Evans & I) to see you tomorrow[†4] (Sunday). [†a]Will you kindly make an appointment for the Afternoon by Bearer.[†a] It is a most pressing case,

[†b]or I would not trouble you. We shall not detain you more than a quarter of an hour.[†b]

Affecy. Always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [20 JANUARY 1846]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly 20 Jan, the Tuesday after To Lady Blessington, 17 Jan; her first contribution appeared 22 Jan.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Tuesday Noon

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I have been involved in such an overwhelming pressure of business, and we are all so torn to pieces here,[†1] that I have not been able to see the Money Men until today. They were with me, for the first time, when your Messenger arrived.

I should frankly tell you that Eight Hundred Pounds is certainly too much for them. Not as being too much for you, but as being more than I think it likely any Newspaper—but certainly a new one—could afford to devote to that branch of Intelligence; which is one, as you know, of very many, and forms but one item in a sum of more than a Thousand Pounds per week. I have not compromised you in any way, but I have ascertained this, beyond a doubt.

If you think you could reconcile it to your views of the subject (the justice of which I perfectly comprehend) to begin on a decidedly lower scale, and to leave the adjustment of it, for a very few weeks, to me, rely on my bringing them to the highest point to which they think they can reasonably go.[†2] If that should not please you, then let Forster and I arbitrate for the Past (the then past, I mean, of course) and release you handsomely and without offence on either side.

I shall be very anxious to know what you think of this. I should have written to you by this time, though I had not heard from you.

Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington

To J. J. HARRISON,[†1] 20 JANUARY 1846*

MS[†2] New York Public Library.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
20 January 1846

Private

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter and to say that if you can do me the favour to call upon Mr. Wills (my secretary, a gentleman who can be treated with in entire Confidence and who perfectly represents myself) here, to morrow Wednesday evening at Nine o'clock, I shall be happy to pursue the subject you open to me.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. J. Harrison Esquire

To THE UNITED TRADES ASSOCIATION, [?20 JANUARY 1846]

Mention in The Times, 22 Jan 46. Date: shortly before 21 Jan.

Regretting his inability to take part in the soirée for Thomas Duncombe.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 JANUARY 1846]

Extract in F, V, i, 387. Date: 21 Jan according to Forster.

A little note written before going home at six o'clock in the morning saying they had been at press three quarters of an hour, and were out before the Times.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†4] [21 JANUARY 1846]

Envelope only, MS Eastgate House, Rochester. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | 9 Craven Hill | Bayswater. PM 21 Jan 46.

To THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY NEWS, 21 JANUARY 1846

Text from the Daily News, 22 Jan 1846.

21st January, 1846

SIR,

Will you excuse my calling your attention to a variety of typographical errors in your first number? Several letters are standing on their heads, and several others seem to have gone out of town; while others, like people who are drawn for the militia, appear by deputy, and are sometimes very oddly represented. I have an interest in the subject, as I intend to be, | If you will allow me, |

YOUR CONSTANT READER.[†1]

⁂ We can assure our good-humoured correspondent, that we are quite conscious of the errors he does us the favour to point out so leniently. The very many inaccuracies and omissions in our first impression are attributable to the disadvantageous circumstances attending the production of a first number. They will not occur, we trust, in any other.—ED. DAILY NEWS.[†2]

To THE REV. W. J. FOX, 21 JANUARY 1846

MS New York Public Library.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Twenty First January 1846

My Dear Fox

The boy is in waiting. I need not tell you how our Printer failed us,[†3] last night. I hope for better things tonight; and am bent on a fight for it. If we can get a good paper tomorrow,[†1] I believe we are as safe as such a thing can be.

Your leader, most excellent.[†2] I made bold to take out Bright's[†3] name, for reasons that I hinted at the other day,[†4] and which I think have validity in them. He is unscrupulous and indiscreet. Cobden never so.

It didn't offend you?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Fox Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, [22 JANUARY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: endorsed by Beard "The Daily News just started"; clearly 22 Jan, the day of the second number.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday

My Dear Beard

Tomorrow at 4.

I am delighted to say we have a Capital paper today. I sat at the Stone,[†1] and made it up with my own hands.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE REV. W. J. FOX, [23 JANUARY 1846]

MS Office of the Daily News Ltd. Date: clearly refers to the leader of 23 Jan: see fn.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Friday Morning | 1 o'clock

My Dear Fox

So well as I can make out, (and you know how difficult it is to make anything out at a Newspaper Office) Peel is decidedly playing false, and will creep into small holes, & compensate, and be quite true to himself. Which I need not say is being false to everybody else. I have therefore written in, at the point you mention, what one is pretty safe in writing about such a Customer; at the same time reserving (like the good Vicar of Wakefield)[†2] a means of coming out creditably in any case.[†3]

Ever Yours
CD

To JOHN LEECH, 23 JANUARY 1846

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: PM 23 Jan 46. Address: John Leech Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday

My Dear Leech

I am going (on account of not having enough to do!) to sit to Leslie as Bobadil. Can you send me my legs—my red legs[†4] I mean—in the course of tomorrow?

Ever Yours
CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, [24 JANUARY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly the Sat before Peel's speech on 27 Jan 46. Address: Immediate | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Saturday Afternoon

My Dear Beard

We intend—sub rosâ—having Peel's speech[†1] taken in short turns[†2] on Tuesday night; published in a Second Edition of that Morning's Paper as soon as he is down; and sent by Special Engines, to every town on every line in England.[†3] I suppose it would not be worth your while, as an old-Established Paper, to join in this? But if there be anything our men and Engines can do for you, apart from sharing, we shall be delighted to have them do it.

I want to express it also, to Paris. Would you feel disposed to do anything on this score?

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [?25 JANUARY 1846]*

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Date: almost certainly the Sunday before Peel's speech on 27 Jan 46. Address: The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS

Sunday Night

My Dear Lady Blessington

Have you heard anything tonight of an intention on the part of Peel to postpone his statement, or of any split with Graham?[†1] I cannot find it. Forgive me for troubling you at so late an hour (I have just come up from Richmond); and if you have not gone to bed, send me one line.

Ever Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

The Countess of Blessington

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 28 JANUARY 1846*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genoa | North Italy.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth January 1846.

My Dear De la Rue. Don't consider this a letter. I am going to bespeak your services in behalf of The Daily News. I will write to you, as the Inimitable Dick, shortly.

The matter is simply this:—in case you should ever receive from our correspondent at Rome,[†3] or in any part of Italy, a parcel addressed thus Monsr.

Emile
De la
Rue Messrs.
De la
Rue freres
Genova.

Y. Z.

Will you, immediately address it Monsr. Mitchell[†4] 18 Boulevard de Musée Marseille (preserving the Y. Z. in the corner) and send it to him by the earliest Steamboat? In case it should be a Red[†5] parcel, it would be worth paying a handsome Sum of money to get the Steamer from Genoa to start before its proper time, or to go to any expence (which would be immediately repaid of course), to get it on instantly, as in that case the Pope would be dead, or something extraordinary would have happened. The Red cover announcing something of great importance, always. You see I don't mind troubling you. For I know you don't mind it yourself. Ever Yours CD.

P.S. I had a letter from Madame De la Rue this morning.[†6] Give her my love, and tell her it was most welcome to me, and that I shall write to her, very soon. I find, after all this cramping, that I must put this paper into another half sheet. Your Newspapers will begin, tonight, to be dispatched regularly to Marseilles.[†1] The Daily News is doing extremely well.[†2] My regards to Thompson and his wife.[†3] Tell Thompson I will write to him very shortly.

To EYRE EVANS CROWE,[†4] [29 JANUARY 1846]*

MS Private. Date: PM 29 Jan 46. Address: E. E. Crowe Esquire | 5 Devonshire Place | Haverstock Hill | Hampstead.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS

My Dear Crowe

Welcome back! I hope you will nurse yourself at home, until you are all right and well.

It is easy to say to Lardner (if you desire to say so), that there is no vacancy on the Paper,[†5] and so get rid of him pleasantly. I would not myself, have anything to do with him on any consideration whatever.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD

E. E. Crowe Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 29 JANUARY 1846

Text from N, I, 734.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-Ninth January 1846

My Dear Miss Kelly,

I owe you Ten Guineas. Five for my own places—two for Mr. and Mrs. Powell—two for Sir Archer Croft[†6]—and one for Mr. Leslie, who would not receive his ticket free; owing you, he said, so much already for your splendid acting in old times.

I enclose you a cheque[†1] for the amount, and return your "Jewels" with many thanks.

Always Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EDWARD MOXON,[†2] 29 JANUARY 1846*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Twenty-ninth January, 1846.

My Dear Sir,

Taking it for granted that you wished me to send the enclosed[†3] to Mr Dilke,[†4] I did so. He returned it with the letter I now send you.

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Moxon Esquire.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [?30 JANUARY 1846]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: The only Saturday on which her paragraphs did not appear was 31 Jan. Address: The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington.

Friday Night

My Dear Lady Blessington.

An unexpected botheration at the last moment, has occasioned the postponement of your Paragraphs tonight.

They are very good indeed,[†5] I think. I wonder how you make so much of such a dull time.

It seems some man or other projected a paper under the title of The Daily News (an Evening paper) some Nine years ago; and asked Jerrold to write for it, which he agreed to do. The design was never pursued, or known, but he got a few Stamps, and he has a notion, I conceive, that he may use them to advantage now, by getting us to buy him off.[†6] He reckons, however, without his host—as we shall certainly put him to some small expence instead, & into Chancery besides.

I write with one eye open, and the other quivering. But with all my Eyes and heart, I am ever My Dear Lady Blessington

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have not forgotten your agreement. I will bring it to you myself. It is drawn, & the Counterpart also.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 30 JANUARY 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace
Friday Morning | Thirtieth January 1846.

My Dear Bradbury and Evans.

I cut the main subject of our conversation last night as short as possible, because I always desire to restrain myself from acting on impulse in any such case.

I quite agree with you in the necessity of the Paper being made perfect, if possible, and in the expediency of finding out where it can be improved.[†1] On the other hand, I doubt your counsellors in general, very much indeed. I examine and test anyone who counsels me, very closely; and when it is such a man as Mr. Tooke[†2] (of whom I spoke to you last night), I discard his advice altogether. But I have already told Mr. Paxton, and I have already warned you, that very sensible and far-seeing gentlemen well accustomed to newspapers regard the Railway policy of the D.N. as being too one-sided, and as threatening to taint it. And I think if you could get beyond deposit men, and provisional directors, and committee men, and the like, you would find this out. I have very little doubt if you do not, that the Times[†3] will discover it for you.

This, however, is not the point of my letter.

You know that I recommended Mr. Powell to you, as the man, of all others in London, best qualified to act as one of the Sub Editors of an enterprising Paper. You know that I was very anxious to secure him, and considered it a very great point when he was engaged, and have always spoken of him with great confidence.

One week after the starting of the Paper, you come to me, and give me to understand, on certain nameless authority (which you call "gatherings") that he is quite unfit for the place he holds![†1] I wish to know from whom you learn this: and I consider myself justified in putting you upon your honor to withhold from me the name of no person with whom you have taken counsel on this subject.

When I tell you, distinctly, that I shall leave the Paper immediately, if you do not give me this information, I think it but fair to add that it is extremely probable I shall leave it when you have done so. For it would be natural in any man, and is especially so in one in my position, to consider this, disrespectful, and quite unendurable. I am thoroughly disgusted, and shall act accordingly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury & Evans

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 JANUARY 1846]

Extract in F, V, i, 387. Date: 30 Jan according to Forster. From Office of the Daily News.

I want a long talk with you. I was obliged to come down here in a hurry to give out a travelling letter[†2] I meant to have given out last night, and could not call upon you. Will you dine with us to-morrow at six sharp?[†3] I have been revolving plans in my mind this morning for quitting the paper and going abroad again to write a new book in shilling numbers. Shall we go to Rochester to-morrow week (my birthday) if the weather be, as it surely must be, better?

To GIUSEPPE MAZZINI,[†4] [?LATE JANUARY 1846]

Mention in Daily News, 16 Feb 46. Date: some days before Mazzini's account of 3 Feb: see fn.

A letter in Italian enclosing two sovereigns.[†5]

February

To THOMAS BEARD, [1 FEBRUARY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly the Sunday before To Walter, 3 Feb. Address: Delivery | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

D.N. Office | Sunday Night

My Dear Beard.

I send you back Mr. Walter's letter, and have ordered £100 to be forwarded to him immediately. The Calcutta letters[†1] I have retained for the edification of Crowe and Costello.[†2]

Powell will come over to you, and arrange for the West Riding Election[†3] tomorrow.

He insists on my telling you that the Express[†4] was never once stopped for the D.N.; and that the only stoppages were when they took in water, & changed engines. I may as well say to you and Mr. Baldwin (but I didn't mention the probability to Mr. Walter that night) that by our influence at Birkenhead we detained the Irish Mail one hour.

The Express has done us a World of Good. We are going ahead famously.

Ever Faithfully & truly

CD

To [THOMAS HODGSKIN], [2 FEBRUARY 1846]†

MS Walter T. Spencer. Date: the day of the leader on Cobden's letter: see fn. Address: the subscription "—Hodgkin Esquire"†1 must be an error for Thomas Hodgskin.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am extremely sorry to hear from Mr. Danson that you appeared hurt by his coming to you last night on the subject of the leader you were kind enough to offer me.†2

The manner of his coming is simply this—†aI found he had written a Leader†3 on a main passage in Mr. Cobden's letter to the Tenant Farmers, and that it seemed to run counter to yours.†a†4 As I am not learned in the minute details of such a question, †bI begged him to read your leader—compare it with his own—and talk the matter over with you.†b Surely it is essential before writing on such subjects that you should be fully possessed of this gentleman's views; and as I have suggested some other occupation for him during the whole of this week, I considered it still more desirable that you should have this discussion—knowing that the field would be immediately open to you, if you thought fit to enter on it.

Your experience of me has been very brief, but I have been unfortunate if I have not been able generally to express to you the sincere desire I have to render an occupation which is sufficiently irksome in itself, as pleasant and agreeable as possible to every gentleman concerned; and to shew to each the delicate respect and consideration which I truly feel. I am not without a hope that on a review of this incident, you will feel that you acted—naturally, I have no doubt, but hastily, and without quite understanding what was intended on my part.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Hodgkin Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 FEBRUARY 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | "Morning Herald".

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Monday Afternoon | Second February | 1846

My Dear Beard

We contemplate expressing the whole Corn Law Debate down the Great Northern Railways—and publishing that Edition at 4 every morning.†1 This is, of course, a Dead Secret. Would you like to join?

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 3 FEBRUARY [1846]*

MS National Library of Scotland. Date: Tues was 3 Feb in 1846; reference to "the Paper" confirms.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Third February

My Dear Lady Blessington

I shall be delighted to dine with you tomorrow, and to wish Count D'Orsay many happy returns of his Birthday.

The Market Prices are always in the Paper, you will find, I think. One day they were omitted by accident; but only once.†2

Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington.

To J. WALTER,†3 3 FEBRUARY 1846

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1923; MS 1 p.; dated Office of the Daily News, Whitefriars, 3 Feb 46.

The cash you require was remitted yesterday. £200. The proprietors of the "Daily News" had already contemplated remunerating you in the way you suggest; the amount shall be arranged with Mr. Baldwin, which shall be done as soon as he is well enough to entertain the matter.

To W. H. WILLS, [3 FEBRUARY 1846]

MS New York Public Library. Date: Tues 3 Feb 46, since endorsed by Wills "4/2/46".

Tuesday Night

My Dear Mr. Wills.

I dine out tomorrow (Wednesday) and next day (Thursday)†4 and shall not be here, either evening, until rather late. Will you have the goodness to let the Sub Editors know this; and as I shall not wish to be detained here unnecessarily, to ask them to have ready for me anything (if anything) requiring my attention.

You may tell them at the same time, if you please, that I shall not be here, generally, on Sunday Nights; and that I shall always wish to let them know of the general arrangements for Sunday Nights, on Fridays before I go away.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 4 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Professor K. J. Fielding.

Devonshire Terrace | February Fourth 1846

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for reminding me of the necessity of attending the next meeting.[†1] I had made a memorandum of it, in pursuance of your former kind reminder.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To J. B. BUCKSTONE,[†2] [?EARLY FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in To Macready, ?10 Feb 46. Date: in time for Buckstone to receive and reply by 10 Feb.

Acknowledging his note.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 5 FEBRUARY 1846

Mention in James Tregaskis catalogue No. 558 (1904); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 5 Feb 46.

Making an appointment to call in Chesham Place.[†3]

To THOMAS BEARD, [5 FEBRUARY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: clearly 5 Feb: see fn. Address: Deliver | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

OFFICES OF THE DAILY NEWS | WHITEFRIARS
Thursday Night

My Dear Beard

Cheer up the Governor! Who cares!—I don't.

Think of OUR[†1] having a Bombay Times from our Alexandrian agent[†2]—posted at Kennington Cross too! (Something wrong. Black work Sir!) And we have lent it to you tonight.

Ha ha ha! Ha ha ha!

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, [?12 JANUARY-6 FEBRUARY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: after the move to Whitefriars, and probably not later than Friday 6 Feb (the last working day before CD resigned). Address: Wait | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office.

Whitefriars

My Dear Beard

I am very sorry to find you gone. I had the Leader-Writing Men here, and cod. not get rid of them. Shall I come round to you?

Faithfully Ever

CD

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 6 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS The Proprietors of Punch.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth February 1846

Dear Sirs

Mr. Beard has been with me this morning, to make an appointment for Mr. Baldwin to come here on Monday at One. When I think it most desirable that Mr. Forster should meet him; you taking counsel with Mr. Forster in the meantime.

Mr. Baldwin will desire to be put in communication, with whomsoever manages the accounts (I would certainly suggest Mr. Evans) that they may be examined and settled once a month. He also suggests that the Herald and Daily News should support each other in all possible retrenchments,[†3] and in conducting their papers with less expence and greater chance of profits.[†1] From what he says, there would appear to be no doubt that the Chronicle will go altogether, if the Daily News can wear out this bad time, and improve its mechanism. It is certain that they are playing a fast-losing game—that there will be a great loss (instead of gain) on the year's accounts—and that Easthope neither can nor will support it for six months as a losing paper.[†2]

I am confidentially informed that the Herald is also losing at this time.

I think Mr. Baldwin's idea of the two papers supporting each other in all possible retrenchment, a very sound and sensible one, and fraught with much advantage.

Please to send this letter on to Mr. Forster when you have read it. I shall see him today, but I should like him to know exactly what it contains.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I have looked over your letter a second time, since writing the above. I do not understand what you mean by "when you are to date from", or what it refers to.[†3]

To THE REV. W. J. FOX, [6 FEBRUARY 1846]

Text from typescript, Huntington Library. Date: clearly Fri 6 Feb, since the sonnet and Fox's leader appeared in the Daily News 7 Feb. Typescript reads "Friday 1850", clearly in error.

Devonshire Terrace, | Friday

My Dear Fox.

I have given out the Sonnet,[†4] for insertion.

If you can, in your tonight's leader, introduce any reference to Lord Morpeth's Election, I think it may be desirable.[†5] Don't you?

We will meet on Monday as usual. May I book you beforehand, for Monday night? It falls out that we shall have especial need of you then.

I am saving your postponed Leader for Monday morning.[†6]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS HODGSKIN or J. H. POWELL, [6 FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 1423; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Friday—clearly 6 Feb: see fn. Address: since catalogue gives as to Hodgskin or Powell, almost certainly belonging with envelope (Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery, 1908): Immediate | Thomas Hodgskin Esquire, or J. H. Powell Esquire, | Daily News.

Enclosing a literary notice and a squib.[†1]

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [9 FEBRUARY 1846]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly 9 Feb after return from Rochester.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I found the Jar (what a noble Jar it is!) of Ginger, awaiting me tonight on my return to town. I have been breathing fresh air on the top of Rochester Castle.[†2] It is very kind of you to have remembered it. Thank you!

The Paragraph about Prince Albert is very curious and quite new to me—but I am afraid to insert it. You have no idea how many people would take offence at it, if it appeared in a New Paper.

The Paragraph about Prince Napoleon[†3] was objected to (I meant to have told you this, the other day) by Crowe. He quite concurred in the spirit of it, but thought it unwise, with reference to our French Relations, to put it in. The subject of it coming distinctly within his department, I acquiesced.

Ever Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 FEBRUARY 1846]

Extract in F, V, i, 387. Date: "in the night of Monday, 9 February" according to Forster.

Written when he was tired to death and quite worn out to say that he had just resigned his editorial functions.[†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, [?10 FEBRUARY 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting points to a date between Oct 45 and Apr 46; the only record of a call by Buckstone in Macready's Diaries at this period is Sat 14 Feb 46—therefore probably the previous Tues.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Macready.

I have received the enclosed note from Buckstone—having reference to the note I wrote to him (and described to you)[†2] in acknowledgment of his first communication.[†3] I can't come to Clarence Terrace at the time he mentions—being busy—but I should like to know at your leisure what passed between you.

Always affectionately Yours

CD

W. C. Macready Esquire

To J. T. DANSON, [11 FEBRUARY 1846]

MS Lieut.-Col. J. H. Danson. Date: Accompanying envelope is postmarked 12 Feb 46 (Thurs). Address: J. T. Danson Esquire | 8 Shaftesbury Crescent | Eccleston Square.

D.N. Office[†1] | Wednesday Night.

My Dear Sir

I should be glad to have your opinion of the "figure" part of the enclosed letter.[†2]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD NUGENT, [12 FEBRUARY 1846]*

MS Miss Elena Klasky. Date: the first Thursday after the insertion of the "squib" on 7 Feb: see To Hodgskin or Powell, ?6 Feb and fn.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning

My dear Lord Nugent. If you will take potluck with me tomorrow at 6, I shall be delighted to see you. Forgive me for this tardy answer to your note.

I was delighted with the Squib—and let it off, instanter, (as you may have seen) in the Daily News.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Nugent

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 12 FEBRUARY 1846

Mention in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1259; dated Devonshire Terrace, 12 Feb 46.[†3]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 12 FEBRUARY 1846

MS New York Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twelfth February | 1846

My Dear George. I am really ashamed to say, that Wills gave me your letter punctually; but that in the hurry of many engagements I quite forgot it. I now enclose a cheque in Miss White's favor, for Ten Pounds.[†4]

Will you dine here next Tuesday as ever comes, at Half Past Six? Answer this!

Ever Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM GRANET, [?12 FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in To de la Rue, 16 Feb 46. Date: perhaps including an invitation to dinner, and so on same date as To Cruikshank, 12 Feb.

To CHARLES MANBY,[†1] 12 FEBRUARY 1846

Mention in Sotheran's catalogue, No. 822 (1931); MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 12 Feb 46.

Directing that his scientific reports should be forwarded to Mr Forster at the Daily News.

To MR SHUM,[†2] 12 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thursday Twelfth February | 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Shum, and begs to express his regret at having been prevented, by absence from town, from attending the interesting Meeting[†3] of last night.

To G. F. YOUNG,[†4] 12 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Mr Noel C. Peyrouton.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twelfth February 1846.

Dear Sir

I assure you I shall be very happy to confer with you at any time you may appoint, in your own neighbourhood, on the subject of your letter; and to have personal knowledge of the condition of that district. I could devote any Morning next week that may suit you, to this purpose. You write to me so freely, that I desire to respond in the very plainest and readiest spirit.

I may mention that since the publication of my letter in the Daily News,[†1] I have had an opportunity (I do not feel myself at liberty to explain it in detail) of turning the information I possess or can acquire, on the subject of Crime and Ignorance among the Poor, to the very best account; and that I have strong hope of striking a great blow with it within a few months.[†2]

I leave the time of our appointment to you, if you please. And I take it for granted that you are friendly to the abandonment of all sectarian distinctions in Schools,[†3] and the establishment in them of a common ground on which all kinds of christians may meet and be enlightened.[†4]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Frederick Young Esquire

To WILLIAM HAZLITT, [?12 FEBRUARY 1846]

Text from N, I, 734. Date: The only extended notice of the French plays was on 12 Feb.

Thursday afternoon

My Dear Sir,

I saw the notice of the French Play this morning[†5] and immediately perceived that the Readers had cut and maimed you. All I know about these gentlemen is, that there are plenty of them, and that they are well paid—unless I add of them that they are the very worst I ever had anything to do with in my life. I have laid in a chaldron or two of coals, and will haul your reader over them this evening.

I will communicate with you in reference to the other matter as soon as I have a minute's leisure.

My dear Sir, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 15 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Fifteenth February | 1846

My Dear Macready.

I want to see Jeffrey, and should very much like to run down to Edinburgh with you—remain there a couple of days—and then return solus. I wish you would tell me what your plans for starting, are,[†1]—that I may revolve the feasibilities.

Did you see my Hymn for the Wiltshire Labourers, yesterday?[†2] I dined at Lord John Russell's yesterday, and found it had made some impression.

Affecy. always
CD.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 16 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur | M. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genoa | North Italy.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Sixteenth February 1846.

My Dear De la Rue.

Your business-like letter is perfectly plain and correct in all particulars. In the case of a Red Parcel, send straight to Paris if you think it best. But it is extremely probable that no Parcel at all may ever come to you. In the ordinary case, the correspondent sends his letters by Post; and nothing may happen to render an Express necessary. Still, I thought it best to take the precaution, as the Daily News might perhaps, through that means, make a hit. William[†3] mentioned to me about your Subscription. Now, the plain matter of fact, is, that you will just button up that pocket of yours, and pay no Subscription at all. Whenever a Banking House (as is frequently the case in many parts of the World) renders such assistance as I have asked of you, the Newspaper is always sent free, as a compliment of course. The Name of the Agent in Paris is M. A. Fillonneau.[†4] His residence Rue de Chaussée d' Antin—48 bis, I think; but I am not quite sure of the No. without previously sending to the office. I will tell Madame, when I write to her. Which will be soon, tell her, with my love.

William dines here tomorrow, with Mr. Petrie,[†1] and your Yorkshire friends.[†2] Tell Madame he was here the other day. He seems (not unnaturally) to avoid the subject of his Love.[†3] Therefore, I do not feel it delicate or right to lead him to it. But I have written to him, earnestly, in the tone she suggests.

I am again a gentleman. I have handed over the Editing of the Paper (very laborious work indeed) to Forster; and am contemplating a New Book—most probably in Numbers. The Daily News is a great success—expences at first, however, most enormous of course. It is very much respected by the good men of both parties who are exceedingly anxious that it should succeed, by reason of its forbearance and sense of responsibility. But I am not quite trustful in, or quite satisfied with, some of the people concerned in its mechanical and business management, which is a very important part of such an undertaking. Therefore, I confine myself to writing, which is much more agreeable. I hope you have had a laugh at the 'Retreat at Albaro'. There is, to day, the first part of a Description of Genoa, which I suppose will not reach you, until after you have received This.[†4]

The general impression here, is, that the Americans are Raving Mad. But it does not seem so probable today (a Packet arrived last night)[†5] that they will force on a War,[†6] as it has done for some weeks past. The Railroads are beginning to recover; and it is said that the really good schemes will come out very well indeed, after all. I hope so.

Maclise is taken with one of his fits of seclusion, and is never beheld by Mortal Eye. I believe he shaved last, on or about the fifteenth of January. We went down to Rochester (Kate, Georgy, Jerrold, and I) to spend my birthday; and when I asked him to come, he observed "that he didn't see the use of it". I believe he is painting very hard at a large Picture for the Academy Exhibition,[†7] which has to be sent in, early in April; and that he works day and night. He has engaged himself to dine here, tomorrow—but I don't much expect him. He says he wishes he was a Wild Man. Which I tell him is unreasonable and discontented; he being already something so very near it.

What a Beast old Brown is! I am heartily glad I didn't give Thompson[†8] a letter to him. It is a brilliant thing that unconscious of his knowledge of me, he should have been impudent to Thompson. Which T describes to me very well. I mean, by the way, to write to Thompson as soon as I can find time. I constantly talk of coming back to Genoa for another Year; and I wish to Heaven I could so pluck myself up by the Roots again, as to let the house—pack up—buy another Carriage—and set off. But that, I fear, can't be just yet. When are we to expect you in London? You haven't fixed the day yet. Ever Heartily Yours my Dear De la Rue—

CHARLES DICKENS

To AMÉDÉE PICHOT, 16 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: A Monsieur: | Monsr. Amédée Pichot | Revue Britannique | 1 Rue Grange Batelière | à Paris.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth February 1846.

Dear Sir

My connexion with The Daily News, does not extend to the Editing of that Paper in any of its Departments. But I have a very strong interest in its well-doing, and was active in projecting and establishing it.

The Foreign Staff[†1] is such a very large one, that I believe there remains nothing to be done in that way. But I do not feel the less indebted to you for your kind and disinterested offer.

I shall be delighted to receive your Version of the Cricket,[†2] through the hands of the Agent of the Daily News in Paris—M. Fillonneau, Rue de Chaussée d'Antin.

About the 'Mug of a bell'—In old times, Bells used to be christened, with great solemnity. When children are christened, it is a common custom in England for the Godfathers and Godmothers to give them Silver Mugs. Carrying out the idea of the Bells being christened, like children, I say, in the Chimes, that Henry the Eighth melted down their Mugs, because that king despoiled the churches of their Gold and Silver Wealth, and appropriated it to his own use.[†3] Do you understand?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Amédée Pichot

To W. H. WILLS, 16 FEBRUARY 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth February 1846

My Dear Mr. Wills

I miss you a great deal more than I miss the Paper.

May I ask you to reply to all strange letters, coming to the office addressed personally to me, that my connexion with the D.N. does not extend to the consideration or settlement of such matters, and that I have forwarded the letter to the Editor—dating, in all such cases, from here. I have sent this answer to all the enclosed documents that I have marked with a X.[†1]

Among them, is an uncrossed Epistle from one Mrs. Dawson Wetherell,[†2] referring to a first letter which I have not received. Do you know what it is about? If she want money, I do not like her style of correspondence at all, and would rather plead (as well I may) the immense number of similar appeals.

Always Believe me[†3]
[CHARLES DICKENS]
W. H. Wills Esquire

To G. F. YOUNG, 16 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Yale University Library. Address: George Frederick Young Esquire | Limehouse.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth February 1846

Dear Sir.

I regret to say that I have dinner Engagements on both the days you mention. But—not to postpone the matter—I will call on you on Wednesday afternoon at about a Quarter before Three. It will be easy for me to return to town, in good time for my engagement.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Frederick Young Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 17 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth February 1846

My Dear Mr. Wills

Many thanks for your kind note! I will not hesitate to trouble you one of these fine afternoons, when I find myself very "hard up" for assistance.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To [?THE REV. W. J. FOX], [18 FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in To Wills, 18 Feb.

To WILLIAM HOWITT,[†1] 18 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Jarndyce Books.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth February 1846

My Dear Sir

As I am not the Editor of the Daily News, and am very rarely at the office, your letter was opened by a Confidential Secretary who attends there. I mention this, to account for my not immediately thanking you for your valuable communication, and expressing the pleasure the Authorities have in availing themselves of it.[†2]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire.

To CHARLES MANBY, 18 FEBRUARY 1846

Summary in N, I, 736 and Sotheran's catalogue No. 822 (1931); MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Feb 46.

As he is not the editor of the Daily News, he cannot make engagements, but will take care the recommendation is not lost sight of.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 FEBRUARY 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth February 1846

My Dear Mr. Wills.

I have written to Howitt, and to Mr. Manby, and to Reynard the Fox.[†3] I think the pamphlet by the latter gentleman had better "be dealt with", favorably, "on the premises".

Do look at the enclosed from Mrs. Whats-her-name.[†1] For a surprising audacity, it is remarkable even to me, who am positively bullied, and all but beaten, by these people. I wish you would do me the favor to write to her (in your own name and from your own address) stating that you answered her letter as you did, because if I were the wealthiest Nobleman in England I could not keep pace with one twentieth part of the demands upon me—and because you saw no internal evidence in her application to induce you to single it out for any especial notice. That the tone of this letter renders you exceedingly glad you did so; and that you decline, for me, holding any correspondence with her. Something to that effect, after what flourish your nature will.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always

CD

W. H. Wills Esquire

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 19 FEBRUARY 1846

Extract in N, I, 736 from unidentified catalogue; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Feb 46. Address (envelope, MS Professor Harry Stone): William Cullenford Esq. | Stage Door | Theatre Royal Adelphi. PM 20 Feb 46.

The day and place of the proposed dinner will suit me perfectly well.

I have written a note to the Editor of the Daily News and begged him to mention the subject in a paragraph.[†3]

To AUGUSTUS DICKENS, 20 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Mrs Caroline Trollope.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1846.

My Dear Augustus. I have not the slightest idea of the name of the man from whom that Post Office order for £1, came. He wrote to me, but his letter has been destroyed with a hundred others. All I remember, is, that he is a Catholic Priest at Stradbally[†4] (wherever that may be)—and that he sent it to me for the Ragged Schools. If you will ever say so much to Mr. Lawrence,[†5] Secretary's Office Post office, when you happen to be passing, I think you will find that there is not much difficulty in getting the money.

Affectionately Always

CHARLES DICKENS

Augustus Dickens Esquire

To THOMAS POWELL, 20 FEBRUARY 1846

Text from facsimile in Dawson's Book Shop, Los Angeles, catalogue No. 123 (1961).

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1846

My Dear Powell.

I sent your Epigrams, forthwith, to the working Editor of the D.N.[†1] I fear, however, that they may be considered too personal for that Immacculate[†2] Newspaper.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Powell Esquire

To F. M. EVANS, 24 FEBRUARY 1846

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth February 1846

My Dear Evans.

I have seen Mr. Stanfield on the subject of Illustrations for the Travelling Letters;[†3] and we purpose having about twelve—"drawn on Wood by George Stanfield, from designs by Clarkson Stanfield R.A." The first block to be ready a fortnight hence; the remainder to be furnished, two a week, until they are all done.

Mr. Stanfield wishes to know who are the best engravers on wood, of Landscape and architectural subjects, with small figures. If you will arrange with the best you can have, to have these blocks expected, and put in hand as they are supplied,—and will let me know that you have done so—the book will be fairly in progress.

He also wishes to know (and so do I) the size of the page. Upon this, I wish to see you, when you have considered the point. You will find me at home any morning between 11 and 1. That decided, we had best begin to[†4]

To ARTHUR HILL,[†5] 24 FEBRUARY 1846

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth February 1846

My Dear Sir

I am not a party to the Management of the Daily News (otherwise than as one who has an interest in the paper)—and must therefore refer your letter and its enclosure,[†1] to the Powers that be. But I will take care that it is promptly attended to; and that a communication be made to you on the subject, as soon as possible.

I was very sorry to lose the pleasure of coming to your interesting Party.—I am glad the Suffering Lady recovered—but not surprised; for what is Fame to a Polka!

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Hill Esquire

To [J. H. STOCQUELER], 24 FEBRUARY 1846*

Text from transcript by Professor Edgar Johnson (MS Maurice Inman, Inc.). Address: J. H. Stocqueler was editor of the English Gentleman: see To Stocqueler, ?1-4 Dec 45.

Devonshire Terrace | February 24, 1846

Dear Sir,

I am extremely sorry to hear that you have seceded from the English Gentleman;[†2] because your management of that Paper, rendered the title no misnomer.

It does not surprise me that Young England[†3] should be glad to get hold of anything in which it can exhibit itself. But it does surprise me very much, that anybody should give it the chance.

I have no connexion whatever, with the active management of the Daily News: having subsided (as I always intended) into my old, and much-better-loved pursuits. And I am sure that at this time, the Paper has no vacancy of any sort or kind; being, to say the truth, overcrowded. But I will make known to the authorities there, what you have made known to me; and I think if they should ever have the opportunity of availing themselves of your services, they would be really glad to do so.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

][†4] Esquire
P.S. I return your papers, in case you should have occasion for them.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE,[†5] 24 FEBRUARY 1846

Text from MDGH, I, 149.

1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park, | February 24th, 1846.

I cannot help telling you, my dear White, for I can think of no formal use of Mister to such a writer as you, that I have just now read your tragedy, "The Earl of Gowrie,"[†1] with a delight which I should in vain endeavour to express to you. Considered with reference to its story, or its characters, or its noble poetry, I honestly regard it as a work of most remarkable genius. It has impressed me powerfully and enduringly. I am proud to have received it from your hand. And if I have to tell you what complete possession it has taken of me—that is, if I could tell you—I do believe you would be glad to know it.

Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To F. M. EVANS, 26 FEBRUARY 1846

Text from Jesse Quail, "CD and the 'Daily News' ", The Nineteenth Century and After, LXXXVIII (1920), 632-42.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twenty Sixth February 1846

My Dear Evans,

As you wish to know why I addressed myself to you in my letter of Tuesday last, I will tell you. You are at liberty, of course, to communicate to your partner as much or as little of my reason as you please.

I addressed you, because I am not in that state of feeling with reference to your partner, which would render a personal negociation with him agreeable to me. I consider that his interposition between me and almost every act of mine at the newspaper office, was as disrespectful to me as injurious to the enterprise. And I entertain so strong a sentiment on this point, that I have already informed my successor in the Editorship that I would, on no account, attend any meeting of Proprietors at which he was likely to be present.

The two last instances in which he (without the slightest previous communication with me) took the course to which I so much object, may be enough to mention here. Firstly, I ordered a gentleman to be sent down into the country to attend an election of great importance[†1]—in reference to which proceeding he wrote a violent note to Mr. Powell(!) incorrect even in its facts. Secondly, a Mr. Rourke[†2]—I think that is his name—having been engaged by me for an essential set of services and at a small salary; and having his engagement duly reported by my father; was by his direction refused his first week's salary by Mr. Joyce, whose courtesy and understanding of the matters over which he presides appear to be upon a par[†3]—and was compelled to apply to me. The position in which I was placed in these cases was so galling and offensive to me, that I am as much irritated by the recollection of them, as I was by their actual occurrence; and I conceive I have a right to claim so much consideration as to hold your partner bound in both these instances to have fulfilled my engagements without the least enquiry, and then to have come to me and said anything in reference to them that he desired to say.

These two examples are a part of a series of similar things—some of less, some of equal importance—which offended me exceedingly and frequently, when I was in the habit of attending the office. And to these I must add, with great pain, that I have not always observed Mr. Bradbury's treatment of my father (than whom there is not a more zealous, disinterested, or useful gentleman attached to the paper)[†4] to be very creditable to himself, or delicate towards me.

Finding greater difficulties and discouragements at first, than he anticipated, but which anyone with a knowledge of newspapers could easily foresee, and would steadily overcome, he seems to me to have become possessed of the idea that everybody receiving a salary in return for his services, is his natural enemy, and should be suspected and mistrusted accordingly. I have reason to believe that this is not my own idea alone, and that it has its influence in the working of the paper. Certainly if the point were ever referred to me, I should say that in the worst times of Sir John Easthope and Mr. Duncan[†5]—who were loudly complained of among newspaper people, and are so still—I never saw anything approaching Mr. Bradbury.

Of Mr. Bradbury as separated from the newspaper, I entertain my old high opinion. I hold him, as separated from the newspaper, in my old regard. But I cannot separate him from it sufficiently, at this time, to affect a cordiality which (remembering the whole history of my connection with it) I do not feel.

If, as you intimate in your letter, you are determined to share the merit and assert the propriety of this line of proceeding, I can only say I am very sorry for it. But there must always remain in my mind this distinction between you,—that you come lagging in with your approval afterwards, and are not active in the spirit and the manner of such doings at the moment of their occurrence.

I do not find anything else in your letter which required an answer. I addressed myself to you, because I felt more pleasantly and kindly towards you, as having borne yourself in a kinder and more pleasant way generally, since this newspaper began.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To MISS WALEY,[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Seventh February | 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Waley, and begs to say that he has no doubt Miss Waley's benevolent offer will be very acceptable to the Managers of the Ragged Schools. Mr. Dickens scarcely knows, at this moment, to whom the parcel should be sent; but he is in communication with the teachers, and will be happy to take charge of it himself, if Miss Waley will have the kindness to entrust it to him.

To DR W. P. ALISON,[†2] [27 FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in To Macready, ?27 Feb 46. Date: one of the letters of introduction for Macready written 27 Feb 46.

To ANGUS FLETCHER,[†3] [27 FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in To Macready, ?27 Feb 46. Date: one of the letters of introduction for Macready written 27 Feb 46.

To LORD JEFFREY, [27 FEBRUARY 1846]

Mention in To Macready, ?27 Feb 46. Date: one of the letters of introduction for Macready written 27 Feb 46.

To LORD ROBERTSON, 27 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Major A. Seafield Grant.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Friday Twenty Seventh February | 1846

My Dear Lord Robertson

Mr. Macready—one of my dearest and most valued friends—has already an introduction to you from Lady Blessington; but I cannot deny myself the pleasure of adding mine, as it will be the greatest gratification to me to be at all instrumental in your becoming mutually acquainted.

You will be glad to hear that—the newspaper being now afloat—I take no further trouble with it than writing whatever appears there, with my name attached;[†1] and that I am contemplating a new Story, with great ardour. Kate desires to be cordially remembered to you, and to all your house. In which request I earnestly join.

Being ever | In all Sincerity | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Robertson P.S. When shall we take some more Gin Punch, and go to see the Puppets again?[†2]

To [JOHN WILSON], 27 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Dickens House. Address: clearly to John Wilson as CD refers to J. T. Gordon as his son-in-law.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park
Friday Twenty Seventh February | 1846

My Dear Sir

Three years and a half ago,[†3] I had one of the greatest pleasures I have ever experienced, in becoming known to you. I want to communicate that pleasure to one who is in every way deserving of it, as I am sure you will say when you know him; and therefore I present to you in the person of Mr. Macready, one of my dearest and most cherished friends.

Mrs. Dickens sends her love to you, if you have not forgotten her. And though you have, she still sends it.

May I ask you to remember me, earnestly, to Mr Gordon[†4] your Son in Law. I desire to live in his remembrance if he will allow me.[†5]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, [27 FEBRUARY 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the same date as To Robertson, 27 Feb, the Friday before Macready's arrival in Edinburgh on 2 Mar; confirmed by CD's reference to his second Capital Punishment letter. Address: W. C. Macready Esquire | Clarence Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear Macready

I send you some Edinburgh letters. You would only be bored by an accumulation of them; and I have therefore confined them to the people we spoke of—only adding Dr. Alison—a most excellent and interesting man, who can shew you strange sights in the poor parts of the old Town—and Angus Fletcher of Dunans (not our Fletcher) who, if he be in Edinburgh, you will find a capital fellow to know.[†1]

I have told Jeffrey that I hope to come down, before you leave.[†2] I should like to do so, and return with you, or run with you on your way, whithersoever you go. When you know what your plans are, will you write to me, and let me know all about them?

Ever affectionately
CD.

W. C. Macready Esquire. P.S. I hope to see my second Capital Punishment Letter, in print tomorrow.[†3]

To JAMES WINSTON,[†4] 28 FEBRUARY 1846

Mention in Sotheran's catalogue No. 59; MS (3rd pers.) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Feb 46.

Concerning his subscription to the Garrick Club.[†5]

March

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 1 MARCH 1846*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday First March 1846.

My Dear Lady Blessington

Do you or Count D'Orsay happen to have, in any unransacked corner, any letter I wrote you from Italy? I don't think it all[†1] likely; but as drowning men catch at straws, I grasp at scraps of paper, to help myself on, in my travelling Recollections.

I have a vague remembrance of something I wrote to you about Bologna (I think) and Verona—and of something I wrote to Count D'Orsay about the models at Rome—both of which fragments I should like to recall more distinctly, if you could help me to a better remembrance of them.[†2]

Always My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 2 MARCH 1846

MS Miss Winifred A. Myers.

Devonshire Terrace | Second March 1846.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

Many thanks for the letters! I will take the greatest care of them—though I blush to find how little they deserve it.

It vexes me very much, that I am going out on Friday and cannot help it. I have no strength of mind, I am afraid. I am always making engagements in which there is no prospect of satisfaction.

Vague thoughts of a new book are rife within me just now; and I go wandering about at night into the strangest places, according to my usual propensity at such a time—seeking rest, and finding none.[†3] As an addition to my composure, I ran over a little dog in the Regents Park yesterday (killing him on the spot) and gave his little mistress—a girl of thirteen or fourteen—such exquisite distress as I never saw the like of.

I must have some talk with you about those American Singers.[†4] They must never go back to their own country, without your having heard them sing Hood's Bridge of Sighs. My God how sorrowful and pitiful it is!

Best regards to Count D'Orsay and the young ladies.

Always My Dear Lady Blessington | Cordially Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington.

To W. H. WILLS, 2 MARCH 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning Second March | 1846

My Dear Mr. Wills.

I really don't know what to say, about the New Brunswicker. The idea will obtrude itself on my mind that he had no business to come here on such an expedition; and that it is a piece of the wild conceit for which his countrymen are so remarkable; and that I can hardly afford to be Steward to such adventurers. On the other hand, your description of him pleases me. Then that Purse which I never could keep shut in my life makes mouths at me: saying "See how empty I am!" Then I fill it; and it looks very rich indeed.

I think the best way is, to say, that if you think you can do him any permanent good with Five Pounds (that is, get him home again) I will give you the money. But I should be very much indisposed to give it him, merely to linger on here about town for a little time, and then be hard up again.

As to Employment, I do in my Soul believe that if I were Lord Chancellor of England, I should have been aground long ago, for the Patronage of a Messenger's place.

Say all that is[†1] civil for me to the Proprietor of the Illustrated London News,[†2] who really seems to be very liberal. "Other engagements" &c &c "prevent me from entertaining" &c &c. Faithfully Yours ever

CD Over

W. H. Wills Esquire

Will you tell the Publisher to cause to be sent to Clarkson Stanfield Esquire R.A. 48 Mornington Place Hampstead Road, a complete set of the D.N. to this time —and to be regularly continued. He wishes to be a Subscriber.

To WILLIAM LOCKE,[†1] 2 MARCH 1846*

MS Mr Roger W. Barrett.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening | Second March 1846

Dear Sir.

I have an opportunity (I do not feel, just now, at liberty to explain it in detail) of using any facts I can collect in reference to the Ragged Schools, probably with solid and permanent advantage to those humane Institutions.[†2] I have no intention, I may observe, of printing this information.

Any Statistics you can furnish me with, bearing on the schools in which you are more immediately interested, or on the subject generally,—or any statement you may feel inclined to make to me on these heads—I shall be happy to receive, and to use to the very utmost of my power.

If you should wish to see me when you have had leisure to think the matter over, I shall be glad to make an appointment with you for that purpose.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Locke.

To W. H. WILLS, 4 MARCH 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1846.

My Dear Mr. Wills.

I assure you I am very truly and unaffectedly sensible of your earnest friendliness —and in proof of my feeling its worth, I shall unhesitatingly trouble you sometimes, in the fullest reliance on your meaning what you say.

The letter from Nelson Square is a very manly and touching one. But I am more helpless in such a case as that, than in any other: having really fewer means of helping such a gentleman to employment, than I have of firing off the Guns in the Tower. Such appeals come to me here, in scores upon scores.

The letter from Little White Lion Street does not impress me favorably. It is not written in a simple or truthful manner—I am afraid. And Mr. Thomas Cooper is not a good reference. Moreover, I think it probable that the Writer may have deserted some pursuit for which he is qualified, for vague and less laborious strivings which he has no pretensions to make. However, I will certainly act on your impression of him, whatever it may be.

And if you could explain to the gentleman in Nelson Square, that I am not evading his request, but that I do not know of anything to which I can recommend him, it would be a great relief to me.

I trust the New Printer is a Tartar;[†1] and I hope to God he will so proclaim and assert his Tartar breeding, as to excommunicate Bradbury[†2] from the 'chapel'[†3] over which he presides.[†4]

Tell Powell (with my regards) that he needn't "deal with" the American Notices of the Cricket.[†5] I never read one word of their abuse, and I should think it base to read their Praises. It is something to know that one is righted so soon; and knowing that, I can afford to know no more.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 MARCH 1846*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1846.

Madam—for I take you to be a lady from your hand writing. But if you be of the sterner sex, attribute my mistake to my not being possessed of any instinct that leads me to address those correspondents of whom I have not a personal recollection, by their proper titles or even Sex, unless they give me some clue to those distinctions.

I beg to say, in reply to your favor, that I do not interfere with the current management of the Daily News, or the acceptance or rejection of articles that are offered for insertion in its columns. But as I am pretty sure that it would be quite out of the question with a Newspaper, to reprint an article from a Six Years' old Magazine, I will not (unless you desire it again) send your Manuscript to the Editor. I am not, however, the less obliged to you for your communication, or[†6]

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 MARCH 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | "Morning Herald" Office | Shoe Lane Fleet Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth March 1846 | Thursday

My Dear Beard.

Will you call here in the morning, on your way to the office, either tomorrow or Saturday as may be most convenient to you? I shall be at home and delighted to see you on either day.

Affecy. Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 5 MARCH 1846*

MS The Proprietors of Punch.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth March 1846.

Dear Sirs.

I will make the calculation as soon as I can; but before I make it, I must have the letters already printed, set up (a specimen sheet at all events) in an average good page.[†1] My casting-off must necessarily be imperfect, at the best; and before I can cast it off at all I must know what a column of the newspaper makes.

I have never expected the account to Christmas[†2] before this time; and when I asked you for it, I stated my reason and attached no idea of its being late.[†3] But I did expect that you would have paid in some money to Coutts's on account of the Newspaper;[†4] and in that faith (without staying now, to enquire whether I should have known better) I have the satisfaction to find, tonight, that I have overdrawn my account.[†5] Which, situated as I am with regard to Miss Coutts, I would not have willingly done for a Thousand Pounds.

I did expect too that someone on your behalf, you being otherwise engaged, would have taken such moderate pains with Oliver Twist as to have altered the advertisement and not let it stand, for a week, a ridiculous absurdity.[†6] Further, I expected when Mr. Evans wrote to me about Mr. Bourke[†7] that he would not be again refused his Salary. Which I understand he has been.

I am too sick at heart of such petty miseries, to trust myself to say now what kind of course I see beyond them. And the less I say tonight, the better.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 6 MARCH 1846†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth March 1846.

My Dear Stanny. In reference to the Damage of the Candlesticks,[†1] I beg to quote (from the Cricket on the Hearth, by the highly popular and deservedly so, Dick) this reply

"I'll damage you, if you enquire"[†2]—

[†a] In reference to the Sanatorium, Sir, the arrangements are (generally speaking) Southwood Smith's, and therefore, I should think, Bad.[†3] Southwood being born to Confuse Mankind.[†4] But if you be afar off, I engage to Mutiny on the Spot.[†a]

Ever Yours,
My block reeving,
Main-brace splicing,
Lead heaving,
Ship conning,
Stun'-Sail bending,[†5]
Deck swabbing,
Son of a Sea-Cook
Henry Bluff.[†6]

H. M. S. "Timber"

To GIUSEPPE MAZZINI, 7 MARCH 1846

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4728 (1936); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 7 Mar 46.

Miss Hogarth desires me to say that she would be ready to assist on a much more trying occasion than the trial of our friend Sigr. Scuroni.[†7]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 7 MARCH 1846

Mention in John Anderson catalogue No. 1470; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 7 Mar 46.

To H. G. ADAMS, 11 MARCH 1846

Text from N, I, 741.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park
Eleventh March 1846

Dear Sir,

I have no connexion whatever with the Editorship or current management of the Daily News; and have simply forwarded your verses[†1] to the conductors of the Paper. I have not appended your suggestion in reference to the "Voices from the Crowd,"[†2] because that title is, I conceive, the property of the gentleman who writes those pieces, and could not honorably be appropriated by anybody else.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 11 MARCH 1846*

MS The Proprietors of Punch.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh March 1846

Dear Sirs

As nearly as I can make the calculation, I should say there would be, in the book, 300 pages of the size you send. I allow five and a half to each column of the Paper, and take the total number of columns in round numbers at 60. My calculation is necessarily imperfect, but I think very close. Allowing for woodcuts, I should say the book would range from 300 to 330 pages as per specimen.[†3]

Mr. Stanfield will want a lot of blocks sent him. He is ready to begin.

I think you had better see him about the number of Woodcuts and about the expence. I have told him so. I enclose a card of mine for you to write your names on, or his man may say he is out. His address is 48 Mornington Place Hampstead Road. I would not overdo the Illustration.

It is essential, I take it, that we should publish something in May,[†4] and therefore there should be brisk preparation both with the artist and the Engravers. You will use your own discretion, of course, as to the advertizing[†1] of the book, but I think it would be well to put it out soon.

When you have seen Mr. Stanfield, there will be no difficulty in arranging the price. Would it not be well to have some good subject—Venice for Example —a woodcut on India Paper, in some fanciful way, for a Frontispiece?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans Will you begin to print, and send proofs to Mr. Stanfield and me?

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 11 MARCH 1846

Extract in John Holt Schooling, "The Signatures of Charles Dickens", Strand Magazine, VII (1894), p. 85, dated 11 Mar 46.

Asking for accounts up to last Xmas . . . at the mysterious man's convenience.

To T. R. EELES,[†2] 12 MARCH 1846*

MS Lesley College Library, Boston.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth March 1846

Dr. Mr. Eeles.

If you will have the goodness to call on me any morning between II and I, I shall be glad to give you some directions about a little binding I want done.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Eeles.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 12 MARCH 1846*

MS Brown University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth March 1846

My Dear Stanny.

Of your decision (of course) I have not a word to say. You are the best judge whether your Creed recognizes and includes, with men of sense, such things as I have shocked you by my mention of.[†1] I am sorry to learn that it does—and think far worse of it than I did.

Ever Affectionately

CD

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 13 MARCH 1846*

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth March 1846

My Dear Sir

I have looked over the accounts to Christmas last,[†2] and find them perfectly clear and intelligible.

There must be something of Animal Magnetism, I think, in our being mindful of the same subject at so nearly the same time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 MARCH 1846

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth March 1846.

My dear Miss Coutts.

The "General Theatrical Fund" at whose dinner I am going to preside, have begged me to give the accompanying letter to you—in some remembrance, I presume, of my having represented you in the matter of your public subscription for the Elton Family.

You will not misunderstand me as having any lawless designs on your purse, if I discharge my conscience of the statement that this Fund includes the Actors at Country and Minor Theatres, who cannot by any exertions, in the present and altered state of theatrical matters, qualify themselves for either of the other Funds —who are very poor, generally speaking—and have established this one with a patience and long foresight most remarkable to me.[†1]

You will be pleased to hear that the eldest Miss Elton is Mistress of a large National School at Mitcham;[†2] with a pretty house and garden, and everything happy about her, as she well deserves. Miss Wight (White, I think it should be) is quite recovered, and has obtained a situation as Companion to an old lady.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To HENRY BIRT,[†3] 16 MARCH 1846*

MS Miss Winifred A. Myers. Address: Henry Birt Esquire | 8 Bird Street | Oxford Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth March 1846

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Birt, and begs to say in reply to Mr. Birt's letter, that he has nothing whatever to do with the Editorship or current Management of the Daily News; and that the card of admission to the entertainment at Crosby Hall[†4] should have been sent, in the ordinary course, to the Office of the Paper. Mr. Dickens has forwarded it to the gentleman who writes the Musical articles, but that gentleman exercises his own discretion on such subjects.

To MR BURKE,[†5] 16 MARCH 1846*

MS Mr David Borowitz.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Sixteenth March 1846.

Private

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Burke, and begs to say, with thanks to Mr. Burke for his obliging letter, that he has always had it in contemplation to follow up the letters on Capital Punishment with a Letter on Secondary Punishments—in which he has taken some interest, and of which he has had some experience and observation for years past. But as the heading of such a letter, for the purposes of a Newspaper, is a different one, and as he objects on principle to the position that those who shew Capital Punishment to be ineffectual and demoralizing are at all bound to provide a substitute for it, he has not made any reference to this supplementary Article in his remarks on the Penalty of Death.

He is glad to assure Mr. Burke, however, that he has it already in preparation, and that he designs to complete and publish it—most probably within a week or so.[†1]

To THE REV. HENRY COLMAN, 16 MARCH 1846

Mention in C. F. Libbie & Co. catalogue, May 1900; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 Mar 46.

To CHARLES GILPIN,[†2] 16 MARCH 1846

Text from N, I, 742.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth March 1846

Respected Friend,

I cannot positively promise to attend the meeting on the 29th April;[†3] but I hope to do so, and if I can I certainly will. Make any arrangements that best suit thy friends. I will adapt my engagements to it, if possible.

Thine truly
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 16 MARCH 1846

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixteenth March 1846. | Monday Night

Dear Sirs.

I was on the point of writing to you about Mr. Stanfield when I received your note. I had only known of his scruples[†4] the day before.

I have thought it best to go to Colnaghi's, and ask if they could find me any clever young artist or Student who has been in Italy, and has brought home a Portfolio of such Sketches as I want. I did so on Saturday, and he assures me that he has little doubt of sending some such gentleman to me tomorrow. The book will require to be very carefully looked after, when it is once got under weigh, as it certainly must be published in May. I will leave all arrangements of detail with the artist to you, and will communicate with you again (I hope) tomorrow[†1] or next day.

I want to know, when you have had time to think of it, how soon after June, you think we might, safely, and with real effect, begin a story in Monthly Numbers—so that it should not commence at a dead time of the year.[†2]

Among the strange letters I receive every day, is the enclosed. I know nothing of the writer. If you should think it desirable to see the pamphlet and have some judgment on it, I will refer him to you. I have an idea that if it should prove to be well done, it might be worth so small a venture, and might make a noise just now, when some[†1]

To E. F. SAVILLE,[†2] 18 MARCH 1846

MS Boston Public Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth March 1846

Sir.

I beg to assure you that I am not, in any way, connected with the editorship or current management of the Daily News; and that the letter of Judex,[†3] though I approved of it ever so thoroughly, would have to be sent to the Editor of the Paper, at its office in Whitefriars.

But if you will allow me, as one who is very much interested in the subject,[†4] to state my objections to it, I will do so. They are solely mine, and have no reference whatever to the paper; to which it can still be offered—except thus far. That I am sure it is enormously too long.

There can be no question of the intention with which it is written, and it is very well expressed. But such experience as I have of these matters, teaches me that nothing is got by defying the Public; and that they must be invited and coaxed into supporting such an institution. I do not think it wise to attack the other Funds, and I certainly think that to cast any reflections on those who support them, is to damage this project most decidedly. The writer scarcely seems to remember, too, that it has not, as yet, been plainly stated to the Public, and that they have had little opportunity of understanding its merits. If it had been elaborately explained and tried, and great appeals had been made in its favor, and all this had been unsuccessful, even then little more could be said, than is said in this letter.

Under these circumstances, and in these terms, I think it would prejudice the cause, wherever published. But this is merely my individual opinion, and I am (of course) as liable to be wrong as another.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. F. Saville Esquire.

To EDGAR ALLAN POE,[†1] 19 MARCH 1846

MS Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Address: By Mail Steamer | Edgar. A. Poe Esquire | New York | U. S. of America.

1 Devonshire Terrace, London. | Nineteenth March 1846.

Dear Sir.

Although I have not received your Volume,[†2] I avail myself of a leisure moment to thank you for the gift of it.

In reference to your proposal as regards the Daily News, I beg to assure you that I am not in any way connected with the Editorship or current Management of that Paper. I have an interest in it, and write such papers for it as I attach my name to. This is the whole amount of my connexion with the Journal.

Any such proposition as yours, therefore, must be addressed to the Editor. I do not know, for certain, how that gentleman might regard it; but I should say that he probably[†3] has as many correspondents in America and elsewhere, as the Paper can afford space to.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edgar. A. Poe Esquire

To CAPTAIN ALEXANDER MACONOCHIE,[†4] 21 MARCH 1846*

Text from typed copy in Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First March 1846

Dear Sir

I dare say you know Mr. Chesterton (the Governor of the Middlesex House of Correction) by name. He is a very intelligent and humane gentleman, who has great experience of Criminals, and whom I have frequently consulted in reference to their condition and improvement. It happened the other evening, when I met him somewhere at dinner, that he spoke with great interest of your system (which he had been studying in your explanation of it) and shewed that he quite understood and appreciated the principles on which it is founded. As he expressed, also, a desire to know you and to have an opportunity of conversing with you about it, I said I would endeavour to give him that opportunity.

Can you give me the pleasure of dining here next Saturday, this day week, at 6 o'Clock. In the meantime I shall be always at home between Eleven and One.

I think of publishing my letters, such as they are, on the Punishment of Death, in a Pamphlet,[†1] with an additional chapter on Secondary Punishments. It would command more attention, and would be more important, in that form, I think, than in a Newspaper.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Maconochie

To C. E. COTTERELL, 23 MARCH 1846*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third March 1846

My Dear Sir

I have not seen any means whatever, as yet, (I regret to say) of doing anything with Le Gros' MSS.[†2] But the opportunity of doing anything with them is as likely, I think, to present itself to me, as to anybody. And I would propose that you should leave them with me a little longer—unless you have any plan in reference to them—and allow me to write to you on the subject at Naples.

I am really shocked to find you still in London. I took it into my head, and was quite satisfied (though I should be puzzled to say why) that you had gone to Italy long ago.

You say 'in a day or two'. I hope that does not mean until after Saturday next, and that you will be able to dine here, that day, at 6. You would be interested, I think. I have two or three people coming, who are learned in Crime and Criminals (one of them the Governor of that Prison we saw, and whom I dare say you remember); and among them a late Governor of Norfolk Island, who is the inventor of a very remarkable system indeed, of Secondary Punishment: which I have no doubt will, in some modified form or other, become as the World grows better and more compassionate, very generally received. I hope you will be able to make this an Engagement between us.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

C. E. Cotterell Esquire

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 23 MARCH 1846

Photograph, Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third March 1846

Dear Sir

The enclosed ⁜ (which is a curiosity) is from the renowned Mr. Toole; the most emphatic, vigorous, attentive, and stentorian toastmaster in the Queen's Dominions—I hope you will have him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Cullenford Esquire

To JAMES TOOLE,[†1] 23 MARCH 1846*

MS Washington University Libraries.[†2]

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Third March 1846.

Dr. Mr. Toole.

If I had my will, I assure you there should never be a public dinner without you. You are the best and greatest of Toastmasters, and can never be too highly appreciated.

I have nothing to do with the arrangements for The General Theatrical Fund Dinner; but I have written to the Secretary, and told him that I hope he will not fail to secure me your assistance.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Toole.

To THOMAS POWELL, 23 MARCH 1846*

MS Mr Thaddeus Crenshaw.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Third March | 1846.

My Dear Powell.

I have thought of those subjects, but am at present taken (in a Newspaper point of view) lazy, and ill-conditioned.

I don't know what the most dangerous letters in the alphabet may be, unless they are U and I.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Thomas Powell Esquire

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 23 MARCH 1846*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Third March | 1846.

My Dear Tracey.

I have asked Captain Maconochie (late Governor of Norfolk Island, of whose system we were speaking at your house the other day) to dine here next Saturday at 6; and have asked Chesterton to meet him. If you tell me you are engaged, I shall attack you savagely in some public Journal, for having poured boiling water over that man's Thigh.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I shall head the article "Inhuman atrocity in Tothill Fields Prison.—Ferocious cruelty of the Governor."

To MISS ROSS,[†1] [28 MARCH 1846]

Envelope only, MS Frederick T. Macartney. Address: Miss Ross | 4 Howard Street | Strand.
PM 28 Mar 46.

To FREDERICK SALMON,[†2] 28 MARCH 1846

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1899; dated 28 Mar 46.

Sending inscribed copies of Martin Chuzzlewit, A Christmas Carol, The Chimes and The Cricket on the Hearth.[†3]

To DR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH,[†4] 28 MARCH 1846*

MS The Hon. Mrs Charles Leaf.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth March 1846.

My Dear Sir

I regret to say that having some relatives bespoken to dinner tomorrow, I cannot have the pleasure of accepting your kind invitation.

I made a similar foray last Sunday, and saw four Schools. I particularly desire to have an opportunity of discussing the subject with you.

There is no doubt that they are (almost of necessity so far) badly managed; and there is no doubt, I think, that the Union "take in" Schools, which are not, properly speaking, Ragged Schools at all.

Have you seen the School on Saffron Hill?—in West Street?[†1] That is a Ragged School.

What I want to do, before moving legislatively in the matter, is, to try an experimental Normal Ragged School, on a system. It could be done, without reference to the Union, at a very small expence; and surely you and I could set one going, and ascertain, by facts and figures, and regular entries in books, what could be done in Three Months.[†2] I am sure there would be no difficulty in getting Money by voluntary subscription for the purpose.

Then the boys would not be wearied to death, and driven away, by long Pulpit discourses, which it is out of the question that they can understand, and which it is equally out of the question to expect them to receive with interest and patience if they could. They might be amused, instructed, and in some sort reformed, with much greater hopefulness and visibility of effect. We should have some data to go upon, and something, of our own knowledge and within our own direction, to describe. And having that, and being enabled to describe favorably, I take it to be certain that such schools must become an Institution of the Country.

I am very strong upon this, because I fear that without some such step, the end will be greatly retarded.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H.[†3] Kay Shuttleworth Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 28 MARCH 1846*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth March 1846

My Dear Stanny.

Let me congratulate you on Mrs. Stanfield's safety—if not on the new boy.[†4] I suppose you are (like me) past all congratulations on that score.

Although I am coming, anon, to see your pictures,[†1] I write to say that I hope you mean to go to the General Theatrical Fund Dinner on Monday Week, where Mac will also dine. Let me know, that I may touch up the Committee to place you near me.

Being in the chair, I can guarantee you against a Speech, and will make it a point of honor to do so.

Ever Heartily Yours
Dick The Doomed.

To CHARLES COCHRANE,[†2] 30 MARCH 1846

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning | March Thirtieth 1846

My Dear Sir

I lose no time in expressing my regret that I cannot undertake to preside at the proposed Meeting, though I receive the Committee's request as one that does me much honor. Apart from my not knowing but that I may be summoned out of town at almost any hour after Monday next (which would be an insurmountable objection in itself) I have pledged myself to many Institutions to the effect that I have only leisure to occupy the chair at certain places I have named to them, but that if[†3] I should increase my list of such engagements, I will certainly recognize their claim upon me. And my taking the chair at the Poor Man's Guardian Society[†4] would involve me, consequently, in more engagements of that nature than I have time or money to discharge.

For these reasons I am obliged to decline. But if I should be in town when the Meeting is held, I shall be happy to move or second any Resolution that may not be bestowed upon a better advocate.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Cochrane Esquire.

April

To [J. G. GENT],[†1] [?APRIL 1846]

Summary in the Ragged School Union Minute Book (MS Shaftesbury Society) of letter read at the Monthly Meeting of the Managing Committee of the Ragged School Union, 1 May 46. Date: letter clearly received soon after the previous monthly meeting on 3 Apr. Address: presumably addressed to Joseph George Gent: see fn.

Stating that he had subscriptions in his possession amounting to £4.2.0 to be devoted to Ragged Schools, which if not otherwise disposed of he would hand over to the Ragged School Union.[†2]

To W. C. MACREADY, 4 APRIL 1846*

MS Morgan Library. Address: William Charles Macready Esq | 5 Clarence Terrace | Regents Park.

Bell Alley Coleman Street.[†3] | 4th: April 1846.

Sir.

Yourself v Dickens.

We are requested by our Client Mr. Charles Dickens, to forward you the sum of half a crown, current money—the amount in wh. he considers himself to stand indebted to you.[†4] We beg to add on our own behalf that we do so under protest, the transon being an illegal one.

We are | Sir | Your obedient Servants
Pitchcock, Swabber, Trillington, and Dawberry.
To | Mr. William Charles Macready.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 5 APRIL 1846

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1911; MS 2 pp.; dated 5 Apr 46.

Concerning the Dinner in connection with the Theatrical Fund. He mentions that Stanfield is too ill to attend.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 8 APRIL 1846*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth April 1846

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

My private Opinion, is, that the Proprietors of the Daily News are Mad.

I have sent after Captain Taylor, and requested him, if he be in town, to report himself to you immediately.[†1] I am half ashamed to communicate with him; for I shall not be surprised if the Proprietors of the D.N. have been playing shabby tricks with him in his pursuit of his invention, as with most other people with whom they have had anything to do.

The letters I am taking religious care of. I will bring them back to my Lady, myself, as soon as I have done with them—in about a week or so.

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Count D'Orsay.

To G. E. HERING,[†2] 8 APRIL 1846

Mention in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1163; MS (3rd pers.); dated Devonshire Terrace, 8 Apr 46.

Apologizing for not being able to inspect his paintings.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 APRIL 1846†

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Night | Ninth April 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I thank you for your kind note, which I received with great pleasure.

I shall be glad to tell you all about Charley and his forthcoming King's College Career, viva voce. And as I owe him a holiday, in consequence of his having conducted himself with brilliancy at School, I shall (unless you tell me you will not be there) bring him down pr. Railway, to make a Morning call on you at Brighton next Monday Week. [†a]In the mean time I shall feel it necessary to get up some information about Locomotive Engines, or I shall be brought to a stand-still, and shall lose my position, before we get to Croydon, through not being able to answer questions.[†a]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THOMAS BEARD, 11 APRIL 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday 11th. April 1846

My Dear Beard

Those dissenters ("may they be damned", as Maclise would say) demanded ten days more to consider, which will bring them to some time next week.

Forster attended the last meeting, which lasted six hours. Some of the dissenters, I believe, fell prostrate on the floor, and foamed at the mouth with exhaustion.†1

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To JAMES SHERMAN,†2 11 APRIL 1846

Extract in J. A. Shavgordi Katalog 593; MS 1 p.; dated London, 11 Apr 46.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Sherman and begs to express his regret that he is prevented by other engagements from accepting the Invitation of the Officers and Stewards of the Asylum for Infant Orphans.†3

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [13 APRIL 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the Monday after 9 Apr: see To Miss Coutts, that day.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I write a hurried line—pending my hearing from you again—to say that if you should remain at Brighton this week, I can run down with Charley any morning except Friday and Saturday. I shall do so, if I find your second note propitious.†4

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 14 APRIL 1846*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Fourteenth April | 1846

My Dear Count D'Orsay

Can you dine here, next Tuesday the Twenty First, at half past Six? Lord Robertson is going to dine with us—and Macready.

If you can, we have been thinking it will be as well to Christen the youngster on that day.[†1] I protest, however, against your being summoned to the church part of the ceremony, because I can find you a Deputy, and save you the bore of coming out in the Morning.[†2]

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

The Count D'Orsay.

To W. C. MACREADY, 14 APRIL 1846*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Easter Sunday fell on 12 Apr in 1846.

Devonshire Terrace | Easter Tuesday Evening 1846.

My Dear Macready.

Lord Robertson stays (his custom always, in these holidays)[†3] with Liston the Surgeon; and is to be found accordingly, at 5 Clifford Street Bond Street.

Wallie[†4] appears to me to be everything that a Parent could desire. I foresee in this next generation the seeds of Seven League Boots—and in his wisdom concerning the two F's, of a prodigious pair.

Your Postscript is mean and drivelling. Was it for this, I settled this morning to christen the Babby on that Tuesday!!![†5]

I am having engraved on a brass plate to be fixed up over the street door, and on another brass plate to be inlaid in the door steps, the following words (with a prospective reference) selected from that surprising combination of wit, wisdom, humour, fancy, and pleasantry, The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby

" 'We want no Babbies here,' said Mr. Kenwigs. 'Take 'em away to the Fondling!' "[†6]

Let me recommend it to you and Mrs. Macready[†7]—to whom my love. Is it true that you are to be examined before the House of Commons Committee on Population?

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?14 APRIL 1846]

MS Liverpool Public Libraries. Date: Handwriting (not completely consistent at that date) suggests Apr 46; there were grounds for expecting "News" that the paper could continue, on Wed 15 Apr: see fn.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Mitton

I am afraid to make an engagement for tomorrow; for I think I may have in the afternoon, to hear Newspaper News.[†1] But next day (Thursday) is likely, I imagine, to suit me very well. If you should not hear from me tomorrow before you leave business; will you understand that I will be with you on Thursday at ½ past 4?

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 16 APRIL 1846*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth April 1846

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

== == == ==

Alfred D'Orsay Tennyson!

== == == ==

That shall be his name, or nothing. I never thought of Tennyson being Alfred too. Again I say

== == == ==

Alfred D'Orsay Tennyson!

== == == ==

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MADAME DE LA RUE, 17 APRIL 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace.
Friday Seventeenth April 1846.

My Dearest Madame De la Rue.

I received your letter this morning, and immediately sit down to say that your patient was, beyond all question, mistaken, in regard to me. And to make this clearer to you, I will tell you what I have been delaying for, from day to day.

I am exceedingly unsettled in my plans. I think I told you some time ago—or I wrote it to De la Rue; I am not sure which—that I was not satisfied with the business Managers of the Newspaper.[†1] In the course of a little more time, I saw so much reason to believe that they would be the Ruin of what might otherwise have been made a very fine property—and that their proceedings would so commit and involve me, who had no power either of getting rid of them or controulling them—that I straightway stopped my letters, and walked, bodily, out of the concern.[†2] The result of this, has been a daily-widening division among all the halfhundred people connected with the Paper; and I am strongly inclined to believe that it will stop abruptly. Pending their disputes and differences among themselves, I cannot very well leave town. But if the Paper should go by the board, then I should be strongly disposed to do so, and to go abroad for another year. For I have engaged to produce a new story in twenty monthly parts, and I think I could write it more comfortably and easily, abroad, than at home. Now, I need not tell you that I want to go to Genoa! But Mrs. Dickens, who was never very well there, cannot be got to contemplate the Peschiere—though I have beset her in all kinds of ways.[†3] Therefore, I think I should take a middle course, for the present[†4] and, coming as near you as I could, pitch my tent somewhere on the Lake of Geneva—say at Lausanne, whence I should run over to Genoa immediately. Against my coming away at all, there is the consideration that I am (nominally, God knows) a Law Student, and have a certain number of 'terms to keep" before I can be called to the Bar; and it would be well for me to be called, as there are many little pickings to be got—pretty easily within my reach—which can only be bestowed on Barristers.[†5] Again, there is the consideration that the good people of England seem to be fonder of their favorite (your humble servant and physician) now, than ever; and that it might be a pity to run away from them, when they are so very kind. On the other hand if these people do ruin the Paper, I shall be very much annoyed, and would rather not have to be questioned, and condoled with, and all sorts of things, in all kinds of society. Now, every day (to the exclusion of almost all other occupation) I have been discussing the pros and cons of all these questions, with Forster. Every day we have expected that the squabbling body of proprietors would decide on their course, and so enable me to decide on mine. Every day has brought with it a postponement to the next day. And all the time I have been in a condition of incessant restlessness, uneasiness, and uncertainty. From this I am not yet delivered. But I think this Week must[†6] decide it; and the moment I resolve on my course, I will write to you again. Tell De la Rue, with my best regards, that I should have answered his letter,[†7] but for the same reason, which rendered it impossible to write definitely.

Your magnetic case is a very extraordinary one, though nothing of that kind surprises me. I should like to see the lady very much, and to—no, not to try my hand upon her—to see you mesmerize her. Let us live in hope.

I shall publish, early next month, a little Volume called Pictures from Italy[†1]—astonish the Consul by telling him the title, and give him my regards. An early Copy shall be got to you, by some means or other. You have been in my society these many days, for I have just finished Rome, and am now working back to Genoa.[†2] The greater part of the descriptions were written in letters to Forster, but the putting of them together, and making additions to them, and touching them up, is rather a long job. I like them very much, and I think the Holy Week will make you laugh, and remind you of the reality.—My Diary of March the 19th. 1845 is lying open on my desk, and looking at it I see this entry "Madame D L R very ill in the night. Up 'till four." Good God how distinctly everything has been present to me as I have gone over all the ground again! And what a miserable Devil I seem, to be cooped up here, bothered by printers and stock jobbers, when there are bright Genoas (with bright patients in them!) and ruined Coliseums in the world.

I talk to all the Italian Boys who go about the streets with Organs and white mice, and give them mints of money per l'amore della bell'Italia.

Maclise has been painting a large picture for the Royal Academy Exhibition which opens in May. The subject is the Superstition of the Ordeal by Touch[†3] —the old belief that if the Murderer touched the dead body of his Victim, it would bleed. It is very fine indeed, and buyers are fighting for it. He can have a Thousand Pounds for it, easily; but he says he "don't know"—and says nothing else. His last invention has been the abolition of straps to his trousers. We went down to Greenwich Fair last Monday, and walked about the[†4]

To EDWARD BALDWIN, 18 APRIL 1846*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop. Date: PM 18 Apr 46. Address: Edward Baldwin Esquire | Albion Hotel | Aldersgate Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am truly sorry to be deprived of the gratification of dining with you today.[†5]

For some weeks past, I have been, at intervals, a martyr to an affection of the nerves on one side of my face, originating in a cold. It has prevented me from going to all sorts of places, and makes me quite unfit, today, to join your party.

I regret this the more, because I sincerely wish you to believe that our intercourse hitherto has been most pleasant to me, and that I have an earnest desire to strengthen and improve it.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Baldwin Esquire

To MISS MARION ELY, 19 APRIL 1846

Text from MDGH, I, 153.

Devonshire Terrace, Sunday, April 19th. 1846.

My Dear Miss Ely,

A mysterious emissary brought me a note in your always welcome handwriting at the Athenæum last night. I enquired of the servant in attendance whether the bearer of this letter was of my vast establishment. To which he replied "Yezzir." "Then," said I, "tell him not to wait."

Maclise was with me. It was then half-past seven. We had been walking, and were splashed to the eyes. We debated upon the possibility of getting to Russell Square in reasonable time—decided that it would be in the worst taste to appear when the performance[†1] would be half over—and very reluctantly decided not to come. You may suppose how dirty and dismal we were when we went to the Thames Tunnel, of all places in the world, instead![†2]

When I came home here at midnight I found another letter from you (I left off in this place to press it dutifully to my lips). Then my mind misgave me that you must have sent to the Athenæum. At the apparent rudeness of my reply, my face, as Hadji Baba says, was turned upside down[†3] and fifty donkeys sat upon my father's grave[†4]—or would have done so, but for his not being dead yet.

Therefore I send this humble explanation—protesting, however, which I do most solemnly, against being invited under such untoward circumstances; and claiming as your old friend and no less old admirer to be instantly invited to the next performance, if such a thing is ever contemplated.

Ever, my dear Miss Ely, | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MR EVILL,[†1] 20 APRIL 1846*

MS Mitchell Library, Glasgow.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday 20th. April 1846

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Evill, and begs to say that he has not the least knowledge of the arrangements for the proposed Meeting.[†2] He has no doubt that Mr. Gilpin of Bishopsgate Street[†3] (whose exact address is appended to the advertisements) will be happy to entertain Mr. Evill's request.

To THOMAS MITTON, 20 APRIL 1846

MS University Library, Bergen.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth April 1846

My Dear Mitton

As They cannot make up their minds (They have been going to do so, every quarter of an hour since I saw you),[†4] I have made up mine.—Abroad again!

Ever Yours

CD

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17-20 APRIL 1846]

Extract in F, V, i, 388. Date: Forster introduces this extract with a reference to CD's connexion with the Daily News having ceased "in little more than four months from the day the paper started"; but May is impossible since CD's decision to go abroad was evidently taken between 17 and 20 Apr: see To Mme de la Rue, 17 Apr, and To Mitton, 20 Apr.

I don't think I could shut out the paper sufficiently, here, to write well.[†5] No . . . I will write my book in Lausanne and in Genoa, and forget everything else if I can; and by living in Switzerland for the summer, and in Italy or France for the winter, I shall be saving money while I write.[†1]

To WILLIAM PHILLIPS, 20 APRIL 1846

MS Dickens House.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth April 1846.

Dear Sir

I think of going abroad again for a twelvemonth, and once more letting my house during my absence. The halls and staircases have been repainted since we returned home, and the drawing-room very prettily decorated. Besides which, I should be quite willing, for a good tenant, to make any alteration that might be desired in the furnishing and arrangement of the top bedrooms.

Will you have the goodness to cause it to be entered in your books? It can be seen any day after Wednesday, between 2 and 4.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Phillips Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 22 APRIL 1846

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday | Twenty Second April | 1846.

My Dear Beard.

I discovered, just in time, that Saturday Week is the day of the Royal Academy Dinner. I must substitute some other day. We will take counsel on Sunday.

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 APRIL 1846

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Wednesday Twenty Second April | 1846

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I call with Charley this morning to see you. But in case you should be out, or not yet returned, I write this to bring with me.

I saw Dr. Jelf some months ago; and then Dr. Major, into whose department of King's College Charley would fall. He seemed to think Charley rather young for the purpose (though he has some scholars not older) and suggested that it would certainly be better for him not to begin until the May term,[†1] when the mornings would be lighter and finer for his daily Progresses down the Strand. Very much obliged to him for his consideration, I agreed to defer the business until May, and settled that shortly before that time I would see Dr. Major again. He knew Charley's present Master[†2] by the bye—spoke highly of him—and said he couldn't be in better preparation.

Until within a fortnight or three weeks ago, I have retained the intention of entering Charley in May. But since then, I have conceived the idea of going to Switzerland for a year. Firstly, because I am most desirous to separate myself in a marked way from the Daily News (with which I have long since ceased to have any connexion, and in connecting myself with which at all, I have no doubt I made a mistake). Secondly, because I have a long book to write, which I could write better in retirement. Thirdly, because I want to get up some Mountain knowledge in all the four seasons of the year, for purposes of fiction.[†3] Now I think that if I go to Lausanne or some such place, where there are English Clergymen who take pupils, and keep Charley in good training under such auspices, he will enter King's College at greater advantage and with a better prestige about him, than if he began as I originally designed. I have not said anything to Dr. Major or to Charley yet, as I wished to tell you what I had in my mind, first. But I have a very strong belief that I shall be all the better for acting on this resolution, and I should be glad if you thought with me that Charley would be none the worse.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MR PRIESTLEY,[†4] 22 APRIL 1846*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park.

Twenty Second April. 1846.

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr Priestley, and begs to decline the proposal with which he is favoured in Mr Priestley's letter of the 20th Instant.

To H. P. SMITH, 22 APRIL 1846*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second April 1846

My Dear Smith

I have a long book to write—and, having settled my plan, think of going to Switzerland for a twelvemonth to write it peacefully, and get up some Mountain knowledge for another purpose at the same time.

In case any one should fall in your way who wants to hire a house (and take care of it) on reasonable terms—and who wants a house which is, though I say it who "didn't oughtn't"—as the Americans observe, in a very pretty condition—perhaps, in the words of the Poet Bunn,

You'll remember me[†1] | Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

My best remembrances to Mrs. Smith

To MR SYNGE,[†2] 22 APRIL 1846*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Twenty Second April 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Synge, and begs to say, in reply to Mr. Synge's letter, that he thinks Mrs. Quilp must have had good reasons for bearing witness to the attractive qualities of her husband. Mr. Dickens cannot speak quite confidently of any lady's reasons for anything, but he is inclined to believe that Mr. Quilp could have easily provided himself with another pretty wife, in the event of Mrs. Quilp's decease;[†3] it being generally observable that men who are very hideous and disagreeable are successful in matrimonial ventures.

To W. H. WILLS, 22 APRIL 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second April 1846.

My Dear Wills.

I meant to have written to you long ago, to tell you, in reference to the Theatrical Dinner, that I am sure you wrote the account in a spirit of regard for me: and that I care a great deal more for that, than for any number of columns of any number of newspapers, and rate it much higher.[†1] Do not think I say so the less heartily, because I say it after some delay.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 24 APRIL 1846*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth April 1846.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I send you, for trial, half a dozen of the wine I spoke of. I have plenty more, if you like it. It is called the Zeller Wine,[†2] and is perfectly pure and genuine. I bought it out of an enormous cask under the Town Hall at Offenburg;[†3] on the top of which Town Hall, there is an old, old Stork's nest, where the Storks, with their long legs, sit on a summer night, meditating or fly for a change to the neighbouring chimnies and sit there until it is too dark to see them. I have no doubt they improve the flavor of the wine, but I don't know how.

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Count D'Orsay.

To SAMUEL PALMER, 27 APRIL 1846

Text from N, I, 748.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-Seventh April 1846

My Dear Sir,

The book I alluded to in my note, was a little pasteboard memorandum book with the few printed letters[†4] pasted in it. I thought you took it away with you when you took Rogers.

I am afraid I cannot comfortably manage an S. What do you say to the word "on"?[†5] Could you possibly do that?

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 APRIL 1846*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twenty Eighth April 1846

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will come to you between Twelve and One tomorrow, and shall be truly glad to see you again. Your Porter told me when I called with Charley, that you were unwell, which I was extremely sorry to hear.

The wisdom of what you say, in reference to the ordinary run of English Clergymen abroad, I strongly feel. But I think in a place like Lausanne, I might get Charley a very good year's teaching, and yet keep him under my own eye all the time. He is still such a little fellow that I should be pained to leave him at home.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To CHARLES GILPIN, 28 APRIL 1846

Text from Daily News, 30 Apr 46.

April 28, 1846.

Esteemed Friend,

I am sorry that it will not be in my power to attend the meeting to-morrow night.[†1] It is matter of regret to me, but I should regret it still more if I had ever given you an unconditional assurance that I should be there. You remember that I had some doubts of my ability to be present long ago? I need not say that I sympathise most heartily with the object of the meeting, or that the more I reflect upon the subject to which it is directed, the more I am convinced that the punishment of death must be, and will be before long abolished.

Thine faithfully,
CHARLES DICKENS

To Charles Gilpin.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 28 APRIL 1846*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth April 1846

My Dear Sir

I am glad to receive your pleasant note, and am much obliged to you for the Private Box Card.[†2] But I fear somebody must have been taking my name in vain, as I have not asked that favor. Not that I should have the least reluctance to ask it of you, or to avail myself of it now that it is here, but I am unfortunately engaged to dinner.[†1] And fearing you might suppose me indifferent to your courtesy I write you these words of explanation.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

May

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 1 MAY 1846*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday May First 1846

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

I don't know how to thank you for the beautiful Pipe.[†2] There shall come curling out of it, please Heaven, such affectionate thoughts and visions of you, as shall light up all Switzerland, and make my new book the pleasantest and friendliest of Volumes. I will sit down regularly after dinner, and puff away at it, until I see you through the smoke blending with everything that is delightful to my remembrance and soothing to my fancy. Whatever suggests itself to me at such times, I will give You the credit of; and Cornet Lightbody[†3] himself was never so eloquent in anybody's praise as every little spiral thread from its bowl shall be to me in yours.

Ever affectionately | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

The Count D'Orsay.

To LORD DUDLEY COUTTS STUART, [?MAY 1846]

Envelope only, MS Knox College, Illinois. Date: Handwriting suggests 1846; possibly connected with the meeting of the Literary Association of the Friends of Poland on 4 May or the dinner on 16 May: see next. Address: The | Lord Dudley Stuart | Polish Literary Association | Sussex Chambers | Duke Street | St. James's.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 1 MAY 1846*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | First May 1846.

My Dear Talfourd.

A gentleman with two thirds of all the English consonants in his name, and none of the Vowels—Secretary to the Polish Association[†4]—called on me this morning, and entreated me to use my influence with you to induce you to become a Steward for the dinner to be given to Lord Dudley Stuart (see enclosure) on the 16th. Instant, and further to induce you to attend the dinner.[†1]

I told him how you avoided such things. But as he pressed me very hard; and as I have (as I believe you have) a real regard for Lord Dudley Stuart, I relented, and said I would write and tell you how anxious the Committee are to have you, and that I have yielded myself up, very willingly, because of my friendship for the man who is to be honored.[†2]

Don't curse me!

Ever Yours Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd.

To W. C. MACREADY, [1 MAY 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed by Macready "May 1"—the day before his visit to the Academy with CD in 1846; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear Macready

I shall be delighted to go to the Academy with you tomorrow.[†3] I don't want to go too early, if I can help it, as I am finishing my little book. But let me know in the Morning at what time you will call for me; and I will be ready punctually. Your own time!—

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready

To T. J. SERLE, 4 MAY 1846

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth May 1846.

My Dear Serle

I never go into the City; for it is long and long since I cut the Daily News, and never came again.

I will come to you, or meet you at your own time here, any day this Week, of which you will give me notice. Mind, I can come to you with perfect ease, for I walk into all sorts of suburbs every day.[†1]

I am going to Switzerland on the 1st. of June, and should like to arrange for leaving all this matter in good train.

Always Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MAY 1846*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth May 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I need not say that Charley will be delighted to come to you whenever you may find it most convenient.

I am making some enquiries in reference to the points you consulted me upon; and shall have, I hope, very reliable opinions to give you.

Do you think you could make it agreeable to yourself to let me accompany you one morning to Limehouse? I should particularly like you to see that Pauper School. I am sure it would please you, and it would give you a lively and a most encouraging picture of the Good you will do.[†2]

Ever Believe me | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 7 MAY 1846

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1846

My Dear Sir

I regret to say that it will be quite out of my power to attend the Literary Fund Dinner. Otherwise I should have had great pleasure in returning thanks for the Novelists.[†3]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 7 MAY 1846*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1846.

My Dear Stone.

I don't know our good friend Mr. Dillon's[†4] address. Will you, like an Artistical Samaritan as you are, forward the enclosed letter to him? It is an application for his aid in disposing of the Boy Elton[†1]—I felt as if nothing ought to come after "Boy", but "Jones"; the newspaper used to be so everlastingly coupling those two words.[†2]

I saw Cuttriss the other night. He looked pale and worn. I think affectionate remembrances of the Shakspeare Club[†3] are gnawing at his heart.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I am going to Switzerland. Can I do anything for you among the Milkmaids?[†4]

To T. J. SERLE, 12 MAY 1846

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth May 1846

My Dear Serle

I enclose you Mr. Dillon's letter. He is more than a man of his word, I do not doubt.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 13 MAY 1846

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1964; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 May 46.

Thanking him for the resolution of the Directors of the General Theatrical Fund and saying that he will always be glad to assist it.[†5]

To SAMUEL PALMER, 13 MAY 1846

MS Mr Bryan Palmer.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Thirteenth May | 1846

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that I would, on no account, dream of allowing the book to go to Press, without the insertion of your name in the title page.[†6] I placed it there, myself, two days ago.

I have not seen the designs, but I have no doubt whatever (remembering your sketches) that they are very good.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Palmer Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 17 MAY 1846*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth May 1846

My very dear Macready.

A Thousand thanks for your kindest of letters.[†1] This next week, we are quite hopelessly engaged, but for one day in the week after, Kate shall come and joyfully arrange with Mrs. Macready tomorrow.[†2]

I rely on your coming to Lausanne. We will take poles and guides, and go climbing up into the Mountains—provided that old age of yours, of which you are so intolerably boastful, will admit of your using those most staggering of legs that render you so impressive a spectacle of senility and decay.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 18 MAY 1846

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1975; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 May 46.

Asking them to send 12 copies of Pictures from Italy in the course of the day.

To MR JOYCE, 19 MAY 1846

MS Mr Lloyd E. Roscoe.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May 1846.

Sir

If you will have the goodness to send me half a dozen more of the Pictures, I will send out all my presentation copies,[†3] myself.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joyce.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 19 MAY 1846†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May 1846.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

[†a]I will immediately take care that everything is settled in connexion with your engagement with the Daily News people[†1]—and will come to you to report satisfactory progress.

I had not been unmindful of the subject, and would on no account have left Town without arranging it.[†a]

If I had not a good reason for delaying to acknowledge the receipt of the book you so kindly sent me, I should be a most unworthy Dog. But I have been every day expecting to be able to send you the enclosed little Volume, and could get no copies until last night, in consequence of their running very fine against the subscription and demand.

May you like it!

I have been greatly entertained by the Femme de Chambre,[†2] who paints Society from a Woman's eye (I think that the height of praise) and, sometimes, like a female Gil Blas. The Spirit of our two sweet friends Morgan[†3] and Stepney,[†4] shining through their Representative.[†5] I would have identified the former, anywhere.

Count D'Orsay's copy of the "Pictures", with my cordial remembrance and regard.
Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess of Blessington

To G. W. FULCHER,[†6] 19 MAY 1846*

MS Mr and Mrs Carl Bequist.

1 Devonshire Terrace, London. | Nineteenth May 1846.

Sir

I beg to thank you, very sincerely, for your obliging note and the presentation copy of your Poems. The latter has not yet reached me, but I have no doubt I shall receive it in due course.

I am Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Fulcher Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?19 MAY 1846]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: Pictures from Italy was published 18 May: this letter probably the next day, the date inscribed by CD in Mitton's copy.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday

My Dear Mitton

House let to Sir James Duke[†1] from 1st. of June. £300 for the first year. £250 for the Second, if he chooses to stop.

Subscription to the little book, between 4 and 5,000. Considered very large. Copies scarce.[†2]

Faithfully Always
CD.

To WILLIAM PHILLIPS, 19 MAY 1846*

MS New York Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May 1846

Dear Sir

I forgot to say this morning that I do not take my lad John Thompson, abroad with me. He is an excellent footman who perfectly understands his business, and has been with me, eight years. If Sir James should want him, I can give him the very strongest recommendation. I would not lose him on my return, if I could help it, on any account.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Phillips Esquire

To THOMAS POWELL, 19 MAY 1846*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Thomas Powell Esquire | Messrs. Chapman | 2 Leadenhall Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May 1846.

My Dear Powell.

I am very much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken about my Box. Is there anything I can do for you in Switzerland—any apple or other fruit I can shoot off any friend's or relation's head—in return?

Roche (no 'La') is the Brave Courier.

I was sorry not to be able to comply with Mr. W. Chapman's[†1] request. I had no Books[†2] until last night.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Powell Esquire.

To FRANCIS VALCKENBERG,[†3] 19 MAY 1846*

MS P. J. Valckenberg.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May 1846.

Dear Sir

I am on the eve of going abroad again—to Switzerland—and am not, therefore, laying in Wine just now. But I shall be very happy to see you, either on Thursday or Friday Morning between 11 and 1, if it should suit your convenience to call.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Valckenberg Esquire

To WILLIAM PAGAN,[†4] 20 MAY 1846*

MS Mr C. D. Pagan.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twentieth May 1846.

Sir.

I beg to thank you for your obliging note, and for the honor you have done me, in appending to your title page a quotation from one of my books.[†5] I have not yet received the Volume you have kindly ordered to be sent to me, but I have no doubt it will arrive in due course.

I am Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

William Pagan Esq

To W. C. MACREADY, 21 MAY 1846†

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First May 1846

My Dear Macready

Maclise, Forster, and Stanfield (light jockey weights, the last-named!) have quartered themselves on my Phaeton today. I drive them down.†1

†a I never saw you more gallant and free, than in the gallant and free scenes last night.†2 It was perfectly captivating to behold you. However, it shall not interfere with my determination to address you as Old Parr in all future time.†a

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, [22 MAY 1846]

MS Dickens House. Date: PM 22 May 46. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday

My Dear Beard

We are so beset and worried by engagements†3 in this next last week before our departure, that we are most unwillingly obliged to declare off in respect of that Derby engagement.†4

Ever Affectionately Yours

CD.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, [?26 MAY 1846]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: 1846 on handwriting, and near 19 May when the same informal ending first appears; "take leave" suggests 26 May.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I grieve to say that I have not one leisure day between this time and my departure. I am (for my sins) engaged to dinner every day; and get up every morning with an odious shadowing-forth of the evening that is to follow.

I begged Landor[†1] to say to you, yesterday, that I would come to take leave of you on Friday at Two o'Clock. I shall be true to that purpose, unless you should tell me you are otherwise engaged.

The Burnham Beeches are charming. I know them well. I am ashamed to say of Gray's Church that I know the Elegy better than the place.

Here am I going away, and we have never been to Rosherville! I hope you won't go, now, until I come back—which is a modest aspiration. If I can possibly manage it, I think I shall run over early in December.

Always Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 MAY 1846

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth May 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I find those who are best acquainted with the subject and the class of persons to be addressed, decidedly in favor of the School and the Church[†2] being Free. You may remember this to have been my impression at first, but I have not expressed any opinion of my own to those whom I have sounded on the subject.

In reference to the Asylum,[†3] it seems to me very expedient that you should know, if possible, whether the Government would assist you to the extent of informing you from time to time into what distant parts of the World, women could be sent for marriage, with the greatest hope for their future families, and with the greatest service to the existing male population, whether expatriated from England or born there. If these poor women could be sent abroad with the distinct recognition and aid of the Government, it would be a service to the effort. But I have (with reason) a doubt of all Governments in England considering such a question in the light, in which men undertaking that immense responsibility, are bound, before God, to consider it. And therefore I would suggest this appeal to you, merely as something which you owe to yourself and to the experiment; the failure of which, does not at all affect the immeasurable goodness and hopefulness of the project itself.

I do not think it would be necessary, in the first instance at all events, to build a house for the Asylum. There are many houses, either in London or in the immediate neighbourhood, that could be altered for the purpose. It would be necessary to limit the number of inmates, but I would make the reception of them as easy as possible to themselves. I would put it in the power of any Governor of a London Prison to send an unhappy creature of this kind (by her own choice of course) straight from his prison, when her term expired, to the Asylum. I would put it in the power of any penitent creature to knock at the door, and say For God's sake, take me in. But I would divide the interior into two portions; and into the first portion I would put all new-comers without exception, as a place of probation, whence they should pass, by their own good-conduct and self-denial alone, into what I may call the Society of the house. I do not know of any plan so well conceived, or so firmly grounded in a knowledge of human nature, or so judiciously addressed to it, for observance in this place, as what is called Captain Maconnochie's[†1] Mark System, which I will try, very roughly and generally, to describe to you.

A woman or girl coming to the Asylum, it is explained to her that she has come there for useful repentance and reform, and because her past way of life has been dreadful in its nature and consequences, and full of affliction, misery, and despair to herself. Never mind Society while she is at that pass. Society has used her ill and turned away from her, and she cannot be expected to take much heed of its rights or wrongs. It is destructive to herself, and there is no hope in it, or in her, as long as she pursues it. It is explained to her that she is degraded and fallen, but not lost, having this shelter; and that the means of Return to Happiness are now about to be put into her own hands, and trusted to her own keeping. That with this view, she is, instead of being placed in this probationary class for a month, or two months, or three months, or any specified time whatever, required to earn there, a certain number of Marks (they are mere scratches in a book) so that she may make her probation a very short one, or a very long one, according to her own conduct. For so much work, she has so many Marks; for a day's good conduct, so many more. For every instance of ill-temper, disrespect, bad language, any outbreak of any sort or kind, so many—a very large number in proportion to her receipts—are deducted. A perfect Debtor and Creditor account is kept between her and the Superintendent, for every day; and the state of that account, it is in her own power and nobody else's, to adjust to her advantage. It is expressly pointed out to her, that before she can be considered qualified to return to any kind of society—even to the Society of the Asylum—she must give proofs of her power of self-restraint and her sincerity, and her determination to try to shew that she deserves the confidence it is proposed to place in her. Her pride, her emulation, her sense of shame, her heart, her reason, and her interest, are all appealed to at once, and if she pass through this trial, she must (I believe it to be in the eternal nature of things) rise somewhat in her own self-respect, and give the managers a power of appeal to her, in future, which nothing else could invest them with. I would carry a modification of this Mark System through the whole establishment; for it is its great philosophy and its chief excellence that it is not a mere form or course of training adapted to the life within the house, but is a preparation—which is a much higher consideration—for the right performance of duty outside, and for the formation of habits of firmness and self-restraint. And the more these unfortunate persons were educated in their duty towards Heaven and Earth, and the more they were tried on this plan, the more they would feel that to dream of returning to Society, or of becoming Virtuous Wives, until they had earned a certain gross number of Marks required of everyone without the least exception, would be to prove that they were not worthy of restoration to the place they had lost. It is a part of this system, even to put at last, some temptation within their reach, as enabling them to go out, putting them in possession of some money, and the like; for it is clear that unless they are used to some temptation and used to resist it, within the walls, their capacity of resisting it without, cannot be considered as fairly tested.

What they would be taught in the house, would be grounded in religion, most unquestionably. It must be the basis of the whole system. But it is very essential in dealing with this class of persons to have a system of training established, which, while it is steady and firm, is cheerful and hopeful. Order, punctuality, cleanliness, the whole routine of household duties—as washing, mending, cooking—the establishment itself would supply the means of teaching practically, to every one. But then I would have it understood by all—I would have it written up in every room—that they were not going through a monotonous round of occupation and self-denial which began and ended there, but which began, or was resumed, under that roof, and would end, by God's blessing, in happy homes of their own.

I have said that I would put it in the power of Governors of Prisons to recommend Inmates. I think this most important, because such gentlemen as Mr. Chesterton of the Middlesex House of Correction, and Lieutenant Tracey of Cold Bath Fields, Bridewell, (both of whom I know very well) are well acquainted with the good that is in the bottom of the hearts, of many of these poor creatures, and with the whole history of their past lives; and frequently have deplored to me the not having any such place as the proposed establishment, to which to send them—when they are set free from Prison. It is necessary to observe that very many of these unfortunate women are constantly in and out of the Prisons, for no other fault or crime than their original one of having fallen from virtue. Policemen can take them up, almost when they choose, for being of that class, and being in the streets; and the Magistrates commit them to Jail for short terms. When they come out, they can but return to their old occupation, and so come in again. It is well-known that many of them fee the Police to remain unmolested; and being too poor to pay the fee, or dissipating the money in some other way, are taken up again, forthwith. Very many of them are good, excellent, steady characters when under restraint—even without the advantage of systematic training, which they would have in this Institution—and are tender nurses to the sick, and are as kind and gentle as the best of women.

There is no doubt that many of them would go on well for some time, and would then be seized with a violent fit of the most extraordinary passion, apparently quite motiveless, and insist on going away. There seems to be something inherent in their course of life, which engenders and awakens a sudden restlessness and recklessness which may be long suppressed, but breaks out like Madness; and which all people who have had opportunities of observation in Penitentiaries and elsewhere, must have contemplated with astonishment and pity. I would have some rule to the effect that no request to be allowed to go away would be received for at least four and twenty hours, and that in the interval the person should be kindly reasoned with, if possible, and implored to consider well what she was doing. This sudden dashing down of all the building up of months upon months, is, to my thinking, so distinctly a Disease with the persons under consideration that I would pay particular attention to it, and treat it with particular gentleness and anxiety; and I would not make one, or two, or three, or four, or six departures from the Establishment a binding reason against the readmission of that person, being again penitent, but would leave it to the Managers to decide upon the merits of the case: giving very great weight to general good conduct within the house.

I would begin with some comparatively small number—say thirty—and I would have it impressed upon them, from day to day, that the success of the experiment rested with them, and that on their conduct depended the rescue and salvation, of hundreds and thousands of women yet unborn. In what proportion this experiment would be successful, it is very difficult to predict; but I think that if the Establishment were founded on a well-considered system, and were well managed, one half of the Inmates would be reclaimed from the very beginning, and that after a time the proportion would be very much larger. I believe this estimate to be within very reasonable bounds.

The main question that arises, is, if the co-operation of the Government—beginning at that point when they are supposed to be reclaimed—cannot be secured, how are they to be provided for, permanently? Supposing the mark system and the training to be very successful, and gradually to acquire a great share of public confidence and respect, I think it not too sanguine to suppose that many good people would be glad to take them into situations. But the power of beginning life anew, in a world perfectly untried by them, would be so important in many cases, as an effectual detaching of them from old associates, and from the chances of recognition and challenge, that it is most desirable to be, somehow or other, attained.

I do not know whether you would be disposed to entrust me with any share in the supervision and direction of the Institution. But I need not say that I should enter on such a task with my whole heart and soul; and that in this respect, as in all others, I have but one sincere and zealous wish to assist you, by any humble means in my power, in carrying out your benevolent intentions.

And at all events it would be necessary for you to have, in the first instance, on paper, all the results of previous experience in this way, as regards scheme, plan, management, and expence.[†1] These I think I could procure, and render plain, as quietly and satisfactorily as anyone. And I would suggest to you, this course of action.

That,—the School and Church proceeding—this Design remain in abeyance for the present. That when I go to Paris (whither I shall remove, please God, before Christmas) I examine every Institution of this sort existing there, and gather together all the information I possibly can. I believe more valuable knowledge is to be got there, on such a subject, than anywhere else; and this, combined with the results of our English experience, I would digest into the plainest and clearest form; so that you could see it, as if it were a Map. And in the meantime you would have these advantages.

1. That in the establishment of your school and Dispensary, you might find or make some Instruments that would be very important and useful in the working out of this scheme.

2. That there will then have been matured, and probably tried, certain partial schemes going a very little way on this same road, which are now on foot in the City of London, and the success or failure of which will be alike instructive.

3. That there is a very great probability of the whole Transportation system being shortly brought under the consideration of the Legislature; and it is particularly worthy of consideration that the various preliminary reports on the subject, (which I have lately been reading) recognize the question of sending out women to the different settlements, as one of very great importance.

I have that deep sense, dear Miss Coutts, of the value of your confidence in such a matter, and of the pure, exalted, and generous motives by which you are impelled, that I feel a most earnest anxiety that such an effort as you contemplate in behalf of your Sex, should have every advantage in the outset it can possibly receive, and should, if undertaken at all, be undertaken to the lasting honor of your name and Country. In this feeling, I make the suggestion I think best calculated to promote that end. Trust me, if you agree in it, I will not lose sight of the subject, or grow cold to it, or fail to bestow upon it my best exertions and reflection. But, if there be any other course you would prefer to take; and you will tell me so; I shall be as devoted to you in that as in this, and as much honored by being asked to render you the least assistance.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 26 MAY 1846

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Twenty Sixth May 1846.

My Dear Jerrold.

I send you herewith, some books belonging to you. A thousand thanks for the Hermit.[†1] He took my fancy mightily, when I first saw him in the Illuminated; and I have stowed him away in the left-hand breast pocket of my travelling coat, that we may hold pleasant converse together on the Rhine. You see what confidence I have in him!

I wish you would seriously consider the expediency and feasibility of coming to Lausanne in the Summer or early Autumn. I must be at work myself during a certain part of every day almost, and you could do twice as much there as here. It is a wonderful place to see—and what sort of welcome you would find, I will say nothing about, for I have vanity enough to believe that you would be willing to feel yourself as much at home in my household as in any man's.

Do think it over. I could send you the minutest particular of the journey. It is nearly all Railroad and Steamboat, and the easiest in the world.

At Macready's on Thursday,[†2] we shall meet, please God!

Always My Dear Jerrold | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esquire

To FRANCIS VALCKENBERG, 26 MAY 1846*

MS P. J. Valckenberg. Address: Fr. Valckenberg Esquire | 32 Craven Street | Strand.

Devonshire Terrace, | Tuesday Twenty Sixth May | 1846.

Dear Sir

I am much indebted to you for your obliging letter. Even though I should not have an opportunity of presenting your note of introduction on my way to Switzerland, I shall not be the less mindful of your kind attention, believe me. The next time you come to England, I shall hope to give you a more hospitable welcome.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fr Valckenberg Esquire

To MR HEATH,[†3] 27 MAY 1846*

MS Mrs S. S. Clephan.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Twenty Seventh May 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Heath, and begs to thank him for his letter, and his obliging offer of the accompanying MS. In declining, with thanks, to accept the latter, Mr. Dickens begs to say that he does so without the least reference to its merits (of which he has no knowledge) but in pursuance of a rule he has always found it expedient to prescribe to himself.

To R. H. HORNE, 29 MAY 1846*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace
Friday Night Twenty Ninth May | 1846

My Dear Horne.

I snatch a moment before going to bed after the busiest of days (I start tomorrow morning)[†1] to say that I have had real pleasure in the receipt of your cordial note,[†2] and that it is very pleasant to me.

With Mrs. Dickens' best regards, I am always My Dear Horne

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

June

To JOHN FORSTER, [?7 JUNE 1846]

Extracts in F, V, ii, 390-1 and F, 1872-4, II, X, 196*n*. Date: clearly written during the journey, and probably from Strasbourg on Sunday 7 June.

Halting only at Ostend, Verviers, Coblenz, and Mannheim, they reached Strasbourg on the seventh of June. We have hardly seen a cloud in the sky since you and I parted at Ramsgate, and the heat has been extraordinary. At Mayence there had come aboard their boat a German, who soon after accosted Mrs. Dickens on deck in excellent English: "Your countryman Mr. Dickens is travelling this way just now, our papers say. Do you know him, or have you passed him anywhere?" Explanations ensuing, it turned out by an odd chance that he had with him a letter of introduction to the brother of this gentleman;[†3] who then spoke to him of the popularity of his books in Germany and of the many persons he had seen reading them in the steamboats as he came along. When CD remarked how great his own vexation was not to be able himself to speak a word of German, "Oh dear! that needn't trouble you," rejoined the other; "for even in so small a town as ours, where we are mostly primitive people and have few travellers, I could make a party of at least forty people who understand and speak English as well as I do, and of at least as many more who could manage to read you in the original." His town was Worms,[†1] a fine old place, though greatly shrunken and decayed in respect of its population; with a picturesque old cathedral standing on the brink of the Rhine, and some brave old churches shut up, and so hemmed in and overgrown with vineyards that they look as if they were turning into leaves and grapes.

On the same steamer were two travelling Englishmen who had got an immense barouche on board with them, and had no plan whatever of going anywhere in it. One of them wanted to have this barouche wheeled ashore at every little town and village they came to. The other was bent upon "seeing it out," as he said—meaning, CD supposed, the river; though neither of them seemed to have the slightest interest in it. The locomotive one would have gone ashore without the carriage, and would have been delighted to get rid of it; but they had a joint courier, and neither of them would part with him for a moment; so they went growling and grumbling on together, and seemed to have no satisfaction but in asking for impossible viands on board the boat, and having a grim delight in the steward's excuses.

To MM. LOMBARD, ODIER & CO., 13 JUNE 1846

Text from N, I, 756.

Rosemont, Lausanne | Juin 13 1846

Messieurs,

Je vous envois enclos, un document relatif à une grande caisse qui vous est consignée pour moi. Si vous me le pouvez envoyer ici, je serais bien obligé si vous le confiderez au porteur de cette lettre, M.

Rodieu. S'il faut que j'envoie mon courier à votre bureau pour l'obtenir, je l'enverrai aussitôt que j'entendrai de vous qu'il est nécessaire.

Je serai bien aisé de payer, sur le champ, toutes les charges du transit &c, si vous aurez la bonté de m'envoyer un billet de la compte.

Recevez, Messieurs, l'assurance de ma considération.

J'ai l'honneur d'être, Messieurs,
Votre Serviteur
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 or 14 JUNE 1846]

Extracts in F, V, ii, 391-2. Date: CD arrived at Lausanne 11 June, and wrote as soon as his "two days" of "house-hunting" had been successful.

From Strasburg they went by rail on the 8th to Bâle, from which they started for Lausanne next day, in three coaches, two horses to each, taking three days for the journey. He described an uproar between the landlord of an inn on the road, and one of the voituriers who had libelled Boniface's establishment by complaining of the food.

After various defiances on both sides, the landlord said "Scélérat! Mécréant! Je vous boaxerai!" to which the voiturier replied, "Aha! Comment dites-vous? Voulez-vous boaxer? Eh? Voulez-vous? Ah! Boaxez-moi donc! Boaxez-moi!" —at the same time accompanying these retorts with gestures of violent significance which explained that this new verb-active was founded on the well-known English verb to boax, or box. If they used it once, they used it at least a hundred times, and goaded each other to madness with it always. The travellers reached the Hotel Gibbon[†1] at Lausanne on the evening of Thursday the 11th of June; having been tempted as they came along by a delightful glimpse of Neufchâtel. On consideration however I thought it best to come on here, in case I should find, when I begin to write, that I want streets sometimes. In which case, Geneva (which I hope would answer the purpose) is only four and twenty miles away.

He at once began house-hunting, and had two days' hard work of it. He found the greater part of those let to the English like small villas in the Regent's Park, with verandahs, glass-doors opening on lawns, and alcoves overlooking the lake and mountains. One he was tempted by, higher up the hill, poised above the town like a ship on a high wave; but the possible fury of its winter winds deterred him. Greater still was the temptation to him of "L'Elysée,"[†2] more a mansion than a villa; with splendid grounds overlooking the lake, and in its corridors and staircases as well as furniture like an old-fashioned country house in England; which he could have got for twelve months for £160. But when I came to consider its vastness, I was rather dismayed at the prospect of windy nights in the autumn, with nobody staying in the house to make it gay. And so he again fell back upon the very first place he had seen, Rosemont, quite a doll's house; with two pretty little salons, a dining-room, hall, and kitchen, on the ground floor; and with just enough bedrooms upstairs to leave the family one to spare. It is beautifully situated on the hill that rises from the lake, within ten minutes' walk of this hotel,[†3] and furnished, though scantily as all here are, better than others except Elysée, on account of its having been built and fitted up (the little salons in the Parisian way) by the landlady and her husband for themselves. They live now in a smaller house like a porter's lodge, just within the gate. A portion of the grounds is farmed by a farmer, and he lives close by; so that, while it is secluded, it is not at all lonely. The rent was to be ten pounds a month for half a year, with reduction to eight for the second half, if he should stay so long; and the rooms and furniture were to be described as soon as his own ingenious re-arrangements and improvements in the chairs and tables should be completed. I shall merely observe at present therefore, that my little study is upstairs, and looks out, from two French windows opening into a balcony, on the lake and mountains; and that there are roses enough to smother the whole establishment of the Daily News in. Likewise, there is a pavilion in the garden, which has but two rooms in it; in one of which, I think you shall do your work when you come. As to bowers for reading and smoking, there are as many scattered about the grounds, as there are in Chalk-farm tea-gardens. But the Rosemont bowers are really beautiful. Will you come to the bowers . . .?[†1]

The country is delightful in the extreme—as leafy, green, and shady, as England; full of deep glens, and branchy places (rather a Leigh Huntish expression), and bright with all sorts of flowers in profusion. It abounds in singing birds besides—very pleasant after Italy; and the moonlight on the lake is noble. Prodigious mountains rise up from its opposite shore (it is eight or nine miles across, at this point), and the Simplon, the St. Gothard, Mont Blanc, and all the Alpine wonders are piled there, in tremendous grandeur.[†2] The cultivation is uncommonly rich and profuse. There are all manner of walks, vineyards, green lanes, cornfields, and pastures full of hay. The general neatness is as remarkable as in England. There are no priests or monks in the streets, and the people appear to be industrious and thriving. French (and very intelligible and pleasant French) seems to be the universal language. I never saw so many booksellers' shops crammed within the same space, as in the steep up-and-down streets of Lausanne.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 14 JUNE 1846*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Angleterre | Daniel Maclise Esquire. R.A. | 14 Russell Place | Fitzroy Square | London | England.

Hotel Gibbon, Lausanne Switzerland
Sunday Night Fourteenth June 1846.

My Dear Mac.

Notwithstanding the strange leaves you take of your friends, I think you will be still glad to hear of and from them, when they are such friends as Self and Co. Therefore I sit down to write you a short assurance of our safe arrival here last Thursday in good health, and after a most extraordinarily hot journey—borne, by the whole camp, with surpassing good humour and patience. We had only one wet day, and that was among the Mountains—only one discomfort, and that was the loss of a trifling portmanteau containing all the childrens'[†3] clothes: which has not yet come to hand.

We have taken a house, in all respects the opposite of our Italian Palazzo; being a kind of beautiful bandbox. It stands in a most lovely situation on the brink of the high slope that rises from the Lake, with the Alps piled up in tremendous majesty before it. It is surrounded by a lawn, a vineyard, a garden, a corn-field, and some other agricultural trifles, of its own—and is, at present overwhelmed in a cluster of Roses. It is called Rosemont. So WHEN you write, address me at Rosemont, Lausanne. I feel like a landed proprietor, and think of writing a Pamphlet on the Free Trade question.

We move, tomorrow. In the meantime we are in this large hotel which is as ugly, I think, as anything can be made, in a situation of such extraordinary beauty. There are no Italian-Catholicity-Symptoms here, and no Monks or Friars in the streets. For which the people are all the more thriving and happy. We rode today some six or eight miles along the lake to see a little fête, in honor of the Republican Independence of this Canton.†1 It consisted of a dinner and ball in the open air; and between the dinner and the ball a good deal of speaking, in the "propogition" of toasts, from a tribune made of flags and flowers, where each Speaker mounted in succession with an immense silver Goblet in his hand. After each toast the artillery fired some Brass field pieces that are on the ground, and the soldier's band played some appropriate air. I wish you could have seen it. It was one of the prettiest sights I have ever seen. The women, in their immense straw hats and gay dresses looked like parti-colored Mushrooms (Brayvo Dick!)

As this letter is merely a trial of your remembrance of the person whose name is subscribed to it, I say no more at present: merely repeating that my address is, as above. All join in kind love to you. And I am ever My Dear Mac Your most affectionate friend CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [16 JUNE 1846]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: PM 16 June 46.†2 Address: Angleterre. | Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | London | England.

My Dear Fred. We arrived at Lausanne last Thursday afternoon, safe and sound and in good health. We lived, until yesterday afternoon, at the hotel: not having been able to conclude arrangements for getting into this house (Rosemont) before. It is quite a bandbox, as most of the houses hereabouts, are—I think you might put it all into the great Sala of the Peschiere—but it stands in the midst of beautiful grounds, on the hill above the Lake, with the whole range of the Alps towering before it. Small as it is too, we can boast a couple of small spare rooms, in which we should be delighted to stow you away, with any travelling companion. The situation is lovely in the extreme; and the excessive greenness and shade of the Country give it a great advantage over Italy. Everything is very neatly kept too. There are no Priests or Monks to be seen; and the people seem to be very thriving and industrious. I never saw such a profusion of birds and flowers, in the richest parts of Devonshire.

We pay £10 per month for the house, for the first 6 months, and £8 for the second six, supposing we should remain here. I am not sufficiently experienced yet, to say what market prices are, but I should think they were about the Genoa mark, and not so cheap as English people suppose. Some things are much cheaper than in Genoa, as, for instance, Piano hire. We have really a very good German Piano, for which we pay but ten francs (eight and fourpence) per month. House rent too is much cheaper. I could have got a very splendid house indeed (as large as the Peschiere) for £150 pr. year. But the largest houses are the cheapest, because they involve the necessity of a large establishment of servants. We have two pretty little drawing rooms here, opening into each other—a little dining room—a little study—a great balcony—a colonnade—an immense [ ][†1] family live; and the Proprietress of [it is employed in][†2] another little Villa just within the gate. It is not lonesome therefore, though secluded, and is within ten minutes walk of Lausanne—a mighty dull little [t]own. There are not many English people here; but there is an English Church, and there is an English Library. Geneva, a large city, is within four and twenty miles; and steamers on the Lake are always going there, and coming back.

If you should arrange to come, and are deterred by economical considerations, I dare say I could make all that easy with you, when you were once here; so, take that into your calculations. Agreeably to my promise, I give you, on the other side, full directions in reference to the Journey. As I promised the same to Augustus, shew it to him, or copy it for him.

There is a poor woman named Greenwood, who lodges in Blenheim Street Oxford Street, at a little Cobbler's. I have relieved her once, and know her case to be a good one. I wish you would go to her, and ask her how she is going on, and intimate that I left a Pound or Two with you for her benefit. She is very industrious, and has suffered a great deal. I must leave the details of relief to you, but I give you an order on Mitton (don't say to him what it is for) to the extent of £5, in case you should find, at any period during my absence, that a small sum, now and then, will do her real service. I need not, I know, recommend you to be careful in drawing and applying it.

Kate and Georgy and all the children unite with me in love to you, Anna,[†3] father, mother, Ka[te,][†4] Letitia and Henry, [an]d all. Tell Henry I will write to him before long, and that we think he and Letitia ought to take advantage of your paper of instructions, and come to see us here. We had no intelligence of Alfred and his wife at Ostend[†5]—as no doubt you know by this time.

Ever My Dear Fred | Affectionately Yours

CD.

The best Hotel at Ostend, is the Hotel de la Cour Imperiale. From Ostend to Cologne, straight through, by Railway. Fare, 27 francs (extra charge for luggage, which is weighed). Time 15 hours. At Cologne, you sleep. Any hotel will serve your turn. The nearer the River, the better. Next day you pay your fare, and take your ticket, at the office of any of the Steam Packet Companies (the Cologne Company is the best, but they are all good) through to Mannheim. Fare, 22 francs. At the office, as well as everywhere else upon the Rhine, there is some one who can speak English. The boat will probably start at about 10 or half past 10 in the morning, and allow you to sleep at Coblentz that night: either going on next morning in the same boat, or in another boat belonging to the same company. The time from Cologne to Coblentz is about 8 hours. Any hotel at Coblentz, except the Gia[nt.][†1] They are all close to the River. From Coblentz to Mannheim is about [14] hours. Hotel at Mannheim, [the Hotel de] l'Europe. Very good, and close to the w[har]f. Sleep there. You will have dined on board: paying extra for your dinner. Next day, from Mannheim to Kehl, by Railway. Time about 6 hours. Fare, 1st. class, 14 francs. From Kehl to Strasburg (two or three miles) by Omnibus. The french custom house is on the road, where luggage is examined. (It is also examined on the Railroad between Ostend and Cologne. But all you have to do, is, to go into the room you are shewn; wait until you see your Portmanteau brought in; cry "halloa" at sight of it, open it, and afterwards lock it up again.) Hotel at Strasburg, the Hotel de la Ville de Paris, very good. You can sleep there, or go on to Bâle, also by Railway, by the next Train. Fare, 1st. class, 17 francs. Time, about 4 hours. Hotel at Bâle, the Hotel of the Three Kings, one of the very best on the Continent. At Bâle, there are the Mail, and at least two Diligences, starting, every day and evening, for Lausanne. Fare about 26 francs. Time, about 24 hours. I give the fares, and the times in all cases about. They are almost exactly stated. The account (excluding bed and board on the road) stands thus, from Ostend

	TIME Days	MONEY Francs
To Cologne	1	27
To Coblentz To Mannheim	2	22
To Kehl & Strasburg, & then[ce to Bâ]le	1	31
Omnibuses from & to Railw[ay (addi]tional)		1
To Lausanne	1	26
	5	107 francs

I should say the Bed and board would not exceed 10 francs per day. And on the other hand, you must observe that I have charged the Railways as 1st. class, and that the 2nd. class carriages are cheaper, and most excellent. In returning, as the Boats then go with the stream, the Water-Journey is done in half the time.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 16 JUNE 1846*

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold. Address: Angleterre | Douglas Jerrold Esquire | West Lodge | Putney Heath | near London | England.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland
Tuesday Sixteenth June 1846.

My Dear Jerrold.

We are established here, in a perfect doll's house which could be put, bodily, into the Hall of our Italian Palazzo. But it is in the most lovely and delicious situation imaginable, and there is a spare bedroom wherein we would make you as comfortable as need be. Bowers of roses for cigar-smoking, arbours for cool punch-drinking, mountain and Tyrolean countries close at hand, piled-up Alps before the windows, &c &c &c—

In the hope that you have not thought better (or worse) of your solemn promise and vow, to come here,[†1] I proceed to give you elaborate and business-like directions for the Journey.

First and foremost, you cross to Ostend, either from Ramsgate or Dover. We took the former route, and found it a short passage. From Ostend to Cologne by Railway. Fare 27 francs (extra charge for luggage, which is weighed). Time 15 hours. At Cologne you sleep. Any hotel will serve your turn. The nearer the Rhine, the better. Next day, you pay your fare and take your ticket at the office of any of the Steam Packet Companies (the Cologne is the best, but they are all good) through to Mannheim. Fare 22 francs. The boat will probably start at about 10 or half past 10 in the Morning, and allow you to sleep at Coblentz that night: either going on next morning in the same boat, or in another belonging to the same company. The time from Cologne to Coblentz, is about 8 hours. Note, that the Beauties of the Rhine do not begin, until you are 2 hours and half, good, out of Cologne. Any hotel at Coblentz, except the Giant. They are all close to the river. From Coblentz to Mannheim is about 14 hours. You would probably start at 6 in the Morning, and arrive at about 8 in the evening: dining on board. Hotel at Mannheim, the Hotel de l'Europe, very good, and close to the wharf. Sleep there. Next day from Mannheim to Kehl by Railway. Time about 6 hours. Fare, 1st. class 14 francs. From Kehl to Strasbourg (two or three miles) by Omnibus. The French Custom House is on the road, where luggage is examined. Hotel at Strasbourg, the Hotel de la Ville de Paris, very good. You can sleep there, or go on to Bâle, also by Railway, by the next train. Fare, first class, 17 francs. Time, about 4 hours. Hotel at Bâle, the Hotel of the Three Kings. One of the very best on the Continent. At Bâle, there is the Mail, and there are at least two Diligences also, starting every day for Lausanne. Fare, about 26 francs. Time, about 24 hours. I give the fares and the times, in all cases, about. They are almost exactly stated. The account (excluding bed and board on the road) stands thus, from Ostend.

	TIME		MONEY
	Days		Francs
To Cologne	1		27
To Coblentz	1	}	22
To Mannheim	1	}
To Kehl and Strasburg, & thence to Bâle	1		31
Omnibuses, additional			1
To Lausanne	1		26
	5		107 francs

Returning; the Journey by the Rhine, being with the Stream, is performed in half the time. All along the Rhine, English is understood and spoken—French, everywhere.

I look forward to hearing from you that you have fixed a day for the Expedition. You shall work when you please (I am at work myself) and play when you please. And I need not say how truly delighted we should be to see you.

Mrs. Dickens and the little woman send their kind regards.

I am Ever My Dear Jerrold | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esquire.

To LORD MORPETH, 20 JUNE 1846*

MS Mr George Howard. Address: Private | Angleterre. | The | Viscount Morpeth | Grosvenor Place | LONDON.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland
Saturday June Twentieth 1846.

My Dear Lord Morpeth.

Let me premise in the very first line of this letter, that you are to read it at your convenience—and that if you be not at perfect leisure when you receive it, I beg you to fold it up again, until you have a few spare minutes to bestow on its perusal.

I wish to confide to you, a very earnest desire of mine, and to leave it entirely to your discretion and inclination, whether it shall remain a point in confidence between yourself and me, or whether you shall communicate it, at your own time, to anyone else.

I have an ambition for some public employment—some Commissionership, or Inspectorship, or the like, connected with any of those subjects in which I take a deep interest, and in respect of which the Public are generally disposed to treat me with confidence and regard. On any questions connected with the Education of the People, the elevation of their character, the improvement of their dwellings, their greater protection against disease and vice—or with the treatment of Criminals, or the administration of Prison Discipline, which I have long observed closely—I think I could do good service, and I am sure I should enter with my whole heart. I have hoped, for years, that I may become at last a

Police Magistrate,[†1] and turn my social knowledge to good practical account from day to day; and I have the strongest hope that in any such position as I have glanced at, I could prove my fitness for improving the execution of that trust. It is not a very towering ambition perhaps; but never was a man's ambition so peculiarly associated with his constant sympathies—and, as I fancy, with his capabilities—as this of mine.[†2]

Before I left London, political circumstances pointed so directly to a change in the Government, and the restoration, before long, of the Party with which you are proudly and honorably associated, that I more than once had the idea of speaking to some distinguished Member of it on this subject, and begging leave to mention the fact that I sought employment of this kind—and there an end. Had Lord Holland been living, I think I should have done so to him without hesitation. But, at one time thinking of you, and at another of Lord Lansdowne, and at another of Lord Normanby (from whom I have received great personal kindness)[†3] I grew undecided and uneasy, and came away, at last, without doing anything.

Reverting to the question in this retirement, I have, somehow, accustomed myself to look at it, as it were from a distant time as well as a distant place. Fancying this letter a hundred years old, I cannot discern any reason why a Descendant of mine should come to the knowledge of it, with the least misgiving or reluctance. Therefore I think I may banish those feelings from my own mind, and boldly (though with an unaffected diffidence) state my object.

I feel that in doing so, I am as little open to the suspicion of sordid motives as any man, with such an object, can be. I entertain the wish, common to most Literary Men, of having some permanent dependance besides Literature. But I have no thought of abandoning that pursuit, which is a great happiness to me: and only seek this new avocation as its not unnatural offspring and companion. My writings, such as they are, are my credentials; and they have never been in greater favor at home and abroad, nor has my pen ever been more profitable to me, than at this time.

You may laughingly ask why I select you, after all, as the recipient of this letter? I will tell you the plain truth, without the slightest ornament. Though I have had the pleasure of your personal acquaintance—I had almost written, friendship—for but a short time, I am sure you have, naturally, a strong and kind inclination towards one in my position, which may be most implicitly confided in. In that assurance, I put my trust in you without reserve, and leave the substance of this letter to be remembered or forgotten by you, with a perfect reliance on your generous consideration.

I am ever | Dear Lord Morpeth
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Viscount Morpeth.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 JUNE 1846]

Extracts in F, v, ii, 392-3, 393-4, 392*n*, v, iii, 403*n*, v, ii, 394. Date: first, second and fifth extracts 22 June according to Forster; third extract from "another" letter than the first, but suggests early impressions, therefore probably same letter; fourth extract from letter "preceding" ?28 June.

Lausanne had its natural dulness increased by its streets going up and down hill abruptly and steeply, like the streets in a dream; and the consequent difficulty of getting about it. There are some suppressed churches in it, now used as packers' warehouses: with cranes and pulleys growing out of steeple-towers; little doors for lowering goods through, fitted into blocked-up oriel windows; and carthorses stabled in crypts. These also help to give it a deserted and disused appearance. On the other hand, as it is a perfectly free place subject to no prohibitions or restrictions of any kind, there are all sorts of new French books and publications in it, and all sorts of fresh intelligence from the world beyond the Jura Mountains. It contains only one Roman Catholic church, which is mainly for the use of the Savoyards and Piedmontese who come trading over the Alps. As for the country, it cannot be praised too highly, or reported too beautiful. There are no great waterfalls, or walks through mountain-gorges, close at hand, as in some other parts of Switzerland; but there is a charming variety of enchanting scenery. There is the shore of the lake, where you may dip your feet, as you walk, in the deep blue water, if you choose. There are the hills to climb up, leading to the great heights above the town; or to stagger down, leading to the lake. There is every possible variety of deep green lanes, vineyard, cornfield, pasture-land, and wood. There are excellent country roads that might be in Kent or Devonshire: and, closing up every view and vista, is an eternally changing range of prodigious mountains—sometimes red, sometimes grey, sometimes purple, sometimes black; sometimes white with snow; sometimes close at hand; and sometimes very ghosts in the clouds and mist.

The view from each side of Rosemont was different in character, and from one there was visible the liveliest aspect of Lausanne itself, close at hand, and seeming to be always coming down the hill with its steeples and towers, not able to stop itself. From a fine long broad balcony on which the windows of my little study on the first floor (where I am now writing) open, the lake is seen to wonderful advantage,—losing itself by degrees in the solemn gorge of mountains leading to the Simplon pass. Under the balcony is a stone colonnade, on which the six French windows of the drawing-room open; and quantities of plants are clustered about the pillars and seats, very prettily. One of these drawing-rooms is furnished (like a French hotel) with red velvet, and the other with green; in both, plenty of mirrors and nice white muslin curtains; and for the larger one in cold weather there is a carpet, the floors being bare now, but inlaid in squares with different-coloured woods. He went on to describe every other room, concluding Walking out into the balcony as I write, I am suddenly reminded, by the sight of the Castle of Chillon[†1] glittering in the sunlight on the lake, that I omitted to mention that object in my catalogue of the Rosemont beauties. Please to put it in, like George Robins,[†1] in a line by itself.

There were regular evening walks of nine or ten miles, and he was thinking of his books. An odd shadowy undefined idea is at work within me, that I could connect a great battle-field somehow with my little Christmas story. Shapeless visions of the repose and peace pervading it in after-time; with the corn and grass growing over the slain, and people singing at the plough; are so perpetually floating before me, that I cannot but think there may turn out to be something good in them when I see them more plainly. . . . I want to get Four Numbers of the monthly book done here, and the Christmas book. If all goes well, and nothing changes, and I can accomplish this by the end of November, I shall run over to you in England for a few days with a light heart, and leave Roche to move the caravan to Paris in the meanwhile. It will be just the very point in the story when the life and crowd of that extraordinary place will come vividly to my assistance in writing.

The green woods and green shades about here, are more like Cobham in Kent, than anything we dream of at the foot of the Alpine passes.

There was an annual child's fête at the Signal[†2] the other night: given by the town. It was beautiful to see perhaps a hundred couple of children dancing in an immense ring in a green wood. Our three eldest were among them, presided over by my landlord,[†3] who was 18 years in the English Navy, and is the Sous Préfet of the town—a very good fellow indeed; quite an Englishman. Our landlady, nearly twice his age, used to keep the Inn (a famous one) at Zurich: and having made £50,000 bestowed it on a young husband. She might have done worse.

He ended with a promise to describe in his next letter the small colony of English.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JUNE 1846

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland
Twenty Fifth June 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The enclosed sheets of paper[†4] are dated on the day on which—and at the place where—they were begun. When you have read and considered them, I shall hope to have the pleasure of receiving a letter from you.

This is an odd little house, which I think might be easily put into the great Sala of our old Genoese Palazzo—bodily. It stands in the midst of beautiful grounds, on the slope of the Hill going down to the Lake—and the blue waters thereof, and the whole range of Mountains, lie in front of the windows. Between it, and Ouchy, is a School, very famous in these parts, kept by a German gentleman; and in that School, Charley is imprisoned as a weekly Boarder.[†1] As there are only three other English boys, I hope he will soon be a proficient in the French language. He went, last Monday. It was rather a trial for him, and indeed for all of us, that first departure from home in a strange place. But he went with a gallant heart; and when I saw him sitting at the Garden Gate last night as I walked by, though I had an idea that he was counting the hours until Saturday at noon, yet he looked happy, and very brown. His sisters have a little French Governess at home, who can't speak a word of English.

The heat as we came here, was more intense than any I have ever felt, and so it has been here, until the day before yesterday, when there was a violent thunder storm of some hours' duration, which I hope has cleared the air for good and all, as it is now quite cool and windy. I have a study, something larger than a Plate Warmer, opening into a Balcony and commanding a lovely view. I am contemplating terrific and tremendous industry—am mightily resolved to begin the book in Numbers without delay—and have already begun to look the little Christmas Volume in its small red face; though I hardly know it by sight yet.

As my handwriting always becomes very hideous under such circumstances (as I fear I need hardly mention to you, who have so much of it to read) I will only add that Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial remembrances to you, and that we desire to add our best regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown. Ever Faithfully Yours—CHARLES DICKENS. I am much distressed by having no room for the flourish.

To JOHN FORSTER, 25 JUNE 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Angleterre | John Forster Esquire | 58 Lincolns Inn Fields | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne. Twenty Fifth June 1846.

My Dear Forster.

Will you remember, in about a month or five weeks from the 21st. of this month, to have accounts from Bradbury and Evans and Chapman and Hall, and to adjust and settle them?[†2]

I am very anxious that you should put to Bradbury and Evans a doubt which is strongly present to my mind—and that is, whether it would not be better—whether it is not positively necessary as matters stand—for them to arrange with Chapman and Hall, for Chapman and Hall being the publishers of the new book in monthly numbers.[†1] I have been so unwilling to awaken any new matters of difference between Bradbury and Evans and myself, and have been so sincerely anxious that the old ones should fade away and be forgotten along with the unfortunate, and unsettled, and irritating state of circumstances in which they were engendered—that I have not made any allusion to this desire of mine, before. But I have felt it very earnestly and constantly for some time, and never more so than when—at the very time of the publication of the Pictures from Italy, and when I was forcing myself to leave England, with the view of filling up the Pit in my literary life, made by that unhappy paper—their names were painted out from above the door in Fleet Street, and "Office of The Daily News" written up there, instead. So that when I was seeking, by the most decisive means to detach myself from that undertaking, my book was actually published at its office!

Pray explain to Bradbury and Evans that I do not make this, matter of complaint against them. I am most desirous that they should (as I now hope they will) recover their loss and turn the enterprize to good account. But the question whether it is proper that a book of mine should be published at a Newspaper office, is quite another thing; and that it is not advisable that it should be published at their place in Whitefriars, I take for granted.[†2] Otherwise, they never would have started the house in Fleet Street, at all. Apart from this, I do not disguise from you, or them, that I question their having people about them, competent to the management of such a work; whereas we know that Chapman and Hall are used to it, and that the machinery is as familiar to them, as the ticking of their own watches.

I have a besetting anxiety on this subject, of quite an intense kind. There will be the beginning of the new book, and there will be the Christmas Book, close on each other's heels. There is all the preliminary announcement to be considered and arranged, and the board to be made quite clear and clean for the playing out of a very great stake; and I do not think—not because I will not, but because I cannot—that Bradbury and Evans's arrangements, so thoroughly unsettled, and so sweepingly changed by the Newspaper—are so capable of the undertaking as Chapman and Hall's. Pray, my dear Forster, take very grave counsel with Bradbury and Evans on this head, as soon as you conveniently can; and that they may not misunderstand the spirit in which I write, or consider me as being anything but good-humoured and friendly, read them as much of this letter, or all of it, as you please.

Ever affectionately Yours my Dear F.
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esquire.

To JOSEPH VALCKENBERG, 25 JUNE 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: A Monsieur | Mons: Joseph Valckenberg | Worms | Sur le Rhine.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland
Twenty Fifth June 1846.

My Dear Sir.

I hasten to return you my best thanks for your very earnest and warm-hearted letter; and I assure you that if I can contrive to devote a day to Worms whenever I come down the Rhine, I shall certainly do so, and shall have great pleasure in becoming known to your family.

My movements depend so much on my industry here, and my industry depends so much on the humour I am in from day to day, that I cannot just now anticipate my movements with certainty. But whenever I strike my Swiss tent, I will write to you again. I think it is pretty sure that we shall remove to Paris before Christmas, and that I shall be running to London, towards the end of November.

It is impossible that I can be otherwise than pleased with the feeling in which your proposed remembrance of me, originates. And therefore all I have to say on the subject of the Liebfraumilch, is, that if it should come here, I will drink in it, the health of everybody, great and small, in that large family-house at Worms.

In the meantime, pray remember me to your home-circle—especially to your brother, and to that fair Wife of yours who did not come down to the Pier on the 6th of June. To whom Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their regards.

My small fellow-travellers arrived here in perfect health, and have grown so red in this farmhouse that they look as if they were in one perpetual Sunset.

Believe me, with regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Valckenberg Esquire.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, [?15-26 JUNE 1846]

Mention in To Forster, ?28 June. Date: written at Rosemont, and completed before starting Dombey on 27 June.

About Ragged Schools.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 JUNE 1846]

Extracts in F, v, ii, 400, 394, iii, 402-3. Date: first extract 28 June according to Forster; second extract also 28 June, since the day before Haldimand's dinner (see fn); third extract probably same letter, since from one of "his first letters", but clearly well after the move to Rosemont.

I have not been idle since I have been here, though at first I was "kept out" of the big box[†1] as you know. I had a good deal to write for Lord John about the Ragged schools. I set to work and did that. A good deal for Miss Coutts, in reference to her charitable projects. I set to work and did that. Half of the children's New Testament[†2] to write, or pretty nearly. I set to work and did that. Next I cleared off the greater part of such correspondence as I had rashly pledged myself to; and then . . .

BEGAN DOMBEY!

I performed this feat yesterday—only wrote the first slip—but there it is, and it is a plunge straight over head and ears into the story. . . . Besides all this, I have really gone with great vigour at the French, where I find myself greatly assisted by the Italian; and am subject to two descriptions of mental fits in reference to the Christmas book: one, of the suddenest and wildest enthusiasm; one, of solitary and anxious consideration. . . . By the way, as I was unpacking the big box I took hold of a book, and said to "Them,"—"Now, whatever passage my thumb rests on, I shall take as having reference to my work." It was

TRISTRAM SHANDY, and opened at these words, "What a work it is likely to turn out! Let us begin it!"[†1]

He still inclined strongly to the field of battle notion for his Christmas book, but had not yet begun, wishing to have Forster's opinion.

He mentioned Haldimand,[†2] who had a very fine seat just below Rosemont; his character and station had made him quite the little sovereign of the place. He has founded and endowed all sorts of hospitals and institutions here, and he gives a dinner to-morrow to introduce our neighbours, whoever they are.[†3]

The peasantry all about Lausanne were as pleasant a people as need be. He never passed on any of the roads, man, woman, or child without a salutation; and anything churlish or disagreeable he never noticed in them. It was unjust to call the Swiss the Americans of the Continent. They have not the sweetness and grace of the Italians, or the agreeable manners of the better specimens of French peasantry, but they are admirably educated (the schools of this canton are extraordinarily good, in every little village), and always prepared to give a civil and pleasant answer. There is no greater mistake. I was talking to my landlord about it the other day, and he said he could not conceive how it had ever arisen, but that when he returned from his eighteen years' service in the English Navy he shunned the people, and had no interest in them until they gradually forced their real character upon his observation. We have a cook and a coachman here, taken at hazard from the people of the town; and I never saw more obliging servants, or people who did their work so truly with a will. And in point of cleanliness, order, and punctuality to the moment, they are unrivalled.

July

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 3 JULY 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Angleterre | Thomas Chapman Esquire | 2 Leadenhall Street | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne. Friday Third July 1846

My Dear Sir

It was a very considerate and friendly act of you to time your communication on the most painful subject of the breach of confidence in your house,[†1] as you did, and to make it to me yourself. Accept my thanks for this proof of your regard among many others: and with them the assurance of my friendship and esteem.

I have been perfectly horrified by the whole Story.[†2] I could hardly name a man in London whom I should have thought less likely to stand so committed, than he. Not that I had any intimate knowledge of his pursuits, or any close acquaintance with himself or his usual mode of thinking and proceeding—but I had an idea of his great steadiness and reliability, and a conviction of his great respect and regard for you. God help him, I believe, even now, that he was sincere in the latter feeling, and was overcome and swept away by the tide of circumstances on which he had madly cast himself. The more I see and hear of such surprises, the more I echo that clause in Christ's prayer in which they are all shadowed forth,—and shrink from the prospect of temptation being presented to anybody dear to me, or to myself.

It has often awakened great wonder within me how all those publishing expences[†3] (of the extent of which, I was able to form a pretty accurate idea) were defrayed. But whenever I have sounded Augustus on the subject; which I have done once or twice; he always hinted at a Rich Uncle, and some unknown share in some unknown business, which of course I could not gainsay. He told the tale as it was told to him, and had every reason to believe it. Indeed, I suppose you and your partners laboured under the like delusion?

I should be very glad if you would tell me, when it is all done, whether you have any intelligence of him, or any knowledge of his destiny.[†1] It is terrible to think of his wife and children.

Like you, I was greatly shocked by the death of Haydon,[†2]—I thought the account of the Inquest one of the most affecting[†3] pieces of fact I had ever read. But I quite agree with you, nevertheless, that all his life he had utterly mistaken his vocation. No amount of sympathy with him and sorrow for him in his manly pursuit of a wrong idea for so many years—until, by dint of his perseverance and courage it almost began to seem a right one—ought to prevent one from saying that he most unquestionably was a very bad painter, and that his pictures could not be expected to sell or to succeed. I went to that very exhibition at the Egyptian Hall of which he writes so touchingly in his Diary; and I assure you that when I saw his account of the Number of Visitors he had had, in one of the papers, my amazement was—not that they were so few, but that they were so many. There was one Picture—Nero entertaining himself with a Musical Performance, while Rome was burning—quite marvellous in its badness. It was difficult to look at it with a composed and decent face. There is no doubt, on the other hand, that in the Theory of his art, he was very clever, and in his general tone of thought a very superior man. And I must say that having written so well on Art,[†4] and having suffered so much in a hopeless attempt to elevate it, I think he was (as his widow is) a very good subject for a Pension.

I little thought, once upon a time, that I should ever live to praise Peel. But d'Israeli and that Dunghill Lord[†1] have so disgusted me, that I feel disposed to champion him—and should have done so, even if he hadn't shewn a striving artist, such delicate attention and compassion as he shewed to Haydon.[†2] I suppose he is out of office by this time, and Lord John half in; though I don't see how they are to steer between Lord Grey and Lord Palmerston.[†3] It must come in my opinion, as Cobden told them in the House, to a coalition between Peel and Lord John.[†4] The first great question on which the Public become really excited—Education, perhaps,—or Church Reform, or, for anything we know just now, the Game Laws—is very likely to bring it about. There will then be a strong Government, and, as Governments go, a pretty good one.

I hear from Forster that the Daily News is doing wonders,[†5] though he seems to me to be[†6] uneasy there himself, and to feel the confinement and drudgery. It is very well done, I think—but I always suspect them on Railroad matters—and don't think they will ever bruise their foreheads by running, before the Public, against any bold idea. Well! I am very glad I have nothing to do with it, and have so far forgotten it now, that I have ceased to be sorry that I ever had a part in it.

Our house here would go bodily into the great Sala of our Italian House; but it is in a lovely situation, and in the midst of very pretty grounds. I have already settled down to work, and am glad of the repose and quiet. The new book in numbers, is begun; and the Christmas book is simmering over a slow fire. In such circumstances my handwriting usually becomes a very hideous and unreadable —as I am afraid you will have found out long before this place, if you ever reach it.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to say (with her and Miss Hogarth's love to Mrs. Chapman) that the house is large enough to leave us a spare bed; and that if you should make a summer trip in this direction, we should be delighted to welcome you. There is very little English society here, but what there is (two or three families) is agreeable and intelligent. As to the Swiss, they do me as much honor, and seem to be as interested in me, as if I were Swiss myself. I have a little Study, not unlike a large plate-warmer, which commands the whole Lake and range of mountains. There are beautiful and different views, on all the four sides of the house.

I have hardly left myself room to say that I am—but I want the less room, because it is[†1] unnecessary—always My Dear Mr. Chapman Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Everybody well, and the weather delicious.—Great thunder storms among the mountains.

To LORD ROBERTSON, 3 JULY 1846*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Angleterre | The Honorable | Lord Robertson | Edinburgh | Scotland.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland | Third July 1846.

My Dear Lightbody.

There was a gentleman in the prime of life—not stout, but inclining towards a goodly rotundity of person—who informed me, when you and I had the happiness of meeting at the house of our mutual friend Macready,[†2] that he wished he might be something or othered if he didn't make an Autumnal excursion to this place, to see your humble servant who is most cordially and lovingly his friend. As he said this, "in a manner" which inspired me with confidence in the sincerity of his declaration, I shall feel obliged if you will have the kindness to sound him on the subject, and ask him whether he means to come; and if so, when; and if not, why not.

You can tell him if you please that although this house could easily be put into the large hall of my Italian Palazzo, it is large enough and elastic enough to hold him, and also that other man—whom the vile blows and buffets of the world have so incensed that he is reckless what he does to spite the world[†3]—who swore at the same time that he would come, and sail upon the Lake. The heartiest of welcomes (and very little else) is ready for their reception.

I am hard at work; having already begun the new Story in numbers, and having the Christmas book on the top-bar, simmering gently over a slow fire. Surely there is no such place as London? I seem to have heard of it in my childhood, but I am pretty sure it was a lie of the Nurse's. Mountains, valleys, lakes, vines, and green lanes, are all I believe in, in the way of locality.

Ramsgate to Ostend—Ostend (by Railroad) to Cologne. Cologne (by steamboat) to Mannheim. Mannheim (by Railroad) to Strasburg. Strasburg (by Railroad) to Bâle. Bâle (by Mail Coach, or any coach you like) to Lausanne. All along the road, through Belgium and Germany, the conversation is one perpetual Gaelic Sermon.[†1] Everybody is nearest choaking, when most eloquent.

All perfectly well. Love from the Ladies. Ever Yours affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 JULY 1846]

Extracts in F, v, iii, 404-5, 402 and n, v, ii, 394*n*, v, iii, 403-4, 413 and n (four extracts); F, 1872-4, II, xii, 236. Date: first three extracts 5 July according to Forster; fourth extract, describing the fête, in "the third week after his arrival"; fifth (about Haydon) at about the same time as To Chapman, 3 July; the next three "just at this time" and "the same letter" (as each other); final extract (about Mrs Lemon) probably same letter, since replaced in later edns by the extracts about Haydon and John Hunt (see fn).

He was feeling sometimes the want of streets in an extraordinary nervousness it would be hardly possible to describe, that would come upon him after he had been writing all day. I am writing slowly at first, of course, but I hope I shall have finished the first number in the course of a fortnight at farthest. I have done the first chapter, and begun another. I say nothing of the merits thus far, or of the idea beyond what is known to you; because I prefer that you should come as fresh as may be upon them. I shall certainly have a great surprise for people at the end of the fourth number;[†2] and I think there is a new and peculiar sort of interest, involving the necessity of a little bit of delicate treatment[†3] whereof I will expound my idea to you by and by. When I have done this number, I may take a run to Chamounix perhaps. . . . My thoughts have necessarily been called away from the Christmas book. The first Dombey done, I think I should fly off to that, whenever the idea presented itself vividly before me. I still cherish the Battle fancy, though it is nothing but a fancy as yet.

When it is very hot, it is hotter than in Italy.[†4] The overhanging roofs of the houses, and the quantity of wood employed in their construction (where they use tile and brick in Italy), render them perfect forcing-houses. The walls and floors, hot to the hand all the night through, interfere with sleep; and thunder is almost always booming and rumbling among the mountains. There was at first a plague of flies. They cover everything eatable, fall into everything drinkable, stagger into the wet ink of newly-written words and make tracks on the writing paper, clog their legs in the lather on your chin while you are shaving in the morning, and drive you frantic at any time when there is daylight if you fall asleep.

The heat disabled him at the outset for all exertion until the lightning, thunder and rain arrived. He described the fruit as so abundant in the little farm, that the trees of the orchard in front of his house were bending beneath it; a field of wheat sloping down to the side window of his dining-room was already cut and carried; and the roses, which the hurricane of rain had swept away, were come back lovelier and in greater numbers than ever.

Setting off last night at six o'clock, in accordance with my usual custom, for a long walk, I was really quite floored when I got to the top of a long steep hill leading out of the town—the same by which we entered it. I believe the great heats, however, seldom last more than a week at a time; there are always very long twilights, and very delicious evenings; and now that there is moonlight, the nights are wonderful. The peacefulness and grandeur of the Mountains and the Lake are indescribable. There comes a rush of sweet smells with the morning air too, which is quite peculiar to the country.

He gave an account of a fête held at The Signal. There were various booths for eating and drinking, and the selling of trinkets and sweetmeats; and in one place there was a great circle cleared, in which the common people waltzed and polka'd, without cessation, to the music of a band. There was a great roundabout for children (oh my stars what a family were proprietors of it! A sunburnt father and mother, a humpbacked boy, a great poodle-dog possessed of all sorts of accomplishments, and a young murderer of seventeen who turned the machinery); and there were some games of chance and skill established under trees. It was very pretty. In some of the drinking booths there were parties of German peasants, twenty together perhaps, singing national drinking-songs, and making a most exhilarating and musical chorus by rattling their cups and glasses on the table and clinking them against each other, to a regular tune. You know it as a stage dodge, but the real thing is splendid. Farther down the hill, other peasants were rifle-shooting for prizes, at targets set on the other side of a deep ravine, from two to three hundred yards off. It was quite fearful to see the astonishing accuracy of their aim, and how, every time a rifle awakened the ten thousand echoes of the green glen, some men crouching behind a little wall immediately in front of the targets, sprung up with large numbers in their hands denoting where the ball had struck the bull's eye—and then in a moment disappeared again. Standing in a ring near these shooters was another party of Germans singing hunting-songs, in parts, most melodiously. And down in the distance was Lausanne, with all sorts of haunted-looking old towers rising up before the smooth water of the lake, and an evening sky all red, and gold, and bright green. When it closed in quite dark, all the booths were lighted up; and the twinkling of the lamps among the forest of trees was beautiful.

I am very sorry to hear of Haydon's death. If any subscription be proposed, put me down for five pounds.[†1] About John Hunt's death: I quite shuddered at John Hunt's[†1] having applied to that generous duke.[†2] It went against the grain with me, sorely, after the story of the two hundred pounds. I don't know what I should have done, if I had been Hunt.

I have been reading poor Hood's Tylney Hall:[†3] the most extraordinary jumble of impossible extravagance, and especial cleverness, I ever saw. The man drawn to the life from the pirate-bookseller, is wonderfully good;[†4] and his recommendation to a reduced gentleman from the university, to rise from nothing as he, the pirate, did, and go round to the churches and see whether there's an opening, and begin by being a beadle, is one of the finest things I ever read, in its way.[†5]

I had a letter from Tagart the day before yesterday, with a curious little anecdote of the Duke of Wellington in it. They have had a small cottage at Walmer; and one day—the other day only—the old man met their little daughter Lucy, a child about Mamey's age, near the garden; and having kissed her, and asked her what was her name, and who and what her parents were, tied a small silver medal round her neck with a bit of pink ribbon, and asked the child to keep it in remembrance of him. There is something good, and aged, and odd in it. Is there not?

After turning Mrs. Lemon's portrait over, in my mind, I am convinced that there is not a grain of bad taste in the matter, and that there is a manly composure and courage in the proceeding deserving of the utmost respect. If Lemon were one of your braggart honest men, he would set a taint of bad taste upon that action as upon everything else he might say or do; but being what he is, I admire him for it greatly, and hold it to be a proof of an exalted nature and a true heart. Your idea of him, is mine. I am sure he is an excellent fellow. We talk about not liking such and such a man because he doesn't look one in the face,—but how much we should esteem a man who looks the world in the face, composedly, and neither shirks it nor bullies it. Between ourselves, I say with shame and self-reproach that I am quite sure if Kate had been a Columbine her portrait would not be hanging, "in character," in Devonshire-terrace.[†1]

To H. P. SMITH, 9 JULY 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Rosemont, Lausanne. | Ninth July 1846.

My Dear Smith.

I am quite ashamed to have forgotten your letter of Introduction to my Italianized Yorkshireman. Here it is, agreeably to your reminder conveyed to my brother Alfred. You will find him a good plain workaday bachelor, whose wine, cigars, brandy and water, and so forth, I punished cruelly when I was in those parts.

Our house here would go bodily into the Peschiere Sala, but it is very pretty, and splendidly situated. Don't you mean to pass this way? We are all well, thank God, and happy; and I am charged with more loves to Mrs. Smith and Co. (including my own) than this half sheet of paper will hold.

I have begun my new book and am up to the eyes in it—I suppose I ought rather to say, as it begins in the head, 'down to the toes'. You wouldn't entertain a proposal for ensuring imaginary lives, would you? If so, I would submit the life of—

[No.][†2] The name shall not pass these lips, until the [Wa]lls of [the City[†3] pro]claim it.

Ever Yours cordially

CD.

H. P. Smith Esquire

To W. WALTON, 9 JULY 1846

MS Huntington Library.

Lausanne. Switzerland | Ninth July 1846.

My Dear Walton.

I beg to introduce to you, Mr. and Mrs. Smith—very particular friends of ours, for whom we have the greatest regard. I need say no more, I am sure, to recommend them to your kind offices. Mr. Smith is stimulated by my accounts of the Marble quarries and the Carrara Studii, to a wish to see those wonders; and I have told him that no one can shew them, half so satisfactorily and pleasantly as you.

Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Walton Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 JULY 1846]

Extracts in F, v, iii, 405, 404, v, ii, 394-5 and n, 397-8, v, iii, 404*n*. Date: first extract "a week later" and second and last extracts "of a little later date" than 5 July according to Forster; third and fourth, clearly the next letter after the dinner on 6 July (see fn), and fifth, after his visit to the Blind Institution (on 8 July according to Forster).

He hoped to finish the first number by that day week or thereabouts, and should then run and look for his Christmas book in the glaciers at Chamounix. I think Dombey very strong—with great capacity in its leading idea; plenty of character that is likely to tell; and some rollicking facetiousness, to say nothing of pathos. I hope you will soon judge of it for yourself, however; and I know you will say what you think. I have been very constantly at work.

One of the farmer's people—a sister, I think—was married from here the other day. It is wonderful to see how naturally the smallest girls are interested in marriages. Katey and Mamey were as excited as if they were eighteen. The fondness of the Swiss for gunpowder on interesting occasions, is one of the drollest things. For three days before, the farmer himself, in the midst of his various agricultural duties, plunged out of a little door near my windows, about once in every hour, and fired off a rifle. I thought he was shooting rats who were spoiling the vines; but he was merely relieving his mind, it seemed, on the subject of the approaching nuptials. All night afterwards, he and a small circle of friends kept perpetually letting off guns under the casement of the bridal chamber. A Bride is always drest here, in black silk;[†1] but this bride wore merino of that colour, observing to her mother when she bought it (the old lady is 82, and works on the farm), "You know, mother, I am sure to want mourning for you, soon; and the same gown will do."

He was invited to dinner by Mr. and Mrs. de Cerjat.[†2] One of her brothers by the bye, now dead, had large property in Ireland—all Nenagh,[†3] and the country about; and Cerjat told me, as we were talking about one thing and another, that when he went over there for some months to arrange the widow's affairs, he procured a copy of the curse which had been read at the altar by the parish priest of Nenagh, against any of the flock who didn't subscribe to the O'Connell tribute. A difficulty occurred in his drive to Mr. Cerjat's dinner. He had set up, for use of his wife and children, an odd little one-horse-carriage, made to hold three people sideways, so that they should avoid the wind always blowing up or down the valley. It can't be easily turned; and as you face to the side, all sorts of evolutions are necessary to bring you "broad-side to" before the door of the house where you are going. The country houses here are very like those upon the Thames between Richmond and Kingston (this, particularly), with grounds all round. At Mr. Cerjat's we were obliged to be carried, like the child's riddle, round the house and round the house, without touching the house; and we were presented in the most alarming manner, three of a row, first to all the people in the kitchen, then to the governess who was dressing in her bedroom, then to the drawing-room where the company were waiting for us, then to the dining-room where they were spreading the table, and finally to the hall where we were got out—scraping the windows of each apartment as we glared slowly into it.

He visited the Blind Institution and was particularly interested by two cases. The first was that of a young man of 18 born deaf and dumb, and stricken blind by an accident when he was about five years old.[†1] The Director of the institution[†2] is a young German, of great ability, and most uncommonly prepossessing appearance. He propounded to the scientific bodies of Geneva, a year ago (when this young man was under education in the asylum), the possibility of teaching him to speak—in other words, to play with his tongue upon his teeth and palate as if on an instrument, and connect particular performances with particular words conveyed to him in the finger-language. They unanimously agreed that it was quite impossible. The German set to work, and the young man now speaks very plainly and distinctly: without the least modulation, of course, but with comparatively little hesitation; expressing the words aloud as they are struck, so to speak, upon his hands; and showing the most intense and wonderful delight in doing it. This is commonly acquired, as you know, by the deaf and dumb who learn by sight; but it has never before been achieved in the case of a deaf, dumb, and blind subject. He is an extremely lively, intelligent, good-humoured fellow; an excellent carpenter; a first-rate turner; and runs about the building with a certainty and confidence which none of the merely blind pupils acquire. He has a great many ideas, and an instinctive dread of death. He knows of God, as of Thought enthroned somewhere; and once told, on nature's prompting (the devil's of course), a lie. He was sitting at dinner, and the Director asked him whether he had had anything to drink; to which he instantly replied "No," in order that he might get some more, though he had been served in his turn. It was explained to him that this was a wrong thing, and wouldn't do, and that he was to be locked up in a room for it: which was done. Soon after this, he had a dream of being bitten in the shoulder by some strange animal. As it left a great impression on his mind, he told M. the Director that he had told another lie in the night. In proof of it he related his dream, and added, "it must be a lie you know, because there is no strange animal here, and I never was bitten." Being informed that this sort of lie was a harmless one, and was called a dream, he asked whether dead people ever dreamed while they were lying in the ground. He is one of the most curious and interesting studies possible.

When I was there, there had come in, that morning, a girl of ten years old, born deaf and dumb and blind, and so perfectly untaught that she has not learnt to have the least control even over the performance of the common natural functions. . . . And yet she laughs sometimes (good God! conceive what at!)—and is dreadfully sensitive from head to foot, and very much alarmed, for some hours before the coming on of a thunderstorm. Mr. Haldimand has been long trying to induce her parents to send her to the asylum. At last they have consented; and when I saw her, some of the little blind girls were trying to make friends with her, and to lead her gently about. She was dressed in just a loose robe from the necessity of changing her frequently, but had been in a bath, and had had her nails cut (which were previously very long and dirty), and was not at all ill-looking—quite the reverse; with a remarkably good and pretty little mouth, but a low and undeveloped head of course. It was pointed out to me, as very singular, that the moment she is left alone, or freed from anybody's touch (which is the same thing to her), she instantly crouches down with her hands up to her ears, in exactly the position of a child before its birth; and so remains. I thought this such a strange coincidence with the utter want of advancement in her moral being, that it made a great impression on me; and conning it over and over, I began to think that this is surely the invariable action of savages too, and that I have seen it over and over again described in books of voyages and travels. Not having any of these with me, I turned to Robinson Crusoe; and I find De Foe says, describing the savages who came on the island after Will Atkins began to change for the better and commanded under the grave Spaniard for the common defence, "their posture was generally sitting upon the ground, with their knees up towards their mouth, and the head put between the two hands, leaning down upon the knees"[†1]—exactly the same attitude!

Kate, Georgy, Mamey, Katey, Charley, Walley, Chickenstalker, and Sampson Brass, commend themselves unto your Honour's loving remembrance.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 JULY 1846]

Extracts in F, v, iii, 405, v, ii, 398, 395. Date: first extract 18 July according to Forster, and second extract in his "next week's letter" after 12 July; third extract, describing party of 16 July, is clearly same letter.

He had still eight slips to write to complete the fourth chapter of Dombey, and for a week had put off Chamounix. I think the general idea of Dombey is interesting and new, and has great material in it. But I don't like to discuss it with you till you have read number one, for fear I should spoil its effect. When done—about Wednesday or Thursday, please God—I will send it in two days' posts, seven letters each day.[†1] If you have it set at once (I am afraid you couldn't read it, otherwise than in print) I know you will impress on B. & E. the necessity of the closest secrecy. The very name getting out, would be ruinous.[†2] The points for illustration, and the enormous care required, make me excessively anxious. The man for Dombey, if Browne could see him, the class man to a T, is Sir A____ E____, of D____'s.[†3] Great pains will be necessary with Miss Tox. The Toodle family should not be too much caricatured, because of Polly. I should like Browne to think of Susan Nipper, who will not be wanted in the first number. After the second number, they will all be nine or ten years older,[†4] but this will not involve much change in the characters, except in the children and Miss Nipper. What a brilliant thing to be telling you all these names so familiarly, when you know nothing about 'em! I quite enjoy it. By the bye, I hope you may like the introduction of Solomon Gills. I think he lives in a good sort of house. . . . One word more. What do you think, as a name for the Christmas book, of THE BATTLE OF LIFE? It is not a name I have conned at all, but has just occurred to me in connection with that foggy idea. If I can see my way, I think I will take it next, and clear it off. If you knew how it hangs about me, I am sure you would say so too. It would be an immense relief to have it done, and nothing standing in the way of Dombey.

I have not been to the Blind asylum again yet, but they tell me that the deaf and dumb and blind child's face is improving obviously, and that she takes great delight in the first effort made by the Director to connect himself with an occupation of her time. He gives her, every day, two smooth round pebbles to roll over and over between her two hands. She appears to have an idea that it is to lead to something; distinctly recognizes the hand that gives them to her, as a friendly and protecting one; and sits for hours quite busy.

Describing a dinner-party of his own:[†1] While we were sitting at dinner, one of the prettiest girls in Lausanne was drowned in the lake—in the most peaceful water, reflecting the steep mountains, and crimson with the setting sun. She was bathing in one of the nooks set apart for women, and seems somehow to have entangled her feet in the skirts of her dress. She was an accomplished swimmer, as many of the girls are here, and drifted, suddenly, out of only five feet water. Three or four friends who were with her, ran away, screaming. Our children's governess was on the lake in a boat with M. Verdeil (my prison-doctor)[†2] and his family. They ran inshore immediately; the body was quickly got out; and M. Verdeil, with three or four other doctors, laboured for some hours to restore animation; but she only sighed once. After all that time, she was obliged to be borne, stiff and stark, to her father's house. She was his only child, and but 17 years old. He has been nearly dead since, and all Lausanne has been full of the story. I was down by the lake, near the place, last night; and a boatman acted to me the whole scene: depositing himself finally on a heap of stones, to represent the body.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JULY 1846

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne. Saturday Twenty Fifth July 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I think I recollect to have seen a former appeal of that Pentonville Society,[†3] and to have regarded it in exactly the same light as that in which you view this recent one. I certainly think that if it be well managed, it might form, in part, a model for your Institution, but I think it would be inexpedient for you to found yours, until you have a general knowledge of the management of many similar Institutions. Very little has yet been done in this respect; and if you could do no better than has been done already, I really doubt the expediency of founding an entirely new establishment in preference to assisting in the endowment of an existing one. I fear you would be disappointed in the result, and that you would spend your money to but little purpose.

Have you considered the practical difficulty of confining such an Institution to a single Parish? What would be the qualification (so to speak) for admission? Must the person have been born there, or must she have resided there, a certain time? If the latter, I fear the opposition of the Parish itself, and its perpetual hunting down of these unhappy objects lest they should be establishing themselves there, with some kind of faint view to the Asylum, would entail upon them a frightful persecution. If the former, I fear that some of the most pitiable, and truly distressing, and hopeful cases (those of young people coming from the Country, and sinking down into the vice of London) would be without any relief from you.

Your two objections to my sketch of a plan, I wish to offer half a dozen words upon.

1st. As to Marriage. I do not propose to put that before them as the immediate end and object to be gained, but assuredly to keep it in view as the possible consequence of a sincere, true, practical repentance, and an altered life. A kind of penitence is bred in our prisons and purgatories just now, which is a very pretty penitence inside the walls, but fades into nothing when it comes into contact with worldly realities. In the generality of cases, it is almost impossible to produce a penitence which shall stand the wear and tear of this rough world, without Hope—worldly hope—the hope of at one time or other recovering something like the lost station. I would make this Hope, however faint and afar off it might be, exactly the one that out of the Asylum and without its aid, seemed (and was) impossible of attainment.

2ndly. With regard to Temptation. I would simply ask you to consider whether we do not, all of us, in our stations, tempt our fellow creatures at every turn. Whether there is a merchant in London who does not hourly expose his servants to strong temptation. Whether a night or morning ever comes, when you do not tempt your butler with a hundred times the worth of his year's wages. Whether there are not, at the Banking House in the Strand, many young men whose lives are one exposure to, and resistance of, temptation. And whether it is not a Christian act to say to such unfortunate creatures as you purpose, by God's blessing, to reclaim "Test for yourselves the reality of your repentance and your power of resisting temptation, while you are here, and before you are in the World outside, to fall before it!"

Now about Punch. I have no influence whatever, with that Potentate save such as may lie in its being owned by my printers, and in my having a personal knowledge of some of its principal Contributors. You may guess how powerful my influence is, when I tell you that during my Stage Management, of the Amateur Play, I spoke to the gentleman most prominent among them,[†1] about that very Duke[†2]—more than once—and said that I believed him to be an excellent creature. That I had myself received the most remarkable courtesy from him, and that I knew that in his treatment of his Governess, and of others about him, he was a bright example to three fourths of the middle classes. The gentleman to whom I spoke, laughed about it, and said that there was no ill nature in their jokes at his expence, and that they merely jested at peculiarities of speech and manner that were generally notorious. After this conversation, or about the same time, however, the Duke happened to make a very unfortunate and apparently unfeeling, speech, about the diseased potatoes. This, Punch resented and took in great dudgeon. Between ourselves, I really hardly know how they could have done otherwise, for it was especially ill-timed and ill-chosen. But both on the occasions to which I have referred, and since, I have championed him strongly, in the same quarter. And, as I have already said, you may guess from this, how great my influence is. I thoroughly agree with you in all you say about him: but I never wrote, or stayed the writing, of a word in Punch, and am not in the least degree in his confidence or councils.

Mrs. Dickens, Charley, and his sisters, beg, with me, to be earnestly remembered in those two corners.

I am Ever | Dear Miss Coutts
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25-26 JULY 1846]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 472-3, V, V, 422, V, ii, 398-9, 396, V, iii, 406 (2 extracts), V, ii, 400 and 400-1*n*, 396*n*, V, iii, 406, VI, ii, 473. Date: first four extracts 25 July according to Forster, and last three "the same letter" (the last two each described as "the close"); fifth and sixth extracts mention incidents which "preceded the trip to Chamounix" (28 July); seventh extract, about local society, undated, but likely to be same letter.

Sending the manuscript of the first four chapters: I will now go on to give you an outline of my immediate intentions in reference to Dombey. I design to show Mr. D with that one idea of the Son taking firmer and firmer possession of him, and swelling and bloating his pride to a prodigious extent. As the boy begins to grow up, I shall show him quite impatient for his getting on, and urging his masters to set him great tasks, and the like. But the natural affection of the boy will turn towards the despised sister; and I purpose showing her learning all sorts of things, of her own application and determination, to assist him in his lessons: and helping him always. When the boy is about ten years old (in the fourth number), he will be taken ill, and will die; and when he is ill, and when he is dying, I mean to make him turn always for refuge to the sister still, and keep the stern affection of the father at a distance. So Mr. Dombey—for all his greatness, and for all his devotion to the child—will find himself at arms' length from him even then; and will see that his love and confidence are all bestowed upon his sister, whom Mr. Dombey has used—and so has the boy himself too, for that matter—as a mere convenience and handle to him. The death of the boy is a death-blow, of course, to all the father's schemes and cherished hopes; and "Dombey and Son," as Miss Tox will say at the end of the number, "is a Daughter after all."[†1] . . . From that time, I purpose changing his feeling of indifference and uneasiness towards his daughter into a positive hatred. For he will always remember how the boy had his arm round her neck when he was dying, and whispered to her, and would take things only from her hand, and never thought of him. . . . At the same time I shall change her feeling towards him for one of a greater desire to love him, and to be loved by him; engendered in her compassion for his loss, and her love for the dead boy whom, in his way, he loved so well too. So I mean to carry the story on, through all the branches and off-shoots and meanderings that come up; and through the decay and downfall of the house, and the bankruptcy of Dombey, and all the rest of it; when his only staff and treasure, and his unknown Good Genius always, will be this rejected daughter, who will come out better than any son at last, and whose love for him, when discovered and understood, will be his bitterest reproach. For the struggle with himself, which goes on in all such obstinate natures, will have ended then; and the sense of his injustice, which you may be sure has never quitted him, will have at last a gentler office than that of only making him more harshly unjust. . . . I rely very much on Susan Nipper grown up, and acting partly as Florence's maid, and partly as a kind of companion to her, for a strong character throughout the book. I also rely on the Toodles, and on Polly, who, like everybody else, will be found by Mr. Dombey to have gone over to his daughter and become attached to her. This is what cooks call "the stock of the soup." All kinds of things will be added to it, of course.

I have been thinking this last day or two that good Christmas characters might be grown out of the idea of a man imprisoned for ten or fifteen years: his imprisonment being the gap between the people and circumstances of the first part and the altered people and circumstances of the second, and his own changed mind. Though I shall probably proceed with the Battle idea, I should like to know what you think of this one?[†2]

Replying to Forster's comments on the blind child:[†3] I do not think that there is reason for supposing that the savage attitude originates in the desire of warmth, because all naked savages inhabit hot climates; and their instinctive attitude, if it had reference to heat or cold, would probably be the coolest possible; like their delight in water, and swimming. I do not think there is any race of savage men, however low in grade, inhabiting cold climates, who do not kill beasts and wear their skins. The girl decidedly improves in face, and, if one can yet use the word as applied to her, in manner too. No communication by the speech of touch has yet been established with her, but the time has not been long enough.

Some years ago, when they set about reforming the prison at Lausanne, they turned their attention, in a correspondence of republican feeling, to America; and taking the Philadelphian system for granted, adopted it. Terrible fits, new phases of mental affection, and horrible madness, among the prisoners, were very soon the result; and attained to such an alarming height, that M. Verdeil, in his public capacity, began to report against the system, and went on reporting and working against it until he formed a party who were determined not to have it, and caused it to be abolished—except in cases where the imprisonment does not exceed ten months in the whole. It is remarkable that in his notes of the different cases, there is every effect I mentioned as having observed myself at Philadelphia; even down to those contained in the description of the man who had been there thirteen years, and who picked his hands so much as he talked.[†1] He has only recently, he says, read the American Notes; but he is so much struck by the perfect coincidence that he intends to republish some extracts from his own notes, side by side with these passages of mine translated into French. I went with him over the prison the other day. It is wonderfully well arranged for a continental jail, and in perfect order. The sentences however, or some of them, are very terrible. I saw one man sent there for murder under circumstances of mitigation—for 30 years. Upon the silent social system all the time! They weave, and plait straw, and make shoes, small articles of turnery and carpentry, and little common wooden clocks. But the sentences are too long for that monotonous and hopeless life; and, though they are well-fed and cared for, they generally break down utterly after two or three years. One delusion seems to become common to three-fourths of them after a certain time of imprisonment. Under the impression that there is something destructive put into their food "pour les guérir de crime" (says M. Verdeil), they refuse to eat![†2]

Hallam[†3] was visiting Haldimand. Heavens! how Hallam did talk yesterday! I don't think I ever saw him so tremendous. Very good-natured and pleasant, in his way, but Good Heavens! how he did talk. That famous day you and I remember was nothing to it. His son was with him, and his daughter (who has an impediment in her speech, as if nature were determined to balance that faculty in the family), and his niece, a pretty woman, the wife of a clergyman and a friend of Thackeray's. It strikes me that she must be "the little woman" he proposed to take us to drink tea with, once, in Golden-square. Don't you remember? His great favourite? She is quite a charming person anyhow.[†1]

As Haldimand and Mrs. Marcet[†2] and the Cerjats had devised a small mountain expedition for us for to-morrow,[†3] I didn't like to allow Chamounix to stand in the way. So we go with them first, and start on our own account on Tuesday. We are extremely pleasant with these people.

He described his social circle in Lausanne as wonderfully friendly and hospitable. . . . I do not think we could have fallen on better society. It is a small circle certainly, but quite large enough. The Watsons improve very much on acquaintance. Everybody is very well informed; and we are all as social and friendly as people can be, and very merry. We play whist with great dignity and gravity sometimes, interrupted only by the occasional facetiousness of the Inimitable.

I have been queer and had trembling legs for the last week. But it has been almost impossible to sleep at night. There is a breeze to-day and I hope another storm is coming up. . . . There is a theatre here; and whenever a troop of players pass through the town, they halt for a night and act. On the day of our tremendous dinner party of eight, there was an infant phenomenon; whom I should otherwise have seen.[†4] Last night there was a Vaudeville company;[†5] and Charley, Roche, and Anne went. The Brave reports the performances to have resembled Greenwich Fair. . . . There are some Promenade Concerts in the open air[†6] in progress now; but as they are just above one part of our garden we don't go: merely sitting outside the door instead, and hearing it all where we are. . . . Mont Blanc has been very plain lately. One heap of snow. A Frenchman got to the top, the other day.[†1]

Two pieces of local news: My first news is that a crocodile is said to have escaped from the Zoological Gardens at Geneva, and to be now "zig-zag-zigging" about the lake. But I can't make out whether this is a great fact, or whether it is a pious fraud to prevent too much bathing and liability to accidents. The other piece of news is more serious. An English family whose name I don't know, consisting of a father, mother and daughter, arrived at the Hotel Gibbon here last Monday, and started off on some mountain expedition in one of the carriages of the country. It was a mere track, the road, and ought to have been travelled only by mules, but the Englishman persisted (as Englishmen do) in going on in the carriage; and in answer to all the representations of the driver that no carriage had ever gone up there, said he needn't be afraid he wasn't going to be paid for it, and so forth. Accordingly, the coachman got down and walked by the horses' heads. It was fiery hot; and, after much tugging and rearing, the horses began to back, and went down bodily, carriage and all, into a deep ravine. The mother was killed on the spot; and the father and daughter are lying at some house hard by, not expected to recover.[†2]

He put an important question about Dombey and Son. About the boy,[†3] who appears in the last chapter of the first number, I think it would be a good thing to disappoint all the expectations that chapter seems to raise of his happy connection with the story and the heroine, and to show him gradually and naturally trailing away, from that love of adventure and boyish light-heartedness, into negligence, idleness, dissipation, dishonesty, and ruin. To show, in short, that common, every-day, miserable declension of which we know so much in our ordinary life; to exhibit something of the philosophy of it, in great temptations and an easy nature; and to show how the good turns into bad, by degrees. If I kept some little notion of Florence always at the bottom of it, I think it might be made very powerful and very useful. What do you think? Do you think it may be done, without making people angry? I could bring out Solomon Gills and Captain Cuttle well, through such a history; and I descry, anyway, an opportunity for good scenes between Captain Cuttle and Miss Tox.[†4] This question of the boy is very important. . . . Let me hear all you think about it. Hear! I wish I could.[†5]

August

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 AUGUST 1846]

Extracts in F, V, iii, 406-8, 408-9, VI, ii, 475. Date: first two extracts 2 Aug according to Forster; third extract probably same date since concerned with instructions to Browne for cover and plates for No. 1 of Dombey.

I begin my letter to-night, but only begin, for we returned from Chamounix in time for dinner just now, and are pretty considerably done up. We went by a mountain pass not often crossed by ladies, called the Col de Balme, where your imagination may picture Kate and Georgy on mules for ten hours at a stretch, riding up and down the most frightful precipices.[†1] We returned by the pass of the Tête Noire, which Talfourd knows,[†2] and which is of a different character, but astonishingly fine too. Mont Blanc, and the Valley of Chamounix, and the Mer de Glace, and all the wonders of that most wonderful place, are above and beyond one's wildest expectations. I cannot imagine anything in nature more stupendous or sublime. If I were to write about it now, I should quite rave—such prodigious impressions are rampant within me. . . You may suppose that the mule-travelling is pretty primitive. Each person takes a carpet-bag strapped on the mule behind himself or herself: and that is all the baggage that can be carried. A guide, a thorough-bred mountaineer, walks all the way, leading the lady's mule; I say the lady's par excellence, in compliment to Kate; and all the rest struggle on as they please. The cavalcade stops at a lone hut for an hour and a half in the middle of the day, and lunches brilliantly on whatever it can get. Going by that Col de Balme pass, you climb up and up and up for five hours and more, and look—from a mere unguarded ledge of path on the side of the precipice—into such awful valleys, that at last you are firm in the belief that you have got above everything in the world, and that there can be nothing earthly overhead. Just as you arrive at this conclusion, a different (and oh Heaven! what a free and wonderful) air comes blowing on your face; you cross a ridge of snow; and lying before you (wholly unseen till then), towering up into the distant sky, is the vast range of Mont Blanc, with attendant mountains diminished by its majestic side into mere dwarfs tapering up into innumerable rude Gothic pinnacles; deserts of ice and snow; forests of firs on mountain sides, of no account at all in the enormous scene; villages down in the hollow, that you can shut out with a finger; waterfalls, avalanches, pyramids and towers of ice, torrents, bridges; mountain upon mountain until the very sky is blocked away, and you must look up, overhead, to see it. Good God, what a country Switzerland is, and what a concentration of it is to be beheld from that one spot! And (think of this in Whitefriars and in Lincoln's-inn!) at noon on the second day from here, the first day being but half a one by the bye and full of uncommon beauty, you lie down on that ridge and see it all! . . . I think I must go back again (whether you come or not!) and see it again before the bad weather arrives. We have had sunlight, moonlight, a perfectly transparent atmosphere with not a cloud, and the grand plateau on the very summit of Mont Blanc so clear by day and night that it was difficult to believe in intervening chasms and precipices, and almost impossible to resist the idea that one might sally forth and climb up easily. I went into all sorts of places; armed with a great pole with a spike at the end of it, like a leaping-pole, and with pointed irons buckled on to my shoes; and am all but knocked up. I was very anxious to make the expedition to what is called "The Garden:"[†1] a green spot covered with wild flowers, lying across the Mer de Glace, and among the most awful mountains: but I could find no Englishman at the hotels who was similarly disposed, and the Brave wouldn't go. No sir! He gave in point blank (having been horribly blown in a climbing excursion the day before), and couldn't stand it. He is too heavy for such work, unquestionably. In all other respects, I think he has exceeded himself on this journey: and if you could have seen him riding a very small mule, up a road exactly like the broken stairs of Rochester-castle; with a brandy bottle slung over his shoulder, a small pie in his hat, a roast fowl looking out of his pocket, and a mountain staff of six feet long carried cross-wise on the saddle before him; you'd have said so. He was (next to me) the admiration of Chamounix, but he utterly quenched me on the road.

On the road as they returned, the day before this letter was written, he was jingling slowly up the Tête Noire pass (his mule having thirty-seven bells on its head), riding at the moment quite alone, when an Englishman came bolting out of a little châlet in a most inaccessible and extraordinary place, and said with great glee "There has been an accident here sir!" I had been thinking of anything else you please; and, having no reason to suppose him an Englishman except his language, which went for nothing in the confusion, stammered out a reply in French and stared at him, in a very damp shirt and trowsers, as he stared at me in a similar costume. On his repeating the announcement, I began to have a glimmering of common sense; and so arrived at a knowledge of the fact that a German lady had been thrown from her mule and had broken her leg, at a short distance off, and had found her way in great pain to that cottage, where the Englishman, a Prussian, and a Frenchman, had presently come up; and the Frenchman, by extraordinary good fortune, was a surgeon! They were all from Chamounix, and the three latter were walking in company. It was quite charming to see how attentive they were. The lady was from Lausanne; where she had come from Frankfort to make excursions with her two boys, who are at the college here, during the vacation. She had no other attendants, and the boys were crying and very frightened. The Englishman was in the full glee of having just cut up one white dress, two chemises, and three pocket handkerchiefs, for bandages; the Frenchman had set the leg, skilfully; the Prussian had scoured a neighbouring wood for some men to carry her forward; and they were all at it, behind the hut, making a sort of hand-barrow on which to bear her. When it was constructed, she was strapped upon it; had her poor head covered over with a handkerchief, and was carried away; and we all went on in company: Kate and Georgy consoling and tending the sufferer, who was very cheerful, but had lost her husband only a year. It was hoped that by means of relays of men at Martigny the poor lady might have been carried on some twenty miles in the cooler evening, to the head of the lake, and so have been got into the steamer; but she was too exhausted to be borne beyond the inn, and there she had to remain until joined by relatives from Frankfort.

He expressed his anxiety about Browne's illustrations for Dombey, with a nervous dread of caricature in the face of Mr. Dombey. I do wish he could get a glimpse of A, for he is the very Dombey.[†1]

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 5 AUGUST 1846*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland. Fifth August 1846.

My Dear Count D'Orsay.

Your Godson's Mama and Nurses, are, and have been ever since we left home, so desperately importunate to have a Report made to you—a true and ungarnished report of his unparalleled and never-sufficiently-to-be-wondered-at Goodness—that I must, for the sake of peace and quietness, begin my letter with it. So pray take notice that he is never known to cry; that he came through the long journey and great heat without the smallest remonstrance of any sort or kind; that he is perpetually laughing and good tempered; and that I see him at this moment lying in the Garden, in the shade, with two pink legs upreared in the air, and the bells and Coral forced into his mouth.

This place is on the hill between Lausanne and Ouchy—about midway between the two places. The house is small, but the grounds are extensive and very pretty; and it is certainly the most cheerful house here. The heat is, and has been, most intense; but I hope the weather will soon change, now that we have got into August. I should have written to you, long ago. But as soon as we were installed in these regions, I set to work on my new book, whereof I have done the first number and begun the second; and this has kept me constantly employed. I hope it will be liked; and I think there is a good idea in it. My leisure hours I devote to thinking of the Christmas Book, and I shall go to work on that, as soon as I have matured the idea which is afloat in my mind. We purpose leaving here about the end of November, and going to Paris, whence I shall hope to run over to London. I look forward to Paris with great interest and am very glad Lord

Normanby will be there,[†1] as it will make all the difference between what is stately and what is agreeable.

We started off to Chamounix a week ago, and were delighted beyond all expression with the place. If I could have found any adventurous Englishman there, I would have made (I think) a start for the Summit of Mont Blanc, about which there was not one speck of vapour. But I couldn't find anybody disposed to join in such an expedition, so was forced to content myself by ingloriously climbing over the Mer de Glace and tumbling about, with a leaping pole, in one or two inaccessible places. What do you say to coming over and sharing in the enterprize? We have only to swear over the long pipe (I smoke it constantly) that we never will turn back without reaching the top—and the thing is done.

And talking of the long pipe, I am bound to say that the Brave Courier is a perfect Hookahbadahr (I think that's the way to spell it) and prepares it wonderfully. When he was at Cairo, he watched them getting up the Pipes, with a Courier's eye; and he does it quite in the Arabian Night manner.

At the Inn at Chamounix, there was a most splendid couple of travellers. An immense Frenchman and a very little Englishman, who had struck up an acquaintance at Geneva, and had agreed to make some mountain excursions together. The Englishman could speak no French, but the Frenchman could speak a little English; and the Englishman's patronage of him in consequence, was the most ridiculous thing I ever saw in my life. He had not the least idea that it was very good of the Frenchman to bother himself with the language, but seemed to think it was a laudable ambition in any poor fellow to plunge into the attempt (however hopeless) and that it deserved some condescencion;[†2] and the way in which he set the Frenchman right—talking broken English to him, himself, as if the Frenchman were a child—and his look round the table at his countrymen, as much as to say "You hear this poor Devil? Excuse him! He means well"—was perfectly insupportable. I don't think I ever was so much tickled by anything; and being opposite to him, I was in a continual agony, for I could not help laughing. There was a pretty good Englishman on board of one of the Rhine boats, who would talk to a Prussian, in English, and persisted in making small jokes at which he expected the Prussian to laugh; and said of the Cutlets at dinner time "Very tough Sir, eh? A good deal of the old shoe in these chops Sir, eh?"—but the Englishman of Chamounix outshone him, very far.

There are only four English families here, but they are very agreeable people indeed, and we find Mr. Haldimand—of whom perhaps you know something—he has a beautiful house upon the lake—everything that is hospitable and friendly; I may say affectionate indeed. The Revolution is supposed to have frightened people and kept them away. However that may be, nearly every Country house is to let, and the Genius of Dulness seems to brood over the town. I find the common-people very polite and agreeable, though they seem to drink rather hard. At all the little fêtes and holidays they get drunk, but they are obliging and good-tempered to me always. As I am getting up my French with a view to Paris, I let it off upon the unfortunate Cottagers and people as I walk about in the evening, but I have never met with any churlish fellows among them, and I have plenty of such acquaintances on all the walks about here. There is going to be a great fête next Sunday, the anniversary of the declaration of the New Constitution, when the town is to be illuminated, and various illuminated boats are to be rowed about the Lake. My landlord (who is the Sous Prefect of the town) is immensely busy with the preparations and hints darkly at the probable magnificence.

So your friend Lord Auckland[†1] is to be busy again, and Brougham is to be Captain Warner[†2] to the new Government! What do you hear about the Daily News? Does it seem likely to succeed? Forster says the circulation is very great—more than 20,000, I think—but there he stops, and doesn't seem to know what to make of it beyond that. I take it for granted that Lady Blessington has concluded her engagement, without having any new reason of complaint, as Forster assured me, before I left town, that he would take the matter in his own hands, knowing my anxiety about it. Still I shall be very glad to hear that it is all over, and well over. Pray tell me when you write.

I find a burning disgust arising in my mind—a sort of morbid canker of the most frightful description—against Mister Hudson. His position seems to me to be such a monstrous one, and so illustrative of the breeches pocket side of the English character, that I can't bear it. There are some dogs who can't endure one particular note on the Piano. In like manner I feel disposed to throw up my head, and howl, whenever I hear Mr. Hudson mentioned. He is my rock ahead in life. If you can let me know anything bad of him,[†3] pray do. It would be a great comfort. Something intensely mean and odious would be preferred, but anything bad, will be thankfully received.

Lord Morpeth, I find, is to make the Speech at Manchester,[†4] this year. He reminds me of the Poles at Lord Dudley Stuart's dinner, just before I left. Good God! if you could have heard them, making inaudible and unintelligible speeches of the most hideous length, until past midnight! I never inclined so much towards the Emperor of Russia, as on that occasion. And Dudley Stuart himself (for whom I have a very strong regard) talking about celebrated Polish Women, and saying "but when I mention the hallowed name of Titchibowski—or of Lobski—or of Pastocrontiki—or of Sploshock—or of Screweyzlunskifi, that wife and mother"—and everybody professing to roar with enthusiasm at every name, as if they knew all about it! There was a Lord (I forget his name) sat next me, who was so enthusiastic at one name, that I asked him afterwards, what association was connected with it; upon which he laughed and told me it was such a hard one that he felt sure the owner must have done something uncommon: and had applauded accordingly.

I wish I had anything to tell you worth the trouble of wading through my letter; but as I have not, I fall back on the pleasant conviction that you will be glad to see my hand-writing, even to so little purpose as this. Give my love to Lady Blessington, and best remembrances to her fair nieces, and ever believe me, as I heartily am,

Your Affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

The Count D'Orsay.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 AUGUST 1846]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 473-4. Date: 7 Aug according to Forster; must have been sent independently of To Forster, ?9 Aug, since CD received his reply on 14 Aug.

I have received your letter to-day with the greatest delight, and am overjoyed to find that you think so well of the number.[†1] I thought well of it myself, and that it was a great plunge into a story; but I did not know how far I might be stimulated by my paternal affection. . . . What should you say, for a notion of the illustrations, to "Miss Tox introduces the Party"? and "Mr. Dombey and family"? meaning Polly Toodle, the baby, Mr. Dombey, and little Florence: whom I think it would be well to have.[†2] Walter, his uncle, and Captain Cuttle, might stand over. It is a great question with me, now, whether I had not better take this last chapter bodily out, and make it the last chapter of the second number; writing some other new one to close the first number. I think it would be impossible to take out six pages without great pangs.[†3] Do you think such a proceeding as I suggest would weaken number one very much? I wish you would tell me, as soon as you can after receiving this, what your opinion is on the point. If you thought it would weaken the first number, beyond the counter-balancing advantage of strengthening the second, I would cut down somehow or other, and let it go. I shall be anxious to hear your opinion. In the meanwhile I will go on with the second, which I have just begun. I have not been quite myself since we returned from Chamounix, owing to the great heat.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 and 10 AUGUST 1846]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 474; V, iv, 414; V, V, 424*n*, V, iii, 409-10 and n, 409; V, iii, 410. Date: first extract "two days later" than 7 Aug according to Forster; second extract "opening of the second week" in Aug; third extract "early in August" and probably following second extract; fourth extract 9 Aug according to Forster; fifth extract describes a visit between 2 and 9 Aug (see fn); final extract includes P.P.S. dated 10 Aug.

I have begun a little chapter[†1] to end the first number, and certainly think it will be well to keep the ten pages of Wally and Co. entire for number two.[†2] But this is still subject to your opinion, which I am very anxious to know. I have not been in writing cue all the week; but really the weather has rendered it next to impossible to work.

He thought of turning to his Christmas book. It would be such a great relief to me to get that small story out of the way.

What a storm that must have been in London![†3] I wish we could get something like it, here. . . . It is thundering while I write, but I fear it don't look black enough for a clearance. The echoes in the mountains are of such a stupendous sort, that a peal of thunder five or ten minutes long, is here the commonest of circumstances.

There was to be a prodigious fête that day in Lausanne, in honour of the anniversary of the proclamation of the New Constitution[†4] beginning at sunrise with the firing of great guns, and twice two thousand rounds of rifles by two thousand men; proceeding at eleven o'clock with a great service, and some speechifying, in the church; and ending to-night with a great ball in the public promenade, and a general illumination of the town. The authorities had invited him to a place of honour in the ceremony; and though he did not go, (having been up till three o'clock in the morning, and being fast asleep at the appointed time), the reply that sent his thanks expressed also his sympathy. He had discovered in the old or gentlemanly party of the place (including of course the sprinkling of English who are always tory, hang 'em!) so wonderfully sore a feeling about the revolution thus celebrated, that to avoid the fête the majority had gone off by steamer the day before, and those who remained were prophesying assaults on the unilluminated houses, and other excesses.[†5] He had no faith in such predictions. The people are as perfectly good-tempered and quiet always, as people can be. I don't know what the last Government may have been, but they seem to me to do very well with this, and to be rationally and cheaply provided for. If you believed what the discontented assert, you wouldn't believe in one solitary man or woman with a grain of goodness or civility. I find nothing but civility; and I walk about in all sorts of out-of-the-way places, where they live rough lives enough, in solitary cottages.

Fanchette the cook, distracted by the forthcoming fête, madly refused to buy a duck yesterday as ordered by the Brave, and a battle of life ensued between those two powers. The Brave is of opinion that "datter woman have went mad." But she seems calm to-day; and I suppose won't poison the family.

He described a visit to Chillon.[†1] The insupportable solitude and dreariness of the white walls and towers, the sluggish moat and drawbridge, and the lonely ramparts, I never saw the like of.[†2] But there is a courtyard inside; surrounded by prisons, oubliettes, and old chambers of torture; so terrifically sad, that death itself is not more sorrowful. And oh! a wicked old Grand Duke's bedchamber upstairs in the tower, with a secret staircase down into the chapel where the bats were wheeling about; and Bonnivard's dungeon; and a horrible trap whence prisoners were cast out into the lake; and a stake all burnt and crackled up, that still stands in the torture-ante-chamber to the saloon of justice (!)—what tremendous places! Good God, the greatest mystery in all the earth, to me, is how or why the world was tolerated by its Creator through the good old times, and wasn't dashed to fragments.

P.S. 6 o'clock afternoon. The fête going on, in great force. Not one of "the old party" to be seen. I went down with one to the ground before dinner, and nothing would induce him to go within the barrier with me. Yet what they call a revolution was nothing but a change of government. Thirty-six thousand people, in this small canton, petitioned against the Jesuits—God knows with good reason. The Government chose to call them "a mob." So, to prove that they were not, they turned the Government out.[†3] I honour them for it. They are a genuine people, these Swiss. There is better metal in them than in all the stars and stripes of all the fustian banners of the so-called, and falsely called, U-nited States. They are a thorn in the sides of European despots, and a good wholesome people to live near Jesuit-ridden Kings on the brighter side of the mountains.

P.P.S. August 10th. . . . The fête went off as quietly as I supposed it would; and they danced all night.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 and 14 AUGUST 1846]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 474. Date: first extract "four days later" than letter of 9 Aug according to Forster; second extract the next day.

I shall send you with this (on the chance of your being favourable to that view of the subject) a small chapter[†1] to close the first number, in lieu of the Solomon Gills one. I have been hideously idle all the week, and have done nothing but this trifling interloper; but hope to begin again on Monday—ding dong. . . . The ink stand is to be cleaned out to-night, and refilled, preparatory to execution. I trust I may shed a good deal of ink in the next fortnight.

I received yours to-day. A decided facer to me![†2] I had been counting, alas! with a miser's greed, upon the gained ten pages. . . . No matter. I have no doubt you are right, and strength is everything. The addition of two lines to each page, or something less,—coupled with the enclosed cuts,[†3] will bring it all to bear smoothly. In case more cutting is wanted, I must ask you to try your hand. I shall agree to whatever you propose.

To MESSRS WRIGHT, SMITH & SHEPHERD, 15 AUGUST 1846*

MS Dickens House. Address: Messrs. Wright, Smith, and Shepherd | Solicitors | 15 Golden Square | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland.
Saturday Fifteenth August 1846.

Gentlemen.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the Tenth Instant.[†4]

I retained the Editorship of the Daily News during so very short a period, that I had ceased (to the best of my recollection) to be connected with it, when Mr. Barrow wrote his first letter home from India.[†5] Every business letter I received from that gentleman I immediately despatched to the foreign department of the newspaper, as relating to matters with which I had no interest or concern; and I have no such communications in my possession, either here, or in England.

I am Gentlemen | Faithfully Your Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Wright Smith and Shepherd.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 AUGUST 1846*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland
Seventeenth August 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will endeavour, in the course of this week, to comply with your request. I would do so at once, but that I am busy just now on my new book—with the printers behind me.

I would not write to you on so slight an occasion but that I am very anxious you should not suppose me to have intended to convey the least hint to you in the case I put, touching your clerks and servants.[†1] I instanced you, as having everything about you on so great a scale, and as representing great wealth and a large establishment—but with no more reference, believe me, to your affairs as differing in the least from those of any other person similarly situated, or from mine as far as they go, than to those of the Great Mogul. As you had objected that we should leave temptation to the Almighty, I merely meant to ask you to consider whether we are not all (under His direction or permission) tempted by and through one another, in our common daily life, and whether that was not a reason for giving these unfortunates the means of testing their own power of resistance and their own practical repentance, within the Asylum.

The thick paper is an unspeakable comfort. The sensation of reading a long letter written on the impracticable paper specially intended for Foreign Service is (I should think) very like having to cut all one's teeth in a given time, without any Soothing Syrup.

Believe me dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 17 AUGUST 1846*

MS Berg Collection.

Rosemont. | Monday August Seventeenth 1846.

My Dear De la Rue

I should have written to you today, though I had not heard from you yesterday. I gave you until now, to return from Chamounix (that glorious place!) where I thought you might make even a longer stay. Your note arrived in Lausanne in due course yesterday, but I did not get it until last night. The Thompsons were here[†2] (they have taken a house hard by), and I did not send to the Post Office until late. Hence this delay in replying to it.

I want to know, before I propose a day for our meeting on board the Steamer, how long you are going to remain at that country house? Tell me. I have heard from Talfourd that he is coming to dine with me, on his way to Italy, at some uncertain time that hangs over me like a Nightmare.[†1] I have heard from my Illustrator in London, that he can't make out from my written description what I mean—and I am half afraid I may have to go to Bâle to meet him for a personal conference. I receive, every other day, pressing invitations from Printers to keep them hard at work, and I have divers delicate enquiries (unanswered) from Forster as to the time at which some remote hint of the nature of the Christmas Book may be expected to arrive in London. In short, I am set upon in all directions, and am not working with a very good will either.

So tell me how long you are going to remain in that country house, that I may look my plans in the face with that knowledge to help me.

Tell Madame De la Rue, with my love, that Mrs. Thompson disappoints me very much. She is a mere spoiled child, I think, and doesn't turn out half as well as I expected. Matrimony has improved him, and certainly has not improved her. She is to be confined here. I wish her well through it,—but upon my Soul, I feel as if her husband would have the worst, even of that.

Always My Dear De la Rue,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15-17 AUGUST 1846]

Summary and extracts in F, v, iv, 415, 414, 416-17 (2 extracts), 414*n*, 415-16. Date: Forster makes the opening summary and final extract "his next letter" after the letter of 24 Aug, but Watson's Diary (see fn) shows that the "day's party" was on Mon 10 Aug; fourth extract refers to this party as "last Monday", and is in "the same letter" as third extract according to Forster; second extract describes a conversation with Watson on 11 Aug (see fn); fifth extract probably same letter, as Ainsworth's visit was "ten days before" 24 Aug according to Forster.

Describing a day's party of the Cerjats, Watsons, and Haldimands, among the neighbouring hills, which he had been unable to resist the temptation of joining. They went to a mountain-lake twelve miles off, had dinner at the public-house on the lake, and returned home by Vevay at which they rested for tea.[†2]

He is a very intelligent agreeable fellow, the said Watson[†3] by the bye; he sat for Northamptonshire[†4] in the reform bill time, and is high sheriff of his county and all the rest of it; but has not the least nonsense about him, and is a thorough good liberal. He has a charming wife, who draws well, and is making a sketch of Rosemont[†1] for us that shall be yours in Paris. He was giving me some good recollections of Lord Grey the other evening when we were playing at battledore[†2] (old Lord Grey I mean), and of the constitutional impossibility he and Lord Lansdowne and the rest laboured under, of ever personally attaching a single young man, in all the excitement of that exciting time, to the leaders of the party. It was quite a delight to me, as I listened, to recall my own dislike of his style of speaking, [†a]his fishy coldness, his uncongenial and unsympathetic politeness, and his insufferable though most gentlemanly artificiality.[†a] The shape of his head (I see it now) was misery to me, and weighed down my youth.[†3]

We have another English family here, one Sir Joseph and his lady, and ten children.[†4] Sir Joseph, a large baronet something in the Graham style, with a little, loquacious, flat-faced, damaged-featured, old young wife. They are fond of society, and couldn't well have less. They delight in a view, and live in a close street at Ouchy, down among the drunken boatmen and the drays and omnibuses, where nothing whatever is to be seen but the locked wheels of carts scraping down the uneven, steep, stone pavement. The baronet plays double-dummy all day long, with an unhappy Swiss whom he has entrapped for that purpose; the baronet's lady pays visits; and the baronet's daughters play a Lausanne piano, which must be heard to be appreciated.

Another curious man is backwards and forwards here—a Lord Vernon, who is well-informed, a great Italian scholar deep in Dante,[†5] and a very good-humoured gentleman, but who has fallen into the strange infatuation of attending every rifle-match that takes place in Switzerland, accompanied by two men who load rifles for him, one after another, which he has been frequently known to fire off, two a minute, for fourteen hours at a stretch, without once changing his position or leaving the ground. He wins all kinds of prizes;[†6] gold watches, flags, teaspoons, teaboards, and so forth; and is constantly travelling about with them[†7], from place to place, in an extraordinary carriage, where you touch a spring and a chair flies out, touch another spring and a bed appears, touch another spring and a closet of pickles opens, touch another spring and disclose a pantry. While Lady Vernon[†1] (said to be handsome and accomplished) is continually cutting across this or that Alpine pass in the night, to meet him on the road, for a minute or two, on one of his excursions; these being the only times at which she can catch him. The last time he saw her, was five or six months ago, when they met and supped together on the St. Gothard! It is a monomania with him, of course. He is a man of some note; seconded one of Lord Melbourne's addresses; and had forty thousand a year, now reduced to ten, but nursing and improving every day. He was with us last Monday, and comes back from some out-of-the-way place to join another small picnic next Friday. As I have said, he is the very soul of good nature and cheerfulness, but one can't help being melancholy to see a man wasting his life in such a singular delusion. Isn't it odd? He knows my books very well,[†2] and seems interested in everything concerning them; being indeed accomplished in books generally, and attached to many elegant tastes.

He described a visit from Ainsworth[†3] and his daughters on their way to Geneva. I breakfasted with him at the hotel Gibbon next morning and they dined here afterwards, and we walked about all day, talking of old days at Kensal-lodge.

Cerjat related anecdotes of Marryat.[†4] It would seem, Mr. Cerjat tells me, that he was, when here, infinitely worse in his general style of conversation, than now—sermuchser, as Toodle says,[†5] that Cerjat describes himself as having always been in unspeakable agony when he was at his table, lest he should forget himself (or remember himself, as I suggested) and break out before the ladies. There happened to be living here at that time a stately English baronet[†6] and his wife, who had two †amilksop†a sons concerning whom they cherished the idea of accomplishing their education into manhood coexistently with such perfect purity and innocence, that they were hardly to know their own sex. Accordingly, they were sent to no school or college, but had masters of all sorts at home, and thus reached eighteen years or so, in what Falstaff calls a kind of male green-sickness.†1 At this crisis of their innocent existence, our ogre friend encountered these lambs at dinner, with their father, at Cerjat's house; and, as if possessed by a devil, launched out into such frightful and appalling impropriety—†aranging over every kind of forbidden topic and every species of forbidden word and every sort of scandalous anecdote†a—that years of education in Newgate would have been as nothing compared with their experience of that one afternoon. After turning paler and paler, and more and more stoney, the baronet, with a half-suppressed cry, rose and fled. But the sons—intent on the ogre—remained behind instead of following †ahim; and are supposed to have been ruined from that hour.†a Isn't that a good story? I can SEE our friend and his pupils now. . . Poorfellow! He seems to have [had]†2 a hard time of it †awith his wife. She had no interest whatever in her children; and was such a fury, that, being dressed to go out to dinner, she would sometimes, on no other provocation than a pin out of its place or some such thing, fall upon a little maid she had, beat her till she couldn't stand, then tumble into hysterics, and be carried to bed. He suffered martyrdom with her;†a and seems to have been himself, in all good-natured easy-going ways, just what we know him now.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?MID AUGUST 1846]

Mention in To Fred Dickens, 9 Sep 46.

Enclosing a letter to John Dickens.

To JOHN DICKENS, [?MID AUGUST 1846]

Mention in To Fred Dickens, 9 Sep 46.

About Augustus, and his position in Mrs Smithson's house.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 20 AUGUST 1846*

MS Berg Collection.

Rosemont. | Twentieth August 1846.

My Dear De la Rue.

I am afraid it would be impossible—or the next thing to it—for me to appoint any day this week. Unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will meet you at Vevay, next Wednesday.†1 As it will be important for me, with a view to my next day's work, to return home that night (I don't care at what hour) I will repair to Vevay in one of the one-sided chars, whereof I have established a specimen on these premises. If I hear from you that you go to Vevay on the Tuesday, I will come over on Wednesday Morning to breakfast between 9 and 10. If I hear that you go on the Wednesday per boat, I will come over, in the aforesaid char, in time to meet you at the Landing-Place. Do you understand all this? She will, if you don't. I think the Vevay idea worthy of a Shakespeare, and look forward to a joyful day.

Tell me what you mean to do.

My troubles are not greater, thank God, than they usually are, when I am plunging neck and heels into a new Book. It is always an anxious and worrying time. Mais il faut manger.

We have said just nothing at all to the Thompsons, which seems to me to be the true way of cutting the Gordian Knot. My brother is under contract of holy matrimony to Mrs. T's sister! As they have nothing particular to live upon, I suppose it won't come off just yet.

To add to my other occupations, I hear with fear and trembling that Tennyson the Poet is at Chamounix and coming this way, in which event, I shall not only be taken from my work, but required to smoke pipes by the Score. Hallam the historian was here the other day—Ainsworth, the unintelligible novelist, a few days afterwards—a friend with the uncommon name of Smith, "looked in" for the whole day, yesterday—and Elliotson writes threats of coming next month! If anybody else threatens, I think I shall come to Genoa—murder Noli—and die in a good cause.

With my best Remembrances

Ever My Dear De la Rue | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I can't satisfacotrily account for my not having been born to a fine property.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 and 25 AUGUST 1846]

Extracts in F, V, ii, 399; V, iv, 412, 412*n*, 414-15; V, V, 424*n*; V, iii, 411. Date: first four extracts 24 Aug according to Forster; fifth extract 25 Aug since referring to earthquake "yesterday week"; last extract dated by CD's receipt of Forster's reply to his letter of ?9-10 Aug.

The deaf, dumb, and blind girl is decidedly improved, and very much improved, in this short time. No communication is yet established with her, but that is not to be expected. They have got her out of that strange, crouching position; dressed her neatly; and accustomed her to have a pleasure in society. She laughs frequently, and also claps her hands and jumps; having, God knows how, some inward satisfaction. I never saw a more tremendous thing in its way, in my life, than when they stood her, t'other day, in the centre of a group of blind children who sang a chorus to the piano; and brought her hand, and kept it, in contact with the instrument. A shudder pervaded her whole being, her breath quickened, her colour deepened,—and I can compare it to nothing but returning animation in a person nearly dead. It was really awful to see how the sensation of the music fluttered and stirred the locked-up soul within her. . . The male subject is well and jolly as possible. He is very fond of smoking. I have arranged to supply him with cigars during our stay here; so he and I are in amazing sympathy. I don't know whether he thinks I grow them, or make them, or produce them by winking, or what. But it gives him a notion that the world in general belongs to me.

I am perfectly appalled by the hesitation and cowardice of the whigs. To bring in that arms bill, bear the brunt of the attack upon it, take out the obnoxious clauses, still retain the bill, and finally withdraw it[†1], seems to me the meanest and most halting way of going to work that ever was taken. I cannot believe in them. Lord John must be helpless among them. They seem somehow or other never to know what cards they hold in their hands, and to play them out blindfold. The contrast with Peel (as he was last) is, I agree with you, certainly not favourable. I don't believe now they ever would have carried the repeal of the corn law, if they could. The reluctance of public men of all parties to give the needful help to schemes of emigration,[†2] he ascribed to a secret belief in the gentle politico-economical principle that a surplus population must and ought to starve; in which for himself he never could see anything but disaster for all who trusted to it. I am convinced that its philosophers would sink any government, any cause, any doctrine, even the most righteous. There is a sense and humanity in the mass, in the long run, that will not bear them; and they will wreck their friends always, as they wrecked them in the working of the Poor-law bill. Not all the figures that Babbage's calculating machine could turn up in twenty generations, would stand in the long run against the general heart.

I hope you will follow up your idea about the defective state of the law in reference to women,[†3] by some remarks on the inadequate punishment of that ruffian flippantly called by the liners the Wholesale Matrimonial Speculator. My opinion is, that in any well-ordered state of society, and advanced spirit of social jurisprudence, he would have been flogged more than once (privately), and certainly sentenced to transportation for no less a term than the rest of his life. Surely the man who threw the woman out of window was no worse, if so bad.[†1]

Not having your letter as usual, I sat down to write to you on speculation yesterday, but lapsed in my uncertainty into Dombey, and worked at it all day. It was, as it has been since last Tuesday morning, incessantly raining regular mountain rain. After dinner, at a little after seven o'clock, I was walking up and down under the little colonnade in the garden, racking my brain about Dombeys and Battles of Lives, when two travel-stained-looking men approached, of whom one, in a very limp and melancholy straw hat, ducked perpetually to me as he came up the walk. I couldn't make them out at all; and it wasn't till I got close up to them that I recognised [Tennyson] and (in the straw hat) [Moxon].[†2] They had come from Geneva by the steamer, and taken a scrambling dinner on board. I gave them some fine Rhine wine, and cigars innumerable. [Tennyson] enjoyed himself and was quite at home. [Moxon] (an odd companion for a man of genius) was snobbish, but pleased and good-natured. [Tennyson] had a five pound note in his pocket which he had worn down by careless carrying about, to some two-thirds of its original size, and which was so ragged in its remains that when he took it out bits of it flew about the table. "Oh Lor you know—now really—like Goldsmith you know—or any of these great men!"

said [Moxon], with the very "snatches in his voice and burst of speaking" that reminded Leigh Hunt of Cloten.[†1] . . . The clouds were lying, as they do in such weather here, on the earth, and our friends saw no more of Lake Leman than of Battersea. Nor had they, it might appear, seen more of the Mer de Glace, on their way here; their talk about it bearing much resemblance to that of the man who had been to Niagara and said it was nothing but water.

I forgot to tell you that yesterday week, at half-past 7 in the morning, we had a smart shock of an earthquake,[†2] lasting, perhaps, a quarter of a minute. It awoke me in bed. The sensation was so curious and unlike any other, that I called out at the top of my voice I was sure it was an earthquake.

He commented on Forster's reply to his account of the anti-Jesuit celebration at Lausanne. I don't know whether I have mentioned before, that in the valley of the Simplon hard by here, where (at the bridge of St. Maurice, over the Rhone) this Protestant canton ends and a Catholic canton begins, you might separate two perfectly distinct and different conditions of humanity by drawing a line with your stick in the dust on the ground. On the Protestant side, neatness; cheerfulness; industry; education; continual aspiration, at least, after better things. On the Catholic side, dirt, disease, ignorance, squalor, and misery.[†3] I have so constantly observed the like of this, since I first came abroad, that I have a sad misgiving that the religion of Ireland lies as deep at the root of all its sorrows, even as English misgovernment and Tory villainy.

To SAMUEL ROGERS, [27 AUGUST 1846]

MS Professor E. S. Pearson. Date: PM 27 Aug 46.

I can't let this go to you, although the man is waiting to carry it off to the post, without adding, for myself,[†4] that I hope you won't forget us—and that when you are out on these airy walks at Broadstairs, I desire most to live in your memory. Let us promise and vow (God willing) to have tea there together, again, one windy night next Autumn, when you will go home to Ballard's afterwards, all aslant, against the gale, and when that dimmest of lamps at the corner will be winking and winking as if the spray inflamed its eye. The wind is blowing down the Lake now, driving fast shadows before it along the sides of the mountains; but it don't blow half as pleasantly, to my thinking, as over the North Foreland, or about that good old, tarry, salt, little pier. There's a Berne wom[an][†5] in the garden, with a large stomacher and a gauzy cap, but she's nothing to Miss Crampton of the Terrace Baths. Wherever I am, I am always your affectionate friend, and shall always think it the best return in the world if you'll believe me so—though you do (in speaking to her) always call me

"Him".[†1]

To JOSEPH VALCKENBERG, 27 AUGUST 1846

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 427 (1922); MS 1 p.; dated Rosemont, 27 Aug 46.

I hasten to tell you with many thanks that the wine has arrived safely and that its flavour is quite wonderful.

Heaven forgive me, but I feared some wicked German (if there be such a phenomenon) was drinking it on the road!

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 AUGUST 1846]

Extracts in F, V, v, 423; VI, ii, 476; V, iv, 414*n*, 417; V, v, 423, 422-3. Date: first two extracts 30 Aug according to Forster; third extract probably the same letter since about the Regatta "the other day" (25 Aug); fourth extract "his first September letter" according to Forster (but see fn); fifth extract "at the close" of the same letter as first extract according to Forster, and final extract ("a few weeks later" than 25 July) obviously follows on in same passage.

You can hardly imagine what infinite pains I take, or what extraordinary difficulty I find in getting on FAST. Invention, thank God, seems the easiest thing in the world; and I seem to have such a preposterous sense of the ridiculous, after this long rest, as to be constantly requiring to restrain myself from launching into extravagances in the height of my enjoyment. But the difficulty of going at what I call a rapid pace, is prodigious: it is almost an impossibility. I suppose this is partly the effect of two years' ease, and partly of the absence of streets and numbers of figures. I can't express how much I want these. It seems as if they supplied something to my brain, which it cannot bear, when busy, to lose. For a week or a fortnight I can write prodigiously in a retired place (as at Broadstairs), and a day in London sets me up again and starts me. But the toil and labour of writing, day after day, without that magic lantern, is IMMENSE!! I don't say this, at all in low spirits, for we are perfectly comfortable here, and I like the place very much indeed, and the people are even more friendly and fond of me than they were in Genoa. I only mention it as a curious fact, which I have never had an opportunity of finding out before. My figures seem disposed to stagnate without crowds about them. I wrote very little in Genoa (only the Chimes), and fancied myself conscious of some such influence there—but Lord! I had two miles of streets at least, lighted at night, to walk about in; and a great theatre to repair to, every night.

I shall gladly acquiesce in whatever more changes or omissions you propose. Browne seems to be getting on well.[†1] . . . He will have a good subject in Paul's christening.[†2] Mr. Chick is like D, if you'll mention that when you think of it. The little chapter of Miss Tox and the Major, which you alas! (but quite wisely) rejected from the first number, I have altered for the last of the second.[†3] I have not quite finished the middle chapter[†4] yet—having, I should say, three good days' work to do at it; but I hope it will be all a worthy successor to number one. I will send it as soon as finished.

We had a regatta at Ouchy[†5] the other day, mainly supported by the contributions of the English handfull. It concluded with a rowing-match by women, which was very funny. I wish you could have seen Roche appear on the Lake, rowing, in an immense boat, Cook, Anne, two nurses, Katey, Mamey, Walley, Chickenstalker, and Baby; no boatmen or other degrading assistance; and all sorts of Swiss tubs splashing about them. . . . Senior[†6] is coming here to-morrow, I believe, with his wife; and they talk of Brunel[†7] and his wife[†8] as on their way. We dine at Haldimand's to meet Senior—which solitary and most interesting piece of intelligence is all the news I know of. . . . Take care you don't back out of your Paris engagement; but that we really do have (please God) some happy hours there. Kate, Georgy, Mamey, Katey, Charley, Walley, Chickenstalker, and Baby, send loves. . . . I am all anxiety and fever to know what we start Dombey with.[†1]

There are two nice girls here, the Ladies Taylor,[†2] daughters of Lord Headfort. Their mother was daughter (I think) of Sir John Stevenson, and Moore dedicated one part of the Irish Melodies to her.[†3] They inherit the musical taste, and sing very well. A proposal is on foot for our all bundling off on Tuesday[†4] (16 strong) to the top of the Great St. Bernard. But the weather seems to have broken, and the autumn rains to have set in; which I devoutly hope will break up the party. It would be a most serious hindrance to me, just now; but I have rashly promised. Do you know young Romilly?[†5] He is coming over from Geneva when "the reading" comes off, and is a fine fellow I am told. There is not a bad little theatre here; and by way of an artificial crowd,[†6] I should certainly have got it open with an amateur company, if we were not so few that the only thing we want is the audience.

He had pretty well matured the general idea of the Christmas book, and was burning to get to work on it. He thought it would be all the better, for a change, to have no fairies or spirits in it, but make it a simple domestic tale.

I shall begin the little story straightway,[†7] but I have been dimly conceiving a very ghostly and wild idea, which I suppose I must now reserve for the next Christmas book.[†8] Nous verrons. It will mature in the streets of Paris by night, as well as in London.

To THOMAS MITTON, 30 AUGUST 1846

MS Huntington Library. Address: Angleterre | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London.

Rosemont. Sunday Thirtieth August 1846.

My Dear Mitton. I received your letter yesterday, and send you a draft on Coutts's, agreeably to a form agreed upon between me and one of the Gentlemen in the Inner Room there, to whom I spoke on the subject before I left England.

Bradbury and Evans's account for the half year is £1100 and odd, of which £500 was paid on account of the Pictures from Italy, before I left England, and the remainder is just now paid in.[†1] They certainly keep a very active eye upon the expences and profits. You will know by the time you receive this, I dare say, the name of the new book.[†2] I think it is an odd one, and therefore a good one. It struck B and E very much. The first No is considered very good indeed. So much so that Browne, who is generally the most indifferent fellow in the world, couldn't help writing me a long letter about it, and saying how pleased he was. I have taken immense pains, and think it strong. Some of it made me laugh so, that I couldn't see the paper as I was writing. The second is not behind it. Moses has taken one page of the wrapper, all through.[†3]

Cramer's house never did business like any other house. And therefore I am not surprised at their sending in their bill too soon. I purchased the Piano at 12 months credit, because I found the allowance for ready money, so preposterously small. I bought it in September, & I am pretty sure towards the end of the month. But the note I have in my diary of the amount is £75. What is the rest of the bill? I know there are some other items, but I should like to know what they are. I will send you a draft for the whole, before the Month (of September) is out.[†4] I do not recollect Brooks's small account,[†5] nor can I call to mind what it can be for. I dare say, however, he is right. It may be paid, I have no doubt.

Unless B and E have taken charge of Kate's five letters (which is not likely, as all the proofs come by post) will you post 'em? Also Smale's,[†6] which would seem to be an oddity. The best way of disposing of Mr. Van de Lieb[†7] (whose MSS would bother me no less than you) would be to write him, if you will, a copy of the letter I have written on the other side—retaining his MSS in that never-opened tin box of mine, until he writes for them—if ever.

The Thompsons have taken a house here, for 8 months. She seems (between ourselves) to have a devil of a whimpering, pouting temper—but she is large in the family way, and that may have something to do with it. Charley is getting quite stout. Everybody else well and happy, and all uniting in kind regards.

I regard your coming to Paris with me, as a solemn bargain, and can answer for your being greatly surprised, benefitted, and entertained. Nothing can be easier; and you never could hope to see it (I hope)[†1] more pleasantly than with

Yours Ever

CD.

Address in English | date so and so Septembre 1846.

Monsieur.

Monsr. Charles Dickens, qui n'est pas a présent en Angleterre, ayant laissé á moi sa pleine confiance et l'autorite d'ouvrir ses lettres, je me trouve honoré de la votre.

J'aurai l'honneur, Monsieur de l'envoyer á mon ami qui va se rendre á Paris, Decembre prochain. En attendant, voulez-vous que je garde vos manuscrits? Ou voulez-vous que je les vous retourne?

Reçevez, Monsieur, l'assurance de ma consideration distinguée

Votre Serviteur trés fidele

Thomas Mitton

addressed outside

á Monsieur | Monsr. So and So

To ROBERT KEELEY, 31 AUGUST 1846†

MS Huntington Library.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland
Thirty First August 1846.

My Dear Sir

†aI gave a promise to Willmott last year, that you should have my Christmas Book of this year, in time to dramatize and act, on the night of its publication, for another hundred pounds.†a†2

I have accidentally heard (I hope incorrectly) that you and Willmott have parted company.†3 But lest it should be so, and any confusion should arise on this subject in consequence, I think it well to tell you that I shall be perfectly willing to fulfil my engagement, if you please,—but that I hold you at perfect liberty to abandon it if you please, and shall be in no wise offended by your so doing.

I send this through my friend Mr. Forster who has full power from me to proceed in the matter, and is perfectly cognizant of all my arrangements.

I beg to be cordially remembered to Mrs. Keeley, and am

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Keeley Esquire.

To CHARLES LEVER, 31 AUGUST 1846

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Address: A Monsieur: | Monsr. Charles Lever | Schloss Rieden | Breyenz†1 | Lac de Constance.

Lausanne. | Thirty First August 1846.

My Dear Lever.

I may write without the "Sir", though I can't come to Zurich. I can get so far, at all events.

Your second hospitable letter should have been answered long ago, but that I have been pondering all sorts of probabilities and possibilities. An excursion to Chamounix, however, and another to the Great St. Bernard—coupled with the invasions, past and to come, of people coming through here—have so encroached upon my time that I have now no choice but to put a grim face on all proposals of pleasure, and sit down, fiercely, at my desk.

Nevertheless, if, after Christmas and towards the Springtime, I should be anything like as free as I hope to be (by comparison with my approaching bondage) I shall still look forward to the pleasure of shaking hands with you bodily.†2

In the meanwhile I must content myself with a more spiritual but not less hearty salutation.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

—I forgot—New Work—Name, DOMBEY AND SON—Scene, English—Opening, in London.

September

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON, 4 SEPTEMBER 1846*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Rosemont. | Friday Night September Fourth | 1846.

My Dear Mr. Watson

In the intervals of my tears, I write this, to send you in the Morning with Byron.—I have put a little piece of paper into the whereabout of the Prisoner of Chillon.

Grief and jolting[†3] deprive me of the power of offering any remark, oral or written, on any subject whatever. I have merely strength of mind—and barely strength of fingers—to offer my dismal regards to Mrs. Watson. Having done which, I return to the gorgeous red sofa, where I have been endeavouring, with my head very low, and my heels very high, to find some temporary consolation in the bosom of the newspapers.

Always believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. | Richard Watson.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 SEPTEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, v, iv, 418-20; V, v, 423-4*n*, 424; VI, ii, 476. Date: first extract 6 Sep according to Forster; second extract same letter, since No. 11 of Dombey reached Forster in second week of Sep; third extract, from the first letter after return from expedition on 4 Sep; fourth extract "a little later" than 30 Aug.

The weather obstinately clearing, we started off last Tuesday for the Great St. Bernard, returning here on Friday afternoon. The party consisted of eleven people and two servants—Haldimand, Mr. and Mrs. Cerjat and one daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Watson, two Ladies Taylor, Kate, Georgy, and I. We were wonderfully unanimous and cheerful; went away from here by the steamer; found at its destination a whole omnibus provided by the Brave (who went on in advance everywhere); rode therein to Bex; found two large carriages ready to take us to Martigny; slept there; and proceeded up the mountain on mules next day. Although the St. Bernard convent is, as I dare say you know, the highest inhabited spot but one in the world, the ascent is extremely gradual and uncommonly easy: really presenting no difficulties at all, until within the last league, when the ascent, lying through a place called the valley of desolation, is very awful and tremendous, and the road is rendered toilsome by scattered rocks and melting snow. The convent is a most extraordinary place, full of great vaulted passages, divided from each other with iron gratings; and presenting a series of the most astonishing little dormitories, where the windows are so small (on account of the cold and snow), that it is as much as one can do to get one's head out of them. Here we slept: supping, thirty strong, in a rambling room with a great wood-fire in it set apart for that purpose; with a grim monk, in a high black sugar-loaf hat with a great knob at the top of it, carving the dishes. At five o'clock in the morning the chapel bell rang in the dismallest way for matins: and I, lying in bed close to the chapel, and being awakened by the solemn organ and the chaunting, thought for a moment I had died in the night and passed into the unknown world.[†1]

I wish to God you could see that place. A great hollow on the top of a range of dreadful mountains, fenced in by riven rocks of every shape and colour: and in the midst, a black lake, with phantom clouds perpetually stalking over it. Peaks, and points, and plains of eternal ice and snow, bounding the view, and shutting out the world on every side: the lake reflecting nothing: and no human figure in the scene. The air so fine, that it is difficult to breathe without feeling out of breath; and the cold so exquisitely thin and sharp that it is not to be described. Nothing of life or living interest in the picture, but the grey dull walls of the convent. No vegetation of any sort or kind. Nothing growing, nothing stirring. Everything iron-bound, and frozen up. Beside the convent, in a little outhouse with a grated iron door which you may unbolt for yourself, are the bodies of people found in the snow who have never been claimed and are withering away—not laid down, or stretched out, but standing up, in corners and against walls; some erect and horribly human, with distinct expressions on the faces; some sunk down on their knees; some dropping over on one side; some tumbled down altogether, and presenting a heap of skulls and fibrous dust. There is no other decay in that atmosphere; and there they remain during the short days and the long nights, the only human company out of doors, withering away by grains, and holding ghastly possession of the mountain where they died.[†1]

It is the most distinct and individual place[†2] I have seen, even in this transcendent country. But, for the Saint Bernard holy fathers and convent in themselves, I am sorry to say that they are a piece of as sheer humbug as we ever learnt to believe in, in our young days. Trashy French sentiment and the dogs (of which, by the bye, there are only three remaining) have done it all. They are a lazy set of fellows; not over fond of going out themselves; employing servants to clear the road (which has not been important or much used as a pass these hundred years); rich; and driving a good trade in Innkeeping: the convent being a common tavern in everything but the sign. No charge is made for their hospitality to be sure; but you are shown to a box in the chapel, where everybody puts in more than could, with any show of face, be charged for the entertainment; and from this the establishment derives a right good income. As to the self-sacrifice of living up there, they are obliged to go there young, it is true, to be inured to the climate:[†1] but it is an infinitely more exciting and various life than any other convent can offer; with constant change and company through the whole summer; with a hospital for invalids down in the valley, which affords another change; and with an annual begging-journey to Geneva and this place and all the places round for one brother or other, which affords farther change. The brother who carved at our supper could speak some English, and had just had Pickwick given him!—what a humbug he will think me when he tries to understand it! If I had had any other book of mine with me, I would have given it him, that I might have had some chance of being intelligible.

I hope to finish the second number to-morrow, and to send it off bodily by Tuesday's post. On Wednesday I purpose, please God, beginning the Battle of Life. I shall peg away at that, without turning aside to Dombey again; and if I can only do it within the month!

They had had wonderful weather, so clear that he could see from the Neuchatel road the outline of Mont Blanc, sixty miles off, as plainly as if he were standing close under it in the courtyard of the little inn at Chamounix; and, though it was raining again when he wrote, his nailed shoes were by him and his great waterproof cloak in preparation for a fourteen-mile walk before dinner.

Browne is certainly interesting himself, and taking pains. I think the cover[†2] very good: perhaps with a little too much in it, but that is an ungrateful objection.[†3]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 9 SEPTEMBER 1846

MS Benoliel Collection.

Rosemont, Lausanne. | Wednesday Ninth September 1846.

My Dear Fred.

I want to point out to you what is a very great mistake, and error of judgment on your part.

I was very much surprised by Thompson's coming to me yesterday to ask if I had commissioned you to send him a copy of any part of my letter to Father, about Augustus.[†4] Of course I said no: adding that beyond all question if I had desired him to see it, I should have shewn it him myself. He replied he was quite sure of that—and expressed himself with some considerable earnestness on your having sent an extract to him, and furthermore shewn the letter to Mrs. Smithson.

Rely upon it this is a very great mistake, and places you in an exceedingly false position. Gentlemen don't do such things. You had no right whatever to transcribe any portion of that letter for Thompson's eye. When you mentioned to me, in a former letter, that you had shewn it to "a mutual friend", I was greatly surprised; but as most people place confidence in somebody or other, I imagined you might have shewn it, as a piece of confidence of your own: and though I was dissatisfied by the proceeding, I did not think myself justified in objecting to it when it was over. No person with any knowledge of becoming and delicate social usages would excuse you for sending the least word of it to Thompson. I hope you don't advise with Mr. Weller on such subjects. It is no disparagement to him to say that he makes enormous mistakes (as I had occasion to observe when he was at variance with Thompson), and is anything but a good leader. A letter entrusted to you, to deliver to some one else, is a sacred thing, and you have no kind of right over any syllable it contains. If I had empowered you to send any portion of it to Thompson, I should have considered that I adopted toward Thompson, in so doing, a very affronting and unpleasant course.

Therefore I could by no means defend you in it yesterday. About Augustus, and his absurd position in Mrs. Smithson's house, I spoke plainly, and evidently with effect. And I said that I presumed you had made this mistake, in some supposition that Mrs. Smithson had been beforehand with you, and related her version of the story to Thompson. Which he did not deny.

Rely upon this—the less you write in any such case as this quarrel, the better. You cannot be too careful in that. But to interfere with other people's writings, and other people's letters, is to slice at your own Nose with a sharp Razor.

I have been expecting to hear from you about your Lausanne plans, but I suppose these quarrels prevent the adjustment of anything. Will you tell Henry, with my love to him and Letitia that between my Xmas Book and Dombey, I am too much at my desk to be able to write letters, but that when we go to Paris, I shall hope to persuade them to come and stay some time with us.[†1] I suppose it is now too late to expect them here. We think of leaving this, on the last day of November. We are all well, thank God, and happy. Kate and Georgy unite with me in loves to yourself and Anna.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Charley, Mamey, Katey, Walley, Chickenstalker, and Sampson Brass (the baby) desire to be remembered.

To J. H. BARROW, 14 SEPTEMBER 1846

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1929; MS 2 ½ pp.; dated Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland, 14 Sep 46.

Concerning a dispute between Barrow and the Daily News about his remuneration for a trip made to India.

To MR B——, 16 SEPTEMBER 1846*

MS University of Texas.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Sixteenth Sept 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. B ,[†1] and begs to say that his connexion with the Daily News does not extend to the acceptance or rejection of papers offered for publication in that Journal. He has however referred Mr. B.'s letter to the Editor who will no doubt reply to it without delay; and for himself he begs to thank Mr. B. for his obliging communication.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20 SEPTEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, V, 424, 425. Date: first extract eight days after the Dombey reading on 12 Sep, but wrongly called by Forster "three days" after ?6 Sep; second extract 20 Sep according to Forster.

The absence of any accessible streets continues to worry me, now that I have so much to do, in a most singular manner. It is quite a little mental phenomenon. I should not walk in them in the day time, if they were here, I dare say: but at night I want them beyond description. I don't seem able to get rid of my spectres unless I can lose them in crowds. However, as you say, there are streets in Paris, and good suggestive streets too: and trips to London will be nothing then. WHEN I have finished the Christmas book, I shall fly to Geneva for a day or two, before taking up with Dombey again. I like this place better and better; and never saw, I think, more agreeable people than our little circle is made up of. It is so little, that one is not "bothered" in the least; and their interest in the Inimitable seems to strengthen daily. I read them the first number[†2] last night "was a" week, with unrelateable success; and old Mrs. Marcet, who is devilish 'cute, guessed directly (but I didn't tell her she was right) that little Paul would die. They were all so apprehensive that it was a great pleasure to read it;[†3] and

I shall leave here, if all goes well, in a brilliant shower of sparks struck out of them by the promised reading of the Christmas book.

You remember your objection about the two stories. I made over light of it. I ought to have considered that I have never before really tried the opening of two together—having always had one pretty far ahead when I have been driving a pair of them. I know it all now. The apparent impossibility of getting each into its place, coupled with that craving for streets, so thoroughly put me off the track, that, up to Wednesday or Thursday last, I really contemplated, at times, the total abandonment of the Christmas book this year, and the limitation of my labours to Dombey and Son! I cancelled the beginning of a first scene[†1]—which I have never done before—and, with a notion in my head, ran wildly about and about it, and could not get the idea into any natural socket. At length, thank Heaven, I nailed it all at once; and after going on comfortably up to yesterday, and working yesterday from half-past nine to six, I was last night in such a state of enthusiasm about it that I think I was an inch or two taller. I am a little cooler to-day, with a headache to boot; but I really begin to hope you will think it a pretty story, with some delicate notions in it agreeably presented, and with a good human Christmas groundwork.[†2] I fancy I see a great domestic effect in the last part.

To THOMAS MITTON, 25 SEPTEMBER 1846*

MS Princeton University Library.

Rosemont, Lausanne. Twenty Fifth September 1846

My Dear Mitton. I enclose you a cheque, crossed, for the amount of Cramer's bill. At the same time, I cannot help thinking that the Piano Item requires explanation. I have got the price in my book £75, and I very seldom make mistakes—of that kind.[†3]

As you may suppose, I am very busy. I never had to begin two stories together, before: and it is desperate work. There are no streets and crowds of people here, to divert the attention. My head suffers. And that is very unusual, as you know, with me.

Everything depends upon my work; but if I can get Dombey No. 3 out of hand soon enough (I can't go to that, until I have done the Christmas Book) I shall leave here for Paris on the 10th. of November: otherwise I shall be on the road when I ought to be at my desk. I shall see my way pretty clearly (I hope) by about the 20th. or 25th. of October: and will let you know, of course, what my plans are finally.

Bradbury and Evans are in no very good odour with me just now, for other reasons,[†1] but you quite mistake my allusion to their charges—being, as usual, on the doubtful side. I think they keep the expences down, decidedly, and know where and how to do so. The Pictures from Italy could not return any large sum: the price being so extremely low.[†2] But that I knew before-hand. The Oliver subscription will be all profit.[†3] The expences of the book are paid in the Nos.

We are all well and hearty. Its'[†4] no use telling you any thing about Dombey. You will know all about the beginning of it, almost as soon as you know what is inside of this letter.[†5]

Ever faithfully

CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 25 SEPTEMBER 1846*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: A Monsieur: | Monsr. Serjeant Talfourd. | Hotel de l'Union | Chamounix | En Suisse.

Rosemont, Lausanne. Twenty Fifth September 1846.

My Dear Talfourd.

Having received your letter today, with the greatest pleasure, I write a hasty note by return of Post, to say that I eschew all Scientific doings at Genoa (albeit they take place in my old house)[†6] and remain a fixture here, until November. Therefore, "on Saturday the 3rd. of October, between 4 and 5 in the afternoon", we shall expect you here: and your wants being so moderate, in respect of beds, I am happy to say we shall be able to house you all. We are on the Ouchy Road, a very little way out of Lausanne.

I am horribly hard at work with my Christmas Book, which runs (rather inconveniently) in a Curricle just now, with "Dealings with the Firm of Dombey and Son"—for that's the name of the other; in the beginning whereof, I have pleased myself, and hope to please you. Your advent will be a most noble holiday for me; and please God we will take a glorious walk on the Sunday.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister join me in kindest regards. In case this letter should not reach you at Chamounix, I have dispatched a duplicate of it to the Poste Restante, Geneva.[†1]

Ever Believe me | Most affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 SEPTEMBER 1846]

Extract in F, V, v, 426-7. Date: 26 Sep according to Forster.

I am going to write you a most startling piece of intelligence. I fear there may be NO CHRISTMAS BOOK! I would give the world to be on the spot to tell you this. Indeed I once thought of starting for London to-night. I have written nearly a third of it. It promises to be pretty; quite a new idea in the story, I hope; but to manage it without the supernatural agency[†2] now impossible of introduction, and yet to move it naturally within the required space, or with any shorter limit than a Vicar of Wakefield, I find to be a difficulty so perplexing —the past Dombey work taken into account—that I am fearful of wearing myself out if I go on, and not being able to come back to the greater undertaking with the necessary freshness and spirit. If I had nothing but the Christmas book to do, I WOULD do it; but I get horrified and distressed beyond conception at the prospect of being jaded when I come back to the other, and making it a mere race against time. I have written the first part;[†3] I know the end and upshot of the second;[†4] and the whole of the third (there are only three in all). I know the purport of each character, and the plain idea that each is to work out; and I have the principal effects sketched on paper. It cannot end quite happily, but will end cheerfully and pleasantly. But my soul sinks before the commencement of the second part—the longest—and the introduction of the under-idea. (The main one already developed, with interest). I don't know how it is. I suppose it is the having been almost constantly at work in this quiet place; and the dread for the Dombey; and the not being able to get rid of it, in noise and bustle. The beginning two books together is also, no doubt, a fruitful source of the difficulty; for I am now sure I could not have invented the Carol at the commencement of the Chuzzlewit, or gone to a new book from the Chimes. But this is certain. I am sick, giddy, and capriciously despondent. I have bad nights; am full of disquietude and anxiety; and am constantly haunted by the idea that I am wasting the marrow of the larger book, and ought to be at rest. One letter that I wrote you before this, I have torn up. In that the Christmas book was wholly given up for this year: but I now resolve to make one effort more.[†1] I will go to Geneva to-morrow, and try on Monday and Tuesday whether I can get on at all bravely, in the changed scene. If I cannot, I am convinced that I had best hold my hand at once; and not fritter my spirits and hope away, with that long book before me. You may suppose that the matter is very grave when I can so nearly abandon anything in which I am deeply interested, and fourteen or fifteen close MS pages[†2] of which, that have made me laugh and cry, are lying in my desk. Writing this letter at all, I have a great misgiving that the letter I shall write you on Tuesday night will not make it better. Take it, for Heaven's sake, as an extremely serious thing, and not a fancy of the moment. Last Saturday after a very long day's work, and last Wednesday after finishing the first part, I was full of eagerness and pleasure. At all other times since I began, I have been brooding and brooding over the idea that it was a wild thing to dream of, ever: and that I ought to be at rest for the Dombey.

October

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 SEPTEMBER and 1 OCTOBER 1846]

Extract in F, V, v, 427-8. Date: 30 Sep with postscript added 1 Oct according to Forster. From Geneva.

He was quite dismayed at first by the sight of gas in Geneva, and trembled at the noise in the streets, which was fully equal to the uproar of Richmond in Surrey. When I came here I had a bloodshot eye; and my head was so bad, with a pain across the brow, that I thought I must have got cupped. I have become a great deal better, however, and feel quite myself again to-day. . . . I still have not made up my mind as to what I CAN do with the Christmas book. I would give any money that it were possible to consult with you. I have begun the second part this morning, and have done a very fair morning's work at it, but I do not feel it in hand within the necessary space and divisions: and I have a great uneasiness in the prospect of falling behind hand with the other labour, which is so transcendently important. I feel quite sure that unless I (being in reasonably good state and spirits) like the Christmas book myself, I had better not go on with it; but had best keep my strength for Dombey, and keep my number in advance. On the other hand I am dreadfully averse to abandoning it, and am so torn between the two things that I know not what to do. It is impossible to express the wish I have that I could take counsel with you. Having begun the second part I will go on here, to-morrow and Friday (Saturday, the Talfourds come to us at Lausanne, leaving on Monday morning), unless I see new reason to give it up in the meanwhile. Let it stand thus—that my next Monday's letter shall finally decide the question. But if you have not already told Bradbury and Evans of my last letter I think it will now be best to do so. . . . This non-publication of a Christmas book, if it must be, I try to think light of with the greater story just begun, and with this Battle of Life story (of which I really think the leading idea is very pretty) lying by me, for future use. But I would like you to consider, in the event of my not going on, how best, by timely announcement, in November's or December's Dombey, I may seem to hold the ground prospectively.[†1] . . . Heaven send me a good deliverance! If I don't do it, it will be the first time I ever abandoned anything I had once taken in hand; and I shall not have abandoned it until after a most desperate fight. I could do it, but for the Dombey, as easily as I did last year or the year before.[†2] But I cannot help falling back on that continually: and this, combined with the peculiar difficulties of the story for a Christmas book,[†3] and my being out of sorts, discourages me sadly. . . . Kate is here, and sends her love.

[P.S] Georgy has come over from Lausanne, and joins with Kate, &c. &c. My head remains greatly better. My eye is recovering its old hue of beautiful white, tinged with celestial blue. If I hadn't come here, I think I should have had some bad low fever. The sight of the rushing Rhone seemed to stir my blood again. I don't think I shall want to be cupped, this bout; but it looked, at one time, worse than I have confessed to you. If I have any return, I will have it done immediately.

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 OCTOBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, v, 429-30; VI, ii, 477. Date: 3 Oct according to Forster.

In the breathless interval between our return from Geneva and the arrival of the Talfourds (expected in an hour or two), I cannot do better than write to you. For I think you will be well pleased if I anticipate my promise, and Monday, at the same time. I have been greatly better at Geneva, though I still am made uneasy by occasional giddiness and headache: attributable, I have not the least doubt, to the absence of streets. There is an idea here, too, that people are occasionally made despondent and sluggish in their spirits by this great mass of still water, Lake Leman. At any rate I have been very uncomfortable: at any rate I am, I hope, greatly better: and (lastly) at any rate I hope and trust, now, the Christmas book will come in due course!! I have had three very good days' work at Geneva, and trust I may finish the second part (the third is the shortest) by this day week. Whenever I finish it, I will send you the first two together. I do not think they can begin to illustrate it, until the third arrives; for it is a single-minded story, as it were, and an artist should know the end: which I don't think very likely, unless he reads it.

He described the superhuman effort he was making to lodge his visitors in his doll's house. I didn't like the idea of turning them out at night. It is so dark in these lanes, and groves, when the moon's not bright.

He hoped that he would by great effort finish the Christmas book on the 20th; then he would fly to Geneva for a week to work a little at Dombey, if he felt pretty sound; and in any case finish his third number by the 10th of November, and start for Paris that day so that, instead of resting unprofitably here, I shall be using my interval of idleness to make the journey and get into a new house, and shall hope so to put a pinch of salt on the tail of the sliding number in advance. . . . I am horrified at the idea of getting the blues (and bloodshots) again.

On Forster's objections to parts of No. II:[†1] Miss Tox's colony I will smash.[†2] Walter's allusion to Carker (would you take it all out)? shall be dele'd. Of course, you understand the man? I turned that speech over in my mind; but I thought it natural that a boy should run on, with such a subject, under the circumstances: having the matter so presented to him.[†3] . . . I thought of the possibility of malice on christening points of faith, and put the drag on as I wrote.[†4] Where would you make the insertion, and to what effect? That shall be done too. I want you to think the number sufficiently good stoutly to back up the first. It occurs to me—might not your doubt about the christening be a reason for not making the ceremony the subject of an illustration?[†5] Just turn this over. Again: if I could do it (I shall have leisure to consider the possibility before I begin), do you think it would be advisable to make number three a kind of half-way house between Paul's infancy, and his being eight or nine years old?—In that case I should probably not kill him until the fifth number. Do you think the people so likely to be pleased with Florence, and Walter, as to relish another number of them at their present age?

Otherwise, Walter will be two or three and twenty, straightway. I wish you would think of this.[†1] . . . I am sure you are right about the christening. It shall be artfully and easily amended.[†2] . . . Eh?

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 OCTOBER 1846

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre. | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne. | Fifth October 1846.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have made one or two attempts, in the midst of my other occupations to note down (as you asked me) the heads of what I had previously written to you. But I found it so difficult to collect them, while my attention was loaded with all sorts of imaginary baggage, and I was so afraid of bewildering you by putting down twenty after-ideas that I have not yet mentioned to you, and leaving out twenty I had mentioned—that I thought it best not to try any more—feeling assured that your kindness and consideration would attribute my silence, just now, to the right cause.

I will take care as soon as I am well set down in Paris (I hope to be there, by the middle of next month) to make some careful enquiries on the essential particular to which you call my attention—which I can also make, I think, without much difficulty, when I come to London. I shall have the greatest satisfaction at the same time in putting you in communication with two or three gentlemen who I am sure will be most valuable, willing, and suggestive advisers. The clergyman of that Westminster Prison[†3] I think a very good man, and I k[now][†4] he has great experience of these objects. [I] have no doubt whatever of the feasib[ility] of finding such inmates of the Asylum in the beginning, as would afford a most interesting and worthy trial of such a work.

The locality you suggest is a central and good one. But you would require to have a place attached, for exercise. Have you thought of that? The cultivation of little gardens, if they be no bigger than graves, is a great resource and a great reward. It has always been found to be productive of good effects wherever it has been tried; and I earnestly hope you will be able to make it a part of your training.

When I know at what time I can come to London, I will write from Paris, and tell you beforehand. After that visit, I shall never be further away than Paris, and can constantly and frequently return, if I can be of service. I may mention that I saw in the Newspaper some weeks ago, an advertisement to the effect that a pamphlet descriptive of Captain Macconochie's[†1] plan: some modification of which, I am so strongly inclined to recommend for adoption: is published, either by Hatchard or Ridgway in Piccadilly. I think the latter. It may be bought for two or three shillings.[†2] It will certainly interest you if you will read it—I am sure of that—and we should then be able to talk it over on equal terms.

I am only half through my Christmas Book, for which I have a little notion that I should have been very glad indeed to have retained for a longer story, as it is necessarily very much contracted in its development in so small a space. I hear that the Dombey has been launched with great success. and was out of print on the first night.[†3]

Mrs. Dickens sends her kind remembrances. Charley has won a Geneva watch by speaking French in three months. I rashly pledged myself to make that desperate present in the event of his succeeding—and as he has succeeded, I mean to go over to Geneva with him in great state, and endow him with his prize in as solemn a manner as I can possibly confer it. I think of enclosing it in a pathetic epistle. He sends his love, and says he means to distinguish himself at King's College.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown are well, I hope. I don't wish Mrs. Brown would be ill again, but I wish she would do something, which would lead to her suggesting another character to me,[†4] as serviceable as Mrs. Gamp.

Ever believe me Dear Miss Coutts, Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 OCTOBER 1846]

Extract in F, V, vi, 431. Date: "five days" after 5 Oct according to Forster; because of the urgency of sending MS, probably posted the day before next.

I send you in twelve letters, counting this as one, the first two parts (thirty-five slips)[†5] of the Christmas book. I have two present anxieties respecting it. One to know that you have received it safely; and the second to know how it strikes you. Be sure you read the first and second parts together. . . . There seems to me to be interest in it, and a pretty idea; and it is unlike the others. . . . There will be some minor points for consideration: as, the necessity for some slight alterations in one or two of the Doctor's speeches in the first part;[†1] and whether it should be called "The Battle of Life. A Love Story"[†2]—to express both a love story in the common acceptation of the phrase, and also a story of love; with one or two other things of that sort. We can moot these by and by. I made a tremendous day's work of it yesterday and was horribly excited—so I am going to rush out, as fast as I can: being a little used up, and sick. . . . But never say die! I have been to the glass to look at my eye. Pretty bright!

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 OCTOBER 1846]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 477; V, v, 424-5; V, vi, 432-3, 430; V, v, 428-9; V, vi, 440. Date: first and third extracts 11 Oct according to Forster; second extract called by Forster "the very next letter" after a letter which he misdates (see To Forster, ?20 Sep), but more likely related to the second Dombey reading on 10 Oct; fourth extract probably same letter, since describes Talfourd's visit; fifth extract clearly soon after his return from Geneva; sixth, during period when most fully occupied with writing Battle and Dombey—i.e. before 17 Oct.

The Dombey success[†3] is BRILLIANT! I had put before me thirty thousand as the limit of the most extreme success, saying that if we should reach that, I should be more than satisfied and more than happy; you will judge how happy I am![†4] I read the second number here last night to the most prodigious and uproarious delight of the circle.[†5] I never saw or heard people laugh so. You will allow me to observe that my reading of the Major has merit.

I was thinking the other day that in these days of lecturings and readings, a great deal of money might possibly be made (if it were not infra dig) by one's having Readings of one's own books. It would be an odd thing. I think it would take immensely. What do you say? Will you step to Dean-street, and see how Miss Kelly's engagement-book (it must be an immense volume!) stands? Or shall I take the St. James's?

You will know, long before you get this, all about the revolution at Geneva.[†6] There were stories of plots against the Government when I was there, but I didn't believe them; for all sorts of lies are always afloat against the radicals, and wherever there is a consul from a Catholic Power the most monstrous fictions are in perpetual circulation against them: as in this very place, where the Sardinian consul was gravely whispering the other day that a society called the Homicides had been formed, whereof the president of the council of state, the O'Connell of Switzerland and a clever fellow, was a member; who were sworn on skulls and cross-bones to exterminate men of property, and so forth. There was a great stir here, on the day of the fight in Geneva. We heard the guns (they shook this house) all day; and seven hundred men marched out of this town of Lausanne to go and help the radical party—arriving at Geneva just after it was all over. There is no doubt they had received secret help from here; for a powder barrel, found by some of the Genevese populace with "Canton de Vaud" painted on it, was carried on a pole about the streets as a standard, to show that they were sympathized with by friends outside. It was a poor mean fight enough, I am told by Lord Vernon,[†1] who was present and who was with us last night. The Government was afraid; having no confidence whatever, I dare say, in its own soldiers; and the cannon were fired everywhere except at the opposite party, who (I mean the revolutionists) had barricaded a bridge with an omnibus only, and certainly in the beginning might have been turned with ease. The precision of the common men with the rifle was especially shown by a small party of five, who waited on the ramparts near one of the gates of the town, to turn a body of soldiery who were coming in to the Government assistance. They picked out every officer and struck him down instantly, the moment the party appeared; there were three or four of them; upon which the soldiers gravely turned round and walked off. I dare say there are not fifty men in this place who wouldn't click your card off a target a hundred and fifty yards away, at least. I have seen them, time after time, fire across a great ravine as wide as the ornamental ground in St. James's-park, and never miss the bull's-eye.

It is a horribly ungentlemanly thing to say here, though I do say it without the least reserve—but my sympathy is all with the radicals. I don't know any subject on which this indomitable people have so good a right to a strong feeling as Catholicity—if not as a religion, clearly as a means of social degradation. They know what it is. They live close to it. They have Italy beyond their mountains. They can compare the effect of the two systems at any time in their own valleys; and their dread of it, and their horror of the introduction of Catholic priests and emissaries into their towns, seems to me the most rational feeling in the world. Apart from this, you have no conception of the preposterous, insolent little aristocracy of Geneva: the most ridiculous caricature the fancy can suggest of what we know in England. I was talking to two famous gentlemen (very intelligent men) of that place, not long ago, who came over to invite me to a sort of reception there—which I declined.[†1] Really their talk about "the people" and "the masses," and the necessity they would shortly be under of shooting a few of them as an example for the rest, was a kind of monstrosity one might have heard at Genoa. The audacious insolence and contempt of the people by their newspapers, too, is quite absurd. It is difficult to believe that men of sense can be such donkeys politically. It was precisely such a state of things that brought about the change here. There was a most respectful petition presented on the Jesuit question, signed by its tens of thousands of small farmers; the regular peasants of the canton, all splendidly taught in public schools, and intellectually as well as physically a most remarkable body of labouring men. This document is treated by the gentlemanly party with the most sublime contempt, and the signatures are said to be the signatures of "the rabble." Upon which, each man of the rabble shoulders his rifle, and walks in upon a given day agreed upon among them to Lausanne; and the gentlemanly party walk out without striking a blow.

The Talfourds stayed two days, and I think they were very happy. He was in his best aspect; the manner so well known to us, not the less loveable for being laughable; and if you could have seen him going round and round the coach that brought them, as a preliminary to paying the voiturier to whom he couldn't speak, in a currency he didn't understand, you never would have forgotten it.[†2]

And now sir I will describe, modestly, tamely, literally, the visit to the small select circle which I promised[†3] should make your hair stand on end. In our hotel were Lady A, and Lady B, mother and daughter,[†4] who came to the Peschiere shortly before we left it, and who have a deep admiration for your humble servant the inimitable B. They are both very clever. Lady B, extremely well-informed in languages, living and dead; books, and gossip; very pretty; with two little children, and not yet five and twenty. Lady A, plump, fresh, and rosy; matronly, but full of spirits and good looks. Nothing would serve them but we must dine with them; and accordingly, on Friday at six, we went down to their room. I knew them to be rather odd. For instance, I have known Lady A, full dressed, walk alone through the streets of Genoa, the squalid Italian bye streets, to the Governor's soirée; and announce herself at the palace of state, by knocking at the door. I have also met Lady B, full dressed, without any cap or bonnet, walking a mile to the opera, with all sorts of jingling jewels about her, beside a sedan chair in which sat enthroned her mama. Consequently, I was not surprised at such little sparkles in the conversation (from the young lady) as "Oh God what a sermon we had here, last Sunday!" "And did you ever read such infernal trash as Mrs. Gore's?"[†1]—and the like. Still, but for Kate and Georgy (who were decidedly in the way, as we agreed afterwards), I should have thought it all very funny; and, as it was, I threw the ball back again, was mighty free and easy, made some rather broad jokes, and was highly applauded. "You smoke, don't you?" said the young lady, in a pause of this kind of conversation. "Yes," I said, "I generally take a cigar after dinner when I am alone." "I'll give you a good 'un," said she, "when we go up-stairs." Well, sir, in due course we went up-stairs, and there we were joined by an American lady residing in the same hotel, who looked like what we call in old England "a reg'lar Bunter"[†2]—fluffy face (rouged); considerable development of figure; one groggy eye; blue satin dress made low with short sleeves, and shoes of the same. Also a daughter; face likewise fluffy; figure likewise developed; dress likewise low, with short sleeves, and shoes of the same; and one eye not yet actually groggy, but going to be. American lady married at sixteen; daughter sixteen now, often mistaken for sisters, &c. &c. &c. When that was over, Lady B[†3] brought out a cigar box, and gave me a cigar, made of negrohead she said, which would quell an elephant in six whiffs. The box was full of cigarettes—good large ones, made of pretty strong tobacco; I always smoke them here, and used to smoke them at Genoa, and I knew them well. When I lighted my cigar, Lady B lighted hers, at mine; leaned against the mantlepiece, in conversation with me; put out her stomach, folded her arms, and with her pretty face cocked up sideways and her cigarette smoking away like a Manchester cotton mill, laughed, and talked, and smoked, in the most gentlemanly manner I ever beheld. Lady A immediately lighted her cigar; American lady immediately lighted hers; and in five minutes the room was a cloud of smoke, with us four in the centre pulling away bravely, while American lady related stories of her "Hookah" up-stairs, and described different kinds of pipes. But even this was not all. For presently two Frenchmen came in, with whom, and the American lady, Lady B sat down to whist. The Frenchmen smoked of course (they were really modest gentlemen, and seemed dismayed), and Lady B played for the next hour or two with a cigar continually in her mouth —never out of it. She certainly smoked six or eight. Lady A gave in soon—I think she only did it out of vanity. American lady had been smoking all the morning. I took no more; and Lady B and the Frenchmen had it all to themselves.

Conceive this in a great hotel, with not only their own servants, but half a dozen waiters coming constantly in and out! I showed no atom of surprise; but I never was so surprised, so ridiculously taken aback, in my life; for in all my experience of "ladies" of one kind and another, I never saw a woman—not a basket woman or a gipsy—smoke, before!

I will write to Landor as soon as I can possibly make time, but I really am so much at my desk perforce, and so full of work, whether I am there or elsewhere, between the Christmas book and Dombey, that it is the most difficult thing in the world for me to make up my mind to write a letter to anyone but you. I ought to have written to Macready.[†1] I wish you would tell him, with my love, how I am situated in respect of pen, ink, and paper. One of the Lausanne papers, treating of free trade, has been very copious lately in its mention of LORD GOBDEN. Fact; and I think it a good name.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 12 OCTOBER 1846

MS Berg Collection.

Rosemont, Lausanne | Monday Twelfth October 1846.

My Dear De la Rue

I have been at Geneva (left there immediately before the Revolution) and then found Serjeant Talfourd waiting for me here, whom I saw away to Bâsle. I am only just now in the receipt of your letter, and hasten to answer it, however briefly.

I think the best and plainest course will be for Madame to say nothing about us in her letter to Mrs. Thompson—taking everything for granted, and mentioning, as it were incidentally, that you are just then writing to me. It seems a course that will suit everything, and serve a whole world of chances.[†2]

Dombey and Son is a most immense success. There is every present reason to suppose that it will beat all the other books. I am just going to sit down to the last part of the Christmas Volume. My work has been very severe of late.

I hope to be in Paris about the middle of next month; and from thence I will somehow send you my aforesaid books, please God. Give my best love to Madame. I came back rather drearily from Vevay that night.[†1] We had a happy day, and will have many more, please Heaven, somewhere or other.

In great haste | Ever Affectionately Yours

CD

Remember me to Brown.[†2] I dined with Lady Walpole and Lady Pellew at Geneva the other day.

To C. R. LESLIE, 12 OCTOBER 1846

MS Mr Thomas L. Twidell. Address: C. R. Leslie Esquire R.A. | 12 Pineapple Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Rosemont, Lausanne, Switzerland | Twelfth October 1846.

My Dear Leslie—for call you 'Sir', who are closely related to Fielding, Smollet Sterne, Cervantes, Goldsmith, and others of that blood, I never will!

I am heartily obliged to you for your friendly letter in respect to the American publishers. I was previously aware that such an arrangement could be made. But on reviewing the whole system some three or four years ago, I came to the conclusion that it was so disgraceful and dishonest, that a man should not, for money, make himself a party to it.[[Missing reference]][†3] I therefore resolved that I never would treat with any Pirate whomsoever—would sell them no proof sheets, and so get by an evasion what the public honor of a country does not give me—and would leave my books to the general scramble.[†4] I have never departed from that resolution since, otherwise I should have done so in favor of Mr. Carey's house[†5] at Philadelphia, which is associated in my mind with some experience of their just and gentlemanly dealing.

I do not thank you the less for your kind remembrance.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister join me in cordial regards to Mrs. Leslie[†6] and all your family. And I am ever, believe me,

Faithfully Your friend | And admirer

CHARLES DICKENS

C. R. Leslie Esquire.

To T. J. THOMPSON, [?MID-OCTOBER 1846]*

MS Mrs Sowerby. Date: Handwriting suggests 1846; and see fn.

My Dear Thompson

Behold the document! I have reserved the crick[†7]—Heaven (and the Directors) forgive me for that same!

CD

To T. J. THOMPSON, 16 OCTOBER 1846

Text from A Dickens Friendship, ed. W[ilfrid] M[eynell], privately printed, 1931, p. 55.

Rosemont, Sixteenth October, 1846

My dear Thompson,

I do not think—and I fear I have reason for that misgiving—that I shall be able to finish my little book until it is late, or going on for late, tomorrow night. I should be a Beast if, for any social purposes, I left it now until it was done; and I am therefore reluctantly obliged to propose that we dine together here on Sunday[†1] instead of tomorrow, when we will broach some of the Rhine Wine to its success, and wreathe the bowl, etc. etc.

But what I particularly want you to do, is to lay violent hands on Mr. Weller,[†2] and keep him until Sunday night at all events. If he goes away by the Mails, then he cannot go under more favourable circumstances. Firstly, because the Rhine Wine will give him an immensely improved taste for the Rhine water; and secondly because it will superinduce a disposition to sleep in the coach. We might further strengthen that, by walking in the day, which I should be delighted to do, if you're agreeable.

I make no apologies, for you know my strait.

Ever faithfully,

C.D.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 OCTOBER 1846]

Extract in F, v, vi, 431. Date: 18 Oct according to Forster.

Sending the third and final part of The Battle of Life. I really do not know what this story is worth. I am so floored: wanting sleep, and never having had my head free from it for this month past. I think there are some places in this last part which I may bring better together in the proof, and where a touch or two may be of service; particularly in the scene between Craggs[†3] and Michael Warden, where, as it stands, the interest seems anticipated.[†4] But I shall have the benefit of your suggestions, and my own then cooler head,

I hope; and I will be very careful with the proofs, and keep them by me as long as I can. . . . Mr. Britain must have another Christian name, then?[†5] "Aunt Martha" is the Sally of whom the Doctor speaks in the first part. Martha is a better name.[†1] What do you think of the concluding paragraph? Would you leave it for happiness' sake? It is merely experimental.[†2] . . . I am flying to Geneva to-morrow morning.

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 OCTOBER 1846]

Extracts in F, v, iii, 431-2; 433-4. Date: 20 Oct according to Forster. From Geneva.

We came here yesterday, and we shall probably remain until Katey's birthday, which is next Thursday week. I shall fall to work on number three of Dombey as soon as I can. At present I am the worse for wear, but nothing like as much so as I expected to be on Sunday last. I had not been able to sleep for some time, and had been hammering away, morning, noon, and night. A bottle of hock on Monday,[†3] when Elliotson dined with us (he went away homeward yesterday morning), did me a world of good; the change comes in the very nick of time; and I feel in Dombeian spirits already. . . . But I have still rather a damaged head, aching a good deal occasionally, as it is doing now, though I have not been cupped—yet. . . . I dreamed all last week that the Battle of Life was a series of chambers impossible to be got to rights or got out of, through which I wandered drearily all night. On Saturday night I don't think I slept an hour. I was perpetually roaming through the story, and endeavouring to dove-tail the revolution here into the plot. The mental distress, quite horrible.

You never would suppose from the look of this town that there had been anything revolutionary going on. Over the window of my old bedroom there is a great hole made by a cannon-ball in the house-front; and two of the bridges are under repair. But these are small tokens which anything else might have brought about as well. The people are all at work. The little streets are rife with every sight and sound of industry; the place is as quiet by ten o'clock as Lincoln's-inn-fields; and the only outward and visible sign of public interest in political events is a little group at every street corner, reading a public announcement from the new Government of the forthcoming election of state-officers, in which the people are reminded of their importance as a republican institution, and desired to bear in mind their dignity in all their proceedings. Nothing very violent or bad could go on with a community so well educated as this. It is the best antidote to American experiences, conceivable. As to the nonsense "the gentlemanly interest" talk about, their opposition to property and so forth, there never was such mortal absurdity. One of the principal leaders[†4] in the late movement has a stock of watches and jewellery here of immense value—and had, during the disturbance—perfectly unprotected. James Fahzey[†5] has a rich house and a valuable collection of pictures; and, I will be bound to say, twice as much to lose as half the conservative declaimers put together. This house, the liberal one, is one of the most richly furnished and luxurious hotels on the Continent.[†1] And if I were a Swiss with a hundred thousand pounds, I would be as steady against the Catholic cantons and the propagation of Jesuitism as any radical among 'em: believing the dissemination of Catholicity to be the most horrible means of political and social degradation left in the world. Which these people, thoroughly well educated, know perfectly. . . . The boys of Geneva were very useful in bringing materials for the construction of the barricades on the bridges; and the enclosed song[†2] may amuse you. They sing it to a tune that dates from the great French revolution—a very good one.

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 OCTOBER 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Angleterre. Affranchie. | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Geneva. October Twenty First 1846.

My Dear Beard. Having run over here for a day or two, to escape from a headache consequent upon the completion of the Christmas Book, I take up my pen (I employ that phrase as a new one) to report myself alive and hearty. Also to report everybody else alive and hearty. Also to report that I mean to strike my encampment at Lausanne about the tenth or fifteenth of next month, and go to Paris, where I shall take a house, and where, if you will make holiday, and come and unbend that bow which is kept strung in Shoe Lane, you shall have your old welcome and everything else you like. This is a thing that must be done, so turn it over in your mind before I run over to England in December.

Dombey is a prodigious success. Enthusiastic bulletins reach me daily. I hope you get yours as of old, and like it.

There are two men standing under the balcony of the hotel in which I am writing, who are really good specimens, and have amused me mightily. An immense Frenchman, with a face like a bright velvet pincushion—and a very little Englishman, whose head comes up to about the middle of the Frenchman's waistcoat. They are travelling together. I saw them at Mont Blanc, months ago. The Englishman can't speak a word of French, but the Frenchman can speak a very little English, with which he helps the Englishman out of abysses and ravines of difficulty. The Englishman instead of being obliged by this, condescends, good humouredly, to correct the Frenchman's pronunciation—patronizes him—would pat him on the head, if he could reach so high—and screeches at his mistakes.—There he is now, staggering over the stones in his little boots, and falling up against a watchmaker's window, in perfect convulsions of joy, because the beaming Giant, without whom he couldn't get a single necessary of life, has made some mistake in the English language! I never saw such a fellow. The last time I met them was at the other end of the Lake by Chillon, disembarking from the steamer. It is done in little boats: the water being shallow, close in shore: and in the confusion, the Giant had got into one boat, and the dwarf in another. A hairy sailor on board the steamer found the Dwarf's great coat on deck, and gave a great roar to him; upon which the Dwarf, standing up in the boat, cried out (in English) "Put it down. Keep it. I shall be back in an hour." The hairy sailor of course not understanding one word of this, roared again and shook the coat in the air. "Oh you damned fool!" said the dwarf (still in English) "Oh you precious jackass! Put it down, will you?" The Giant, perceiving from the other boat what was the matter, cried out to the hairy sailor what it was necessary for him to know, and then called out to the Dwarf, "I have tell him to cap it." I thought the dwarf would have died with delight. "Oh my God!" he said to himself, "you're a nice man! Tell him to cap it, have you? Yes yes. Ha ha ha!—Cap it, indeed! Oh Lord!"—and never left off chuckling 'till he landed.

I don't know what demon brought them under the window, but I was going to tell you that there are no signs of the late revolution here, except a few excoriated house-fronts, knocked about by cannon-balls—and that everything is as busy and peaceful as before. I was going to be rather luminous too about the Daily News[†1]—whose advertisement list don't seem to me to be brilliant—and to say that I'm afraid Dilke is hardly the man for Baldwin. But as I haven't room, and as my main object after all was only to say how heartily I am your old friend wherever I am, I will spare you the rest. Kate and Georgy (and Toby: who goes to school at a German's at Lausanne) send their best regards to yourself and all your house. And I am Ever My Dear Beard

Most Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Pray remember me, particularly, to Baldwin. I was sorry to see he had had domestic sorrow.[†2]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 21 OCTOBER 1846

Text from N, I, 801-2.

Geneva | Wednesday, October Twenty-First 1846

My Dear Talfourd,

I am very glad to hear that you all arrived at home safely, and that Frank received the great coat which the Brave Courier sent in quest of him.

The appointment of the new Judge I had seen in the newspapers. I dare say I felt very much as you did, on the subject—indignant and disappointed at first, but very soon reconciled to the thing. I had had very little doubt in my own mind, I confess, that if the Solicitor General were not the Judge, you would be,—as everybody knows you had a first claim to that distinction at the hands of the present Government,—and therefore I had an uncomfortable feeling when I saw Vaughan Richards' name.[†1]

But my sources of consolation are these.—In the first place I sincerely believe you are happier at the Bar, in your high position there, than you would be on the Bench. Hoisted up to that small elevation, you would be lifted out of the reach of a vast number of means of daily pleasure and variety in which you have as keen an interest as any man alive, and which, to one of your generous tastes and sympathies, are worth all the ermine that ever grew since the deluge. Secondly (and more selfishly) I feel that the world of letters and fancy cannot afford to lose you: and that, however you might remain with it, and be true to it, as I know you would, even if you were a Judge, you are more its property as you are, and can show your feeling for it in a thousand little ways which would then be closed to you. It is a part of your graceful and enviable position at present that no Government going, gone, or to come, could enlarge its circle of various usefulness; but it might easily contract it, and I do not like to think that my small corner of it might be cramped—for literature wants such men as you, sorely. That is the way I make the best of the business.

There has been a revolution here, since you were at Lausanne, and a few houses have been knocked about by cannon balls. With that exception everything is as it was, and in perfect peace and order. Snow has fallen on the hills about Lausanne: and their white tops are a great improvement to the beauty of the scene.

Kate and her sister ask me to send all sorts of remembrances and loves to Mrs. Talfourd and Mary (and to Miss Ely too) in which I join as heartily as an honest gentleman may. I am delighted by all the news I hear of Dombey of course, and am resting now, for a few days, after finishing the Christmas Book. Toby is coming over here on Friday, to be presented with a watch for his quick picking-up of French.

Ever believe me | My dear Talfourd | Most affectionately Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†1] 21 OCTOBER 1846

Extract in Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912.

Rosemont, Lausanne, October 21st, 1846.

In reference to the conditions on which I should be disposed to sanction your republication of my new book Dealings with the Firm of Dombey and Son, I am quite at a loss how to answer your question, as I really do not know what it would be fair and reasonable to require from you. But I have every reason to rely upon your honourable intentions; and if you will do me the favour to state your own proposal, I have little doubt that I shall be willing to assent to it.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 24 OCTOBER 1846

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Angleterre. Affranchie. | Douglas Jerrold Esquire | West Lodge | Putney Heath | near | London.

Geneva. Saturday October Twenty Fourth 1846.

My Dear Jerrold. This day week, I finished my little Christmas Book (writing, towards the close, the exact words of a passage in your affectionate letter, received this morning: to wit "after all, life has something serious in it"),[†2] and ran over here, for a week's rest. I cannot tell you how much true gratification I have had in your most hearty letter.[†3] Forster told me that the same spirit breathed through a notice of Dombey in your paper:[†4] and I have been saying since to Kate and Georgina that there is no such good way of testing the worth of a literary friendship as by comparing its influence on one's mind, with any that literary animosity can produce. Mr. Warren will throw me into a violent fit of anger for the moment, it is true—but his acts and deeds pass into the death of all bad things next day, and rot out of my memory.[†5] Whereas a generous sympathy like yours, is ever present to me, ever fresh and new to me: always stimulating, cheerful, and delightful. The pain of unjust malice is lost in an hour. The pleasure of a generous friendship is the steadiest joy in the world. What a glorious and comfortable thing that is to think of!

— IV - 643 —

No, I don't get the paper regularly.[†1] To the best of my recollection I have not had more than three numbers—certainly not more than four. But I knew how busy you must be, and had no expectation of hearing from you, until I wrote from Paris (as I intended doing) and implored you to come and make merry with us there. I am truly pleased to receive your good account of that enterprize.[†2] I feel all you say upon the subject of the literary man in his old age,[†3] and know the incalculable benefit of such a resource. You can hardly fail to realize an independent property from such success; and I congratulate you upon it, with all my heart and soul. Two numbers of the Barber's Chair[†4] have reached me. It is a capital idea, and capable of the best and readiest adaptation to things as they arise. The number that ought to have come with the letter I am acknowledging, is brilliantly replaced by—The Spectator!!![†5] There is a printed slip inside, from the Post Office, saying that the envelopes of a great many newspapers, being badly put on, have come off that evening: and they hope the Paper they forward me, may prove to be the right one, but don't much expect it. Of all the papers going, they couldn't have picked me out a more unlikely one.

Anent the Comic History of England and similar comicalities (Snobs in general, included) I feel exactly as you do.[†6] Their effect upon me is very disagreeable. Such joking is like the sorrow of an undertaker's mute, reversed—and is applied to serious things with the like propriety and force. I have not seen A'Beckett's book,[†7] however. Did you see an allusion to "discontented" writers in an advertisement of Mr. Albert Smith's, fashioned like an act of Parliament? There was an impertinence in it that rather stirred my bile.[†8] If it has not met your eye, I wish you'd look at it. It was about Christopher Tadpole—some fortnight ago.

— IV - 644 —

The Manchester Soirée[†1] has not come off, I suppose? I saw, in Galignani, that you were going. I wish I were going with you.—I have often thought, believe me, of your domestic troubles, and more than once asked Forster about your daughter.[†2] It is a sad story my dear Jerrold, God knows, but that which is a part of your regret, makes it lighter to her. As long as she can like him, she will feel it gently. Your boy at Baring's[†3] does well, I hope? And the elder,[†4] how does he go on! My father told me he had left the Daily News. How does that go on, I wonder! What B and He call the "adds", look shy, I fear. And Dilke is rather weighty, generally speaking.

Paris is good, both in the Spring and in the winter. So come, first, at Christmas, and let us have a few jolly holidays together, at what Mr. Rowland, of Hatton Garden, calls "that festive season of the year", when the human hair is peculiarly liable to come out of curl, unless &c.[†5] I hope to reach there, bag and baggage, by the 20th. of next month. As soon as I am lodged, I will write to you. Do arrange to run over at Christmas time, and let us be as English and as merry as we can. Its nothing of a journey, and you shall write "o'mornings", as they say in Modern Elizabethan, as much as you like. Perhaps Forster (having finished with Madame Tussaud)[†6] will come at the same time. I'll stir him up. By the bye, I have stirred up my French, and have come out rather strong.

The Newspapers seem to know as much about Switzerland as about the Esquimaux Country. I should like to shew you the people as they are here, or in the Canton de Vaud—their wonderful education[†7]—splendid schools—comfortable homes—great intelligence—and noble independence of character. It is the fashion among the English to decry them, because they are not servile. I can only say that if the first quarter of a century of the best general Education would rear such a peasantry in Devonshire as exists about here, or about Lausanne, ('bating their disposition towards drunkenness) it would do what I can hardly hope in my most sanguine moods it will effect in four times that period. The revolution here just now (which has my cordial sympathy) was conducted with the most gallant, true, and Christian spirit. The conquering party, moderate in the first transports of triumph—forbearing—and forgiving. I swear to you that some of the appeals to the Citizens of both parties, posted by the new Government (the people's) on the walls, and sticking there now, almost drew the tears into my eyes as I read them; they are so truly generous, and so exalted in their tone—so far above the miserable strife of politics, and so devoted to the General Happiness and Welfare.

Kate and Georgy send their best regards. The latter small person was making me weak with laughter only last night, by imitating Mrs. Bradbury, in a manner quite inconceivable. We often talk of you, and project Parisian entertainments. There are only a few English (some dozen or so) at Lausanne, but very agreeable and well-informed people. I have had great success again in Magnetism—this time with a male subject.[†1] Elliotson, who has been with us for a week or so, holds my magnetic powers in great veneration; and I really think they are, by some conjunction of chances, strong.

Let them, or something else, hold you to me by the heart. Ever My Dear Jerrold—Affectionately Your friend CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 24 OCTOBER 1846†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre Affranchie. | W. C. Macready Esquire | 5 Clarence Terrace | Regents Park | London.

Geneva. Saturday October Twenty Fourth 1846.

My Dear Macready.

The welcome sight of your handwriting, moves me, (though I have nothing to say) to shew you mine. And if I could recollect the passage in Virginius, I would paraphrase it, and say "Does it seem to tremble boy? Is it a loving autograph? Does it beam with friendship and affection?"—all of which I say, as I write, with—oh Heaven!—such a splendid imitation of you—and finally give you one of those grasps and shakes with which I have seen you make the young Icilius stagger again.[†2]

Here I am, running away from a bad head ache, as Tristram Shandy ran away from Death,[†1] and lodging for a week in the Hotel de l'Ecu de Geneve, wherein there is a large mirror shattered by a Cannon-Ball in the late Revolution. A revolution, whatever its merits, achieved by free spirits, nobly generous and moderate, even in the first transports of victory—elevated by a splendid popular Education—and bent on Freedom from all tyrants, whether their crowns be shaven or golden. The Newspapers may tell you what they please. I believe there is no country on earth but Switzerland, in which a violent change could have been effected in the Christian spirit shewn in this place, or in the same proud, independent, gallant style. Not one halfpennyworth of property was lost, stolen, or strayed. Not one atom of party malice survived the smoke of the last gun. Nothing is expressed in the Government Addresses to the Citizens, but a regard for the general happiness, and injunctions to forget all animosities—which they are practically obeying at every turn, though the late Government (of whose spirit I had some little previous knowledge) did load the guns with such material as should occasion gangrene in the wounds, and though the wounded do die, consequently, every day, in the hospital, of sores that in themselves were nothing.

You a mountaineer! You examine (I have seen you do it) the point of your young son's baton de Montagne before he went up into the snow![†2] And you talk of coming to Lausanne in March! Why, Lord love your heart, William Tell, times are changed since you lived at Altorf. There is not a Mountain pass, open, until June. The snow is closing in on all the panorama already. I was at the Great St. Bernard two months ago, and it was bitter cold and frosty then. Do you think I would let you hazard your life by going up any pass worth seeing, in bleak March? Never shall it be said that Dickens sacrificed his friend upon the altar of his hospitality! Onward! To Paris! [Cue for Band. Dickens points off with truncheon 1st Entrance. P.S. Page delivers gauntlets, on one knee. Dickens puts 'em on, and gradually falls into a fit of musing. Mrs. Dickens lays her hand upon his shoulder. Business. Procession. Curtain.][†3]

[†a]I had a letter from Jerrold this morning, in which he tells me that Madame Tussaud[†4] intends to do Forster next, as Kitely (in consequence of the success that has attended you as Coriolanus) and that he is to be put next Burke, in the Chamber of Horrors. Tell Mrs. Macready with my love. I know it will make her laugh.[†a]

It is a great pleasure to me, my Dear Macready, to hear from yourself, as I had previously heard from Forster, that you are so well pleased with Dombey.

Which is evidently a great success, and a great hit, thank God! I felt that Mrs. Brown[†1] was strong, but I was not at all afraid of giving as heavy a blow as I could to a piece of hot iron that lay ready at my hand. For that is my principle always—and I hope to come down with some heavier sledge-hammers than that.

I know the Lady Walpole[†2] of whom you write. Smythe[†3] left here, only yesterday. The story may arise only in her manner, which is extraordinarily free and careless. He was visiting her here, when I was here last—three weeks ago. I knew her in Italy. It is not her fault, if Scandal ever leaves her alone, for such a Braver of all conventionalities never wore petticoats. But I should be sorry to hear there was anything guilty in her conduct. She is very clever—really learned —very pretty—much neglected by her husband—and only four and twenty years of age.

†b You may well be ashamed of your eight children—I don't wonder at your sometimes talking of flight to America. I have been very successful again, in the Animal Magnetic way, at Lausanne. A married English Lady there, was asking me the other night if I thought that influence might be exerted, in time, for lessening the pain which ladies suffer, who love their Lords. I implored her, for Heaven's sake, never to hint at the possibility of that operation being made more easy, or I didn't know what I myself,†4 but mainly some of my friends (I meant you and Mrs. Macready) might come to! And my opinion is—now—at twelve o'Clock—in the grave and sober light of noon—that you'll make that eight, eighteen, before you're done.

Well! Heaven preserve us from evil influences!†b Kate and Georgy send their best loves to Mrs. and Miss Macready, and all your house. †c And as to me, I'll forgive you anything—short of eight and twenty—and remain through all†c your Most affectionate friend CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26-29 OCTOBER 1846]

Extracts in F, v, vi, 434; VI, ii, 478; v, vi, 434-5, 436-7, 437, 435; v, v, 425. Date: first two extracts 26 Oct according to Forster; third extract, letter resumed "two days later"; fourth extract 28 Oct, and fifth and sixth extracts 29 Oct according to Forster; last extract probably same letter, as CD comments on Forster's reply to his letter of ?11 Oct, which he would find on return to Lausanne. From Geneva (26, 28 Oct) and Lausanne (29 Oct).

In reference to that Daily News revolution,†5 I have been walking and wandering all day through a perfect Miss Burney's Vauxhall†1 of conjectural dark walks. Heaven send you enlighten me fully on Wednesday, or number three will suffer!

A week of perfect idleness has brought me round again—idleness so rusting and devouring, so complete and unbroken, that I am quite glad to write the heading of the first chapter of number three to-day. I shall be slow at first, I fear, in consequence of that change of the plan. But I allow myself nearly three weeks†2 for the number; designing, at present, to start for Paris on the 16th of November. Full particulars in future bills. Just going to bed. I think I can make a good effect, on the after story, of the feeling created by the additional number before Paul's death.

Beginning his journey back to Lausanne: I am in a great state of excitement on account of your intelligence, and desperately anxious to know all about it. I shall be put out to an unspeakable extent if I don't find your letter awaiting me. God knows there has been small comfort for either of us in the D.N.'s nine months.

I wonder whether you foresaw the end of the Christmas book! There are two or three places in which I can make it prettier, I think, by slight alterations. . . . I trust to Heaven you may like it. What an affecting story I could have made of it in one octavo volume. Oh to think of the printers transforming my kindly cynical old father into Doctor Taddler!†3

On returning to Rosemont: Do you think it worth while, in the illustrations, to throw the period back at all for the sake of anything good in the costume? The story may have happened at any time within a hundred years. Is it worth having coats and gowns of dear old Goldsmith's day? or thereabouts?[†4] I really don't know what to say. The probability is, if it has not occurred to you or to the artists, that it is hardly worth considering; but I ease myself of it by throwing it out to you. It may be already too late, or you may see reason to think it best to "stick to the last" (I feel it necessary to italicize the joke), and abide by the ladies' and gentlemen's spring and winter fashions of this time. Whatever you think best, in this as in all other things, is best, I am sure. . . . I would go, in the illustrations, for "beauty" as much as possible; and I should like each part to have a general illustration to it at the beginning, shadowing out its drift and bearing:[†5] much as Browne goes at that kind of thing on Dombey covers. I don't think I should fetter your discretion in the matter farther. The better it is illustrated, the better I shall be pleased of course.

I certainly am very glad of the result of the Daily News business, though my gladness is dashed with melancholy to think that you should have toiled there so long, to so little purpose. I escaped more easily. However, it is all past now. . . . As to the undoubted necessity of the course you took, I have not a grain of question in my mind.[†1] That, being what you are, you had only one course to take and have taken it, I no more doubt than that the Old Bailey is not Westminster Abbey. In the utmost sum at which you value yourself, you were bound to leave; and now you have left, you will come to Paris, and there, and at home again, we'll have, please God, the old kind of evenings and the old life again, as it used to be before those daily nooses caught us by the legs and sometimes tripped us up. Make a vow (as I have done) never to go down that court with the little news-shop at the corner, any more,[†2] and let us swear by Jack Straw as in the ancient times. . . . I am beginning to get over my sorrow for your nights up aloft in Whitefriars, and to feel nothing but happiness in the contemplation of your enfranchisement. God bless you!

Continuing his joke about public readings: I don't think you have exercised your usual judgment in taking Covent-garden for me. I doubt it is too large for my purpose. However, I shall stand by whatever you propose to the proprietors.

To JOHN FORSTER, [31 OCTOBER 1846]

Extracts in F, v, vi, 437-8; VI, ii, 478. Date: first extract 31 Oct, and second "five . . . days" after 26 Oct according to Forster.

I only write to say that it is of no use my writing at length, until I have heard from you; and that I will wait until I shall have read your promised communication (as my father would call it) to-morrow. I have glanced over the proofs of the last part and really don't wonder, some of the most extravagant mistakes occurring in Clemency's account to Warden,[†1] that the marriage of Grace and Alfred should seem rather unsatisfactory to you. Whatever is done about that must be done with the lightest hand, for the reader MUST take something for granted; but I think it next to impossible, without dreadful injury to the effect, to introduce a scene between Marion and Michael. The introduction must be in the scene between the sisters, and must be put, mainly, into the mouth of Grace.[†2] Rely upon it there is no other way, in keeping with the spirit of the tale. With this amendment, and a touch here and there in the last part (I know exactly where they will come best), I think it may be pretty and affecting, and comfortable too. . . .

I am at work at Dombey with good speed, thank God.[†3] All well here. Country stupendously beautiful. Mountains covered with snow. Rich crisp weather. But he found the illustrations in No. 11[†4] so dreadfully bad that they made him curl his legs up.

November

To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER-NOVEMBER 1846]

Extract in F, IV, iii, 322. Date: "from Switzerland" according to Forster; and probably after publication of Dombey No. 1 (see fn).

My feeling about the —— is the feeling common, I suppose, to three fourths of the reflecting part of the community in our happiest of all possible countries; and that is, that it is better to suffer a great wrong than to have recourse to the much greater wrong of the law.[†1] I shall not easily forget the expense, and anxiety, and horrible injustice of the Carol case, wherein, in asserting the plainest right on earth, I was really treated as if I were the robber instead of the robbed. Upon the whole, I certainly would much rather NOT proceed. What do you think of sending in a grave protest against what has been done in this case, on account of the immense amount of piracy to which I am daily exposed, and because I have been already met in the Court of Chancery with the legal doctrine that silence under such wrongs barred my remedy: to which Talfourd's written opinion might be appended as proof that we stopped under no discouragement. It is useless to affect that I don't know I have a morbid susceptibility of exasperation, to which the meanness and badness of the law in such a matter would be stinging in the last degree. And I know of nothing that could come, even of a successful action, which would be worth the mental trouble and disturbance it would cost.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER-NOVEMBER 1846]

Extract in F, v, iv, 418. Date: Reference to snow suggests Oct-Nov.

There are two old ladies (English) living here who may serve me for a few lines of gossip—as I have intended they should, over and over again, but I have always forgotten it. There were originally four old ladies, sisters, but two of them have faded away in the course of eighteen years, and withered by the side of John Kemble[†2] in the cemetery. They are very little, and very skinny; and each of them wears a row of false curls, like little rolling-pins, so low upon her brow, that there is no forehead; nothing above the eyebrows but a deep horizontal wrinkle, and then the curls. They live upon some small annuity. For thirteen years they have wanted very much to move to Italy, as the eldest old lady says the climate of this part of Switzerland doesn't agree with her, and preys upon her spirits; but they have never been able to go, because of the difficulty of moving "the books." This tremendous library belonged once upon a time to the father of these old ladies, and comprises about fifty volumes.[†3] I have never been able to see what they are, because one of the old ladies always sits before them; but they look, outside like very old backgammon-boards. The two deceased sisters died in the firm persuasion that this precious property could never be got over the Simplon without some gigantic effort to which the united family was unequal. The two remaining sisters live, and will die also, in the same belief. I met the eldest (evidently drooping) yesterday, and recommended her to try Genoa. She looked shrewdly at the snow that closes up the mountain prospect just now, and said that when the spring was quite set in, and the avalanches were down, and the passes well open, she would certainly try that place, if they could devise any plan, in the course of the winter, for moving "the books." The whole library will be sold by auction here, when they are both dead, for about a napoleon; and some young woman will carry it home in two journeys with a basket.

To T. J. THOMPSON, [3 NOVEMBER 1846]

MS Mrs Sowerby. Date: clearly Tues 3 Nov, the day of Elizabeth Thompson's birth.

Rosemont. | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Thompson.

All kinds of hearty and cordial congratulations on the event.[†1] We are all delighted that it is, at last, well over. There is an uncertainty attendant on Angelic Strangers (as Miss Tox says)[†2] which it is a great relief to have so happily disposed of.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, v, vi, 438; vi, ii, 478; 479. Date: first and third extracts 4 Nov according to Forster; second extract "four days" after 31 Oct.

I shall hope to touch upon the Christmas book as soon as I get your opinion. I wouldn't do it without. I am delighted to hear of noble old Stanny.[†3] Give my love to him, and tell him I think of turning Catholic. It strikes me (it may have struck you perhaps) that another good place for introducing a few lines of dialogue, is at the beginning of the scene between Grace and her husband, where he speaks about the messenger at the gate.[†4]

Sending the first chapter[†1] of No. III: The best subject for Browne will be at Mrs. Pipchin's; and if he liked to do a quiet odd thing, Paul, Mrs. Pipchin, and the Cat, by the fire, would be very good for the story. I earnestly hope he will think it worth a little extra care. The second subject,[†2] in case he shouldn't take a second from that same chapter, I will shortly describe as soon as I have it clearly (to-morrow or next day), and send it to you by post.

I hope to finish the number by next Tuesday or Wednesday.[†3] It is hard writing under these bird-of-passage circumstances, but I have no reason to complain, God knows, having come to no knot yet. . . . I hope you will like Mrs. Pipchin's establishment. It is from the life, and I was there—I don't suppose I was eight years old; but I remember it all as well, and certainly understood it as well, as I do now.[†4] We should be devilish sharp in what we do to children. I thought of that passage in my small life, at Geneva. [†a]Shall I leave you my life in MS. when I die?[†5] There are some things in it that would touch you very much, and that might go on the same shelf with the first volume of Holcroft's.[†a†6]

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, vi, 441; 438-9. Date: 7 Nov according to Forster.

He was in the agonies of the last chapter of Dombey No. III.

On the Battle of Life: Before I reply to your questions I wish to remark generally of the third part that all the passion that can be got into it, through my interpretation at all events, is there. I know that, by what it cost me; and I take it to be, as a question of art and interest, in the very nature of the story that it should move at a swift pace after the sisters are in each other's arms again.[†1] Anything after that would drag like lead, and must. . . . Now for your questions. I don't think any little scene with Marion and anybody can prepare the way for the last paragraph of the tale: I don't think anything but a printer's line can go between it and Warden's speech.[†2] A less period than ten years? Yes. I see no objection to six.[†3] I have no doubt you are right. Any word from Alfred in his misery? Impossible: you might as well try to speak to somebody in an express train. The preparation for his change is in the first part, and he kneels down beside her in that return scene. He is left alone with her, as it were, in the world. I am quite confident it is wholly impossible for me to alter that.[†4] . . . BUT (keep your eye on me) when Marion went away, she left a letter for Grace in which she charged her to encourage the love that Alfred would conceive for her, and FOREWARNED her that years would pass before they met again, &c. &c. This coming out in the scene between the sisters, and something like it being expressed in the opening of the little scene between Grace and her husband before the messenger at the gate, will make (I hope) a prodigious difference;[†5] and I will try to put in something with Aunt Martha and the Doctor which shall carry the tale back more distincty and unmistakeably to the battle-ground. I hope to make these alterations[†6] next week, and to send the third part back to you before I leave here. If you think it can still be improved after that, say so to me in Paris and I will go at it again. I wouldn't have it limp, if it can fly. I say nothing to you of a great deal of this being already expressed in the sentiment of the beginning, because your delicate perception knows all that already. Observe for the artists. Grace will now only have one child—little Marion.[†1] . . . . (At night, on same day) . . . You recollect that I asked you to read it all together, for I knew that I was working for that? But I have no doubt of your doubts, and will do what I have said. . . . I had thought of marking the time[†2] in the little story, and will do so. . . . Think, once more, of the period between the second and third parts. I will do the same.

To WILLIAM HALDIMAND, [8 NOVEMBER 1846]*

MS Bibliothèque Cantonale et Universitaire, Lausanne. Date: clearly the Sunday before returning the proofs of Battle: see To Forster, ?13 Nov.

Rosemont. | Sunday Night

My Dear Haldimand.

Here you have (in an odiously loose and erratic form—"slips", these things which look like tailor's measures, are called technically) the two first parts of the most private and confidential of stories. I am going over the third, with a view to some little emendation. It will be ready for you, I hope, when you are ready for it.

You will recognize a word or two, and a sentiment or two, in the first part (I shouldn't wonder) which have a flavor of Lausanne and a certain dinner party there.

Ever Yours Cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

William Haldimand Esquire.

To M. DOR, 12 NOVEMBER 1846*

MS Bibliothèque Publique et Universitaire, Geneva. Address: À Monsieur: | Monsr. D'Or.

Rosemont. Thursday Morning | Twelfth November 1846.

Dear Sir

I am very glad to hear that you are so kind as to purpose going to the prison tomorrow. As I intend taking Mr. Thompson to the Blind Asylum[†3] first, I will appoint half past One, if convenient to you, for meeting—say at the English Library.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

à Monsieur | Monr. D'Or.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, vi, 439, 441, 440-1. Date: first extract 13 Nov according to Forster; second extract from "his last letter but one"; third extract near the time of his departure, therefore probably same letter.

Returning the proofs of the Battle of Life: I hope you will think the third part (when you read it in type with these amendments) very much improved. I think it so[†1]. If there should still be anything wanting, in your opinion, pray suggest it to me in Paris. I am bent on having it right, if I can. . . . If in going over the proofs you find the tendency to blank verse[†2] (I cannot help it, when I am very much in earnest) too strong, knock out a word's brains here and there.

We have had some tremendous hurricanes at Lausanne. It is an extraordinary place now for wind, being peculiarly situated among mountains—between the Jura, and the Simplon, St. Gothard, St. Bernard, and Mont Blanc ranges; and at night you would swear (lying in bed) you were at sea. You cannot imagine wind blowing so, over earth. It is very fine to hear. The weather generally, however, has been excellent. There is snow on the tops of nearly all the hills, but none has fallen in the valley. On a bright day, it is quite hot between eleven and half past two. The nights and mornings are cold. For the last two or three days, it has been thick weather; and I can see no more of Mont Blanc from where I am writing now than if I were in Devonshire-terrace, though last week it bounded all the Lausanne walks. I would give a great deal that you could take a walk with me about Lausanne on a clear cold day. It is impossible to imagine anything more noble and beautiful than the scene; and the autumn colours in the foliage are more brilliant and vivid now than any description could convey to you. I took Elliotson, when he was with us, up to a ravine I had found out in the hills eight hundred or a thousand feet deep! Its steep sides dyed bright yellow, and deep red, by the changing leaves; a sounding torrent roaring down below; the lake of Geneva lying at its foot; one enormous mass and chaos of trees at its upper end; and mountain piled on mountain in the distance, up into the sky! He really was struck silent by its majesty and splendour.

He now, in a less romantic and more homely contemplation of the picture, began to think of the advantages of Paris. I have no doubt that constant change, too, is indispensable to me when I am at work: and at times something more than a doubt will force itself upon me whether there is not something in a Swiss valley that disagrees with me. Certainly, whenever I live in Switzerland again, it shall be on the hill-top. Something of the goître and crétin influence seems to settle on my spirits sometimes, on the lower ground. How sorry, ah yes! how sorry I shall be to leave the little society nevertheless. We have been thoroughly good-humoured and agreeable together, and I'll always give a hurrah for the Swiss and Switzerland.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 13 NOVEMBER 1846*

MS Mrs Sowerby. Address: T. J. Thompson Esquire | Clermont.

Rosemont. | Friday Night 13th. Novr. 1846.

My Dear Thompson

I am very sorry to say that we are already engaged (to dine with Haldimand) on Sunday[†1]—but if tomorrow would suit you equally well, we should be delighted.

It is so possible that your domestic arrangements might not be available (under the circumstances) for this substitution, that I shall not consider it "on", unless I hear from you to that effect.[†2]

I can't write to night, I find. My hand will not make the letters.

Ever Faithfully | (With all kinds of remembrances)

CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 or 16 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extract in F, V, vi, 441-2. Date: after the final dinner at Haldimand's on 15 Nov: either late that night or early morning on day of departure.

He had said goodbye to his deaf, dumb, and blind friends, and was yet more terribly down in the mouth at taking leave of his hearing, speaking, and seeing friends. I shall see you soon, please God, and that sets all to rights. But I don't believe there are many dots on the map of the world where we shall have left such affectionate remembrances behind us, as in Lausanne. It was quite miserable this last night, when we left them at Haldimand's.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, iii, 439; VI, ii, 479. Date: first extract 21 Nov according to Forster; second extract clearly same letter, as Forster says CD "wrote by return". From Paris.

Your Christmas book illustration-news makes me jump for joy.[†4] I will write you at length to-morrow. I should like this dedication: This Christmas Book is cordially inscribed To my English Friends in Switzerland.[†1] Just those two lines, and nothing more. When I get the proofs again I think I may manage another word or two about the battle-field, with advantage. I am glad you like the alterations. I feel that they make it complete, and that it would have been incomplete without your suggestions.

About the proofs of No. III of Dombey: I have taken out about two pages and a half, and the rest I must ask you to take out with the assurance that you will satisfy me in whatever you do.[†2] The sale, prodigious indeed![†3] I am very thankful.

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 and 23 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 479; V, i, 384; V, vi, 442; V, vii, 443, 443*n*, 444. Date: first extract "Next day" after 21 Nov according to Forster; second extract 22 Nov in marginal note in F, 1872-4, II, ix, 187; third extract clearly in first long letter after arrival in Paris; remaining extracts 22 Nov according to Forster, with postscripts on "Monday" (23 Nov).

About Walter Gay: I see it will be best as you advise, to give that idea up; and indeed I don't feel it would be reasonable to carry it out now. I am far from sure it could be wholesomely done, after the interest he has acquired.[†4] But when I have disposed of Paul (poor boy!) I will consider the subject farther.[†5]

On another matter in Forster's letter he writes: OUR STRAW-HATTED FRIEND from Miss Kelly's![†6] Oh my stars! To think of him, all that time—Macbeth in disguise; Richard the Third grown straight; Hamlet as he appeared on his seavoyage to England. What an artful villain he must be, never to have made any sign of the melodrama that was in him! What a wicked-minded and remorseless Iago to have seen you doing Kitely night after night! raging to murder you and seize the part! Oh fancy Miss Kelly "getting him up" in Macbeth. Good Heaven! what a mass of absurdity must be shut up sometimes within the walls of that small theatre in Dean-street! FIREWORKS[†7] will come out shortly, depend upon it, in the dumb line; and will relate her history in profoundly unintelligible motions that will be translated into long and complicated descriptions by a grey-headed father, and a red-wigged countryman, his son. You remember the dumb dodge of relating an escape from captivity?[†1] Clasping the left wrist with the right hand, and the right wrist with the left hand—alternately (to express chains) —and then going round and round the stage very fast, and coming hand over hand down an imaginary cord: at the end of which there is one stroke on the drum, and a kneeling to the chandelier? If Fireworks can't do that—and won't somewhere—I'm a Dutchman.

